“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Antya-līlā

Chapter 19

The Ravings of Separation, the Rubbing of His Face against the Walls, and Other Pastimes

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

1 I bow down to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, the crown jewel of all who are devoted to their mothers — to Him who, raving in His madness, rubbed His face against the walls and sported in the spring garden.[12]

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra, and glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

3 In this way Mahāprabhu, absorbed in love for Kṛṣṇa, raved night and day in divine madness.

4 Jagadānanda Paṇḍita was very dear to the Lord, who delighted in all his ways.

5 Every year the Lord sent him to Nadia to console His mother, for He knew how she grieved in separation from Him.

6 “Go to Nadia and convey My obeisances to Mother. Touch her lotus feet on My behalf.

7 Tell her: ‘Please remember — every day I come and bow at your feet.

8 Whenever you wish to feed Me, I surely come and eat.

9 I gave up serving you and took sannyāsa. I became a madman and abandoned My duty.

10 Do not hold this offence against Me. I am dependent on you — I am your son.

11 I stay in Nīlācala by your order, and as long as I live I cannot leave it.’ ”

12 At the request of Paramānanda Purī, the Lord would send His mother the cloth prasāda He had received at the festival of Jagannātha’s cowherd pastime.[3]

13 He also took care to obtain the best of Jagannātha’s prasāda, and He sent it separately to His mother and to the devotees.

14 The Lord is the crown jewel of all who are devoted to their mothers. Even after taking sannyāsa, He always served His mother.[4]

15 Arriving in Nadia, Jagadānanda met Mother Śacī and gave her all the Lord’s messages.

16 He also visited Advaita Ācārya and the other devotees and gave them prasāda. After staying a month, he took leave of Mother Śacī.

17 He went to the Ācārya to take leave of him, and Ācārya Gosāñi gave him a message for the Lord.

18 The Ācārya spoke in riddles and veiled hints (tarjā-prahelī), which only the Lord could understand; no one else could.[5]

19 “Convey my countless obeisances to the Lord, and lay this submission of mine at His feet:

20 Tell the madman (bāul) that the people have gone mad. Tell the madman that rice no longer sells in the market.[6]

21 Tell the madman that the āul — the one mad with love — is no longer engaged in worldly affairs. Tell the madman that a madman has said this.”[7]

22 Hearing this, Jagadānanda began to laugh. Then he returned to Nīlācala and told the Lord everything.

23 Mahāprabhu heard the tarjā, smiled slightly and said, “That is his order.” Then He fell silent.

24 Learning of this, Svarūpa Gosāñi asked the Lord about it: “I could not make out the meaning of this tarjā.”[8]

25 The Lord said, “The Ācārya is a great worshipper, expert in the rules and regulations of the Āgama scriptures.[9]

26 For worship he invokes the Deity, and keeps Him present as long as the pūjā lasts.[10]

27 When the pūjā is over, he bids Him depart. I know neither the meaning of this tarjā nor what is in his mind.

28 The Ācārya is a great master of yoga, skilled in veiled sayings. Even I cannot fathom the meaning of his tarjā.”

29 Hearing this, all the devotees were astonished, and Svarūpa Gosāñi became somewhat downcast.

30 From that day the Lord's condition changed: His feeling of separation from Kṛṣṇa grew twice as strong.

31 Night and day He behaved and raved like one mad. Absorbed in the feelings of Rādhā, He felt the separation grow keener every moment.

32 Suddenly Kṛṣṇa's departure for Mathurā rose before Him, and He was seized by udghūrṇā, a symptom of divine madness.

33 Clasping Rāmānanda round the neck, He raved, and He questioned Svarūpa, taking him for one of His own friends (sakhīs).

34 Reciting the verse with which Rādhikā once questioned Viśākhā, He began to rave:

35 "O friend, where is the moon of Nanda's line? Where is He who is adorned with a peacock feather? Where is He whose flute sounds so deep, whose lustre is like the sapphire's? Where is He who dances, enraptured by the taste of the rāsa? Where is He — the medicine that saves My life, My treasure, My dearest friend? Alas, alas! Fie on the Creator!" (Lalita-mādhava, 3.25)[11]

36 "The line of Vraja's king is an ocean of milk, and Kṛṣṇa is the full moon within it: by His birth He has lit up the world. The eyes of the people of Vraja are cakora birds: they drink the nectar of His lustre constantly, and only by drinking it do they live.[12]

37 O friend, where is Kṛṣṇa? Let Me see Him! If I do not see His face even for a moment, My heart breaks. Show Him to Me quickly, or I cannot live![13]

38 The women of Vraja are night-blooming lotuses scorched by the sun of loving desire (kāma). Where is that moon of Mine who makes them blossom with the gift of the nectar of His rays — His hands? O friend, show Him to Me and save My life![14]

39 Where is the beauty of His crown, with its waving peacock feathers, like a rainbow in a fresh cloud? His yellow garment is a flash of lightning, His pearl necklace a line of herons, and His dark body outshines a new rain cloud.

40 Once Kṛṣṇa's body has met someone's eyes, it lives on in that heart for ever, clinging like the sap of the mango tree. It enters a woman's mind and will not come out, however hard she tries. It is not a body — it is a thorn of the seyākul bush![15]

41 His lustre, like a sapphire's, outshines the dark tamāla tree, and with it He maddens the world. With all his skill the Creator fashioned Him: he strained out the very essence of the rasa of love and mixed it with moonlight.[16]

42 Where is the sound of that flute which surpasses the thunder of a fresh cloud and draws the whole world to hear it? At its sound the people of Vraja rise and run like thirsty cātaka birds, and come to drink the streams of the nectar of His lustre.

43 He is My moon, the treasury of all arts, the great medicine that saves My life. O friend, He is My dearest friend. Yet My body lives on without Him — fie on such a life! What a mockery the Creator has made of Me![17]

44 "Why does he make one live who does not want to live?" — so anger and grief rose in Him against the Creator. Reciting a verse from the Bhāgavatam, He rebuked the Creator and reproached Kṛṣṇa:

45 “O Creator, there is no mercy in you anywhere! You join embodied beings in friendship and love, and then, before their desires are fulfilled, you pointlessly separate them. Your doings are like the play of a child.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.39.19)[18]

46 “You do not know the heart of love, and you labour in vain. Your doings are like a child’s. If I can only get hold of you, I will teach you such a lesson that you will never arrange such things again![19]

47 O Creator, you are very cruel! You bring together in love those who are so hard for each other to win. Why then do you part them before their desires are fulfilled?[20]

48 Merciless Creator! You showed Me Kṛṣṇa’s face and stirred a thirst in My eyes and mind. But I had drunk of it for only a moment when you snatched it away and carried it off. You have committed the sin of taking back what you gave.[21]

49 If you say, villain, ‘It is Akrūra who has wronged You — why are You angry with me?’ — then know that it was you who took the form of Akrūra and stole Kṛṣṇa away. No one else behaves like this.

50 But it is the fault of My own deeds — why should I be angry with you? There is nothing between you and Me. It is Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of My life, from whom I was never apart, who has become so cruel!

51 He whom I serve, having renounced everything, kills Me with His own hand. Kṛṣṇa has no fear of killing a woman. I am dying for Him, yet Hari will not even turn back to look at Me. In a moment He has broken our love.[22]

52 But why should I be angry with Kṛṣṇa? It is the fault of My own ill fate: the fruit of My sins has ripened. Kṛṣṇa is subject to My love, yet My mighty misfortune has made Him indifferent to Me!”

53 In this way Gaura Rāya cried in grief, “Alas! Alas! O Kṛṣṇa, where have You gone?” With the feelings of the gopīs in His heart, He lamented in their words: “O Govinda! O Dāmodara! O Mādhava!”

54 Then Svarūpa and Rāmānanda Rāya tried in various ways to console Mahāprabhu. They sang auspicious songs to turn His mind, and the Lord grew somewhat calmer.[23]

55 In this way half the night passed in His ravings. Then Svarūpa Gosāñi put the Lord to bed in the Gambhīrā.

56 Once the Lord was in bed, Rāmānanda went home, and Svarūpa and Govinda lay down at the door of the Gambhīrā.

57 Mahāprabhu’s mind was overflowing with love, and He stayed awake chanting the holy name.

58 Agitated by separation, the Lord rose in distress and began to rub His face against the walls of the Gambhīrā.[24]

59 His face, cheeks and nose were covered with countless wounds. Absorbed in His feelings, the Lord was unaware of it, and the blood kept flowing.

60 All night, in ecstasy, He rubbed His face against the walls, moaning low and muffled — goṅ-goṅ. Svarūpa heard it.

61 With Govinda he lit a lamp, and they went into the room. When they saw the Lord’s face, both were deeply grieved.

62 They brought the Lord to His bed and made Him lie down, and Svarūpa asked, “Why did You do this?”

63 The Lord said, “In My distress I could not stay in the room. I wandered about looking for the door, eager to get out.

64 But I could not find the door, and on every side My face struck against the walls. So I was hurt and bleeding, yet I could not get out.”

65 In the state of divine madness the Lord’s mind was never steady. Whatever He did and whatever He said was a symptom of that madness.

66 Then Svarūpa Gosāñi became anxious, and the next day he gathered the devotees and took counsel with them.[25]

67 All the devotees together entreated the Lord, and they had Śaṅkara Paṇḍita sleep beside Him.

68 Śaṅkara would lie at Mahāprabhu’s feet, and the Lord would stretch His legs out across him.

69 So he became known as “the pillow for the Lord’s feet”, just as Śrī Śuka once described Vidura:[26]

70 “So spoke the humble Vidura, the pillow for the feet of the thousand-headed Lord; and the sage Maitreya, urged on by him to speak of Bhagavān, began to speak, the hair on his body standing on end with joy.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.13.5)[27]

71 Śaṅkara would massage the Lord’s feet, fall asleep and lie there just as he was.

72 When Śaṅkara lay asleep with his body uncovered, the Lord would rise and wrap him in His own quilt.

73 Śaṅkara would keep falling asleep but quickly wake again, and then he would sit up, press the Lord's feet, and stay awake through the night.

74 For fear of disturbing him, the Lord could not go out, nor could He rub His lotus face against the walls.[28]

75 Raghunātha dāsa has described this pastime of Mahāprabhu in his Caitanya-stava-kalpavṛkṣa:

76 "In separation from His own Vraja, dear to Him as millions of lives, He raved constantly in His madness, His mind bewildered. Again and again He rubbed His moonlike face against the wall, and it was covered with blood from the wounds. That Gaurāṅga, rising in my heart, makes me mad with joy." (Caitanya-stava-kalpavṛkṣa, 6)[29]

77 In this way, night and day, Mahāprabhu remained immersed in the ocean of love, now sinking, now rising to the surface.

78 Once, on the full-moon day of the month of Vaiśākha, Mahāprabhu went to a garden at night.[30]

79 Taking the devotees with Him, the Lord entered the finest of gardens, called Jagannātha-vallabha.

80 The trees and creepers were in full bloom, as in Vṛndāvana, and the parrots, śuka and śārī, the cuckoos and the bees were calling to one another.

81 The breeze from the Malaya hills blew softly, laden with the fragrance of flowers, and like a dancing master it taught the trees and creepers to dance.[31]

82 Everything shone brightly in the light of the full moon; the trees, the creepers and all else glittered in the moonlight.

83 All six seasons were present there, with spring foremost among them. Seeing this, Gaura Bhagavān was delighted.

84 He had His associates sing the song "Lalita-lavaṅga-latā", and He danced and roamed about with them.[32]

85 Wandering in this way from tree to tree and creeper to creeper, He suddenly saw Kṛṣṇa beneath an aśoka tree.

86 At the sight of Kṛṣṇa, Mahāprabhu ran towards Him, but Kṛṣṇa, seeing Him draw near, smiled and vanished.

87 Having found Kṛṣṇa only to lose Him again, the Lord fell to the ground unconscious.

88 The garden was filled with the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa's holy body, and catching that fragrance, the Lord lost consciousness.

89 The fragrance of Kṛṣṇa entered His nostrils constantly, and as He relished it, the Lord was maddened.

90 The Lord recited the verse that Rādhā, longing for Kṛṣṇa's fragrance, spoke to Her friend, and He explained its meaning:[33]

91 “O friend, with waves of the fragrance of His body, which surpasses musk, He draws women to Him; from the eight lotuses of His body He spreads the fragrance of the lotus mixed with camphor; and He is anointed with a fragrant paste of musk, camphor, fine sandal and aguru. That Madana-mohana of Mine deepens the longing of My nostrils.” (Govinda-līlāmṛta, 8.6)[34]

92 “The fragrance of Kṛṣṇa’s body surpasses the fragrance of musk and the blue lotus. It pervades the fourteen worlds, draws everyone to itself, and blinds the eyes of women.[35]

93 O friend, Kṛṣṇa’s fragrance maddens the world! It enters a woman’s nostrils and stays there for ever; it seizes her and carries her away to Kṛṣṇa’s side.[36]

94 His eyes, navel, face, hands and feet are the eight lotuses on Kṛṣṇa’s body, and they give forth the fragrance of a lotus anointed with camphor.[37]

95 Sandalwood set in gold is ground and mixed with aguru, kuṅkuma, musk and camphor, and His body is anointed with this paste. Mingling with His body’s own fragrance, the paste seems to steal it away and hide it.[38]

96 The fragrance of Kṛṣṇa’s body steals the bodies and hearts of women; it sets their nostrils reeling, loosens the knots of their garments and undoes their braided hair. First it drives the women of the world mad, and then it makes them dance — such a robber is the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa’s body![39]

97 The nostrils conquered by that fragrance always long for it. Sometimes they get it and sometimes not. When they get it, they drink their fill and still cry, ‘More! More!’ When they do not, they die of thirst.[40]

98 Madana-mohana, that artful actor, has opened a market of fragrance and tempts the women of the world to come as customers. He gives the fragrance free of charge, but having given it, He makes them blind, and they cannot find their way home."[41]

99 In this way the fragrance stole the mind of Gaurahari, and He ran here and there like a bee. He went to the trees and creepers in the hope that Kṛṣṇa would appear, but He did not find Kṛṣṇa — He found only His fragrance.[42]

100 Svarūpa and Rāmānanda sang, and the Lord danced and was happy. In this way morning came. Then, by various means, Svarūpa and Rāmānanda Rāya brought Him back to external awareness.

101 His devotion to His mother, His ravings, His rubbing His face against the walls, and His divine dancing when the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa appeared to Him — these are the four pastimes that Kṛṣṇadāsa, the servant of Rūpa Gosāñi, has sung in this chapter.[43]

102 Having thus regained consciousness, Mahāprabhu bathed and went to see Lord Jagannātha.

103 Kṛṣṇa's pastimes are unearthly, and divine is the power of Him whose doings lie beyond the reach of reasoning.[44]

104 Even scholars cannot understand the behaviour of one in whose heart this love is always awake.

105 "The ways of the fortunate soul in whose heart this new prema has blossomed are very hard to understand, even for those who know the scriptures." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 1.4.17)[45]

106 When you hear of the Lord's unearthly behaviour and ravings, do not argue — hear with faith.

107 Evidence of their truth is found in the Śrī Bhāgavatam: the ravings of Śrī Rādhā in the Bhramara-gītā.[46]

108 So too with the songs of the queens at the end of the Tenth Canto: scholars do not understand their special meaning.[47]

109 Only one who receives the mercy of Mahāprabhu and Nityānanda, or of the servant of Their servants, comes to have faith in this.[48]

110 Hear this with faith: there is great joy in hearing it. It will free you from the threefold miseries and from the pains that false arguments bring.[49]

111 The Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta is ever new. As one hears it again and again, it soothes the heart and the ears.[50]

112 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. So in the edition: «মধুদ্যানে» (madhudyāne); by the rule of sandhi (madhu + udyāna) — «মধূদ্যানে», as in the Anubhāṣya. The sense is the same: "in the spring garden". ↩
2. Heading in the edition: obeisance to the Lord, full of matchless tenderness towards His devotee-mother and overwhelmed by mahābhāva in the Jagannātha-vallabha garden. Anubhāṣya: the madhūdyāna is the grove of spring pastimes called Jagannātha-vallabha. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: He rubbed His face against the walls of the house, and He sported in the spring garden to show His longing for love of Kṛṣṇa. ↩

3. Anubhāṣya: the cloth prasāda from Śrī Jagannātha's cowherd dress (gopa-veśa). Heading in the edition: at the request of Paramānanda Purī the Lord sends Śacīdevī cloth and prasāda in Navadvīpa. ↩
4. Heading in the edition: Bhagavān is subject to transcendental parental love (vātsalya-prema). Anubhāṣya: the mother gave this body, reared and nourished it; to devote it to the service of Kṛṣṇa is itself the purest and best service to one's mother. ↩
5. Heading in the edition: through the Paṇḍita, Śrī Advaita Prabhu sends Mahāprabhu a riddle (prahelikā). ↩
6. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the people have gone mad with love (prema), and in the market of love there is no longer any place to sell rice — that is, love; the āul, the bāul mad with love, is no longer engaged in worldly affairs; and Advaita, himself mad with love, has said this. The meaning: the purpose for which the Lord appeared has been fulfilled; now let it be as the Lord wishes. Heading in the edition: a hint that the purpose of Mahāprabhu's descent has been fulfilled and that it is time to conclude His pastimes. Anubhāṣya: there is a variant reading, "the people have become āul"; āul means "overcome [by feeling]", that is, full of love, and also "possessing nothing", "afflicted". ↩
7. Anubhāṣya: some explain kāye nāhika āula thus: in the work of preaching love there is no longer any disorder. ↩
8. So in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: jāniyā ("learning [of this]"). Other editions read jāniyāo, "though he knew [the meaning]": "Though Svarūpa Gosāñi knew it, he still asked." ↩
9. Heading in the edition: the Lord explains the riddle by a hint. ↩
10. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: āvāhana — inviting the Deity before worship; nirodhana — keeping the Deity present as long as the worship lasts; visarjana (27) — when the worship is over, the Deity is sent to another place. ↩
11. Heading in the edition: Śrī Rādhā, in separation from Kṛṣṇa, asks Viśākhā where Kṛṣṇa is to be found (citra-jalpa). ↩
12. Heading in the edition: the meaning of the verse — Śrī Rādhā, tormented by separation from Kṛṣṇa, describes the qualities of Kṛṣṇa, the life of the people of Vraja; to any melody (yathā-rāga). ↩
13. In the edition this verse is marked as the refrain of the song (ধ্রু). ↩
14. Anubhāṣya: the gopīs' loving desire (kāma) is the desire to meet Kṛṣṇa; their hearts, scorched by it, are like night-blooming lotuses under a burning sun, and Kṛṣṇacandra, the moon, gives them the nectar of His own rays — or hands (kara). ↩

15. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the nature of the seyākul thorn is that once it catches, it hardly lets go. Anubhāṣya: mango sap, once it sticks, is hard to remove. ↩
16. So in the edition: «জানি'» — a participle, “knowing”: the Creator, knowing his art, fashioned Him. Without the apostrophe («জানি», “I know”) the line would read: “surely the Creator fashioned Him”. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: chāni' — straining; sāni' — mixing. ↩
17. Anubhāṣya: kalā-nidhi — the abode of the sixty-four arts, and in the other sense the moon, full in all its sixteen digits (kalās); viḍambana — deception. ↩
18. Anubhāṣya: the lament of the gopīs of Vraja when they heard that Akrūra had come to Vraja to take Rāma and Kṛṣṇa to Mathurā. ↩
19. Anubhāṣya: pariśrama — the labour of creation and so on. ↩
20. In the edition this verse is marked as the refrain of the song (ধ্রু). ↩
21. Anubhāṣya: datta-apahāra — to take back what one has given; it is one of the sins that require atonement (prāyaścitta). ↩
22. Heading in the edition: reproaches to Kṛṣṇa in loving anger (praṇaya-roṣa). ↩
23. Heading in the edition: Svarūpa consoles the Lord with songs in keeping with His mood. ↩
24. Heading in the edition: the Lord’s divine madness — the rubbing of His face against the walls (udghūrṇā). ↩
25. Heading in the edition: after taking counsel with the devotees, Svarūpa chooses Śaṅkara Paṇḍita to be the pillow for the Lord’s feet. ↩
26. Heading in the edition: Śaṅkara’s service to Bhagavān — like Vidura’s service in the Dvāpara age. ↩
27. Anubhāṣya: Vidura asked Maitreya about the deeds of Svāyambhuva Manu and Śatarūpā, and in reply Maitreya began to speak of Hari. “The pillow for the feet” is one on whose lap Kṛṣṇa lovingly stretches out His feet: it is said that Kṛṣṇa came to Vidura’s house, laid both feet on his lap and fell asleep (see the Sārārtha-darśinī commentary). ↩
28. Heading in the edition: with Śaṅkara near, the Lord’s madness subsides. ↩
29. Heading in the edition: the Lord in separation from Kṛṣṇa, raving in divine madness. Anubhāṣya: goṣṭha is Vraja, dear to the Lord as countless lives; dadhat — “bearing”: the Lord’s face bore the blood from its wounds. ↩
30. Heading in the edition: one day, in the Jagannātha-vallabha garden, the Lord, overwhelmed by mahābhāva, shows the ten kinds of citra-jalpa. ↩

31. Anubhāṣya: the breeze itself carried the fragrance of the flowers, and besides, like a dancing master, it taught the trees and creepers to dance. ↩
32. “Lalita-lavaṅga-latā” is Jayadeva’s spring song from the Gīta-govinda (first canto), about Kṛṣṇa’s pastimes with the gopīs. ↩
33. Heading in the edition: the Lord’s citra-jalpa. ↩
34. Heading in the edition: the words of Śrī Rādhā, drawn by the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa — in the Govinda-līlāmṛta Rādhikā speaks them to Viśākhā. Anubhāṣya: the women drawn by Kṛṣṇa’s fragrance are the maidens of Vraja; the eight lotuses are His face, navel, two eyes, two hands and two feet. ↩
35. Heading in the edition: the meaning of the verse — the sweetness and power of the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa’s body; to any melody (yathā-rāga). ↩
36. In the edition this verse is marked as the refrain of the song (ধ্রু). Heading in the edition: the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa’s body conquers the gopīs. ↩
37. Anubhāṣya: the eight parts of the body are the two eyes, the navel, the face, the two hands and the two feet. ↩
38. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: hema-kīlita — set in gold; curi — concealment, hiding. Anubhāṣya: carccā — anointing; there are variant readings: mili’ ḍākā yena kaila curi (“mingling, it stole like a robber”) and kāma-devera mana kaila curi (“it stole the mind of Kāmadeva”). ↩
39. Heading in the edition: the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa’s body maddens the hearts of the gopīs. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: bāurī — maddened. ↩
40. Heading in the edition: the heart of the gopīs, thirsting to taste the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa’s body. ↩
41. Anubhāṣya: in this world He tempts the women of Vraja, the gopīs, as His customers. ↩
42. Heading in the edition: the Lord’s madness. ↩
43. Heading in the edition: the Lord’s devotion to His mother is described, and His udghūrṇā and citra-jalpa in separation from Kṛṣṇa. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: from this line many conclude that Kṛṣṇadāsa Kavirāja Gosvāmī was a disciple of Śrī Rūpa who received mantra from him, but other passages of the book make such a conclusion doubtful. Here Kavirāja unfolds rasa according to the teaching of Śrī Rūpa’s Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, and so he may have named Śrī Rūpa alone; or the sense may be that the author, Kṛṣṇadāsa, the servant of the Gosvāmīs, composed this line. ↩
44. Heading in the edition: the transcendental Kṛṣṇa, beyond the senses (adhokṣaja), and the pastimes connected with Kṛṣṇa (kārṣṇa-līlā) are beyond the reach of those who follow the path of reasoning, think themselves learned and are intoxicated with mundane learning. ↩

45. The verse is the same as Madhya 23.36 (there the edition reads «নবপ্রেমা»; the Anubhāṣya refers there as well); the translation follows the revised text. ↩
46. Anubhāṣya: see Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.12–21. Heading in the edition: the ravings of Śrī Rādhā in the Bhramara-gītā and the ten kinds of citra-jalpa in the songs of the queens. ↩
47. Anubhāṣya: see Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.90.15–24. Heading in the edition: even the greatest scholars, intoxicated with mundane learning and with knowledge gained through the senses, cannot grasp the transcendental rasa of separation (vipralambha). ↩
48. Heading in the edition: faith in the Lord’s transcendental pastimes of separation awakens only by the power of the mercy of the servants of the guru (Nityānanda) and of Gaurāṅga. ↩
49. Heading in the edition: only by following the feeling of separation that arises in the Lord in His separation from Kṛṣṇa is one freed from anarthas and attains love for Kṛṣṇa. ↩
50. Heading in the edition: the nectar of Śrī Caitanya’s pastimes — an ever-new elixir for the heart and the ears. ↩
