“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Ādi-līlā

Chapter 13

The Description of the Great Festival of the Lord’s Appearance

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

1 May Śrī Caitanyadeva be gracious to me, for by His grace even one as fallen as I at once becomes fit to describe His pastimes.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Gauracandra! Glory to Advaitacandra, and glory, glory to Nityānanda!

3 Glory, glory to Gadādhara, and glory to Śrīvāsa! Glory to Mukunda and Vāsudeva, and glory to Haridāsa!

4 Glory to Svarūpa Dāmodara, and glory to Murāri Gupta! These moons have risen and driven all darkness away.

5 Glory to the devotees of Śrī Caitanyacandra, who are full moons! The moonlight of their love makes the three worlds shine.[1]

6 Thus I have given the preface at the beginning of the book. Now I shall tell the pastimes of Śrī Caitanya in their proper order.

7 First I shall list them briefly, as in sūtras; afterwards I shall describe them in detail.

8 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya descended in Navadvīpa, and for forty-eight years He enjoyed His pastimes before the eyes of the world.

9 His appearance is recorded in Śaka 1407 (1486), and He disappeared from the world in Śaka 1455 (1533).

10 For twenty-four years the Lord lived as a householder, and all that time He delighted in kīrtana.

11 At the end of His twenty-fourth year He accepted sannyāsa, and for another twenty-four years He lived in Nīlācala.

12 Six of those years He spent journeying — now to the south, now to Gauḍa, now to Vṛndāvana.

13 For eighteen years He stayed in Nīlācala, flooding everyone with the nectar of His pastimes of love for Kṛṣṇa.

14 The Lord's pastimes as a householder are called the Ādi-līlā, and His later pastimes bear two names, Madhya and Antya.

15 Murāri Gupta recorded in sūtras all the Lord's deeds in the Ādi-līlā.

16 Svarūpa Dāmodara set down the Lord's later pastimes in brief notes and gathered them in his book.[2]

17 Reading and hearing the notes of these two, the Vaiṣṇavas describe the Lord's pastimes in their order.[3]

18 Childhood (bālya), boyhood (paugaṇḍa), early youth (kaiśora) and youth (yauvana) — these are the four ages, and so the Ādi-līlā falls into four divisions.

19 I bow to that full moon of Phālguna, rich in every good quality, on which Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya descended together with the names of Kṛṣṇa.[4]

20 The Lord appeared on the evening of the Phālguna full moon, and at that very hour, as providence would have it, the moon was eclipsed.

21 The people were joyfully calling out, “Hari! Hari!” — and Caitanya Prabhu took birth, having first brought the Name to birth.

22 At His birth, in childhood, boyhood, early youth and youth, the Lord found one pretext or another to make people take the name of Hari.

23 In the guise of an ordinary infant the Lord would cry, but the moment He heard the names “Kṛṣṇa” and “Hari”, He would fall silent.[5]

24 So all the women among His friends and kin who came to see Him would chant, “Hari! Hari!”

25 Laughing, the women all called Him “Gaurahari”, and so Gaurahari became His name.

26 His childhood lasted until the chalk was put in His hand for His first lesson; His boyhood, until He married.

27 With His marriage began the bloom of youth, and everywhere the Lord led people to chant the name together.

28 In His boyhood He studied and also taught pupils, and everywhere He explained the name of Kṛṣṇa.

29 He showed that the purport of every sūtra, gloss and commentary was the name of Kṛṣṇa, and His pupils came to see it plainly — a wonder to all.[6]

30 Whomever He met He would tell, “Chant the name of Kṛṣṇa!” — and He flooded the town of Navadvīpa with Kṛṣṇa’s name.

31 In His early youth He began the saṅkīrtana, dancing in love night and day together with His devotees.

32 He wandered from town to town singing kīrtana, and flooded the three worlds with loving devotion.

33 Thus for twenty-four years in Navadvīpa He led everyone to the name of Kṛṣṇa and to love for Him.

34 After accepting sannyāsa He remained twenty-four years more, living with His devotees in Nīlācala.

35 Of those years in Nīlācala, He spent six in ceaseless dancing and singing, giving away loving devotion.[7]

36 He journeyed as far as Setubandha in the south, through Gauḍa and on to Vṛndāvana, spreading the holy name and love wherever He went.

37 These six years are called the Madhya-līlā, the very heart of His pastimes; the last eighteen years are called the Antya-līlā.

38 For six of those years, in the joy of dancing and singing with His devotees, He led people to loving devotion.

39 The last twelve years He stayed in Nīlācala, and, tasting love Himself, He taught everyone its highest states.[8]

40 Night and day the pain of separation from Kṛṣṇa welled up in Him; He behaved like one mad and spoke in broken, raving words.

41 Just as Śrī Rādhā raved on seeing Uddhava, so He raved in His madness night and day.

42 With Rāmānanda and Svarūpa He relished the songs of Vidyāpati, Jayadeva and Caṇḍīdāsa.[9]

43 Tasting all the ways of love in separation from Kṛṣṇa, He fulfilled His own desire.

44 Śrī Caitanya's pastimes are endless. How could a tiny soul tell them in full?

45 Even if Ananta Himself were to count them in brief, with all His thousand mouths He would never reach the end.

46 Svarūpa Dāmodara and Murāri Gupta weighed them carefully and wrote down the chief pastimes in brief.

47 Following them, I write these pastimes in brief, and Vṛndāvana dāsa has described them in detail.[10]

48 Vṛndāvana dāsa is the Vyāsa of Śrī Caitanya's pastimes, and he set them down with great sweetness.

49 Fearing that his book would grow too long, he left out certain parts, and of these I shall say something.

50 He has tasted the nectar of the Lord's pastimes; I only savour a few morsels of what he has left.

51 Listen, O devotees: I write the Ādi-līlā in brief, for it cannot be written in full.

52 To fulfil a certain desire, the son of the king of Vraja resolved in His mind to descend.

53 First He sent down His elders and kin. I shall name them in brief, for they cannot all be told in full.

54–55 Śrī Śacī and Jagannātha, Śrī Mādhava Purī, Keśava Bhāratī and Śrī Īśvara Purī, Advaita Ācārya and Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita, Ācāryaratna, Vidyānidhi and Ṭhākura Haridāsa.

56 In Śrīhaṭṭa lived Śrī Upendra Miśra — a Vaiṣṇava, learned and wealthy, and rich in every virtue.[11]

57–58 His seven sons, the seven Miśras, were like seven great sages: Kaṁsāri, Paramānanda, Padmanābha, Sarveśvara, Jagannātha, Janārdana and Trailokyanātha. Jagannātha made his home by the Gaṅgā in Nadīyā.

59 Jagannātha, the best of the Miśras, bore the title Purandara. This ocean of virtues had once been Nanda and Vasudeva.[12]

60 His wife, named Śacī, was chaste and wholly devoted to her husband; her father was Nīlāmbara Cakravartī.[13]

61 In the land of Rāḍha were born Ṭhākura Nityānanda, Gaṅgādāsa Paṇḍita, Murāri Gupta and Mukunda.

62 He sent countless devotees down before Him, and last of all the son of the king of Vraja descended Himself.

63 Before the Lord appeared, all the Vaiṣṇavas would gather at the home of Advaita Ācārya.

64 There Ācārya Gosāñi expounded the Gītā and the Bhāgavata, decrying the paths of knowledge and fruitive work and extolling bhakti.

65 He showed that all the scriptures speak of devotion to Kṛṣṇa, and would accept no other path — not knowledge, yoga, austerity or ritual dharma.[14]

66 In His company the Vaiṣṇavas delighted in talks of Kṛṣṇa, worship of Kṛṣṇa and the saṅkīrtana of the holy name.

67 But when He saw that all people had turned away from Kṛṣṇa and were sunk in worldly things, He grieved.

68 He pondered how they might be delivered: how could all these people be saved?

69 “If Kṛṣṇa descends and spreads bhakti, then indeed all people will be delivered.”

70 Vowing to bring Kṛṣṇa down, the Ācārya worshipped Him with tulasī and Gaṅgā water.

71 He called to Kṛṣṇa with roar upon roar, and those roars drew the son of the king of Vraja.[15]

72 Eight daughters were born one after another to Śacī, the wife of Jagannātha Miśra, and each died soon after her birth.

73 Grieving at the loss of his children, Miśra worshipped the feet of Viṣṇu, praying for a son.

74 Then a son was born, named Viśvarūpa. He was rich in great virtues, a manifestation of Baladeva.

75 Baladeva's manifestation in the spiritual sky is Saṅkarṣaṇa, and He is both the material and the efficient cause of the universe.[16]

76 Apart from Him I see nothing in the universe, and so He is called Viśvarūpa, "He whose form is the universe".

77 "O King, this is no wonder for Bhagavān, the unlimited Lord of the universe, in whom this whole world is woven, warp and weft, like cloth upon its threads." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.15.35)[17]

78 That is why the Lord called Him His elder brother. Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma — these two are Caitanya and Nitāi.[18]

79 Blessed with a son, the couple rejoiced and served the feet of Govinda with still greater devotion.

80 At the end of the month of Māgha in Śaka 1406, Kṛṣṇa entered the bodies of Jagannātha and Śacī.[19]

81 Miśra said to Śacī, "I see something wonderful. Your body is radiant, and our house has become the abode of Lakṣmī.

82 Wherever I go, people honour me, and they send wealth, clothes and rice to our house."

83 Śacī replied, "And I see beings of divine form appear in the sky above and offer prayers."

84 Jagannātha Miśra said, "I had a dream: a radiant abode entered my heart.

85 From my heart it passed into yours. So I understand that some great soul is to be born."

86 Speaking thus, the two were filled with joy, and they served the śālagrāma with special care.

87 The months went by until the thirteenth had come, yet still the child was not born, and Miśra grew afraid.

88 Nīlāmbara Cakravartī made his calculations and said, "A son will be born this month, at an auspicious moment."

89 In Śaka 1407, in the month of Phālguna, the auspicious moment came on the evening of the full moon.

90 The moon was in Leo, Leo was rising and the planets were exalted; the six divisions and the eight divisions all showed auspicious signs.[20]

91 Once the spotless moon Gauracandra had shown Himself, what further need was there of the spotted moon?

92 Knowing this, Rāhu seized the moon, and the three worlds were flooded with the names "Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa! Hari!"

93 Cries of "Jaya! Jaya!" rang through all the worlds, and the people, amazed, wondered within themselves.

94 The whole world was filled with people crying, "Hari! Hari!" — and at that very moment Gaura-Kṛṣṇa descended to the earth.

95 Every heart in the world was glad; even the Muslims, mocking the Hindus, cried out, "Hari!"[21]

96 Calling “Hari!”, the women raised their joyful ululation, while in heaven the gods, full of eager delight, played music and danced.

97 The ten directions grew bright, the waters of the rivers grew clear, and all beings, moving and unmoving, were overwhelmed with bliss.

98 Over Nadīyā, the eastern mountain, the full moon Gaurahari has risen in His mercy. The darkness of sin is destroyed, the three worlds rejoice, and the sound of “Hari!” fills the world.

99 At that very time, in His own home, Advaita Rāya rose and began to dance, joyful at heart. With Haridāsa beside Him He roared and sang kīrtana in delight — and no one knew why He was dancing.[22]

100 Seeing the eclipse, He laughed, hurried to the bathing place on the Gaṅgā and bathed there joyfully. Then, as though for the eclipse, He gave the brāhmaṇas many gifts in His mind.[23]

101 Seeing the whole world full of bliss, Haridāsa was astonished and spoke in hints: “This joyful play of Yours delights my heart. I see that something lies behind it.”

102 Ācāryaratna and Śrīvāsa were filled with joy. They went and bathed in the Gaṅgā, and, overwhelmed with bliss, sang the saṅkīrtana of Hari and gave many gifts in their minds.

103 So too all the devotees, in whatever land they dwelt, danced and sang saṅkīrtana there, overwhelmed with bliss, and, as though for the eclipse, gave gifts in their minds.

104 Brāhmaṇas, good men and women all came with plates heaped with gifts, and when they saw the child, radiant as molten gold, they blessed Him with delight.

105 Sāvitrī, Gaurī, Sarasvatī, Śacī, Rambhā, Arundhatī and all the other goddesses came dressed as brāhmaṇa ladies, bearing trays laden with gifts, to see Him.[24]

106 In the sky the gods, siddhas, gandharvas and cāraṇas offered praises, danced, played and sang; and the dancers, musicians and bards who performed in Navadvīpa all came and danced with delight.

107 Who was coming, who going, who dancing, who singing — no one could make out anyone's words. Sorrow and grief were cut away, the people were filled with gladness, and Miśra was overwhelmed with bliss.[25]

108 Ācāryaratna and Śrīvāsa came to Jagannātha Miśra and recalled him to his duty. They had the birth rite performed as the scriptures prescribe, and then Miśra gave many gifts.

109 He gave away to the brāhmaṇas all the gifts he had received and whatever else was in the house, and he honoured all the dancers, singers, bards and the poor with gifts of wealth.

110 Śrīvāsa's wife, whose name was Mālinī, came with the wife of Ācāryaratna, and the women joyfully worshipped the child with vermilion, turmeric, oil, puffed rice, bananas and many kinds of fruit.[26]

111 Advaita Ācārya's wife, the noble lady revered by all the world, was named Sītā Ṭhākurāṇī. With the Ācārya's leave she set out with gifts to see that jewel among children.

112 She brought a little golden waist-chain and anklets of silver coins, golden armlets and bracelets, fine conch-shell bangles for both arms, silver ankle-rings and necklaces of gold coins.

113 There was also a tiger's claw set in gold, a silken waist-cord, every kind of ornament for hands and feet, many-coloured silk saris, a little shirt woven with a silk border, and a wealth of gold and silver coins.[27]

114 Riding in a curtained palanquin with her maidservants, she came with baskets full of clothes and ornaments, and plates heaped with auspicious things — dūrvā grass, paddy, gorocanā, turmeric, saffron and sandal.[28]

115 Bringing many loads of sweets and other foods, she arrived at Śacī's house. When she saw the child, He was Kāna of Gokula Himself — only His colour was the opposite.[29]

116 Every limb was finely formed, He seemed an image of gold, and every limb bore auspicious marks. Seeing the child's divine radiance, she was filled with delight, and her heart melted with a mother's love.

117 She placed dūrvā grass and paddy on His head and blessed Him again and again: "May the two brothers live long!" Fearing the witches and evil spirits, she gave Him the name Nimāi.[30]

118 On the day the mother and child were bathed, she gave them clothes and ornaments and honoured Miśra together with his son. Then, honoured in turn by Śacī and Miśra, Sītā Ṭhākurāṇī returned home glad at heart.[31]

119 So Śacī and Jagannātha had gained a son who was the Lord of Lakṣmī, and all their desires were fulfilled. Their house was filled with wealth and grain; everyone honoured their child, and day by day their joy grew.

120 Miśra was a Vaiṣṇava — peaceful, free from lust, pure and self-controlled — with no thought of enjoying wealth. Whatever wealth came to him through his son's power, he gave to the brāhmaṇas for the pleasure of Viṣṇu.[32]

121 Nīlāmbara Cakravartī cast the horoscope with joy in his heart and told Miśra in secret, “I see many marks of a great person (mahāpuruṣa), both in the horoscope and on His body. This child will deliver the world.”[33]

122 Thus the Lord in His mercy descended in Śacī’s house. Whoever hears of this receives the kindness of merciful Gaura Prabhu and attains His feet.

123 One who has gained a human birth yet will not hear of Gaura’s qualities has wasted that birth. He has found the river of nectar, yet drinks water from a poisoned pit. Why did he not die as soon as he was born?[34]

124 Honouring upon my head, as my own treasure, the holy feet of Śrī Caitanya and Nityānanda, Ācārya Advaitacandra, Svarūpa, Rūpa and Raghunātha dāsa, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, have sung the pastime of His birth.

Notes

1. Heading in the edition: “The rays of hari-bhajana shining from the devotee-moons destroy the darkness of the living beings’ ignorance.” ↩
2. Heading in the edition to 15–16: Murāri Gupta strung together the Ādi-līlā in his Caitanya-carita, and Svarūpa Dāmodara the later pastimes in his Kaḍacā (diary). ↩
3. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Śrī Murāri Gupta’s notes on the Ādi-līlā still survive; the Vaiṣṇavas read them, and they heard the notes of Śrī Svarūpa Gosvāmī’s diary from the lips of Śrī Raghunātha dāsa Gosvāmī — and so they describe the Lord’s pastimes. ↩
4. Anubhāṣya: on this full moon Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya — the Lord of Goloka, the original source of all avatāras, in whom Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are one — descended together with the names of Kṛṣṇa from His own abode, the Gaura-prakoṣṭha, into the earthly Navadvīpa; and the full moon itself is no worldly day but a transcendental goddess of the lunar day (tithi), who descended into time to serve Him. The Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya cites a verse: “In the twenty-eighth age of Vaivasvata Manu, in the year fourteen hundred and seven, on the lovely bank of the Bhāgīrathī, from the great ocean of Śacī's womb, on a full moon seized by Rāhu, Gaurāṅga appeared." ↩

5. Heading in the edition: "Crying on the pretext of making people chant the name — and quieting at the name alone." ↩
6. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: while teaching His pupils the sūtras of grammar with their vṛtti and ṭīkā, the Lord taught them the purport of Kṛṣṇa's name; following that teaching, the Gosvāmīs (Śrī Jīva) later composed two grammars, the Laghu- and the Bṛhad-Harināmāmṛta-vyākaraṇa, through which one gains both a knowledge of words and devotion to Kṛṣṇa. ↩
7. Heading in the edition to 34–36: "Of the last twenty-four years in Nīlācala, six were spent preaching the name and prema from the ocean to the Himalayas." ↩
8. Anubhāṣya: one in whom prema has awakened dwells in the transcendental rasa of separation (vipralambha), which nourishes the rasa of union (sambhoga); without separation union finds no fullness. This state of love Śrī Gaurasundara taught the souls of the world, in order to taste it Himself. ↩
9. Anubhāṣya: Vidyāpati, Jayadeva and Caṇḍīdāsa sang of the transcendental rasa of separation, and the Lord, absorbed in the heart of Śrī Rādhā, relished their songs with His two most intimate devotees, Svarūpa Dāmodara and Rāmānanda Rāya. But for those who identify with the body, who look in these songs for worldly poetry, or who, like the prākṛta-sahajiyās, claim to follow rāgānugā in order to please their senses, any discussion of the pastimes of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa is strictly forbidden: they would take those transcendental pastimes for worldly love and ruin themselves. ↩
10. Heading in the edition: "On the basis of those notes Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa described the pastimes of Gaura." ↩
11. Anubhāṣya (after the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, 35): the cowherd Parjanya, Kṛṣṇa's grandfather, appeared in Śrīhaṭṭa as Upendra Miśra, the father of seven sons; he lived in the village of Ḍhākā-dakṣiṇa. ↩
12. Heading in the edition: "Who Jagannātha was in the avatāra of Kṛṣṇa." ↩
13. Anubhāṣya (after the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, 104): Nīlāmbara Cakravartī is the sage Garga, for, like Garga with Kṛṣṇa, he foretold in an assembly the coming appearance of Gaura; and as Śacī's father he is the cowherd Sumukha. ↩
14. Heading in the edition: "The teaching that devotion to Kṛṣṇa alone is the means (abhidheya)." ↩
15. Anubhāṣya to 67–71: see Ādi 3.95–109 and the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi 2. ↩

16. Heading in the edition: “Viśvarūpa is Mahā-saṅkarṣaṇa of Vaikuṇṭha.” Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Viśvarūpa is the avatāra of Mahā-saṅkarṣaṇa of the spiritual sky. Anubhāṣya: Viśvarūpa, the elder brother of Śrī Gaurahari, took sannyāsa before marriage, receiving the name Śaṅkarāraṇya, and in Śaka 1431 passed from view at Pandharpur; He is both the material and the efficient cause of the universe. According to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (58–59), Viśvarūpa is the vyūha Saṅkarṣaṇa, while Nityānanda Avadhūta is Baladeva Himself, the Balarāma of Vraja. ↩
17. Anubhāṣya: Śukadeva says this to Parīkṣit about Baladeva’s slaying of the demon Dhenuka. ↩
18. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Mahā-saṅkarṣaṇa, the material and the efficient cause, pervades the universe through and through, and therefore Mahāprabhu calls Viśvarūpa His elder brother; but the Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma of Kṛṣṇa’s own abode are Caitanya and Nitāi, and so Nityānanda Prabhu is the original Saṅkarṣaṇa, Baladeva Himself. ↩
19. Anubhāṣya to 80–86: Jagannātha and Śacī are the Lord’s eternal associates (nitya-siddha); their hearts and bodies are made of pure goodness (śuddha-sattva) and are not like those of ordinary living beings. Pure goodness is called vasudeva, and in it Vāsudeva, who eternally enjoys His spiritual pastimes, becomes manifest. The union of Jagannātha and Śacī and the conception in Śacī’s womb were not like the carnal union and pregnancy of worldly people; even to think so is an offence. According to the Bhāgavatam (10.2.16–18, with the comments of Śrīdhara Svāmī and Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa) and the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Kṛṣṇa first became manifest in the heart of Vasudeva, and from his heart in the heart of Devakī; so too Śrī Gaurasundara appeared in the hearts of Miśra and Śacī, wholly absorbed as they were in serving the feet of Govinda (13.79). ↩
20. Anubhāṣya: the ṣaḍ-varga are the six divisions of a sign — kṣetra, horā, drekkāṇa, navāṁśa, dvādaśāṁśa and triṁśāṁśa; by them Cakravartī determined the auspicious signs. The aṣṭa-varga is reckoned from the positions of the planets, as taught in the Bṛhaj-jātaka and other books; by this reckoning too he found Mahāprabhu’s signs auspicious. ↩
21. Heading in the edition: “Then even the Muslims took the name of Hari, on the pretext of mockery.” ↩
22. Anubhāṣya: His own home — in Śāntipura; on the day of the Lord’s appearance Haridāsa Ṭhākura was in Śāntipura. ↩
23. Anubhāṣya: mano-bale — “with eagerness of heart”, or “in the mind”. So too Vasudeva, seeing Hari born as his son, in the joy of Kṛṣṇa’s birth festival gave the brāhmaṇas ten thousand cows in his mind (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.3.11). ↩

24. Anubhāṣya: Sāvitrī is the consort of Brahmā, Gaurī of Śiva, Sarasvatī of Nṛsiṁha (after the verse quoted by Śrīdhara Svāmī: “in whose mouth dwells the Goddess of speech and on whose breast Lakṣmī…”), Śacī of Indra; Rambhā is a dancer of heaven, and Arundhatī the wife of Vasiṣṭha. ↩
25. Anubhāṣya: sambhālite — “to understand”; gods, men, siddhas and the rest belong to different orders of beings, and so could not understand one another’s speech. ↩
26. Heading in the edition: “The auspicious rites of Mālinī Ṭhākurāṇī and the Lord’s aunt”: the wife of Candraśekhara (Ācāryaratna) was Śacī’s sister. ↩
27. Anubhāṣya to 112–113: kaḍi-bauli — a golden waist-chain; pāśuli — a silver foot ornament; aṅgada, kaṅkaṇa — golden bracelets; divya śaṅkha — bangles of conch shell; malabaṅka — a curved ankle-ring; hema-jaḍi — a jewel set in gold with a tiger’s claw; kaṭi-paṭṭasūtra-ḍorī — a waist-cord; citra-varṇa paṭṭa-sāḍī — many-coloured silk cloth; buni photo paṭṭa-pāḍī — a child’s little shirt (phatuyā) with a woven silk border. ↩
28. Anubhāṣya: gorocanā — a bright yellow auspicious substance found in a cow’s head; kuṅkuma — the fragrant saffron of Kashmir. ↩
29. Anubhāṣya: Kāna, Kānu — Kṛṣṇa; Kṛṣṇa’s colour is the deep blue of a rain-cloud or a sapphire, while Viśvambhara’s is the opposite, golden. ↩
30. Anubhāṣya: the two brothers — Viśvarūpa and Viśvambhara; ḍākinī and śākhinī — evil spirits in the train of Pārvatī and Maheśa; they cannot approach the sacred nimba tree or anything connected with it — hence the name Nimāi. ↩
31. Anubhāṣya: the bathing day is the day when mother and child are first brought out of the house (niṣkramaṇa); the Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya names the fifth and the ninth day after the birth. By Bengali custom a relative who has visited a household is honoured with clothes on taking leave; so Jagannātha Miśra and Śacī honoured Sītā Ṭhākurāṇī, and she returned to Śāntipura. ↩
32. Anubhāṣya: worldly people, thinking of wife and children, are busy only with enjoying their wealth; the pure devotee Jagannātha Miśra was not like that: he offered everything to the Lord, gave the remnants to brāhmaṇas and other worthy persons, and took nothing for his own enjoyment. ↩
33. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the marks are in the horoscope and on the body (by sāmudrika, the science of bodily signs). ↩
34. Anubhāṣya: one who turns from the river of nectar — devotion to Kṛṣṇa — to drink from the poisoned well of sense pleasure, so harmful to the soul, is utterly foolish, and his life is not worth sustaining. The Anubhāṣya cites the Caitanya-candrāmṛta of Śrīla Prabodhānanda Sarasvatī: if the world does not worship Śrī Caitanya, the Lord whom the best of the immortals worship, it is lifeless and death awaits it on every side; and now that the moon of Caitanya has risen and the ocean of the nectar of great love has spread far and wide, whoever remains poor is poor indeed. ↩
