“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Ādi-līlā

Chapter 6

Determining the Truth of Śrī Advaita

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the Anubhāṣya, 2026)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. Here the true nature and the glory of Śrīmad Advaita Ācārya Prabhu are established by examining two verses. Māyā has two functions (vṛttis): nimitta and upādāna. The puruṣa-avatāra seen in prakṛti as the efficient cause is called “Mahā-Viṣṇu.” And Mahā-Viṣṇu’s second form, present in pradhāna, the material cause, is “Advaita.” This Advaita took on a special role as agent in the creation of the world and so on; He also accepted the mood of a devotee and taught bhakti to the world. To say that He is Caitanya’s servant only adds to His glory, for in no rasa can one taste Kṛṣṇa’s sweetness without the mood of a servant (dāsya-bhāva) contained within each of them.

By the mercy of Advaitācārya one becomes able to describe His true nature —

বন্দে তং শ্রীমদদ্বৈতাচার্য্যমদ্ভুতচেষ্টিতম্ । যস্য প্রসাদাদজ্ঞোঽপি তৎস্বরূপং নিরূপয়েৎ ॥ ১ ॥

vande taṁ śrīmad-advaitā-I bow to Him Śrī Advaita-

cāryam adbhuta-ceṣṭitam Ācārya wondrous (whose) deeds

yasya prasādād ajño ’pi by whose grace an ignorant one even tat-svarūpaṁ nirūpayet

His true nature may describe

1 I bow to Śrī Advaita Ācārya, whose deeds are wondrous. By His grace even an ignorant person may describe His true nature.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I bow down to Śrīmad Advaitācārya, whose deeds are wondrous; by His mercy even an ignorant person can describe His true nature.

Anubhāṣya.
yasya (Advaita Prabhu's) prasādāt (by the mercy) ajñaḥ api (even an ignorant person) tat-svarūpaṁ (the truth about Him) nirūpayet (can describe), tam adbhuta-ceṣṭitam (Him whose deeds are wondrous) śrīmad-advaitācāryam (I) vande.

জয় জয় শ্রীচৈতন্য জয় নিত্যানন্দ । জয়াদ্বৈতচন্দ্র জয় গৌরভক্তবৃন্দ ॥ ২ ॥

jaya jaya śrī-caitanya jaya nityānanda glory glory to Śrī Caitanya glory to Nityānanda jayādvaita-candra jaya gaura-bhakta-vṛnda glory to Advaitacandra glory of Gaura the devotees to the multitude

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

পঞ্চ শ্লোকে কহিল শ্রীনিত্যানন্দ-তত্ত্ব । শ্লোকদ্বয়ে কহি অদ্বৈতাচার্য্যের মহত্ত্ব ॥ ৩ ॥

pañca śloke kahila śrī-nityānanda-tattva in five verses I have told of Śrī Nityānanda the truth śloka-dvaye kahi advaitācāryera mahattva in two verses I tell of Advaita Ācārya the greatness

3 In five verses I have set out the truth of Śrī Nityānanda; now in two I speak of the greatness of Advaita Ācārya.

Explanation of the twelfth and thirteenth of the fourteen opening verses — (a verse from the diary of Śrī Svarūpa Gosvāmī)

মহাবিষ্ণুর্জগৎকর্ত্তা মায়য়া যঃ সৃজত্যদঃ । তস্যাবতার এবায়মদ্বৈতাচার্য্য ঈশ্বরঃ ॥ ৪ ॥

mahā-viṣṇur jagat-kartā Mahā-Viṣṇu of the world the maker māyayā yaḥ sṛjaty adaḥ
by māyā who creates this (world)
tasyāvatāra evāyam
His avatāra indeed this advaitācārya īśvaraḥ
Advaita Ācārya the Lord

4 Mahā-Viṣṇu is the maker of the world, who creates it through māyā; and this Lord Advaita Ācārya is His avatāra.[1]

Anubhāṣya.
yaḥ jagat-kartā mahā-viṣṇuḥ (the shelter of the efficient cause) māyayā adaḥ (this world) sṛjati, tasya avatāraḥ eva ayam īśvaraḥ (the shelter of the material cause) advaitācāryaḥ.

অদ্বৈতং হরিণাদ্বৈতাদাচার্য্যং ভক্তিশংসনাৎ । ভক্তাবতারমীশং তমদ্বৈতাচার্য্যমাশ্রয়ে ॥ ৫ ॥

advaitaṁ hariṇādvaitād Advaita from Hari being non-different ācāryaṁ bhakti-śaṁsanāt Ācārya bhakti from teaching bhaktāvatāram īśaṁ tam
as a devotee descended the Lord Him
advaitācāryam āśraye Advaita Ācārya I take shelter of 5 He is called Advaita because He is non-different from Hari, and Ācārya because He teaches bhakti. I take shelter of Him, the Lord Advaita Ācārya, who has descended as a devotee.[2]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Mahā-Viṣṇu, who creates this world by māyā, is the Creator of the world; the Lord Advaitācārya is His avatāra. He is called "Advaita" because He is a tattva nondifferent from Hari, and "Ācārya" because He teaches bhakti. I take shelter of this Lord Advaitācārya, the avatāra in the form of a devotee.

Anubhāṣya.

hariṇā (with the Viṣṇu-tattva) (in nonduality) advaitāt (because there is no difference) — "advaitam"; bhakti-śaṁsanāt (because He instructs in bhajana) — "ācāryam"; bhaktāvatāram īśam tam advaitācāryam āśraye (I surrender).

The truth of Śrī Advaita and His greatness —

অদ্বৈত-আচার্য্য গোসাঞি সাক্ষাৎ ঈশ্বর । যাঁহার মহিমা নহে জীবের গোচর ॥ ৬ ॥

advaita-ācārya gosāñi sākṣāt īśvara Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi Himself the Lord yāṁhāra mahimā nahe jīvera gocara whose greatness not of the jīva within the range

6 Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is the Lord Himself; His greatness lies beyond the reach of the jīva.

The avatāra of Mahā-Viṣṇu —

মহাবিষ্ণু সৃষ্টি করেন জগদাদি কার্য্য । তাঁর অবতার সাক্ষাৎ অদ্বৈত আচার্য্য ॥ ৭ ॥

mahā-viṣṇu sṛṣṭi karena jagad-ādi kārya Mahā-Viṣṇu creation performs of the world and other works
tāṁra avatāra sākṣāt advaita ācārya
His avatāra direct Advaita Ācārya

7 Mahā-Viṣṇu carries out the creation of the world and all that goes with it, and Advaita Ācārya is His direct avatāra.

A part nondifferent from Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī —

যে পুরুষ সৃষ্টি-স্থিতি করেন মায়ায় । অনন্ত ব্রহ্মাণ্ড সৃষ্টি করেন লীলায় ॥ ৮ ॥

ye puruṣa sṛṣṭi-sthiti karena māyāya which Puruṣa creation and maintenance performs through māyā ananta brahmāṇḍa sṛṣṭi karena līlāya endless universes creation performs in play

8 That Puruṣa creates and maintains the world through māyā, and in play He brings forth endless universes.

ইচ্ছায় অনন্ত মূর্ত্তি করেন প্রকাশ । এক এক মূর্ত্ত্যে করেন ব্রহ্মাণ্ডে প্রবেশ ॥ ৯ ॥

icchāya ananta mūrti karena prakāśa
by His will endless forms He makes manifest eka eka mūrtye karena brahmāṇḍe praveśa in one one form (each) He makes into a universe entrance

9 By His will He manifests endless forms, and in one of them He enters each universe.

সে পুরুষের অংশ — অদ্বৈত, নাহি কিছু ভেদ । শরীর-বিশেষ তাঁর — নাহিক বিচ্ছেদ ॥ ১০ ॥

se puruṣera aṁśa — advaita, nāhi kichu bheda of that Puruṣa a part Advaita there is not any difference
śarīra-viśeṣa tāṁra — nāhika viccheda
a particular body His there is no separation

10 Advaita is a part (aṁśa) of that Puruṣa, and there is no difference between Them at all: He is a particular body of the Puruṣa, and the two are never apart.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One and the same māyā is called "pradhāna" in its material portion (upādāna) and "māyā" in its efficient portion (nimitta). In keeping with these two functions of māyā, Mahā-Viṣṇu abides in two forms. In one form Mahā-Viṣṇu abides in prakṛti as the efficient cause of the world — this is the form of "Viṣṇu." In His second form He abides in pradhāna and, in the form of Rudra, is called "Advaita." Advaita is therefore not in the least different from the Puruṣa; only Their bodies differ.

The presiding Lord of pradhāna, the material cause of the world —

সহায় করেন তাঁর লইয়া 'প্রধান' । কোটি ব্রহ্মাণ্ড করেন ইচ্ছায় নির্ম্মাণ ॥ ১১ ॥

sahāya karena tāṁra laiyā 'pradhāna' help He gives to Him taking pradhāna koṭi brahmāṇḍa karena icchāya nirmāṇa millions of universes He makes by His will the fashioning

11 Taking pradhāna, the material basis of the world, Advaita assists the Puruṣa, and by His will He fashions millions of universes.

Śrī Advaita, full of auspiciousness —

জগৎ-মঙ্গল অদ্বৈত, মঙ্গল-গুণধাম । মঙ্গল-চরিত্র সদা, 'মঙ্গল' যাঁর নাম ॥ ১২ ॥

jagat-maṅgala advaita, maṅgala-guṇa-dhāma of the world the good Advaita of auspicious qualities the abode maṅgala-caritra sadā, 'maṅgala' yāṁra nāma auspicious conduct always 'Maṅgala' whose name

12 Advaita is the good of the whole world and the abode of all auspicious qualities. His conduct is ever auspicious, and His name is Maṅgala, "the Auspicious".

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Advaita Prabhu is Mahā-Viṣṇu. He is the ācārya. Viṣṇu's conduct is auspicious in His very nature as the agent. When the jīva sees the auspiciousness in His auspicious pastimes and in His very being, good comes to the jīva. He is the source of all auspiciousness. His conduct, turned towards service, brings good to everyone in the world. The worthless people of the world ("the world's encumbrance") cannot understand this pure, eternal, complete and free auspiciousness, and so they fall away from bhakti, the natural function of the soul. Acts rooted in the wish to enjoy, the attainment of featureless liberation and every other inauspicious thing find no place in Śrī Advaita, who possesses spiritual qualities. Certain jīvas of demoniac nature, bewildered by māyā, failed to understand that He is the nondual Viṣṇu-tattva; holding to the devotionless doctrine of kevalādvaita, they only pretended to follow Him. The Ācārya punished these nondevotees under the guise of nourishing their self-conceit through His own māyā. Yet even this punishment is only an auspicious act. The Viṣṇu-vastu, by both the direct and the indirect way (anvaya and vyatireka), brings the jīva nothing but good. One who passes off the inauspicious as auspicious cannot grasp the Source of Viṣṇu's māyā in its material aspect. Some say that Advaita Prabhu had another name, "Maṅgala." As a naimittika-avatāra (one who descends for a particular occasion), He instills into prakṛti the power of the material cause. He is not an inauspicious material object, nor is He the abode of inauspicious material qualities. By following His example the jīva attains good. When the jīva hears and chants His name, all that is inauspicious in it is destroyed. One must not attribute to the Viṣṇu-vastu any quality that is undesirable, inferior, limited or featureless. Only by gaining transcendental knowledge of His real being does the jīva attain the highest good (niḥśreyasa).

The Puruṣa creates, taking with Him countless opulences —

কোটি অংশ, কোটি শক্তি, কোটি অবতার । এত লঞা সৃজে পুরুষ সকল সংসার ॥ ১৩ ॥

koṭi aṁśa, koṭi śakti, koṭi avatāra millions of parts millions of potencies millions of avatāras eta lañā sṛje puruṣa sakala saṁsāra
so many taking creates the Puruṣa the whole world

13 Taking millions of parts, millions of potencies and millions of avatāras, the Puruṣa creates the whole world.

The two forms of māyā —

মায়া যৈছে দুই অংশ — 'নিমিত্ত', 'উপাদান' । মায়া — 'নিমিত্ত'-হেতু, উপাদান — 'প্রধান' ॥ ১৪ ॥

māyā yaiche dui aṁśa — 'nimitta', 'upādāna' māyā as two aspects efficient material māyā — 'nimitta'-hetu, upādāna — 'pradhāna' māyā the efficient cause the material pradhāna

14 Māyā has two aspects, the efficient cause (nimitta) and the material cause (upādāna): as the efficient cause it is called māyā, and as the material cause, pradhāna.

Anubhāṣya.
See Madhya 20.271.

Kāraṇaśāyī creates in two forms —

পুরুষ ঈশ্বর ঐছে দ্বিমূর্ত্তি হইয়া । বিশ্ব-সৃষ্টি করে 'নিমিত্ত' 'উপাদান' লঞা ॥ ১৫ ॥

puruṣa īśvara aiche dvi-mūrti haiyā the Puruṣa the Lord likewise two forms becoming viśva-sṛṣṭi kare 'nimitta' 'upādāna' lañā of the universe creation performs the efficient the material taking 15 In the same way the Lord, the Puruṣa, assumes two forms and creates the universe with these two causes, the efficient and the material.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Prakṛti has two divisions, "nimitta" and "upādāna." In the same way the Puruṣa creates the universe by taking two forms: as the nimitta, the form of "Mahā-Viṣṇu," and as the upādāna, the form of "Advaita."

Anubhāṣya.
When people try to determine the source of the visible world, two different methods of reasoning appear. According to one view, the world is created from the Reality full of being, consciousness and bliss (sac-cid-ānanda), but only secondarily; primarily, that Reality manifests Goloka, Vaikuṇṭha and the other abodes together with their associates. According to the other view, the source is the source of the unreal, the unconscious and the joyless: it is unknowable, unmanifest and material. The former view is upheld by Vedānta, the purpose of the Vedas and their final fruit. Sāṅkhya and other smṛtis put forward the opposite, latter view in order to oppose the teaching of the true Reality. The visible world is perceived, for the most part, as unconscious. In living beings there is a semblance of consciousness (cidābhāsa) bound up with the universe fashioned by guṇa-māyā. Some hold that even this conscious principle is produced from prakṛti by the guṇas, and on this ground they set their teaching on the material cause apart from Vedānta. But the source, the cause of all causes, is the Possessor of potency (śaktimat-tattva), and the potency abides in the Possessor of potency. Besides the potency from which the visible world arose, other potencies also abide eternally in that great, all-sustaining Reality. Those bound to serving the objects of the visible world perceive the worldly potency and think Bhagavān merely its possessor. They reach a false conclusion (apasiddhānta): that the Possessor of potency was born of a single potency, and that, since with mundane minds they see partial possessors of potency, the undivided Possessor of potency was also born of prakṛti. If one takes as the "source" what mundane sense-knowledge defines as knowable being and non-being, one will of course conclude that consciousness arises from the unconscious. But the actual truth rests in the true Reality, who possesses potency. There is a method that does not accept as the root cause the Reality who creates place, time and circumstance; it first takes up countless objects in all their variety and from them, relying on inference, ascends towards the One. This method is called adhiroha-vāda, the ascending method. In the descending (avaroha) method of reasoning, the Reality is the cause of all causes. Since infinite potency abides in Him, He is the Truth possessed of features (saviśeṣa-tattva). Even His featurelessness is but one among countless ways of considering His features. When people start from notions of unconscious objects, take Him to be an effect and search for His cause, there arises a mind like that of one who has kept company with intoxicants. In fact, the idea that inert prakṛti is the root cause is far from the real truth. The world, unmanifest and evolved from the unconscious potency (acit-śakti), comes from the power of glance (īkṣaṇa) of the Supreme Lord, the Possessor of infinite potencies. Only by receiving power from the All-powerful does prakṛti build the world, which lies in time and space and is accessible to the jīva's material senses. The true Reality, who possesses infinite potencies, is perceived by the conditioned jīva only through the potency that builds the world. Such errors of reasoning arise from failing to discern how the Reality is related to His potency; they give rise in the jīva to vivarta, taking one thing for another. Until the truth is revealed, the jīva turned away from Bhagavān wanders in the world fit for enjoyment and does not find the true Reality.

Śrīla Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa writes in the Govinda-bhāṣya (Brahma-sūtra, Chapter 2, pāda 2): "Kapila, the teacher of Sāṅkhya, gathered the tattvas as follows. Prakṛti is the state of equilibrium of sattva, rajas and tamas. From prakṛti comes the mahat; from the mahat, ahaṅkāra; from ahaṅkāra, the five tanmātras, both kinds of senses and the gross elements; and there is the puruṣa. Such is the set of twenty-five. Sattva and the other guṇas, abiding in equilibrium, are prakṛti. They are to be understood as happiness, sorrow and delusion respectively, for in the world, their effect, everything is seen to take the form of happiness and the rest. Thus a young woman who gives her husband happiness by love is sāttvikī; when she gives him sorrow by her pique (māna) she is rājasī; when she bewilders him by separation she is tāmasī. All states are to be viewed in this way. 'Both kinds of senses' means the ten external senses and the one internal sense, the mind — eleven in all. Prakṛti is eternal and all-pervading. The root has no root; therefore the root is rootless. The material cause of all is not limited: 'All-pervading, because effects are seen everywhere,' say the sūtras. The mahat, ahaṅkāra and the five tanmātras are the seven prakṛti-vikṛtis: they are prakṛti (that which produces) for ahaṅkāra and the rest, and vikṛti (that which is produced) for pradhāna and the rest. The eleven senses and the five elements are sixteen, and they are only vikṛtis. The puruṣa does not change; therefore he is neither prakṛti nor vikṛti of anything. Prakṛti, however, is ever transforming. Though itself unconscious, it is the cause of the enjoyment and the liberation (apavarga) of many conscious beings. Though utterly beyond the senses, it is inferred from its effects. It is one, yet its guṇas are unequal, and by its power of transformation it gives birth to the world with its varied design, beginning with the mahat. Thus it is both the efficient and the material cause of the world. The puruṣa is inactive and without guṇas, an all-pervading spirit; he is distinct in each body and is inferred from the fact that composite things exist for the sake of another. Because the puruṣa neither changes nor acts, he is neither agent nor enjoyer. Given this nature of prakṛti and puruṣa, their mere proximity leads to an exchange of properties: consciousness is superimposed on prakṛti, and agency and enjoyment on the puruṣa. Thus from non-discrimination comes enjoyment, and from discrimination, liberation. When prakṛti becomes indifferent, that is [liberation]. Kapila set out such points in sūtras with arguments. In this system he accepted perception, inference and scriptural testimony as the means of valid knowledge (pramāṇas): ‘The pramāṇas are three; when a thing is established by them, all is established; there is no further means of establishing.’ Among these, there is no great dispute about matters established by perception and scripture. But pradhāna, which he infers to be the cause of the world by sūtras such as ‘From limitation,’ ‘From uniformity,’ ‘From potency’ and others, must be refuted: by refuting it one refutes his whole doctrine. Here a doubt arises: is pradhāna the efficient and material cause of the world or not? [The opponent says:] Pradhāna is exactly that. The world is sāttvika and so on; therefore pradhāna, which consists of sattva and the other guṇas, must be inferred to be its material cause. We see that the material cause of effects like a pot is homogeneous with them — clay and the like. And just as we say ‘the tree bears fruit’ or ‘the water flows,’ so inert pradhāna too has the capacity to act. Therefore pradhāna alone is the material cause of the world and its maker. When this is proposed, [it is said] (Brahma-sūtra, Chapter 2, pāda 2):

“‘And because design is impossible, not that which is inferred’ (1).

“‘That which is inferred’ is what is inferred to be the cause of the world, namely inert pradhāna. It is neither the material cause of the world nor its efficient cause. Why? ‘Because design is impossible’: inert pradhāna, unless a conscious being directs it, cannot build the varied world. In our world, bricks and the like do not assemble into palaces and other buildings unless a conscious being directs them. The word ‘and’ adds the impossibility of concomitance (anvaya): external things such as pots are not endowed with the nature of happiness and the rest. Happiness and the rest are internal; pots and the like merely cause happiness and so on, and no one perceives them to be happiness themselves.

“‘And because of activity’ (2).

“Supply: ‘when the inert is directed by a conscious being.’ Clearly the activity belongs to the controller in whose presence the inert acts — as with a chariot and its driver. This also refutes ‘it bears fruit’ and the like: there too a conscious being is in control — this is known from the Antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa, and it will become clear later. ‘And’ here has a restrictive sense. Or else: activity is seen only in a conscious being — ‘I do’ — therefore the inert cannot be an agent. One may object: the mere proximity of prakṛti and puruṣa leads to a mutual superimposition of properties, and this explains the design of the world. We reply: is the proximity that causes superimposition simply their coexistence, or some change in prakṛti or in the puruṣa? Not the first, for then superimposition would occur even in the liberated. Not the second: a change in prakṛti is held to be an effect of superimposition and cannot be its cause, and a change in the puruṣa is not accepted at all.

“One may object: milk turns into curd by itself, and rainwater from a cloud, though it has a single taste, takes on varied tastes — sweet, sour and others — in the palm, the mango and other trees. In the same way pradhāna, because of the variety of the puruṣas’ karma, takes the form of bodies, worlds and the rest. To this it is said:

“‘If [it is said:] like milk and water — there too’ (3).

“Milk and water, too, become active only when a conscious being directs them, and not by themselves: so we infer from the example of the chariot and the like. And that He directs them is established by the Antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa.

“‘And because there is nothing apart [from pradhāna], [there can be no talk of] independence’ (4).

“‘And’ has the sense of ‘also.’ Before creation, they say, there was no other cause apart from pradhāna, and pradhāna depended on nothing. Yet even then pradhāna alone cannot bring about its own transformation. They accepted that before the first creation there was no cause apart from pradhāna to impel it or to restrain it. But then they again needed such a cause: they accepted another cause, the proximity of consciousness. Thus the doctrine that the inert alone can be an agent collapses. Moreover, if there is no separate cause and proximity is always present, effects would arise even during the dissolution of the world (pralaya). Nor can one say that there are no effects then because the fruits of past deeds (adṛṣṭa) have not awakened, for their awakening would also have to be ascribed to that very time.

“One may object: grass, creepers, leaves and the like turn into milk by their own nature, without any other cause; so too pradhāna turns into the mahat and the rest. To this it is said:

“‘And not like grass and the like, because it does not happen elsewhere’ (5).

“‘And’ is for emphasis. This argument is not clever. Why? ‘It does not happen elsewhere’: grass and the like, when eaten by a bull or a similar animal, do not turn into milk. If grass and the like turned into milk by their own nature, the same would happen to grass fallen in a courtyard; but it does not. Therefore nature alone is not enough. This happens by the will of the Lord of all, through a connection with a particular being.

“It has been shown that pradhāna is inert and therefore does not act by itself. Now, to make you happy, let us grant that it does; even then nothing you wish for will follow. So it is said:

"'And even if granted — because there is no purpose' (6).

"'Not' is understood in the four [sūtras]. [Sāṅkhya] holds that pradhāna acts for the enjoyment and the liberation of the puruṣa: 'The puruṣa will enjoy me, experience my faults and attain liberation, which is my indifference to him.' The activity of pradhāna is for another's sake, since it does not enjoy anything itself, like a camel carrying saffron. And [Sāṅkhya] holds that the puruṣa, though not an agent, is an enjoyer: even one who does not cook enjoys the fruit, like an eater of food. But such activity is unreasonable. Why? If it is granted, it will bear no fruit. Its fruit would be the puruṣa's enjoyment, that is, his beholding prakṛti, and his liberation, that is, the indifference of prakṛti. Enjoyment is impossible: before the activity begins, the puruṣa is pure consciousness, changeless and not an agent, and cannot undergo the change of beginning to behold prakṛti. Liberation is also impossible: he had it even before prakṛti became active, and so the activity would be pointless. And if mere proximity is the cause of enjoyment, then even the liberated will enjoy, for proximity is eternal.

"One may object: a blind man who can walk but cannot see moves through the proximity of a lame man who cannot walk but can see. Iron, though inert, moves in the presence of a magnet. So too prakṛti, though unconscious, in the presence of the puruṣa, who is pure spirit, becomes as if conscious through his reflection and acts in creation for his sake. To this it is said:

"'If [it is said:] like a man and a stone — even then [the argument fails]' (7).

"Even in this way one cannot prove that the inert acts by itself. The lame man, though he cannot walk, has his own capacities: he sees the road and points it out. The blind man, though he cannot see, also has capacities: he accepts directions. The magnet has nearness to the iron and so on. But the puruṣa, eternally inactive and without properties, undergoes no change at all. If creation is held to come from mere proximity, then, since proximity is eternal, creation would be eternal and there would be no liberation at all. Moreover, the lame man and the blind man are both conscious, while the magnet and the iron are both inert; the examples are plainly dissimilar.

"Some hold that the universe is created when one guṇa rises and the others decline, so that a relation of principal and subordinate arises among them. This is refuted as follows:

“‘And because principal status is impossible’ (8).

“The state of pradhāna is the equilibrium of sattva and the other guṇas. In that state none of them, independent by nature, can become principal: the other two are equal to it and cannot become subordinate. Thus no relation of principal and subordinate arises among the guṇas. Nor can its cause be Īśvara or time, for [Sāṅkhya] does not accept them. As Kapila says: ‘Because Īśvara is not proved’; ‘He would be neither liberated nor bound; therefore He is not proved’; and ‘Space and time come from ether and the rest.’ Nor can the puruṣa be that cause, for he is indifferent here. Therefore a creation caused by the imbalance of the guṇas does not take place. Furthermore, since there is no cause, the guṇas might lose their balance even at the dissolution of the world, and not lose it at the first creation.

“One may object: we should infer that the guṇas have different natures, according to their effects; then there is no room for the fault mentioned. To this it is said:

“‘And if inferred otherwise — because they lack the power of knowing’ (9).

“Even if one infers that the guṇas have various powers, there is no escape from the fault. Why? ‘Because they lack the power of knowing,’ that is, because the guṇas do not know: they have no thought ‘I create this, and in this way.’ From the inert, devoid of knowledge, there is no creation — just as with bricks — unless a conscious being directs it.”

Kapila, the teacher of Sāṅkhya, gathered the tattvas as follows. In his view, “prakṛti” is the state of equilibrium of the three guṇas: sattva, rajas and tamas. From prakṛti comes the mahat-tattva; from it, ahaṅkāra; from ahaṅkāra, the five tanmātras; from them, the senses of knowledge and the senses of action, and also the gross elements; and there is the “puruṣa.” These are the twenty-five tattvas in all. The three guṇas, sattva and the others, abiding in equilibrium, are prakṛti. These three guṇas are to be understood as happiness, sorrow and delusion respectively, for in the world, the effect of prakṛti, only states such as happiness are seen. An example: a young woman who gives her husband happiness by love displays a “sāttvika” mood; the same woman becomes “rājasī” when she causes sorrow, and “tāmasī” when she bewilders. The words “both kinds of senses” mean the ten external senses and the one internal sense, the mind — eleven senses in all. Prakṛti is eternal and all-pervading. At the root there is no root (no conscious principle); therefore the root (pradhāna) has no root, that is, it has no other cause. This pradhāna is unlimited and is the material cause of everything; this follows from sūtras such as “All-pervading, because effects are seen everywhere.” The mahat- tattva, the ahaṅkāra-tattva and the five tanmātras are the seven prakṛti-vikṛtis: they are prakṛti for ahaṅkāra and the rest, and at the same time transformations of pradhāna. The eleven senses and the five great elements are the sixteen transformations. The puruṣa does not change, and therefore he is neither prakṛti nor a transformation of anything. Prakṛti is ever transforming; though itself unconscious, it is the cause of the enjoyment and the liberation (apavarga) of many conscious jīvas; though beyond the senses, it is inferred from its effects. Prakṛti is one, but its guṇas are unequal, and so by its power of transformation it gives birth to a world full of varied creations, beginning with the mahat. Thus prakṛti is both the efficient and the material cause of the world. The puruṣa is inactive, without guṇas and all-pervading. He is spiritual by nature and distinct in each body; he is inferred from the way pradhāna is set in motion. Because the puruṣa neither changes nor acts, he is neither agent nor enjoyer. Such is the truth of prakṛti and puruṣa, and therefore their mere proximity leads to an exchange of properties: consciousness is superimposed on prakṛti, and agency and enjoyment on the puruṣa. While there is no such discrimination, there is enjoyment; with discrimination comes apavarga, that is, liberation. These and other points — for example, the puruṣa's indifference towards prakṛti — are set out in sūtras with arguments. In his system the author of Sāṅkhya accepted three means of knowledge (pramāṇas): "perception," "inference" and "scripture" (āgama). When something is established by them, all is established. (Comparison and the other pramāṇas are included in these three and are not separate pramāṇas.) There is no great dispute about matters established by perception and scripture. But now we must refute the claim that pradhāna is the cause of the world, which is inferred by sūtras such as "From limitation," "From uniformity," "From potency" and others; for by refuting this view one refutes all the other views of Sāṅkhya. The doubt here is this: is "pradhāna" the efficient and the material cause of the world or not? The pūrvapakṣa grants pradhāna both. The pūrvapakṣa says: pradhāna, consisting of sattva and the rest, is inferred precisely as the material cause of the world. The material cause is always homogeneous with the effect: thus for a pot and similar things the material cause is clay and the like, which is homogeneous with them. An inert tree bears fruit; equally inert water flows; seeing this, one concludes that inert, unconscious pradhāna too is able to create the world. So: "pradhāna is both the material and the efficient cause of the world." To refute this conclusion of the pūrvapakṣa, the author introduces the first sūtra.

Pradhāna is unconscious; therefore inert pradhāna cannot be either the material or the efficient cause of the world. Looking at the varied design of this world, it is clear that inert pradhāna cannot build the visible world without the direction of a conscious being, and that it is unreasonable to infer so. In this world, bricks and the like have never yet assembled into palaces and similar buildings unless a conscious being directed them. The word "and" in the sūtra adds the impossibility of concomitance (anvaya). External objects such as pots are never endowed with the nature of happiness and the like. For happiness and the rest are internal properties, and therefore they cannot accompany external things. Above all, a pot and the like merely cause happiness and so on; they themselves are not perceived as happiness.

The second sūtra. Even if we look at activity, pradhāna cannot be the cause. Activity is seen only in what is inert and directed by a conscious being. Clearly that activity belongs to the one under whose direction the inert is set in motion. The best example is a chariot and its driver. The same holds for the example "the tree bears fruit" and similar ones offered in support of pradhāna as the cause. There too the direction of a conscious being is accepted, for the Antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa speaks of it; this will be explained later in this commentary. The word "and" in the sūtra has a restrictive sense. In the example "I am doing," activity is seen only in a conscious being; therefore the inert cannot be an agent. You may say: the world is designed because, through the mere proximity of prakṛti and puruṣa, their properties are superimposed on each other. The answer: this cannot be said either. Very well — is the proximity that causes the mutual superimposition of properties the coexistence of prakṛti and puruṣa, or some change in prakṛti or in the puruṣa? The answer: it can by no means be their coexistence, for if we accept that, we must accept superimposition in all liberated puruṣas as well. Nor can this proximity be a change in prakṛti: a change in prakṛti is considered an effect of superimposition and so cannot be its cause. Nor can it be a change in the puruṣa: a change in the puruṣa cannot be accepted either. Therefore "pradhāna" cannot be the cause of the world.

You may say: as milk turns into curd by itself, and as the water from a single cloud, though it has one taste, becomes sweet, sour and of many tastes in the fruits of the palm, the mango and other trees, so the one pradhāna, according to the variety of the puruṣas' karma, transforms into bodies, worlds and the rest. In reply the author says:

The third sūtra. Unconscious things such as milk and water also act in their effects only when a conscious being directs them; they are not set in motion by themselves: so it is inferred from the example of the chariot and the like. And from the Antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa it is established that these two inert things are directed by consciousness.

The fourth sūtra. The claim that there is no cause apart from pradhāna had to be abandoned; therefore the claim that pradhāna alone is the agent is also untenable. The word api means the same as ca, that is, "and" (conjunction). The view that before creation there was no cause apart from pradhāna has been given up; therefore the view that pradhāna alone transforms itself is also refuted. The view that "before the first creation there is no other cause apart from pradhāna to impel it or restrain it" has been set aside, for at that point another cause is accepted — the proximity of the conscious principle. Therefore the doctrine that the inert alone is the agent is refuted. Moreover, under such a pūrvapakṣa effects would arise even during the dissolution of the world: since there is no cause apart from pradhāna and proximity to it remains, effects would arise at pralaya just as at creation. Nor can one say that there are no effects at pralaya because the adṛṣṭa has not awakened, for the awakening of that adṛṣṭa might also come at that very time.

You may say: as grass, leaves and the like, eaten by a cow or another animal, turn into milk by themselves, so pradhāna transforms into the tattvas beginning with the mahat. In reply the author says:

The fifth sūtra. Elsewhere grass does not turn into milk; therefore one cannot say that pradhāna, like grass, transforms by its own nature (by itself). The word "and" here is for affirmation. Such a pūrvapakṣa is untenable, for this is not seen elsewhere: grass eaten by a bull or a similar animal does not turn into milk, and so the transformation is not natural. Besides, if grass and the like turned into milk by their own nature, this would be seen in a courtyard too. Since it is not seen, nature alone cannot be called the cause of the transformation; its cause is the will of the Lord of all: "Let grass, in connection with particular living beings, turn into milk."

It has been proved that pradhāna is inert and therefore does not come into action by itself. Next the author says: even if, to please you, I grant it, nothing you desire will follow.

The sixth sūtra. Even if one grants that pradhāna acts by its own nature, there is no purpose in it. In four sūtras the sense "not" is understood. It seems that pradhāna acts for the sake of enjoyment and liberation: "The puruṣa will enjoy me, feel my faults and attain liberation, that is, indifference towards me." As a camel carries a load of saffron only for others and does not enjoy it itself, so pradhāna acts only for the sake of others. And the puruṣa, it seems, though not an agent, is an enjoyer. As an eater enjoys food though he has not cooked it, so the puruṣa tastes the fruits. But to hold, with the pūrvapakṣa, that pradhāna acts in this way is unreasonable: even if it is granted, no fruit is seen. The fruit of the activity is the puruṣa's enjoyment, that is, beholding prakṛti, and liberation, that is, indifference towards prakṛti. Enjoyment from the activity of pradhāna is impossible, for then the puruṣa — pure consciousness, changeless and not an agent — would enjoy only because, by beholding prakṛti, he came into contact with it and underwent change. Apavarga from the activity of pradhāna is also impossible: apavarga existed even before the activity arose, and so the activity is useless. And if mere proximity is called the cause of enjoyment, then, since proximity is eternal, even the liberated will have to enjoy.

You may say: a blind man who can walk but cannot see begins to move near a lame man who cannot walk but can see; and inert iron also moves near a magnet. So too prakṛti, though unconscious, near the puruṣa, who is pure consciousness, under the influence of his reflection sets about creation and the rest for the puruṣa's enjoyment, as if it were a conscious being. In reply the author says:

The seventh sūtra. Even if the puruṣa is like a magnet, inert pradhāna does not act by itself. Even so, one cannot prove that the inert acts by itself. The lame man cannot walk, yet he has his own capacities — to point out the road and to give directions. The blind man cannot see, yet he too has a capacity — to accept the lame man's directions. And a magnet can come near iron. But the eternally inactive puruṣa, devoid of properties, undergoes no change whatever. If proximity itself is accepted as change, then, since proximity is eternal, one must accept eternal creation and the absence of liberation. Above all, the lame man and the blind man are both conscious, while the magnet and the iron are both inert; the examples are plainly dissimilar.

Next the author refutes the view that the universe is created because the guṇas rise and decline and a relation of principal and subordinate arises among them:

The eighth sūtra. The principal status of a guṇa is impossible in itself; therefore this view is untenable. The abiding of the guṇas — sattva and the rest — in equilibrium is called "the state of pradhāna." In that state the guṇas are independent by nature, and so none of them proves to be principal over another. For if one of the three guṇas is accepted as principal, the other two, being equal to it, cannot become subordinate. A relation of principal and subordinate among the guṇas never arises.

Nor can Īśvara or time be called its maker, for no one [among them] accepts this. Kapila himself said: “Since [Īśvara] could be neither liberated nor bound — that is, since there is no proof — Īśvara is not proved.” Space and time arise from ether and the rest; the puruṣa is not their maker, for he is entirely indifferent to activity. Nor is an imbalance of the guṇas the cause of creation. Moreover, since there is no cause, the guṇas might lose their balance at every later creation, but not at the first.

You may say: one can infer that the guṇas, according to their effects, are of different natures; then there is no room for the fault mentioned. In reply the author says:

The ninth sūtra. Even if one infers otherwise, the inert does not act by itself. That is, even if one infers that the guṇas are endowed with such varied powers, there is no escaping the fault: the guṇas lack the capacity to know (consciousness); evidently they do not have even the thought “Here I am, and this is how I create.” Creation from inert matter devoid of knowledge is never possible. As bricks, wood and other unconscious things can do nothing unless a conscious being directs them, so the unconscious guṇas can do nothing unless the potency of the conscious Supreme Lord directs them.

(Chapter 2, pāda 1.) “The great sage Kapila, desiring liberation, composed the smṛti [Sāṅkhya] to elaborate the meaning of the jñāna-kāṇḍa. He duly accepted the agnihotra and the other rites enjoined by the karma-kāṇḍa, and the Śrutis recognise him as trustworthy: ‘the sage Kapila, born [in the beginning],’ and so on. By his sūtras ‘Now, the complete cessation of the threefold misery is the highest goal of man,’ ‘Not by visible means, for even after cessation [misery] returns’ and others, it is established there that the cause of the world is unconscious, independent pradhāna alone; [this is also said in the sūtras] ‘For the liberation of the liberated,’ ‘Or for its own sake — of pradhāna,’ ‘Though pradhāna is unconscious, its activity is like that of milk’ and others. If Brahman is accepted as the cause, this smṛti will be left without a subject, for the whole of it speaks of nothing but pradhāna. Therefore Vedānta should be interpreted so as not to contradict the smṛti of Kapila, who is entirely trustworthy. The smṛtis of Manu and others will not be left without a subject, for by setting forth dharma they elaborate the meaning of the karma-kāṇḍa and so have their own subject. When this is proposed, it is said:

“‘If [it is said:] there follows the fault that the smṛti has no room — no, for there follows the fault that other smṛtis have no room’ (1).

“‘Has no room’ means is left without a subject. If Vedānta is interpreted according to its single import (samanvaya), the Sāṅkhya smṛti incurs the fault of being left without a subject; so must [the texts of Vedānta] be interpreted in a sense contrary to the Śruti? If that is said — no. Why? 'Other' and so on. For then a great fault would arise: other smṛtis would be left without a subject — the smṛtis of Manu and others, which follow Vedānta and teach that Brahman alone is the cause. In them the Lord of all is shown to be the cause of the origin of the world and the rest, and by no means some other principle named by Kapila. Thus Śrīman Manu says: 'This [world] was darkness — unknown, without marks, beyond reasoning, unknowable, as if wholly asleep. Then the self-born Bhagavān, unmanifest, manifesting this [world] — the great elements and the rest — appeared in full power, dispelling the darkness. He who is beyond the senses, imperceptible, subtle, unmanifest, eternal, containing all beings and inconceivable — He Himself appeared. Wishing to create various beings from His own body, He reflected and first created the waters, and placed a seed in them. It became a golden egg, shining like the sun; in it Brahmā himself was born, the grandfather of all the worlds,'[11] and so on. Śrī Parāśara says: 'From Viṣṇu the world arose, and in Him it abides; He is the one who maintains and dissolves this world, and He is the world';[12] 'As a spider draws a thread from its heart through its mouth, plays with it and swallows it again, so does Janārdana,' and so on. Others speak in the same way. Nor can one say that these smṛtis have their subject in elaborating the meaning of the karma-kāṇḍa. They enjoin dharmas for purifying the mind, so that knowledge of Brahman may dawn, and therefore their purpose is only to elaborate the meaning of the jñāna-kāṇḍa. That they purify the mind is seen from the Śruti: 'Him [the brāhmaṇas seek to know] by the study of the Vedas,'[13] and so on. Here and there one sees and experiences that they bring such fruits as rain, sons, heaven and the like. But this too, by creating trust in the scriptures, finally leads to Him, for it is said: 'The goal that all the Vedas proclaim'[14] and 'The Vedas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa.'[15] The Sāṅkhya smṛti cannot elaborate the meaning of Vedānta, for it teaches what contradicts the Śruti. Elaboration (upabṛṁhaṇa) is the clarifying of a meaning that agrees with the Śruti, and in it there is no such thing. Therefore the Sāṅkhya smṛti, which contradicts the Śruti, is invented out of its author's own head and is not trustworthy; and we do not fear the charge that it will prove useless. Nor is it right to favour that smṛti on the pretext that it is trustworthy. Many interpreters are declared trustworthy, and their smṛtis differ in meaning; if one favours one of them, the real meaning will never be settled. When smṛtis contradict one another, there is no other way to decide than to rely on the Śruti; therefore one should honour only the smṛti that follows the Śruti. You object by the strength of smṛti — by the strength of smṛti we shall refute you:

thus the fault ‘other smṛtis have no room’ is pointed out. Some cite the Śvetāśvatara-śruti as proof that Kapila is trustworthy: ‘He who in the beginning endowed the born sage Kapila with knowledge.’[16] But this is not so: those words speak of someone else, and one whose words contradict the meaning of the Śruti cannot be trustworthy. As for Manu’s trustworthiness, the Taittirīyas recite: ‘Whatever Manu said is medicine.’ And of Śrī Parāśara tradition says that he understood the highest truth about the Deity by the grace of Pulastya and Vasiṣṭha. Kapila, the founder of the smṛti opposed to the Vedas, is a particular jīva of the line of Agni, deluded by māyā, and not Vāsudeva born of Kardama. For tradition says: ‘Kapila, called Vāsudeva, taught the doctrine of Sāṅkhya to Brahmā and the other gods, to Bhṛgu and others, and likewise to Āsuri; all of it was elaborated by the meaning of the Vedas. But another Kapila taught a doctrine opposed to all the Vedas’; ‘[he taught] Sāṅkhya to another Āsuri, elaborated with false arguments.’ Therefore, if the Sāṅkhya smṛti, untrustworthy because it contradicts the Vedas, proves useless, there is no fault in that.

“‘And because the rest is not found’ (2).

“‘And the rest,’ that is, what the Sāṅkhya smṛti speaks of, is not found in the Vedas; therefore it is not trustworthy. These are its tenets: the puruṣas are all-pervading and are consciousness alone; prakṛti alone binds and liberates them, and bondage and liberation belong to prakṛti alone; there is no Lord of all, a special Puruṣa; time is not a tattva; the five prāṇas and the rest are merely functions of the senses. Such tenets and others like them are to be seen in it.”

1. The Śruti mentions a trustworthy sage named “Kapila.” He duly accepted the karma-kāṇḍa enjoined by the Vedas. This same sage Kapila composed the Sāṅkhya smṛti in order to elaborate the jñāna-kāṇḍa. In sūtras such as “Now, the complete cessation of the threefold misery is the highest goal of man,” the Sāṅkhya smṛti calls the complete cessation of the threefold misery — ādhyātmika and the rest — “the highest goal of man,” or liberation. In it unconscious pradhāna alone is established as the independent cause of the world. If Brahman alone is called the sole cause of the world, this Sāṅkhya smṛti will be left without a subject, for from beginning to end it speaks of nothing else. Therefore the texts of Vedānta should be interpreted so as not to contradict the views of the entirely trustworthy sage Kapila. Then the smṛtis proclaimed by Manu and others will not be left without a subject either: by setting forth dharma they elaborate the karma-kāṇḍa and so have a subject. To refute this, the author introduces the first sūtra, “If [it is said:] there follows the fault that the smṛti has no room…”.

Absence of room is anavakāśa; the word anavakāśa means being left without a subject. If Vedānta is interpreted according to its single import (samanvaya), the Sāṅkhya smṛti incurs the fault of being left without a subject. So should the texts of Vedānta be interpreted in a sense opposite to what one hears in them? The answer: that is impossible. If they are interpreted so, a great calamity follows: other smṛtis — those of Manu and others, which follow Vedānta and teach that Brahman alone is the cause — will be left without a subject. In these smṛtis only the Lord of all is shown to be the cause of the origin of the world and the rest. The tattvas are not described in them as the sage Kapila describes them. Thus Śrī Manu says: “Before creation the whole universe was darkness — unknown, without marks, beyond reasoning, unknowable — and lay as if asleep. Then the self-born Bhagavān, though Himself unmanifest, appeared endowed with the potencies of the great elements and the rest in order to manifest this world, and dispelled that darkness. He is beyond the senses, imperceptible, subtle, unmanifest, eternal, containing all beings and inconceivable by nature. Having appeared Himself, He desired in His mind to create various beings from His own body, and first of all He created water. Then the Supreme Lord placed His seed in that water. From the seed arose a golden egg, shining like a thousand suns. In that egg Brahmā himself, the grandfather of all the worlds, was born.” And the sage Parāśara says: “The visible world arose from Bhagavān Viṣṇu and abides resting on Him. He maintains it and He destroys it. This world is a particular potency of His. As a spider draws threads out of its own body and later swallows them itself, so Bhagavān Viṣṇu creates the universe from His potency and later dissolves it again in His potency.” Other sages say the same. Nor can one say that the Sāṅkhya smṛti[17] will have a subject by elaborating the karma-kāṇḍa: [these smṛtis] enjoin dharma for the purification of the mind, so that knowledge of Brahman may dawn. Therefore the purpose of these smṛtis is to elaborate the jñāna-kāṇḍa. It is also seen that these dharmas purify the mind: the words of the Śruti “Him [the brāhmaṇas seek to know] by the study of the Vedas” and so on are the proof. Here and there it is seen and confirmed that these dharmas (their performance) bring such fruits as rain, sons, heaven and the like. But this too is only to purify the mind by creating faith in the scriptures. The Śrutis “The goal that all the Vedas proclaim” and “The Vedas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa” express the same intention. Even if the purpose of the Sāṅkhya smṛti is to elaborate the jñāna-kāṇḍa, one still cannot accept that it elaborates the meaning of Vedānta, for the Sāṅkhya

smṛti teaches what contradicts the Śruti. To clarify the meaning of the statements of the Śruti — that is what "elaboration" (upabṛṁhaṇa) means. No such clarification of the meaning of the Śruti is seen in the Sāṅkhya smṛti. It must therefore be judged contrary to the Śruti. And what contradicts the Śruti is invented out of one's own head and is therefore untrustworthy. So the uselessness of this untrustworthy Sāṅkhya smṛti is inevitable. Nor is it right to favour one smṛti while waiting for the untrustworthiness of another to be established. If one favours smṛtis that differ in meaning, then, faced with the many opinions of Gautama and many others who interpret in different ways, one will never settle the real meaning. When two smṛtis contradict each other, one cannot resort to any deciding proof other than the Śruti. Whatever one relies on must certainly follow the Śruti; if it does not follow the Śruti, it cannot be honoured. Those who raise censure by the strength of smṛti will be refuted by the strength of that same smṛti; therefore pointing out the fault "other smṛtis will be left without a subject" is unavoidable. In the Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad the words "the sage Kapila, born…" and so on do speak of a trustworthy sage Kapila. But that Kapila is not this one; he is another sage Kapila. Therefore, in calling Kapila, the author of Sāṅkhya, untrustworthy, we show no disrespect to the Śruti. The trustworthiness of Manu and Parāśara is well known from the Śruti and the smṛti. Thus with the words "Whatever Manu said is medicine" the Taittirīyas affirm Manu's trustworthiness. And the smṛti says that Śrī Parāśara understood the highest truth about the Deity by the grace of Pulastya and Vasiṣṭha. Kapila, the founder of the Sāṅkhya smṛti opposed to the Vedas, and Bhagavān Kapila, the son of Kardama, are not the same person. The first Kapila is a particular jīva of the line of Agni, deluded by māyā; the second, the son of Kardama, is an avatāra of Vāsudeva Himself. The Padma Purāṇa says: "Bhagavān Vāsudeva descended from the sage Kardama as Kapila and taught the doctrine of Sāṅkhya to the gods headed by Brahmā, to the sages headed by Bhṛgu and to a brāhmaṇa named Āsuri; the Sāṅkhya smṛti He taught is elaborated by the meaning of the Vedas. But another Kapila taught another Āsuri a different Sāṅkhya — opposed to all the Vedas, elaborated with false arguments and invented out of his own head." Therefore there is no fault whatever in calling this latter Sāṅkhya smṛti, opposed to the Vedas and untrustworthy, useless.

2. Moreover, this Sāṅkhya smṛti speaks of certain matters that are not found in the Vedas. For this reason too it can be called "untrustworthy." These are the matters: "The puruṣas, that is, the individual souls, are consciousness alone and all-pervading; prakṛti alone binds and liberates them. Both 'bondage' and 'liberation' are material. There is no puruṣa called 'the Lord of all.' 'Time' is not a tattva at all. The five prāṇas and the rest are merely functions of the senses." These and certain other tenets opposed to Vedānta are seen in this Sāṅkhya smṛti.

He Himself is the "efficient" cause, and Advaita Prabhu the "material" cause —

আপনে পুরুষ — বিশ্বের 'নিমিত্ত'-কারণ । অদ্বৈত-রূপে 'উপাদান' হন নারায়ণ ॥ ১৬ ॥

āpane puruṣa — viśvera 'nimitta'-kāraṇa Himself the Puruṣa of the world the efficient cause advaita-rūpe 'upādāna' hana nārāyaṇa of Advaita in the form the material cause becomes Nārāyaṇa

16 The Puruṣa Himself is the efficient cause of the world, and in the form of Advaita, Nārāyaṇa becomes its material cause.

As the one who casts the glance He is the efficient cause, and as Advaita He is the Creator in the form of the material cause —

'নিমিত্তাংশে' করে তেঁহো মায়াতে ঈক্ষণ ।
'উপাদান' অদ্বৈত করেন ব্রহ্মাণ্ড-সৃজন ॥ ১৭ ॥

'nimittāṁśe' kare teṁho māyāte īkṣaṇa
in the efficient aspect performs He upon māyā the glance
'upādāna' advaita karena brahmāṇḍa-sṛjana as the material cause Advaita performs of the universe the creation

17 As the efficient cause He casts His glance upon māyā; as the material cause, Advaita creates the universe.

Refutation of the Sāṅkhya doctrine —

যদ্যপি সাংখ্য মানে, 'প্রধান' — কারণ । জড় হইতে কভু নহে জগৎ-সৃজন ॥ ১৮ ॥

yadyapi sāṅkhya māne, 'pradhāna' — kāraṇa although Sāṅkhya holds pradhāna the cause jaḍa haite kabhu nahe jagat-sṛjana from inert matter never is of the world the creation

18 Although Sāṅkhya holds pradhāna to be the cause, the world can never come into being from inert matter.

Prakṛti acts only by the potency of Bhagavān —

নিজ সৃষ্টিশক্তি প্রভু সঞ্চারে প্রধানে । ঈশ্বরের শক্ত্যে তবে হয়ে ত' নির্ম্মাণে ॥ ১৯ ॥

nija sṛṣṭi-śakti prabhu sañcāre pradhāne
His own creative power the Lord infuses into pradhāna īśvarera śaktye tabe haye ta' nirmāṇe of the Lord by the power then takes place indeed the fashioning

19 The Lord infuses His own creative power into pradhāna, and by that power the world is fashioned.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 5.58–66; Madhya 20.259–261, 271, 276.

The two forms of Advaita Prabhu —

অদ্বৈত-আচার্য্য — কোটিব্রহ্মাণ্ডের কর্ত্তা । আর এক এক মূর্ত্ত্যে ব্রহ্মাণ্ডের ভর্ত্তা ॥ ২০ ॥

advaita-ācārya — koṭi-brahmāṇḍera kartā Advaita Ācārya of millions of universes the creator āra eka eka mūrtye brahmāṇḍera bhartā and in one one form (each) of the universe the sustainer

20 Advaita Ācārya creates millions of universes, and in each of them He dwells in one of His forms as its sustainer.

Advaita Prabhu, a limb (aṅga) or part (aṁśa) of Bhagavān —

সেই নারায়ণের মুখ্য অঙ্গ, — অদ্বৈত ।
'অঙ্গ' শব্দে অংশ করি' কহে ভাগবত ॥ ২১ ॥

sei nārāyaṇera mukhya aṅga, — advaita of that Nārāyaṇa the principal limb Advaita
'aṅga' śabde aṁśa kari' kahe bhāgavata
'aṅga' by the word part meaning says the Bhāgavata

21 Advaita is the principal limb (aṅga) of Śrī Nārāyaṇa; and in the Bhāgavatam the word 'aṅga' means 'aṁśa', a partial manifestation.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 3.67.

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 14, verse 14)

নারায়ণস্ত্বং ন হি সর্ব্বদেহিনা- মাত্মাস্যধীশাখিললোকসাক্ষী ।
নারায়ণোঽঙ্গং নরভূজলায়না- ত্তচ্চাপি সত্যং ন তবৈব মায়া ॥ ২২ ॥

nārāyaṇas tvaṁ na hi sarva-dehinām Nārāyaṇa You not indeed of all the embodied ātmāsy adhīśākhila-loka-sākṣī
the Self You are O Lord of all worlds the witness nārāyaṇo 'ṅgaṁ nara-bhū-jalāyanāt Nārāyaṇa (Your) limb from Nara born waters abode tac cāpi satyaṁ na tavaiva māyā that also true not Your indeed māyā

22 "Are You not Nārāyaṇa? For You are the Self of all embodied beings, O Lord, and the witness of all the worlds. Nārāyaṇa is Your portion — so called because His abode is the waters born of Nara; and that too is true, not Your māyā." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.14)[3]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

See Ādi 2.30.

Though a limb or a part, He is beyond māyā —

ঈশ্বরের ‘অঙ্গ’, অংশ — চিদানন্দময় । মায়ার সম্বন্ধ নাহি, এই শ্লোকে কয় ॥ ২৩ ॥

īśvarera ‘aṅga’, aṁśa — cid-ānanda-maya of the Lord the aṅga the aṁśa full of consciousness and bliss māyāra sambandha nāhi, ei śloke kaya with māyā connection there is not this verse says

23 This verse says that the Lord’s aṅga, His aṁśa, is full of consciousness and bliss and has no connection with māyā.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 3.69–70.

Why He is called a limb (aṅga) and not a part (aṁśa) —

‘অংশ’ না কহিয়া, কেনে কহ তাঁরে ‘অঙ্গ’ ।
‘অংশ’ হৈতে ‘অঙ্গ,’ যাতে হয় অন্তরঙ্গ ॥ ২৪ ॥

‘aṁśa’ nā kahiyā, kene kaha tāṁre ‘aṅga’
‘aṁśa’ not saying why do you call Him ‘aṅga’ ‘aṁśa’ haite ‘aṅga,’ yāte haya antaraṅga than ‘aṁśa’ ‘aṅga’ because is more intimate

24 Why call Him ‘aṅga’ and not ‘aṁśa’? Because ‘aṅga’, a limb, is closer and more intimate than ‘aṁśa’, a part.

Why the name “Advaita” is fitting —

মহাবিষ্ণুর অংশ — অদ্বৈত গুণধাম । ঈশ্বরে অভেদ, তেঞি ‘অদ্বৈত’ পূর্ণ নাম ॥ ২৫ ॥

mahā-viṣṇura aṁśa — advaita guṇa-dhāma of Mahā-Viṣṇu a part Advaita of qualities the abode īśvare abheda, teñi 'advaita' pūrṇa nāma from the Lord non-different therefore 'Advaita' full name

25 Advaita, the abode of all good qualities, is a part of Mahā-Viṣṇu. He is non-different from the Lord, and so the name Advaita, "Non-dual", fits Him in full.

Why the name "Ācārya" is fitting —

পূর্ব্বে যৈছে কৈল সর্ব্ব বিশ্বের-সৃজন । অবতরি' কৈল এবে ভক্তি-প্রবর্ত্তন ॥ ২৬ ॥

pūrve yaiche kaila sarva viśvera-sṛjana before as He performed of the whole universe the creation avatari' kaila ebe bhakti-pravartana having descended He performed now of bhakti the establishment

26 As once He created the whole universe, so now, having descended, He has established bhakti.

In His descent as Advaita, His one work is to preach devotion to Kṛṣṇa —

জীব নিস্তারিল কৃষ্ণভক্তি করি' দান । গীতা-ভাগবতে কৈল ভক্তির ব্যাখ্যান ॥ ২৭ ॥

jīva nistārila kṛṣṇa-bhakti kari' dāna
the jīvas He delivered devotion to Kṛṣṇa making a gift gītā-bhāgavate kaila bhaktira vyākhyāna in the Gītā and Bhāgavata He gave of bhakti the explanation

27 He delivered the jīvas by giving them devotion to Kṛṣṇa, and He explained the Gītā and the Bhāgavatam in the light of bhakti.

ভক্তি-উপদেশ বিনু তাঁর নাহি কার্য্য । অতএব নাম হৈল 'অদ্বৈত আচার্য্য' ॥ ২৮ ॥

bhakti-upadeśa vinu tāṁra nāhi kārya bhakti teaching except His there is no work ataeva nāma haila 'advaita ācārya' therefore name became 'Advaita Ācārya'

28 He has no work but teaching bhakti; therefore His name became Advaita Ācārya.

Anubhāṣya.
Although Advaita Prabhu is the Viṣṇu-tattva, the one who is served, He has no other duty and no other conduct than this: to awaken in the jīvas the inclination to serve, for that is what securing their good means. Bhagavān Viṣṇu saw that if He displayed His pastimes only as the one who is served, the pleasure-seeking people of the world would imitate Him and become godless kevalādvaita-vādīs or ahaṅgrahopāsakas, who worship themselves as God. Therefore He manifested the pastimes of a servant; displaying this kind of ācāryaship is also one of His works. The Ācārya has no work other than conduct turned towards the service of Kṛṣṇa. He behaves as the servant of the One who is served — that is why He is the ācārya; this is a particular pastime of a naimittika-avatāra. Wicked people try to defile the Ācārya's holy place and His dress and, instead of serving Bhagavān, launch into a wild dance (tāṇḍava) of gratifying their own senses. The Ācārya condemns this utterly.

বৈষ্ণবের গুরু তেঁহো জগতের আর্য্য । দুইনাম-মিলনে হৈল 'অদ্বৈত-আচার্য্য' ॥ ২৯ ॥

vaiṣṇavera guru teṁho jagatera ārya of the Vaiṣṇavas the guru He of the world the venerable dui-nāma-milane haila 'advaita-ācārya'
two names by joining became 'Advaita Ācārya'

29 He is the guru of the Vaiṣṇavas, honoured by the whole world. Joined together, these two names became Advaita Ācārya.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Advaita Ācārya is the guru of the whole Vaiṣṇava world, and everyone honours Him. Following His lotus feet, the Vaiṣṇavas devoted to Bhagavān adopt His conduct and serve Hari.

Why the name "Kamalākṣa" is fitting —

কমল-নয়নের তেঁহো, যাতে 'অঙ্গ', 'অংশ' ।
'কমলাক্ষ' বলি' ধরে নাম অবতংস ॥ ৩০ ॥

kamala-nayanera teṁho, yāte 'aṅga', 'aṁśa' of the Lotus-eyed He because 'aṅga' 'aṁśa'
'kamalākṣa' bali' dhare nāma avataṁsa
'Kamalākṣa' calling He bears the name as a crown-jewel

30 Because He is the limb and the part of the Lotus-eyed Lord, He bears the beautiful name Kamalākṣa, "Lotus-eyed".

In Vaikuṇṭha the Vaiṣṇavas attain a form like that of Viṣṇu —

ঈশ্বরসারূপ্য পায় পারিষদগণ । চতুর্ভুজ, পীতবাস, যৈছে নারায়ণ ॥ ৩১ ॥

īśvara-sārūpya pāya pāriṣada-gaṇa with the Lord sameness of form attain the associates catur-bhuja, pīta-vāsa, yaiche nārāyaṇa four-armed yellow-clad just as Nārāyaṇa

31 The Lord's associates attain a form like His (sārūpya): like Nārāyaṇa, they are four-armed and clad in yellow.

The glory of Advaita Prabhu's qualities —

অদ্বৈত-আচার্য্য — ঈশ্বরের অংশবর্য্য । তাঁর তত্ত্ব-নাম-গুণ, সকলি আশ্চর্য্য ॥ ৩২ ॥

advaita-ācārya — īśvarera aṁśa-varya Advaita Ācārya of the Lord part the foremost tāṁra tattva-nāma-guṇa, sakali āścarya
His truth name qualities all wondrous

32 Advaita Ācārya is the foremost part of the Lord; His truth, His name and His qualities are all wondrous.

Advaita Prabhu calls Mahāprabhu down into the world —

যাঁহার তুলসীদলে, যাঁহার হুঙ্কারে । স্বগণ সহিতে চৈতন্যের অবতারে ॥ ৩৩ ॥

yāṁhāra tulasī-dale, yāṁhāra huṅkāre
by whose tulasī leaves by whose roar sva-gaṇa sahite caitanyera avatāre
His associates together with Caitanya's descent

33 It was His offering of tulasī leaves and His roar that brought Caitanya into the world together with His associates.[4]

যাঁর দ্বারা কৈল প্রভু কীর্ত্তন প্রচার । যাঁর দ্বারা কৈল প্রভু জগৎ নিস্তার ॥ ৩৪ ॥

yāṁra dvārā kaila prabhu kīrtana pracāra through whom made the Lord of kīrtana the spreading yāṁra dvārā kaila prabhu jagat nistāra through whom made the Lord of the world the deliverance

34 Through Him the Lord spread the kīrtana, and through Him the Lord delivered the world.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 3.91, 95–108.

আচার্য্য গোসাঞির গুণ-মহিমা অপার । জীবকীট কোথায় পাইবেক তার পার ॥ ৩৫ ॥

ācārya gosāñira guṇa-mahimā apāra of Ācārya Gosāñi of the qualities the glory boundless jīva-kīṭa kothāya pāibeka tāra pāra
the worm-like jīva where will find of it the end

35 The glory of Ācārya Gosāñi's qualities is boundless. Where can the jīva, a mere worm, find its end?

One limb of Gaura is Advaita, another is Nitāi —

আচার্য্য গোসাঞি চৈতন্যের মুখ্য অঙ্গ । আর এক অঙ্গ তাঁর প্রভু নিত্যানন্দ ॥ ৩৬ ॥

ācārya gosāñi caitanyera mukhya aṅga Ācārya Gosāñi Caitanya's principal limb āra eka aṅga tāṁra prabhu nityānanda another one limb His Prabhu Nityānanda

36 Ācārya Gosāñi is the principal limb (aṅga) of Caitanya, and His other limb is Nityānanda Prabhu.

The subsidiary limbs (upāṅgas) and weapons — the devotees headed by Śrīvāsa —

প্রভুর উপাঙ্গ — শ্রীবাসাদি ভক্তগণ । হস্তমুখনেত্র-অঙ্গ চক্রাদ্যস্ত্র-সম ॥ ৩৭ ॥

prabhura upāṅga — śrīvāsādi bhakta-gaṇa
the Lord's lesser limbs Śrīvāsa and the other devotees hasta-mukha-netra-aṅga cakrādy-astra-sama hands face eyes limbs disc and other weapons like 37 The Lord's lesser limbs (upāṅga) are Śrīvāsa and the other devotees; they are like His hands, face and eyes, and like His disc and other weapons.

With His limbs and subsidiary limbs Gaura preaches the holy name and prema —

এসব লইয়া চৈতন্যপ্রভুর বিহার । এসব লইয়া করেন বাঞ্ছিত-প্রচার ॥ ৩৮ ॥

esaba laiyā caitanya-prabhura vihāra with all these taking Caitanya Prabhu's pastimes esaba laiyā karena vāñchita-pracāra with all these taking He makes of His desire the spreading

38 With them Caitanya Prabhu performs His pastimes, and with them He spreads what He desires.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 3.71–74.

Gaura regards Advaita Prabhu as His guru —

মাধবেন্দ্রপুরীর ইঁহো শিষ্য, এই জ্ঞানে । আচার্য্য-গোসাঞিরে প্রভু গুরু করি' মানে ॥ ৩৯ ॥

mādhavendrapurīra iṁho śiṣya, ei jñāne of Mādhavendra Purī He the disciple with this understanding ācārya-gosāñire prabhu guru kari' māne Ācārya Gosāñi the Lord as guru regards

39 Knowing that He is a disciple of Mādhavendra Purī, the Lord regards Ācārya Gosāñi as His guru.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Advaita Prabhu was a disciple of Mādhavendra Purī, and His godbrother Īśvara Purī was Mahāprabhu's guru. Because of this relationship Mahāprabhu regards Ācārya Gosāñi as His "guru." In truth Śrī Caitanya Gosāñi is the Lord of all, and Advaita Ācārya Prabhu is His servant. In this relationship Advaita Prabhu regarded Himself as a "servant."

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Mādhavendra Purī is one of the gurus of the Śrī Madhvācārya-sampradāya. His disciples are Īśvara Purī and Śrī Advaita Prabhu. The branch of the Śrī Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇavas in the succession of Śrī Madhva is cited in the Śrī Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, in the Prameya-ratnāvalī and in the book of Śrī Gopāla-guru Gosvāmī; it is also mentioned in the Śrī Bhakti-ratnākara. In the Śrī Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā the branch of Śrī Madhva is described as follows: "The disciple of the Lord of Paravyoma was Brahmā, the master of the universe. His disciple became Nārada, and Nārada's disciple was Vyāsa. Śuka, having given up the path of (dry) knowledge, became the disciple of Vyāsa.[18] From Vyāsa the renowned Madhvācārya received initiation into the mantra of Kṛṣṇa. His disciple was the great-hearted Padmanābhācārya. His disciple was Narahari, and his disciple the brāhmaṇa Mādhava. His disciple was Akṣobhya, and his disciple Jayatīrtha. His disciple was Jñānasindhu, and his disciple Mahānidhi. His disciple was Vidyānidhi, and his servant Rājendra. His disciple was the sage Jayadharma; from among his followers came Śrīmad Viṣṇu Purī, the author of the Bhakti-ratnāvalī. The disciple of Jayadharma was Brahmaṇya Puruṣottama. His disciple was Vyāsatīrtha, who composed the Viṣṇu-saṁhitā. His disciple was the glorious Lakṣmīpati, the abode of bhakti-rasa. His disciple was Mādhavendra, who inaugurated this dharma. His disciple was the glorious sannyāsī Īśvara Purī. He whose very nature is the fruit of śṛṅgāra cultivated śṛṅgāra; Advaita cultivated both fruits, dāsya and sakhya. Gaura respectfully accepted Īśvara Purī [as guru] and flooded the whole world, both material and transcendental [with prema]."

Following worldly custom, Gaura treats Advaita like a guru —

লৌকিক-লীলাতে ধর্ম্মমর্য্যাদা-রক্ষণ । স্তুতি-ভক্ত্যে করে তাঁর চরণ-বন্দন ॥ ৪০ ॥

laukika-līlāte dharma-maryādā-rakṣaṇa in worldly pastimes of dharma's bounds the keeping stuti-bhaktye kare tāṁra caraṇa-vandana with praise and devotion He makes His to the feet obeisance

40 In His worldly pastimes the Lord keeps the bounds of dharma: with praise and devotion He bows at the Ācārya's feet.

Advaita Prabhu regards Mahāprabhu as His Lord —

চৈতন্য-গোসাঞিকে আচার্য্য করে 'প্রভু' জ্ঞান । আপনাকে করেন তাঁর 'দাস' অভিমান ॥ ৪১ ॥

caitanya-gosāñike ācārya kare 'prabhu' jñāna Caitanya Gosāñi the Ācārya holds as 'Master' āpanāke karena tāṁra 'dāsa' abhimāna Himself He holds His 'servant' in self-conception

41 The Ācārya knows Caitanya Gosāñi as His Master, and He thinks of Himself as His servant.

Thinking of Himself as Kṛṣṇa's servant, He preaches bhakti —

সেই অভিমান-সুখে আপনা পাসরে ।
'কৃষ্ণদাস' হও — জীবে উপদেশ করে ॥ ৪২ ॥

sei abhimāna-sukhe āpanā pāsare in that self-conception's happiness Himself He forgets
'kṛṣṇa-dāsa' hao — jīve upadeśa kare
'Kṛṣṇa's servant' become to the jīvas instruction He gives

42 In the happiness of that feeling He forgets Himself, and He teaches the jīvas, "Become servants of Kṛṣṇa!"

Anubhāṣya.
Accepting the mood of a devotee, Mahā-Viṣṇu sets aside the awareness of His own true nature (svarūpa) and joyfully regards service to Bhagavān as His own duty to perform. That very joy of service loosens Mahā-Viṣṇu's awareness of His own nature (His sense of Himself as the enjoyer). By His own example He constantly inspires the jīvas to serve Kṛṣṇa. See verses 27–28.

In service to Kṛṣṇa lies the bliss of Vaikuṇṭha —

কৃষ্ণদাস-অভিমানে যে আনন্দসিন্ধু । কোটি-ব্রহ্মসুখ নহে তার এক বিন্দু ॥ ৪৩ ॥

kṛṣṇa-dāsa-abhimāne ye ānanda-sindhu of Kṛṣṇa's servant in the self-conception which of bliss the ocean koṭi-brahma-sukha nahe tāra eka bindu millions of times Brahman's happiness is not of it one drop 43 Such is the ocean of bliss in feeling oneself Kṛṣṇa's servant that the happiness of Brahman, multiplied ten million times, is not equal to a single drop of it.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Brahma-sukha (the happiness of Brahman) is the happiness that comes with the thought of nondifference: "I am Brahman."

Advaita and Nityānanda find happiness only in serving Gaura —

মুঞি যে চৈতন্যদাস, আর নিত্যানন্দ । দাস-ভাব-সম নহে অন্যত্র আনন্দ ॥ ৪৪ ॥

muñi ye caitanya-dāsa, āra nityānanda
I indeed Caitanya's servant and Nityānanda dāsa-bhāva-sama nahe anyatra ānanda of the servant's mood equal there is not elsewhere bliss

44 "I and Nityānanda are servants of Caitanya. Nowhere is there bliss equal to the mood of a servant."

Anubhāṣya.

See Ādi 7.85, 97–98. In the Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu (Pūrva-vibhāga, First Wave): "Even if the bliss of Brahman were multiplied a parārdha times, it would not equal even an atom of the ocean of the happiness of bhakti."[19] In the Bhāvārtha-dīpikā: "A fortunate few, sporting in great joy in the ocean of nectar of topics about You, hold the four goals of life no higher than a blade of grass. And those among them who do not desire even the subtle goal [of liberation] — bhakti, through prema, makes them people whose minds and very lives have been stolen. Devotees whose hearts have found bliss in serving the lotus feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa never desire liberation." In the Padma Purāṇa, in the Kārtika-māhātmya: "O Lord, though You are the master of all who grant boons, I ask of You neither liberation, nor the highest limit of liberation, nor any other boon. O Lord, may only this form of Yours as a cowherd boy always appear in my mind! What do I want with anything else? As You, while bound, freed the two sons of Kuvera and made them devotees, so grant me too Your own prema-bhakti. O Dāmodara, I have no craving for liberation."[20] In the Śrī Nārāyaṇa-vyūha-stava of the Hayaśīrṣa-pañcarātra: "O Lord of those who grant boons, I pray for neither dharma, nor kāma, nor artha, nor mokṣa. At Your lotus feet I desire only service." "Viṣṇu wished again and again to grant him boons, yet he did not ask for liberation and chose bhakti alone — I bow to that Prahlāda." "Though liberation came to him unsought from Viṣṇu, the son of Daśaratha, he did not want liberation without service — obeisances to that Hanumān." In the words of Śrī Hanumān: "I do not long for the liberation that cuts the bonds of worldly existence, for in it [the awareness] 'You are the Lord and I am the servant' disappears." In the Nārada-pañcarātra, in the Jitante-stotra: "I never have any desire for dharma, artha, kāma or mokṣa. Grant that I may live at the foot of Your lotus feet. O upholder of the earth, I do not pray for mokṣa, sālokya or sārūpya. O most blessed one, true to Your vows, I desire only Your mercy." In the hymn Mukunda-mālā of the emperor Kulaśekhara: "O Hari, I worship Your lotus feet not to be free of duality, not to escape the dreadful hell of Kumbhīpāka, and not to enjoy, in the garden of Nandana, beautiful women whose soft bodies are like creepers. I wish only, in whatever birth I take, to contemplate You in the chamber of my heart." In the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, see many verses: 3.25.36, 3.4.15, 3.25.34, 4.1.22, 4.9.10, 4.20.24, 5.14.43, 6.11.25, 6.17.28, 6.18.74, 7.6.25, 7.8.42, 8.3.20, 9.4.49, 9.21.12, 10.16.37, 10.87.21, 11.14.14, 11.20.34, 12.3.6 and others.

Examples showing that service to Kṛṣṇa is supreme: (1) Lakṣmī begs for service to Kṛṣṇa —

পরমপ্রেয়সী লক্ষ্মী হৃদয়ে বসতি । তেঁহো দাস্য-সুখ মাগে করিয়া মিনতি ॥ ৪৫ ॥

parama-preyasī lakṣmī hṛdaye vasati supreme beloved Lakṣmī on His heart dwells teṁho dāsya-sukha māge kariyā minati
she of service the happiness begs making entreaty

45 Lakṣmī, His dearest beloved, dwells upon His heart, yet she too humbly begs for the happiness of service.

(2) Viṣṇu's associates, and Brahmā, Śiva, the four Sanas, Nārada, Śuka and others also serve Kṛṣṇa —

দাস্য-ভাবে আনন্দিত পারিষদগণ । বিধি-ভব-নারদাদি-শুক-সনাতন ॥ ৪৬ ॥

dāsya-bhāve ānandita pāriṣada-gaṇa
in the mood of service rejoice the associates vidhi-bhava-nāradādi-śuka-sanātana
Brahmā Śiva Nārada and others Śuka Sanātana (and the other Kumāras)

46 In the mood of service His associates rejoice — Brahmā, Śiva, Nārada and others, Śuka, and Sanātana with his brothers.[5]

(3) Nitāi, mad in the service of Gaura —

নিত্যানন্দ অবধূত সবাতে আগল । চৈতন্যের দাস্য-প্রেমে হইল পাগল ॥ ৪৭ ॥

nityānanda avadhūta sabāte āgala Nityānanda Avadhūta among all the foremost caitanyera dāsya-preme haila pāgala
Caitanya's in the love of service became mad

47 Nityānanda Avadhūta is the foremost of all; in His love of serving Caitanya He became mad.[6]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Āgala means foremost, the first.

(4) Śrīvāsa and the other great souls (mahājanas) — all serve Gaura —

শ্রীবাস, হরিদাস, রামদাস, গদাধর ।
মুরারি, মুকুন্দ, চন্দ্রশেখর, বক্রেশ্বর ॥ ৪৮ ॥

এসব পণ্ডিতলোক পরম-মহত্ত্ব । চৈতন্যের দাস্যে সবায় করয়ে উন্মত্ত ॥ ৪৯ ॥

śrīvāsa, haridāsa, rāmadāsa, gadādhara
Śrīvāsa Haridāsa Rāmadāsa Gadādhara
murāri, mukunda, candraśekhara, vakreśvara
Murāri Mukunda Candraśekhara Vakreśvara
esaba paṇḍita-loka parama-mahattva all these learned men of supreme greatness caitanyera dāsye sabāya karaye unmatta
Caitanya's service all of them makes mad

48–49 Śrīvāsa, Haridāsa, Rāmadāsa, Gadādhara, Murāri, Mukunda, Candraśekhara and Vakreśvara — all these are learned men of the highest greatness, and service to Caitanya makes every one of them mad.

Being servants of Gaura themselves, they teach only service to Gaura —

এইমত গায়, নাচে, করে অট্টহাস । লোকে উপদেশে, — 'হও চৈতন্যের দাস' ॥ ৫০ ॥

ei mata gāya, nāce, kare aṭṭahāsa in this way they sing dance make loud laughter loke upadeśe, — 'hao caitanyera dāsa' people they teach 'become Caitanya's servants'

50 So they sing, dance and laugh aloud, and they teach everyone: "Become servants of Caitanya!"

চৈতন্যগোসাঞি মোরে করে গুরু-জ্ঞান । তথাপিহ মোর হয় 'দাস' অভিমান ॥ ৫১ ॥

caitanyagosāñi more kare guru-jñāna Caitanya Gosāñi Me holds as guru tathāpiha mora haya 'dāsa' abhimāna still My is 'servant' self-conception

51 "Caitanya Gosāñi regards Me as His guru, yet I feel Myself His servant."

The power of love for Kṛṣṇa —

কৃষ্ণপ্রেমের এই এক অপূর্ব্ব প্রভাব । গুরু-সম-লঘুকে করায় দাস্যভাব ॥ ৫২ ॥

kṛṣṇa-premera ei eka apūrva prabhāva of Kṛṣṇa-prema this one unprecedented power guru-sama-laghuke karāya dāsya-bhāva elders equals juniors makes feel the mood of service

52 This is one wondrous power of love for Kṛṣṇa: it gives elders, equals and juniors alike the mood of a servant.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Guru: the elders, who abide in the rasa of parental love (vātsalya); sama: the equals (who abide in the rasa of friendship, sakhya); laghu: the younger ones. Love for Kṛṣṇa gives the mood of a servant to all three. Therefore all of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya's elders, equals and juniors are His servants.

Anubhāṣya.

The Lord's elders in this world serve Him without knowing it. A mind dominated by majesty, or the path of reverent propriety (maryādā-mārga), often cannot grasp this. That is why service to Nārāyaṇa lacks the wonder found in love for Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa's elders accept the position of elders only to become established in the highest service — and so they serve Him. Service by those related to the Lord as equals or juniors can be grasped even by a mind dominated by majesty; but the strength of a servant's mood in one who regards himself as an elder exists only in service to Kṛṣṇa. To be inclined to serve with one's whole being and to long for service without measure is possible only towards Kṛṣṇa, whom all serve. Nārāyaṇa has many servants, equals and juniors; but Kṛṣṇa's elders, displaying a wondrous power, serve Him wholly. Kṛṣṇa's elders, His equals and those He embraces with tender affection — all three kinds of [associates], filled with love for Him, serve Kṛṣṇa. This is the wondrous power of prema.

Evidence from the experience of perfected souls —

ইহার প্রমাণ শুন শাস্ত্রের ব্যাখ্যান । মহদনুভব যাতে সুদৃঢ় প্রমাণ ॥ ৫৩ ॥

ihāra pramāṇa śuna śāstrera vyākhyāna of this the proof hear of the scriptures the explanation mahad-anubhava yāte sudṛḍha pramāṇa of great souls the experience in which firm proof

53 Hear the proof of this in the explanations of scripture, firmly confirmed by the experience of great souls.

(5) Service to Kṛṣṇa — even in the parental love (vātsalya-rasa) of Nanda

Mahārāja —

অন্যের কা কথা, ব্রজে নন্দ মহাশয়।
তাঁর সম 'গুরু' কৃষ্ণের আর কেহ নয় ॥ ৫৪ ॥

শুদ্ধবাৎসল্যে ঈশ্বর-জ্ঞান নাহি তাঁর। তাঁহাকেই প্রেমে করায় দাস্য-অনুকার ॥ ৫৫ ॥

anyera kā kathā, vraje nanda mahāśaya of others what to speak in Vraja Nanda Mahāśaya tāṁra sama 'guru' kṛṣṇera āra keha naya his equal elder of Kṛṣṇa other anyone is not śuddha-vātsalye īśvara-jñāna nāhi tāṁra in pure parental love of God the knowledge is not his tāṁhākei preme karāya dāsya-anukāra him even love makes feel of service a semblance

54–55 What to speak of others? In Vraja Kṛṣṇa has no elder equal to Nanda Mahāśaya. In his pure parental love he has no thought that Kṛṣṇa is God; yet love makes even him feel something like a servant.

তেঁহো রতি-মতি মাগে কৃষ্ণের চরণে। তাহার শ্রীমুখবাণী তাহাতে প্রমাণে ॥ ৫৬ ॥

teṁho rati-mati māge kṛṣṇera caraṇe
he attraction devotion begs at Kṛṣṇa's feet tāhāra śrī-mukha-vāṇī tāhāte pramāṇe his holy lips' words of that the proof

56 He too begs at Kṛṣṇa's feet for attachment and devotion; his own words are the proof of it.

শুন উদ্ধব, সত্য, কৃষ্ণ, — আমার তনয়।
তেঁহো ঈশ্বর — হেন যদি তোমার মনে লয় ॥ ৫৭ ॥

তথাপি তাঁহাতে রহু মোর মনোবৃত্তি ৷ তোমার ঈশ্বর-কৃষ্ণে হউক মোর মতি ॥ ৫৮ ॥

śuna uddhava, satya, kṛṣṇa, — āmāra tanaya hear Uddhava truly Kṛṣṇa my son teṁho īśvara — hena yadi tomāra mane laya
He God thus if your mind takes tathāpi tāṁhāte rahu mora mano-vṛtti still in Him may remain my mind's workings tomāra īśvara-kṛṣṇe hauka mora mati in your God Kṛṣṇa may be my thought

57–58 "Listen, Uddhava: Kṛṣṇa is truly my son. But if it seems to you that He is God, still let all the workings of my mind rest in Him; let my thoughts be fixed on your God, Kṛṣṇa."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
O Uddhava, even if Kṛṣṇa is regarded as Īśvara, let my mind still rest in that Kṛṣṇa.

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.47.66–67)

মনসো বৃত্তয়ো নঃ স্যুঃ কৃষ্ণপাদাম্বুজাশ্রয়াঃ ৷ বাচোঽভিধায়িনীর্নাম্নাং কায়স্তৎপ্রহ্বণাদিষু ॥ ৫৯ ॥

manaso vṛttayo naḥ syuḥ of the mind the workings our may be kṛṣṇa-pādāmbujāśrayāḥ of Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet taking shelter
vāco 'bhidhāyinīr nāmnāṁ
our words uttering His names kāyas tat-prahvaṇādiṣu
the body in bowing to Him and the like

59 "May the workings of our minds take shelter at Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet, may our words utter His names, and may our bodies be given to bowing down to Him and serving Him." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.66)

Anubhāṣya.

After meeting the residents of Vraja, Uddhava took leave of them and was about to return to Dvārakā.[21] Then Nanda and the other cowherd men, full of love for Śrī Kṛṣṇa, speak to Uddhava:

naḥ (our) manasaḥ vṛttayaḥ (workings of the mind) kṛṣṇa-pādāmbujāśrayāḥ (taking shelter of Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet) syuḥ (may be). [Our] vācaḥ (words) tu nāmnām (His names) abhidhāyinīḥ (uttering — may they be devoted to kīrtana), kāyaḥ (the body) tat-prahvaṇādiṣu (in bowing to Him, Kṛṣṇa, and so on) astu (may be engaged).

কর্ম্মভির্ভ্রাম্যমাণানাং যত্র ক্বাপীশ্বরেচ্ছয়া । মঙ্গলাচরিতৈর্দানৈ রতির্নঃ কৃষ্ণ ঈশ্বরে ॥ ৬০ ॥

karmabhir bhrāmyamāṇānāṁ
by our karma being made to wander yatra kvāpīśvarecchayā wherever by the Lord's will maṅgalācaritair dānai
by auspicious deeds by gifts ratir naḥ kṛṣṇa īśvare
love our for Kṛṣṇa the Lord

60 "Wherever we may wander, driven by our karma and the Lord's will, by our good deeds and gifts may we have love for Kṛṣṇa, the Lord." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.67)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Nanda said: "O Uddhava, may all the workings of our minds take shelter of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet, may our words sing His names, and may our bodies bow down to Him. Whatever our condition may be by the will of Īśvara, according to the fruits of our karma, may charity and other auspicious deeds increase our love (rati) for Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Person."

Anubhāṣya.
karmabhiḥ (by deeds — sinful, pious and others that bear fruit) īśvarecchayā (by the will of Īśvara) yatra kvāpi (wherever it may be) bhrāmyamāṇānām (wandering — being born among the eighty-four [lakhs of] species) naḥ (our) maṅgalācaritaiḥ dānaiḥ (by the auspicious deeds that arise from them) īśvare (for Bhagavān) kṛṣṇe (Kṛṣṇa) ratiḥ (attachment) astu (may there be).

(6) Service to Kṛṣṇa — even in the friendship (sakhya-rasa) of the friends of Vraja —

শ্রীদামাদি ব্রজে যত সখার নিচয় । ঐশ্বর্য্য-জ্ঞান-হীন, কেবল-সখ্যময় ॥ ৬১ ॥

śrīdāmādi vraje yata sakhāra nicaya Śrīdāmā and others in Vraja all of friends the host aiśvarya-jñāna-hīna, kevala-sakhya-maya of majesty the knowledge without purely of friendship made

61 All the host of Kṛṣṇa's friends in Vraja, led by Śrīdāmā, know nothing of His majesty: their love is pure friendship.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Sakhya is of two kinds: "with awareness of majesty" and kevala, that is, "unmixed," sakhya. Śrīdāmā and the other friends in Vraja have kevala sakhya: they do not know Kṛṣṇa's majesty.

কৃষ্ণসঙ্গে যুদ্ধ করে, স্কন্ধে আরোহণ । তাঁরা দাস্যভাবে করে চরণ-সেবন ॥ ৬২ ॥

kṛṣṇa-saṅge yuddha kare, skandhe ārohaṇa with Kṛṣṇa together wrestling they do on His shoulders climbing tāṁrā dāsya-bhāve kare caraṇa-sevana
they in the mood of service do to His feet service

62 They wrestle with Kṛṣṇa and climb on His shoulders, and yet, in the mood of servants, they tend His feet.[7]

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.15.17)

পাদসম্বাহনং চক্রুঃ কেচিত্তস্য মহাত্মনঃ । অপরে হতপাপ্মানো ব্যজনৈঃ সমবীজয়ন্ ॥ ৬৩ ॥

pāda-saṁvāhanaṁ cakruḥ
of the feet massage performed kecit tasya mahātmanaḥ
some His of the great soul
apare hata-pāpmāno others free from sin vyajanaiḥ samavījayan with fans fanned (Him)

63 "Some of them massaged the feet of that great soul, while others, their sins destroyed, fanned Him with fans." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.15.17)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
When Kṛṣṇa lay down, one friend began to massage His feet, and another, in a mood of pure friendship, to fan Him with a fan made of leaves.

Anubhāṣya.
Before the demon Dhenuka was killed in Tālavana, the cowherd boys played with one another in this way, together with Rāma and Kṛṣṇa:

hata-pāpmānaḥ (freed of impurity) kecit (some cowherd boys) mahātmanaḥ (of Bhagavān) tasya (of Him, Kṛṣṇa) pāda-saṁvāhanam (massaging of the feet) cakruḥ (did); apare (other cowherd boys) vyajanaiḥ (with fans) samavījayan (fanned properly).

(7) Service to Kṛṣṇa — even in the conjugal love (madhura-rasa) of the gopīs of Vraja —

কৃষ্ণের প্রেয়সী ব্রজে যত গোপীগণ ।
যাঁর পদধূলি করে উদ্ধব প্রার্থন ॥ ৬৪ ॥

যাঁ-সবার উপরে কৃষ্ণের প্রিয় নাহি আন । তাঁহারা আপনাকে করে দাসী-অভিমান ॥ ৬৫ ॥

kṛṣṇera preyasī vraje yata gopī-gaṇa Kṛṣṇa's beloved in Vraja all the gopīs yāṁra pada-dhūli kare uddhava prārthana whose feet's dust does Uddhava pray for yāṁ-sabāra upare kṛṣṇera priya nāhi āna than all of them more to Kṛṣṇa dear is not another tāṁhārā āpanāke kare dāsī-abhimāna
they themselves hold as maidservants in self-conception

64–65 Even the beloved gopīs of Vraja, dearer to Kṛṣṇa than anyone else, whose foot-dust Uddhava prays for, think of themselves as His maidservants.

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.31.6)

ব্রজজনার্ত্তিহন্ বীর যোষিতাং নিজ-জনস্ময়ধ্বংসনস্মিত ।
ভজ সখে ভবৎ কিঙ্করীঃ স্ম নো জলরুহাননং চারু দর্শয় ॥ ৬৬ ॥

vraja-janārti-han vīra yoṣitāṁ of Vraja's people the distress O destroyer O hero of women nija-janasmaya-dhvaṁsana-smita of Your own people the pride destroying whose smile
bhaja sakhe bhavat kiṅkarīḥ sma no accept O friend Your maidservants indeed us jala-ruhānanaṁ cāru darśaya lotus-like face beautiful show

66 "O You who take away the distress of the people of Vraja! O Hero, whose smile destroys the pride of Your own! O friend, we are Your maid-servants: be kind to us, and show us women Your beautiful lotus face." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.31.6)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O You who destroy the sorrows of Vraja! O supreme hero among women! O You whose gentle smile dispels the pride of Your own people![10] O friend, we are Your maidservants: show us Your lotus face.

Anubhāṣya.

When Kṛṣṇa disappeared during the rāsa dance, the gopīs, searching for Him, sang:

he vraja-janārti-han (O You who destroy the pain of separation of those full of love for Kṛṣṇa), vīra (O You whose form is magnanimous), nija-jana-smaya-dhvaṁsana-smita (O You whose smile destroys the smaya, that is, the pride, of Your own people, the embodiments of rasa), sakhe (O friend), sma (surely) bhavat-kiṅkarīḥ naḥ (us, Your maidservants) bhaja (stay with us); cāru (enchanting) jala-ruhānanam (lotus face) ca yoṣitām (to us women, the gopīs) darśaya (show).

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.47.21)

অপি বত মধুপুর্য্যামার্য্যপুত্রোঽধুনাস্তে
স্মরতি স পিতৃগেহান্ সৌম্য বন্ধূংশ্চ গোপান্ ।
ক্বচিদপি স কথাং নঃ কিঙ্করীণাং গৃণীতে ভুজমগুরুসুগন্ধং মূর্দ্ধ্ন্যধাস্যৎ কদা নু ॥ ৬৭ ॥

api bata madhu-puryām ārya-putro 'dhunāste (is it) alas in Madhupurī the noble one's son now dwells

smarati sa pitṛ-gehān saumya bandhūṁś ca gopān remembers (does) He His father's house O gentle one kinsmen and cowherds

kvacid api sa kathāṁ naḥ kiṅkarīṇāṁ gṛṇīte ever (does) He talk of us maidservants speak

bhujam aguru-sugandhaṁ mūrdhny adhāsyat kadā nu
His arm aguru-fragrant on the head will He place when indeed

67 "O gentle one! Alas, Nanda's son now lives in Mathurā. Does He remember His father's house, His kinsmen and the cowherd boys? Does He ever speak of us, His maidservants? When will He place on our heads His arm, fragrant as aguru?" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.21)[8]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

How sad that our ārya-putra now lives in the city of Mathurā! O Uddhava, does He remember the home of His father Nanda and His cowherd friends? Does He ever speak of us, His maidservants? Ah, will He ever again place on our heads His hand, fragrant like aguru?

Anubhāṣya.

When Uddhava came to Vraja, Śrīmatī, addressing a bee, speaks citra-jalpa (varied talk):

he saumya (O gentle one), api bata ārya-putraḥ (the son of Nanda) adhunā (now) madhu-puryām (in Mathurā) āste (does He live happily)? saḥ pitṛ-gehān (together with His parents, Nanda and Yaśodā, and with the homes) bandhūn (the relatives — Parjanya, Varīyasī, Upananda, Abhinanda, Sannanda, Nandana, Rohiṇī, Sānandā, Nandinī, Kaṇḍava, Daṇḍava and others), gopān (the cowherd boys — Subala, Arjuna, Gandharva, Vasanta, Śrīdāmā, Sudāmā, Ujjvala, Kokila, Sanandana, Vidagdha and others) ca kiṁ smarati (does He remember)? kvacit (ever) api kiṅkarīṇām (of the maidservants — Lalitā, Viśākhā, Citrā, Campakalatā, Tuṅgavidyā, Indulekhā, Raṅgadevī, Sudevī, Kalāvatī, Śubhāṅgadā, Hiraṇyāṅgī, Ratnalekhā, Śikhāvatī, Kandarpa-mañjarī, Phullakalikā, Anaṅga-mañjarī, Puṇḍarīkā, Sītākhaṇḍī, Cārucaṇḍī, Sadaṇḍikā, Kuṇṭhitā, Kalakaṇṭhī, Romaci, Mecakā, Haridrābhā, Haricchelā, Vitaṇḍikā, Līlāvatī, Sādhikā, Candrikā, Mādhavī, Vijayā, Nandā, Gaurī, Sudhāmukhī, Vṛndā, Kaumudī, Ratnabhavā, Ratnaprabhā and others) naḥ (of us — Śrīmatī, the daughter of Vṛṣabhānu, Gāndharvikā) kathām (talk) saḥ gṛṇīte (does He speak with His own lips)? kadā nu (when) aguru-sugandham (more fragrant even than aguru) bhujam (His arm) mūrdhni (on our heads) adhāsyat (will He place)?

(8) More than that, even Śrī Rādhā Herself serves Kṛṣṇa —

তাঁ-সবার কথা রহু, — শ্রীমতী রাধিকা ।
সবা হৈতে সকলাংশে পরম-অধিকা ॥ ৬৮ ॥

তেঁহো যাঁর দাসী হৈঞা সেবেন চরণ । যাঁর প্রেমগুণে কৃষ্ণ বদ্ধ অনুক্ষণ ॥ ৬৯ ॥

tāṁ-sabāra kathā rahu, — śrīmatī rādhikā of all of them the talk let be Śrīmatī Rādhikā
sabā haite sakalāṁśe parama-adhikā than all in every respect supremely greater teṁho yāṁra dāsī haiñā sevena caraṇa
She His maidservant becoming serves the feet yāṁra prema-guṇe kṛṣṇa baddha anukṣaṇa by whose love's qualities Kṛṣṇa bound always

68–69 Let alone them: Śrīmatī Rādhikā, who surpasses them all in every respect and by whose love Kṛṣṇa is bound at every moment — even She has become His maidservant and serves His feet.

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.30.39)

হা নাথ রমণ প্রেষ্ঠ ক্বাসি ক্বাসি মহাভুজ । দাস্যাস্তে কৃপণায়া মে সখে দর্শয় সন্নিধিম্ ॥ ৭০ ॥

hā nātha ramaṇa preṣṭha
O Master Beloved dearest
kvāsi kvāsi mahā-bhuja where are You where are You O mighty-armed dāsyās te kṛpaṇāyā me to Your maidservant wretched to Me
sakhe darśaya sannidhim
O friend show Your nearness

70 "O Master, O Beloved, O dearest one! Where are You, where are You, O mighty-armed? O friend, show Yourself to Me, Your wretched maidservant!" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.30.39)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
O Lord! O lover! O dearest! O mighty-armed one! I am Your most wretched maidservant: bring me near to You!

Anubhāṣya.
During the rāsa dance Kṛṣṇa left the other gopīs and disappeared with Śrīmatī Rādhikā alone. Seeing the other gopīs lament in separation from Kṛṣṇa, Śrīmatī, in a fit of pride, said that She could walk no further and told Kṛṣṇa to carry Her. Then Kṛṣṇa disappeared, and Śrīmatī lamented:

hā nātha, ramaṇa, preṣṭha (the best of all), kvāsi ([where are] You), kvāsi? he sakhe, kṛpaṇāyāḥ (tormented by separation from You) dīnāyāḥ te (Your) dāsyāḥ (to the maidservant, that is, to me) sannidhim (Your nearness) darśaya (reveal).

দ্বারকাতে রুক্মিণ্যাদি যতেক মহিষী । তাঁহারাও আপনাকে মানে কৃষ্ণদাসী ॥ ৭১ ॥

dvārakāte rukmiṇyādi yateka mahiṣī in Dvārakā Rukmiṇī and the other all queens tāṁhārāo āpanāke māne kṛṣṇa-dāsī
they too themselves hold Kṛṣṇa's maidservants

71 In Dvārakā all the queens, led by Rukmiṇī, also think of themselves as Kṛṣṇa's maidservants.

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.83.11)

তপশ্চরন্তীমাজ্ঞায় স্বপাদস্পর্শনাশয়া । সখ্যোপেত্যাগ্রহীৎ পাণিং সাহং তদ্গৃহমার্জ্জনী ॥ ৭২ ॥

tapaś carantīm ājñāya austerity performing knowing (me)
sva-pāda-sparśanāśayā
His own feet of touching with the hope sakhyopetyāgrahīt pāṇiṁ with His friend coming took my hand sāhaṁ tad-gṛha-mārjanī that I His house the sweeper

72 "Knowing that I was performing austerities in the hope of touching His feet, He came with His friend and took my hand. And so I am the sweeper of His house." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.83.11)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I was performing austerities, longing to touch Śrī Kṛṣṇa's feet. In His mercy Kṛṣṇa came with His friend and took my hand in marriage. Since then I have been His maidservant who sweeps His house.

Anubhāṣya.
When the women of the Yadu and Kuru dynasties gathered together at Samanta-pañcaka, Kṛṣṇa's queen Kālindī, in a conversation about Kṛṣṇa, said to Draupadī:

sva-pāda-sparśanāśayā (with the hope of touching the feet of Him, Śrī Kṛṣṇa) tapaś carantīm mā (me), who was performing austerities, ājñāya (knowing), saḥ kṛṣṇaḥ sakhyā (with Arjuna) saha upetya (coming near) pāṇim agrahīt; sā (I) am tat (His) gṛha-mārjanī (maidservant).

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.83.39)

আত্মারামস্য তস্যেমা বয়ং বৈ গৃহদাসিকাঃ ৷ সর্ব্বসঙ্গনিবৃত্ত্যাদ্ধা তপসা চ বভূবিম ॥ ৭৩ ॥

ātmārāmasya tasyemā of the self-satisfied of Him these vayaṁ vai gṛha-dāsikāḥ
we indeed household maidservants sarva-saṅga-nivṛttyāddhā from all attachments by turning away directly tapasā ca babhūvima
by austerity and have become

73 "By austerity and by turning away from every attachment, we have become, in truth, maidservants in the house of Him who delights in Himself." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.83.39)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Through many austerities, giving up all attachment, we have attained the position of maidservants in the house of this Person, who delights in Himself (ātmārāma).

Anubhāṣya.
At the same time, in the same conversation, Kṛṣṇa's queen Lakṣmaṇā says to Draupadī:

imāḥ vayam (we, the queens) sarva-saṅga-nivṛttyā (by withdrawing, through indifference, from attachment to everything — happiness, wealth, sons and so on, or the four goals of life including mokṣa) tapasā (by the service of maidservants) ātmārāmasya tasya (of Him, Kṛṣṇa) addhā (directly) gṛha-dāsikāḥ babhūvima (have become).

(10) Service to Kṛṣṇa — even by Balarāma, the svayaṁ-prakāśa —

আনের কি কথা, বলদেব মহাশয় । যাঁর ভাব — শুদ্ধসখ্য-বাৎসল্যাদিময় ॥ ৭৪ ॥

ānera ki kathā, baladeva mahāśaya of others what to speak Baladeva Mahāśaya yāṁra bhāva — śuddha-sakhya-vātsalyādi-maya whose mood of pure friendship parental love and the rest full 74 What to speak of others? Consider Baladeva Mahāśaya, whose mood is full of pure friendship, parental love and the rest.

Anubhāṣya.

Baladeva is the elder brother and so worthy of honour, yet He knows Himself only as the servant of His younger brother Kṛṣṇa. In Mahā-Vaikuṇṭha the catur-vyūha is only a chamber (prakoṣṭha) of this same Baladeva, the svayaṁ-prakāśa: this is the supreme majesty of the all-powerful Parameśvara. On the path of reverence (maryādā-mārga) even such an exalted, supreme position is established in service to Kṛṣṇa. Therefore no being — neither in Goloka and Vaikuṇṭha, nor in the countless universes, nor within them — is able to enjoy Kṛṣṇa or make Him its servant. Everyone other than Kṛṣṇa excels others exactly to the degree that he is inclined to serve Kṛṣṇa. And to the degree that a being has given up service to Kṛṣṇa and turned away from Him, to that degree he has invited misfortune. In the material world the urge to enjoy Kṛṣṇa, or to think oneself Kṛṣṇa's equal and enjoy as He does, is the root mantra of the nondevotees; yet by their true nature all who take shelter of Kṛṣṇa are eternally engaged in serving Bhagavān. It is aversion to serving Kṛṣṇa that makes the jīva like one dead. When knowledge of Kṛṣṇa awakens, the inclination to serve Kṛṣṇa is seen in every jīva, to a greater or lesser degree.

তেঁহো আপনাকে করেন দাস-ভাবনা । কৃষ্ণদাস-ভাব বিনু আছে কোন জনা ॥ ৭৫ ॥

teṁho āpanāke karena dāsa-bhāvanā
He Himself holds as a servant in thought kṛṣṇa-dāsa-bhāva vinu āche kona janā of Kṛṣṇa's servant the mood without is there any person

75 Even He thinks of Himself as a servant. Is there anyone without the mood of a servant of Kṛṣṇa?

(11) Ananta in the form of Śeṣa serves Kṛṣṇa in ten bodies —

সহস্র-বদনে যেঁহো শেষ-সঙ্কর্ষণ । দশ দেহ ধরি' করে কৃষ্ণের সেবন ॥ ৭৬ ॥

sahasra-vadane yeṁho śeṣa-saṅkarṣaṇa with a thousand mouths who Śeṣa-Saṅkarṣaṇa daśa deha dhari' kare kṛṣṇera sevana
ten bodies assuming does Kṛṣṇa's service

76 Śeṣa-Saṅkarṣaṇa, with His thousand mouths, assumes ten bodies and serves Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The ten bodies are the umbrella, sandals, bed, pillow, garments, ornaments, pleasure garden, dwelling, sacred thread and throne.

(12) Śiva's service to Kṛṣṇa —

অনন্ত ব্রহ্মাণ্ডে রুদ্র — সদাশিবের অংশ । গুণাবতার তেঁহো, সর্ব্বদেব-অবতংস ॥ ৭৭ ॥

ananta brahmāṇḍe rudra — sadāśivera aṁśa in endless universes Rudra of Sadāśiva a part guṇāvatāra teṁho, sarva-deva-avataṁsa guṇa-avatāra he of all the gods the crown

77 In the endless universes Rudra is a part of Sadāśiva; he is a guṇa-avatāra, the crown of all the gods.

তেঁহো করেন কৃষ্ণের দাস্য-প্রত্যাশ । নিরন্তর কহে শিব, 'মুঞি কৃষ্ণদাস' ॥ ৭৮ ॥

teṁho karena kṛṣṇera dāsya-pratyāśa he makes of Kṛṣṇa's service the hope nirantara kahe śiva, 'muñi kṛṣṇa-dāsa' constantly says Śiva 'I Kṛṣṇa's servant'

78 He longs for the service of Kṛṣṇa; Śiva says at every moment, "I am Kṛṣṇa's servant."

Anubhāṣya.

Rudra and Sadāśiva. In the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, in the description of the guṇa-avatāras (verses 18–24), it is said of Rudra: "He is said to be eleven vyūhas and eight bodies; usually he has five faces, three eyes and ten arms. Sometimes Hara, like Brahmā (Vidhi), is said to be a particular jīva. But this should be understood as in the case of Śeṣa, for he is glorified as a part [of the Lord]. Hara is the abode of the Puruṣa and so is in essence almost nirguṇa; but because of his connection with tamas everyone sees him here as subject to change. As the Tenth Canto says (10.88.3): 'Śiva is always joined with his potency, has three marks and is covered by the guṇas.' As the Brahma-saṁhitā says (5.45): 'As milk, joined with a particular transforming agent, becomes yogurt, yet [the yogurt] is not different from its cause, so He who for a particular task takes the form of Śambhu — Govinda, the original Person, Him I worship.' Sometimes he is born from the forehead of Brahmā (Vidhi), sometimes from the forehead of the Lord of Kamalā; and at the end of a kalpa Kālāgni-Rudra appears from Saṅkarṣaṇa as well. His form called Sadāśiva is free from even a trace of tamas. He is the cause of all and a part of the Lord Himself. It is he who is described in the Vāyu Purāṇa and others as [dwelling] in Śivaloka. So too in the Brahma-saṁhitā, where the original Śiva is spoken of (5.8): 'Niyati is Ramā-devī, His beloved, obedient to Him. His liṅga is the eternal Bhagavān Śambhu, whose form is light. And she who is the yoni is the aparā śakti,' and so on."

Śrī Rudra has eleven vyūhas: Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Virūpākṣa, Raivata, Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka the best of the gods, Sāvitra, Jayanta, Pinākī and Aparājita;

and eight forms (mūrtis): earth, water, fire, air, ether, the sun, the moon and the performer of the soma sacrifice. Among them Rudra is usually five-faced, three-eyed and ten-armed. In some places Rudra, like Vidhi (Brahmā), is glorified as "a particular jīva." But since he is also glorified as a part of Bhagavān, this must be reconciled as in the case of "Śeṣa": Śiva, the svāṁśa (the Lord's own part), belongs to the category of Īśvara, while Rudra the destroyer is a vibhinnāṁśa, a jīva. Hara is an avatāra of Bhagavān and by nature the Puruṣa, so in truth he is nirguṇa; but because of his connection with the mode of darkness, to ordinary people who do not know the truth he seems at first sight to be subject to change. As the Tenth Canto says: "Rudra is always joined with prakṛti, the state of equilibrium of the guṇas; when the guṇas are agitated, he is joined with the three guṇas and covered by them from afar." As the Brahma-saṁhitā says: "Milk, joined with a particular transforming agent, turns into yogurt, yet that yogurt is never a thing separate from its cause, the milk. So too He who descends in the form of Rudra for the sake of destruction — the original Person Govinda, Him I worship." In one kalpa Rudra is born from the forehead of Brahmā (Vidhi), in another from the forehead of Viṣṇu. At the end of a kalpa Kālāgni-Rudra is born from Saṅkarṣaṇa as well. The Vāyu Purāṇa and others describe a form of Śiva named Sadāśiva in Śivaloka, which lies within Vaikuṇṭha: He is the cause of all and has no connection with the mode of darkness. This Sadāśiva is a vilāsa of Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa Himself. As the Brahma-saṁhitā says of the original Śiva: "The unfailing Ramā-devī, inseparable from Bhagavān, part of His own nature and obedient to Him, is His beloved; the eternal Bhagavān Śambhu, whose form is light, is a particular part of that svayaṁ-rūpa. She who is the yoni, the part that serves as the womb — Mahāmāyā, the source of the mahat-tattva and the other [elements] — is the aparā, the lower potency made of the three guṇas, called pradhāna," and so on.

Śrī Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa [comments as follows]. Because particular statements [of scripture] are found, [the author] speaks [this verse] to show that Rudra too is of two kinds.[22] First he speaks of the one who in the verse beginning sattvaṁ rajaḥ (Bhāgavatam 1.2.23) is named as belonging to the category of Īśvara: "Rudra is eleven vyūhas." Here [are meant] the words of the Mahābhārata: "Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Virūpākṣa, then Raivata, Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka the lord of the gods, Sāvitra, Jayanta, Pinākī and Aparājita." Likewise "eight bodies": "Earth, water, fire, air and ether, the sun and the moon, and the performer of the soma sacrifice — these are the eight forms," says Yādava. "Usually" — because the Rudra who dwells in the covering of water [around the universe] is seen to have one face.

Next [the author] speaks of his belonging to the category of jīvas: "Sometimes…." In the Ṛg-veda: "Whom I wish, him I make fierce, him a Brahmā, him a sage, him wise," and so on. In the Nārāyaṇa Upaniṣad, beginning with the words "Then the Person Nārāyaṇa desired, 'Let Me create beings'": "From Nārāyaṇa Brahmā is born, from Nārāyaṇa Rudra is born, from Nārāyaṇa Prajāpati is born, from Nārāyaṇa Indra is born, from Nārāyaṇa the eight Vasus (are born), from Nārāyaṇa the eleven Rudras (are born), from Nārāyaṇa the twelve Ādityas" (Nārāyaṇa Upaniṣad 1), and so on. In the Mahā Upaniṣad, beginning with the words "There was only Nārāyaṇa; there was neither Brahmā nor Īśāna": "From the forehead of Him, absorbed in meditation, was born a three-eyed Person holding a trident, endowed with beauty, truth, celibacy, austerity and renunciation" (Mahā Upaniṣad 1–2), and so on. And in the Mokṣa-dharma: "Prajāpati and Rudra too I Myself create. But they do not know Me, bewildered by My māyā." These statements speak of his birth — so here Hara is a jīva. Hence for him there is also destruction. In the Viṣṇu-dharma: "Brahmā, Śambhu, and likewise the Sun, the Moon, Śatakratu and others, as well as the rest, are endowed with the potency of Viṣṇu. But when their work in the world is over, they are deprived of that potency; and, deprived of potency, they all die." The śruti "There was only one…" says the same. Otherwise these [statements] would be contradicted. The example here is "as of Brahmā (Vidhi)." "As in the case of Śeṣa": Śeṣa, who serves as the bed of the Lord of the Śārṅga bow — His supporting potency — belongs to the category of Īśvara, while [the Śeṣa] who holds up the earth is a jīva empowered by Him. "For he is glorified as a part [of the Lord]" means that in the Purāṇas he is called both His svāṁśa and His vibhinnāṁśa.

But that Hara who in the verse sattvaṁ rajas tamaḥ is named as a manifestation of the Supreme Person — "being the abode of the Puruṣa," that is, being He Himself — is indeed nirguṇa. "Almost" — because he is covered by tamas, which he accepted by his own will. Therefore "everyone," that is, those who do not know the truth, "sees him here as subject to change," among the guṇa-avatāras; in reality he is changeless — that is the meaning. To prove that "because of his connection with tamas he is seen as subject to change," [the author] cites "Śiva … with his potency…." Śiva is Rudra; "always" — at all times; "with his potency" — with prakṛti, the state of equilibrium of the guṇas, which he accepted by his own will; "joined." When the guṇas are agitated, he "has three marks," that is, the three guṇas; and when they are manifest, he is "covered" by them from afar. If one asks, "It is well known that he is covered by tamas; why then is he said here to have three marks?" — we answer: the three guṇas are mixed with one another, so sattva and rajas are also present there; there is no contradiction. And this statement itself should be understood as a restatement (anuvāda) of how people see him.

The proof that [Hara] is nirguṇa as the abode of the Puruṣa, and is called changing because of his connection with tamas, is "As milk…." As milk, joined with a particular transforming agent, becomes yogurt, and the yogurt is not separate, not different, from its cause, the milk, so "He" — Govinda — joined with the tamas He accepts by His own will, becomes Śambhu; that is, Śambhu is not other than Govinda. And since the change comes from outside, it does not touch His own nature (svarūpa).

[The author] names the sources from which Rudra appears: "of Brahmā…." "From the forehead of Brahmā" is found in the Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa and others; "from the forehead of the Lord of Kamalā" — in the Mahā Upaniṣad (2) and in the Purāṇas; this is possible because the kalpas differ. "Kālāgni-Rudra" should be understood from the words of the Eleventh Canto: "Beginning from Pātāla-tala, the fire from Saṅkarṣaṇa's mouth…" (Bhāgavatam 11.3.10).

One may object: "The author of the scripture, having found [such] statements, decided that Kṛṣṇa is the Lord Himself (svayaṁ-prabhu), that Nārāyaṇa and others are His vilāsas and svāṁśas and some are āveśas; that from His svāṁśa Garbhodaśāyī [come] Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra; that they are Īśvaras, while Brahmā and Rudra are sometimes jīvas. But this is not skilful. The original Truth is Sadāśiva: He is meant by the word 'Himself,' and He also takes the forms of Nārāyaṇa and others. Therefore the three — Brahmā and the rest — are His effects; for the Kaivalya Upaniṣad (6–9) says: 'Meditating on Him who is inconceivable, unmanifest, infinite in forms, auspicious (śiva), serene, immortal, the womb of Brahman; without beginning, middle or end, one, all-pervading, consciousness and bliss, formless, wondrous; the companion of Umā, the Supreme Lord, the master, three-eyed, blue-throated, serene — the sage reaches the Source of all beings, the Witness of all, Him who is beyond darkness. He is Brahmā, He is Śiva, He is Indra, He is the Imperishable, the Supreme, the self-ruling Lord. He is Viṣṇu, He is prāṇa, He is the fire of time, He is the moon. He is all that was and that will be, the moving and the unmoving. Knowing Him, one passes beyond death; there is no other path to liberation.' So this view is better, being based on śruti." To this [the author] answers: "Sadāśiva…." That form is a part of the Lord Himself, Kṛṣṇa; Nārāyaṇa is His vilāsa — that is the meaning. That is why the Taittirīyas read "Śiva," "Acyuta" and "Nārāyaṇa" in one sense. In the [cited] śruti, "Umā" means glory, and “the companion of Umā” is one accompanied by glory; “three-eyed” means knowing the three times; “blue-throated” means one whose throat is adorned with a blue gem (nīla). So it should be explained, for the ordinary meanings do not apply to that Śiva. “In the Vāyu Purāṇa and others”: “in Śivaloka” means in the abode of Vaikuṇṭha. This Sadāśiva and His world were described by the author of the Sandarbhas with the words of the Vāyu Purāṇa that begin “All around the waters….”

[The author] cites the decisive statement that Sadāśiva is a form of Kṛṣṇa Himself, the svayaṁ-rūpa: “Niyati….” The words “and so on” include the following: “The desire of Hari is the great seed. These progeny of Maheśvara were born having the nature of liṅga and yoni. This Puruṣa, the possessor of potency, is Maheśvara in the form of the liṅga. In that liṅga appeared Mahā-Viṣṇu, the Lord of the world” (Brahma-saṁhitā 5.8–10). The meaning is as follows. Earlier His sport with Ramā was mentioned. What is that Ramā like? It is said: “niyati” — she who is held, fixed in Him, the lover; that is, she is inseparable from Him and part of His own nature. Hence it is said: “His beloved, obedient to Him.” For the Hayaśīrṣa-pañcarātra says: “There is no Devī without Viṣṇu, and no Viṣṇu without the lotus-born one,” and the Viṣṇu Purāṇa: “Eternal indeed is she, Śrī, the mother of the world, inseparable from Viṣṇu” (Viṣṇu Purāṇa 1.8.15). Bhagavān Śambhu is the “liṅga” of that svayaṁ-rūpa, that is, His sign: “Liṅga — in the sense of sign and of inference,” says the Viśva [lexicon]. Bhagavān is the Lord of Paravyoma, possessed of the six opulences. “Śambhu” is He who, as His second vyūha Saṅkarṣaṇa, brings welfare (śam) to the jīvas dissolved in prakṛti by creating their respective upādhis; “whose form is light” — whose form is consciousness. Kṛṣṇa’s being Lord over Him reveals that Kṛṣṇa is the svayaṁ-rūpa, as a cow is recognised by its dewlap and other marks: He of whom this [Śambhu] is the vilāsa is [Bhagavān] Himself; that is why [Śambhu] is called His liṅga. “She who is the yoni” — the material cause of the mahat and the rest — “is the aparā śakti,” that is, consisting of the three guṇas. “Of Hari” — of His part, Saṅkarṣaṇa; “desire” — His desire to glance [at her] — bears fruit in the creation of the mahat and the rest; hence “the great seed.” “Great” — the immeasurable jīva-tattva — is placed in her. Therefore “these progeny of Maheśvara, having the nature of liṅga and yoni,” are said to be born from the Puruṣa and prakṛti as their causes. Since prakṛti is secondary and depends on Him, the progeny are called “of Maheśvara”: this he establishes with the words “the possessor of potency….” Then he clarifies what was said: “In that….” “In the liṅga” — in her Lord, in His presence. Mahā-Viṣṇu is Saṅkarṣaṇa.

কৃষ্ণপ্রেমে উন্মত্ত, বিহ্বল দিগম্বর ।
কৃষ্ণ-গুণ-লীলা গায়, নাচে নিরন্তর ॥ ৭৯ ॥

kṛṣṇa-preme unmatta, vihvala digambara in Kṛṣṇa-prema mad overwhelmed naked kṛṣṇa-guṇa-līlā gāya, nāce nirantara
Kṛṣṇa's qualities pastimes he sings dances constantly

79 Mad with love for Kṛṣṇa, overwhelmed and naked, he sings of Kṛṣṇa's qualities and pastimes and dances without end.

(13) Service to Kṛṣṇa runs through all four rasas — conjugal, parental, friendly and servile —

পিতা-মাতা-গুরু-সখা-ভাব কেনে নয় । কৃষ্ণপ্রেমের স্বভাবে দাস্য-ভাব সে করয় ॥ ৮০ ॥

pitā-mātā-guru-sakhā-bhāva kene naya of father mother elder friend the mood whatever may be kṛṣṇa-premera svabhāve dāsya-bhāva se karaya of Kṛṣṇa-prema by the nature the mood of service it produces

80 Whatever the mood — of father, mother, elder or friend — by the very nature of love for Kṛṣṇa it brings forth the mood of service.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Whatever mood [towards Kṛṣṇa] one may take up, one must certainly acknowledge the mood of a servant (dāsya) contained within every mood.

Kṛṣṇa Himself is the Lord of all —

এক কৃষ্ণ — সর্ব্বসেব্য, জগৎ-ঈশ্বর । আর যত সব, — তাঁর সেবকানুচর ॥ ৮১ ॥

eka kṛṣṇa — sarva-sevya, jagat-īśvara one Kṛṣṇa served by all of the world the Lord āra yata saba, — tāṁra sevakānucara and as many all His servants and followers

81 Kṛṣṇa alone is served by all; He is the Lord of the world. All others are His servants and followers.

Anubhāṣya.

See Ādi 2.70, 83, 88, 102, 106; 3.5; 4.11–12; 5.131; 7.7–8; Madhya 6.147; 8.133–135; 10.15; 15.139; 18.190–191; 20.152–155, 240, 400; 21.3, 92; 22.7; 24.71 and others.

সেই কৃষ্ণ অবতীর্ণ — চৈতন্য-ঈশ্বর । অতএব আর সব, — তাঁহার কিঙ্কর ॥ ৮২ ॥

sei kṛṣṇa avatīrṇa — caitanya-īśvara that Kṛṣṇa descended Caitanya the Lord ataeva āra saba, — tāṁhāra kiṅkara therefore the rest all His servants

82 That Kṛṣṇa has descended as the Lord Caitanya; therefore all others are His servants.

(14) Everything spiritual other than He is His servant —

কেহ মানে, কেহ না মানে, সব তাঁর দাস । যে না মানে, তার হয় সেই পাপে নাশ ॥ ৮৩ ॥

keha māne, keha nā māne, saba tāṁra dāsa
some accept some not accept all His servants ye nā māne, tāra haya sei pāpe nāśa who not accepts of him is by that sin destruction

83 Some accept Him and some do not, yet all are His servants. One who does not accept Him is destroyed by that very sin.

Anubhāṣya.

Forgetting his true nature, the jīva puts on the costume of an enjoyer and turns away from serving Kṛṣṇa. And some, out of ignorance, at times think that service to Bhagavān is not their only duty. But in fact every living being eternally abides in His service. If the jīva does not serve Bhagavān, his nature is overturned and misfortune arrives. Service to Śrī Caitanya is the intrinsic duty (svarūpa-dharma) of the jīva, an atomic particle of spirit. When the conditioned jīva forgets the function of his true nature and strives for something else, it is only the pull of enjoying matter. When consciousness (caitanya) awakens in him, service to Caitanya naturally manifests in his heart. Deprived of service to Caitanya, the conditioned jīva in his undertakings comes to lord it over other things; but even then he is only an unworthy servant of Caitanya.

চৈতন্যের দাস মুঞি, চৈতন্যের দাস । চৈতন্যের দাস মুঞি, তাঁর দাসের দাস ॥ ৮৪ ॥

caitanyera dāsa muñi, caitanyera dāsa Caitanya's servant I Caitanya's servant
caitanyera dāsa muñi, tāṁra dāsera dāsa Caitanya's servant I His servants' servant

84 "I am Caitanya's servant, Caitanya's servant! I am Caitanya's servant, the servant of His servants!"

এত বলি' নাচে, গায়, হুঙ্কার গম্ভীর । ক্ষণেকে বসিলা আচার্য্য হৈঞা সুস্থির ॥ ৮৫ ॥ eta bali' nāce, gāya, huṅkāra gambhīra so saying He dances sings roars deep kṣaṇeke vasilā ācārya haiñā susthira

in a moment sat down the Ācārya becoming calm

85 Saying this, He danced and sang with deep roars, and a moment later the Ācārya sat down, grown calm.

Baladeva and all His aṁśa-avatāras regard Themselves as servants of Kṛṣṇa

—

ভক্ত-অভিমান মূল শ্রীবলরামে । সেই ভাবে অনুগত তাঁর অংশগণে ॥ ৮৬ ॥

bhakta-abhimāna mūla śrī-balarāme
the devotee's self-conception the root in Śrī Balarāma sei bhāve anugata tāṁra aṁśa-gaṇe that mood follow His parts

86 The conception of oneself as a devotee has its root in Śrī Balarāma, and all His parts follow Him in that mood.

(1) His avatāra Saṅkarṣaṇa regards Himself as a servant —

তাঁর অবতার এক শ্রীসঙ্কর্ষণ । ভক্ত বলি' অভিমান করে সর্ব্বক্ষণ ॥ ৮৭ ॥

tāṁra avatāra eka śrī-saṅkarṣaṇa
His avatāra one Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa bhakta bali' abhimāna kare sarva-kṣaṇa
a devotee as self-conception holds at every moment

87 One avatāra of His is Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa, who at every moment thinks of Himself as a devotee.

(2) His avatāra Lakṣmaṇa regards Himself as a servant —

তাঁর অবতার আন শ্রীযুত লক্ষ্মণ । শ্রীরামের দাস্য তিঁহো কৈল অনুক্ষণ ॥ ৮৮ ॥

tāṁra avatāra āna śrī-yuta lakṣmaṇa
His avatāra another the glorious Lakṣmaṇa
śrī-rāmera dāsya tiṁho kaila anukṣaṇa
Śrī Rāma's service he did constantly

88 Another avatāra of His is the glorious Lakṣmaṇa, who served Śrī Rāma at every moment.

(3) His avatāra the original Puruṣa also regards Himself as a devotee —

সঙ্কর্ষণ-অবতার কারণাব্ধিশায়ী । তাঁহার হৃদয়ে ভক্ত-ভাব অনুয়ায়ী ॥ ৮৯ ॥

saṅkarṣaṇa-avatāra kāraṇābdhi-śāyī of Saṅkarṣaṇa the avatāra in the Causal Ocean lying tāṁhāra hṛdaye bhakta-bhāva anuyāyī
His in the heart the devotee's mood accordingly

89 The avatāra of Saṅkarṣaṇa who lies in the Causal Ocean likewise bears the mood of a devotee in His heart.

(4) His avatāra Advaita also regards Himself as a devotee —

তাঁহার প্রকাশ-ভেদ, অদ্বৈত-আচার্য্য । কায়মনোবাক্যে তাঁর ভক্তি সদা কার্য্য ॥ ৯০ ॥

tāṁhāra prakāśa-bheda, advaita-ācārya
His manifestation distinct Advaita Ācārya kāya-mano-vākye tāṁra bhakti sadā kārya
in body mind speech His devotion always the work

90 A distinct manifestation of His is Advaita Ācārya, whose work at every moment is devotion to the Lord in body, mind and speech.

বাক্যে কহে, মুঞি চৈতন্যের অনুচর । মুঞি তাঁর ভক্ত — মনে ভাবে নিরন্তর ॥ ৯১ ॥

vākye kahe, muñi caitanyera anucara in words He says I Caitanya's attendant
muñi tāṁra bhakta — mane bhāve nirantara
I His devotee in His mind He thinks constantly

91 In words He says, "I am Caitanya's attendant," and in His mind He thinks at every moment, "I am His devotee."

জল-তুলসী দিয়া করে কায়াতে সেবন । ভক্তি প্রচারিয়া সব তারিলা ভুবন ॥ ৯২ ॥

jala-tulasī diyā kare kāyāte sevana water tulasī offering He does with the body service bhakti pracāriyā saba tārilā bhuvana bhakti spreading all He delivered the world

92 With His body He serves, offering water and tulasī, and by spreading bhakti He has delivered the whole world.

(5) His avatāra Śeṣa also regards Himself as a servant —

পৃথিবী ধরেন যেই শেষ-সঙ্কর্ষণ । কায়ব্যূহ করি' করেন কৃষ্ণের সেবন ॥ ৯৩ ॥

pṛthivī dharena yei śeṣa-saṅkarṣaṇa
the earth holds who Śeṣa-Saṅkarṣaṇa kāya-vyūha kari' karena kṛṣṇera sevana bodily expansions making does Kṛṣṇa's service

93 Śeṣa-Saṅkarṣaṇa, who holds up the earth, expands Himself into many bodies to serve Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.
Kāya-vyūha means the ten bodies. See verse 76.

All of Kṛṣṇa's aṁśa-avatāras are His devotees —

এই সব হয় শ্রীকৃষ্ণের অবতার । নিরন্তর দেখি সবার ভক্তির আচার ॥ ৯৪ ॥

ei saba haya śrī-kṛṣṇera avatāra these all are Śrī Kṛṣṇa's avatāras nirantara dekhi sabāra bhaktira ācāra constantly we see of all devotion's conduct

94 All these are avatāras of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, yet we always see Them conduct Themselves as devotees.

The supreme dignity of the bhakta-avatāra —

এ সবাকে শাস্ত্রে কহে 'ভক্ত-অবতার' ।
'ভক্ত-অবতার' পদ উপরি সবার ॥ ৯৫ ॥

e sabāke śāstre kahe 'bhakta-avatāra'
these all the scriptures call devotee-avatāras
'bhakta-avatāra' pada upari sabāra
the devotee-avatāra's position above all

95 The scriptures call all of Them devotee-avatāras, and the position of a devotee-avatāra is above all others.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhagavān descends into the material world to display His majesty. But for the welfare of the jīva, higher and more needful than all the pastimes of these Īśvara-avatāras is the exemplary bhakta-avatāra, who awakens in the jīva an understanding of how to serve [the Lord]. Trying to see the avatāras in whom majesty predominates through knowledge born of the senses, the jīva often comes to grief; but when he sees an avatāra of Bhagavān in the form of a devotee, his false ego cannot draw bad fruit from such an example. Many ignorant people, while being jīvas, call themselves "Vāsudeva" and the like, and after death take birth as jackals. Such a fate befalls precisely those who are bewildered and do not see the true nature of the bhakta-avatāras. False ego intoxicates the conditioned jīva with a craving for the majesty of Bhagavān and turns him into a Māyāvādī.

The behaviour of elder and younger between the aṁśa-avatāras and Kṛṣṇa, the whole (aṁśī) —

একমাত্র 'অংশী' — কৃষ্ণ, 'অংশ' — অবতার । অংশী-অংশে দেখি জ্যেষ্ঠ-কনিষ্ঠ-আচার ॥ ৯৬ ॥

eka-mātra 'aṁśī' — kṛṣṇa, 'aṁśa' — avatāra
the one and only whole Kṛṣṇa parts the avatāras aṁśī-aṁśe dekhi jyeṣṭha-kaniṣṭha-ācāra in whole and part we see of elder younger the conduct

96 Kṛṣṇa alone is the whole (aṁśī); the avatāras are His parts (aṁśa). And between the whole and the part we see the conduct of elder and younger.

An elder aṁśa-avatāra sees the younger aṁśī as master, and a younger aṁśa-avatāra regards himself as servant of the elder aṁśī —

জ্যেষ্ঠ-ভাবে অংশীতে হয় প্রভু-জ্ঞান । কনিষ্ঠ-ভাবে আপনাতে ভক্ত-অভিমান ॥ ৯৭ ॥

jyeṣṭha-bhāve aṁśīte haya prabhu-jñāna in the elder's mood in the whole is the Master's awareness kaniṣṭha-bhāve āpanāte bhakta-abhimāna in the younger's mood in oneself the devotee's self-conception

97 In the mood of the elder, the whole is conscious of being the Master; in the mood of the younger, the part thinks of Himself as a devotee.

Anubhāṣya.

A separated portion of a thing is called aṁśa, and that of which it is a portion is the aṁśī. The part of the aṁśī, the portion of the undivided, is contained within the aṁśī, within the undivided. The aṁśī is the master (prabhu), the aṁśa is the devotee (bhakta). The relationship of "master" and "devotee" includes the distinction of elder and younger, greater and lesser: the greater is called "prabhu," the lesser "bhakta." The aṁśī is Kṛṣṇa; the aṁśas are Baladeva and the manifestations of Mahā-Viṣṇu who share His nature. Kṛṣṇa regards Himself as the Lord, and Baladeva and the others regard Themselves as devotees.

With Kṛṣṇa the devotee receives the highest honour —

কৃষ্ণের সমতা হৈতে বড় ভক্তপদ । আত্মা হৈতে কৃষ্ণের ভক্ত হয় প্রেমাস্পদ ॥ ৯৮ ॥

kṛṣṇera samatā haite baḍa bhakta-pada than equality with Kṛṣṇa greater the devotee's position ātmā haite kṛṣṇera bhakta haya premāspada than His own self more Kṛṣṇa's devotee is beloved

98 Greater than equality with Kṛṣṇa is the position of a devotee, for Kṛṣṇa's devotee is dearer to Him than His own self.

Anubhāṣya.

The position of Kṛṣṇa's devotee, that is, the devotee's service to Kṛṣṇa, is higher than the idea of equality with Kṛṣṇa: for Kṛṣṇa loves His servant more than He loves His own interests. The best evidence of this is the verse of the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (9.4.68): "The sādhus are My heart, and I am the heart of the sādhus. They know nothing but Me, and I know nothing but them."

আত্মা হৈতে কৃষ্ণ ভক্তে বড় করি' মানে । ইহাতে বহুত শাস্ত্র-বচন প্রমাণে ॥ ৯৯ ॥

ātmā haite kṛṣṇa bhakte baḍa kari' māne than Himself Kṛṣṇa the devotee greater as regards ihāte bahuta śāstra-vacana pramāṇe of this many scriptures' words are the proof

99 Kṛṣṇa regards His devotee as greater than Himself, and many words of scripture prove it.

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.14.15)

ন তথা মে প্রিয়তম আত্ম-যোনির্ন শঙ্করঃ ।
ন চ সঙ্কর্ষণো ন শ্রীর্নৈবাত্মা চ যথা ভবান্ ॥ ১০০ ॥

na tathā me priya-tama not so to Me dear
ātma-yonir na śaṅkaraḥ Brahmā not Śaṅkara
na ca saṅkarṣaṇo na śrīr not and Saṅkarṣaṇa not Śrī naivātmā ca yathā bhavān not even My own self and as you

100 "Neither Brahmā, born of Me, nor Śaṅkara, nor Saṅkarṣaṇa, nor Śrī, nor even My own self is as dear to Me as you are." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.14.15)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
O Uddhava! Neither Brahmā, nor Saṅkarṣaṇa, nor Lakṣmī, nor even I Myself am as dear to Me as you, My devotee, are dear to Me.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa's words to Uddhava, the best of His devotees:

me (to Me) yathā bhavān (you, Uddhava) priyatamaḥ (the devotee), [so] ātma-yoniḥ (Brahmā) tathā na; śaṅkaraḥ tathā na; saṅkarṣaṇaḥ ca na tathā priyatamaḥ; śrīḥ (Lakṣmī) tathā na, ātmā tathā na eva (not even I Myself, My divine form, am so dear).

Only in the mood of a devotee does Kṛṣṇa taste His own sweetness —

কৃষ্ণসাম্যে নহে তাঁর মাধুর্য্যাস্বাদন । ভক্তভাবে করে তাঁর মাধুর্য্য চর্ব্বণ ॥ ১০১ ॥

kṛṣṇa-sāmye nahe tāṁra mādhuryāsvādana in equality with Kṛṣṇa is not His sweetness' tasting bhakta-bhāve kare tāṁra mādhurya carvaṇa in the devotee's mood does His sweetness relishing

101 In equality with Kṛṣṇa there is no tasting of His sweetness; it is in the mood of a devotee that one relishes it.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One who regards himself as Kṛṣṇa's equal does not taste His sweetness.

Thus ends the sixth chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

শাস্ত্রের সিদ্ধান্ত এই, — বিজ্ঞের অনুভব । মূঢ়লোক নাহি জানে ভাবের বৈভব ॥ ১০২ ॥

śāstrera siddhānta ei, — vijñera anubhava of the scriptures the conclusion this of the wise the experience mūḍha-loka nāhi jāne bhāvera vaibhava foolish people not know of the mood the glory

102 This is the conclusion of the scriptures and the experience of the wise; foolish people do not know the glory of this mood.

Anubhāṣya.

In sārūpya and the other kinds of liberation, and in viṣṇu-tattva, there is [a sense of] equality with Kṛṣṇa, so the sweetness of service to Kṛṣṇa is not tasted so [fully]. In the mood of a devotee there is no equality with Kṛṣṇa (no position of enjoyer), and so Kṛṣṇa's sweetness is fully realised, like the taste of food that is chewed. Ordinary people, out of foolishness and greed for mastery, are by their very nature unable to experience the highest limit of the servant's mood. Only those who are highly experienced and have entered deeply into the scriptures can understand this subtle subject.

Nityānanda, Rāma and the other Viṣṇus taste Kṛṣṇa's sweetness only in the mood of devotees —

ভক্তভাব অঙ্গীকরি' বলরাম, লক্ষ্মণ ।
অদ্বৈত, নিত্যানন্দ, শেষ, সঙ্কর্ষণ ॥ ১০৩ ॥

কৃষ্ণের মাধুর্য্যরসামৃত করে পান । সেই সুখে মত্ত, কিছু নাহি জানে আন ॥ ১০৪ ॥

bhakta-bhāva aṅgīkari' balarāma, lakṣmaṇa
the devotee's mood accepting Balarāma Lakṣmaṇa
advaita, nityānanda, śeṣa, saṅkarṣaṇa
Advaita Nityānanda Śeṣa Saṅkarṣaṇa
kṛṣṇera mādhurya-rasāmṛta kare pāna Kṛṣṇa's sweetness' nectar of rasa they drink sei sukhe matta, kichu nāhi jāne āna
in that happiness intoxicated anything not know else

103–104 Accepting the mood of devotees, Balarāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Advaita, Nityānanda, Śeṣa and Saṅkarṣaṇa drink the nectar of Kṛṣṇa's sweetness; intoxicated with that happiness, They know nothing else.

To taste His own sweetness, Kṛṣṇa Himself descends in the mood of a devotee as Gaura —

অন্যের আছুক্ কার্য্য, আপনে শ্রীকৃষ্ণ । আপন-মাধুর্য্য-পানে হইলা সতৃষ্ণ ॥ ১০৫ ॥

anyera āchuk kārya, āpane śrī-kṛṣṇa of others let it be the matter Himself Śrī Kṛṣṇa
āpana-mādhurya-pāne hailā satṛṣṇa
His own sweetness to drink became thirsty

105 Let alone others: Śrī Kṛṣṇa Himself became thirsty to drink His own sweetness.

স্বমাধুর্য্য আস্বাদিতে করেন যতন । ভক্তভাব বিনু নহে তাহা আস্বাদন ॥ ১০৬ ॥

svamādhurya āsvādite karena yatana
His own sweetness to taste He makes effort bhakta-bhāva vinu nahe tāhā āsvādana
the devotee's mood without is not its tasting

106 He strives to taste His own sweetness, but without the mood of a devotee it cannot be tasted.

Anubhāṣya.
Kṛṣṇa, the object of the devotees' worship, wished to know how the devotees taste His sweetness. Understanding that it cannot be tasted without accepting the mood of a devotee, He Himself became a devotee.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 4.137–158.

Tasting His own sweetness in the mood of a devotee —

ভক্তভাব অঙ্গীকরি' হৈলা অবতীর্ণ । শ্রীকৃষ্ণচৈতন্যরূপে সর্ব্বভাবে পূর্ণ ॥ ১০৭ ॥

bhakta-bhāva aṅgīkari' hailā avatīrṇa the devotee's mood accepting He became descended śrī-kṛṣṇa-caitanya-rūpe sarva-bhāve pūrṇa in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya in all moods full 107 So, accepting the mood of a devotee, He descended in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, full of every mood (bhāva).

নানা-ভক্তভাবে করেন স্বমাধুর্য্য পান । পূর্ব্বে করিয়াছি এই সিদ্ধান্ত ব্যাখ্যান ॥ ১০৮ ॥

nānā-bhakta-bhāve karena sva-mādhurya pāna in various devotees' moods He makes of His own sweetness drinking pūrve kariyāchi ei siddhānta vyākhyāna before I have made of this conclusion the explanation

108 In the moods of various devotees He drinks His own sweetness. I have explained this conclusion before.[9]

Anubhāṣya.
To taste the five different rasas — śānta, dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and madhura — Śrī Gaurahari accepted the mood of each, and so He is full of every mood. Accepting the moods of devotees who take shelter of different bhāvas, Gauracandra, full of every mood, drinks His own sweetness.

The mood of a devotee belongs to all the avatāras of Viṣṇu —

অবতারগণের ভক্তভাবে অধিকার । ভক্তভাব হৈতে অধিক সুখ নাহি আর ॥ ১০৯ ॥

avatāra-gaṇera bhakta-bhāve adhikāra of the avatāras in the devotee's mood the right bhakta-bhāva haite adhika sukha nāhi āra than the devotee's mood greater happiness is not other 109 All the avatāras have a claim to the mood of a devotee; there is no happiness greater than that of the devotee's mood.

Anubhāṣya.
All the avatāras of Viṣṇu are entitled to descend in the mood of a devotee for the sake of serving Kṛṣṇa. One who tastes [rasa] feels more happiness in serving the One who is served in the mood of a devotee than in the mood of Īśvara.

Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa is the original bhakta-avatāra —

মূল-ভক্ত-অবতার শ্রীসঙ্কর্ষণ । ভক্ত-অবতার তঁহি অদ্বৈতে গণন ॥ ১১০ ॥

mūla-bhakta-avatāra śrī-saṅkarṣaṇa
the original devotee-avatāra Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa bhakta-avatāra taṁhi advaite gaṇana devotee-avatāra among them Advaita is counted

110 The original devotee-avatāra is Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa, and among the devotee-avatāras Advaita too is counted.

Anubhāṣya.
Advaita Prabhu is viṣṇu-tattva, yet He displayed the pastimes of a servant befitting an associate of Śrī Caitanya. Regarding Himself as a servant is precisely what makes a viṣṇu-tattva a bhakta-avatāra. Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa in Mahā-Vaikuṇṭha, though He abides as the Īśvara of the catur-vyūha, is the original bhakta-avatāra. From Him [comes] Mahā-Viṣṇu in the Causal Waters, and through the differences of His manifestations we learn of [His] glance (īkṣaṇa) in the efficient and material [causes]. Therefore Śrī Advaitācārya, the avatāra of Mahā-Viṣṇu, is Śrī viṣṇu-tattva. All the manifestations of Saṅkarṣaṇa are engaged in the service of Kṛṣṇa, the svayaṁ-rūpa — therefore Advaita Prabhu too is a servant of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa, that is, a bhakta-avatāra.

The glory of Advaita Prabhu —

অদ্বৈত-আচার্য্য গোসাঞির মহিমা অপার । যাঁহার হুঙ্কারে কৈল চৈতন্যাবতার ॥ ১১১ ॥

advaita-ācārya gosāñira mahimā apāra Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi's glory boundless yāṁhāra huṅkāre kaila caitanyāvatāra
by whose roar was made Caitanya's descent

111 The glory of Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is boundless: it was by His roar that Caitanya descended.

সঙ্কীর্ত্তন প্রচারিয়া সব জগৎ তারিল ৷ অদ্বৈত-প্রসাদে লোক প্রেমধন পাইল ॥ ১১২ ॥

saṅkīrtana pracāriyā saba jagat tārila saṅkīrtana spreading all the world He delivered advaita-prasāde loka prema-dhana pāila
by Advaita's grace people the treasure of prema obtained

112 By spreading saṅkīrtana He delivered the whole world; by Advaita's grace people obtained the treasure of prema.

অদ্বৈত-মহিমা অনন্ত কে পারে কহিতে ৷ সেই লিখি, যেই শুনি মহাজন হৈতে ॥ ১১৩ ॥

advaita-mahimā ananta ke pāre kahite Advaita's glory endless who can tell sei likhi, yei śuni mahājana haite that I write which I have heard great souls from 113 Who can tell the endless glory of Advaita? I write only what I have heard from great souls.

Homage to Ācārya Prabhu —

আচার্য্য-চরণে মোর কোটি নমস্কার ৷ ইথে কিছু অপরাধ না লবে আমার ॥ ১১৪ ॥

ācārya-caraṇe mora koṭi namaskāra at the Ācārya's feet my millions of obeisances ithe kichu aparādha nā labe āmāra
in this any offence not may He take mine

114 Millions of times I bow at the Ācārya's feet. May He not count any offence of mine in this.

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the sixth chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

তোমার মহিমা — কোটিসমুদ্র অগাধ । তাহার ইয়ত্তা কহি — এ বড় অপরাধ ॥ ১১৫ ॥

tomāra mahimā — koṭi-samudra agādha
Your glory (like) millions of oceans fathomless tāhāra iyattā kahi — e baḍa aparādha its measure I tell this great offence

115 Your glory is as fathomless as millions of oceans; to speak of its measure is a great offence.

জয় জয় জয় শ্রীঅদ্বৈত আচার্য্য । জয় জয় শ্রীচৈতন্য, নিত্যানন্দ আর্য্য ॥ ১১৬ ॥

jaya jaya jaya śrī-advaita ācārya glory glory glory to Śrī Advaita Ācārya jaya jaya śrī-caitanya, nityānanda ārya glory glory to Śrī Caitanya to Nityānanda the venerable

116 Glory, glory, glory to Śrī Advaita Ācārya! Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya and to the venerable Nityānanda!

দুই শ্লোকে কহিল অদ্বৈত-তত্ত্বনিরূপণ । পঞ্চতত্ত্বের বিচার কিছু শুন, ভক্তগণ ॥ ১১৭ ॥

dui śloke kahila advaita-tattva-nirūpaṇa in two verses I have told of Advaita's truth the determination pañca-tattvera vicāra kichu śuna, bhakta-gaṇa of the Pañca-tattva the consideration a little hear O devotees

117 In two verses I have set out the truth of Advaita. Now, O devotees, hear something of the Pañca-tattva.

শ্রীরূপ-রঘুনাথ-পদে যার আশ । চৈতন্যচরিতামৃত কহে কৃষ্ণদাস ॥ ১১৮ ॥

śrī-rūpa-raghunātha-pade yāra āśa Śrī Rūpa's, Raghunātha's at the feet whose hope caitanya-caritāmṛta kahe kṛṣṇadāsa
"Caitanya-caritāmṛta" narrates Kṛṣṇadāsa

118 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. The same verse as Ādi 1.12. The edition ascribes verses 6.4–6.5 to the diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara («শ্রীস্বরূপগোস্বামি-কড়চায় শ্লোক»; heading: "explanation of the twelfth and thirteenth of the first fourteen verses of the Ādi"). ↩
2. The same verse as Ādi 1.13. ↩
3. The same verse as Ādi 2.30 and 3.68 (Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: "see Ādi 2.30", where the Anubhāṣya explains the three meanings of the name Nārāyaṇa). Here the author cites it for the word aṅgam, "part": Nārāyaṇa is Your aṅga, that is, Your aṁśa (6.21). ↩
4. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «তুলসীদলে» ("with tulasī leaves"; another reading: «তুলসীজলে», "with tulasī and water"). ↩
5. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «নারদাদি» ("Nārada and others"; another reading: «নারদার»). ↩
6. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «হইল» (another reading: «হইলা»); the sense is the same. ↩
7. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «তাঁরা» (another reading: «তারা»); the sense is the same. ↩
8. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «কিঙ্করীণাং» (another reading: «কিঙ্করিণাং»). ↩
9. Before — in Ādi 4: on 6.105–6.106 the Anubhāṣya refers to Ādi 4.137–4.158. ↩
10. The edition reads nija-jana-sandoha (garva) ("of the multitude of His own people (pride)"); the verse has smaya (pride). Translated according to the verse. ↩
11. Manu-saṁhitā 1.5–9. ↩
12. Viṣṇu Purāṇa 1.1.31. ↩
13. Bṛhad-āraṇyaka Upaniṣad 4.4.22. ↩
14. Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.15. ↩
15. Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.5.15. ↩

16. Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 5.2. ↩
17. So in the edition; in the Sanskrit text of the Govinda-bhāṣya this point concerns the smṛtis of Manu and others. ↩
18. In Sanskrit, jñānāvarodhanāt, “because of an obstruction (checking) of knowledge”; the passage is understood in the same way in the translation of the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (22): “having given up the path of (dry) knowledge.” ↩
19. Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu 1.1.38. ↩
20. Dāmodarāṣṭaka 4 and 7. ↩
21. So in the edition; according to the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (10.46–47), Uddhava came to Vraja from Mathurā and returned there. ↩
22. Unclear place in the scan: after “speaks” the edition has śrīti (apparently a garbled pratīka of the verse). ↩