“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Madhya-līlā

Chapter 24

Mercy to Sanātana: The Explanation of the Ātmārāma Verse

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

1 Śrī Caitanya is the eastern mountain where the sun of the ātmārāma verse rose; revealing the rays of its meanings, He dispelled the darkness of the world. May He protect us.[1]

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra, and glory to all the devotees of Gaura![2]

3 Then Sanātana clasped the Lord’s feet and once more humbly spoke:

4 “I have heard that once, at Sārvabhauma’s place, You explained a single verse in eighteen ways.

5 “Even sages who delight in the ātmā and are free from the knots of the heart render causeless devotion to Urukrama, for such are the qualities of Hari.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.7.10)[3]

6 Having heard of this wonder, I am filled with longing. If You kindly tell me, my ears will be soothed.”

7 The Lord said, “I am a madman, and Sārvabhauma takes the madness in My words to be the truth.

8 I do not remember anything of what I babbled then. Yet by the strength of your company something may come to My mind.

9 No meaning comes to Me of itself; whatever is revealed comes by the strength of the company of all of you.”[4]

10 This verse has eleven perfectly pure words, and in each of them, taken separately, many different meanings shine brightly.

11 The word ātmā has seven meanings: Brahman, the body, the mind, effort (yatna), steadfastness (dhṛti), intelligence (buddhi) and nature (svabhāva).

12 “The word ātmā is used for the body, the mind, Brahman, nature, steadfastness and intelligence, and also for effort.” (Viśva-prakāśa)

13 Those who delight in these seven are ātmārāmas. I shall enumerate the kinds of ātmārāmas later.

14 Hear, Sanātana, the meanings of the word muni and the others. I shall first give the meaning of each separately and afterwards combine them.

15 The word muni means one given to contemplation (manana-śīla). It also means one who is silent, an ascetic, one who keeps vows, a renunciant (yati), a seer (ṛṣi) and a sage (muni).

16 The word nirgrantha means one free from the knot of ignorance, and also one devoid of knowledge of the Vedic scriptures with their injunctions and prohibitions.

17 Fools, the low-born, mlecchas and others who are devoid of scripture; one who hoards wealth; and one who has no wealth — all these are also called nirgrantha.

18 “The prefix nir is used in the senses of certainty, sequence, construction and prohibition. The word grantha means wealth, a literary work, and also the stringing of letters into words.” (Viśva-prakāśa)

19 The word urukrama means He whose step (krama) is great. The word krama means a step, the placing forward of the foot.

20 Krama also means power, trembling, orderly arrangement and stepping forth (ākramaṇa). By the movement of His feet He made the three worlds tremble.

21 “Who in this world could count the mighty deeds of Viṣṇu — even a sage who has counted the atoms of the earth? His unchecked stride shook the universe from pradhāna, where the three guṇas rest in balance, up to Satyaloka, and it was He who held it fast.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.7.40)[5]

22 In His all-pervading form He fills everything, and by His potency He sustains and nourishes it. By His potency of sweetness (mādhurya-śakti) He upholds Goloka, and by His majesty (aiśvarya) the spiritual sky, Paravyoma.

23 By His potency of māyā He creates the universes and all else in orderly succession. This is the meaning of the word urukrama.

24 “Krama means power and orderly arrangement; krama also means movement and trembling.” (Viśva-prakāśa)

25 The word kurvanti is in the parasmaipada, the voice used when an action is done for another. It shows that the worship is meant for Kṛṣṇa's happiness.

26 "Roots marked with the svarita accent or with the indicatory letter ñ take the ātmanepada endings when the fruit of the action is meant for the agent himself." (Pāṇini, 1.3.72)

27 The word hetu (motive) means other desires, beginning with the desire for enjoyment. They are chiefly of three kinds: enjoyment (bhukti), mystic perfection (siddhi) and liberation (mukti).

28 Bhukti, enjoyment, is of endless kinds; the siddhis are eighteen; and mukti is of five kinds.

29 Devotion in which these are absent is ahaitukī, causeless. By it the playful Śrī Kṛṣṇa comes under control.

30 The word bhakti has ten meanings: one is sādhana-bhakti, and prema-bhakti is of nine kinds.

31 It is spoken of as bhakti marked by rati, by prema and so on, and as bhakti in the form of bhāva and of mahābhāva.

32 The rati of devotees in śānta-rasa grows up to prema; the rati of devotees in dāsya-rasa reaches the stage of rāga.

33 The rati of His friends reaches up to anurāga, and the affection of His father, mother and other elders likewise reaches anurāga.

34 The rati of His beloveds reaches the limit of mahābhāva. Thus I have described the glorious meaning of the word bhakti.

35 Now hear the explanation of the words ittham-bhūta-guṇaḥ. The word ittham-bhūta has its own meaning, and the word guṇa another.

36 The word ittham-bhūta means He who is full of perfect bliss, before whom the bliss of Brahman is like a blade of grass.

37 "O Guru of the world, now that I am immersed in the pure ocean of joy that comes from seeing You face to face, all other joys — even the bliss of Brahman — seem to me like the water in a calf's hoofprint." (Hari-bhakti-sudhodaya, 14.36)[6]

38 He attracts all, delights all and is the great elixir of rasa. By His own power He makes one forget everything else.

39 The merest scent of Him makes one give up the happiness of enjoyment, liberation and mystic perfection. By the extraordinary power of His qualities He binds the heart through His mercy.

40 Here there is no scriptural reasoning or weighing of conclusions. This happens by the very nature of His qualities, in which lies the essence of sweetness.

41 The word guṇa means Kṛṣṇa's qualities, which are endless. In His form, eternal and conscious, and in His qualities, everything is perfect bliss.

42 His own nature is full of majesty, sweetness and compassion. In His affection for His devotees His generosity goes so far that He gives even Himself.

43 He has extraordinary qualities — His form, His rasa, His fragrance and others — and by one quality or another He attracts each one's mind.

44 He stole the minds of Sanaka and the other Kumāras by His fragrance and other qualities, and He stole Śukadeva's mind through hearing of His pastimes.

45 "The breeze that bore the fragrance of tulasī, mingled with the pollen of the lotus-eyed Lord's lotus feet, entered their nostrils and stirred both their minds and their bodies, though they were devoted to the imperishable Brahman." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.15.43)[7]

46 "O royal sage, although I was firmly established in transcendence of the guṇas, my mind was captivated by the pastimes of Uttamaśloka, and so I studied this narration." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.1.9)

47 By the beauty of His divine body He steals the minds of the gopīs; Rukmiṇī and the other queens are attracted by hearing of His beauty and qualities.

48 "Seeing Your face framed by curling locks and graced by the beauty of Your earrings, Your cheeks, the nectar of Your lips and Your smiling glance, and beholding Your two arms that grant fearlessness and Your chest, the sole delight of Śrī, we have become Your maidservants." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.29.39)

49 "O beauty of the worlds, Your qualities enter the ears of those who hear of them and remove the distress of their bodies, and Your form is, for the eyes of those who see, the attainment of every goal. Having heard of them, O Acyuta, my heart, casting off shame, enters into You." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.52.37)

50 By the song of His flute Kṛṣṇa steals the minds of Lakṣmī and others, and of all the young women of the world, each in a fitting mood.

51 “O Lord, we do not know by what merit this one has gained the right to touch the dust of Your feet. Longing for it, Śrī, the best of women, renounced all desires and practised austerities, keeping her vows for a very long time.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.16.36)[8]

52 “O Kṛṣṇa, what woman in the three worlds, enchanted by the song of Your flute with its sweet, nectarean notes, would not stray from the conduct of the noble? Seeing this form of Yours, the beauty of the three worlds, even cows, birds, trees and deer bristle with rapture.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.29.40)

53 Women who are like elders He attracts in parental love (vātsalya), and men in the moods of servitude, friendship and others.

54 Kṛṣṇa’s qualities attract birds, beasts, trees and creepers — all that moves and all that does not — and make them mad with love (prema).

55 The word hariḥ has many meanings, two of which are foremost: He takes away all that is inauspicious, and, bestowing love (prema), He steals the mind.

56 He frees from the four kinds of distress anyone who remembers Him, in whatever way.

57 “As a blazing fire turns firewood to ashes, so, O Uddhava, devotion to Me burns up all sins.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.14.19)

58 Then He destroys ignorance and the karma that obstructs devotion, and He manifests prema, the fruit of hearing and the other practices.

59 After that, by His own qualities He steals the body, the senses and the mind. So merciful is Kṛṣṇa, and such are His qualities.

60 He makes one give up the four goals of human life and steals everyone's mind. Thus I have told the chief meaning of the word hari.

61 The two words ca and api are indeclinables (avyaya): whatever meaning one applies to them, that meaning they take.

62 Still, ca is given seven chief meanings, and api has seven well-known ones.

63 "Ca is used in the senses of anvācaya (adding a secondary item), samāhāra (combining into a whole), anyonya (reciprocity), samuccaya (conjunction), yatnāntara (another effort), pāda-pūraṇa (filling out the foot of a verse) and avadhāraṇa (certainty)." (Viśva-prakāśa)[9]

64 "Api is used in the senses of sambhāvanā (possibility), praśna (question), śaṅkā (doubt), garhā (censure) and samuccaya (conjunction), as well as for fitting application (yukta-padārtha) and for action at will (kāmacāra-kriyā)." (Viśva-prakāśa)

65 Thus I have determined the meanings of the eleven words. Now I shall give the meaning of the verse, applying each meaning as it fits.

66 The word brahma means the Truth that is greater than all; in His own nature and majesty no one is His equal.

67 "Because of His greatness (bṛhattva) and His power to nourish and expand all (bṛṁhaṇatva), the wise know Him as the Supreme Brahman. O Soul of all, unchanging One on whom the yogīs meditate, obeisance unto You." (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 1.12.57)

68 "Because He pervades all (ātatatva) and is the progenitor of all (mātṛtva), Hari is the Supreme Ātmā." (words of a Tantra quoted by Śrīdhara Svāmī in his commentary on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.2.45)[10]

69 That word brahma means Svayam Bhagavān, the Lord Himself, the non-dual Knowledge, without whom nothing else exists.

70 “The knowers of the Truth call the non-dual knowledge the Truth; it is named Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.2.11)[11]

71 That non-dual Truth is Kṛṣṇa, Svayam Bhagavān. He is real in all three phases of time; the scriptures are the evidence.

72 “Before creation I alone existed; there was nothing else — neither effect, nor cause, nor That which is beyond them. After creation this whole world is not other than Me, and what remains after its dissolution is also I.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.9.32)[12]

73 By the word ātmā is meant Kṛṣṇa, whose very nature is greatness: He pervades all, witnesses all, and is the supreme form.

74 “Because He pervades all (ātatatva) and is the progenitor of all (mātṛtva), Hari is the Supreme Ātmā.” (words of a Tantra quoted by Śrīdhara Svāmī in his commentary on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.2.45)[13]

75 For attaining that Kṛṣṇa there are three kinds of sādhana — jñāna, yoga and bhakti — each with its own characteristics.

76 Through the three sādhanas Bhagavān appears in three forms: He is manifest as Brahman, as Paramātmā and as Bhagavān Himself.

77 “The knowers of the Truth call the non-dual knowledge the Truth; it is named Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam,

1.2.11)[14]

78 Though the words brahma and ātmā denote Kṛṣṇa, in their conventional usage (rūḍhi-vṛtti) they mean the featureless Brahman and the indwelling Lord (Antaryāmī).

79 On the path of knowledge He is manifest as the featureless Brahman; on the path of yoga He appears in the form of the Antaryāmī, the indwelling Lord.

80 Devotion is of two kinds, rāga-bhakti and vidhi-bhakti; and the Lord's forms are two: Svayam Bhagavān, the Lord Himself, and Bhagavān.

81 By rāga-bhakti one attains Svayam Bhagavān in Vraja; by vidhi-bhakti one goes to Vaikuṇṭha in the body of an associate (pārṣada).

82 "This Bhagavān, the son of the gopī, is not so easily attained by the embodied, nor by the jñānīs, nor by those who have realized the self, as He is by those who have devotion." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.9.21)[15]

83 "Those whose limbs thrill with rapture and are wet with tears of loving agitation as they speak together of the glories of their Lord; who follow the Lord of the gods and have left yama and the other disciplines far behind; whose nature we ourselves long to have — they go to Vaikuṇṭha, which is above us." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.15.25)

84 These worshippers are of three kinds: those without desire (akāma), those who desire liberation (mokṣa-kāma) and those who have every kind of desire (sarva-kāma).

85 "Whether he is without desire, full of every desire, or desirous of liberation, a person of broad intelligence should worship the Supreme Person with intense bhakti-yoga." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.3.10)[16]

86 Udāra-dhīḥ means intelligent: if a person can discern, then even for the sake of his own desires he worships Kṛṣṇa.

87 Without bhakti no sādhana can give its fruit. Bhakti, independent and powerful, gives every fruit.

88 Other sādhanas are like the teats on a goat's neck. Therefore an intelligent person worships Hari.

89 "O Arjuna, best of the Bhāratas, four kinds of pious people worship Me: the distressed, the inquisitive, the seeker of wealth, and the one who has knowledge." (Bhagavad-gītā, 7.16)

90 The distressed and the seeker of wealth I count among those with desires (sakāma); the inquisitive and the one who has knowledge I regard as desirous of liberation (mokṣa-kāma).

91 These four pious ones are greatly fortunate. Giving up their respective desires, they come to possess pure devotion.

92 By the mercy of the company of saints, or by Kṛṣṇa's mercy, they give up the "bad company" of desires and the like and attain pure devotion.

93 "A wise person who has been freed from bad company through the company of saints can never give up the captivating glory of the Lord once he has heard it sung." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.10.11)

94 By "bad company" I mean deceit (kaitava), self-deception: the desire for anything other than Kṛṣṇa and devotion to Kṛṣṇa.

95 "In this beautiful Bhāgavatam, composed by the great sage, is taught the supreme dharma of the saintly who are free from envy, from which all deceit has been cast out. Here is known the true Reality, which bestows good and uproots the threefold miseries. What need is there of other scriptures? As soon as the pious wish to hear it, the Lord is at once captured within their hearts." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.1.2)[17]

96 By the prefix pra (in projjhita) the desire for liberation is shown to be the chief deceit. So Śrīdhara Svāmī has explained this verse.

97 Knowing a devotee with desires to be ignorant, the merciful Bhagavān gives him His own feet and so covers over his desires.

98 "It is true that when men ask, the Lord grants what they ask for; but He does not give what would make them ask again. To those who worship Him, though they do not desire it, He Himself gives His own feet, tender as new shoots, which put an end to all other desires." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 5.19.26)[18]

99 The company of saints, Kṛṣṇa's mercy and the very nature of bhakti — these three make one give up everything else and awaken bhāva for Kṛṣṇa.

100 In all the meanings I shall explain from here on, know this to be the cause of relishing Kṛṣṇa's qualities.

101 I have given this outline for the sake of explaining the verse. Now I shall reveal the verse's basic meaning.

102 On the path of knowledge the worshippers are of two kinds: those who worship Brahman alone (kevala-brahmopāsaka) and those who long for liberation (mokṣākāṅkṣī).

103 Those who worship Brahman alone are of three kinds: the sādhaka (beginner), the brahmamaya (absorbed in Brahman) and the prāpta-brahma-laya (merged in Brahman).

104 Without bhakti, by knowledge alone, there is no liberation. It is one who practises the sādhana of bhakti who reaches merging in Brahman (prāpta-brahma-laya).

105 The nature of bhakti is that it draws one away from Brahman; giving one a divine body, it makes one worship Kṛṣṇa.

106 On obtaining the body of a devotee, one remembers Kṛṣṇa's qualities; attracted by those qualities, one worships Him with pure devotion.

107 "Even the liberated, assuming a form (vigraha) by the Lord's līlā, worship Bhagavān." (words of the author of the Sarvajña-bhāṣya, quoted by Śrīdhara Svāmī in his commentary on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.87.21)[19]

108 From birth Śuka, Sanaka and the others were brahmamaya, absorbed in Brahman; attracted by Kṛṣṇa's qualities, they worship Kṛṣṇa.

109 By Kṛṣṇa's mercy the minds of Sanaka and the others were stolen by the fragrance of His feet; attracted by His qualities, they worship Him with pure devotion.

110 "The breeze that bore the fragrance of tulasī, mingled with the pollen of the lotus-eyed Lord's lotus feet, entered their nostrils and stirred both their minds and their bodies, though they were devoted to the imperishable Brahman." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.15.43)[20]

111 By Vyāsa's mercy Śukadeva came to remember Kṛṣṇa's pastimes; attracted by Kṛṣṇa's qualities, he worships Him.

112 "His mind captivated by the qualities of Hari, the great Śukadeva, son of Bādarāyaṇa, who is ever dear to the devotees of Viṣṇu, studied this great narration." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.7.11)

113 The nine Yogendras were sādhaka jñānīs from birth. Having heard of Kṛṣṇa's qualities from the mouths of Brahmā, Śiva and Nārada, 114 they were attracted by those qualities and worshipped Kṛṣṇa. Their devotion is described in the Eleventh Canto.

115 "Entering the assembly of the lotus-born Brahmā, which is free from all distress, the nine Yogendras, knowers of the Śruti, heard the Upaniṣads there; yet, their bodies thrilling with rapture, they went to the lofty raṅga-kṣetra to meet the Lord in the city of the Yadus." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Paścima-vibhāga, Śānta-bhakti-laharī, 20)

116 Jñānīs who long for liberation are of three kinds: the mumukṣu (seeker of liberation), the jīvan-mukta (liberated while living) and the prāpta-svarūpa (one who has attained his true nature).

117 In the world there are many mumukṣus, people attached to worldly life, who worship Kṛṣṇa with devotion for the sake of liberation.

118 "Those who seek liberation give up the lords of beings, whose forms are terrible, though they bear them no envy; peaceful, they worship the partial forms (kalā) of Nārāyaṇa." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.2.26)

119 In the company of sādhus, Kṛṣṇa's qualities are revealed to all of them; that company leads them to worship Kṛṣṇa and makes them give up the desire for liberation.

120 "O great soul, this worldly existence is corrupted by many faults, yet it shines with one quality, called the company of saints, which brings happiness; through it our desire for liberation has today grown weak." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Paścima-vibhāga, Prīti-bhakti-laharī, 27)

121 In the company of Nārada, Śaunaka and the other sages gave up the desire for liberation and worshipped Kṛṣṇa.[21]

122 Some on seeing Kṛṣṇa, and some by Kṛṣṇa's mercy, give up the desire for liberation and, drawn by His qualities, worship His feet.

123 "Now that Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Self, whose form is concentrated bliss, has appeared here in Vṛṣṇi-pattana, I see — alas! — how long my days have passed in vain while I clung to being an ātmārāma." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Paścima-vibhāga, Śānta-bhakti-laharī, 34)[22]

124 There are many who are liberated while living (jīvan-mukta), and I know them to be of two kinds: those liberated through devotion and those liberated through knowledge.

125 One liberated while living through devotion is attracted by Kṛṣṇa's qualities and worships Him; but one "liberated while living" through dry knowledge sinks down because of his offences.[23]

126 "O lotus-eyed Lord, others think themselves liberated, but their intelligence is impure, for they have no love for You. Though they rise with great hardship to the supreme position, they fall down from there, having neglected Your feet." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.2.32)[24]

127 "One who has realised Brahman and is serene within neither grieves nor desires. Equal to all beings, he attains supreme devotion to Me." (Bhagavad-gītā, 18.54)[25]

128 "I was worshipped by those who walk the path of non-dualism, and I had received initiation on the throne of the bliss of the self; yet a certain rogue, a lover of the cowherd maidens, has forcibly made me a maidservant." (Śrī Kṛṣṇa-karṇāmṛta)[26]

129 By the strength of bhakti, one who has attained his true nature (prāpta-svarūpa) receives a divine body. Attracted by Kṛṣṇa's qualities, he worships Kṛṣṇa's feet.

130 "Nirodha is the self's lying down to rest with all its potencies, after the Lord enters His mystic slumber (yoga-nidrā). Mukti is giving up the alien form and abiding in one's own true nature (svarūpa)." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.10.6)[27]

131 The fault of turning away from Kṛṣṇa comes from māyā, and freedom from māyā comes from liberation that is turned toward Kṛṣṇa.[28]

132 "For one who has turned away from the Lord, fear arises from absorption in what is other than Him; by His māyā come forgetfulness of the Lord and a false idea of oneself. Therefore the wise, seeing the guru as his worshipful deity and his very self, should worship the Lord with exclusive devotion." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.2.37)[29]

133 "This divine māyā of Mine, made of the guṇas, is hard to overcome. But those who surrender to Me alone cross beyond this māyā." (Bhagavad-gītā, 7.14)[30]

134 Without bhakti there is no liberation; liberation comes through bhakti. And one who has attained liberation through bhakti surely worships Kṛṣṇa.

135 "O almighty Lord, bhakti to You is the path to the highest good. Those who reject it and toil only to gain knowledge are left with nothing but their toil, like those who pound empty husks." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.4)[31]

136 "O lotus-eyed Lord, others think themselves liberated, but their intelligence is impure, for they have no love for You. Though they rise with great hardship to the supreme position, they fall down from there, having neglected Your feet." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.2.32)[32]

137 "Those among them who do not worship the Puruṣa, their own source and Lord, but disregard Him, fall from their position and sink into the depths." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.5.3)[33]

138 "Even the liberated, assuming a form (vigraha) by the Lord's līlā, worship Bhagavān." (words of the author of the Sarvajña-bhāṣya, quoted by Śrīdhara Svāmī in his commentary on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.87.21)[34]

139 These six kinds of ātmārāmas worship Kṛṣṇa. The word ca, joined to each of them separately, here expresses the sense of api ("also").

140 "Ātmārāmāś ca api": even the ātmārāmas render causeless devotion to Kṛṣṇa. "Munayaḥ santaḥ" — "being sages" — means that they become attached to contemplating Kṛṣṇa.

141 "Nirgranthāḥ" means free from ignorance (avidyā), and for some it means free from rules (vidhi). Wherever a meaning fits, the word takes that meaning.

142 If I give the word ca the sense of itaretara (mutual connection), it yields yet another most cogent meaning.

143 When "ātmārāmāś ca ātmārāmāś ca" is said six times, five of the six ātmārāmas drop out together with their ca.

144 A single word ātmārāmaḥ remains, and that one word denotes all six.

145 "Of words of the same form in the same case only one remains (eka-śeṣa); words whose meaning has already been expressed are not used: thus

‘rāmaś ca rāmaś ca rāmaś ca’ becomes ‘rāmāḥ’.” (Viśva-prakāśa)[35]

146 The word ca that then remains expresses conjunction (samuccaya): “the ātmārāmas and the sages (ātmārāmāś ca munayaś ca)” worship Kṛṣṇa.

147 In “nirgranthā api,” this api has the sense of possibility (sambhāvanā). These are the first seven meanings I have explained.

148 One who worships the Antaryāmī, the Lord within the heart, is also called an ātmārāma, and these ātmārāma yogīs are of two kinds.

149 Sagarbha and nirgarbha — these are the two kinds. Each of them is of three kinds, and so there are six divisions.[36]

150 “Some, by concentration (dhāraṇā), remember the Person who dwells in the space of the heart within their own body: He is a span in size, four-armed, and holds the lotus, the disc, the conch and the mace.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.2.8)

151 “Having thus gained bhāva for Bhagavān Hari, his heart melting with devotion and the hair of his body standing on end with joy, again and again overwhelmed by streams of tears of longing, the yogī gradually withdraws even the hook of his mind (from the object of meditation).” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.28.34)

152 Yogārurukṣu (one who wishes to rise to yoga), yogārūḍha (one who has risen to yoga) and prāpta-siddhi (one who has attained perfection): by these three divisions there are six kinds.

153 “For the sage who wishes to ascend to yoga, action is said to be the means; for that same sage, once he has risen to yoga, tranquillity (śama) is said to be the means.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 6.3)

154 “When one is attached neither to the objects of the senses nor to actions, and has renounced all intentions (saṅkalpa), he is then called yogārūḍha, one who has risen to yoga.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 6.4)

155 Through the company of sādhus and other such causes, these six kinds of yogīs become attracted by Kṛṣṇa’s qualities and worship Him.

156 Here too the word ca expresses the meaning of api, and the words muni and nirgrantha have the same meanings as before.

157 The words urukrame and ahaitukī take whichever meaning fits each case. Thus I have told you thirteen most cogent meanings.[37]

158 When all these peaceful ones (śānta) worship Bhagavān, I then call them śānta devotees.

159 The word ātmā also means the mind (mana). One who delights in the mind worships Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s feet in the company of sādhus.

160 “Following the paths of the ṛṣis, those of gross vision worship Brahman in the belly (udara), while the Āruṇis worship the subtle Brahman (dahara) in the heart, from which the channels branch out. From there, O Ananta, the path rises to the head, Your supreme abode; having reached it, they no longer fall into the jaws of death in this world.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.87.18)

161 Attracted by Kṛṣṇa’s qualities, they become great sages, nirgranthas, and render Him causeless devotion.

162 The word ātmā also means effort (yatna). Making effort, even sages (munayo ’pi) become nirgrantha and worship Kṛṣṇa.

163 “The wise should strive for that alone which is not obtained by those who wander through the worlds above and below. Happiness, like suffering, comes of itself everywhere, brought by time, whose course is irresistible.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.5.18)

164 “Those whose minds are set with perseverance on understanding true religion soon attain every aim they desire.” (Nārada-purāṇa; Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Pūrva-vibhāga, Sādhana-bhakti-laharī, 103)[38]

165 The word ca has the sense of api, and api the sense of certainty (avadhāraṇa): without eager longing (yatnāgraha), bhakti does not give birth to love (prema).

166 “Bhakti is very hard to attain in two ways: by multitudes of sādhanas performed without āsaṅga, eager longing, it cannot be attained even in a very long time; and Hari does not give it quickly.” (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 1.1.35)

167 “To those who are ever devoted to Me and worship Me with love, I give the understanding that brings them to Me.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 10.10)[39]

168 The word ātmā also means steadfastness (dhṛti). One who delights in steadfastness becomes steadfast and then worships Kṛṣṇa.

169 The word muni also means a bird or a bumblebee, and nirgrantha a foolish person. By the mercy of Kṛṣṇa and the mercy of the sādhus, both of them worship Kṛṣṇa.

170 “O mother, the birds of this forest are almost sages: they rise onto the branches of the trees, lovely with fresh shoots, to see Kṛṣṇa, and with eyes closed and all other sounds silenced, they listen to the sweet song of the flute that flows from Him.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.21.14)[40]

171 (Śrī Kṛṣṇa said to Balarāma:) “O original Person, these bees sing Your glory, which purifies all the worlds, and serve You by following You along Your path. They must be sages, the foremost of Your devotees: though You are hidden in the forest, O sinless one, they do not leave You, the Lord of their hearts.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.15.6)

172 “The cranes, swans and other birds of the lake, their hearts stolen by His lovely song, came near and, with minds controlled — ah! — with eyes closed and keeping silence, worshipped Hari.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.35.11)

173 “The Kirātas, Hūṇas, Andhras, Pulindas, Pukkaśas, Ābhīras, Śuhmas, Yavanas, Khaśas and other tribes, and all other sinful people as well, are purified by taking shelter of those who have taken shelter of Him. Obeisance to that all-powerful Lord!” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.4.18)

174 Or the word dhṛti means the awareness of one’s own fullness: through the absence of suffering and the attainment of the highest, one becomes completely full.[41]

175 “Dhṛti is the awareness of fullness that comes from the absence of suffering and the attainment of the highest. It frees one from lamenting over objects not attained, past or lost.” (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 2.4.144)

176 A devotee of Kṛṣṇa is free from suffering and free from other desires; he knows the full bliss of loving service to Kṛṣṇa.

177 “Fulfilled by serving Me, My devotees do not desire even the four kinds of liberation — sālokya, sārūpya, sāmīpya and sārṣṭi — that such service brings them of itself. How then would they seek worldly pleasures, or merging in Brahman? For all that is swept away by time.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 9.4.67)[42]

178 “In this world of birth and death (saṁsāra), where all living beings are unsteady, he alone attains steadfastness whose senses have become steady in Hṛṣīkeśa, the Lord of the senses.” (Words of the Gosvāmipāda)[43]

179 Here ca has the sense of certainty (avadhāraṇa), and api the sense of conjunction (samuccaya): birds and foolish people in great numbers become steadfast and worship Kṛṣṇa.

180 The word ātmā also means intelligence (buddhi), that is, special intelligence; and all the countless living beings are endowed with ordinary intelligence.

181 The ātmārāma who delights in intelligence is of two kinds: the sages, who are learned (paṇḍita), and the nirgranthas, who are foolish (mūrkha).

182 By Kṛṣṇa’s mercy, in the company of sādhus, one gains attachment (rati) and good intelligence. Giving up everything, with pure intelligence one attains devotion to Kṛṣṇa.

183 “I am the source of everything; everything proceeds from Me. Knowing this, the wise, endowed with bhāva, worship Me.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 10.8)[44]

184 “Women, śūdras, Hūṇas, Śabaras and other sinful beings — even animals and birds — come to know (the Lord) and cross beyond the divine māyā if they learn the conduct of those devoted to Adbhuta-krama, the Lord of wondrous deeds. What then to speak of those who hold to the Śruti!” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.7.46)

185 When, after careful reflection, one worships Kṛṣṇa’s feet, the Lord gives him the intelligence by which he attains Him.

186 “To those who are ever devoted to Me and worship Me with love, I give the understanding that brings them to Me.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 10.10)[45]

187 The company of saints, service to Kṛṣṇa, the Bhāgavata, the holy Name and living in Vraja — these five are the principal sādhanas.

188 If a sensible person has even the slightest connection with one of these five, love for Kṛṣṇa awakens in him.

189 “The power of these five limbs is wondrous and hard to grasp. Let alone faith in them: even the slightest connection with them gives birth to bhāva in those of good understanding, who are free from offence.” (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Pūrva-vibhāga, Sādhana-bhakti-laharī, 238)[46]

190 One whose intelligence is broad, great and best of all may worship with various desires, yet he still attains perfection in bhakti.

191 “Whether he is without desire, full of every desire, or desirous of liberation, a person of broad intelligence should worship the Supreme Person with intense bhakti-yoga.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.3.10)[47]

192 Such is the power of bhakti: it makes one give up those desires and, attracting one by Kṛṣṇa’s qualities, makes one render devotion to His feet.

193 “It is true that when men ask, the Lord grants what they ask for; but He does not give what would make them ask again. To those who worship Him, though they do not desire it, He Himself gives His own feet, tender as new shoots, which put an end to all other desires.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 5.19.26)[48]

194 The word ātmā also means one’s nature (svabhāva), and one who delights in it is an ātmārāma. Thus all living beings, stationary and moving, are ātmārāmas.

195 The nature of the jīva is to know himself as Kṛṣṇa's servant; that awareness becomes covered when he takes the body to be the self.[49]

196 Here ca means eva ("indeed"), and api has the sense of conjunction (samuccaya): it is precisely as ātmārāmas (ātmārāmā eva) that they worship Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

197 These jīvas include all the sages (munis), Sanaka and the rest; and the nirgranthas are the foolish, the low, and all beings, stationary and moving.

198 The worship of Vyāsa, Śuka, Sanaka and the others is well known. Now hear the account of the nirgranthas — the stationary beings and the rest.

199 Through such causes as Kṛṣṇa's mercy, their true nature (svabhāva) awakens, and, attracted by Kṛṣṇa's qualities, they worship Him.

200 "Today this earth is blessed; blessed are the grasses and shrubs that touch Your feet, the trees and creepers touched by Your fingers, the rivers, mountains, birds and beasts on whom You cast Your merciful glances, and the gopīs held between Your arms — a place for which even Śrī (Lakṣmī) longs." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.15.8)

201 "O friends, as the two Brothers, marked by the ropes and nooses for tying the cows, lead the cows with the cowherd boys from forest to forest, the generous, sweet notes of Their flutes work wonders among embodied beings: those that move become still, and the trees thrill with ecstasy." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.21.19)

202 “The forest creepers and trees, rich with flowers and fruits, their branches bowed with the weight and their bodies thrilled with love, poured down streams of honey, as if revealing Viṣṇu within themselves.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.35.9)[50]

203 “The Kirātas, Hūṇas, Andhras, Pulindas, Pukkaśas, Ābhīras, Śuhmas, Yavanas, Khaśas and other tribes, and all other sinful people as well, are purified by taking shelter of those who have taken shelter of Him. Obeisance to that all-powerful Lord!” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.4.18)[51]

204 Earlier I gave thirteen meanings, and now these six: together they make nineteen.[52]

205 I have given these nineteen meanings; now hear more. The word ātmā also means the body (deha), and this gives four meanings.

206 One who delights in the body (dehārāmī) worships in the body a Brahman conditioned by the body; in the company of saints, he too comes to worship Kṛṣṇa.

207 “Following the paths of the ṛṣis, those of gross vision worship Brahman in the belly (udara), while the Āruṇis worship the subtle Brahman (dahara) in the heart, from which the channels branch out. From there, O Ananta, the path rises to the head, Your supreme abode; having reached it, they no longer fall into the jaws of death in this world.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.87.18)[53]

208 Those who delight in the body and are devoted to karma — performers of sacrifice and the like — give up karma in the company of saints and worship Kṛṣṇa.

209 “In this sacrificial work, whose fruit is never certain, we have been blackened by the smoke; but you give us to drink the honeyed nectar (āsava) of Govinda’s lotus feet.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.18.12)

210 Ascetics (tapasvī) and the like are all dehārāmīs, those who delight in the body; in the company of sādhus they give up austerity and worship Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

211 “The taste for serving His feet, pure and increasing day by day, at once destroys the impurity that has gathered in the minds of ascetics through countless births, as does the river (Gaṅgā) that flows from the toe of His foot.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 4.21.31)[54]

212 Those who delight in the body and are full of desires are all ātmārāmas; by Kṛṣṇa’s mercy they give up all desires and worship Kṛṣṇa.

213 “Desiring a high position, I engaged in austerities, and I have attained You, who are hidden even from the gods and the greatest sages. I was searching for a piece of glass and found a divine jewel. O Master, my purpose is fulfilled; I ask for no boon.” (Hari-bhakti-sudhodaya, 7.28)[55]

214 Together with these four, there are twenty-three meanings. Now hear three more meanings, all most cogent.[56]

215 When ca has the sense of conjunction (samuccaya), the ātmārāmas and the sages (ātmārāmāś ca munayaś ca) worship Kṛṣṇa; but ca has yet another meaning.[57]

216 “Becoming nirgranthas”: here api has the sense of specification (nirdhāraṇa), as in “rāmaś ca kṛṣṇaś ca roam in the forest.”

217 The word ca gives yet another meaning in the sense of anvācaya — adding something secondary to what is principal — as in: "Baṭo, bhikṣām aṭa, gāṁ cānaya" ("O boy, go for alms, and bring the cow too").

218 The sage, absorbed in contemplating Kṛṣṇa, always worships Kṛṣṇa; and "the ātmārāmas also (ātmārāmā api)" worship Him — this expresses the secondary meaning.

219 If ca is taken in the sense of eva, then "only the sages (munayaḥ eva)" worship Kṛṣṇa; and in "ātmārāmā api" the word api expresses censure (garhā).[58]

220 "Becoming nirgranthas" is a qualifier of both. Now hear another meaning, which shows what the company of sādhus can do.

221 The word nirgrantha then means a hunter (vyādha) or a pauper (nirdhana); in the company of sādhus, he too worships Śrī Kṛṣṇa.[59]

222 "Kṛṣṇārāmāś ca" — those who delight in Kṛṣṇa — means those who contemplate Kṛṣṇa. Though a hunter, such a person becomes worshipful, the best of the bhāgavatas.

223 Hear attentively the story of a hunter who became a devotee; from it one comes to know the glory of the company of saints.

224 One day, after seeing Nārāyaṇa, Śrī Nārada went to Prayāga to bathe at the Triveṇī.

225 On the forest path he saw a deer lying on the ground, pierced by an arrow, its legs broken, writhing in pain.

226 A little farther on he saw a boar, likewise pierced, its legs broken, writhing in pain.

227 Farther still he saw a rabbit in the same state. Seeing the suffering of these creatures, Nārada was distressed at heart.

228 Going on a little, he saw the hunter hiding behind a tree, an arrow fitted to his bow, waiting to kill deer.

229 He was dark in complexion, red-eyed and very fearsome; with bow and arrows in his hands, he looked like Yamarāja holding his rod of punishment.

230 Leaving the path, Nārada went up to him, and on seeing Nārada all the deer ran away.

231 The hunter grew angry and wanted to abuse him, but by Nārada's power no abuse would come to his lips.

232 "Gosāñi, why have you left the road (prayāṇa-patha) and come here? Seeing you, the deer I was aiming at has fled."

233 Nārada said, "I lost my way and have come to ask you something. There is a doubt in my mind, and I would like to dispel it.

234 The boar and the deer on the path — I take it they are yours?" The hunter said, "Yes, what you say is so."

235 Nārada said, "If you shoot living beings with your arrows, why do you leave them half-dead instead of taking their lives?"

236 The hunter replied, "Listen, Gosāñi: my name is Mṛgāri, 'enemy of the beasts.' I do this work just as my father taught me.

237 "When a half-killed creature writhes and thrashes about, the joy in my heart swells."

238 Nārada said, “I ask one thing of you.” The hunter said, “Take a deer or any other animal you like.

239 “If you want a deerskin, come to my house. I will give you whatever you want — a deerskin or a tiger skin.”

240 Nārada said, “I want none of these. I ask another gift of you:

241 “From tomorrow on, whatever animals you kill, kill them outright; do not leave them half-dead.”

242 The hunter said, “What a gift to ask of me! What harm is there in half-killing them? Tell me that.”

243 Nārada said, “A half-killed creature suffers pain. You are giving pain to living beings, and the same plight will be yours.

244 “You are a hunter and you kill animals; that is a small offence. But to torment them as you kill them is a sin without measure.

245 “All the creatures you have tormented to death will kill you in the same way, birth after birth.”

246 In Nārada’s company the hunter’s mind became clear, and on hearing his words he grew afraid.

247 The hunter said, “This has been my work since childhood. How can I, a sinful and fallen wretch, be delivered?

248 “By what means will this sin of mine be removed? Deliver me — I fall at your feet.”

249 Nārada said, “If you accept my word, then I can set you free.”

250 The hunter said, “Whatever you say, I will do.” Nārada said, “Break your bow; then I will tell you.”

251 The hunter said, “If I break my bow, how will I live?” Nārada said, “I will give you food every day.”

252 The hunter broke his bow and fell at Nārada’s feet. Nārada raised him up and instructed him:

253 “Go home and give the brāhmaṇas whatever wealth you have. Then leave home, both of you, each wearing a single cloth.

254 “Build a small hut on the bank of a river, and in front of it plant a tulasī on a raised mound.

255 “Walk around the tulasī and serve her, and chant the name of Kṛṣṇa without cease.

256 “I will send you plenty of food every day. Take of it only as much as the two of you eat.”

257 Then Nārada healed the three wounded animals, and once healed they ran off and were gone.

258 Seeing this, the hunter was astonished. He bowed to his guru and went home.

259 Nārada went on his way, and the hunter went home and did everything Nārada had told him.

260 Word spread through the village that the hunter had become a Vaiṣṇava, and all the villagers began to bring him food.

261 In a single day ten or twenty people would bring him food, but each day he took only as much as the two of them would eat.

262 One day Nārada said to Parvata, “Listen, I have a disciple. Let us go and see him.”

263 So the two sages came to the hunter’s place, and the hunter caught sight of his guru from afar.

264 He came running in haste, yet he could find no place to step, for here and there the ants on the path were at his feet.

265 Seeing ants where he was to offer his prostration, he swept the place clear with his cloth and then fell flat like a rod.

266 Nārada said, “Hunter, this is no wonder. Through devotion to Hari a person becomes free of all violence and the best of saints.”

267 “O hunter, it is no wonder that you have non-violence and these other virtues: those who are engaged in devotion to Hari never cause pain to others.” (Skanda-purāṇa)[60]

268 Then the hunter brought the two sages into his courtyard, fetched seats of kuśa grass and reverently seated them.

269 He brought water and reverently washed the feet of both, and he and his wife drank that water and placed it on their heads.

270 As he sang the name of Kṛṣṇa, he trembled, his hair stood on end and tears flowed; and he danced with arms raised, waving his cloth.

271 Seeing the hunter’s love, the great sage Parvata said to Nārada, “You are a touchstone!

272 “Ah, O sage among the gods, you are blessed! By your mercy even a lowly hunter at once attained love (rati) for Acyuta, his hair standing on end.” (Skanda-purāṇa)[61]

273 Nārada said, “Vaiṣṇava, does any food come to you?” The hunter said, “Whoever you send brings something and leaves it.

274 “Do not send so much food; there is no need. We want only as much food as is fit for two people.”

275 Nārada said, “Live like this — you are fortunate.” With these words the two sages vanished.

276 Thus I have told you the story of the hunter. Whoever hears it comes to know the power of the company of sādhus.

277 Here are three more meanings; together with the earlier ones they make twenty-six.

278 Hear another meaning — a storehouse of meanings: broadly it is twofold, and in finer detail it is of thirty-two kinds.

279 The word ātmā means Bhagavān in all His forms: one is Svayam Bhagavān, the Lord Himself, and the others are called Bhagavān.

280 All who delight in Him are ātmārāmas. They are known by two names: devotees who follow the rules (vidhi-bhakta) and devotees of spontaneous attachment (rāga-bhakta).

281 Each of these two kinds of devotees is fourfold: the eternal associates (pārṣada), those perfected by practice (sādhana-siddha) and the practitioners (sādhaka).

282 The practitioners are of two kinds, according to whether rati has awakened in them or not. So on the paths of vidhi and rāga there are four and four — eight kinds.

283 On the path of vidhi-bhakti, the eternally perfect associates (nitya-siddha pārṣada) appear in four kinds: servants, friends, elders and beloveds.

284 Those perfected by practice are servants, friends, elders and beloveds; and the practitioners in whom rati has awakened are also of four kinds.

285 The practitioners in whom rati has not yet awakened are of these four kinds as well. Thus on the path of vidhi there are sixteen kinds of devotees.

286 On the path of rāga the devotees are likewise of sixteen kinds, so that on the two paths there are thirty-two kinds of ātmārāmas.

287 I apply the meanings of the four words muni, nirgrantha, ca and api wherever each of them fits.

288 The thirty-two and the twenty-six together make fifty-eight. Now hear yet another way of bringing out the meaning.

289 Joining them with ca in the sense of mutual conjunction (itaretara), I take the word ātmārāma fifty-eight times:

290 "Ātmārāmāś ca ātmārāmāś ca…" — fifty-eight times. Then, dropping all the rest, I keep the word only once.

291 "Of words of the same form in the same case only one remains (eka-śeṣa); words whose meaning has already been expressed are not used." (Viśva-prakāśa)[62]

292 All fifty-eight occurrences of ca are elided, and the single word ātmārāma expresses fifty-eight meanings.

293 “Of words of the same form in the same case only one remains (eka-śeṣa); words whose meaning has already been expressed are not used.” (Pāṇini)[63]

294 “Aśvattha trees and banyan trees and kapittha trees and mango trees — trees.”

295 Just as one says, “In this forest the trees bear fruit,” so all the ātmārāmas render devotion to Kṛṣṇa.

296 In “ātmārāmāś ca” I take the word ca in the sense of conjunction (samuccaya), and the meaning is: “and the munis render devotion.”

297 Taking “nirgranthā eva” — “having become nirgranthas” — and api in the sense of specification (nirdhāraṇa), I have explained the fifty-ninth kind of meaning.

298 When all are conjoined, there is one more meaning: “The ātmārāmas, the munis and the nirgranthas” all worship Kṛṣṇa.

299 Taking the word api in the sense of certainty (avadhāraṇa), I will pronounce eva four times, once with each of the four words:

300 “To Urukrama alone, devotion alone, causeless devotion alone — this indeed they render.”

301 Thus I have told you sixty meanings of the verse. Now hear one more meaning, well supported by evidence.

302 The word ātmā also denotes the jīva, the knower of the field (kṣetrajña). All beings, from Brahmā down to the insect, are counted as His potency.

303 “The potency of Viṣṇu is declared to be superior; the potency called the knower of the field (kṣetrajña) is likewise superior; and the other, called ignorance and karma, is held to be a third potency.” (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 6.7.61)[64]

304 “Kṣetrajña: ātmā, puruṣa, pradhāna and prakṛti (the last in the feminine).” (Amara-kośa)

305 If, after wandering and wandering, such a soul finds the company of a sādhu, he gives up everything and worships Kṛṣṇa.

306 I have told you sixty meanings, and all of them concern the worship of Kṛṣṇa; that same meaning holds in all these examples.

307 Now, in your company, the sixty-first meaning has come to light. By the power of your devotion, waves of meaning rise up.

308 Hearing these meanings, Sanātana was amazed. Clasping Mahāprabhu’s feet, he offered prayers:

309 “You are the Lord Himself, the son of the king of Vraja. All the Vedas come forth with Your breath.

310 “You are the speaker of the Bhāgavatam, and You know its meaning. No one but You is able to know it.”

311 The Lord said, “Why do you praise Me? Why do you not consider the true nature of the Bhāgavatam?

312 “The Bhāgavatam is equal to Kṛṣṇa — all-pervading, the shelter of all. In every verse and every syllable it expresses many meanings.

313 “In the Bhāgavatam the truth is established through questions and answers, and hearing it, people are struck with wonder.

314 “I know, Śuka knows, and Vyāsa may or may not know. The Bhāgavatam is to be grasped by devotion — not by the intellect, nor by commentaries.” (the words of Śrī Śiva in an ancient verse)[65]

315 “Tell us: now that Kṛṣṇa — the master of yoga, devoted to the brāhmaṇas, the armour of dharma — has gone to His own abode, to whom has dharma gone for shelter?” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.1.23)

316 “Now that Kṛṣṇa has gone to His own abode together with dharma, knowledge and the rest, this Purāṇa has risen like the sun in the age of Kali for those who have lost their sight.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.3.43)

317 “In this way I have explained a single verse. Who would take a madman’s raving as authority?

318 “Only one who becomes ‘mad’ like Me comes to know the meaning of the Bhāgavatam with such vision.”

319 Joining his palms, Sanātana spoke again: “Lord, You ordered me to compile a Vaiṣṇava-smṛti.

320 “I am of low birth and know nothing of reasoning. How can a smṛti be set forth through me?

321 “If You instruct me, showing the direction in the form of sūtras, and if You Yourself enter my heart,

322 “then the way to write it will dawn in this lowly one’s heart. You are the Lord: whatever You have one do is accomplished.”

323 The Lord said, “Whatever you resolve to do, Kṛṣṇa will reveal it to you.

324 “Still, hear an outline of these sūtras. First describe, with its reasons, taking shelter of a guru;

325 “the marks of a guru and of a disciple, and how each tests the other; Bhagavān as the object of service; a consideration of all the mantras;

326 “who is qualified to receive a mantra; the purification of a mantra, its perfection and the like; initiation; the morning duties of remembrance; cleanliness; ācamana;

327 “cleaning the teeth, bathing, the sandhyā and other prayers; service to the guru; wearing the ūrdhva-puṇḍra, the cakra and the other marks;

328 “wearing gopī-candana and beads; gathering tulasī; purifying the cloth, the altar and the house; awakening Kṛṣṇa;

329 “worship with five, sixteen or fifty articles of offering; pūjā and ārati at the five times of day; offering Kṛṣṇa His meals and laying Him to rest;

330 “the marks of the Deity and of the śālagrāma; pilgrimage to Kṛṣṇa’s holy places; beholding Kṛṣṇa’s Deity form;

331 “the glory of the name and keeping far from offences against the name; the marks of a Vaiṣṇava; overcoming offences in service;

332 “the characteristics of the conch, water, fragrance, flowers, incense and the rest; japa, prayers, circumambulation and prostrate obeisances;

333 “the rules of puraścaraṇa; honouring Kṛṣṇa’s prasāda; rejecting what has not been offered; avoiding blasphemy of Vaiṣṇavas and the like;

334 “the marks of a sādhu, the company of sādhus and service to them; giving up bad company; hearing Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam;

335 “the daily and fortnightly duties, with an account of Ekādaśī and other days; the monthly duties; a consideration of the rules for Janmāṣṭamī and the other holy days —

336 “Ekādaśī, Janmāṣṭamī, Vāmana-dvādaśī, Śrī Rāma-navamī and Nṛsiṁha-caturdaśī.

337 “For all of these, reject a ‘pierced’ (viddhā) day and observe an unpierced one. Not observing them is a fault; by observing them one attains bhakti.

338 “Everywhere give the words of the Purāṇas as evidence. Describe also the rules for installing Deities and building temples of Viṣṇu; 339 “general good conduct and Vaiṣṇava conduct, and what should and should not be done in daily life according to the smṛti.

340 “Thus I have given you a brief outline. When you write, Kṛṣṇa will reveal it to you.”

341 Thus I have told of the Lord’s mercy to Sanātana. Hearing of it dispels the heart’s despondency.

342 In his own book Karṇapūra has described at length the Lord's mercy to Sanātana and preserved it in writing:

343 "This very one — the elder brother of Rūpa, once the jewel adorning the court of the king of Gauḍa — gave up abundant wealth and took as his own the youthful goddess of renunciation. Within he is brimming with the rasa of devotion; outwardly he looks like an avadhūta. Like a deep lake covered with moss, he delights those who know the truth." (Caitanya-candrodaya, Act 9)[66]

344 "The moment Sanātana came within sight of His eyes, the Lord, golden as a campaka flower, melted with boundless compassion and tenderly embraced him with His long arms, mighty as bolts." (Caitanya-candrodaya, Act 9)

345 "Since over time the account of the pastimes of Vṛndāvana had been lost, the Lord, to make it known in a special way, sprinkled Rūpa and Sanātana there with the nectar of His mercy." (Caitanya-candrodaya, 9.38)[67]

346 Thus I have told of the Lord's mercy to Sanātana. Hearing of it dispels the heart's despondency.

347 Here is knowledge of all of Kṛṣṇa's forms (svarūpa) and the injunctions of sādhana-bhakti on the paths of vidhi and rāga;

348 love of Kṛṣṇa, the rasa of devotion and the conclusions of bhakti. By hearing this a devotee comes to know them all to the very end.

349 One whose life's treasure is the feet of Śrī Caitanya, Nityānanda and Advaita attains this treasure.

350 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.[68]

Notes

1. Anubhāṣya: Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the mountain of sunrise (Udayācala); the darkness He dispelled is the darkness of false conclusions. ↩
2. The same verse as Ādi 1.18; translation as there. ↩
3. The same verse as Madhya 6.186 (= Madhya 17.140); translation as there. ↩
4. In the edition the Lord's words are closed after this verse (p. 792); the explanation of the words of the verse (10 ff.) is printed without quotation marks. ↩
5. Anubhāṣya: Brahmā tells Nārada of the līlā-avatāras of Viṣṇu and glorifies the immeasurable prowess of Vāmana; tri-pṛṣṭha is Satyaloka, tri-sāmya-sadana — pradhāna, the state of balance of the three guṇas. The Anubhāṣya also cites the Ṛg Veda (1.154): "What mighty deeds of Viṣṇu shall I proclaim? He measured out the earthly realms; wide-striding, He upheld the highest abode in His three steps." ↩
6. The same verse as Ādi 7.98; translation as there. ↩
7. The same verse as Madhya 17.142; translation as there. ↩
8. The same verse as Madhya 8.146 (= Madhya 9.114); translation as there. Anubhāṣya: the words of the wives of the serpent Kāliya. ↩
9. The edition (p. 797) prints «অবধারেণ», a misprint; the text keeps অবধারণে, as the series requires. ↩
10. Reference as in the heading of the edition (p. 797). The verse explains the name ātmā: Hari is so called because He pervades and begets all. ↩
11. The same verse as Ādi 2.11; translation as there. ↩
12. The same verse as Ādi 1.53; translation as there. Numbered as in the heading of the edition (p. 798) and the Anubhāṣya (2.9.32); in Ādi 1.53 and in other editions — 2.9.33. ↩
13. The same verse as 68; reference as in the heading of the edition (p. 798). ↩
14. The same verse as Ādi 2.11 (= 70); translation as there. ↩
15. The same verse as Madhya 8.226 (the Anubhāṣya cites it as Madhya 8.227, by the numbering of the edition); translation as there. ↩
16. The same verse as Madhya 22.36; translation as there. ↩
17. The same verse as Ādi 1.91; translation as there (on "the great sage", see the note there). ↩

18. The same verse as Madhya 22.40; translation as there. Numbered as in the heading of the edition (p. 800) and the Anubhāṣya (5.19.26); in other editions — 5.19.27. ↩
19. Reference as in the heading of the edition (p. 800). The heading: “Even the liberated serve Bhagavān in transcendental perfected bodies.” The line is printed without a number (only «॥»). ↩
20. The same verse as 45 (= Madhya 17.142); translation as there. ↩
21. The edition (p. 802) prints “নারদের (?) সঙ্গে”; the editor’s question mark is not reproduced. The heading of the edition: inquisitive mumukṣus such as Śaunaka give up the desire for liberation in the company of a pure devotee. ↩
22. Anubhāṣya: the time was lost ātmārāmatayā, through attachment to the impersonal Brahman. ↩
23. The edition (p. 802) has no “কৃষ্ণ” in the first line (the earlier text read “হঞা কৃষ্ণ ভজে”). Anubhāṣya: one liberated as the fruit of bhakti attains the bliss of serving Kṛṣṇa, while one who, as the fruit of knowledge, only imagines himself liberated falls down. ↩
24. The same verse as Madhya 22.30; translation as there. ↩
25. The same verse as Madhya 8.65; translation as there. ↩
26. The same verse as Madhya 10.178; translation as there. The source is given as in the heading of the edition (p. 803): words of Bilvamaṅgala in the Śrī Kṛṣṇa-karṇāmṛta. ↩
27. Anubhāṣya: nirodha and mukti are two of the ten characteristics of a mahā-purāṇa; the “potencies” are the jīva’s upādhis; the “other form” is the notion, imposed by ignorance (avidyā), that one is the doer; svarūpa is the pure nature of the jīva, who serves Bhagavān. ↩
28. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition reads kṛṣṇonmukhī mukti, “liberation turned toward Kṛṣṇa”; another reading has kṛṣṇonmukha bhakti … māyā-mukta haya, “through devotion turned toward Kṛṣṇa one is freed from māyā.” According to the Anubhāṣya, freedom from māyā comes through serving Kṛṣṇa, that is, through turning toward Him. ↩
29. The same verse as Madhya 20.119; translation as there. ↩
30. The same verse as Madhya 20.121; translation as there. ↩
31. The same verse as Madhya 22.22; translation as there. ↩
32. The same verse as 126 (= Madhya 22.30); translation as there. ↩
33. The same verse as Madhya 22.28; translation as there. ↩
34. The same verse as 107; translation and reference as there (heading of the edition, p. 804). The line is printed without a number (only «॥»). ↩

35. The first two lines of the earlier text form a single line in the edition (p. 804); the source is given as in the heading of the edition (Viśva-prakāśa). Rāmāḥ is the plural (“the Rāmas”). ↩
36. The edition (p. 804) reads নিগর্ভ (so also in the heading and in the commentaries, pp. 804–806), i.e. nirgarbha, “without support”; the translation follows the commentaries. Anubhāṣya: sagarbha yogīs rely on meditation on the form of the one they worship; nirgarbha yogīs are given to meditation on the void and have no support; the six divisions are sagarbha and nirgarbha among those aspiring to yoga (yogārurukṣu), those established in yoga (yogārūḍha) and those who have attained perfection (prāpta-siddhi). ↩
37. Heading of the edition: “These are the thirteen meanings.” Anubhāṣya: they are the sādhaka, the brahmamaya, the prāpta-brahma-laya, the mumukṣu, the jīvan-mukta and the prāpta-svarūpa — the six kinds of ātmārāmas; the nirgrantha muni; and the sagarbha and nirgarbha yogīs of the three stages — those aspiring to yoga, those established in it and those who have attained perfection. ↩
38. The same verse as Madhya 20.106; translation as there. In the edition (p. 807) the two lines of the verse are printed in reverse order (“সদ্ধর্ম্মস্যাববোধায়…” first; in Madhya 20.106 and in the Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu it is the second line); the Bengali, transliteration and word-for-word follow the edition. Reference as in the heading of the edition: second laharī, 103 (in Madhya 20.106 the heading there gives 47). ↩
39. The same verse as Ādi 1.49; translation as there. ↩
40. Anubhāṣya: amba — “O mother”; prāyaḥ — “for the most part”, “almost”. ↩
41. Anubhāṣya (on 175): “the highest” (uttama) is prema. ↩
42. The same verse as Ādi 4.208; translation as there. Reference as in the heading of the edition (p. 809). The line is printed without a number (only « ॥ »). ↩
43. Source as in the heading of the edition (p. 809). ↩
44. Anubhāṣya: “of everything” — of Brahmā, Rudra and the whole manifest world; “the wise” — those who know the taste of Kṛṣṇa; “endowed with bhāva” — filled with prema. ↩
45. The same verse as 167 (= Ādi 1.49); translation as there. ↩
46. The same verse as Madhya 22.128; translation as there. Reference as in the heading of the edition here (p. 810: 238; in Madhya 22.128 the heading there gives 87). ↩
47. The same verse as 85 (= Madhya 22.36); translation as there. ↩

48. The same verse as 98 (= Madhya 22.40); translation as there. Numbered as in the heading of the edition (p. 811) and the Anubhāṣya (5.19.26); in other editions — 5.19.27. ↩
49. Heading of the edition: the nature of the pure, uncovered self of the jīva and of the covered self; the pure “I” and the impure “I”. ↩
50. The same verse as Madhya 8.275; translation as there. ↩
51. The same verse as 173; translation as there. ↩
52. Anubhāṣya: the six new ones are those who delight in the mind (159), in effort (162) and in steadfastness (168), the learned muni and the foolish nirgrantha who delight in intelligence (181), and the ātmārāma endowed with the nature of Kṛṣṇa’s servant (195). ↩
53. The same verse as 160; translation as there. ↩
54. Anubhāṣya: satī — “being pure”; malam — the impurity of the mind, the impressions of desire and the like; Pṛthu Mahārāja speaks thus of service to Viṣṇu to those assembled at his sacrifice. ↩
55. The same verse as Madhya 22.42; translation as there. ↩
56. Anubhāṣya: the three new meanings are anvācaya for ca; eva for ca together with garhā (censure) for api; and nirdhana (a poor man) for nirgrantha. ↩
57. Anubhāṣya: the sense of samuccaya has been explained above; “another meaning” is one other than samuccaya. ↩
58. Anubhāṣya: the sense is that even though they are ātmārāmas, the sages renounce the honour of that position, and they alone worship Kṛṣṇa. ↩
59. Anubhāṣya: if api with nirgrantha has the sense of specification (nirdhāraṇa), then even an unworthy hunter, bereft of the wealth of sādhana, becomes a kṛṣṇārāma by the power of the company of a sādhu such as Nārada, and worships Kṛṣṇa. ↩
61. Source as in the heading of the edition (p. 816: “words of the Skanda Purāṇa”); the line is printed without a number. ↩
62. Source as in the heading of the edition (p. 817: Viśva-prakāśa); translation as in 145. ↩
63. As in 291. The heading of the edition (p. 817) names Pāṇini without the number of the rule. ↩
