

Padas of Sri Chaitanya's Contemporaries

Songs of Sri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu's companions about His lilas

Translated from the Bengali

Contents

- Preface
- Part I. Padas of the Contemporaries
- Chapter 1. Padas Dated to the Lord's Lifetime (after Majumdar)
- Chapter 2. Padas of the Puri Period
- Chapter 3. Padas of Radha's Mood: Navadvipa, Sannyasa, Puri
- Chapter 4. Gaura's Form, Navadvipa, the Sannyasa and the Return
- Chapter 5. Praise of Gaura, the Pastimes of Navadvipa, Separation, and Nityananda in Gauda
- Chapter 6. Kirtanas and Gaura's Form in Navadvipa, the Lord's Ecstasy, Nityananda, Separation, and Nilachala
- Chapter 7. Praise of Nitai and Chaitanya, the Appearance of Nityananda and Gaura, Nimai's Childhood, the Abhisheka, Kirtanas, the Sannyasa, Nilachala, the Deities at Ambika, Prayers
- Chapter 8. Vasu Ghosha: the Gaura Avatara and Gaura's Form, the Lord's Kirtana and Bhavas in Navadvipa
- Chapter 9. Vasu Ghosha: the Lord's Bhavas, Separation, Nityananda, Prayers
- Chapter 10. Nityanananda and Balarama Dasa: the Gaura-avatara, the Kirtanas of Navadvipa, Gaura and Gadadhara, Shantipura
- Chapter 11. Balarama Dasa, Yadunandana, Kanu Dasa and Others: Praise of Gaura, His Bhavas in Navadvipa, the Sannyasa, Nityananda in Gauda
- Chapter 12. Vasu Ghosha: Padas from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — Appearance and Childhood, Sannyasa, the Lament of Nadia, Nilachala
- Chapter 13. Balarama Dasa, Murari, Yadunatha, Ananta, Ramachandra: Padas from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — from Krishna's Resolve to the Prayers
- Chapter 14. Vamshidasa, Nityanananda, Shivananda, Yadu, Govinda and Vasu Ghosha, Krishnadasa, Kanu Dasa and Others: Padas from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — Completing the "GPT Only" Group
- Chapter 15. Krishnadasa, Kanu Dasa, Vasu Ghosha, Yadunandana, Nityanananda, Yadu, Ramananda, Chaitanyadasa: the rest of the "GPT only" group and finds of a full check of signatures
- Chapter 16. Yadu: Two Gaura-padas from the Padakalpataru Found in the Full Check of PK
- Part II. Appendix: Padas Signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini
- Chapter 17. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — I: mangalacharana, Gaura's form, abhisheka, kirtana and dance, bhavavesha
- Chapter 18. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — II: kirtana and dance (conclusion), bhavavesha, the festivals of the year, prarthanas
- Chapter 19. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — III: the childhood pastimes of Nimai

- Chapter 20. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — IV: the appearance of Gaura, the end of childhood, the samskaras and the betrothal
 - Chapter 21. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — V: the wedding with Lakshmipriya and the beginning of the second wedding
 - Chapter 22. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — VI: the wedding with Vishnupriya; the beginning of the ashtakaliya
 - Chapter 23. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — VII: the ashtakaliya (the last part of the night, morning, day, evening)
 - Chapter 24. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — VIII: Gaura's night sleep; Nityananda
 - Chapter 25. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — IX: Advaita
 - Chapter 26. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — X: companions and followers
 - Part III. Nagari Padas
 - Chapter 27. Nagari Padas — I: Vasu Ghosha (padas from the Padakalpataru)
 - Chapter 28. Nagari Padas — II: Vasu Ghosha (padas from GPT), Nayananda, Yadu, Murari, Balarama Dasa, Chandrashekhara, Lochana Dasa
 - Chapter 29. Nagari Padas — III: the cycle of the Bhakti-ratnakara (Yadunandana, Narahari Chakravarti) and the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 39–45, 86–93)
 - Chapter 30. Nagari Padas — IV: the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 94–110, 120–123)
 - Chapter 31. Nagari Padas — V: the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 119, 124–145): the townswomen's dreams
 - Chapter 32. Nagari Padas — VI: the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 146–168): the townswomen's daydreams and the talk of the heavenly women
 - Chapter 33. Nagari Padas — VII: the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 169–180; sects. 2.4, 3.1, 5.1, 5.2): the quarrels of the heavenly women, the townswomen's words at the Lord's wedding; concluding note
 - Chapter 34. Nagari Padas — VIII: Lochana Dasa (22 padas from GPT, sect. 3.2, nos. 62–85, 116); concluding note to the section of nagari padas
-

Preface

About this book

A pada is a short song sung in kirtana; at its close the poet usually names himself (the signature, bhanita). Sri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu (1486–1533) was surrounded by poets: Vasu, Madhava and Govinda Ghosha sang before Him in Navadvipa and Puri, and Narahari Sarkar, Murari Gupta, Ramananda Vasu and others made songs about His lilas while He was still present. These padas are the earliest witnesses to the Lord in Bengali, and in them one hears the living voice of His companions: the rapture of the Navadvipa kirtanas, the grief of Nadia after the sannyasa, the longing for Nilachala.

The padas lie scattered through later anthologies. We have gathered those which research (above all Bimanbihari Majumdar, Sri-Chaitanya-chariter upadan, ch. 2) assigns to Mahaprabhu's contemporaries, established their text from several editions and translated them into Russian and English — 754 padas in all. The book has three parts.

- Part I. Padas of the Contemporaries (chapters 1–16) — the core of the collection: padas signed by the Lord's contemporaries, from the Padakalpataru, the Bhakti-ratnakara, the Gaura-pada-tarangini and other collections; first the padas Majumdar dates to the Lord's lifetime, then by poets and themes.
- Part II. Appendix: Padas Signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini (chapters 17–26). Two poets sang under this name: Narahari Sarkar of Srikhanda, the Lord's companion, and Narahari Chakravarti (18th c.), author of the Bhakti-ratnakara. Whose each pada is, is stated in its heading; how we distinguish the two poets is explained in the introductory note to chapter 17.
- Part III. Nagari Padas (chapters 27–34) — songs in which the women of Nadia speak of Gaura in amorous feeling (nagari-bhava). They are translated in full and faithfully to their authors, but the Gaudiya Vaishnava tradition — Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati — does not accept the worship of Gaura in this mood: Gaura is Krishna Himself in the mood and lustre of Radha, come to taste Her love as a devotee, not to enjoy. This is set out in the introductory note to chapter 27, and every sharp passage has a short note. Concluding notes to the section stand at the end of chapters 33 and 34.

Sources

The text of the padas is established from editions in the public domain; where a pada is found in several collections, the base text follows the oldest or most correct one, and the variants are given in the notes and in the Russian full edition.

- PK — Padakalpataru of Gokulananda Sena (Vaishnavadasa), 18th c.; ed. Satishchandra Ray, Bangiya Sahitya Parishat, 1915–1931, vols. 1–5 (the pada number is the running number of this edition; a "pallava" is its section). Ray records manuscript readings; their sigla are in the list of abbreviations.
- BR — Bhakti-ratnakara of Narahari Chakravarti (18th c.); eds. 1888, 1912/1913, 1960 (Gaudiya Mission), 2006. Its chapters are "waves" (taranga).
- GPT1, GPT2 — Gaura-pada-tarangini, compiled by Jagadbandhu Bhadra: 1st ed. 1903, 2nd ed. 1934.
- PS — Padamrita-samudra of Radhamohana Thakura (18th c.); ed. 1878.
- KGC — Kshanada-gita-chintamani of Vishvanatha Chakravarti (17th–18th c.); ed. 1925.

- GCC — Gaura-charita-chintamani of Narahari Chakravarti; ed. Haridasa Dasa, 1947. Its chapters are "kiranās" (rays).
- GCd — Gita-chandrodaya of Narahari Chakravarti; ed. 1948.

For dating and attribution we have consulted Majumdar, but his arguments are given only briefly, in our own words; the editors' prefaces and notes are not translated.

Principles of the translation

Faithfulness to the author. Each pada is translated as it stands — line for line, without rhyme, keeping the song's images and tone; nothing is added and nothing softened. Where an author speaks otherwise than the Gaudiya Vaishnava tradition teaches, the translation stays exact and a note explains how the passage is to be understood. The measure of interpretation is Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati.

Theology. The Lord is not subject to maya (His "maya" is yogamaya, His internal energy); He is not born but appears; the Deity is the Lord Himself, not an image; the prema of Radha and the gopis and the Lord's bhava are not worldly passion. Pronouns referring to the Lord are capitalised (Me, My, Mine; "I" is unchanged), also in His own speech and in speech in the mood of Radha.

Attribution and authority. The heading of each pada gives its source, its lila and, where needed, its attribution. We grade the reliability of the attribution on a scale A–D:

- A — a contemporary of the Lord with a reliable signature (confirmed by several witnesses or by Majumdar);
- B — a recognised later author of established authorship (above all the padas of Narahari Chakravarti from his BR, GCC and GCd: a later poetic elaboration of the lila accepted by the tradition), or a contemporary with a probable but not certain attribution;
- C — author not established or attribution disputed (the pada is known only from GPT, the signatures differ between sources, it is unclear which of the two Naraharis is meant);
- D — authenticity doubtful (a forgery, an anachronism, another's couplet bearing the signature).

The heading marks "probably Sarkar", "probably Chakravarti", "not established" concern the padas signed "Narahari" and say to which of the two poets we incline.

Numbering. The padas in each chapter are numbered; a couplet (in a tripadi, a stanza) is marked "pada.couplet": 1.1, 1.2, ... 2.1. The refrain (dhruva) is marked "(Refrain)" and counts as a separate unit; the kirtana singers' insertions in some padas of Lochana Dasa are given in brackets. Notes are numbered within each chapter; a reference "ch. 22, no. 7" means pada 7 of chapter 22, "n. 36 of chapter 22" — note 36 of that chapter. Labels like VG-..., NG-..., NS-..., LD-... are the numbers of our working catalogue of padas (from the initials of the poet or section); they are kept in the notes so that a pada can be found in the project materials.

Transliteration. Bengali words are given in IAST, with the inherent vowel written in full; ঐ is rendered ī (but v after a consonant: স্ব sv, দ্ব dv), ঐ̣ is m̐, ঐ̣̣ is ṃ̐, ঐ̣̣̣ is r̐, ঐ̣̣̣̣ is y̐.

How to read the full version

The book appears in two forms. The standard version gives the translation with notes. In the full version each couplet is preceded by:

- 1. the Bengali original (medieval spelling; Vrajabuli as in the source);
- 2. a transliteration in IAST;
- 3. a word-for-word translation;

- 4. the translation.

The readings of the witnesses are recorded in the notes; their full apparatus appears in the Russian full edition, and references to variants "in the full version of the book" point to it.

Abbreviations

- CC — Chaitanya-charitamrita of Krishnadasa Kaviraja (Adi, Madhya, Antya — its parts; the number is the chapter).
 - CB — Chaitanya-bhagavata of Vrindavana Dasa (Adi, Madhya, Antya).
 - Murari — Sri-Krishna-Chaitanya-charitamrita (Kadacha) of Murari Gupta (prakrama.sarga.verse).
 - Lochana — Chaitanya-mangala of Lochana Dasa (Sutra-, Adi-, Madhya-, Antya-khanda; references follow the parts of our translation).
 - GGD — Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika of Kavi Karnapura.
 - Bhag. — Srimad-Bhagavatam (canto.chapter.verse).
 - BRS — Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu of Rupa Gosvami.
 - PK, BR, GPT1, GPT2, PS, KGC, GCC, GCd — see "Sources".
 - PVP — Prachina vaishnava padavali, vol. 1, collected by Chandranatha Bandyopadhyaya, 1922 (a late anthology, not an independent witness).
 - M., Majumdar — Bimanbihari Majumdar, Sri-Chaitanya-chariter upadan; M-1961 — a reference to its pages and pada numbers (ed. 1961).
 - ka, kha, gha, cha (ক, খ, গ, চ) — manuscripts of PK in S. Ray's apparatus; P-R-Sa (প-র-স) — the manuscript of the Bangiya Sahitya Parishat.
 - VG-, NG-, NS-, LD- etc. — numbers of the working catalogue of padas.
 - IA — Internet Archive (identifier of a scan).
 - sect. — a section of GPT (e.g. sect. 3.2); no. — the number of a pada in a GPT section or in PK; pallava, wave, kirana — sections of PK, BR, GCC.
 - ch., no., n. — chapter, pada, note of this book.
-

Part I. Padas of the Contemporaries

Chapter 1. Padas Dated to the Lord's Lifetime (after Majumdar)

*Padas by Sri Chaitanya's companions which Bimanbihari Majumdar (*Sri-Chaitanya-chariter upadan, ch. 2) assigns to the Lord's lifetime, arranged in the order of events: from Nimai's journey to East Bengal, through the Navadvipa kirtanas of 1509 and the sannyasa, to the first years of separation (the padas of the Puri period follow in the next chapter). The text follows the Padakalpataru (PK), the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) and the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Govinda Ghosha — "gorā gelā pūrvadeśa..." (PK 1597)

*Lila: Vishvambhara in East Bengal; in Navadvipa His dear ones pine for Him. According to Majumdar it was composed while the Lord was away, before Gaya: if so, it is the earliest surviving pada about Gaura. Raga pahida.*¹

1.1. Gora has gone to the Eastern land, and His own people, in anguish, lament in so many ways.

Devi Lakshmi priya weeps — to hear it the heart breaks; broad day is darkness to her.²

1.2. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! Separation from Gauranga cannot be borne!
Once more we shall see Gora's face, and the sorrow will go — if only life holds out till then.

1.3. Hearing Shachi's piteous weeping, every living being weeps;
Malini consoles her.³
The townswomen of Nadia weep without cease;
neither clothes nor ornaments please them.

1.4. When, going to the bank of the Suradhuni, shall we see Gauranga on the way — after how many days will that auspicious day come?
We shall hear the words of His moonlike face, and the burning soul will be cooled...
Govinda Ghosha's body is wasting away.

1. Govinda Ghosha was the eldest of the three Ghosha brothers (Govinda, Madhava, Vasudeva), kirtana singers of the Lord (CC Adi 10, Madhya 13). The journey to East Bengal: CB Adi 14, CC Adi 16, Murari 1.11.5–16, Lochana (Chaitanya-mangala, Adi-khanda, part 12, vv. 61–103). Majumdar's argument: the pada has no hint of Nimai's divinity or of kirtana — the poet knows Him only as a youth he has seen on the bank of the Ganga; such simplicity is natural only in verses made before the change at Gaya. In PK the pada stands as a gaura-chandrika (prelude) to the section on "distant separation" (Krishna's departure for Mathura).

2. Lakshmi priya was the Lord's first wife. According to CB (Adi 14) and Murari (1.11.17–20), while the Lord was in East Bengal she left this world, bitten by the "serpent of separation"; the pada finds her still alive, pining for her husband.

3. Malini, the wife of Srivasa Pandita, was a close friend of Shachi.

2. Vasu Ghosha — "śaṅkha dundubhi-nāda..." (BR, p. 893; PK 1536)

*Lila: the abhisheka-bathing of the Lord in Srivasa's house (the mahaprakasha), 1509. According to Majumdar, the song of an eyewitness; raga bhupali (PK), suhai (BR).*⁴

2.1. Conchs and the roll of kettledrums sound melodiously:
the companions perform the abhisheka of Gorachand.

2.2. Fragrant sandal on the stone, incense, lamps alight;
the women of the town bring platters of arghya.⁵

2.3. All the people of Nadia look on and rejoice; again and again they cry "Jaya, jaya!" and sing songs.

2.4. All gaze upon the face of Gorachand;
Vasu Ghosha sings the sweetness of Gora's abhisheka.

4. Vasudeva (Vasu) Ghosha was the youngest of the Ghosha brothers and the most prolific of Gaura's singers. The great bathing of the Lord in Srivasa's house: CB Madhya 9; Murari 2.12; Lochana (Chaitanya-mangala, Madhya-khanda, part 9, vv. 93–113); Karnapura, Chaitanya-chandrodaya, act 1. In the Bhakti-ratnakara (wave 12) Narahari Chakravarti cites precisely this pada as an eyewitness's testimony, though he had Murari, CB and CC to hand — and on this Majumdar rests its early date. In PK it stands as a gaura-chandrika to the snana-yatra (the bathing of Jagannatha at the full moon of Jyeshtha).

5. Arghya is a respectful offering of water (with flowers, rice and durva grass). Majumdar notes that the pada keeps a detail the biographies pass over — the part women took in the rite.

3. Vasu Ghosha — "taila haridrā āra kuṅkuma kastūrī..." (PK 1537)

*Lila: the same abhisheka — the anointing, bathing and dressing of the Lord. Raga varadi.*⁶

3.1. Oil, turmeric, kunkuma and musk the women, one after another, apply to Gora's body.

3.2. Bringing scented water, they fill the pitchers and mix fragrant sandal and other things into it.

3.3. Crying "Jaya, jaya!" they pour the water over Gora's body; wiping the holy body, someone dresses Him in garments.

3.4. Behold, in the bathing pavilion — Gora, king of dancers!
With joy at heart Vasudeva Ghosha sings.

6. In PK (and in GPT1) this pada follows directly on the preceding one; Majumdar assigns it to the same abhisheka of 1509 (PK 1536, 1537, 1571 — the "historical" padas of Vasu Ghosha). "King of dancers" (nata-raya) is a frequent name for Gaura, the leader of the dancers in kirtana, among the kirtana poets.

4. Govinda, Madhava and Vasu Ghosha — "basilā gaurāṅgacandra ratna-simhāsane..." (PK 1538)

*Lila: after the abhisheka the Lord on the throne: the feast, Shachi's arati, the worship of the devotees. Signed by all three Ghosha brothers.*⁷

4.1. Gaurangachandra sat upon the jewelled throne;
Srivasa Pandita anoints His body with sandal.

4.2. Gadadhara placed a garland of malati on His neck;
by the radiance of His beauty all ten directions were lit.

4.3. Many offerings, every kind of sweet dish
He ate, sitting together with Nityananda.

4.4. Having chewed tambula, He sat on the throne again;
Shachi-devi came together with Malini.

4.5. Lighting the five-wicked lamp, she performed arati, waved [the flame] round Him and placed paddy and durva on His head.⁸

4.6. At that moment all shower Him with flowers;
Advaita Acharya offers tulasi and sandal.

4.7. Gods and men come together to see it;
Nityananda, sitting at His right, watches with delight.

4.8. This is the matchless lila of Gora's abhisheka:

Govinda, Madhava and Vasu floated away in prema.

7. Majumdar cites this pada together with the preceding ones as a description of the same abhisheka in Srivasa's house; from the signature "Govinda, Madhava, Vasu" (as in Vasu Ramananda) he infers that Govinda was the eldest. The Lord sitting on Vishnu's throne in Srivasa's house, accepting offerings and receiving the devotees' worship: CB Madhya 9; CC Adi 17.

8. Paddy (dhanya) and durva grass placed on the head are a Bengali mother's blessing.

5. Ramachandra — "pahu mora gaurāṅga rāya..." (BR, p. 919; PK 2186)

*Lila: the Lord in Navadvipa in the mood of Radha, with Gadadhara and Narahari beside Him. According to Majumdar, the song of an eyewitness (Narahari Chakravarti cites it as testimony). Raga shri (PK), suhai (BR).*⁹

5.1. (Refrain) My Lord is Gauranga Raya, whose glories Shiva, Shuka and Brahma sing!

5.2. He for whom Kamala ever pines,¹⁰ that very Lord raises His arms, weeps and cries out, "Hari!"

5.3. The body at whose sight Kamadeva became bodiless¹¹ is now ever grey with the dust of kirtana.

5.4. Now and again He starts up, crying, "Radha, Radha!" —

Gadadhara and Narahari stand gazing at His face.

5.5. His body thrills with the deep love of former days.

Says Ramachandra: who would not understand this play?

9. Who this Ramachandra was is unclear: Majumdar rejects Ramachandra Puri, Ramachandra the brahmana and Ramachandra Khan, and suggests Ramachandra Kaviraja of Nityananda's branch (not Narottama's friend, whom Narahari Chakravarti would not have passed off as an eyewitness). In BR (wave 12) the pada stands among testimonies to the Navadvipa pastimes, directly after Govinda Ghosha's pada on the Lord's dancing with Narahari. Narahari Sarakara Thakura (of Shrikhandā) was a singer of Gaura's moods; Majumdar confirms his presence with the Lord in Navadvipa from the padas of other contemporaries. Cf. CC Adi 17 (Radha's mood in Navadvipa).

10. Kamala is Lakshmi, the consort of Narayana. Here she is only mentioned as longing for the Lord; cf. Bhag. 10.16.36 (Lakshmi longs for the dust of Krishna's feet).

11. The Lord's beauty put Kama (Kamadeva, the god of love) to shame, and he was as if bereft of his body (Ananga, "the Bodiless", is his name). The "love of former days" (v. 5.5) is Radha's love for Krishna, which the Lord tastes in the form of Gaura. BR reads: "He gazes at the faces of Narahari and Gadadhara."

6. Murari Gupta — "gadādhara-aṅge pahu aṅga helāiyā..." (BR, p. 922; PK 2121)

*Lila: the Lord in Radha's mood, leaning on Gadadhara, listens to the song of Vrindavana. According to Majumdar, composed in 1509 under the immediate impression of Nimai's moods. Raga patamanjari (PK), kamoda (BR).*¹²

6.1. Leaning His body against Gadadhara, the Lord is lost in the song of Vrindavana's glories.

6.2. Now He laughs, now He weeps, unaware of the outer world; in Radha's mood His heart is restless — Gokula comes to His mind.

6.3. The grace of His form surpasses countless Kamadevas; millions of moons weep to see His face.

6.4. The three worlds melt in the rasa of these two.¹³

I know not for what fault Murari Gupta is left without it.

12. Murari Gupta, the Lord's companion from childhood, wrote the Sanskrit biography (the "Kadacha"); apart from it only a few Bengali padas are his. Narahari Chakravarti cites this one in BR (wave 12) among eyewitness testimonies. Majumdar's argument: the pada was written in 1509, when Nimai's moods were still new; the signature of the poet, lamenting that he himself is "deprived" of this rasa, is an eyewitness's humility. Cf. CC Adi 17.

13. "These two" are Gaura and Gadadhara. According to the Gaura-ganoddesh-dipika (vv. 147–153) Gadadhara Pandita is a manifestation of Radha in Gaura's lila; the Lord, Himself in Radha's mood, remembers Gokula beside him.

7. Paramananda (Gupta) — "gorā-tanu dhūlāya loṭāya..." (PK 2120)

*Lila: in Navadvipa the Lord, dressed as Natavara (Krishna the dancer), calls for Radha and asks for the flute; the companions caution the singers. According to Majumdar, an eyewitness's testimony from 1509. Raga kalyani.*¹⁴

7.1. (Refrain) Gora's body rolls in the dust.

Embracing Gadadhara, He calls, "Radha, Radha!" — and asks for the yellow garment and the flute.

7.2. Dressed as Natavara, His hair bound up in front and a peacock feather shining in it, standing thrice-bent, He cries again and again, "Hari!" — and Gora looks about for the kadamba branch.

7.3. Hearing of Vrindavana's glories, His mind maddened with rasa, [He asks,]

"Where have the sakhis gone, alas?"
Not grasping His mood, all the dear companions sing His glories, calling Him "Gauranga".

7.4. And someone says, "Take care! Do not sing songs of rasa:

if [prema] surges up, the earth will not hold it!"
In the joy of his heart says Paramananda:
"Who then will keep life in the body?"

14. The signature is "Paramananda". S. Ray ascribed the padas bearing it to Kavi Karnapura (Paramananda Sena); Majumdar separates six Vrajabuli padas by a certain Paramananda of Vrindavana and gives the rest, this and the next among them, to Paramananda Gupta, in whose house Nityananda stayed (CB, Antya-khanda) — Karnapura was not yet born in 1509. His argument for the date: only a close companion could know the detail "do not sing songs of rasa", and the Lord did not wear the Natavara dress in Puri — hence Navadvipa. The attribution to Paramananda Gupta is Majumdar's conjecture. Cf. Murari 2.15.3 (the Lord asks for His flute).

8. Paramananda (Gupta) — "śacīra nandana gorācānda..." (PK 2528)

*Lila: in Navadvipa the Lord in the mood of new love (anuraga); the same mood overcomes His companions. According to Majumdar, an eyewitness's pada.*¹⁵

8.1. Shachi's son, Gorachand, is the enchanting snare of all the worlds.

8.2. In the mood of new love He is lost to Himself:

incessantly tears flow from His lotus eyes.

8.3. His body is full of thrills, His speech falters; now He steadies His heart, now He is utterly unsettled.

8.4. Likewise the companions with Him are overcome [by this mood].

Says Paramananda: these are waves of prema.

15. Only in PK, as a gaura-chandrika to the section "anuraga". Majumdar regards this pada too as an eyewitness's: in it the Lord's mood overcomes His companions as well. (In the catalogue the first line of this pada had been given wrongly, from a line of a different, neighbouring song.)

9. Vasu Ghosha — "cām̐cara cikura cūrā cāru bhāle..." (BR, pp. 934–935)

*Lila: Nimai in the dress of Natavara (Krishna the dancer), 1509. According to Majumdar, something seen with his own eyes. Raga kamoda.*¹⁶

- 9.1. His curling hair is bound in a topknot above the lovely brow and wound with a garland of malati;
- 9.2. in it is set a peacock feather and a flowering sprig with its leaves.
- 9.3. His body outshines assayed gold, about His waist is a bright-coloured cloth;
- 9.4. a sandal tilaka shines on His brow,
a garland of forest flowers hangs to His knees.
- 9.5. Gorachand in the dress of Natavara — what a snare for the women!
- 9.6. Seeing this, Vasudeva weeps:
my heart can find no rest.

16. This and the next two padas of Vasu Ghosha are known only from the Bhakti-ratnakara (wave 12): Narahari Chakravarti introduces them as songs composed at the very places in Navadvipa that are shown to Srinivasa Acharya on his circuit of Navadvipa ("here, under this kadamba, Gora, dressed as Natavara and standing thrice-bent, played the flute"). Majumdar takes them as describing what was seen with one's own eyes in 1509. "A snare for the women" (9.5) is a poetic image of the Lord's irresistible beauty (Krishna the Natavara captivates the gopis); Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never so much as glanced at another man's wife, and the Gaudiya tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari".

10. Vasu Ghosha — "soṇari puruba-līlā tribhaṅga hailā..." (BR, p. 935)

*Lila: Gora, remembering His former lila, plays the flute on the bank of the Ganga. Raga dhanashi.*¹⁷

- 10.1. Remembering His former lila, He stood thrice-bent, and Gora raised the enchanting flute to His lips.
- 10.2. Gorachand blew into the flute's opening and, moving His fingers, played a most lovely song.
- 10.3. All the townspeople are enchanted to hear it; on the bank of the Suradhuni the trees and creepers thrill.
- 10.4. What can Vasudeva Ghosha say of it?
With the song of His flute Gora enchanted the world.

17. Cf. Murari 2.15.3 (the Lord asks for His flute); CC Adi 17 (the Lord in Krishna's mood in Navadvipa). The pada is also in GPT2.

11. Vasu Ghosha — "pūrvalīlā gorācām̐dera manete paṛila..." (BR, p. 935)

*Lila: the goshta-lila in Navadvipa — the Lord in the mood of a cowherd boy calls the cows; with Him are Nityananda, Ramai, Sundarananda, Gauridasa. Raga tori.*¹⁸

- 11.1. His former lila came to Gorachand's mind, and He began to call aloud: "Shangali! Dhavali!"
- 11.2. Sounding horn, venu and murali in triumph, shouting "hai, hai!" He keeps twirling the cowherd's stick.

11.3. Ramai, Sundara, and Nityananda with them, Gauridasa and all the others were filled with bliss.

11.4. With joy at heart Vasudeva Ghosha says:
Gorachand has revealed the goshta-lila.

18. Shangali and Dhavali are names of Krishna's cows ("the dark one", "the white one"); venu and murali are kinds of flute. Sundara is Sundarananda; Gauridasa Pandita (of Ambika-Kalna) — companions of Nityananda, cowherd boys of Vraja according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (Gauridasa is Subala). "Ramai" is probably Abhirama (Ramadasa), the cowherd Shridama according to GGD; the identification is not certain. Majumdar's argument: this pada explains why Nityananda's companions lived in the mood of cowherds (as CB describes) — they had seen the Lord's goshta-lila.

12. Vamshivadana — "śacīra nandana gorā o cāmḍa-bayāne..." (PK 2564)

*Lila: the same goshta-lila: Nityananda sounds the horn, Gauridasa and Abhirama come running. According to Majumdar, more detailed than Vasu's and bearing "the stamp of an eyewitness"; 1509. Raga bhatiyari.*¹⁹

12.1. Gora, the son of Shachi, with that moonlike mouth calls again and again: "Dhavali! Shangali!"

12.2. Understanding where His mood is leading, Nityananda Raya sounds a call with His mouth, imitating a horn.

12.3. Hearing the horn-call from Nitaichand's mouth, the devotees fall senseless with prema.

12.4. Up ran the pandita whose name is Gauridasa, and Abhirama runs, crying, "Brother, brother!"

12.5. Seeing Gauranga's form, all are seized by prema:
on His head a topknot with a peacock feather, the dress of Natavara, 12.6. anklets ringing on His feet, sandal on all His limbs.

Says Vamshivadana: "Come, let us go to Govardhana!"

19. Vamshivadana (Vamshi) was a companion of the Lord, and after the sannyasa the guardian of Vishnupriya and Shachi in Navadvipa. In PK the pada is a gaura-chandrika to the section "going out to the pastures" (goshta-gamana). Majumdar notes that the pada explains why GGD calls Gauridasa Subala and Abhirama Shridama. He dates it to 1509 (the OCR of his book has "1507", probably a misprint).

13. Vasu Ghosha — "gaurāṅgacāmḍera mane ki bhāba uṭhila..." (PK 1368; BR, pp. 935–936)

*Lila: the Lord in Krishna's mood remembers the dana-lila and "collects a toll" on the roads of Nadia. According to Majumdar, seen with his own eyes, 1509. Raga suhai (PK), kamoda (BR).*²⁰

13.1. What a mood arose in Gaurangachand's heart!
In the midst of Nadia Gora set up a toll.

13.2. A toll of what rasa does Gora, the jewel of brahmanas, demand?
Barring the way with a cane, He holds back the young women.

13.3. "Pay the toll, pay the toll!" Gora calls, and the women of the town were in a fix.

13.4. "In the Krishna-avatara I collected the toll" — that mood came back to His mind, sings Vasu Ghosha.

20. The dana-lila is Krishna's pastime of stopping the gopis, together with His cowherd friends, on their way to Govardhana and demanding a "toll" for their milk and butter; it is a lila of pure prema, not of worldly passion. Here the Lord, seized by Krishna's mood, re-enacts it: Majumdar sees in the pada the explanation of Gadadhara Dasa's mood ("who will buy Gora?"). The reading "taruṇī" ("young women", BR, PK) Majumdar holds correct, "taraṇī" ("boat", GPT) not. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never so much as glanced at another man's wife; the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta) does not accept the worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari".

14. Shivananda Sena — "holi khelata gaurakiśora..." (BR, pp. 944–945)

*Lila: Holi in Navadvipa: the Lord in Krishna's mood with Gadadhara; Narahari sings of Vraja, Mukunda, Murari and Vasu dance. According to Majumdar, apparently 1509. Raga kamoda; Vrajabuli.*²¹

- 14.1. The youthful Gaura plays Holi; in His embrace is Gadadhara, the beloved full of rasa.²²
- 14.2. Drops of sweat on His face, His body thrilling, under the weight of the mood tears stream from His eyes.
- 14.3. They sing of the rasa of Vraja together with Narahari; Mukunda, Murari and Vasu dance with delight.
- 14.4. Again and again He swoons in the Pandita's arms; seeing it, the companions are lost in joy.
- 14.5. The Lord laid out a bower-temple, falls to the ground and says: "Where is My flute?"
- 14.6. Where is Govardhana, where the Yamuna's bank?
Where are the malati, yuthi and champaka flowers?"
- 14.7. Says Shivananda, hearing the Lord's words full of rasa:
where the Lord and Gadadhara are, there is a mine of rasa.

21. Shivananda Sena of Kumarahatta was the father of Kavi Karnapura and later led the Gaudiya devotees to Puri every year (CC Madhya 1, Antya 12). The pada is known from BR (wave 12) and GPT; it is not in PK. Its historical value, according to Majumdar, is the list of the companions of the Navadvipa kirtanas; it is also confirmed by Vasu Ghosha's pada on Holi with Gadadhara (BR, pp. 942–943). Holi (dola) is the spring festival of colours at the full moon of Phalguna, the day of the Lord's appearance.

22. "The beloved" (rasavati nari) is Gadadhara in Radha's mood (GGD 147: Gadadhara Pandita is Radha), and the Lord is in Krishna's mood. This is the spiritual lila of Radha and Krishna remembered by the Lord and His companion, not a worldly feeling.

15. Govinda Ghosha — "prāṇera mukunda he ki āji śunilum ācambita..." (PK 1606)

*Lila: the first news that the Lord will leave Navadvipa; Gadadhara runs to Mukunda. According to Majumdar, late January 1510, a few days before the sannyasa. Raga pahida.*²³

- 15.1. (Refrain) "O Mukunda, dear as life! What have I suddenly heard today!
To say it, life departs; it will not leave my lips:
Sri Gauranga will leave Navadvipa!
- 15.2. We knew nothing. In the morning I came to Gora —
He sits with bowed head;
tears stream from His eyes and run in rivulets down His chest, the moon of His face has grown pale.
- 15.3. Seeing this, my heart was at once in turmoil, but there was no chance to ask.
After a moment He came to Himself; then I asked — and, hearing me, He gave this answer.

- 15.4. And I, overwhelmed, saying nothing to Him, ran to you.
So I have told you; do what you can —
I have no hope of living."

- 15.5. Hearing this, Mukunda weeps, his heart finds no rest, as he looks into Gadadhara's face.
Says this Govinda Ghosha: may this not happen!
Or else I shall die.

23. In PK the pada is headed "spoken by Pandita Gosvami", i.e. by Gadadhara Pandita: in the pada he tells Mukunda Datta of the Lord's words, and Mukunda weeps looking into his face; the signature is Govinda Ghosha's. Majumdar takes the heading as a tradition going back to Gadadhara himself and dates the pada to the end of January 1510. In PK it opens the section "separation to come". Cf. CB Madhya 26, Murari 2.18.17–23: the devotees learn of the Lord's decision to take sannyasa.

16. Govinda Ghosha — "hede re nadīyābāsī kāra mukha cāo..." (PK 1622)

*Lila: the day the Lord leaves Navadvipa for sannyasa. According to Majumdar, written on that very day (1510). Raga suhai.*²⁴

- 16.1. O people of Nadia! Whose face are you looking to?
Stretch out your arms — bring Gorachand back!
- 16.2. Who else will take you all into His arms?
Who, seeing the afflicted, will offer them prema unasked?
- 16.3. What a spear in the heart, alas, what a spear in the heart!
The darling of our life is leaving Navadvipa.
- 16.4. No more shall we go to Gauranga, no more shall we delight in kirtana.
- 16.5. The devotees weep, their hearts breaking;
only stony Govinda Ghosha does not die.

24. In PK the pada stands in the section "words of the devotees of Navadvipa in separation from Gaura". The Lord's leaving home at night at the end of Magha 1510 and crossing the Ganga towards Katwa: CB Madhya 28, CC Adi 17, Murari 3.1.6–7.

17. Vamshi(vadana) — "āra nā heriba prasara kapāle..." (PK 1855)

*Lila: Navadvipa's grief after the sannyasa; the weeping of Shachi and Vishnupriya. According to Majumdar, soon after the sannyasa (1510). Raga gandhara.*²⁵

- 17.1. No more shall I see on the broad brow the adornment of curls and tilaka, no more see on the golden lotus [of His face]
the dance of the wagtail eyes.
- 17.2. No more will He dance in Srivasa's house with His chataka-bird devotees, no more will He dance in His own house for us to gaze at Him.

17.3. Will the two brothers, Nimai and Nitai, ever dance together again?
I keep crying, "Nimai!" — but Nimai is nowhere.

17.4. Pitiless Keshava Bharati came and brought down a thunderbolt on our heads.
How, not seeing beautiful Gauranga, shall I stay on in Nadia?

17.5. Who is there now to bring back my Gaura Raya?
Hearing the weeping of mother-in-law and daughter-in-law, Vamshi rolls in the dust.²⁶

25. The signature is "Vamshi". The PK index ascribes the pada to Vamshidasa; Majumdar distinguishes Vamshidasa (a disciple of Srinivasa Acharya, 17th century) from Vamshivadana and assigns this pada to Vamshivadana, who looked after Shachi and Vishnupriya — hence the poet's grief at hearing "the weeping of mother-in-law and daughter-in-law". One manuscript (according to GPT) has a signature of Vasu Ghosha, so the attribution is not beyond doubt. Keshava Bharati was the sannyasi who gave the Lord sannyasa at Katwa; "pitiless" is the reproach of those who love, not a condemnation (cf. CB Madhya 28).

26. The mother-in-law and daughter-in-law are Shachi and Vishnupriya, the Lord's second wife.

18. Ramananda (Vasu) — "pāpī māghe pahum^{*} kayala sannyāsa..." (PK 1711; GPT1, p. 390)

Lila: longing for the Lord in the spring of 1510, soon after the sannyasa. According to Majumdar, written a few days after the sannyasa. Raga suhai; Vrajabuli.²⁷

18.1. In the accursed month of Magha my Lord took sannyasa — and then my hope of life departed too.

18.2. Day by day my body wastes, my eyes stream;
how many days without Gora shall I keep my life?

18.3. Now it is spring, and all are happy — yet this wretched, hard life will not leave me.

18.4. All the love my Lord showed me! —
I remember it, and my life hangs by a thread at my throat.²⁸

18.5. Says Ramananda: He is the lord of my life.
When shall I see Him again beside Gadadhara?

27. The signature is "Ramananda". Majumdar (who knew the pada only from GPT) argues that this is not Ramananda Raya (who did not know the Lord before the sannyasa and could not pine for Him beside Gadadhara) but Vasu Ramananda of Kulinagrama, a descendant of Maladhara Vasu, Gunaraja Khan (CC Madhya 15). His argument for the date: "now it is spring" — the pada was made in Phalguna–Chaitra, some weeks after the sannyasa taken at the end of Magha (January–February 1510). The reading "māghe" ("in Magha") is given by PK and GPT1; Majumdar (in the OCR of his book) has "māthe". In PK the pada is a gaura-chandrika to the section "separation in spring".

28. The reading "kaṇṭhahim^{*} ḍora" follows the PK scan; in GPT the line is corrupt. The sense: life "has risen to the throat" (is about to leave the body).

19. Shivananda Sena — "dayāmaya gaurahari naidyā-līlā sāṅga kari..." (GPT1, p. 382)

Lila: from Shantipura the Lord leaves for Puri and tells the devotees of Gauda to come to Him once a year. According to Majumdar, written right after the Lord's departure (1510). Raga mangala.²⁹

19.1. Merciful Gaurahari, having ended the Nadia-lila — alas, alas, what ill fate! — my Lord has gone to Nilachala, leaving this servant alone:
my worldly bonds were not cut.

19.2. What You have commanded I shall surely carry out, but how shall I live alone?
My sons and all my family will be like poison to me:
how shall I pass my days without You?

19.3. You told me to come to Nilachala with the pilgrims of Gauda at the year's end, for darshana.
How shall I endure, how pass a whole year, when a moment seems a hundred yugas?

19.4. Be merciful, Lord, grant me leave to see Your feet every day.
If You do not command it, O Lord Vishvambhara, Shivananda will take his own life.

29. The pada is known only from GPT (signature "Shivananda"). Majumdar's argument: the words "my sons and all my family will be like poison to me" and "how shall I live through the year until the next journey with the Gaudiyas" make sense only directly after the Lord's departure from Shantipura for Puri; later, when the journeys had become a custom, they would not have been written. The Lord's instruction to the devotees of Gauda to come to Puri every year: CC Madhya 3, CB Antya 1. "Will take his own life" is a hyperbole of separation, common in Bengali padas; cf. the devotees' threats to give up their lives in separation from the Lord in CC (Madhya 3).

20. Narahari (Sarakara) — "sonā śatabāna jini gaurāṅga āmāra..." (PK 1729)

*Lila: the first chaturmasya after the sannyasa — the devotees do not know where the Lord is. According to Majumdar, written during the first chaturmasya (1510). Raga suhai.*³⁰

20.1. My Gauranga outshines gold refined a hundred times — what is a chamara whisk beside that thick mass of His hair?

20.2. Why did He shave His head, to what land has He gone?
In whose house is He spending this chaturmasya?

20.3. I remember and remember, and my heart breaks:
where has Gora Raya gone, dear as life itself?

20.4. The devotees weep and heave sighs;
Narahari Dasa cannot keep his patience.

30. The signature is "Narahari Dasa". Narahari Sarakara Thakura of Shrikhandra was a companion of the Lord and a singer of His moods; Majumdar assigns to him the padas in plain Bengali known from PK (not only from GPT). In PK the pada is a gaura-chandrika to the section "separation in the rainy season"; Majumdar dates it to the first chaturmasya after the sannyasa (1510), when the Lord was travelling in the South. According to CC (Madhya 9) He spent that chaturmasya at Shrirangam, in the house of Venkata Bhatta.

21. Shivananda Sena — "jaya jaya paṇḍita gosāñi..." (PK 2355)

*Lila: Gadadhara Pandita gives up his vow to live in the Kshetra and his service of Gopinatha to follow the Lord to Gauda (1514). According to Majumdar, composed at that very time. Raga patamanjari.*³¹

21.1. Glory, glory to Pandita Gosani!
By the power of his mercy I sing Chaitanya's glories.

- 21.2. So does he love Gaurangachandra that He is famed by the name "Lord of Gadadhara's life".
- 21.3. Who can understand the love of one whose life is given to Gaura, who for His sake gave up life in the Kshetra and the service of Krishna?³²
- 21.4. Gadai's Gauranga, Gauranga's Gadadhara:
like Sri Rama and Janaki — one body.
- 21.5. As Radha and the Moon of Vrindavana are one soul, so Gaura and Gadadhara are waves of one prema.
- 21.6. Says Shivananda: in love for Her the Lord, dark of body, became golden and begs for prema.³³

31. Gadadhara Pandita (Gadai) took in Puri the vow of kshetra-sannyasa (never to leave the Kshetra) and served the Deity of Tota-Gopinatha. When in 1514 the Lord set out for Gauda (on His way to Vrindavana), Gadadhara followed Him, abandoning both vow and service, and only at Cuttack did the Lord persuade him to go back — CC Madhya 16. Majumdar's argument: later, knowing from CC that the Lord sent Gadadhara back, no one would have written "for His sake he gave up life in the Kshetra" — the pada is contemporary with the event (1514/15).

32. "The service of Krishna" is the service of the Deity Gopinatha in Puri.

33. "In love for Her" — for Radha: Krishna (Shyama, the dark one) took on Radha's golden form to taste Her love. Majumdar sees in the last verse an echo of Svarupa Damodara's teaching (CC Adi 1.5–6, 4). Gadadhara is Radha (GGD 147).

22. Vasu Ghosha — "ājukāra svapana-kathā śuna lo mālinī sai..." (BR, pp. 982–983)

*Lila: Shachi tells Malini her dream: Nimai, unable to stay in Nilachala, came home. According to Majumdar, an eyewitness's pada from the years of separation (about 1514/15). Raga kamoda.*³⁴

- 22.1. Listen, friend Malini, to the dream I had today:
Nimai came home.
Standing in the courtyard, gazing and gazing at the house,
He called me: "Mother!"
- 22.2. I was lying in the house — and, beside myself, came out, hearing Nimai's voice.
Nimai put the dust of His mother's feet on His head, and weeps and weeps: "Mother!"
- 22.3. "Captive to your love, I wandered about —
I could not stay in Nilachala.
To see you I have come to Nadia" — so He says, weeping.
- 22.4. "Come to me, my child!" — I lifted Him to my breast — and at that moment sleep left me.
Not seeing Him again, how my heart aches!
The night passed in tears.
- 22.5. Weeping and weeping, Shachi fell fainting to the ground;
Malini wails aloud.
What can I say — alas, alas! — this pain cannot be borne:
why does Vasu not die?

34. The pada is known from BR (wave 12): Narahari Chakravarti cites it in the account of Shachi's house, to which Nityananda comes. Majumdar values this and the next pada as testimonies which the later biographers left out, as if they "diminished" the sannyasa. Cf. CC Antya 3: the Lord says that He comes unseen to eat what Shachi cooks. Addendum

(chapter 05): the same pada is found in PK — no. 2270 (vol. 3, PDF p. 293, printed p. 282; 21st pallava, raga vibhasa; MS P-R-Sa no. 2374) and in GPT1 (p. 386, no. 11, raga pahida) — signed by Vasudeva Ghosha and with a different last stanza: "Since then my soul weeps, my heart finds no rest: what shall I do, tell me, what way is there? Says Vasudeva Ghosha: Gauranga is yours — otherwise would you always see Him?" Stanzas 22.1–22.4 in PK have minor variants (see the full version of the book). PK 2268 "biraha-bikala māya...", which the stage-1 catalogue took for this pada (VG-138), is a pada of Premadasa.

23. Vasu Ghosha — "āola nadīyāra loka gaurāṅga dekhite..." (GPT1, p. 413)

*Lila: the sannyasi Chaitanya comes to Nadia (1514/15); the people of Navadvipa and Mother Shachi see Him. Raga shri.*³⁵

23.1. The people of Nadia came to see Gauranga:

their hearts so overwhelmed with joy they cannot walk.

23.2. Seeing Gorachand's face after so long, their hungry chakora-eyes are intoxicated.

23.3. The devotees are lost in joy, gazing at Him;

the mother runs up and embraces Gorachand.

23.4. As if life had returned to a dying body:

Gauranga is in Nadia, sings Vasu Ghosha.

35. The pada is in GPT (GPT1, p. 413, no. 31) and in PK — no. 1991 (vol. 3, PDF p. 190, section "The joy of all Vraja: first Navadvipa", raga shri, reading "dhāola" — "came running" for "āola" — "came"; established in chapter 4); it is not in BR. Majumdar sees in it a testimony to the coming of the sannyasi Lord to the neighbourhood of Navadvipa on His way to Gauda (1514/15), told by Murari (4.14.3–11) and Lochana (Shesha-khanda); CC (Madhya 1) and CB (Antya 3) speak of His stay at Kuliya, opposite Navadvipa. The chakora is a bird that, in poetic tradition, feeds on moonlight.

24. Krishnadasa — "ṭhākura paṇḍitera bārī gorā nāce phiri phiri..." (PK 2358)

*Lila: the Lord and Nityananda at Ambika with Gauridasa Pandita; Gauridasa begs Them to stay, and the Lord tells him to serve Their Deities. According to Majumdar, a contemporary testimony that the worship of the Lord's Deity began in His lifetime. Raga bhatiyari.*³⁶

24.1. In Thakura Pandita's house Gora dances, whirling round;

Nityananda cries, "Hari, Hari!"

Weeping, Gauridasa falls at the Lord's feet and says:

"Never leave my house!

24.2. Grant my request — stay in Ambika:

this is my plea at Your feet.

If You go away, I shall surely die:

looking at whom shall I live then?

24.3. If You two brothers stay here with me, then everyone will be delivered.

Again I pray: do not leave me, Gaurahari — then I shall know that You are the saviour of the fallen."

24.4. The Lord says: "Gauridasa, give up such a wish:

serve My Deity and you will see —

I am present in it, know this for certain;

keep this true word of Mine."

24.5. Hearing this, Gauridasa heaved a long sigh and again weeps aloud.

Again the two brothers console him, yet his heart finds no rest.

- 24.6. Says lowly Krishnadasa, whose hope is Chaitanya's feet:
the two brothers stayed there.
Both were taken captive by Thakura Pandita's love — hence They are sung as "loving to Their devotees".³⁷

36. Krishnadasa was the younger brother of Gauridasa Pandita, of Nityananda's branch (according to Majumdar). Gauridasa Pandita (here "Thakura Pandita") was a companion of Nityananda, Subala according to GGD; at Ambika-Kalna he served the Deities of Gaura-Nitai. Cf. Murari 4.14.12–14. Majumdar's argument: the pada is a contemporary's testimony that the worship of the Lord's Deity began in His lifetime. The next pada of PK (2359) continues the story.

37. "The two brothers stayed there" — the Lord and Nityananda remained at Ambika in Their Deity forms, in which, by Their own word, They Themselves are present: the Deity is not an image but the Lord Himself, manifest through the devotee's love.

25. Chandrashekhara — "kṣaṇeka rahiyā caliyā uṭhiyā paṇḍita jagadānanda..." (PK 1854)

*Lila: Jagadananda Pandita comes from Nilachala to Navadvipa, to Shachi and Vishnupriya. According to Majumdar, written "before one's eyes", in the Lord's lifetime.*³⁸

- 25.1. After pausing a while, Pandita Jagadananda rose and went on.
Entering the town, he sees that in every house all the people are joyless.
- 25.2. The shops are not open, no one eats, no face has a smile.
The women of the town weep with stifled sobs, sitting apart, alone.
- 25.3. Having seen the town, he went and entered the Lord's house.
As if half dead, senseless,
Ai lies on the ground.³⁹
- 25.4. And the Lord's wife, forsaken, having lost the Lord,
lies in faded clothes,
tears flowing from her closed eyes.
- 25.5. All the servants and maids are silent;
seeing the traveller,
they ask him: "Tell us now, where have you come from?"
- 25.6. The Pandita says: "I have come from Nilachala.
Beautiful Gauranga sent me to see you all."
- 25.7. Hearing these words, with tearful eyes
they went and told Shachi, and another set off at once running to Srivasa's house.

25.8. Hearing it, Srivasa, Malini in delight, and all the people of Navadvipa, who had been as if dead, came running at once — and, coming, came back to life.

25.9. Malini came and gently raised Shachi and Vishnupriya and told them: "The Pandita has come; Gaurahari has sent him."

25.10. Hearing it, Mother Shachi looked up with a start and saw the Pandita.
She says to him: "My Nimai — how far off is He now?"

25.11. Seeing the utmost of love, the greatness of a mother's tenderness, the Pandita says, weeping:
"That jewel Gora, I know, age after age is subdued by your love."

25.12. Having told everyone of Gauranga's ways and doings, the Pandita stayed on in the town of Nadia, giving joy to all.

25.13. Chandrashekhara, no better than a beast, is fond of the poison of sense-objects:
to Gauranga's life, the supreme nectar, his heart does not take.

38. The signature is "Chandrashekhara"; by tradition (S. Ray) this is Chandrashekhara Acharya, the Lord's maternal uncle; the attribution is traditional but not proven. In PK the pada continues the preceding one (PK 1853, signed "Madhavi Dasa"), in which Jagadananda walks from Puri wondering whether he will find Shachi. Jagadananda's journeys to Shachi at the Lord's bidding; CC Antya 12. Majumdar's argument: the restraint in mentioning the Lord's wife (her name is not given — only "the Lord's wife") is a mark of a contemporary; Vrindavana Dasa does the same.

39. Ai ("mother") — so Mother Shachi was called in Navadvipa.

26. Narahari (Sarakara) — "rase tanu ḍhara ḍhara gaurakiśora bara..." (PK 2259)

*Theme: the truth of Gaura — Shyama became Gaura to play with Radha; the poet fears to reveal the secret. According to Majumdar, written before Svarupa Damodara's kadacha, i.e. in the Lord's lifetime. Raga pahida (GPT).*⁴⁰

26.1. The most excellent youthful Gaura, His body brimming with rasa —
His name is Sri Krishna Chaitanya.
To speak these hidden things pains the heart:
none but the devotees know them.

26.2. In the Dvapara-yuga Shyama, in Kali the name Chaitanya:
so Garga's words are written in the Bhagavata.⁴¹
I have reasoned in my heart: Shyama has become Gauranga, and the body of Radha and Krishna bears witness to it.⁴²

26.3. Within, the dark body; without, the golden:

wondrous is Chaitanya's lila!

To play with Rai and to share the rasa of the bowers, out of love He became golden.

26.4. This is not to be told: tell it, and who knows what may happen;

leave it untold, and the heart burns.

Reasoning in his heart and holding Gauranga in his heart, Narahari laments.

40. The signature is "Narahari"; Majumdar assigns the pada to Narahari Sarakara. In PK it stands in the section on the sannyasa, in GPT among the opening padas (mangalacharana). Majumdar's argument: this truth (Krishna became Gaura for Radha's sake) was later set forth openly by Svarupa Damodara in his kadacha and after him by Krishnadasa Kaviraja (CC Adi 1.5–6, 4); the poet's fear of revealing the secret would be unintelligible after that — so the pada was written in the Lord's lifetime.

41. Bhag. 10.8.13: Garga, naming Krishna, says that in other yugas He took white, red and yellow colours, and now has become dark (krishna). The Gaudiya tradition sees in the "yellow" (pita) a reference to Gaura.

42. The reading "sāthī" (PK, GPT) means "companion"; the sense may require "sākhī" (witness). Within He is Shyama (Krishna), without He is clad in Radha's golden radiance (cf. CC Adi 4).

Chapter 2. Padas of the Puri Period

*Padas by contemporaries on the Lord's life in Puri after the sannyasa, in the order of events: the arrival in Nilachala and Sarvabhauma's house, the darshan of Jagannatha, sankirtana on the seashore, Radha's mood in the company of Svarupa Damodara and Ramananda Raya, the states of separation (dasha), the Gambhira, and the divine madness of prema (divya-unmada). Majumdar (*Sri-Chaitanya-chariter upadan, ch. 2) regards the Puri padas of Narahari Sarakara, Vasu Ghosha and Vasu Ramananda as the testimony of those who came to the Lord every year with the pilgrims from Gauda. The text follows the Padakalpataru (PK) and the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Madhavi Dasa — "kalaha kariyā chhalā..." (PK 2239)

Lila: the arrival in Puri (1510). Making a quarrel His pretext, the Lord goes on ahead to Jagannatha; Nityananda and the devotees follow His footprints; at the Lion Gate Nitai questions the people of Nilachala; the Lord enters the house of the Bhattacharya (Sarvabhauma). Raga varadi (PK), suhai (GPT).¹

1.1. Making a quarrel His pretext, the Lord went on ahead to see the Lord of Nilachala.

All the devotees, their hearts full of grief, run after Him, following His footprints.²

1.2. (Refrain) Nitai, in the fire of separation, is as if in a daze.

From Atharanala, weeping and weeping on the road, goes Nitai, the moon of avadhutas.³

1.3. Coming to the Lion Gate, with pain in His heart, Nityananda Raya stopped.

Crying "Hare Krishna, Hari!" He asks the people of Nilachala:
"Have you seen a sannyasi?"

1.4. His golden form surpasses the gold of the Jambu river, a red cloth shines on His body;

brimming with prema, He sheds tears from both eyes and runs, crying 'Hari, Hari!'"⁴

1.5. Leaving the dress of a nagara, the Lord wanders from land to land — now He wears the garb of a sannyasi.

Madhavi Dasa says: the wondrous Gora Raya has entered the house of the Bhattacharya.⁵

1. The signature in PK is "mādhavī dāsa" (Madhavi Dasa). Who this poet was is not established: Majumdar does not name him among the contemporaries; some identify the poet with Madhavi Devi of Puri, the sister of Shikhi Mahiti, whom the Lord counted among Radha's closest maidservants (CC Antya 2), but there is no proof — the attribution is doubtful. GPT1 and GPT2 give the same pada with different readings in almost every line and with another ending — the signature of Govinda Dasa ("Govinda Dasa says: I saw His entry into Sarvabhauma's house"). In PK the pada opens the 21st pallava ("The sannyasa of Sri Gauranga, etc."). The events: CC Madhya 5–6; CB Antya 2; Murari 3.10–3.11; Lochana, Shesha-khanda.

2. The "quarrel": according to CC (Madhya 5) and CB (Antya 2), Nityananda broke the Lord's sannyasa staff, and the Lord, as if angered, went on ahead alone. The poet calls the quarrel a "pretext": the Lord Himself wished to come first to Jagannatha (and to Sarvabhauma).

3. Atharanala is the bridge of eighteen arches at the entrance to Puri; here, according to CC (Madhya 5), the Lord learned that His staff had been broken and went on ahead alone. An avadhuta is a wanderer above outward rules; so Nityananda is called.

4. Jambunada is the gold of the river Jambu, the finest gold (Puranas). The red cloth is the saffron garb of a sannyasi. According to CC (Madhya 6), on seeing Jagannatha the Lord fell senseless in the temple, and Sarvabhauma had Him carried to his house; when Nityananda and the companions came to the Lion Gate, people told them of the sannyasi who had been taken to the Bhattacharya's.

5. The first line of this couplet ("Leaving the dress of a nagara...") is absent from the "P-R-Sa" manuscript. "Nagarali" is the manner and dress of a nagara (an elegant young townsman): a hint at the Lord's Navadvipa form as it is sung by the poets of nagari-bhava. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord did not so much as glance at another man's wife; the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta) does not accept the worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari".

2. Madhavi — "nityānanda saṅgati mukunda gadādhare..." (PK 2240)

*Lila: the sequel to the previous pada — the companions find the Lord in Sarvabhauma's house; the people of Nilachala gaze at Him. Raga — the same (varadi).*⁶

2.1. Together with Nityananda, Mukunda and Gadadhara beheld Gaurachandra in Sarvabhauma's house.

2.2. His lustre is like molten gold, His cloth is red;
His two reddish eyes brim with tears of prema.

2.3. His arms reach to His knees, adorned with sandal;
His nose is high, His brow graced with the urdhva-tilaka.

2.4. Gopinatha, Vaninatha, Sarvabhauma, Kashi — all the people of Nilachala gaze at Gora's form.⁷

2.5. Nitai sits on the right, Gadadhara on the left:
all the followers of Gorachand have gathered.

2.6. Whoever sees Gora's face floats in prema;
Madhavi alone is left out — through the fault of Madhavi's own deeds.⁸

6. The signature is "mādhavi" (MS "ka": "mādhavī"; "P-R-Sa": "mādhava"); on the poet see note 1. In GPT (GPT1, p. 402) the pada follows the pada on Sarvabhauma seeing the Lord's forms. Cf. CC Madhya 6: Nityananda, Mukunda, Gadadhara (and Jagadananda) come to Sarvabhauma's house, where the Lord lies senseless.

7. Gopinatha Acharya, Sarvabhauma's brother-in-law (his sister's husband), had known the Lord in Navadvipa; Vaninatha Raya was the brother of Ramananda Raya; Kashi is evidently Kashi Mishra, in whose house the Lord later lived. According to CC (Madhya 10), the Lord met Vaninatha and Kashi Mishra after His return from the South; the poet gathers them into a single scene.

8. A formula of humility usual in a bhanita: the poet laments being deprived of what was given to others.

3. Narahari (Sarakara) — "dekhi gorā nīlāchala-nātha..." (PK 799)

*Lila: the darshan of Jagannatha — the Lord, in a gopi's mood, reproaches Krishna. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "reproaches to Krishna" (akshepanuraga). According to Majumdar, an eyewitness description unequalled in literature. Raga suhai.*⁹

3.1. Seeing the Lord of Nilachala, Gora, together with His own associates,

3.2. was overwhelmed by a gopi's mood,
and, reproaching, the Lord says:

3.3. "Without You I cannot live, yet You will not even turn round to look at Me!

3.4. You wove a snare of love —

You put the moon of the sky into My hands;

3.5. and now to see You is only tidings and hearsay," — so says Gora, overwhelmed by the mood.¹⁰

3.6. His reddish eyes are brimming with tears,

His face, so full of sweetness, has grown wan.

3.7. Wondrous is Gauranga's play —

Narahari Dasa has told a little of it.

9. The signature is "Narahari Dasa"; Majumdar ascribes the pada to Narahari Sarakara of Shrikhandā and places it among the Puri padas written in the Lord's lifetime. GPT (GPT1, p. 299, no. 23) has the same pada with minor variants. In Radha's mood the Lord sees Krishna Himself in Jagannatha — cf. CC Madhya 13 (at the Ratha-yatra: "You are the same, I am the same...") and Antya 14 (darshan at the Garuda-stambha). The gopi's reproaches are a manifestation of the highest prema, not of worldly resentment.

10. The reading "sandeśa" (PK, GPT) means "tidings", "news"; a similar line of Chandidasa reads "sandeha" ("doubtful"). The sense is the same: the meeting that was once so close has become unattainable.

4. Vasu Ramananda — "nāchaye chaitanya chintāmaṇi..." (PK 2082)

*Lila: the Lord dances in the sankirtana. According to Majumdar, Puri: the Lord is called here by His sannyasa name — "Chaitanya". Raga pathamanjari.*¹¹

4.1. (Refrain) Chaitanya dances — the chintamani gem; streams of tears flow down His chest like strings of pearls.

4.2. In prema, His voice choked, He rolls on the ground; suddenly, with a thundering cry, He rises to His full height.

4.3. Again and again He whirls, arms raised, and makes the fallen say "Hari, Hari!"¹²

4.4. He sings the name of Hari, ceaselessly repeating it — no one can fathom these rare signs.

4.5. His boundless glory and virtues the whole world sings;

Vasu Ramananda begs Him for the treasure of prema.

11. Vasu Ramananda was from Kulinagrama, a descendant of Maladhara Vasu (Gunaraja Khan); according to CC (Madhya 15), the Lord charged the people of Kulinagrama — Satyaraja Khan and Ramananda Vasu — to bring silk ropes every year for the Ratha-yatra. Majumdar regards him as a contemporary and an eyewitness. In GPT2 the pada is given twice (the section "dance and kirtana", nos. 17 and 74); in the second instance the first couplet is marked as the refrain. Cf. CC Madhya 11, 13 (the Lord's kirtanas in Puri).

12. The chintamani is the wish-fulfilling gem. "Makes the fallen say the name": the Lord gives the holy name to all without distinction.

5. Narahari (Sarakara) — "tribhubana-manohara śachīra nandana mora..." (PK 2241)

*Lila: from the sannyasa to Nilachala — the Lord leaves His former appearance and gives away the holy name and prema; sankirtana on the seashore with Svarupa, Rupa, Ramananda, Govinda and Paramananda Puri. According to Majumdar, a pada by an eyewitness of the Puri period. Raga bhatiyari.*¹³

5.1. The enchanter of the three worlds, Shachi's son, my Lord, who lived in the town of Nadia, gave up all His wealth and took sannyasa — and He is in Nilachala, near Jagannatha.

5.2. Those curling locks at the sight of which Rati's husband himself loses his wits — such locks He has had shaved; golden armlets and bracelets, necklaces of gems and pearls —
all that enchanting dress He has abandoned.¹⁴

5.3. Compassionate to all living beings, giving everyone the name of Hari,
He delivers the greatest sinners;
the prema rare even for the gods, which Lakshmi and others long for,
He gives away to the fallen.

5.4. With all the devotees, in the great joy of sankirtana,
He roams along the seashore;
Svarupa, Rupa, Ramananda, Govinda, Paramananda — all the companions have gathered.¹⁵

5.5. Narahari Dasa says: my Gaurahari became so out of love for Radha.
By such a flood of prema the whole world is blessed — why then am I alone left out?¹⁶

13. The signature is "Narahari Dasa". Majumdar names the pada twice: as PK 2241 (kirtana on the seashore) and, by a misprint, as "PK 1241" (the line about armlets and necklaces — his argument that the Lord's "dress" in the Navadvipa padas is no invention). GPT1 (p. 403, no. 4) has the same pada with minor variants. In PK it stands in the 21st pallava ("The sannyasa of Sri Gauranga, etc."), immediately after Madhavi's two padas.

14. Rati's husband is Kamadeva, the god of love. The shaven locks: the sannyasa at Katwa (CC Adi 17; CB Madhya 28; Lochana, Madhya-khanda).

15. Svarupa Damodara and Ramananda Raya were the Lord's inseparable companions in the last years (CC Madhya 2; Antya 14–20); Rupa Gosvami came to Puri (CC Antya 1); Govinda was the Lord's servant; Paramananda Puri, a disciple of Madhavendra Puri, lived with the Lord in Puri (CC Madhya 10). "Rupa" is absent from MSS "ka", "kha", "cha" ("Svarupa" without "Rupa"); "P-R-Sa" reads "Svarupa and others".

16. "Became so out of love for Radha": cf. CC Adi 1.6 and 4 — Krishna took on Radha's lustre and mood in order to taste Her love. A bhanita with the words "why then am I alone left out" is Narahari's habitual formula of humility (cf. PK 2259 in chapter 1).

6. Narahari (Sarakara) — "rāmānanda svarūpera sane..." (PK 820)

Lila: the Lord with Svarupa and Ramananda, in the mood of Radha who has heard Krishna's flute. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "reproaches to the flute" (akshepanuraga). According to Majumdar, Puri, an eyewitness. Raga suhini (PK), suhai (GPT).¹⁷

- 6.1. Sitting with Ramananda and Svarupa, Gora is lost in thought.
- 6.2. With a start He cries: "Friend, friend!" — and at times, falling silent, He rails at the flute.
- 6.3. And again He says to Svarupa:
"The flute destroys My family and My honour.
- 6.4. Its sound has entered My ears and stayed there — it has deafened Me."¹⁸
- 6.5. Narahari smiles within himself, seeing this play of Gauranga.

17. The signature is "Narahari"; Majumdar ascribes the pada to Narahari Sarakara and to the Puri period. In GPT1 (p. 299, no. 24) it follows directly on "Seeing the Lord of Nilachala" (PK 799). In the last years Svarupa Damodara and Ramananda Raya sustained the Lord with songs and verses answering to His mood (CC Madhya 2; Antya 14–17); on Krishna's flute heard by the Lord in Radha's mood, see CC Antya 15–17.

18. Radha's words: the sound of Krishna's flute draws the gopis out of their homes, making them forget their duty to family and their good name. This is the language of pure prema, not of worldly passion.

7. Narahari (Sarakara) — "āre mora gaurakiśora. puruba prema-rase bhora..." (PK 840)

*Lila: holding the hands of Svarupa Damodara and Ramananda Raya, the Lord laments: "No one understands My heart." In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "reproaches to a friend" (akshepanuraga). According to Majumdar, Puri, an eyewitness. Raga suhai.*¹⁹

7.1. Ah, my young Gaura — lost in the rasa of a former love!

7.2. Holding the hands of Svarupa Damodara and Ramaraya,

He cries: "Alas, alas!"

7.3. He speaks softly, His voice breaking, and again and again heaves long sighs.

7.4. "No one understands My heart," — says the Lord, beside Himself.

7.5. "Why did I let this love grow?

I am still alive — yet My heart is already lost."²⁰

7.6. Tears pour unceasingly from both eyes;

Narahari's face is sorrowful.

19. The signature is "Narahari"; Majumdar (whose text misprints "PK 804") cites the third line ("Svarupa Damodara, Ramaraya...") as proof that the pada describes Puri. GPT1 (p. 299, no. 26) has it with minor variants. A pada by Chaitanyadasa, PK 1985, opens with the same line — but there it is the joy of meeting: "I have found the young Lord of Vraja." Cf. CC Antya 14–20 (at night the Lord reveals His mood to Svarupa and Ramananda) and Antya 20 (Shikshashtaka 8: Radha's words).

20. Words in Radha's mood: love for Krishna in separation burns so fiercely that the heart seems already lost. The line conveys the force of vipralambha, not worldly despair.

8. Narahari (Sarakara?) — "prema kari kulabatī sane..." (GPT1, pp. 309–310)

*Lila: the Lord, in the mood of Radha as khandita (wounded by Her beloved's faithlessness), complains to Svarupa of Kanu, who did not come to the tryst. Only in GPT (section "khandita, mana"). Raga suhai.*²¹

8.1. Having loved a wife of a noble house —

how much deceit there is in Kanu's heart!

8.2. With the sound of His flute He gave the sign — and I came out of My house.²²

8.3. He said: "We shall meet again," —

so I came to the bower-grove.

8.4. In so many ways I adorned Myself, and in hope I spent the night in the bower.

8.5. But Kanu, deceiving Me, spent the night — in whose house?

8.6. Having said this to Svarupa, Gora weeps in wounded love, beside Himself.

8.7. Narahari, seeing this, weeps:
how is he to steady his heart?

21. The signature is "Narahari". The pada is in neither PK nor BR — only in GPT1 and GPT2 (identically); so by Majumdar's criterion (1959) its authenticity is not proven: padas known only from GPT he regards as unreliable. B. B. Majumdar in a later work (1961) accepts it as a pada of Narahari Sarakara, known from the collection of Advaitadasa Pandita Babaji. The language is simple, without Vrajabuli, and there is no sambhoga — this fits the marks of Narahari's genuine padas named by Majumdar. The khandita is one of the eight heroines of rasa-shastra; in Radha's mood the Lord speaks to Svarupa as Radha to Lalita (cf. CC Antya 14–19).

22. "I came" — in the original "mui āila" (a 3rd-person form with "I", so in both editions of GPT). The speech is Radha's; the poet conveys what the Lord says in Her mood. Radha's jealousy and wounded pride (mana) are a manifestation of the highest prema, not of a worldly feeling.

9. Narahari (Sarakara) — "gaura sundara mora..." (PK 853)

*Lila: the Lord, sitting in solitude, in Radha's mood reproaches Kamadeva. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "reproaches to Kandarpa" (akshepanuraga). Raga tudi (PK), pahadi (GPT1).*²³

9.1. (Refrain) My beautiful Gaura!
Why, sitting alone in solitude, does He shed tears?

9.2. His heart is shaken by love for Hari;
He speaks softly, His voice breaking:
"How much harm Manasija does — can the soul bear so much?"

9.3. The body of a weak woman he has tormented, entering the very depth of the heart."
Saying such words from the former lila,
He lowers His moonlike face.²⁴

9.4. Incoherently, as if in a trance, Gora says something — no one knows the secret of His heart;
He is ever absorbed in His former deeds, — sings Narahari Dasa.

23. The signature is "Narahari Dasa"; Majumdar mentions the pada among Narahari Sarakara's gaura-chandrikas in the akshepanuraga sections of PK; B. B. Majumdar (1961) also gives it as Sarakara's. GPT1 (p. 292, no. 51) has it with variants. No place is named; the mood of separation from Krishna that the pada describes is, according to CC, the mood of the last years in Puri (Antya 14–20).

24. Manasija ("born of the mind") is Kamadeva. The scriptures call the gopis' love "kama" in name only: "the prema of the gopis became known as 'kama'" (Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu 1.2.285; CC Madhya 8) — there is not a trace of self-seeking desire in it. "Words from the former lila": Radha's speeches in separation from Krishna.

10. Narahari (Sarakara) — "ki lāgi dhulāya dhūsara soṇāra baraṇa gaura-deha..." (PK 1902)

*Lila: the mood of separation — the Lord's body has grown wan (malinangata, one of the ten states of separation). In PK it is in the section "The ten states" (dasha-dasha). Raga malashi-vala (PK), suhai (GPT1).*²⁵

10.1. Why has Gaura's golden body turned grey with dust?

His seat and adornments He has given up entirely:
I know not for whose love.

- 10.2. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! Gaurangachand has grown wan!
Moaning "uhu, uhu", crying aloud,
He beats His breast with His hand and weeps.

- 10.3. His whole body is drenched with sweat,
He heaves long sighs.
Such is the way of Rai's love, — says Narahari Dasa.²⁶

25. The signature is "Narahari Dasa"; Majumdar quotes the line "Moaning 'uhu, uhu'..." among Narahari Sarakara's padas on the mood of separation (biraha). GPT1 (p. 311, no. 11) has it with variants. The ten states (dasha) of separation according to rasa-shastra (Ujjvala-nilamani): anxious brooding, sleeplessness, agitation, emaciation, wanness of the body (malinangata), incoherent speech (pralapa), sickness, the madness of prema (unmada), swoon (moha), and the last, extreme state. In PK the pada is headed: "Now — wanness of the body. Sri Mahaprabhu, overcome by this mood".

26. "The way of Rai's love": the Lord experiences Radha's separation from Krishna (CC Antya 14–20); this is no worldly pining but the highest stage of prema — mahabhava.

11. Narahari (Sarakara) — "soṇāra baraṇa gaurāṅgasundara pāṇḍura bhai gela deha..." (PK 1908)

*Lila: the mood of separation — "sickness" (vyadhi-dasha): pallor, trembling, sweat, tears, incoherent speech. Raga kamoda.*²⁷

- 11.1. Golden, beautiful Gauranga —
His body has turned pale;
as if from cold, He trembles again and again, remembering a former love.
- 11.2. He says nothing, only heaves long sighs —
like a painted doll;
from both His eyes tears stream like the currents of the Mandakini.²⁸
- 11.3. His whole body is drenched with sweat —
who knows from what fever;
now He sings, now He sobs,
He murmurs something incoherent.
- 11.4. Narahari says: my Gaurahari
gazes about like a beggar;
He cries "Hari, Hari", raising both His arms — who will fathom His heart?

27. The signature is "Narahari"; B. B. Majumdar (1961) gives the pada as Narahari Sarakara's. GPT1 (pp. 317–318, no. 17) has it with minor variants. In PK it is in the section "The ten states", under the heading "The state of sickness (vyadhi). Sri Gaurachandra, accordingly".

28. The Mandakini is the heavenly Ganga. "A painted doll": stillness (stambha), one of the sattvika-bhavas.

12. Vasu Ramananda — "āre mora gaurakiśora. sahachara-kandhe pahum'..." (PK 1924; GPT1, p. 318)

*Lila: the mood of separation — "the ninth state": leaning on His companions' shoulders, the Lord falls senseless and, naming Mathura, calls: "O Natha!" According to Majumdar, Puri. Raga pahida (GPT1).*²⁹

12.1. (Refrain) Ah, my young Gaura!

Resting His arms on His companions' shoulders, the Lord, in the ninth state, has lost Himself.³⁰

12.2. Fallen on the ground, He cannot utter a word;
no one dares to touch Him.

Golden Gaurahari says: "Alas, alas for Me!" —
His body has become thin as a thread.

12.3. With a fixed gaze, naming Mathura, the Lord weeps: "O Natha!"

Vasu Ramananda says: why is Gauranga so — I have not understood for what reason.³¹

29. The signature is "Vasu Ramananda". In PK the pada stands in the section "The ten states" (no. 1924), but the available scan of PK vol. 3 lacks printed pp. 147–150, and only the last couplet survives (on p. 151); the full text is given from GPT1 (no. 20, p. 318), where the pada follows the previous one (PK 1908). Majumdar (who misprints it "PK 1920") assigns the pada to Puri: the body "like a thread" and the weeping with the name of Mathura describe the mood of the last years, not of Navadvipa.

30. The ninth of the ten states of separation is moha, swoon (see note 25).

31. Radha, in separation from Krishna who has gone to Mathura, calls Him "Natha" — "Lord" (cf. CC Antya 19–20; Madhavendra Puri's verse "Ayi dina-dayardra natha...", which the Lord loved to repeat — CC Madhya 4, Antya 8).

13. Narahari (Sarakara) — "gambhīrā bhitare gorā rāya..." (PK 1643)

*Lila: the Gambhira — a sleepless night: the Lord laments, weeps, trembles, rubs His face against the walls and cries: "Where is the Lord of My life?" In PK — "lamentation in the state of mere sleeplessness" (kevala-jagarana-dasha). According to Majumdar, the quintessence of the Antya-lila of the *Chaitanya-charitamrita. Raga — the same as that of the preceding pada (PK).³²

13.1. In the Gambhira Gora Raya passes the night without sleep.

13.2. Again and again He laments, now He weeps, now He trembles.

13.3. Now He rubs His face and head against the wall — no one is beside the Lord.³³

13.4. Now He weeps, raising both His arms:
"Where is the Lord of My life?"

13.5. Narahari says: my Gora is lost in the love of Rai.

32. The signature is "Narahari"; Majumdar places the pada among Narahari Sarakara's Puri padas. Neither the archive.org OCR nor the new recognition of PK contains the text — it has been read from the scan (vol. 3, printed p. 30); GPT1 (p. 314, no. 5) and GPT2 have it with variants. The Gambhira is the small inner room in Kashi Mishra's house where the Lord spent His last years (CC Antya 6, 14–20).

33. According to CC (Antya 19), one night the Lord, in the agony of separation, rubbed His face against the walls of the Gambhira until it was covered with wounds; after that Svarupa asked Shankara Pandita to sleep at the Lord's feet. Here is the same state: "no one is beside Him".

14. Narahari (Sarakara) — "gaurāṅga-chāndera bhāba kahane nā yāya..." (PK 832)

*Lila: in solitude the Lord tells His companions: "I will throw Myself into the sea." In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "reproaches to oneself" (akshepanuraga). According to Majumdar, Puri: the pada foreshadows the Lord's fall into the sea. Raga tudi.*³⁴

14.1. Gaurangachand's mood cannot be put into words:

sitting in solitude, the Lord moans: "Alas, alas!"

14.2. His dear companions question Him —

He says: "I will throw Myself into the sea!"³⁵

14.3. "By My own will I began this cruel love:

disgrace has fallen on both families — and still life goes on."³⁶

14.4. Having said this, Gorachand sighs deeply; understanding His heart, Narahari Dasa speaks.

34. The signature is "Narahari Dasa"; Majumdar ascribes the pada to Narahari Sarakara and to Puri. GPT1 (p. 299, no. 25) has it with variants. In PK the pada stands as the gaura-chandrika to the words of Radha reproaching Herself for Her love of Krishna.

35. Instead of "into the sea", MS "ka" of PK, GPT1 and GPT2 read "into the waters of the Yamuna", MSS "cha" and "P-R-Sa" — "into the Yamuna". In Radha's mood the sea is the Yamuna to the Lord: according to CC (Antya 18), one night the Lord, taking the sea for the Yamuna, threw Himself into it, and a fisherman drew Him out with his net. The PK reading ("into the sea") points to Puri; the reading "into the Yamuna" conveys Radha's words.

36. "Both families" (du kule) — the father's family and the husband's; the words of Radha as parakiya. Her readiness to give up everything for Krishna is the highest expression of prema, not worldly despair.

15. Vasu Ghosha — "simḥadvāra teji gorā samudra āre dhāya..." (PK 1662)

*Lila: the divine madness of prema (divya-unmada): the Lord runs from the Lion Gate towards the sea, asking everyone: "Where is Krishna?", and falls senseless. In PK — the section "Divya-unmada. Here — Sri Mahaprabhu". According to Majumdar, an eyewitness's testimony whose vividness is matched only by Raghunatha Dasa. Raga suhai.*³⁷

15.1. Leaving the Lion Gate, Gora runs towards the sea, asking everyone: "Where is Krishna? Where is Krishna?"

15.2. All around, the devotees sing the glories of Hari, and in their midst a golden mountain rolls in the dust.

15.3. He falls headlong, He rolls on the ground; tall Gora falls senseless.³⁸

15.4. He lies on His back, foam comes from His mouth;

Vasudeva Ghosha's heart is breaking.

37. The signature is "Vasudeva Ghosha". Majumdar counts the pada among Vasu Ghosha's historical padas (the run to the sea in Puri). GPT1 (p. 314, no. 6) and GPT2 have it with minor variants. The Lion Gate (Simha-dvara) is the main, eastern gate of Jagannatha's temple. Cf. CC Antya 14 (seeing the sand hill Chataka-parvata, the Lord took it for Govardhana and ran towards it) and Antya 17–18; Raghunatha Dasa's Gauranga-stava-kalpataru. In PK (no. 1663) and GPT (no. 7) there follows a pada on how the Lord, coming to Himself, sees Svarupa and Ramaraya before Him: in PK it is unsigned, in the "P-R-Sa" MS it bears the signature of Govinda Dasa, in GPT that of Vasu Ghosha; it is not included in this chapter.

38. Falling, trembling, foam at the mouth, unconsciousness are sattvika-bhavas and manifestations of mahabhava, described in CC as well (Antya 14, 17); this is not illness but the working of the highest prema.

Chapter 3. Padas of Radha's Mood: Navadvipa, Sannyasa, Puri

*Narahari Sarakara's Navadvipa padas in which the Lord experiences Radha's mood (in the *Padakalpataru they stand as gaura-chandrikas to the sections on purvaraga, vasakasajja, vipralabdha and khandita) and which Majumdar (Sri-Chaitanya-chariter upadan, ch. 2) regards as descriptions of real moods seen by an eyewitness; padas by Ananta and Gauridasa on Gaura and Nitai, on the sannyasa and on Nityananda's "market"; then Puri and Navadvipa in the years of separation: Sarvabhauma, the waiting for the Lord and a dream of His return, Radha's mood in the company of Svarupa, the divine madness of prema. The text follows the Padakalpataru (PK), the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR), the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC) and the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Narahari (Sarakara) — "gaurāṅga ṭhekila pāke..." (PK 2122; BR, p. 924)

Lila: Navadvipa — the Lord in Krishna's mood: the Ganga seems to Him the Yamuna, a flowering garden — Vrindavana; He asks for yellow cloth and a flute and embraces Gadadhara. According to Majumdar — an eyewitness's pada (1509). Raga mallar (PK, KGC, GPT), ashavari (BR).¹

1.1. (Refrain) Gauranga is caught in a whirlpool:

absorbed in bhava, He calls, "Radha, Radha!"²

1.2. Seeing the Suradhuni, the Lord takes it for the Yamuna; seeing a flowering garden, He remembers Vrindavana.

1.3. In the mood of His former lila He stands bent in three places and asks for yellow cloth and a flute.³

1.4. Taking His beloved Gadadhara into His embrace, the Lord says in a faltering voice, "Where were you? Where were you?"

1.5. Understanding His mood, the Pandita stays at His left.

Narahari Dasa does not fathom this play.⁴

1. The signature is "Narahari Dasa". Narahari Chakravarti quotes the pada in BR (wave 12, p. 924) with the note "a song of Sri Narahari Sarakara Thakura" — the only pada signed "Narahari" in BR that he expressly ascribes to Sarakara, and Majumdar puts it first among Narahari's Navadvipa padas. It is also found in KGC (27th kshanada, as a gaura-chandrika) and in GPT1 (p. 280, no. 9); in PK it stands in the section "The form of Sri Gauranga, etc." In BR it is preceded by the words: "By this road Gora goes to the bank of the Suradhuni... He calls, 'Radha, Radha!'" Cf. CC Antya 18: in Puri the sea seems to the Lord to be the Yamuna.

2. Pak — a whirlpool, a noose: the Lord is as if drawn into the whirlpool of bhava. Suradhuni ("the river of the gods") is the Ganga.

3. The threefold-bending pose (tribhanga), yellow cloth (pitambara) and flute are Krishna's form; the "former lila" is His Vrindavana lila. Here the Lord is in Krishna's mood, while Gadadhara Pandita, according to the Gaura-ganoddesh-dipika (vv. 147–153), is a manifestation of Radha in Gaura's lila.

4. Krishna's left side is Radha's place. Instead of "the Lord taking into His embrace", PK manuscripts ka, kha, gha, cha, KGC and GPT read simply "taking into His embrace", BR — "clasping Gadadhara to His breast". The humble "does not fathom" in the signature is Narahari's usual formula.

2. Narahari (Sarakara) — "mo mena manu gorācāndere dekhiyā..." (PK 103)

Lila: Navadvipa — Gaura walks along the road to the Ganga; a young townswoman tells how she saw Him. In PK — a gaura-chandrika to purvaraga (love dawning at first sight). According to Majumdar — Narahari Sarakara's pada about a real mood, though it contains expressions of nagari-bhava. Raga

dhanashi.⁵

2.1. Seeing Gorachand, I all but died:⁶

wondrous is His form — it outshines pure gold.

2.2. Now He walks swiftly, slapping His shoulders like a wrestler, now, grown calm, He steps slowly along the road to the Suradhuni.⁷

2.3. With His reddish eyes He gazes again and again, unblinking — and has driven the arrows of His glances into the very heart.

2.4. His arms, reaching to the knees, sway on either side;
young women, in love, long to give Him their youth.⁸

2.5. Now He smiles softly, now He shouts for joy; not fathoming it, Narahari is lost in rapture.

5. The signature is "Narahari". In PK the pada is the second gaura-chandrika to the section "Purvaraga — the age of transition" (after a pada by Radhamohana); in GPT1 — p. 170, no. 41 (raga dhanashi). Majumdar discusses it among the nine Navadvipa padas of Narahari Sarakara in PK and cites the line "With His reddish eyes He gazes again and again".

6. The opening is obscure: "mo mena manu" (PK; ms. ka and GPT1 — "mo mene manu"). We translate tentatively: "mo" — "I", "manu" — an old form for "I died" (cf. "malum"); "I think I perished" is also possible. The sense is the shock of seeing Gaura.

7. "Slapping one's shoulders" (mālasāṭha mārā) is the gesture of a wrestler challenging to a bout; in another pada of GPT the Lord does the same in kirtana ("now He slaps His shoulders, now calls 'Krishna!', now 'Radha!'"). The Suradhuni is the Ganga.

8. The words about young women belong to the language of nagari-bhava (Gaura as the nagara, the beloved of the townswomen); we translate them faithfully to the author. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never looked at another man's wife; the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta) does not accept the worship of Gaura in the spirit of "gaura-nagari". In PK the pada is a gaura-chandrika: it sets the tone for Radha's purvaraga, and the attraction here is an image of prema for Krishna, not of a worldly feeling.

3. Narahari (Sarakara) — "ki lāgiyā mora gaura-sundara..." (PK 307)

*Lila: Navadvipa — the Lord in the mood of Radha as vasakasajja (the heroine who adorns herself and the bower while awaiting her beloved) dresses Himself and waits for Krishna. In PK — a gaura-chandrika to "vasakasajja in spring". According to Majumdar — a description of a real mood; the Lord's dress and ornaments in the Navadvipa padas are not invented. Raga dhanashi.*⁹

3.1. Why does my beautiful Gaura sit in the house and, preparing clothes, a seat and jewelled ornaments, adorn His body with them?

3.2. Seeing the shadow of His own body,

He starts in His heart:

"Why has the Lord not come even now?

Why does He delay so long?"¹⁰

3.3. Narahari says: my Gaurahari, thinking of Rai's condition, looks at the road with tear-filled eyes and speaks in a faltering voice.

9. The signature is "Narahari". In GPT1 (p. 306, no. 22) with minor variants (section "vasakasajja"). Majumdar adduces the pada as an example that Narahari's gaura-chandrikas are not conventional preludes but descriptions of moods he saw; that the Lord wore ornaments in Navadvipa is attested by the sannyasa pada PK 2241 (chapter 2, no. 5): "golden armlets... — all that enchanting attire He gave up."

10. A shadow mistaken for the beloved's step is a usual trait of the vasakasajja in rasa-shastra: Radha starts at every rustle, thinking Krishna has come. The Lord experiences Her waiting; this is a manifestation of prema, not of worldly longing.

4. Narahari (Sarakara) — "hema darapaṇi gaurāṅga-lābaṇi..." (PK 316)

*Lila: Navadvipa — the Lord in the mood of Radha as vipralabdha (the deceived heroine whose beloved did not come to the tryst) rolls in the dust, calls "Lord of My life!" and weeps before His companions. In PK — a gaura-chandrika to "vipralabdha in spring". According to Majumdar — a pada of vipralambha (separation). Raga bhairavi.*¹¹

4.1. Gauranga's beauty is like a golden mirror, yet its lustre is grey with dust;
leaving His seat and clothes, He weeps like a beauty of Vraja.

4.2. Crying "Hari, Hari!", calling Him Lord of His life,
He rises, leaning on the ground:
"Where shall I go? Whom shall I tell?
My heart is breaking!"

4.3. Weeping, He speaks to His companions, raising His face:
"What is happening to My heart — to whom can I tell this pain?"

4.4. Narahari Dasa says in a faltering voice:
my Gauranga wanders under another pretext, delivering all — yet He Himself is ever drunk with Radha's love.¹²

11. The signature is "Narahari Dasa". S. Ray notes that the pada is found in only one PK manuscript (kha) and placed it in the text because the other sections of this pallava open with gaura-chandrikas. In GPT1 (p. 307, no. 27) with minor variants. B. B. Majumdar (1961) gives the pada from a Baranagar manuscript with the reading "aśana basana" ("food and clothes") instead of "āsana basana" ("seat and clothes").

12. Cf. CC Adi 4: the external reason for the Lord's appearance is to give the world the holy name and prema, the internal one — to taste Radha's love. Narahari expresses the same thought: delivering the world is the "pretext", while the Lord's heart is ever in Radha's prema.

5. Narahari (Sarakara) — "āre mora āre mora gaurāṅga rāya..." (PK 408)

*Lila: Navadvipa — the Lord in the mood of Radha as khandita (the heroine whose beloved comes at dawn bearing the marks of a tryst with another) angrily reproaches Krishna. In PK — a gaura-chandrika to the section "Khandita — the impatient (adhira) madhya". According to Majumdar — Narahari Sarakara's pada of the khandita. Raga suhai.*¹³

5.1. Ah, my, ah, my Gauranga Raya!
Full of His former love, He walks with slow steps.

5.2. His eyes have reddened, His face has darkened;
in anger, His heart trembling, the Lord speaks haltingly:

5.3. "I know You, I know Your false love!
Go and bow to her with whom You spent the night."¹⁴

5.4. Having said this, Gauranga is wholly overcome by bhava:
in the waves of bhava He is as if after a sleepless night.

5.5. Narahari says: in Radha's mood He has become like one who was given a promise and deceived.

13. The signature is "Narahari". In GPT1 (p. 309, no. 4) with minor variants (section "khandita, mana"). Majumdar cites the line "I know You, I know Your false love". The khandita is one of the eight heroines of rasa-shastra (Ujjvala-nilamani).

14. The words of Radha as khandita to Krishna, who has come in the morning from Her rival. Radha's jealousy and pique (mana) are a manifestation of the highest prema, not a worldly feeling; the Lord experiences them in Her mood.

6. Narahari (Sarakara) — "gorā pahum'birale basiyā..." (PK 421)

*Lila: Navadvipa — the Lord in the mood of Radha as khandita sits alone after a sleepless night and weeps: "Having given Me hope, You deceived Me all night." In PK — a gaura-chandrika to "khandita — the composed-impatient (dhira-adhira) madhya". According to Majumdar — Narahari Sarakara's pada of the khandita. Raga gandhara.*¹⁵

6.1. Lord Gora, sitting alone, has lowered His face.

6.2. In bhava His eyes are heavy with sleep — the sleepless night is witness to it.

6.3. With a faded face He says:
"Having given Me hope, You deceived Me all night."

6.4. Weeping, Gora Raya says:
"I cannot bear this pain."

6.5. He laments, full of grief;
Narahari begs for grace.¹⁶

15. The signature is "Narahari". In GPT1 (p. 309, no. 5) with minor variants, immediately after the preceding pada (PK 408). Majumdar cites the lines "Having given Me hope, You deceived Me all night, — weeping, says Gora Raya".

16. "Begs for grace" — in the original "begs for prasada" (parasāda): the Lord's mercy.

7. Ananta Dasa — "āpāda-mastaka prema-dhārā barikhata..." (PK 2208)

*Praise of Gauranga: from head to foot He pours streams of prema; at His qualities wood and stone melt, beasts and birds weep; the poet asks only one thing — to sing of Gauranga, wandering from land to land. In PK — the section "Sri Gaurachandra — in another way". Majumdar names the pada among Ananta's padas on Gauranga's mood. Raga mangala.*¹⁷

7.1. From head to foot He pours down streams of prema,
His rays flash in every direction;
His gait is lovelier than a lordly elephant's, moons rise at His feet.¹⁸

7.2. What kind of Creator, having fashioned Gaurangachand's body, remained firm himself?
What kind of heart is his — of wood and stone — that it did not melt at once?¹⁹

7.3. At my Gauranga's qualities wood and stone — what of wood and stone! — melt and flow down to the earth;
the beasts and birds of the forest weep and weep:
there is no living being that does not weep.

7.4. In whatever family I may be born, whatever body I may receive, —

Ananta Dasa's one wish is to sing of Thakura Gauranga's qualities, wandering from land to land.

17. The signature is "Ananta Dasa". According to Majumdar, Ananta Dasa was a poet of Advaita's branch and a contemporary of the Lord; PK has 32 padas with his signature. In GPT1 (p. 39, no. 41) and GPT2 with variants.

18. The moons at His feet are the Lord's toenails, shining like moons.

19. PK: "...fashioned Gaurangachand's body, remaining firm himself" (daṛhiyā); the P-R-Sa manuscript and GPT2 read "dhariyā", and GPT "Gaurangachand" (cāmḍere ye): "...fashioned Gaurangachand, taking on his own body". The image of the Creator (bidhi) who "sculpted" beauty is a poetic convention (poets speak so of Radha and Krishna too); the Lord's body is not created — it is eternal, full of being, knowledge and bliss ("ishvarah paramah krishnah sac-cid-ananda-vigrahaḥ", Brahma-samhita 5.1).

8. Ananta Dasa — "dekha dekha aparūpa gaurāṅga nitāi..." (PK 2336)

*Praise of Gaura and Nitai — the two brothers who purify the fallen: They give prema to all without distinction and weep on seeing the fallen. In PK — the section "The form and qualities of Sri Chaitanya and Nityananda". According to Majumdar it "sounds like the word of a contemporary". Raga kamoda.*²⁰

8.1. (Refrain) Look, look: the wondrous Gauranga and Nitai!

By the good fortune of all living beings there wander the earth the two brothers who purify the fallen.

8.2. Whomever They see, They give prema to him, entreating him, making no distinction between high and low; the people of the three worlds, drinking the nectar of prema, know neither old age, nor death, nor sorrow.

8.3. The wish-fulfilling tree and the ocean will not give a drop unasked — shame even to compare them with Them! Seeing the fallen, Both weep, unable to restrain Themselves, and, entreating, give priceless bhakti and prema.

²¹

8.4. If someone does not serve such merciful Lords — what hope is there in his wretched life? Even if he be a sannyasi or a brahmana, he is counted among the asuras: such is the word of Ananta Dasa.

²²

20. The signature is "Ananta Dasa". In GPT1 (p. 39, no. 42, raga shri or kamoda) and GPT2 with minor variants; there the pada immediately follows the preceding one (PK 2208).

21. "Entreating" (yāciyā): the Lord and Nityananda Themselves beg people to accept the name and prema (cf. CB Madhya 13: Nitai and Haridasa go from house to house begging, "Sing Krishna's name"; CC Adi 7). Instead of "Both" (domhe) manuscript ka reads "body" (deha): "Their body knows no rest".

22. Cf. Bhagavad-gita 7.15: the deluded do not surrender to the Lord, "having taken shelter of the nature of the asuras".

9. Ananta Acharya — "jaya śacīnandana jaga-jībana sāra..." (PK 2285)

*Lila: from the appearance to Nilachala — the Lord of Goloka descends in Navadvipa, teaches the dharma of the age — sankirtana, accepts sannyasa from Keshava Bharati, shows the six-armed form in Utkala and settles in Nilachala. In PK — the section "The sannyasa of Sri Gauranga, etc." According to Majumdar — probably a pada by Ananta Acharya, who lived in Navadvipa; an important detail: the Lord Himself "gave the mantra" to Bharati. Raga shri (as for the preceding PK pada).*²³

9.1. (Refrain) Glory to the Son of Shachi, the essence of the world's life! In life and in death Gora is my Lord.

- 9.2. Coming with His associates, the Lord of Goloka descended in Navadvipa;
establishing the dharma of the age — His own sankirtana —
He explained it by dancing and singing.
- 9.3. He of golden form put on the kaupina and the cord, an upper cloth the colour of the morning rays;
Gaurangachandra took the kamandalu and staff in His hands, casting aside Vishnupriya's hopes.²⁴
- 9.4. Hari, the guru of the whole world, made Bharati His guru:
having given him the mantra, He received it from him.²⁵
The scoffers and unbelievers, who had once reviled Him much, began to worship Him as Narayana.²⁶
- 9.5. Going to the land of Utkala, He taught the holy name, manifesting the six-armed form.
Ananta Acharya says: with all the great souls
He made His dwelling in Nilachala.²⁷

23. The signature is "Ananta Acharya"; in S. Ray's index of poets it is the only pada of Ananta Acharya in PK. Majumdar considers it probably a pada of Ananta Acharya of Advaita's branch, who lived in Navadvipa (CC Adi 12). In GPT1 (pp. 19–20, no. 53) and GPT2 with minor variants; the refrain there (and in PK manuscripts ka, kha, cha) begins "The Son of Shachi..." without "Glory".

24. The kaupina is the sannyasi's loincloth; the kamandalu, a water-pot; the staff (danda), the sign of sannyasa. "Vishnupriya's hopes" — in the original "vishnupriya-abhilasha": the Lord left His wife, who hoped to keep Him at home (CC Adi 17; Lochana, Madhya-khanda).

25. According to CB (Madhya 28), the Lord spoke into Keshava Bharati's ear a mantra He said He had heard in a dream, and then received it from him as from a guru; thus He, the guru of the world, showed the example of a disciple's humility. Cf. Murari 3.2.

26. Cf. CC Adi 17: the Lord accepted sannyasa so that those who had reviled Him in Navadvipa, by bowing to a sannyasi, would be freed from their offences; a sannyasi is honoured as Narayana.

27. Utkala is Orissa. The six-armed form the Lord showed to Sarvabhauma (CB Antya 3; see the next pada). Instead of "with" (laiyā) the P-R-Sa manuscript reads "in lila" (līlā).

10. Gauridasa Pandita — "pahu mora nityānanda rāya..." (PK 2313)

*Praise of Nityananda — the "market of the holy name" (hat-pattan): Nityananda is king of the market on the Ganga's bank, Ramai carries out His orders, Haridasa is the kotwal, Krishnadasa the weighman, Srivasa the scribe; Vishvambhara and Gadadhara trade in the Acharya's courtyard; Gauridasa, sitting near the king, hears of the market's glory. In PK — the section "The qualities of Sri Nityananda". According to Majumdar — the first pada of the hat-pattan genre, written after the sannyasa (the Lord is called "Chaitanya"). Raga shri.*²⁸

- 10.1. (Refrain) My Lord is Nityananda Raya!
Having churned all the tantras, the great mantra — the name of Hari —
He explains to living beings, holding them by the hand.
- 10.2. His name is "Chaitanya's elder brother", He has no equal in the three worlds;
on the bank of the Suradhuni He set up a post;
arranging a market in due form, Nityananda became its king, with the hero's banner that crushes the unbelievers.²⁹
- 10.3. Ramai, a worthy servant, carries out the royal orders, Haridasa became the kotwal;

Krishnadasa became the weighman — no one can slip past by cheating;
the writing and reading is Srinivasa's.³⁰

- 10.4. The traders are Vishvambhara and the beloved Gadadhara:
in the Acharya's courtyard there is buying and selling.
Gauridasa, smiling, sits near the king and hears a little of the market's glory.³¹

28. The signature is "Gauridasa". Gauridasa Pandita of Ambika (Kalna) was a companion of the Lord and of Nityananda; Jayananda praises his poetry; PK has only two padas with his signature (161 and 2313). In GPT1 (p. 420, no. 20) with minor variants. "Hat-pattan" ("opening a market") is a genre of padas where the preaching of the holy name is pictured as a market at which prema is given away; later poems also belong to it. Majumdar regards Gauridasa's pada as the first example of the genre and dates it after the sannyasa; Nityananda is called "Chaitanya's elder brother". Cf. CC Madhya 15 and Murari 4.21–4.22: the Lord sends Nityananda from Puri to preach in Gauda.

29. Tantras here means the scriptures in general. A post (thānā) — a guard station. "The hero's banner that crushes the unbelievers": Nityananda is Balarama, and His preaching is a victory over the pashandas.

30. Ramai is probably Ramai Pandita (Sri Rama Pandita), Srivasa's younger brother, or Abhirama (Ramadasa), Nityananda's companion; a kotwal is the chief of the town watch; Haridasa is Haridasa Thakura. "Weighman" — in the original "dāryā" (mss. "ḍāryā", "ḍeryā"): the meaning is unclear — the one who holds the scales (dāmṛi) or a gatekeeper; "by cheating" (bhāmṛyā) — manuscript cha reads "bhēmṛyā", P-R-Sa "chāryā" ("let off"). Krishnadasa is probably Gauridasa's younger brother, the author of PK 2358 (chapter 1, no. 24). Srinivasa is Srivasa Pandita (Srinivasa is his full name).

31. The Acharya is Advaita Acharya. Vishvambhara is the Lord Himself (His name before sannyasa). The humble "hears a little" in the signature: the poet is merely present at this play.

11. Vasu Ghosha — "acaitanya śrīcaitanya sārvaabhauma-ghare..." (GPT1, p. 402)

*Lila: Puri, 1510 — the Lord lies unconscious in Sarvaabhauma's house; Sarvaabhauma sees Him in the forms of the avatars, and when the Lord stands up in the six-armed form, he falls at His feet. Only in GPT (section "Antya-lila"). Raga suhai.*³²

- 11.1. Sri Chaitanya lies unconscious in Sarvaabhauma's house;
Gopinatha, sitting beside Him, massages His feet.³³
- 11.2. Sarvaabhauma gazes unblinking at the Lord's face and cannot make out Who He is.
- 11.3. Now he sees the Lord in the form of Nrisimha, now again in the form of the boy Vamana;
- 11.4. now he sees the forms of Matsya, Kurma, Varaha, now Bhrgurama with a fearsome axe in His hand;
- 11.5. at times he sees a form dark as a blade of durva grass, at times the Holder of the flute, the colour of a rain-cloud.³⁴
- 11.6. Seeing all this, he gave up his doubts;
the Lord rose and stood in the six-armed form.³⁵
- 11.7. Shachi's darling is that very Butter-thief:
within — the dark Kanu, without — Gaura.³⁶
- 11.8. Falling to the ground, Sarvaabhauma prostrates himself.
Vasu Ghosha says: why any more vain delusion?

32. The signature is "Vasu Ghosha". The pada is neither in PK nor in BR — only in GPT1 (p. 402, no. 2 of the section "Antya-lila") and GPT2; by Majumdar's criterion Vasu Ghosha's padas known only from GPT are unreliable, and the attribution remains doubtful. In GPT the pada stands between Madhavi's two padas on the Lord's arrival in Puri (PK 2239, 2240; chapter 02, nos. 1–2). Cf. CC Madhya 6, CB Antya 3, Murari 3.11–3.12.

33. Gopinatha Acharya, Sarvabhauma's brother-in-law, had known the Lord already in Navadvipa. According to CC (Madhya 6), the Lord fell unconscious on seeing Jagannatha, and Sarvabhauma had Him carried to his house.

34. The forms of the avatars: Nrisimha, Vamana (the boy brahmana), Matsya, Kurma, Varaha, Parashurama (Bhrigurama); "dark as durva grass" — Ramachandra; the Holder of the flute — Krishna.

35. The six-armed form (with Rama's bow, Krishna's flute, and the sannyasi's staff and water-pot) the Lord showed to Sarvabhauma according to CB (Antya 3); according to CC (Madhya 6) — first a four-armed form, then Krishna's two-armed form with the flute.

36. The Butter-thief is Krishna. Cf. Tattva-sandarbha (2): "antah krishnam bahir gauram" — "Krishna within, Gaura without"; CC Adi 1, 4.

12. Narahari (Sarakara) — "āoba gaura punahi nadiyāpura..." (PK 1970)

*Lila: Navadvipa in the years when the Lord lives in Puri: the devotees dream of His return — to see His face and His kirtana again. In PK — a gaura-chandrika to the section "Bhavollasa" (Radha's joy at the news of Krishna's return), headed "The words of the devotees, the residents of Navadvipa". Raga dhanashi.*³⁷

12.1. Gaura will come again to the town of Nadia — and the heart will be filled with joy.
Shall we really see again that fountain of bliss,
His play in kirtana?

12.2. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! When shall I see that moon-like face?
When shall I swim across the ocean of separation, and the heart's bewilderment be dispelled?

12.3. When shall I see a lustre like the purest gold and the gleaming sacred thread?
Raising both arms, He will cry "Hari, Hari!", dancing amid the devotees.³⁸

12.4. Having said this, all fell still with closed eyes, drunk with love for Gaura.
Narahari Dasa: when will the hope be fulfilled — to see the youthful Gaura?

37. The signature is "Narahari Dasa". Majumdar does not discuss this pada; its attribution to Narahari Sarakara is likely (simple language) but not proven. In GPT1 (p. 411, no. 27) with variants, in the section on the years in Puri; there instead of "will come" (āoba) it reads "is coming" (āota). In PK the pada follows a gaura-chandrika by Radhamohana to the same section.

38. The Lord wore the sacred thread (upavita) before sannyasa; on accepting sannyasa He gave it up. The Navadvipa devotees remember His former form — as they saw Him in the kirtanas of 1509.

13. Narahari (Sarakara) — "locane jharajhara ānanda-lora..." (PK 1707)

*Lila: Navadvipa in the years of separation: the poet sees in a dream how Gaura, after a long separation, has come to Navadvipa and strolls among the devotees; on waking he weeps. In PK — a gaura-chandrika to the section "Telling of a dream" (svapna-rasodgara), headed "Here — Sri Mahaprabhu". Raga suhai.*³⁹

13.1. Tears of joy stream from my eyes:
in a dream I saw the youthful Gaura.

13.2. After so many days He came to Navadvipa and joyfully strolls in the circle of devotees.

13.3. What shall I tell you, friend, of the bliss of that night!

After so many days I saw Gora's moon-like face.

13.4. All the people of Nadia, tormented by separation, saw Gora's face — and all their sorrow went far away.

13.5. And now, not seeing Him, the heart is breaking:

Narahari Dasa weeps, rolling in the dust.⁴⁰

39. The signature is "Narahari Dasa". Majumdar does not discuss the pada. In GPT1 (p. 410, no. 25) with minor variants, in the section on the years in Puri, next to padas on the Lord's meeting with the Navadvipa devotees. In PK the section "telling of a dream" consists of Radha's words relating to a friend Her dream of meeting Krishna; the gaura-chandrika transfers them to Gaura. Cf. Shachi's dream of Nimai's coming (Vasu Ghosha, chapter 1, no. 22) and the Lord's visit to Navadvipa in 1514 (CC Madhya 16).

40. Waking after a dream of meeting is a usual motif of separation: the joy of the dream makes separation still keener.

14. Vasu Ghosha — "svarūpera kare dhari gorārāya..." (GPT1, p. 310)

*Lila: Puri — the Lord in Radha's mood, holding Svarupa's hand, reviles "Shyama, the friend": He ruined Her honour and went to another. Only in GPT (section "Khandita, mana"). Raga suhai.*⁴¹

14.1. Holding Svarupa's hand, Gora Raya heaps abuse on Shyama, the friend:

14.2. "That cheat, that rake, that thief of love —

how many woes He has brought on Me!

14.3. He ruined My family and My honour,

He set fire to My husband's house;

14.4. and in the end, the Dark One left Me and sports with another.⁴²

14.5. Have I become a stranger to Him?" — saying this, Gaurahari sobs in despair.

14.6. Vasu says: what can I understand?

The One You weep for, Lord, is You Yourself.⁴³

41. The signature is "Vasu". The pada is neither in PK nor in BR — only in GPT1 (p. 310, no. 8) and GPT2 (sec. 4.6, no. 8); Majumdar considers Vasu Ghosha's padas known only from GPT unreliable, and two padas signed Vasu in which Svarupa accompanies the Lord in Navadvipa or on the Yamuna outright spurious (Svarupa came to the Lord only in Puri). Here, to judge by Svarupa's presence, the scene is Puri, but the attribution remains doubtful. In GPT the pada follows the pada of Narahari (?) "prema kari kulabatī sane" (chapter 2, no. 8). Svarupa Damodara in the Lord's mood is Radha's friend Lalita (CC Antya 14–19; Gaura-ganoddeshā-dīpikā).

42. "Another" — Radha's rival (Chandravali). Radha's abuse in mana is the language of the highest prema, not of worldly jealousy; the Lord experiences it in Radha's mood.

43. Cf. CC Adi 4: Krishna accepted Radha's mood and lustre to taste His own sweetness and Radha's love for Him. The poet says: the Krishna You seek is You Yourself.

15. Narahari (Sarakara) — "kanaka-campaka gorācānde..." (PK 849)

*Lila: the Lord in Radha's mood reproaches the Creator (bidhi): "Who has driven Me mad? Why did he make such a union?" In PK — a gaura-chandrika to the section "reproaches to the Creator" (akshepanuraga). Raga suhai.*⁴⁴

15.1. Gorachand, the colour of the golden champaka —

why does He weep, fallen on the ground?

15.2. Now He rises and cries, "Hari, Hari!
Who has driven Me mad?"

15.3. Raising His arms that reach to the knees,
He keeps reviling the Creator:

15.4. "Shame on the Creator's decrees!
Why did he make such a union?"⁴⁵

15.5. With what feeling does Gora Raya say this? — Narahari goes about asking everyone.

44. The signature is "Narahari". Majumdar does not discuss this pada separately, but he calls Narahari Sarakara's gaura-chandrikas in the PK sections on akshepanuraga (853, 799, 820, 832, 840) descriptions of the Lord's real moods. In GPT1 (p. 300, no. 27) and GPT2 the pada comes immediately after PK 840 ("Ah, my youthful Gaura!", chapter 2, no. 7), among the Puri padas. The pada itself does not name the place.

45. "Union" (yoṭanā; ms. ka "yoṭana", kha "yoṭinā"; GPT "joṭana"); Radha reproaches the Creator because Her love for Krishna has been joined with the bonds of family and duty and brings only suffering. The madness (bāuri) here is the madness of prema. Instead of "Shame..." PK reads "bahe dhik" — apparently a misprint for "kahe dhik" ("says: shame..."), as in GPT.

16. Narahari (Sarakara) — "āre mora gaura kiśora. nāhi jāne dibāniśi..." (PK 1746)

*Lila: the mood of separation — the Lord does not distinguish day from night, laughs without cause, sings aloud asking, "Where is the Lord of My life?", trembles, leaps, dances, speaks incoherently, weeps with closed eyes. In PK — a gaura-chandrika to the section "Separation in the winter season" (hemanta and shishira). According to Majumdar — Narahari Sarakara's pada of viraha ("laughter without cause"). Raga pahida.*⁴⁶

16.1. (Refrain) Ah, my youthful Gaura!
Not knowing day from night, He laughs without cause — the Lord is lost in the bewilderment of His heart.

16.2. Now He sings aloud — of whom, of what does the Lord ask? —
"Where is the Lord of My life?"
Now His whole body trembles as with cold, now He leaps:
"Where shall I find Him? Where shall I go? With whom?"⁴⁷

16.3. Now, raising His arms, He dances, whirling and whirling, now again and again He speaks incoherently;
now He closes His eyes and weeps, "O Natha!", now again and again He is in torment.

16.4. Narahari Dasa says: ah, my Gaurahari has become like this from Radha's love.
He resolved in His heart to deliver the age of Kali —
why then am I left out?⁴⁸

46. The signature is "Narahari Dasa". Majumdar cites the line "Now He sings aloud — of whom, of what does the Lord ask?" among Narahari Sarakara's viraha padas. In GPT1 (p. 315, no. 8) and GPT2 (sec. 4.7, no. 8) the pada stands immediately after PK 1662 and 1663 (no. 17 of this chapter), among the padas on the divine madness of prema; there instead of "speaks incoherently" (pralāpa) it reads "laments" (bilāpa), with a note of the reading "pralāpa". In PK the pada is preceded by the heading "Separation befitting winter. Here — Sri Gaurachandra".

47. Radha's words in separation: She seeks Krishna and does not know where to go. Trembling is a sattvika-bhava; in PK the pada opens the section on winter separation, and trembling "as with cold" matches the season. This is the madness of prema (divya-unmada) described in CC Antya 14–20, not worldly longing.

48. Cf. CC Adi 4. The formula "why then am I left out" is Narahari's usual signature (cf. PK 2241, chapter 2, no. 5).

17. Unsigned (Vasu Ghosha? Govinda Dasa?) — "cetana pāiyā gorā rāya..." (PK 1663)

Lila: a continuation of PK 1662 (Vasu Ghosha, chapter 2, no. 15): the Lord, coming to Himself after running to the sea, sees Svarupa and Ramaraya before Him and laments: "Where is My Krishna with the flute at His lips? I saw Him just now!" In PK — the section "Divya-unmada". Raga shri.⁴⁹

- 17.1. Coming to His senses, Gora Raya, lying on the ground, looks this way and that.
- 17.2. Before Him are Svarupa and Ramaraya; seeing them, the Lord cries, "Alas, alas!"
- 17.3. Where is My Krishna with the flute at His lips?
I saw Him just now!
- 17.4. O Lord, supremely merciful, be gracious, show Yourself!"⁵⁰
- 17.5. So laments Gorachand;
seeing this, the devotees weep.

49. In PK the pada is unsigned; in the P-R-Sa manuscript "Govinda Dasa" stands instead of "the devotees" ("seeing this, Govinda Dasa weeps"), so that the pada is signed by Govinda Dasa; in GPT1 (p. 315, no. 7) and GPT2 (sec. 4.7, no. 7) a sixth couplet is added with Vasu Ghosha's signature: "Vasu Ghosha says: my Gora is drunk with love for Krishna". The attribution is disputed: it may be a continuation of Vasu Ghosha's PK 1662, but the witnesses disagree. Ramaraya is Ramananda Raya. Cf. CC Antya 14: coming to Himself after running to Chataka-parvata, the Lord says to Svarupa, "Why have you brought Me here? I just saw Krishna..."; Antya 17–18.

50. "Krishna with the flute at His lips" — in the original "murali-badana", "He whose face bears the flute". The Lord speaks in the mood of Radha, who has just seen Krishna and lost Him again.

18. Narahari — "gaurāṅga ke jāne mahimā tomāra..." (PK 2293)

Praise of Gauranga, the avatara who purifies the fallen in the age of Kali: from the ocean of Shyama, as if by churning, the sweet Gauranga appeared, and a downpour of prema flooded the three worlds. In PK — the last pada of the section "The sannyyasa of Sri Gauranga, etc." Raga varadi ("the same" as for the preceding PK pada), dhanashri (GPT).⁵¹

- 18.1. (Refrain) Gauranga, who knows Your greatness?
To deliver the age of Kali You appeared — the avatara who purifies the fallen.
- 18.2. How long the Creator churned the ocean of Shyama!
How much nectar he made from it — and the sweet Gauranga appeared.⁵²
- 18.3. In the three worlds a downpour of prema came — the rain of Gaura's love;
the lowly and wretched are drowned in that rasa, — so Narahari sings of His qualities.

51. The signature is "Narahari". Majumdar does not discuss the pada; in the stage-1 catalogue another pada ("nīlācale yave majhu nātha" — in GPT1 signed by Vaishnava Dasa) was wrongly linked to PK 2293. The language and imagery (churning, a downpour of prema) are closer to later stutis; the pada may also belong to Narahari Chakravarti — its attribution to Sarakara is not established. In GPT1 (p. 28, no. 6) and GPT2 with the variant "mathiyā se karatāla" instead of "mathiyā se kata kāla".

52. The image is the churning of the Milk Ocean, from which the amrita appeared. "The Creator" (bidhi) is a poetic figure: Gauranga is not created — He is Shyama (Krishna) Himself, who accepted Radha's lustre and mood (CC Adi 4).

Chapter 4. Gaura's Form, Navadvipa, the Sannyasa and the Return

*Padas of contemporaries which Majumdar (*Sri-Chaitanya-chariter upadan, ch. 2) regards as eyewitness testimony, in the order of the lilas: the six-armed form and the beauty of Gorachand in Navadvipa, Radha's mood in Gadadhara's lap, the swing festival on the bank of the Ganga, the goshta-lila, praise of Gaura and Nityananda; then Vasu Ghosha's cycle on the sannyasa (the last night at home, the lament of Shachi and Vishnupriya, Katwa, Keshava Bharati, the shorn curls, the lament of Nadia), the dance of the Lord as a sannyasi, and the Lord's return to the neighbourhood of Navadvipa (1514/15). The text follows the Padakalpataru (PK), the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR), the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC) and the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Ananta Dasa — "kāṁcā se soṇāra tanu..." (PK 2167)

Lila: Navadvipa — the Lord's six-armed form (shad-bhuja): Rama's bow and arrows, Krishna's flute, the sannyasi's staff and waterpot. In PK the pada is headed "Then the form that revealed six arms, in Navadvipa". Majumdar mentions this pada when speaking of Ananta Dasa, a poet of Advaita's branch and a contemporary of the Lord. Raga tirotha-dhanashi.¹

- 1.1. His body is like pure gold, all of it quivering; on His moon-face a smile — waves of nectar.
- 1.2. A forest garland hangs down to the very earth;
drawn by its fragrance, swarms of bees surround it.
- 1.3. Of the six arms the upper ones hold sharp arrows and a bow — at the sight of them enemies tremble.²
- 1.4. These arms are the colour of durva grass, their nails like moons;
bracelets and armlets of jewels shine on them.
- 1.5. Below, two arms dark as a thundercloud;
in them gleams the matchless, enchanting flute.
- 1.6. The jewel-nails outshine the moon, the palms are red;
seeing the jewelled ornaments on them, Ananga himself swoons.³
- 1.7. Lower still, hands with the waterpot and the staff, which shatter the filth of Kali and the godless.⁴
- 1.8. At the throat and on the breast jewels and pearls sway;
the Kaustubha swings, the breast is marked with the Shrivatsa.
- 1.9. The broad chest is anointed with sandal;
the navel is deep, the waist slender as a lion's.
- 1.10. The red cloth falls to His very feet;
Ananta Dasa offers himself to the nails of His feet.⁵

1. The signature is "Dasa Ananta". In PK the pada stands last in the 18th pallava ("The form of Sri Gauranga, etc."; vol. 3, PDF p. 256, printed p. 245; MS P-R-Sa no. 2274); in GPT1 — p. 141, no. 89; in GPT2 — sect. 3.1, twice (nos. 44 and 89), with minor variants. The Lord revealed the six-armed form to Nityananda in Navadvipa (CB Madhya 5; Murari 2.8) and to Sarvabhauma in Puri (CC Madhya 6). Majumdar regards Ananta Dasa as a contemporary; PK has 32 padas with his signature.

2. Bow and arrows are the form of Ramachandra, and the colour of durva grass (a dark greenish hue) is the colour of His body. PK reads "uta chaya bhuja para" ("there, of the six arms..."), GPT "ubhadvaya bhuja para" ("on the two raised arms"); the sense is the same.

3. The middle pair of arms holding the flute, dark as a cloud, is Krishna's form. Ananga ("the bodiless") is Kamadeva, the god of love.

4. The lowest pair of arms holds the staff (danda) and waterpot (kamandalu) of a sannyasi: the form of Gaura Himself. For "the godless" (pāṣaṇḍa) MSS "ka", "ca" read "filth" (kaluṣa); so also GPT: "the filth, the sin of Kali".

5. Nichhani (nichani) is the custom of waving something round a beloved person to ward off harm from him and then giving it away; the poet "offers himself" in such an offering to the nails of the Lord's feet. MSS "ka", "ca", P-R-Sa read "nichani".

2. Govinda Ghosha — "gorācāṁḍa kibā tomāra badana-maṇḍala..." (PK 1029)

*Lila: Gorachand's form — a song of the Lord's beauty in Navadvipa. In PK it opens the section "Delight in the form" (rupa-ullasa) as a gaura-chandrika. According to Majumdar, Govinda Ghosha, the eldest of the Ghosha brothers, conveys his own impression of Gauranga's form. Raga dhanashi.*⁶

2.1. (Refrain) Gorachand, how wondrous is the orb of Your face!

Is it a golden lotus, is it the full autumn moon — it shines by night and by day.

2.2. The colour of Your body outshines yellow haritala and seems to surpass a motionless lightning; is it fresh gorochana, is it gold of the finest assay — You enchant the mind of Manmatha himself.

⁷

2.3. Your nose is lovelier than Garuda's beak, Your speech sweet as nectar — there is none like You in the three worlds. Eyes reaching to the ears are arrows, brows a drawn bow: with a sidelong glance You pierce the hearts of women.

⁸

2.4. Arms reaching to the knees are anointed with sandal, and rings and bracelets shine on them. The waist is slenderer than a lion's, the thighs like golden plantain stems, on the feet are anklets.

2.5. The gait is lovelier than a maddened elephant's and the king of swans'; seeing such a treasury of beauty, Govinda Ghosha speaks, with joy in his heart for Gora: "I would give myself up for Him."

⁹

6. The signature is "Govinda Ghosha". In PK (vol. 2, PDF p. 225, printed p. 212; MS P-R-Sa no. 1455) the pada comes under the heading "Now, delight in the form. Sri Gaurachandra" and opens the songs on the beauty of Radha and Krishna. It is not in GPT. Majumdar names PK 1029 and 2146 (no. 3) among Govinda Ghosha's padas on Gaura's form.

7. Haritala is orpiment, a golden-yellow paint; gorochana is a yellow pigment used for tilaka; "gold of ten van" (daśabān) is gold refined many times, of the finest assay. Manmatha is Kamadeva: the Lord's beauty enchants the god of love himself (cf. Krishna's name Madana-mohana). MS P-R-Sa reads "tanu" ("body") for "janu" ("as if").

8. "You pierce the hearts of women" (MSS "kha", "gha", P-R-Sa: "the heart of a woman") is a stock image of the poetics of describing beauty; we translate faithfully. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never looked at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta).

9. The words "gora mane santoṣa" also allow the reading "and Gora is pleased at heart"; our rendering is tentative. "Give myself up" (nichani jāiye) — see note 5. For "maddened" (mayamatta) MSS "ka", "kha" read "madamatta" (same sense).

3. Govinda Ghosha — "kanayā kaṣila mukha-śobhā..." (PK 2146)

*Lila: Gaura's form — the causeless smile, the yellow silk, a bee flying to His feet. According to Majumdar, an eyewitness's impression of Gauranga's form. Raga sindhura.*¹⁰

- 3.1. The beauty of His face is like gold tried on the touchstone;
one glance, and the mind of the whole world is filled with longing.
- 3.2. Without any cause Gora's face smiles;
He is clad in yellow silk.¹¹
- 3.3. Drawn by the fragrance of His body, a young bee has come flying;
- 3.4. round and round it circles at His feet, humming sweetly.
- 3.5. In Govinda Ghosha's heart it awakens:
if I do not see Gora, everything tastes of poison.

10. The signature is "Govinda Ghosha". PK: 18th pallava "The form of Sri Gauranga, etc." (vol. 3, PDF p. 248, printed p. 237; MS P-R-Sa no. 2253); GPT1 — p. 116, no. 17; GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 17 (almost without variants). Majumdar quotes from it the lines "without cause Gora's face smiles" and "if I do not see Gora, everything tastes of poison".

11. "Without cause" (bini) — the smile comes not from an outward occasion but from inner joy. Yellow silk (pita-pata) is Krishna's garment; in Navadvipa the Lord, in Krishna's mood, asked for yellow cloth (cf. PK 2122, chapter 3, no. 1). MS P-R-Sa: "mukhe" ("on the face").

4. Govinda Ghosha — "śrīdāma sudāma saṅge ye rasa karilum̐ raṅge..." (PK 2128; BR, p. 919)

*Lila: Navadvipa — the Lord remembers the pastimes of Vrindavana and, crying "The flute, the flute!", falls senseless into Gadadhara's lap; then, in Radha's mood, He repeats Her name and calls Lalita and Vishakha. Around Him are Vasu Ghosha, Ramananda, Srivasa, Jagadananda, Narahari. According to Majumdar — an eyewitness's testimony; he cites the line about Narahari as proof that Narahari Sarakara was with the Lord already in Navadvipa. Raga mangala (PK, GPT), dhanashi (BR).*¹²

- 4.1. "The pastimes I enjoyed so gladly with Shridama and Sudama!.." — saying this, the Lord cries out in agitation.
Crying "The flute, the flute!", Gaurahari loses consciousness, and the Lord falls into Gadadhara's lap.¹³
- 4.2. The rasa-lila, Vrindavana, the dear friends and girl-companions — waves of prema rise.
Vasu Ghosha, Ramananda, Srivasa, Jagadananda — with Narahari the Lord is intoxicated.¹⁴
- 4.3. Absorbed in Radha's mood, He has become golden — Gora — and ceaselessly repeats Radha's name.
Crying "Lalita, Vishakha!", the Lord rolls on the ground:
"Where is My hill Govardhana?"
- 4.4. Where is the bank of the Yamuna? Where is My banyan Vamshivata?" — saying this, He again loses consciousness.
Poor Govinda Ghosha received but a particle of this — shame on such a life!¹⁵

12. The signature is "Govinda Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 239–240 (printed pp. 228–229), 18th pallava, right after Shivananda Sena's pada PK 2127; MS P-R-Sa no. 2235; after it PK notes "Such is the description of absorption in bhava". Narahari Chakravarti quotes the pada in BR (wave 12; ed. 1913, p. 919; ed. 1960, vv. 2997–3000) among the testimonies to the Lord's moods in Navadvipa; GPT1 — pp. 281–282, no. 15; GPT2 — sect. 4.3, no. 15. Majumdar quotes the line about Vasu Ghosha, Ramananda, Srivasa, Jagadananda and Narahari after BR. In the stage-1 catalogue the first line of the next pada (PK 2129) was wrongly assigned to PK 2128.

13. Shridama and Sudama are Krishna's cowherd friends in Vraja; BR and GPT read "Shridama and Subala". The Lord in Krishna's mood remembers His pastimes with His friends. Gadadhara Pandita, according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika, is a manifestation of Radha in Gaura's lila (cf. chapter 3, no. 1).

14. "Ramananda" is probably Ramananda Vasu of Kulinagrama (the Lord met Ramananda Raya only after His sannyasa). BR and GPT read "the Lord dances with Narahari". Majumdar sees in the line proof that Narahari Sarakara was a companion of the Lord already in Navadvipa.

15. "In Radha's mood... became golden" — cf. CC Adi 4: Krishna took on Radha's lustre and mood to taste Her love. Vamshivata is the banyan in Vrindavana under which Krishna played the flute. BR and GPT1 read "nā pāyala labaleṣe" — "did not receive even a particle"; P-R-Sa, BR and GPT — "e chāra jībana" — "this wretched life". The signature is the usual formula of humility.

5. Vasu Ghosha — "dekhata jhulata gauracandra..." (PK 1550)

*Lila: Navadvipa — the swing festival (jhulana) in the bright fortnight of Shravana: the devotees swing Gaurachandra, the townspeople come running at the cries of "Hari, Hari!". In PK — the gaura-chandrika opening the section on the swinging of Radha and Krishna. According to Majumdar — a pada about an event Vasu Ghosha saw himself. Raga jayajayanti.*¹⁶

5.1. Behold: Gaurachandra is swinging, the wondrous jewel among the twice-born;
the utmost of the Creator's making, a matchless form that outshines tested gold.

5.2. Many devotees push the swing, surrounding Gaurachandra;
in joy the cries of "Jaya!" sound again and again, overflowing the town in a wave.¹⁷

5.3. Eyes like lotuses, a spotless face that outshines the autumn moon;
the townspeople come running in a throng, hearing the cries of "Hari, Hari!".

5.4. Blessed is the Kali age, blessed Gora's descent, blessed, blessed the Suradhuni!
Nothing but Gorachand is in the heart — so says Vasu Ghosha, having understood this.¹⁸

16. The signature is "Vasu Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 456 (printed p. 441), 30th pallava of the 3rd shakha ("The swing lila"), under the heading "Now, the swinging game in the bright fortnight of Shravana. Jhulana. Here — Sri Gaurachandra"; MS P-R-Sa no. 2015. In GPT (GPT1, pp. 323–324, no. 8; GPT2, section on the jhulana, no. 8) the pada is shorter — three couplets: after the first two comes "Eyes like lotuses... outshines the autumn moon; / with Gadadhara He swings joyfully — seeing it, Shiva-Ram is blessed", i.e. the signature of the poet Shivarama. Majumdar counts PK 1550 among Vasu Ghosha's historically valuable padas describing what the poet saw himself (the jhulana); we accept the signature of Vasu after PK.

17. The end of the couplet is damaged in the PK scan; we read "uthale nagara bhariyā" ("overflowing the town in a wave"); GPT: "uṭhata nāgara nadiyā" ("[the din] rises in the town of Nadia").

18. The Suradhuni is the Ganga, on whose bank the swing was set up. "Having understood this" — having understood that Gaura is the Lord Himself.

6. Narahari — "āju racita naba ratana-himḍora..." (PK 1559)

Lila: Navadvipa — the jhulana: on the bank of the Ganga, under a tall tree, a new jewelled swing has been set up; the companions swing Gaura, sing and dance to the drums, the people of Nadia come running, the gods shower the Lord with flowers. In PK — a gaura-chandrika in the same section on the jhulana. Raga imana-beloyara.¹⁹

- 6.1. (Refrain) Today a new jewelled swing has been set up; there, on the bank of the Suradhuni, under a tall tree, — the young Gaura, full of rasa.
- 6.2. The skilful companions gently push the swing and sing melodies, intoxicated with sweet rasa; they call out the syllables of the rhythm — "khol, khol, tak, thai-thai" — dance sweetly and play in every manner.²⁰
- 6.3. In the town of Nadia no one has stayed at home:
from every side men and women come;
the joy in their hearts grows ever greater as they behold the Lord's smiling moon-face.
- 6.4. The gods in the sky with their retinues, in bliss, shower flowers and cry "Jaya!"; Narahari says: the world has gone mad with joy — who can describe this wondrous, boundless play?²¹

19. The signature is "Narahari". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 460 (printed p. 445), 30th pallava, the third pada of the section on the jhulana after the padas of Shivarama (PK 1556–1557, the swinging of Radha and Krishna) and Uddhava Dasa (PK 1558, Gaura swinging with Gadadhara); MS P-R-Sa no. 2103. GPT1 — p. 326, no. 16 (raga imana); GPT2 — section on the jhulana, no. 16. S. Ray's index of poets assigns PK 1557 to Narahari, but that is Shivarama's pada on the swinging of Radha and Krishna; the gaura-pada signed Narahari in this section is PK 1559. The attribution to Narahari Sarakara is not proven: the signature "Narahari" is also borne by padas of Narahari Chakravarti, and the language here is Vrajabuli, which according to Majumdar is absent from Sarakara's genuine padas.

20. The khol is a clay drum (mridanga); "tak, thai-thai" are rhythmic syllables of the dance. For "play" (bāota) MS P-R-Sa reads "bājāyata" (same sense).

21. "Has gone mad" (umatāyala) — intoxicated with the joy of prema at the sight of the Lord.

7. Chaitanyadasa — "gaurāṅga-cāndera mane ki bhāba uṭhila..." (PK 1169)

*Lila: Navadvipa — the goshta-lila: seeing Gauridasa, the Lord remembers His play as a cowherd boy, asks for the milking rope and the milk pail, calls the cows Dhavali and Shangali and His friends Shridama and Sudama; Nityananda embraces Him. In PK — the gaura-chandrika to the goshtashtami festival. According to Majumdar — the same goshta-lila (Gauridasa, the milking rope) as in Vasu Ghosha. Raga bhupali.*²²

- 7.1. What bhava has arisen in the heart of Gaurangachand?
It seems He has remembered His former deeds.
- 7.2. Seeing Gauridasa's face, He rejoices at heart and calls aloud: "Bring the milking rope!"
- 7.3. Today is an auspicious day — let us go to the pasture:
from today I shall begin to milk the cows.
- 7.4. Where are Dhavali and Shangali? Where are Shridama and Sudama?
Give the milk pail into My hands, Rama!"²³
- 7.5. Beside Himself with bhava is the son of Shachi; and at once Nityananda comes and embraces Him.
- 7.6. Chaitanyadasa says: the milking rope
Gauridasa has lost — the gopis have stolen it.²⁴

22. The signature is "Chaitanyadasa". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 286, 20th pallava of the 3rd shakha, the first pada of the section "Goshthashtami-yatra", under the heading "Sri Gaurachandra"; MS P-R-Sa no. 1700. GPT1 — p. 331, no. 32 (raga bhupala); GPT2 — no. 32 — with minor variants. Goshthashtami (Kartika, eighth day of the bright fortnight) is the festival of Krishna's first going out to herd the cows. Majumdar regards Chaitanyadasa (probably of Gadadhara's branch) as a contemporary and compares the pada with the goshtha-lila in Vasu Ghosha (BR, p. 935; chapter 1, no. 11) and Vamshivadana (PK 2564; chapter 1, no. 12).

23. Dhavali ("the white one") and Shangali (śāṇālī, "the dark one"; GPT — Shamali, the same sense) are Krishna's cows. "Rama" is Balarama: so the Lord addresses Nityananda, who in Krishna's lila is Balarama. Shridama and Sudama are Krishna's cowherd friends.

24. A playful signature: Gauridasa Pandita in Krishna's lila is the cowherd boy Subala (according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika), and in Vraja the gopis hide the milking rope to delay Krishna. GPT and MS P-R-Sa read "ḍuri" for "dari" (same sense).

8. Nayananda — "kali-ghora-timire garāsala jaga-jana..." (PK 2204)

*Praise of Gaura: when the darkness of Kali had swallowed the world and people had abandoned dharma, the Creator granted, without any sadhana, the chintamani gem — Gora, the Lord of great mercy; learning without worship of Gauranga is useless. Raga shri (PK), suhai (GPT).*²⁵

8.1. The dense darkness of Kali has swallowed the people of the world, dharma and righteous deeds remain far away;

without any effort the Creator brought and bestowed the chintamani gem —

Gora, the Lord of great mercy.²⁶

8.2. (Refrain) Brother, brother, Gora's virtues cannot be told:

however many hundred-mouthed ones, however many four-faced ones there are — describing them, they find no end.²⁷

8.3. One who has studied the four Vedas and six darshanas but does not worship Gauranga — what use is his learning? As a mirror to the blind, so is all his knowledge to him.²⁸

8.4. One who knows neither the Vedas nor learning but knows that Gauranga is the essence of all — says Nayananda — he knows everything, all perfections lie in the palm of his hand.

25. The signature is "Nayananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 270 (printed p. 259), 20th pallava ("Sri Gaurachandra — another manner"), raga the same as that of the preceding pada (shri); MS P-R-Sa no. 2312. GPT1 — p. 32, no. 18 (raga suhai); GPT2 — sect. 1.3, no. 18. Nayananda (Nayana Mishra) is the nephew and disciple of Gadadhara Pandita; Majumdar counts him among the contemporary poets. In the stage-1 catalogue a GPT-only pada signed Narahari, "gorā baṛa dayāra ṭhākura" (NS-009), was wrongly linked to PK 2204: the words "Gora, the Lord of great mercy" occur here too, but PK 2204 is Nayananda's pada.

26. Chintamani is the wish-fulfilling gem. "Without any effort" (asādhane) — without sadhana: Gaura bestows prema by causeless mercy, without asking about qualification (cf. CC Adi 8).

27. "The hundred-mouthed" — Ananta-Shesha, who ever sings of the Lord with a thousand mouths; "the four-faced" — the Brahmas of the universes.

28. PK: "as to the eyeless [a mirror] — what is a mirror to him?"; GPT: "what is the blind man to do with a mirror?". The six darshanas are the six philosophical schools (nyaya, vaisheshika, sankhya, yoga, mimamsa, vedanta).

9. Raya Ananta — "preme matta nityānanda..." (KGC, 11th kshanada)

*Praise of Nityananda: intoxicated with prema, He walks swaying, rolls on the ground with the name of Hari and weeps looking at the face of His brother, Gaura; Advaita, seeing Him, roars; the companions sing the names of Hari and Gaura. Raga kamoda (KGC), mangala (GPT).*²⁹

9.1. Nityananda, intoxicated with prema, the source of natural bliss, walks swaying, swaying;
intoxicated with His brother's mood, knowing all truths, crying "Hari!" He rolls on the ground.³⁰

9.2. (Refrain) Nitai's body is moulded of love for Gora; looking at His brother's face, He sinks down limply, and streams of tears flow, watering the earth.³¹

9.3. Advaita, the source of bliss, seeing Nitai's moon-face, roars, and His body bristles with rapture;
they cry "Hari, Hari!", and again "Gaura, Gaura!" — the dear companions sing His virtues.

9.4. The flood of Goloka's prema has blessed the earth — a matchless, boundless ocean of rasa;
the world is intoxicated, filled with the names "Nitai — Chaitanya";
Raya Ananta begs but a drop.³²

29. The signature is "Raya Ananta" (rāya ananta). The pada is known from KGC (11th kshanada — Krishna-ekadashi, no. 2, a gaura-chandrika marked "of Sri Nityananda"; p. 83) and GPT (GPT1 — pp. 429–430, no. 52; GPT2 — sect. 6.1, no. 52); it had not previously been found in PK (see below). B. B. Majumdar (1961) identifies the "Raya Ananta" of KGC with Ananta of Advaita's branch, a contemporary of the Lord; the identification is not proven. The text follows KGC (checked against the scan). Full PK check (chapter 16): the pada is also in PK — PK 2328 (vol. 3, 22nd pallava, PDF pp. 313–314, label " ଓଠେ ଶୁଭିଷ୍ଟ ", MS P-R-Sa no. 2432); PK signature "ananta nā pāila eka bindu" (MSS ka, kha: "rāya ananta māge eka bindu").

30. "The source of natural bliss" (sahaje ānanda-kanda) — Nityananda ("eternal bliss") by His very nature. "Knowing all truths" — Nityananda (Balarama) knows the hidden truth about Gaura.

31. "Brother" (bhāiyā) is Gaura; for "looking at His brother's face" GPT reads "looking at Gadadhara's face".

32. Goloka is Krishna's supreme abode; "the flood of Goloka's prema" is the prema that Gaura and Nitai brought to the earth. GPT: "begs a single drop".

10. Vasu Ghosha — "śacīra mandire āsi duyārera pāṣe basi..." (PK 2221)

*Lila: the last night in Navadvipa — Vishnupriya wakes, does not find the Lord and comes to Shachi; Shachi and her daughter-in-law search for Nimai with a lamp, the people of Nadia question passers-by; someone has seen Him on the road to Kanchananagara (Katwa). According to Majumdar — a pada of Vasu Ghosha's cycle on the sannyasa ("Nimai-sannyasa"): a historical picture with poetic exaggerations. Raga bibhasa-karuna.*³³

10.1. Coming to Shachi's rooms, sitting down by the door, softly Vishnupriya speaks:
"He was in the bedchamber — where has He gone in the night, bringing down a thunderbolt upon my head?"

10.2. Gauranga is awake in my heart, there is no sleep in my eyes..." — hearing this, Mother Shachi rose; with dishevelled hair she runs, her cloth slipping off — hearing her daughter-in-law's words.³⁴

10.3. Quickly lighting a lamp, she looked here and there, but nowhere found a trace;
together with her daughter-in-law Vishnupriya, weeping and weeping on the road, Shachi calls: "Nimai!"

- 10.4. Hearing this, the people of Nadia weep aloud in grief, asking everyone for news:
 if one man goes along the road, ten ask him:
 "Have you seen where Gauranga went?"
- 10.5. He answers: "I saw Him on the road — no one was with Him, He hastens along the road to Kanchananagara."
 Vasu Ghosha says: such is Shachi's state —
 "What if He shaves His head!"³⁵

33. The signature is "Vasu Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 275–276 (printed pp. 264–265), 21st pallava ("Sri Gauranga's sannyasa, etc."), the fourth pada of the pallava — after Lochana Dasa's padas PK 2219 (before dawn the Lord goes to the Ganga and on to Kanchananagara) and PK 2220 (Vishnupriya wakes and does not find the Lord); MS P-R-Sa no. 2326. GPT1 — p. 372, no. 20 (raga bibhasa or karuna), GPT2 — sect. 5.3, no. 20: one couplet longer (at the beginning: "She touched the bed with her hand — and a thunderbolt fell on her head...") and with another signature ("Vasu says: ah, my Sri Gaurahari — what if He shaves His head!"). The events — CB Madhya 28; CC Adi 17; Murari 3.1; Lochana, Madhya-khanda. Majumdar includes PK 2221–2223, 2225, 2226, 2229 in Vasu Ghosha's sannyasa cycle. In the stage-1 catalogue the first line of PK 2220 (a pada of Lochana Dasa) was wrongly assigned to PK 2221.

34. Vishnupriya thought of the Lord all night: "Gauranga is awake in my heart". GPT: "...no sleep in the eyes — hearing this, mother Shachi awoke".

35. Kanchananagara (Kantaka-nagara) is Katwa, where the Lord took sannyasa from Keshava Bharati. "Shaves His head" — takes sannyasa.

11. Vasu Ghosha — "sakala mahānta meli sakāle sināna kari..." (PK 2222)

*Lila: the morning after the Lord's departure — the devotees come to see Gauranga, but He is gone: Vishnupriya lies prostrate, Shachi weeps at the gate and asks who taught her son sannyasa. Raga pahida.*³⁶

- 11.1. All the great souls together, having bathed in the morning, came to see Gauranga.
 Gauranga has gone, leaving home; Vishnupriya lies prostrate, Shachi weeps at the outer gate.³⁷
- 11.2. Shachi says: "Listen, my Nitai, jewel of virtues:
 who came and gave Him a mantra, who taught Him what tantra?
 What has happened — I know nothing."³⁸
- 11.3. I was asleep in the house, knowing nothing —
 what has He done, going away and leaving me?
- 11.4. What cruelty He has done! He has cast me adrift on a shoreless sea — whose face shall I look to now?"
- 11.5. Vasudeva Ghosha says: such is Shachi's state —
 she lies as if dead;
- 11.6. striking her head with her hand, she gestures to Ishana:
 "Gora has gone, leaving Nadia."³⁹

36. The signature is "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 276 (printed p. 265), 21st pallava, no. 5; MS P-R-Sa no. 2327, P-R 40.34. GPT1 — p. 373, no. 22; GPT2 — sect. 5.3, no. 22 (OCR "21"). MS P-R gives a number of lines differently (see the full version of the book).

37. Great souls (mahānta) — the senior devotees. MS P-R: "all went to Gora", "[Vishnupriya] senseless on the ground".

38. "Nитай" — so the main text of PK and MS P-R; MSS "kha", P-R-Sa and GPT read "Nimai": Shachi addresses her departed son. "Mantra" and "tantra" mean initiation into sannyasa: Shachi does not know who gave her son the mantra (according to CB Madhya 28, the Lord Himself whispered the sannyasa mantra into Keshava Bharati's ear and then received it from him).

39. Ishana is the old servant in the house of Shachi and Vishnupriya. "Gestures" — in her grief she cannot speak.

12. Vasu Ghosha — "kāñcananagare eku bṛkṣa manohara..." (PK 2223)

*Lila: Katwa (Kanchananagara) — Gauranga sits under a tree on the bank of the Ganga; the townspeople come running, struck by His beauty and resolve; Keshava Bharati appears, the Lord bows to him and asks for the gift of devotion. Raga shri.*⁴⁰

- 12.1. In Kanchananagara there is a lovely tree; on the bank of the Suradhuni — a cool and beautiful shade.
- 12.2. Beneath it the beautiful Gauranga sat down;
His body shines brighter than the lustre of gold.
- 12.3. The townspeople come running — young men and young women;
the wife leaves her husband, the ascetic leaves his japa.⁴¹
- 12.4. Someone says: "In what land did this young nagara live?
How do the men and women of that land go on living now?"⁴²
- 12.5. Someone says: "He has come, treading on His wife's throat and killing His mother's life."⁴³
- 12.6. At that time the magnanimous Keshava Bharati came;
seeing him, the Lord bowed down to him:
- 12.7. "Make Me Krishna's servant, Gosai, grant Me the gift of devotion!"
Vasu Ghosha says: a thunderbolt has fallen on the head.⁴⁴

40. The signature is "Vasu Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 276 (printed p. 265), 21st pallava, no. 6; MS P-R-Sa no. 2328. In GPT1 (pp. 368–369, no. 10, raga shri) and GPT2 (sect. 5.3, no. 10) the pada is longer: women stand with pitchers on their hips, the lame run leaning on sticks; the townspeople praise the mother who bore Him and plead: "Go back home, do not become a sannyasi, do not shave Your hair"; the Lord answers: "Bless Me, mothers and fathers: I shall give My head to Krishna's feet"; the signature — "May a thunderbolt fall on the head!". Kanchananagara (Kantaka-nagara) is Katwa; the events — CB Madhya 28, CC Adi 17, Murari 3.2.

41. A hyperbole: the Lord's beauty draws everyone away from their usual occupations; this is wonder at the sight of the Lord, not worldly attraction.

42. Nagara (nāgara) — an elegant young townsman; so the people of Katwa speak of the Lord. MS "gha": "enā gaura" ("this Gaura"), P-R-Sa: "enā nāgara".

43. That is, leaving His young wife and His mother in mortal grief. GPT: "has come having killed mother and father".

44. Cf. CB Madhya 28: the Lord asks Keshava Bharati for sannyasa as a mercy, to attain service to Krishna. "A thunderbolt" — the poet's grief: the sannyasa is settled.

13. Vasu Ghosha — "muṛāiyā cām̐cara cule snāna kari gaṅgā-jale..." (PK 2225)

*Lila: the sannyasa at Katwa — having shaved His curly locks and bathed in the Ganga, the Lord asks for red garments; Keshava Bharati gives two pieces of red cloth and a kaupina; the Lord asks the devotees to bless Him "that the sannyasa may not become a mockery and that in Vraja I may attain the Lord of Vraja", and runs off, heedless of direction. According to Majumdar — an episode omitted by the biographers; the "Nimai-sannyasa" cycle is a historical picture with poetic exaggerations. Raga pahida.*⁴⁵

- 13.1. Having shaved His curly locks and bathed in the water of the Ganga,
He says: "Give Me red garments."
Hearing Gauranga's words, the devotees weep aloud.

- 13.2. Two pieces of red cloth Bharati brought and gave,
and also gave one kaupina;
touching them to His head, Gaurahari put them on, regarding Himself as utterly lowly.⁴⁶
- 13.3. "You are My friends; give Me this blessing, laying your hands upon My head:
I have taken sannyasa — let it not become a mockery, let Me attain the Lord of Vraja in Vraja!"⁴⁷
- 13.4. Saying this, Gaura Raya runs, His face raised to the sky, heedless of the quarters and the points between;
following the devotees, rolling and rolling on the ground beside them, Vasu Ghosha weeps and sobs.⁴⁸

45. The signature is "Vasu Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 277 (printed p. 266), 21st pallava, no. 8; MS P-R-Sa no. 2330. GPT1 — p. 370, no. 14; GPT2 — sect. 5.3, no. 14 (with minor variants); in GPT it is followed (no. 15) by another pada with the same signature and similar lines ("You are the best of Vaishnavas, give Me this blessing... that going to Vraja I may attain the Lord of Vraja"). Majumdar quotes the lines "You are My friends, give Me a blessing..." as an example of a detail that the later biographers omitted for fear of diminishing the Lord's divinity. The preceding pada in PK (no. 2224, on the shaving of the head) bears the signature of Rasikananda, a later poet, not Vasu Ghosha.

46. The kaupina is a sannyasi's loincloth. "Touching them to His head" — respectfully receiving the sannyasi's garments from the guru. The Lord's humility is an example for sannyasis (cf. CC Adi 17).

47. The Lord plays the role of a devotee and asks for a blessing as befits a seeker: for Him sannyasa is a way to the service of Krishna in Vraja, not renunciation for its own sake. Cf. CC Madhya 3: after the sannyasa the Lord, in ecstasy, longs for Vrindavana.

48. "Heedless of direction" — in ecstasy the Lord runs, thinking He is going to Vrindavana (CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1).

14. Vasu Ghosha — "āre mora gaurāṅga nāyara..." (PK 2226)

*Lila: after the sannyasa — the Lord, His waterpot tied at His waist, runs wherever His eyes lead and does not turn at Nitai's call; Nitai pleads: "All the sinners You have saved will count for something if You save me." Raga bhatiyari (PK), suhai (GPT).*⁴⁹

- 14.1. (Refrain) Ah, my Gauranga, my beloved hero!
His golden body is drenched with the tears of prema.⁵⁰
- 14.2. His waterpot tied at His waist, He runs along the roads in every direction; Nitai, His brother in prema, calls Him — He does not turn round.
- 14.3. Nitai says: "However many sinners You have saved — all that will bear fruit if You save me."⁵¹
- 14.4. Of all the incarnations that have been on earth, to You alone the name Purifier of the Fallen is fitting."
- 14.5. Vasudeva Ghosha says: I am ill-starred — seeing me fallen, do not withhold Your mercy from me.⁵²

49. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 277 (printed p. 266), 21st pallava, no. 9; MS P-R-Sa no. 2331, P-R 14.1. The last couplet (with Vasudeva Ghosha's signature) is only in MS P-R-Sa; in the other MSS of PK the pada is unsigned. In GPT1 (p. 371, no. 17, raga suhai) and GPT2 (sect. 5.3, no. 17) there are four couplets; there the signature is woven into the plea: "Vasu says: Lord, however many sinners You have saved — it will be more if You save me." In the stage-1 catalogue this pada is entered twice: VG-061 (after GPT) and VG-137 (PK 2226, with a wrong first line taken from PK 2224).

50. Nayara (nāyara, from nāgara) — beloved, hero; GPT: "sundara" ("beautiful"), with the variant "nāyara".

51. Nityananda speaks out of humility, as a devotee. According to CC (Madhya 3) and CB (Antya 1), after the sannyasa the Lord wandered for three days in ecstasy through Radha-deshā, and Nityananda followed Him and brought Him to Shantipura.

52. "Ill-starred" (abhāgiyā) is the usual formula of humility in a signature.

15. Vasu Ghosha — "ki lāgiyā daṇḍa dhare aruṇa basana pare..." (PK 2229)

*Lila: Navadvipa after the sannyasa — the devotees are bewildered and grieve: why has the Lord taken the staff and red garments, shaved His head and, weeping "Radha, Radha", left His homeland; Srivasa sobs, Gadadhara can scarcely live, tears stream from Mukunda's eyes. According to Majumdar — a pada of the sannyasa cycle. Raga bhatiyari.*⁵³

15.1. Why does He hold a staff, why has He put on red garments, why has He shaved His hair?
Why, weeping "Radha, Radha!" with His moon-face, why has He left His native land?⁵⁴

15.2. At Srivasa's loud weeping stones melt; Gadadhara has no strength to live;
hot streams flow, like the Mandakini, from both of Mukunda's eyes.⁵⁵

15.3. They go round the houses of all the great souls, consoling: "So the Creator ordained," — but no one can be calm:
"A wife like a blazing flame — why did He leave her?
Why did He reject her love?"⁵⁶

15.4. What can I say of the grief? To speak is pain in the depths of the heart; not seeing Him, my heart is torn apart.
Knowing neither day nor night, in the anguish of separation Vasu Ghosha falls senseless.

53. The signature is "Vasu Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 278–279 (printed pp. 267–268), 21st pallava, no. 12; MS P-R-Sa no. 2334. GPT1 — p. 374, no. 26; GPT2 — sect. 5.3, no. 26 (almost without variants).

54. After the sannyasa the Lord is in Radha's mood: for Him sannyasa is a way of service to Krishna (cf. note 47).

55. The Mandakini is the heavenly Ganga. Srivasa, Gadadhara and Mukunda are the Lord's closest companions in Navadvipa.

56. "Consoling: 'So the Creator ordained'" — our understanding of the line "sakala mahānta ghare bidhātā bujhāi phire" (MSS "ka", "gha", "ca": "bujhāiyā", "kha": "bujhāite"). "Like a blazing flame" — radiant with beauty and purity (of Vishnupriya); one may also understand "He left His wife — [now] burning like the fire [of separation]".

16. Vasu Ghosha — "hari hari ki nā haila nadiyā nagare..." (PK 2228)

*Lila: the lament of the women of Nadia after the sannyasa (nagari-bhava): Keshava Bharati has struck their hearts as with a thunderbolt; the sannyasis have robbed them of their treasure; how will Vishnupriya survive now; Nadia, which was joy, has become like Gokula after Krishna's departure. According to Majumdar — a pada of nagari-bhava. Raga pahida.*⁵⁷

16.1. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! What has not befallen the town of Nadia!
Keshava Bharati came and hurled a thunderbolt upon the house of the souls of those full of rasa.⁵⁸

16.2. Giri, Puri, Bharati came and made Him an ascetic — they snatched the jewel from the end of our cloth.
All that we and our dear companions longed for in joy — all of it has become like a dream.⁵⁹

16.3. The youthful age, the attire, the curly locks on His head, the smile lighting up His face...

We are others' wives, and even we cannot keep life in us — how then will Vishnupriya survive?⁶⁰

- 16.4. The trees on the bank of the Suradhuni, lovely in the kadamba groves — the heart weeps seeing the ketaki.
Nadia was joy — and has become like Gokula;
Vasu Ghosha is dying, weeping.⁶¹

57. The signature is "Vasu Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 278 (printed p. 267), 21st pallava, no. 11; MS P-R-Sa no. 2333, P-R 40.105. GPT1 — p. 373, no. 24; GPT2 — sect. 5.3, no. 24. Majumdar counts PK 2228 among Vasu Ghosha's padas of nagari-bhava. The pada is put into the mouths of the women of Nadia; we translate faithfully to the author. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never looked at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta).

58. "Those full of rasa" (rasabatī) — the women of Nadia, whose hearts are given to Gaura. MS P-R-Sa and GPT read "kuliśa" for "bajara" (thunderbolt; same sense).

59. Giri, Puri, Bharati are names of orders of sannyasis; Keshava Bharati belonged to the Bharati order. "The jewel from the end of the cloth" — what one keeps tied in the end of one's sari.

60. "Others' wives" — married women for whom Gaura is not a husband; the words convey the force of their grief. MSS P-R-Sa, P-R and GPT: "how will Vishnupriya pass [her life]" (bañcibe).

61. Gokula after Krishna's departure for Mathura is an image of inconsolable separation. Kadamba and ketaki blossom in the rainy season and recall Krishna. The second half of the first line is read variously: PK "kadambakhaṇḍite cāru", MSS "ka", "kha", "ca" "...baru", P-R-Sa "kadamba khaṇḍita uru", GPT "kadambakhaṇḍete uru".

17. Madhava Ghosha — "nāce pahu kaladhauta-gorā..." (PK 2289)

*Lila: the dance of the Lord as a sannyasi — golden Gora in a kaupina and a red outer cloth, a garland at His throat, in tears of prema and bristling with rapture, trembling like a plantain tree at dawn. The place is not named; in PK the pada stands in the pallava on the sannyasa. According to Majumdar — one of Madhava Ghosha's four padas on the Lord's sannyasa. Raga mayura.*⁶²

- 17.1. (Refrain) The Lord dances — golden Gora; ceaselessly, like the full moon, shines the orb of His face;
ever is He intoxicated with the rasa of prema.
- 17.2. His two red eyes outshine the petals of a red lotus,
the two pupils are a pair of bumblebees;
as a heavenly river runs down a golden mountain, so streams of prema flow down His breast.
- 17.3. His waist is slenderer than a lion's, on it a slender kaupina, the outer cloth is red in colour;
at the throat a garland, the ornaments glow with light, the nose is like an opening sesame flower.⁶³
- 17.4. The two arms are like a pair of golden lotus stalks, the two hands — the play of lotuses;
the red lotus cannot compare with His feet — at their touch the earth rejoices.
- 17.5. From feet to head His body bristles with rapture, like a kadamba flower in full beauty;
like a plantain at dawn His body trembles again and again, — captivating the heart of Madhava Ghosha.⁶⁴

62. The signature is "Madhava Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 299–300 (printed pp. 288–289), 21st pallava, no. 72, under the heading "Another manner"; MS P-R-Sa no. 2393. In GPT1 — p. 153, no. 123 (raga mayura), with the reading "nāce pahu abadhūta gorā" ("the Lord dances — Gora the avadhuta"); in GPT2 — twice: sect. 3.1, no. 123 (likewise) and sect. 4.2, no. 38 ("kaladhauta"). MSS "ka", "kha", "ca" of PK also read "abadhauta" — "avadhuta" (a wanderer above all rules). Majumdar counts PK 2289 among Madhava Ghosha's four padas on the Lord's sannyasa. In the stage-1 catalogue this pada is entered three times (MG-001, MG-002, MG-007).

63. "Donā" (donāra mālā) — the meaning is unclear (perhaps a garland of dona leaves or flowers); MS P-R-Sa: "at the throat a garland sways" (dolaye). The sesame flower is a traditional comparison for a beautiful nose.

64. Bristling hair (pulaka) and trembling are sattvika-bhavas, signs of prema; the kadamba flower with its protruding filaments is an image of a body bristling with rapture. The editor of PK suggests the reading "prabāte" — "in the wind" instead of "prabhāte" — "at dawn".

18. Vasu Ghosha — "eta dine sadaya haila more bidhi..." (PK 1994)

*Lila: the Lord's return to the neighbourhood of Navadvipa (1514/15) — the words of a devotee who sees Gora again after a long separation. In PK — a gaura-chandrika to "samriddhiman-sambhoga" (the fullness of the joy of Radha and Krishna's meeting after a long separation), marked "words of the devotees". According to Majumdar — an eyewitness's pada on the Lord's return to Navadvipa. Raga suhai.*⁶⁵

18.1. At last the Creator has had mercy on me:
he has brought and given me Gora, the treasury of virtues.

18.2. At last the cruel grief is over:
my eyes have found their purpose, seeing the moon-face.

18.3. Long have my eyes been fasting — as if a thirsty chakora had found the moon.⁶⁶

18.4. Vasudeva Ghosha sings the song of Gora:
as if one blind from birth had gained his eyes.

65. The signature is "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 191 (printed p. 180), the first pada of the 13th pallava of the 4th shakha ("The outpouring of rasa of samriddhiman-sambhoga. Here — Sri Gaurachandra: words of the devotees"); MS P-R 26.1 (raga bibhasa in it). GPT1 — p. 413, no. 33 (raga suhai); GPT2 — sect. 5.5, no. 33. On the same page of GPT1 (no. 31) stands Vasu Ghosha's pada "The people of Nadia came to see Gauranga" (chapter 1, no. 23), which Majumdar quotes from GPT, p. 413; it is also in PK — no. 1991 (vol. 3, PDF p. 190, reading "dhāola" — "came running") — a correction to chapter 1. Majumdar counts PK 1991, 1994 and 2273 among Vasu Ghosha's padas on the Lord's return to Navadvipa: on His way to Gauda (1514/15) the Lord stopped at Kuliya opposite Navadvipa, and crowds flocked to Him (CC Madhya 1, 16; CB Antya 3).

66. The chakora is a bird which, according to poetic tradition, feeds on moonlight. MS P-R: "my eyes fasted greatly".

19. Vasu Ghosha — "sannyāsī haiyā gelā puna yadi bāhuṛilā..." (PK 2273)

*Lila: having taken sannyasa, the Lord returned to Gauda (1514/15) but did not come to the town of Nadia; Vishnupriya's grief: "Akrura was better — he took Krishna only to Mathura, whence news comes, but Bharati has made You a stranger in foreign lands." According to Majumdar — a pada on the Lord's return to Navadvipa. Raga pahida.*⁶⁷

19.1. "Having become a sannyasi, He went away; and even when He returned,
He did not come to the town of Nadia, to press heart to heart, making no difference between one's own and others, and to let us see His moon-face."⁶⁸

19.2. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! Gauranga, why have You become like this?
To all You are merciful — only me, a woman, You have deprived and cast into this ocean of grief.

- 19.3. In this early youth, having shaved Your curly locks —
 I do not know what perfection You were seeking.
 What worthless purana, what beast-like pandita enjoined sannyasa on Gauranga?⁶⁹
- 19.4. Akrura was better: at the king's word he took [Krishna] away and kept Him in the city of Mathura; every day people come and go — from them one gets news;
 but Bharati has made You a stranger in foreign lands."⁷⁰
- 19.5. Saying this, Vishnupriya, pained to the depths of her heart, begs the earth to open.
 Vasudeva Ghosha says: there is no wretch like me — and yet my heart is breaking.⁷¹

67. The signature is "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 294 (printed p. 283), 21st pallava, no. 56; MS P-R-Sa no. 2377. The same pada is printed in PK once more — no. 1801 (vol. 3, PDF p. 111), in the section on separation, before "The twelve months of Sri Radhika's separation". GPT1 — p. 389, no. 23 (raga pahida); GPT2 — no. 23. Majumdar counts PK 2273 among the padas on the Lord's return to Navadvipa; cf. CC Madhya 16 (the Lord at Kuliya) and chapter 1, nos. 22–23.

68. The stanza also allows another understanding: "...[we] waited, pressing heart to heart, making no difference between one's own and others, to see the moon-face." MSS "gha", "ca", PK 1801 and GPT: "tāra mukha" — "His face".

69. These are Vishnupriya's words of grief, not the poet's judgement on the shastras: the sannyasa was the will of the Lord Himself, accepted for the deliverance of living beings (CC Adi 17; CB Madhya 26). We read "ki chāra purāṇa se, paśubata paṇḍita ye" after PK 1801 and MSS "ka", "kha", "ca", P-R-Sa; the main text of PK 2273 has "ki chāra parāṇa ye, paśubata paṇḍita se" ("what worthless life..."), GPT "ki jāni parāṇa ye" ("I know not what life...").

70. Akrura, at the order of King Kamsa, took Krishna and Balarama from Vraja to Mathura (Bhag. 10.39). "A stranger in foreign lands" (deśāntarī) — one who has gone to distant parts.

71. "Begs the earth to open" (dharaṇīre māgaye bidāra) — like Sita; MS P-R-Sa: "bidāya" ("begs the earth for leave to depart"). The signature is a formula of humility.

Chapter 5. Praise of Gaura, the Pastimes of Navadvipa, Separation, and Nityananda in Gauda

*Padas of contemporaries which Majumdar (*Sri-Chaitanya-chariter upadan, ch. 2) assigns to the Lord's own time, in the order of the lilas: praise of Gaura (Paramananda); a kirtana festival in Advaita's house (Parameshvara Dasa); the Lord's pastimes with Gadadhara and His companions in Navadvipa, which Narahari Chakravarti cites in the Bhakti-ratnakara as the testimony of the eyewitness Vasu Ghosha (the battle of flowers, the game of dice, the water play, the rasa, the spring festival of colours); the Lord's ecstatic moods (Shivananda, Chaitanyadasa); the separation of Navadvipa after the sannayasa (Paramananda, Vasu Ghosha, Chaitanyadasa, Madhava Ghosha); and Nityananda in Gauda (Kanu Thakura). The text follows the Padakalpataru (PK), the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR), the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC) and the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Paramananda (Gupta) — "gorā-abatāre yāra nā haila bhakati-sāra..." (PK 2202)

*Lila: praise of Gaura — a call to worship the feet of Gorachand, the Purifier of the fallen. In PK the pada stands in the 20th pallava among padas on Gaura's mercy; in GPT, among the mangalacharanas (songs of blessing that open a kirtana). According to Majumdar it is one of the padas signed "Paramananda" which he ascribes to Paramananda Gupta, the Lord's companion in Navadvipa — perhaps a fragment of his lost *Gauranga-vijaya. Raga kamoda.¹

1.1. One in whom the essence of devotion did not awaken in the descent of Gora — for him I see no other means:

one whose eyes did not brighten in the rays of the sun has been deprived by the Creator.²

1.2. (Refrain) Worship the feet of Gorachand!

In the three worlds, brothers, there is no such Lord of mercy:
Gora is the great Purifier of the fallen.

1.3. Is He a golden cloud, or a lake of prema — the descent, an ocean of mercy!

Whoever, having found such a descent, is not cooled —
I do not know what kind of heart he has.

1.4. To cross the ocean of worldly existence, making the mantra of Hari's name a raft, Gauranga Himself ferries [all] across.

If anyone still drowns and perishes — who will save him?
This is Paramananda's plea.³

1. Signature: "Paramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 269 (printed p. 258), 20th pallava ("Sri Gaurachandra — another mode"), no. 19; MS P-R-Sa no. 2310. GPT1 — p. 16, no. 40 (raga kamoda); GPT2 — sect. 1.2, no. 40. Majumdar divides the twelve PK padas signed "Paramananda" into Vrajabuli padas of a later poet of Vrindavana and Bengali padas which he ascribes to Paramananda Gupta — the Lord's companion in whose house Nityananda stayed (CB); he regards PK 2202, 2119, 672 and 1693 as possibly fragments of his lost Gauranga-vijaya-gita, mentioned by Jayananda. The attribution is conjectural (S. Ray assigned these padas to Karnapura, Paramananda Sena).

2. "Essence of devotion" (bhakati-sāra); MSS "ka", "kha", "cha" and GPT: "the taste of devotion" (bhakati-rasa). The image: Gaura is the sun; whoever stays blind at His rising can be helped by nothing else.

3. "Plea" (parihāra) — the poet's humble entreaty. The raft of the holy name is an image of the nama-sankirtana which the Lord brought (CC Adi 3, 7).

2. Paramananda (Gupta) — "paraśa-mañira sane ki diba tulanā re..." (PK 672)

*Lila: praise of Gaura: neither the touchstone, nor the moon, nor the wish-fulfilling tree can be compared with Him — He gave away prema without waiting to be asked. In PK the pada is the gaura-chandrika to the section "rasodgara-anuraga" (Radha recalls Her meeting with Krishna). According to Majumdar — possibly from Paramananda Gupta's *Gauranga-vijaya. Raga vibhasa.⁴

2.1. What can be compared with the touchstone? — at its touch [iron] turns to gold;

but by the virtues of my Gauranga, dancing and singing, how many people have become jewels!⁵

2.2. (Refrain) The son of Shachi, wearing the forest garland,

He to whom nothing in the three worlds can be compared — Gora, the darling of my life.⁶

2.3. Beside the form of the moon Gauranga that moon is spotted:

it cannot shine like this.
A spotless full moon has risen in the town of Nadia — and the darkness of the heart has gone far away.

2.4. In this virtue neither [the cow] Surabhi nor the tree of the gods equals Him:

from them only one who asks receives;
but He, unasked, filled the whole world — to each person, entreating, He gave the wealth of prema.⁷

2.5. Gorachand can be compared only with the Lord Gorachand Himself — consider, all of you, and you will see.

In Paramananda's heart there is a great longing:
when will Gauranga's mercy come?

4. Signature: "Paramananda". PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 61–62, 6th pallava, no. 9 ("Then — rasodgara-anuraga. Sri Gaurachandra"); MSS P-R-Sa no. 1147, P-R 22.27. GPT1 — p. 138, no. 78 (raga vibhasa). In MS P-R the stanzas stand in another order, and the last runs differently and is signed with the name of Nayananda: "Gaurangachand cannot be compared — consider in your hearts and see; in Nayananda's heart there is great joy: ponder Gora's virtues" (see VAR). The attribution to Paramananda (Ray's index, Majumdar) is therefore not wholly secure.

5. The touchstone (parasha-mani) only turns iron into gold, but the songs of Gauranga's virtues have made "jewels" of many people. MS P-R adds before this stanza: "How can I forget the lilas of Gaurangachand! At my Gauranga's virtues beasts and birds weep, stones melt and crumble."

6. "Darling of my life" (parāṇa-putalī, lit. "the little doll of my life") — what is dearest of all. MS P-R lacks the refrain.

7. Surabhi is the wish-fulfilling cow; the tree of the gods (kalpa-vriksha) is the wish-fulfilling tree: they give only what is asked of them. Cf. CC Adi 7 (the Lord gives prema to all without discrimination). MS P-R: "unasked, He Himself gave".

3. Paramananda (Gupta) — "gorā mora dayāra abadhi guṇanidhi..." (PK 2119)

*Lila: Navadvipa — Gauranga roams the bank of the Ganga leaning on the shoulders of devotees; He weeps, repeating "Haribol"; His body is covered with thrills, and the earth cannot hold Him. In PK — in the 18th pallava (the form of Sri Gauranga); in KGC — the first pada of the 14th kshanada. According to Majumdar — possibly from Paramananda Gupta's *Gauranga-vijaya. Raga shri.⁸

3.1. My Gora is the limit of mercy, the treasury of virtues:

on the bank of the Suradhuni, in the town of Nadia, Gauranga sports ceaselessly.

3.2. Placing both arms on the shoulders of devotees,

Gora cannot walk — He weeps, repeating "Haribol".

3.3. Both eyes brim with tears of prema —
how many rivers flow in streams!
His whole body is covered with thrills —
the earth cannot hold Him.

3.4. His associates go with Him ceaselessly, crying, "Hari, Hari!"
Placing both arms on His friends' shoulders,
He walks, swaying and rocking.

3.5. Filling the world, He poured out prema —
His name is "Purifier of the fallen".
Hearing this, Paramananda has taken hope:
his heart accepts nothing else.⁹

8. Signature: "Paramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 237 (printed p. 226), 18th pallava, no. 11; MS P-R-Sa no. 2227. In PK the pada stands immediately before Paramananda's pada "gorā-tanu dhūlāya loṭāya" (PK 2120; chapter 1, no. 7). GPT1 — p. 279, no. 6 (raga shri; the first line is the refrain); GPT2 — twice (sect. 1.3, no. 16; 4.3, no. 6). KGC — 14th kshanada, no. 1 (pp. 106–107; raga dhanashi) — with minor variants: "Gora is the limit of mercy" (without "my"), "Gorachand cannot walk — He weeps, repeating 'Hari, Hari'". Cf. CB Madhya 23 (the Lord with His devotees in kirtana along the bank of the Ganga).

9. "Poured out" (ubhārila; KGC ubhārāla) — lit. "made overflow". MSS "kha", "gha", P-R-Sa read in 3.4 "hilite" ("swaying").

4. Parameshvara Dasa — "eka dina pahum̐ hāsi advaita-mandire āsi..." (PK 23)

*Lila: the Lord comes to Advaita's house and with Nityananda and Advaita discusses a great festival; Sita Thakurani speaks sweet words; the Lord orders that all singers and musicians be invited, that a full water-pot, banana trees and garlands be set up, and that in the evening the "khol-mangala" be performed — the blessing of the mridanga before the kirtana. In PK — the first pada of the section "Adhivasa of the sankirtana". According to Majumdar (following S. Ray) — an eyewitness description. Raga dhanashi.*¹⁰

4.1. One day the Lord, smiling, came to Advaita's house — and the son of Shachi sat down;
with Nityananda, and with Advaita joyfully seated beside Him,
He deliberated on a great festival.

4.2. Hearing of this, laughing with joy, Sita Thakurani came and spoke sweet words.
Hearing them, joyfully, about the arrangement of the festival
the son of Shachi says:

4.3. "Listen, mistress Sita: let us bring Vaishnavas here, inviting them with care;
whoever sings, whoever plays — let us invite them all,
each one separately."

4.4. Saying this, Gora Raya commanded everyone:
"Invite the Vaishnavas;
take the khol and karatalas, anoint them with aloe-wood and sandal, set up the full water-pot;

4.5. plant banana trees, tie flower garlands to them, joyfully prepare the circle for kirtana;

with garlands, sandal, areca nuts, ghee, honey and curd, in the evening perform the khol-mangala."¹¹

- 4.6. Hearing the Lord's words, lovingly they did all as instructed, with various offerings and fragrances.
All cry "Hari, Hari!" and perform the khol-mangala — so, full of rasa, sings Parameshvara Dasa.¹²

10. Signature: "Parameshvara Dasa". PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 31 (printed p. 24), 1st shakha, no. 23, under the heading "Then — the adhivasa of the sankirtana"; MS P-R-Sa no. 23. GPT1 — p. 246, no. 26 (raga dhanashi), signed "Parameshvari Dasa"; after it in GPT1 (no. 27) comes another pada with the same signature, on the "seven groups" of the kirtana with fourteen mridangas. Parameshvara Dasa was a companion of Nityananda (CC Adi 11; CB, Antya-khanda), and later of Jahnava-devi. Majumdar, following S. Ray, regards the pada as an eyewitness description. Where this house of Advaita was — in Navadvipa or in Shantipura — the pada does not say.

11. The full water-pot (purna-ghata), banana trees and garlands are the usual adornment of a festival ground. The khol is the Bengali clay mridanga; the "khol-mangala" is the rite of blessing the mridanga before a kirtana: it is anointed with sandal, garlanded, and auspicious substances are offered to it. MSS "ga", "gha", "cha", P-R-Sa read in 4.3: "whoever plays [instruments]" (ye bājāya).

12. MS "ga" and GPT1 read in 4.1: "...seated in Advaita's house, the son of Shachi said". GPT1 ends: "Parameshvari Dasa is immersed in rasa" (rase bhāṣe) instead of "sings" (lit. "tells", bhāṣe).

5. Vasu Ghosha — "phulabana gorācāṁḍa dekhiyā nayane..." (PK 1525; BR, p. 936)

*Lila: Navadvipa, 1509 — seeing a flowering grove, the Lord remembers the battle of flowers; crying "Jaya!", His companions shower Him with flowers; Gadadhara and Nityananda are with Him. In the *Bhakti-ratnakara the guide shows Srinivasa Acharya this flower garden in Navadvipa and quotes the pada as testimony; in PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "Phula-dola" (the spring play with flowers). According to Majumdar — seen with the poet's own eyes (1509). Raga tudi (in BR, kamoda).¹³

- 5.1. Seeing with His eyes the flowering grove, Gorachand remembered the battle of flowers.¹⁴
- 5.2. Again and again crying "Jaya, jaya!", the associates one after another throw flowers at Gora.
- 5.3. With Him are the dear Gadadhara and Nityananda;
in the battle of flowers Gora was filled with joy.
- 5.4. With Gadadhara the Lord sports — this Vasudeva Ghosha has told.¹⁵

13. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 446, no. 101, under the heading "Then — phula-dola. Here — Sri Mahaprabhu"; MS P-R-Sa no. 2070. BR, wave 12 (ed. 1912/1913, p. 936; ed. 1960, vv. 3224–3229): before the pada Narahari Chakravarti writes: "One day, looking at this flower garden, [the Lord] says with a smile: 'A battle of flowers would be good!' — and His dear companions, taking bunches of flowers, fight with flowers while all look on." GPT1 — p. 342, no. 69 (raga tudi); GPT2 — sect. 5.1, no. 69. Majumdar calls this and the following padas of BR (pp. 936–943) — the battle of flowers, the game of dice, the water play, the holi with Gadadhara — scenes the poet saw himself; they are confirmed by Shivananda Sena's holi pada (chapter 1, no. 14), where Vasu is named among the dancers. In the stage-1 catalogue the pada was wrongly linked with PK 1186 (that is Vasu Ghosha's goshta pada — another recension of the pada in chapter 1, no. 11).

14. BR: "Seeing with His eyes an army of flowers, Gora said: 'A battle of flowers!'" (phula bala ... balila bacane). In Navadvipa the Lord was often absorbed in the moods of Krishna-lila (cf. chapter 1, nos. 9–13).

15. Here and in the following padas Gadadhara is the chief partner in the Lord's play. In Gaudiya Vaishnava theology Gadadhara Pandita is a manifestation of Sri Radha (Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika 147–153), and these pastimes reflect the lilas of Radha and Krishna: pure prema, in which there is nothing mundane. BR: "...with Gadadhara Gora sports — Vasudeva Ghosha reveals [this] rasa"; MS "gha": "Vasudeva Ghosha has revealed this rasa".

6. Vasu Ghosha — "gaurāṅgacāṁḍera mane ki bhāba paṛila..." (BR, pp. 936–937)

*Lila: Navadvipa, 1509 — sitting in the flower garden, the Lord plays dice (pasha-sari) with Gadadhara; both are immersed in the rasa of the game. The pada is known from BR and GPT. According to Majumdar — seen with the poet's own eyes. Raga kamoda.*¹⁶

6.1. What feeling arose in the heart of Gaurangachand! — taking dice and pieces, Gora started a game.

6.2. With Gadadhara Gora plays at dice;
they began to throw the dice, saying: "I lose — I win!"

6.3. "Two, four!" — Gadadhara throws his turn;
"Five, three!" — Gaurangasundara casts.¹⁷

6.4. The two were immersed in the rasa of the dice game; crying "Jaya, jaya!", Vasudeva Ghosha sings.

16. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". BR, wave 12 (ed. 1912/1913, pp. 936–937; ed. 1960, vv. 3230–3234): "One day Gaurahari with Gadadhara, sitting in this flower garden, plays at dice." GPT1 — p. 354, no. 32 (raga dhanashi), with minor variants ("the Lord began the game"). The pada was not previously found in PK (see the end of this note). The game of dice (pasha-khela) is a well-known lila of Radha and Krishna; on Gadadhara see note 15. Full PK check (chapter 16): another recension of the pada is in PK — PK 2668 (vol. 4, 30th pallava, ashtakaliya: "atha pāśā-kīṛī. tatra śrī-gauracandro yathā," PDF p. 114, label " ১৯৫ ২৬৬৮ "; "gaurāṅgacāṁḍera mane ki bhāba haila / pāśā śārī laiṇā pahu khelā ārambhila..., " signature "jaya jaya diyā gāya bāsudeba ghoṣe").

17. The players' cries name the throw they want. BR-1960, BR-2006 and GPT1: "'Five, three!' — calls out..." (ḍāke); GPT1 here names the Lord "Rasika-nagara" ("the connoisseur of rasa", a name of Krishna).

7. Vasu Ghosha — "jalakeli gorācāṁḍera maneta paṛila..." (PK 1108; BR, p. 937)

*Lila: Navadvipa, 1509 — the Lord remembers the water play and goes down into the Ganga with His companions; all splash one another; Gauranga splashes Gadadhara. In BR the guide shows Srinivasa that very ghat; in PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "Water play". According to Majumdar — seen with the poet's own eyes. Raga saranga (in BR, mayura).*¹⁸

7.1. The water play came to Gorachand's mind — with His associates He went down into the water.

7.2. Someone splashes water on someone;
Gauranga, scooping up water, splashes Gadadhara.¹⁹

7.3. With a joyful heart Gora sports in the water;
all shout with joy, all call to one another.

7.4. The lila of Gaurangachand cannot be told in words;
Vasudeva Ghosha sings of it — of Gora's virtues.

18. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 261, 16th pallava, no. 17, under the heading "Here — water play. Sri Gaurachandra befitting it"; MS P-R-Sa no. 1606. BR, wave 12 (ed. 1912/1913, p. 937; ed. 1960, vv. 3235–3239): "One day at this ghat the Lord with His companions plays in the water, remembering the former [lila]." GPT1 — p. 351, no. 25 (raga tūḍi); GPT2 — sect. 5.2, no. 25.

19. BR: "...Gadadhara splashes water on Gora's body." Krishna's water play (jala-keli) with Radha and the gopis is one of the lilas of Vraja; on Gadadhara see note 15.

8. Vasu Ghosha — "bṛndābana-līlā gorāra manete paṛila..." (PK 1253; BR, p. 941)

Lila: Navadvipa — the Lord remembers the lila of Vrindavana: the Ganga becomes for Him the Yamuna, the flowering grove Vrindavana, His companions the gopis; bringing together khols and karatalas, He dances in the midst of the kirtana, revealing the rasa of the rasa dance. In BR the guide tells Srinivasa: "Here Gaurachandra revealed great bliss, overcome by the former rasa of the rasa dance"; in PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "The great rasa on the autumn full moon". Raga tudi (in BR, kamoda).²⁰

- 8.1. The lila of Vrindavana came to Gora's mind:
the Suradhuni became for Him the Yamuna.²¹
- 8.2. He saw the flowering grove as like Vrindavana, and took His companions for the gopis.
- 8.3. Bringing together khols and karatalas, in their midst Gora dances amid cries of "Jaya, jaya!"
- 8.4. (Only in BR) Gora's body glows softly, outshining gold;
His youthful, lovely arms reach to the knees.
- 8.5. Vasudeva Ghosha delights in this:
Gorachand revealed the rasa of the rasa dance.²²

20. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 317–318, the first pada of the 24th pallava ("Then — the great rasa on the autumn full moon. Sri Gaurachandra befitting it"); the end of the pada and its number are smudged in the scan — by sequence it is no. 1 / 1253, which agrees with Ray's index and with Majumdar (PK 1253 is in his list of Vasu's padas "on bhava"). BR, wave 12 (ed. 1912/1913, p. 941; ed. 1960, vv. 3291–3296). GPT1 — p. 335, no. 46 (raga tudi). Couplet 8.4 is found only in BR. Majumdar, listing the pastimes on BR pp. 936–943, does not name this pada specifically, but it belongs to the same series.

21. BR: "He took the Suradhuni for the Yamuna" (yamunāra bhāṇa, "the semblance of the Yamuna"); PK and GPT: "He turned His feeling for the Yamuna upon the Suradhuni" (yamunāra bhāba). Suradhuni ("the river of the gods") is the Ganga.

22. In these pastimes the Lord relishes the moods of Krishna-lila; in the kirtana His companions become, as it were, the gopis — this is prema, pure and transcendental, not mundane feeling. The Gaudiya acharyas (Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta) teach that Mahaprabhu is Krishna who has accepted Radha's mood and lustre to taste Her love (CC Adi 1, 4); in Navadvipa He at times displayed the moods of Krishna Himself as well (cf. chapter 1, nos. 9–13). BR: "...Lord Gora reveals the rasa of the rasa."

9. Vasu Ghosha — "dekha dekha ṛtu-rāja basanta samaya..." (PK 1425; BR, pp. 942–943)

*Lila: Navadvipa, spring — the Lord plays with coloured powder (phagu) with His companions; Srivasa leads the musicians, Haridasa dances with upraised arms; Gadadhara is beside Him. In PK — the first pada of the section "Spring play on Vasanta-panchami" (gaura-chandrika); in BR — among the padas on spring in Navadvipa, after padas of Narahari Chakravarti. According to Majumdar — the holi with Gadadhara, seen with the poet's own eyes (1509). Raga vasanta.*²³

- 9.1. Look, look: the time of spring, the king of seasons — Gora Raya sports with His companions.
- 9.2. Gorachand plays with coloured powder in the town of Nadia, stealing the hearts of young women with the arrows of His eyes.²⁴
- 9.3. The companions together throw powder on Gora's body;
some run about with squirts of kunkuma.²⁵
- 9.4. Srinivasa has brought the various instruments into harmony; with Gadadhara and others [the Lord] sports.
- 9.5. Crying "Hari!", with upraised arms, Haridasa dances;
this rasa Vasudeva Ghosha has told.

23. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 395, no. 1, under the heading "Then — spring play on Vasanta-panchami. Here — Sri Mahaprabhu"; MS P-R-Sa no. 1978. BR, wave 12 (ed. 1912/1913, pp. 942–943; ed. 1960, vv. 3321–3324): the guide tells Srinivasa that Gaurachandra with His companions sported here in spring with great joy and that "here there was a wonderful game of phagu"; in BR the pada begins with the second couplet. GPT1 — pp. 337–338, no. 54 (raga vasanta); GPT2 — sect. 5.1, no. 54. Phagu is the red powder which people throw on one another at the spring festivals (Vasanta-panchami, dola-yatra or holi).

24. The words about young women are the language of nagari-bhava (Gaura as the nagara, the beloved of the town's women); we translate faithfully to the author. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never glanced at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta).

25. Kunkuma is a red powder (saffron); the squirt (pichaka, pichkari) is for coloured water. BR: "...run about with squirts of sandal-water"; GPT1: "...run after [Him] with squirts [of flower-water]".

10. Shivananda Sena — "soṇāra baraṇa gorā prema-binodiyā..." (PK 2127)

*Lila: Navadvipa — golden Gora has flooded Nadia with prema; leaning on Govinda, He listens to the glories of Vrindavana and, crying "Radha, Radha!", falls unconscious; Shivananda weeps, not comprehending the Lord's bhava. In PK — in the 18th pallava, immediately after Yadunatha Dasa's pada on the Lord's bhava (PK 2126). According to Majumdar the pada conveys the bewilderment of the devotees at the sight of Gauranga's ecstasies. Raga gauri.*²⁶

10.1. Golden Gora, rapt in prema, has flooded the town of Nadia with the waters of prema.

10.2. Down His broad chest stream torrents of prema; intoxicated with prema, He knows neither day nor night.

10.3. Leaning on Govinda, the Lord, absorbed, listens to the glories of Vrindavana.²⁷

10.4. "Radha, Radha!" cries the Lord and falls unconscious;
Shivananda weeps, not comprehending the Lord's bhava.²⁸

26. Signature: "Shivananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 239 (printed p. 228), 18th pallava, no. 19; MS P-R-Sa no. 2234. GPT1 — p. 281, no. 14 (raga gauri), also immediately after Yadunatha's pada "gadādhara narahari kare dhari gaurahari" (GPT1 no. 13). Shivananda Sena of Kumarahatta, the father of Kavi-Karnapura, led the devotees of Gauda to Puri every year; Majumdar regards his padas as written during the Lord's lifetime.

27. Govinda — probably Govinda Ghosha, the kirtana singer, singing to the Lord of Vrindavana; if the pada describes Puri, Govinda the Lord's servant. Cf. the padas of Murari Gupta "Leaning against Gadadhara..." and of Paramananda "Gora's body rolls in the dust" (chapter 1, nos. 6–7).

28. The Lord is Krishna who has accepted Radha's bhava; His cry "Radha, Radha!" and His swoon are manifestations of mahabhava (CC Adi 4). The words "not comprehending the bhava" are the poet's humility: the depth of this bhava is beyond the grasp even of His intimate companions.

11. Chaitanyadasa — "āre mora gaura kiśora..." (PK 1985)

*Lila: the Lord's bhava — youthful Gaura, rapt in the rasa of former love, says with tears of joy: "I have found the Youth of Vraja, all My sorrow is gone"; His companions laugh with joy. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "Samriddhiman-sambhoga" (the fullness of union after long separation). The place is not named. Majumdar compares the pada with the Lord's words in the *Chaitanya-charitamrita: "I have found the Lord of My life...". Raga suhai.*²⁹

11.1. O my youthful Gaura, rapt in the rasa of former love!

11.2. In both eyes, tears of joy;
beside Himself with prema, the Lord says:

11.3. "I have found the Youth of Vraja — all My sorrow has gone far away;

11.4. after long days I have found My life — as if bathed in nectar."³⁰

11.5. Seeing this, the companions laugh with joy — so sings Chaitanya Dasa.

29. Signature: "Chaitanya Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 188 (printed p. 177), 12th pallava, no. 17, under the heading "Then — samriddhiman-sambhoga. Here — Sri Mahaprabhu". GPT1 — p. 413, no. 30 (raga suhai; on the same page are Vasu Ghosha's padas nos. 31 and 33: chapter 1, no. 23; chapter 4, no. 18). Majumdar assigns Chaitanyadasa probably to Gadadhara's branch; he compares the language of the pada with the padas of Narahari and Shivananda (cf. Narahari's pada with the same opening — chapter 2, no. 7), and its sense with CC Madhya 1 and 13: "I have found the Lord of My life, for whom I was wasting away, burnt by the fire of Madana" — the Lord's words at the Ratha-yatra.

30. "The Youth of Vraja" (baraja-kiśora) is Krishna. These are the Lord's words in Radha's bhava as She finds Krishna after long separation; the joy of this meeting is pure prema, not mundane feeling.

12. Paramananda (Gupta) — "ki karilā gorācāṁḍa nadiyā chāṛiyā..." (PK 1693)

*Lila: after the sannyasa — the grief of the devotees of Navadvipa: Murari, Mukunda and Srivasa will not survive the separation, Advaita has despaired; with a straw between his teeth the poet begs the Lord to come to Nadia at least once. In PK — the gaura-chandrika to the gopis' messages to Krishna in Mathura. According to Majumdar — probably a fragment of Paramananda Gupta's *Gauranga-vijaya-gita, written during the Lord's lifetime. Raga suhai.³¹

12.1. What have You done, Gorachand, leaving Nadia!
The devotees are dying, not seeing You.

12.2. The sports of kirtana and all the joy You gave — remembering them again and again, everyone's heart is breaking.

12.3. Murari, Mukunda, Srinivasa will not live;
Advaita Acharya has despaired of life.

12.4. All the people of Nadia are in anguish — their hearts writhe, not seeing You.

12.5. Says Paramananda, holding a straw between his teeth:
"Come to Nadia just once, Lord Gaurahari!"³²

31. Signature: "Paramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 66 (printed p. 55), 6th pallava, no. 32 ("And again — Sri Gaurachandra"), among the padas on the messengers to Krishna in Mathura: as the gopis call Krishna back to Vraja, so the devotees call Gaura to Nadia; MS P-R-Sa no. 916. In the 21st pallava of PK, after Madhava Ghosha's pada PK 2277 (no. 17 below), the compiler refers to this pada again: "'What have You done, Gorachand, leaving Nadia' etc. — given above." GPT1 — p. 385, no. 7 (raga suhai); GPT2 — sect. 5.4, no. 7. On the attribution see note 1.

32. Holding a straw between the teeth is a sign of utter humility before one who is being entreated. GPT1: "This time come to Nadia". The devotees' wish was fulfilled in 1514/15, when the Lord came to Kuliya opposite Navadvipa (CC Madhya 1, 16; chapter 1, no. 23; chapter 4, nos. 18–19).

13. Vasu Ghosha — "hari hari gorā kothā gela..." (PK 1856)

Lila: after the sannyasa — a devotee's lament: "Had I known that Gora would leave, I would have kept Him, binding His life to mine"; how will Gadadhara and Damodara live? In PK — in the 10th pallava ("Various separations"), immediately after Vamshi's pada "No more shall I see..." (PK 1855; chapter 1, no. 17). According to Majumdar — one of Vasu Ghosha's padas on the sannyasa. Raga suhai.³³

13.1. Hari, Hari! Where has Gora gone?
A spear has pierced my heart — and does not come out.

13.2. To whom shall I tell my grief? Words do not leave my lips;
ceaselessly I remember Gora, the jewel of virtues.

13.3. Had I known that Gora would leave us,
I would have kept Him, binding His life to mine.³⁴

13.4. How will Gadadhara and Damodara live?
Now Vasu Ghosha will die.³⁵

33. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 131 (printed p. 120), 10th pallava, no. 5. In GPT1 (p. 385, no. 8, raga suhai) the pada is signed "Radhamohana Dasa" (a poet of the early 18th c., compiler of the Padamrita-samudra), but the compiler of GPT notes that in one manuscript the signature reads "Now Vasu Ghosha will die"; PK gives Vasu's signature. The attribution is therefore not beyond doubt.

34. Lit. "giving life for life, I would have kept [Him] bound". MSS "ka", "kha", "cha": "jānitāṇa" (same meaning).

35. Gadadhara is Gadadhara Pandita; Damodara is probably Damodara Pandita, the Lord's companion in Navadvipa (CC Adi 10). MSS "ka", "kha", "cha": "...how shall I live... I shall die" (bāṁciba, mariba). The signature is a formula of grief: the poet will not survive the separation.

14. Chaitanyadasa — "mohe bihi biparīta bhela..." (PK 463)

*Lila: a devotee's remorse: Gora, the darling of his life, has gone, and the poet, having found Him, did not serve Him. In PK — the gaura-chandrika to the section "Kalahantarita" (the heroine who has rebuffed her beloved in a quarrel and repents); the pada is composed in the voice of such a heroine. According to Majumdar — testimony of the poet's personal closeness to Gaura. Raga suhai.*³⁶

14.1. The Creator has turned against me:
through my wounded pride the Lord, disregarding me, has gone.³⁷

14.2. What shall I do? Tell me, what way is there?
How shall I find again my Gora Raya?

14.3. I meant one thing — I know not what has happened:
Gora, the darling of my life, has gone, leaving me.

14.4. Who knew it would be so:
the treasure I was tying in the end of my sari would fall into the ocean!

14.5. So it happened with Chaitanyadasa:
having found Gaurangachand, he did not serve Him — and lost Him.³⁸

36. Signature: "Chaitanyadasa". PK: vol. 1, PDF pp. 314–315 (printed pp. 303–304), the first pada of the 15th pallava, under the heading "Another kind of kalahantarita. Sri Gaurachandra befitting it"; MS P-R-Sa no. 652. GPT1 — p. 313, no. 21 (raga suhai).

37. The pada is composed in the voice of the kalahantarita — the heroine who in wounded pride (abhimana) has rebuffed her beloved and now repents. The poet applies this image from Radha's lila to himself: having found Gaura, he did not serve Him, and Gora went away (evidently the sannyasa is meant). This is the language of the gaura-chandrika, not of mundane relations; the "wounded pride" here is the bitter self-reproach of a devotee.

38. "Lost" (tejila, lit. "let go, gave up"). MS P-R-Sa: "Just so it happened..." (sei se); MSS "kha", "gha" in 14.3: "left me" (mohe).

15. Vasu Ghosha — "gorā-guṇe prāṇa kānde ki buddhi kariba..." (PK 2280)

*Lila: after the sannyasa — the lament of Navadvipa: who else will show mercy to the fallen and, entreating, give away the name of Hari? Without Gora all Nadia has become empty. In PK — in the 21st pallava, in the section "The longing of the devotees". According to Majumdar — one of Vasu Ghosha's padas on the sannyasa. Raga suhai.*³⁹

15.1. For Gora's virtues my heart weeps — what can I devise?
Where shall I go to find Gauranga, the treasury of virtues?⁴⁰

15.2. Who else will show mercy, seeing the fallen?
Who, entreating, will give the rare name of Hari?

15.3. Who will burst into tears, seeing the destitute?

Without Gora all Nadia has become empty.⁴¹

15.4. Vasudeva Ghosha weeps, remembering His virtues:

how is one to live, not seeing Gora?

39. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 296 (printed p. 285), 21st pallava, no. 63, after Vasu's pada "How many days more until I see Gorachand's face..." (PK 2279) under the common heading "Then — the longing of the devotees"; MS P-R-Sa nos. 1041 and 2384 (the pada is written in it twice); MS "kha" lacks it. GPT1 — p. 387, no. 15 (raga suhai). Majumdar lists PK 2280 among Vasu Ghosha's padas on the sannayasa.

40. MSS "gha", "cha": "the treasury of mercy" (dayāra nidhi).

41. "The destitute" (akiñcana) — the humble one who has nothing but hope in the Lord. MS P-R-Sa: "Who will burst into tears, seeing such a person? Without Gora the town of Nadia has become empty."

16. Madhava Ghosha — "tachu dukhe dukhī eka priya-sakhī..." (PK 2276)

*Lila: the years of separation (the Lord in Puri) — a friend of Vishnupriya, sharing her grief, as if maddened by separation from Gaura, runs to the bank of the Ganga, to the place where the Lord used to sit, and in her raving words seems to see Gaura in Nilachala. In PK — in the 21st pallava, after Madhava Dasa's pada on Vishnupriya's grief (PK 2275). According to Majumdar — an imagined scene; the authorship of Madhava Ghosha for this and the next two padas is doubtful. Raga dhanashi.*⁴²

16.1. A dear friend, grieving with her grief, overwhelmed by separation from Gaura, unable to bear it, ran off as if gone mad.⁴³

16.2. In the town of Nadia, on the bank of the Suradhuni, where the Lord used to sit — going there, in a choking voice she softly says something.

16.3. At those raving words even a stone would melt:
as if, having gone to Nilachala,
she sees Gaura there.⁴⁴

16.4. Her eyes stream, her heart overflows — weeping, she speaks;
Madhava Ghosha's heart is distraught:
to hear it is pain deep within.

42. Signature: "Madhava Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 295 (printed p. 284), 21st pallava, no. 59; MS P-R-Sa no. 2380. "Her" (tachu) refers to Vishnupriya, of whom the preceding pada in PK, by Madhava Dasa, "All my life I prided myself on Gaura..." (PK 2275), speaks. GPT1 — p. 399, no. 32 (raga dhanashi), reading "your grief" (tuyā dukhe). Majumdar accepts Madhava (Madhavananda) Ghosha, brother of Govinda and Vasu and the finest kirtana singer (CB Antya 5), as the Lord's contemporary, but regards his padas on the sannayasa as late: PK 2276 is an imagined scene of the grief of Nadia's women, and PK 2278 was probably written much later. The attribution of PK 2276–2278 to Madhava Ghosha is therefore doubtful.

43. "As if gone mad" (yemata bāurī pāra) — the madness of grief in separation from Gaura, that is, of a devotee's prema.

44. MSS "ka", "kha", "gha", "cha" and GPT1 read "yaichana" — "as if"; the main text of PK has "aichana" ("[Gaura] thus").

17. Madhava Ghosha — "abalā se biṣṇupriyā tuyā guṇa soṇariyā..." (PK 2277)

Lila: the years of separation — the poet addresses the Lord: Vishnupriya, remembering His virtues, lies unconscious, her friends holding cotton to her nostrils; the people of Nadia, old Shachi and the companions are barely alive — "Come to Nadia, O best of the knowers of rasa!" According to Majumdar — Madhava Ghosha's pada on the grief of Shachi and Vishnupriya. Raga pahida.⁴⁵

17.1. The helpless Vishnupriya, remembering Your virtues, fell unconscious to the ground;
her friends around, seeing this, weep, holding a wisp of cotton to her nostrils.⁴⁶

17.2. In the fire of separation from You her heart is worn out — life barely stays in her body.
All the dwellers of Nadia have fainted, not seeing Your face.

17.3. Old Shachi is half-dead — there is no life in her body — and You have no pity for her!
How will Your friends in Nadia keep alive?
How did You give up Your affection for them?⁴⁷

17.4. All Your companions are overwhelmed by separation:
their breath is held only by the hope of seeing You.
O best of the knowers of rasa, come to the town of Nadia! — says the lowly Madhava Ghosha.⁴⁸

45. Signature: "Madhava Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 295–296 (printed pp. 284–285), 21st pallava, no. 60; MS P-R-Sa no. 2381. GPT1 — p. 400, no. 33 (raga pahida); GPT2 — sect. 5.4, no. 33. Majumdar cites the pada as "PK 1277" (a misprint for 2277); on the doubts about the attribution see note 42. Immediately after this pada the compiler of PK refers to Paramananda's pada "What have You done, Gorachand, leaving Nadia" (no. 12).

46. Cotton is held to the nostrils to see whether there is any breath. "Life barely stays in her body" (17.2) — lit. "life has become separate from the body": a poetic exaggeration of a swoon; MS P-R-Sa: "[separation] has separated [her] life".

47. The reproach "no pity" and the familiar address (tora) are the language of grief and intimacy, not a judgement on the Lord: in leaving His home the Lord did not abandon His own (cf. CC Madhya 3 and 16 — the meetings with Shachi in Shantipura and Kuliya). "Affection" is in the original "maya" (māyā) in its everyday Bengali sense of "tender attachment, love", not the illusory energy: the Lord is not subject to maya. MS P-R-Sa has "Shachi, who..." (śacīya ye) instead of "old Shachi".

48. "Knower of rasa" (rasikabara) — an address to Gaura as to Krishna. MSS: "the breath flows" (vahe; P-R-Sa and GPT1), "the hope of touching [You]" (paraśana; "gha"), "this Madhava" (P-R-Sa).

18. Madhava Ghosha — "gaurāṅga jhāṭa kari calaha nadiyā..." (PK 2278)

*Lila: the years of separation — the poet begs Gauranga to come quickly to Nadia: Vishnupriya, remembering His former love, has fainted; Nadia and the companions weep in the dust. According to Majumdar — probably written long after the sannyasa. Raga shri.*⁴⁹

18.1. Gauranga, come quickly to Nadia:
the helpless Vishnupriya is as if lifeless.⁵⁰

18.2. All Your deeds, the former love — remembering them again and again, she has now fainted.

18.3. That same town of Nadia, all those companions weep, fallen in the dust, not seeing You.

18.4. Says Madhava Ghosha: "Listen, Gaurahari: delay but a moment — and I shall die first."

49. Signature: "Madhava Ghosha". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 296 (printed p. 285), 21st pallava, no. 61; MS P-R-Sa no. 2382. GPT1 — p. 400, no. 34 (raga shri). Majumdar supposes that the pada was written long after the sannyasa: hardly anyone in the Lord's lifetime would have called Him back like this, and the mention of Vishnupriya's "former love" seems to him discourteous; this is only a conjecture. On the doubts about the attribution see note 42. In the stage-1 catalogue the first line was read "gaurāṅga bāṭa kari" — the scan has "jhāṭa kari" ("quickly").

50. "As if lifeless" (prāṇa-hīna) — lit. "has lost life": an exaggeration of a swoon, as in 17.2. "The former love" (18.2) is the intimacy of the years of the Lord's household life; the love and grief of Vishnupriya, the Lord's eternal companion, are revered by the Gaudiya tradition as pure prema.

19. Kanu Dasa — "āre mora pahum̐ nitāicām̐da..." (PK 2327)

*Lila: Nityananda in Gauda (after 1515) — He sings and dances, absorbed in bhava, sprinkles the suffering people with His glance, tells of His Brother; His fair body is covered with thrills like a kadamba flower; the devotees sing around Him. In PK — in the 22nd pallava ("Description of the virtues of Sri Nityananda"); in KGC — in the 10th kshanada. According to Majumdar — a pada on Nityananda's preaching in Gauda. Raga deshaga.*⁵¹

19.1. O my Lord Nitaichand!

In every house He has set the snare of prema.

19.2. All the people scorched by the world's heat

He has sprinkled with the corners of His eyes.⁵²

19.3. Boundless mercy in the land of Gauda:

He dances and wanders, absorbed in bhava.

19.4. In a choking voice He tells of His Brother;

His reddened eyes drown in the waters of prema.⁵³

19.5. His fair, beautiful body glows reddish, the thrills like the filaments of a kadamba.

19.6. His body is adorned with various ornaments;

the devotees together sing joyfully.

19.7. Swaying — in how many ways!

His lotus feet step like a wagtail.⁵⁴

19.8. Hearing of His mercy, hope has grown:

at His feet this Kanudasa begs for prema.

51. Signature: "Kanudasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 313 (printed p. 302), 22nd pallava, no. 34; MS P-R-Sa no. 2431. KGC — 10th kshanada, no. 2 (pp. 76–77; raga shri), with a different order of couplets (19.7 after 19.3) and the signature "Kanu Dasa"; GPT1 — p. 431, no. 58 (raga barari); GPT2 — sect. 6.1, no. 58. Majumdar identifies Kanudasa and Kanurama Dasa (their language is the same) with Kanu Thakura — son of Purushottama Dasa and grandson of Sadashiva Kaviraja, of Nityananda's branch (CC Adi 11). Nityananda preached in Gauda at the Lord's command after 1515 (CC Madhya 15; CB Antya 5).

52. The world's heat is the threefold suffering; Nityananda's glance is the cool water of mercy.

53. "Brother" (bhāiyā) is Gauranga: telling of Him, Nityananda weeps. Cf. the cry "Brother, brother!" (bhāiyā re) in padas of the same pallava of PK (2319, 2326).

54. The wagtail (khanjana) is an image of a graceful, light gait. MSS "ka", "kha", "cha", P-R-Sa in 19.3: "wanders" (vulena — honorific form); KGC and GPT1: "absorbed in prema", "absorbed in bhava".

20. Kanurama Dasa — "dayā kara more nitāi dayā kara more..." (PK 2321)

*Lila: a prayer to Nityananda: You gave prema to all without distinction — why then am I unhappy? You are the Lord of our family. In PK — in the 22nd pallava ("Description of the virtues of Sri Nityananda"). According to Majumdar, "the Lord of the family" points to three generations of the poet's family at Nityananda's feet. Raga patamanjari.*⁵⁵

20.1. Have mercy on me, Nitai, have mercy on me!

Nitai is the refuge of those without refuge, say the saints.

20.2. "Glory to the Giver of prema-bhakti!" proclaims Your banner;
You made no distinction at all between high and low.⁵⁶

20.3. By the gift of prema You made happy the hearts of all beings in the world;
if You are the Lord of mercy, why am I unhappy?

20.4. Says Kanurama Dasa: what can I say?
This is my great hope: You are the Lord of our family.⁵⁷

55. Signature: "Kanurama Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 311 (printed p. 300), 22nd pallava, no. 28; MS P-R-Sa no. 2425. GPT1 — p. 431, no. 57 (raga patamanjari), immediately before PK 2327 (no. 19). In the stage-1 catalogue the first line had not been recognized (KD-009). Majumdar: Kanurama Dasa = Kanudasa = Kanu Thakura; "the Lord of our family" — the poet's grandfather Sadashiva Kaviraja, his father Purushottama Dasa and he himself — three generations at Nityananda's feet.

56. "Banner" (patākā; MSS "ka", "kha": patakā) — the image of Nityananda as a victorious king whose banner proclaims the giving of prema. GPT1: "...You make no distinction".

57. MSS in 20.3: "the hearts of the world's people" (jaga janera — "ka"; jagat jībera — "kha"); "You are the Lord of mercy" (without "if" — "ka"); "You, such a Lord of mercy — why am I..." ("kha", "cha").

Chapter 6. Kirtanas and Gaura's Form in Navadvipa, the Lord's Ecstasy, Nityananda, Separation, and Nilachala

*Padas of contemporaries known from the *Padakalpataru (PK), the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) and the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC), in the order of the lilas: the Navadvipa kirtana through the eyes of Vasu Ramananda; praise of the Gaura-avatara (Narahari, Yadunatha Dasa); Gaura's form (Shankara Ghosha, Vasudeva Datta, Ramananda); the kirtana festival in Advaita's house (Vamshivadana); the Lord's dance in kirtana (Chaitanyadasa, Narahari, Ramananda); the Lord's ecstatic moods (Yadunatha Dasa, Vamshidasa); pastimes on the Ganga — the boat and the swing (Ramananda); Nityananda's dance in Srivasa's courtyard (Shankara Ghosha); Navadvipa after the sannyasa (Murari, Madhavi Dasa); kirtana and the festival of colours in Nilachala (Ramananda, Madhavi Dasa); and the poet's prayer (Ramananda). The text follows PK, BR, KGC and the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Vasu Ramananda — "caudige gobinda-dhvani śuni pahum̐ hāse..." (BR, p. 952; KGC 29.1)

*Lila: a kirtana in Navadvipa: on every side the cry "Govinda!" resounds; the Lord laughs and dances together with Nityananda; Govinda, Madhava and Vasu (the Ghosha brothers) and Mukunda sing. Narahari Chakravarti cites the pada in the *Bhakti-ratnakara among the testimonies to the Navadvipa kirtanas. According to Majumdar it is the pada of an eyewitness of the Navadvipa kirtana (1509); from the order of the names "Govinda — Madhava — Vasu" he infers that Govinda Ghosha was the eldest. Raga dhanashi (BR), mangala (KGC, GPT).¹

1.1. On every side — "Govinda!"; hearing it, the Lord laughs; with trembling lips Gora speaks in a faltering voice.²

1.2. Gauranga dances, and with Him Nityananda; the earth is flooded with prema, and bliss has swelled.

1.3. Govinda, Madhava, Vasu and Mukunda sing; having found His own, He forgot Himself in the taste of kirtana.³

1.4. The joyful companions are drunk with the nectarean taste, and Vasu Ramananda in this is a thirsting chakora.⁴

1. Signature: "Vasu Ramananda". BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed. (Murshidabad), p. 952 ("again dhanashi"; the 1912 ed. the same), 1960 ed. vv. 3426–3429, 2006 ed. vv. 3426–3429; in BR the pada stands in a series of padas on the Navadvipa kirtana, near the pada of Chaitanyadasa (below, no. 10). A second recension: KGC, 29th kshanada (shukla-chaturdashi), no. 1 (pp. 229–230, raga mangala); GPT1 — p. 270, no. 73 (Majumdar's "p. 27" is evidently a misprint); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 73. In it the first and the last half-lines agree, but the middle differs (see note 3 and VAR); Majumdar considered the GPT text corrupt. The pada is not in PK. Majumdar: Vasu Ramananda of Kulinagrama, a descendant of Maladhara Vasu, was a contemporary of the Lord (CC Madhya 15).

2. "Govinda!" (govinda-dhvani) — the name of Krishna sung in kirtana; perhaps also a hint at the lead singer Govinda Ghosha. Gora is Gaura. "Trembling lips... faltering voice" are signs of ecstasy (sattvika-bhavas).

3. "Having found His own" (pāyā = pāiyā nija-bṛnda) — His companions. In KGC and GPT, instead of 1.2–1.3: "Splendidly Gauranga dances, and with Him Nityananda; the earth is flooded with prema, Ramananda sings. To Mukunda, Murari, Vasu He says: 'Come here!' — for your virtues the Darling of [our] life weeps" (GPT: "Murari, Mukunda, come..."); and instead of the first line of 1.4: "All the other devotees are drunk with bliss". The double mention of Ramananda (in 1.2 and in the signature) argues for the BR recension.

4. The chakora is a bird which, by poetic convention, feeds on moonlight: the poet greedily drinks the nectar of Gaura's moonlike face.

2. Narahari — "anupāma gorā-abatāra..." (PK 2288)

*Praise of the Gaura-avatara: the Lord spread through all lands the taste of ninefold bhakti, making no distinction of caste; in the age of Kali, where people sin, the holy name easily carries them across — what in other ages was attained with great toil through sacrifice, japa, meditation and worship. In PK it stands in the 21st pallava, next to padas on Gaura the sannyasi. Raga varadi.*⁵

2.1. (Refrain) Peerless is the descent of Gora!

The taste of ninefold bhakti He spread through all lands, making no distinction of caste.⁶

2.2. Worship such a Lord, cast aside all [other] concerns, give up all false desires.

By the virtues of Chaitanyachand the three worlds are lit — effortlessly He revealed Himself.

2.3. Chaitanya is a wish-fulfilling tree, the guru of all living beings;

with Him is all the splendour of Goloka.
Seeing the living beings defiled, with compassionate eyes
He joyfully gave out the name of Hari.

2.4. Sacrifice, japa, meditation, worship — all that people did in other ages they accomplished with very great toil.

But these people of the age of Kali, however much they sin — taking the name, they crossed over with ease.⁷

2.5. He is the essence, compassion embodied; with whom else can He be compared?

He fulfilled the hopes of the fallen.
Understanding nothing in his heart, weeping and weeping on the road, Narahari Dasa sings His virtues.⁸

5. Signature: "Narahari Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 299 (printed p. 288), 21st pallava, no. 71 (mark " ৭১ ২২৮৮ "); raga varadi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2392. GPT1 — p. 28, no. 5 (raga varadi); GPT2 — sect. 1.3, no. 5. In Ray's index of poets it is among the padas of Narahari. Majumdar does not discuss this pada; its simple Bengali without heaped ornament fits his criteria for the genuine padas of Narahari Sarakara, but the attribution (Sarakara or Narahari Chakravarti) is unproven.

6. The nine forms of bhakti — hearing, chanting, remembering, etc. (Bhag. 7.5.23–24). "Making no distinction of caste" — cf. CC Adi 7 on the distribution of prema to all without discrimination. GPT: "spreading [it] with the taste of bhakti through all lands, He made no distinction of caste".

7. Cf. Bhag. 12.3.52: what was attained in Satya-yuga by meditation, in Treta by sacrifice, in Dvapara by worship, is attained in Kali-yuga by chanting the name of Hari. GPT1 in 2.4: "but in this darkness of Kali, however much people sin — taking the name, they cross over with ease".

8. "Understanding nothing in his heart" — the poet's humility: he cannot grasp the Lord's greatness and only weeps as he sings. MS P-R-Sa: "weeping, weeping"; "with whom can He be compared" (tāra for āra).

3. Narahari (?) — "pāsārā nā yāya āmāra gorācāmṛdera līlā..." (PK 2344)

*Praise of Gaura: the pastimes of Gorachand cannot be forgotten — by His virtues beasts and birds weep and stones melt; the name inaccessible to Brahma He gave out to the three worlds. In PK the pada has no signature (its last line speaks of Nityananda); in GPT it bears the signature of Narahari Dasa. In PK it stands in the 25th pallava ("Description of the form and virtues of Sri Chaitanya and Nityananda"). Raga vibhasa.*⁹

3.1. (Refrain) I cannot forget the pastimes of my Gorachand!

By His virtues beasts and birds ever weep from both eyes, and stones melt and melt.

3.2. For the sake of His name Mahesha became a yogi, Virinchi meditates [on Him] incessantly.
 The name inaccessible even to Brahma the Lord made easy to obtain — and Himself, entreating, gave it to the three worlds.¹⁰

3.3. Gauranga's body shines, and on it the hair stands on end like kadamba blossoms:
 wondrous is the beauty of His holy body!
 In bliss Thakura Nityananda is lost to Himself, seeing that golden radiance.¹¹

9. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 319 (printed p. 308), 25th pallava, no. 13 (mark " ୨୭ ୨୭୪୪ "), headed "again in another way"; raga vibhasa; MS P-R-Sa no. 2448. There is no signature in PK. GPT1 — p. 28, no. 7, and GPT2 — sect. 1.3, no. 7 (both raga vibhasa) give the last line with a signature: "In bliss Narahari Dasa is lost to himself, seeing that golden radiance". The PK line is shorter than the tripadi metre requires (one member is missing), while the GPT line fits it; perhaps PK preserved a line in which the poet's name was lost. The attribution to Narahari (still less to Sarakara) is unproven.

10. Mahesha is Shiva; Virinchi is Brahma. "Entreating" (yāciyā) — the Lord Himself offers the name without waiting to be asked (cf. CC Adi 3).

11. Hair standing on end "like kadamba blossoms" is one of the sattvika-bhavas. MSS: "on the body of holy Gauranga" ("ka").

4. Yadunatha Dasa — "aparūpa cāṁḍa udaya nadiyāpure..." (PK 2191)

*Praise of Gaura: a wondrous Moon has risen in Nadia, and darkness has left the three worlds; the Lord whom Shesha, Shankara, Narada and Brahma praise rolls on the ground in bliss on hearing His own virtues; from His eyes flows an ocean of the nectar of prema. According to M-1961 it is a pada of Yadunatha Dasa (Kavichandra), a fellow countryman of Jagannatha Mishra and a contemporary of the Lord. Raga dhanashi.*¹²

4.1. A wondrous Moon has risen in the town of Nadia — there is no more darkness in the three worlds!
 On earth He destroyed the sorrow of all living beings, bestowing the prema hidden in the Vedas.

4.2. (Refrain) O my Gaurangasundara Raya!
 He made the lilies of the devotees' hearts unfold —
 the salvation of the destitute.¹³

4.3. Shesha, Shankara, Narada, the Four-faced One incessantly sing His virtues;
 and this incomparable Lord, hearing His own virtues, rolls on the ground in bliss.¹⁴

4.4. From His reddish eyes there flows, [like] an ocean, the nectarean water of prema.
 Yadunatha Dasa says: it is as if from a golden lotus pearls were being born.¹⁵

12. Signature: "Yadunatha Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 265 (printed p. 254), no. 8 (mark " ୪ ୨୨୨୨ "); raga dhanashi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2299. GPT1 — p. 35, no. 27 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sect. 1.3 (OCR 18989). Yadunatha Kavichandra was the youngest son of Ratnagarbha Acharya, a fellow countryman and friend of Jagannatha Mishra (CB Adi 2; CC Adi 11 — in the branch of Nityananda); B. B. Majumdar (Padas of the Sixteenth Century, 1961) considers him a contemporary who wrote of Gaura's moods as an eyewitness, and distinguishes him from Yadunandana. Cf. his padas below (nos. 14–15).

13. Gaura is the moon whose rays make the night-lilies (kumuda) — the devotees' hearts — unfold. "The destitute" (akiñcana) — those who have nothing but devotion.

14. Shesha (Ananta) is the thousand-mouthed serpent; Shankara is Shiva; the Four-faced One is Brahma. MS "gha": "the Name" instead of "Narada". Cf. Bhag. 10.14 (Brahma's praise).

15. "Ocean" (baruṇa-ālaya — "abode of Varuna"): the tears of prema flow in streams. The image of the last line: the tears on Gaura's golden face are pearls "born" of a golden lotus. GPT1: "Yadunatha Dasa says: by the [good] fortune (lit. the fruit of karma) of the living beings He brings forth these pearls".

5. Shankara Ghosha — "dekha dekha sundara śacī-nandanā..." (KGC 24.1)

*Gaura's form in Navadvipa: arms reaching to the knees, the gait of an intoxicated elephant, a garland of malati, a face lovelier than the autumn moon, eyes full of the tears of prema's bliss; with His companions He ceaselessly plays and sings "Hari, Hari". According to M-1961 it is a pada of Shankara Ghosha, a mridanga player and a contemporary of the Navadvipa period. Raga beloyar.*¹⁶

5.1. Look, look: the beautiful Son of Shachi!

His arms reach to the knees, beautifully formed.¹⁷

5.2. His gait is like that of an intoxicated elephant;
a garland of malati sways on Gora's body.

5.3. His face is lovelier than the autumn moon,
His eyes are filled with the water of prema's bliss.

5.4. Taking His companions along, He ceaselessly plays: in the midst of Navadvipa Gora sings "Hari, Hari!"

5.5. His lotus feet, which grant fearlessness, entice with their honey — says Shankara Ghosha — He is the Deliverer of all the worlds.¹⁸

16. Signature: "Shankara Ghosha". KGC: 24th kshanada (shukla-navami), no. 1 ("to Sri Gaurachandra"), p. 192; raga beloyar. The pada is not in PK or GPT; its only witness is the anthology of Vishvanatha Chakravarti (late 17th c.). Shankara Ghosha was a mridanga player, a companion of the Lord; Devakinandana in the Vaishnava-vandana praises his humility and the playing of the dampha with which he delighted the Lord. B. B. Majumdar (1961) counts him among the poets who were companions of Nimai Pandita in Navadvipa.

17. Arms reaching to the knees (ājānūlambita) are one of the marks of a great personality (mahapurusha); cf. CC Adi 3 on the Lord's marks.

18. The lines of the pada are a chain of epithets in -nā (subalanā, calanā, dolanā...); the last is "the Deliverer of all the worlds" (akhila-loka-tāraṇā). "Entice with their honey" (makaranda-lobhanā) — the image of devotees as bees thirsting for the honey of the feet.

6. Vasudeva Datta (?) — "aparūpa gorā naṭarāja..." (KGC 22.1; PK 2925)

*The form of Gaura, the "king of dancers", in Navadvipa: curling locks, a sandal tilaka, arms lovelier than an elephant's trunk, on His chest a necklace as if the Ganga were falling from the peak of Sumeru, crimson feet with moonlike nails. In KGC it bears the signature of Vasudeva Datta, in PK and GPT that of Govinda Dasa. According to M-1961 it is the only pada of Vasudeva Datta; Majumdar prefers the KGC attribution, since Vishvanatha Chakravarti is two or three generations older than the compiler of PK, Vaishnavadasa. Raga kedara.*¹⁹

6.1. (Refrain) Wondrous Gora, king of dancers!

The young Nagara made manifest, sporting in prema, plays in Navadvipa.²⁰

6.2. His curling locks are fragrant, on His forehead a tilaka of sandal.
Seeing [Him], chaste wives bolt the doors of the temple of modesty.²¹

6.3. His arms are lovelier than the trunk of a royal elephant, a double necklace of elephant-pearls —
as if, rushing down from the peak of Sumeru, the stream of the Suradhuni were flowing.²²

- 6.4. Crimson, peerless feet,
gem-like nails — radiant moons;
the devotee-bees are maddened by the fragrance —
Vasudeva Datta is enraptured.²³

19. Signature: "Vasudeva Datta" (KGC: 22nd kshanada, shukla-saptami, no. 1, "to Sri Gaurachandra", p. 171; raga kedara). PK 2925 (vol. 4, PDF pp. 207–208, printed pp. 198–199; 33rd pallava — "The eightfold eternal lila", gaura-chandrika to a description of sambhoga; mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "; raga kedara) has the signature "Govinda Dasa" and an extra stanza (see VAR); so too GPT1 (p. 121, no. 31) and GPT2 (sect. 3.1, no. 31). Vasudeva Datta was the elder brother of Mukunda Datta, a great singer (CC Adi 10; Madhya 11, 15). The attribution is disputed.

20. "Nagara" — "the refined lover", a traditional epithet of Krishna; here of Gaura as Krishna Himself appearing in Navadvipa ("young" — PK MSS "ka", "kha", "gha", "ca" and KGC: nava nāgara; the main PK text has simply nāgara).

21. The image (as in padas about Krishna) speaks of the irresistibility of the Lord's beauty: at the sight of Him women hide behind the doors of modesty. This is not a description of worldly passion, nor a basis for worshipping Gaura in the mood of "gaura-nagari", which the Gaudiya Vaishnava tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) does not accept: in Navadvipa, according to CB (Adi 15), the Lord did not even jest with women; He is Krishna come in the mood of Radha, tasting Her prema.

22. Elephant-pearls (gaja-mati) — according to tradition, pearls from the frontal globes of an elephant. Sumeru is the golden mountain: Gaura's golden chest, down which the white necklace flows like the Ganga.

23. In PK instead of this stanza: "I beheld the crimson feet, the nails a pair of moon-gems; maddened by the fragrance is the swarm of bees — the mind of Govinda Dasa is enraptured".

7. Ramananda — "dekha dekha adabhuta sundara śacisuta..." (PK 2162)

*Gaura's form: His body, trembling with prema, outshines rays of gold; His lips sing "Hari, Hari"; drops of sandal on His brow; His locks curl like bees round a golden lotus; tears flow from His eyes like pearls from a loosened string; He has plunged the world into the ocean of the taste of singing His names and virtues. Signature "Ramananda" (without "Vasu"): the attribution to Vasu Ramananda is likely but unproven. Raga gandhara.*²⁴

- 7.1. Look, look at the wondrous, beautiful Son of Shachi — an extraordinary creation of the Creator!
The radiance of His trembling body outshines rays of gold,
His lips utter "Hari, Hari".

- 7.2. Drops of sandal gleam on His brow, above them His locks sway;
[His face] shines brighter than a golden lotus and the moon, and round it circles a swarm of bees.

- 7.3. His two reddish eyes put lotus petals to shame, surpass the wagtail and the chakora;
like pearls from a loosened string,
so flow His abundant tears.²⁵

- 7.4. Into the ocean of the taste of singing His virtues and names
He has plunged the people of the world; wretched Ramananda alone is deprived — not even a drop has touched him.²⁶

24. Signature: "Ramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 253 (printed p. 242), 18th pallava, no. 54 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga gandhara; MS P-R-Sa no. 2269. GPT1 — twice: p. 124, no. 40, and p. 137, no. 76 (both raga gandhara); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 76 (and no. 40). In Ray's index of poets "Ramananda" (11 padas) is kept apart from "Vasu Ramananda" (7 padas);

Majumdar ascribes to Vasu Ramananda only one pada signed "Ramananda" (PK 1711, chapter 1, no. 18). The padas of this group (PK 1417, 2060, 2096, 2162, 2163, 2257, 2615, 3057) are in Vrajabuli and Bengali, like the undisputed padas of Vasu Ramananda (PK 2082, 1924); there is also the signature "Ramananda Dasa" (PK 2096, 2615). Hence authority C. In the stage-1 catalogue the first line of PK 2160 (Shekhara Raya) had been attached to PK 2162.

25. The wagtail (khañjana) and the chakora are images of lively, beautiful eyes. MSS: "trembling" (ḍagamaga — "ka"), "string" (gāmṭhala — "ka", "kha").

26. MS "kha": "gave" (debe) and "not" (nāhi). GPT1, p. 137: "...how many wretched ones He saved, while Ramananda in this is deprived — not a drop has touched him".

8. Ramananda — "dekhata bekata gaura adabhuta..." (PK 2163)

*Gaura's form and dance on the bank of the Ganga: He recalls the virtues of the Vraja-lila and cannot stand still; His body thrills, tears flow; intoxicated by the devotees' singing, He dances skilfully and cries "Haribol". Signature: "Ramananda". Raga tūdi.*²⁷

8.1. Look: manifest is wondrous Gaura, lighting up the bank of the Suradhuni!

His body is jambunada gold, His garment outshines the sun; beautiful, well-formed, composed.²⁸

8.2. Recalling and recalling the virtues of the Vraja-lila,

He cannot stand still;

His body is covered with thrills, as if a kadamba had blossomed, tears stream from His eyes.

8.3. Intoxicated by the taste of the devotees' ceaseless singing,

He sways His conch-like neck;

a thrill has seized the living beings; skilfully He dances and again and again cries: "Haribol!"²⁹

8.4. God of gods, Lord of gods, Beloved of the people, descent who purifies the fallen!

Ramananda, tormented by fear of the serpent of time in the age of Kali — carry him across [the ocean of existence]!

27. Signature: "Ramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 253–254 (printed pp. 242–243), 18th pallava, no. 55; on the scan the mark is " ৫৫ ৯৯৮ " — evidently a misprint (no. 55 follows PK 2162 = no. 54; in Ray's index the Ramananda pada is 2163); raga tūdi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2270. GPT1 — p. 124, no. 41 (raga tūdi); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 41 and no. 77. In the stage-1 catalogue the second GPT2 copy (no. 77) was wrongly ascribed to Paramananda (PA-004). On the attribution see note 24.

28. Jambunada is celestial gold (from the river Jambu). MS P-R-Sa: "of beautiful, well-formed body" (śārīra for sudhīra).

29. "Conch-like neck" (kambu-kaṇṭha) — a neck with three lines, a mark of beauty. MSS "ka", "kha", "ca", P-R-Sa and GPT1: "hearing, He dances again" (śuni puna for sunipuṇa); "ka": "the devotees (bhakata-gaṇa) are intoxicated with the taste".

9. Vamshi(vadana) — "jaya jaya nabadvīpa mājha..." (PK 26)

*Lila: the eve of a kirtana festival in Navadvīpa: at Gauranga's bidding Advaita prepares the "khol-mangala" — the consecration of the mridanga; having called the Vaishnavas, they perform the adhivasa of the great festival; Nitai gives out garlands and sandal, Govinda plays the mridanga, Advaita the kartals, Haridasa sings, Srivasa holds the tune, Gora dances. Cf. the pada of Parameshvara Dasa, PK 23 (chapter 5, no. 4), on the same festival in Advaita's house. Raga kamoda.*³⁰

9.1. (Refrain) Glory, glory [to the festival] in the midst of Navadvīpa!

At Gauranga's bidding Thakura Advaita has come and prepares the khol-mangala.³¹

9.2. Having brought all the Vaishnavas, amid the clamour of "Haribol!", they perform the adhivasa of the great festival.
Nitai Himself, [our] treasure, gives garlands and sandal, greeting the dear Vaishnavas.³²

9.3. Govinda, taking the mridanga, plays: "ta-ta thaiya-thaiya", nimble on the kartals is Advaita;
Haridasa sings, Srivasa holds the tune —
Gora dances at the blessing of the kirtana.³³

9.4. All round the Vaishnavas cry "Haribol!" again and again — tomorrow there will be the great festival of kirtana.
"Today we have joyfully performed the khol-mangala," — says Vamshi: "Cry out 'Glory!'"

30. Signature: "Vamshi". PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 32 (printed p. 21), 1st pallava ("Mangalacharana"), no. 26 (mark " ২৬ "); raga kamoda; MS P-R-Sa no. 26. GPT1 — p. 247, no. 30 (raga kamoda); GPT2 — sect. 4.1, no. 30. In the stage-1 catalogue the PK number was given wrongly (45; corrected in stage 1b). In PK the pada stands in a series of padas on the adhivasa of kirtana (PK 23 — Parameshvara Dasa, 24 and 25 — Vrindavana Dasa). Majumdar ascribes the signature "Vamshi" to Vamshivadana (the guardian of Vishnupriya), distinguishing him from the later Vamshidasa, a disciple of Srinivasa.

31. The khol is the clay mridanga of Bengali kirtana; the khol-mangala is the consecration of the mridanga on the eve of a kirtana (sandal, garlands, auspicious articles), and the adhivasa is the rite of "installation" that precedes a festival. In PK 23 the same festival is described as arranged by Advaita and Sita Thakurani at the Lord's direction.

32. MS "ga": "having given garlands and sandal".

33. "Ta-ta thaiya-thaiya" imitates the rhythm of the mridanga. Govinda — evidently Govinda Ghosha or Govinda Datta (a kirtaniya, CC Madhya 13). "Plays" (bāye) — so Ray corrects the reading of all the manuscripts, bāje ("sounds"), considering it a scribal error.

10. Chaitanyadasa — "mahābhuja nācata caitanya rāya..." (PK 664; BR, p. 951)

*Lila: the Lord's dance in kirtana: His golden body is full of bhavas; hearing His own names and virtues He loses Himself in the dance; Nadia has forgotten its sorrow; the rain of prema has watered the whole world, and only the poet is deprived. Narahari Chakravarti cites the pada in the *Bhakti-ratnakara among the testimonies to the Navadvipa kirtanas, next to the pada of Vasu Ramananda (no. 1). In PK it is a gaura-chandrika to the "rasodgara". Raga vibhasa (PK), suhai (BR).³⁴

10.1. (Refrain) Long-armed, Chaitanya Raya dances!
Who knows how many bhavas, hundreds upon hundreds,
are on Gora's golden body!

10.2. His body, moist with prema, pure, is adorned with sprouts of thrill;
what more shall I say of the countless anubhavas? — at the sight [of Him] the mind of the world is drawn.³⁵

10.3. Hearing His own virtues, the kirtana of the names,
He loses Himself in the curves of the dance;
the people of the town of Nadia have forgotten grief and sorrow, they float on the waves of prema.

10.4. Giving out the jewel, raining the taste of prema,
He has watered the whole world;
Chaitanyadasa sings: in this peerless gift of prema
I alone have remained deprived.³⁶

34. Signature: "Chaitanyadasa". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 57 (printed p. 44), 6th pallava, no. 1 (mark " སྒྲུག "), "Then the rasodgara; Sri Gaurachandra, according to the kirtana befitting what precedes and follows"; raga vibhasa; MS P-R-Sa no. 1139 and MS P-R. BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed., p. 951; 1960 ed. vv. 3418–3421 (raga suhai); 2006 ed. the same. In BR stanzas 10.2 and 10.3 are transposed and 10.4 begins differently (see note 36). GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 1. Majumdar does not discuss the pada; in his view Chaitanyadasa was probably a contemporary from the branch of Gadadhara. The fact that Narahari Chakravarti cites the pada as testimony makes it one of the early sources.

35. "Anubhavas" (anubhaba) — outward manifestations of inner feelings (tears, thrills, trembling). MS P-R: "of the body" (aṅgera for aṅkura); P-R-Sa: "endless anubhavas" (aśeṣānubhāba).

36. BR and MS P-R: "With a merciful glance, with a rain of nectar He has watered the whole world". In MS P-R the signature is "Vasu Ghosha", and instead of "in this peerless gift of prema" — "[He] has no equal"; MS "ka": "He came to give prema".

11. Narahari — "nāce śacīsuta līlā adabhuta..." (PK 2097)

*Lila: the dance of Shachi's Son in kirtana: His gait sways, He leans on Gadadhara, raising His arms He cries "Hari, Hari", intoxicated with His own taste; from His reddish eyes tears pour day and night; to all — the lame, the blind, the fallen — He has given prema, entreating them to accept it. Raga mayura.*³⁷

11.1. Shachi's Son dances — wondrous is His lila! —

His gait sways, the curves [of the dance]; with Him so many, so many devotees sing —
He leans on Gadadhara.

11.2. Raising His arms that reach to the knees, He cries "Hari, Hari", Himself intoxicated with His own taste;

the circle of His face shines like the moon,
His teeth a string of pearls.³⁸

11.3. He gleams like gold tested on the touchstone, ever delighting in kirtana;

from His reddish eyes, [like] an ocean, [water] pours unceasingly day and night.

11.4. To the lame, the blind, to all the fallen and wretched

He has given prema, entreating [them to accept it]; seeing His mercy, hope has grown strong in the breast of Narahari Dasa.

37. Signature: "Narahari Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 229 (printed p. 218), 17th pallava ("Sri Gauranga's dance"), no. 39 (mark " སྒྲུག སྒྲུག "); raga mayura; MS P-R-Sa no. 2206. GPT1 — pp. 256–257, no. 26 (raga mayura); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 26. In Ray's index of poets it is among the padas of Narahari; Majumdar does not discuss it. The attribution to Sarakara is likely (simple language) but unproven.

38. "Intoxicated with His own taste" (āpani nija rase mātiyā) — cf. CC Adi 4: the Lord came to taste His own sweetness and Radha's love for Him. MSS "kha", "gha", P-R-Sa: "intoxicated with His own taste" (āpana); P-R-Sa in 11.1: "so many people" (jana).

12. Ramananda Dasa — "āre mora nācata gaurakiśora..." (PK 2096)

*Lila: the dance of young Gaura: His body brighter than gold, His face lovelier than the autumn moon, a tilaka of gorochana, locks like bees on a lotus, drops of sweat, streams of tears; He Himself "strung" His virtues into the kirtana which His companions sing, and brought in the khol and kartals to crush godlessness. Signature: "Ramananda Dasa". Raga vibhasa.*³⁹

12.1. (Refrain) Ah, my young Gaura dances!

His beautiful body, brighter than rays of gold, has lit up all ten directions.

- 12.2. His face shines brighter than the autumn moon, on His brow a lovely tilaka of gorochana;
His curling, charming locks sway upon it, like a swarm of bees on a lotus.⁴⁰
- 12.3. His nose a sesame flower, His lips a bimba fruit, drop by drop the sweat trickles;
His eyes lovelier than a young red lotus, ceaselessly flow streams [of tears].
- 12.4. Stringing His own virtues, He revealed the kirtana — the hosts of His companions sing it;
the khol and kartals He carefully created to crush godlessness.⁴¹
- 12.5. On earth is the wondrous Lord, the Son of Shachi, the descent who purifies the fallen!
Lowly, wretched, foolish Ramananda Dasa [prays]:
Lord, carry me across [the ocean of] existence!

39. Signature: "Ramananda Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 229 (printed p. 218), 17th pallava, no. 38 (mark " ଓଡ଼ିଆ ଶୃଙ୍ଖଳା "); raga vibhasa; MS P-R-Sa no. 2205. GPT1 — p. 256, no. 25 (raga vibhasa); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 25. On the attribution see note 24: the signature "Ramananda Dasa" may belong either to Vasu Ramananda or to another poet.

40. Gorochana is a yellow pigment for tilaka. "A swarm of bees on a lotus" — dark locks on the golden face.

41. GPT1: "Having accomplished (sādhīyā) His virtues, revealing the kirtana...". The khol (mridanga) and kartals are the instruments of sankirtana; "godlessness" (pāṣaṇḍa) — the opponents of bhakti, against whom the kirtana procession in Navadvīpa was directed (CB Madhya 23). MS "ka": "revealing" (parakāṣe).

13. Ramananda — "nācata gaura naṭabara rasiyā..." (PK 2060)

Lila: Gaura the dancer dances, finding no limit to the ocean of prema; remembering Vrindavana, He sighs deeply and, laughing, calls "Rai, Rai!"; not concealing His secret, He stands bent in three places and plays the flute; He roars like a lion and rolls on the ground. In PK it is in the 17th pallava ("Sri Gauranga's dance"). Signature: "Ramananda" (GPT: "lowly Ramananda"). Raga beloyar.⁴²

- 13.1. (Refrain) Gaura dances, the best of dancers, full of rasa; finding no limit to the ocean of prema, day and night He floats, rocking [on its waves].
- 13.2. Remembering Vrindavana, again and again He sighs deeply, laughing, He repeats: "Rai, Rai!"
Keeping no secret of His heart,
He stands bent in three places and plays the flute.⁴³
- 13.3. Like an intoxicated lion He roars again and again, the moons of the nails of His restless feet flash;
on His hips a fine crimson cloth — again and again it flies up, falls, slips down.
- 13.4. Gaura's whole body is covered with thrills —
He cuts through all the nooses of sin and piety;
now He rolls on the ground, now sits,
now rises, destroying Ramananda's fear.⁴⁴

42. Signature: "Ramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 215 (printed p. 204), 17th pallava ("Sri Gauranga's dance"), no. 2 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "), after the heading "Then Sri Gaurachandra befitting every time"; raga beloyar; MS P-R-Sa no. 2169. GPT1 — p. 249, no. 4 (raga beloyar); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 4 (signature "dīna rāmānanda"). On the attribution see note 24.

43. "Rai" is Radha. "Bent in three places" (tribhaṅga) — the pose of Krishna playing the flute: Gaura reveals Himself in the mood of Krishna (cf. PK 2120, chapter 1, no. 7: the Lord in the dress of Natavara). Gaudiya Vaishnava siddhanta sees in this not imitation but a manifestation of His nature: Gaura is Krishna Himself, come in the mood of Radha (CC Adi 4). MS P-R-Sa: "in the tribhaṅgi pose" (tribhaṅgi).

44. "The nooses of sin and piety" — the bonds of karma, both sinful and pious: prema frees one from both. MS "kha": "like a lion" (siṃha yena); "gha": "the fear of existence" (bhababhaya). GPT: "He rolls, rises, sits — destroying the fear of lowly Ramananda".

14. Yadunatha Dasa — "āmāra gaurāṅga jāne premera marama..." (PK 2125)

*Lila: Radha's mood: Gauranga knows the inmost essence of prema; absorbed in meditation, He has taken on Radha's colour; as soon as He utters "Ra", His whole body quivers; as soon as He utters "dha", He sheds tears; His mind is immersed in the manifestation of the mood of Gauri — Radha. Raga suhai.*⁴⁵

14.1. My Gauranga knows the inmost essence of prema:
meditating and meditating, He has taken on Radha's colour.⁴⁶

14.2. As soon as He utters "Ra" — His whole body is overwhelmed; as soon as He utters "dha" — tears flow from His eyes.

14.3. Streams [of tears] run incessantly over the ground;
His body, covered with thrills, repeats that name.

14.4. His mind is immersed in the manifestation of Gauri's mood — how can one tell of it with a single mouth, [says] Yadunatha Dasa?⁴⁷

45. Signature: "Yadunatha Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 239 (printed p. 228), no. 17 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "), immediately before PK 2126 (no. 15) and PK 2127 (Shivananda, chapter 5, no. 10); raga suhai; MS P-R-Sa no. 2232. GPT1 — p. 36, no. 29 (raga suhai), in a series of Yadunatha's padas (no. 27 = PK 2191, no. 4). This pada was not in the stage-1 catalogue (found during verification). On the author see note 12.

46. "Has taken on Radha's colour": Gaura's golden form is Radha's radiance, with which Krishna has covered Himself, accepting Her mood (CC Adi 4: "the Lord adorned with the mood and radiance of Radha"). This is the mood of pure prema, not a worldly feeling. GPT1: "haila" (became) instead of "bhela".

47. Gauri ("the golden one") is a name of Radha. MSS "kha", "ca": "nigamana" instead of "nimagana"; GPT1: "...to Yadunatha Dasa".

15. Yadunatha Dasa — "gadādhara narahari kare dhari gaurahari..." (PK 2126; BR, pp. 918–919)

*Lila: Gaurahari, holding the hands of Gadadhara and Narahari, rolls on the ground in prema and loudly sings the virtues of Vrindavana; remembering His pastimes in Nidhuvana, He weeps: "Yamuna!"; He recalls the friendship of Subala, the words of Vrinda, the love of Lalita and Vishakha: "Where is the Queen of My life? Where is Govardhana? Where are My flute and yellow garments?" Narahari Chakravarti cites the pada in the *Bhakti-ratnakara among the testimonies to the Lord's moods in Navadvipa, next to the pada of Govinda Ghosha (PK 2128). According to M-1961 it is an eyewitness pada. Raga gandhara (PK), kamoda (BR).⁴⁸

15.1. Holding the hands of Gadadhara and Narahari, Gaurahari rolls on the ground in the ecstasy of prema;
words cannot express it: the Lord, crying aloud, sings the virtues of Vrinda's forest.

- 15.2. Remembering His pastimes in Nidhuvana, in agitation the Lord weeps, calling: "Yamuna!"
From His eyes, like streams of the Suradhuni, [tears] flow, running down His holy breast.⁴⁹
- 15.3. Subala's pure friendship, Vrinda-devi's sweet words, Lalita's tender love,
Vishakha's talk of prema — recalling them, with pain in His heart, speaking and speaking, He cannot stand.⁵⁰
- 15.4. "Where is the Queen of My life? Where is Govardhana Hill?
Where are My flute and yellow garments?"
The ocean of prema overflowed, flooding the whole world — only Yadunatha Dasa did not comprehend [it].⁵¹

48. Signature: "Yadunatha Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 239 (printed p. 228), no. 18 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga gandhara ("shri-gandhara"); MS P-R-Sa no. 2233. BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed., pp. 918–919 ("again kamoda"); 1960 ed. vv. 2993–2996. GPT1 — p. 281, no. 13; GPT2 — sect. 4.3, no. 13. In the stage-1 catalogue the pada was listed under Shivananda Sena (ShS-002) with the PK number 2123 — wrongly. B. B. Majumdar (1961) sees in it an eyewitness testimony to the Lord's mood in Navadvipa.

49. Nidhuvana is a grove in Vrindavana, the place of Radha and Krishna's most intimate pastimes. Here the Lord, in the mood of Krishna, recalls His pastimes in Vraja (cf. PK 2128, chapter 4, no. 4, and Narahari's PK 2122, chapter 3, no. 1).

50. Subala is a friend of Krishna; Vrinda-devi is the goddess of Vrindavana, the arranger of His pastimes; Lalita and Vishakha are Radha's closest friends. BR: "Lalita's tender love" (sneha), "recalling, with pain in the heart" (soñari marama bethā).

51. "The Queen of My life" (prāṇeśvarī) is Radha. "Did not comprehend": the poet's humility — he cannot contain that ocean. Cf. the similar ending in Govinda Ghosha (PK 2128).

16. Vamshidasa — "bhābābeśe gorācāṁḍa bibhora haiyā..." (PK 2851)

Lila: the mood of a cowherd friend: Gorachand in ecstasy calls Shridama, Subala, Vasudama, "brother Balarama", calls the cows Dhavali and Shangali and, crying "Kalindi! Yamuna!", floats in tears of prema. In PK it is a gaura-chandrika to the "morning lila" in the section of the "eightfold eternal lila". Signature: "Vamshidasa". Raga bhatiyari.⁵²

- 16.1. In the ecstasy of His mood Gorachand, lost to Himself, again and again calls: "Brother Shridama!"
- 16.2. Now He calls Subala, now Vasudama, now He calls: "My brother, elder brother Balarama!"⁵³
- 16.3. He calls out: "Dhavali! Shangali!" —
His body covered with thrills, streams of prema flow.
- 16.4. Crying "Kalindi! Yamuna!", He floats in the waters of prema:
the past has come back to His mind, says Vamshidasa.⁵⁴

52. Signature: "Vamshidasa". PK: vol. 4, PDF p. 181 (printed p. 172), "Then the morning lila", no. 14 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga bhatiyari. GPT1 — p. 282, no. 19 (raga bhatiyari); GPT2 — sect. 4.3, no. 19. S. Ray considered "Vamshidasa" and "Vamshivadana" one poet; Majumdar separates Vamshidasa — a disciple of Srinivasa Acharya (a later poet) — from Vamshivadana, the guardian of Vishnupriya. Hence the attribution to a contemporary is doubtful (C).

53. Shridama, Subala, Vasudama are Krishna's cowherd friends; Balarama is His elder brother. Cf. Gaura's goshtha-lila in the padas of Vamshivadana (PK 2564, chapter 1, no. 12) and Chaitanyadasa (PK 1169, chapter 4, no. 7): in Navadvipa the Lord reveals the mood of Krishna the cowherd.

54. Dhavali ("the white one") and Shangali ("the dark one") are Krishna's cows; Kalindi is the Yamuna, daughter of the Sun. "The past" — the pastimes of Vraja.

17. Ramananda — "āre mora āre mora gaurāṅga rāya..." (PK 1417)

Lila: the boat play on the Ganga: Gauranga, having become a young boatman, plays in a boat with His companions and dear Gadadhara, as once [Krishna on the Yamuna]; the boat nearly sinks in the gusts of wind, and Gora laughs; on both banks the people of Nadia watch and cry "Haribol". In PK it is a gaura-chandrika to the "boat play" (nauka-vilasa) of Radha and Krishna on the Yamuna. Signature: "Ramananda". Raga dhanashi.⁵⁵

17.1. (Refrain) O my, O my Gauranga Raya!

Going out into the middle of the Suradhuni, having become a young boatman,
He plays together with His companions.

17.2. With dear Gadadhara, in the merriment of the former play, seated in the boat, He sports;

the boat is about to sink, a fierce wind blows — seeing it, Gora, who wears the forest garland, laughs.⁵⁶

17.3. Someone makes a din, crying "Haribol" again and again, on both banks the people of Nadia watch;

seeing the world-enchancing Boatman, enraptured, hundreds of thousands of young wives forgot themselves.⁵⁷

17.4. The thief of the hearts of the world's people is my Gaurasundara:

whatever He does is before everyone's eyes.
Lowly Ramananda says: in such a fount of bliss
I alone have remained deprived.

55. Signature: "Ramananda". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 391 (printed p. 378), "Then the boat play on the Yamuna. Fixing the mind on the feet of Sri Radha and Krishna, listen. First — Sri Mahaprabhu", no. 9 (mark " ॐ १४१९ "); raga dhanashi; MS P-R-Sa no. 1963. GPT1 — pp. 333–334, no. 43 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sect. 5.1 (OCR 38886). On the attribution see note 24.

56. "The former play" (pūraba rabhasa) — Krishna's play with Radha in a boat on the Yamuna. "Who wears the forest garland" (banamālī) is an epithet of Krishna. MS "kha": "laughing".

57. Cf. note 21: the image speaks of the Lord's irresistible beauty, not of worldly passion; the Gaudiya Vaishnava tradition does not accept worship of Gaura in the mood of "gaura-nagari". MSS "ka", "gha": "having gathered" (meliyā); "kha": "that" (tāi).

18. Ramananda Dasa — "suradhuni-tire āju gaura kiśora..." (PK 2615)

Lila: jhulana on the bank of the Ganga: the companions have woven a swing of flowers, Gaura swings together with Gadadhara; Mukunda, Madhava, Vasu and Haridasa sing of former pastimes. In PK it is a gaura-chandrika to the "swing lila" in the section of the "eightfold eternal lila". Signature: "Ramananda Dasa". Raga saranga.⁵⁸

18.1. Today on the bank of the Suradhuni is young Gaura:

the Lord is lost in the taste of the swing play.

18.2. Out of various flowers they have all woven a swing;

all the companions are drunk with bliss.

18.3. Gaura swings, and with Him Gadadhara:

how many waves of prema arise thereby!

18.4. Mukunda, Madhava, Vasu, Haridasa together sing of the joyful play of former times.⁵⁹

18.5. How many such pastimes in the town of Nadia! —

Ramananda Dasa cherishes the hope [of seeing them].

58. Signature: "Ramananda Dasa". PK: vol. 4, PDF p. 94 (printed pp. 84–85), 30th pallava ("The eightfold eternal lila"), "Then the swing lila", no. 14 (mark " १४ २७१६ "); raga saranga. GPT1 — p. 326, no. 18 (raga saranga); GPT2 — sect. 5.1, no. 18. In the stage-1 catalogue (RM-009) the PK number was not given. Cf. the jhulana padas of Vasu Ghosha (PK 1550) and Narahari (PK 1559) — chapter 4, nos. 5–6. On the attribution see note 24.

59. Mukunda is Mukunda Datta; Madhava and Vasu are the Ghosha brothers; Haridasa is Haridasa Thakura. "The play of former times" — the swing of Radha and Krishna in Vraja. MSS "ka", "ca" in 18.2: "lost to themselves" (bibhora); so too GPT1.

19. Shankara Ghosha (?) — "śrībāsa-aṅgane binoda bandhāne..." (KGC 30.2)

*Lila: Nityananda's dance in Srivasa's courtyard: men and gods, men and women run to see; the devotees sing, the khol and kartals sound; in the midst, intoxicated with the mood of "Brother", Nitai dances in the guise of a wrestler, leaps and roars, watering the earth with a rain of prema; Advaita roars, Srivasa weeps holding His feet, Mukunda sobs embracing Gadadhara. In KGC it is a pada on Nityananda signed by Shankara Ghosha; in GPT the same pada is about Gauranga and signed by Vrindavana Dasa. Raga mangala.*⁶⁰

19.1. In Srivasa's courtyard, to a wondrous rhythm,

Nityananda Raya dances;
men and gods, males and females —
all run to see.

19.2. The circle of devotees sings an auspicious song, the khol and kartals sound;

in the midst, beside Himself with prema, Nitai dances, intoxicated with the mood of "Brother".⁶¹

19.3. His arms lovelier than golden pillars,

His waist slimmer than a lion's;
His face a moon, His eyes lotuses, a form that enchants Cupid.

19.4. Again and again He roars, again and again He leaps, in the guise of a wrestler He dances;

from His reddish eyes, with a rain of prema,
He waters the circle of the earth.⁶²

19.5. Upon the circle of the earth a downpour of prema has the Avadhuta-moon poured;

the men and women of the fourteen worlds, forgetting themselves, weep, gazing and gazing at His beauty.

19.6. The Lord of Shantipura roars without cease, seeing the transformations of prema;

holding the holy feet, magnanimous Pandita Srivasa weeps.

19.7. Mukunda, rejoicing, sobs and sobs, embracing Gadadhara;

from the eyes of Thakura Abhirama prema flows, again and again resounds "Hari, Hari!"⁶³

19.8. Knowing neither day nor night, in the taste of prema float all the companions;
Shankara Ghosha Dasa cherishes hope in Nitai's lotus feet.

60. Signature: "Shankara Ghosha Dasa". KGC: 30th kshanada (purnima), no. 2 ("to Sri Nityanandachandra"), pp. 239–241; raga mangala. GPT1 — p. 275, no. 88, and GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 88 (raga mangala): "In Srivasa's courtyard... Gauranga Raya dances", without stanza 19.3, with a different ending: "Knowing neither day nor night, in the taste of prema float all the companions; Vrindavana Dasa reveals prema at Nitai's lotus feet". B. B. Majumdar (1961) cites the pada as Shankara Ghosha's (after KGC). The attribution is disputed (C): KGC is older than GPT, but a later substitution of the signature is possible in the KGC recension too.

61. "The mood of 'Brother'" (bhāiyāra bhābe) — Nityananda's love for Gauranga, His Brother (cf. chapter 5, note 53). GPT: "the khol and kartals sound" (bājata).

62. "In the guise of a wrestler" (mallabeśa) — Nityananda reveals the mood of Balarama. GPT in 19.5: "...all men and women, seeing the beauty of the Lord of the world, weep".

63. Abhirama Thakura is a companion of Nityananda (in Vraja, Shridama). GPT: "again and again resounds 'Brother, brother!'". The Lord of Shantipura is Advaita Acharya.

20. Murari (?) — "premābeśe prabhure rākhiyā śāntipure..." (PK 2231)

*Lila: after the sannyasa: leaving the Lord, overwhelmed by prema, in Shantipura, Nityananda comes to Nadia; thinking of Shachi's grief, He rolls on the ground on the way; arriving at the house, He stands before the mother, sighing heavily — His heart breaks to tell of His Brother's sannyasa: "Gaura has taken sannyasa and come to Shantipura; He has sent Me to fetch you." Shachi, Nitai and all Nadia weep. According to Majumdar, Murari Gupta's authorship is unproven: in one of the manuscripts known to the compiler of GPT the same pada bears the name of Vasu Ghosha. Raga suhai.*⁶⁴

20.1. Leaving the Lord, overwhelmed by prema, in Shantipura, Lord Nityananda came to the town of Nadia.

20.2. Thinking of Shachi's grief, Nityananda Raya rolls on the ground in the middle of the road.

20.3. Barely composing Himself, Nitai came to the house; hearing it, Shachi Thakurani came outside.

20.4. Standing before the mother, He sighs heavily:
His heart breaks to tell of His Brother's sannyasa.

20.5. "Gaura has taken sannyasa and come to Shantipura;
He has sent Me to fetch you."⁶⁵

20.6. Shachi weeps, Nitai weeps, the people of Nadia weep:
"Leaving everyone, Nimai has become a sannyasi!"

20.7. Murari says: if I do not see Gorachand,
I shall surely die — I shall enter the waters of the Ganga.⁶⁶

64. Signature: "Murari". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 279 (printed p. 268), 21st pallava ("Sri Gauranga's sannyasa etc."), no. 14 (mark " ১৪ ১১৩১ "); raga suhai; MS P-R-Sa no. 2336. GPT1 — p. 378, no. 40 (raga dhanashi; in Majumdar "pp. 373–374"), GPT2 — sect. 5.3, no. 40: longer, with three extra couplets (see note 65); in a note GPT1 gives a signature "according to some books": "Vasu Ghosha says: do not weep, mother Shachi — for the sake of the living beings your Gaura will become the Giver of prema". In PK the pada is followed by PK 2232 (signature "wretched Vallabha"): the women of Nadia agree to go to Advaita's house. Cf. CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1; Murari, Kadacha (book 3).

65. In GPT after 20.4: "Seeing Nitai, Shachi fell: 'Where is my Nimai?' — 'Do not weep, mother Shachi, hear Me: Lord Gaura, the treasure of virtues, has taken sannyasa'"; after 20.5: "Hearing of the sannyasa from Nitai's lips, Shachi fell senseless to the ground. Nityananda raised her: 'Come to Shantipura — your Nimai is in Advaita's house'".

66. The poet's grief, not a vow: thus padas of separation express that life without the Lord is unbearable.

21. Madhavi Dasa — "nīlācala haite śacīre dekhite..." (PK 1853)

Lila: Jagadananda comes from Nilachala to see Shachi; from afar Nadia seems to him like Gokula in separation: leaves fall out of season, the sun does not shine, birds with closed eyes do not eat and weep, repeating Gorachand's name, cows stand silent on the road — and the Pandita falls to the ground. Continued in Chandrashekhara's pada PK 1854 (chapter 1, no. 25). Signature: "Madhavi Dasa". Raga dhanashi (GPT).⁶⁷

- 21.1. From Nilachala, to see Shachi, Jagadananda comes;
stopping at a distance, he sees Nadia — it is like Gokula.⁶⁸
- 21.2. (Refrain) Pandita Raya reflects:
"Shall I find Shachi or not?" — with this thought he walks on.
- 21.3. Trees and creepers — hundreds and hundreds — he sees:
out of season their leaves are falling;
the sun's rays do not break through,
the clouds seem crimson.
- 21.4. Birds sitting on the branches, both eyes closed, having given up fruit and water,
weep, crying aloud,
repeating the name of Gorachand.
- 21.5. Cows stand in herds on the road — not a sound from any of them;
Thakura Pandita, [the master] of Madhavi Dasa, crashed to the ground.⁶⁹

67. Signature: "Madhavi Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 129–130 (printed pp. 118–119), 10th pallava ("Separation of various kinds"), no. 2 (mark " ཨ ཨ ཨ ཨ "), headed "the same raga"; MSS according to the apparatus: "ka", "gha", "ca". GPT1 — p. 407, no. 17 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sect. 5.5, no. 17. It is followed in PK and GPT1 (no. 18, pp. 407–408) by Chandrashekhara's pada PK 1854 on Jagadananda entering Shachi's house (in GPT1 with an extra couplet about the faithful servant Ishana; the stage-1 catalogue entry ChSh-001 lacked the GPT1 reference). In the stage-1 catalogue the first line of PK 1853 was given from its third line ("rahi katho dūre..."). Cf. CC Antya 12 (Jagadananda's journeys to Navadvipa on the Lord's commission). The attribution to Madhavi (Madhavi Devi of Puri or another poet) is not established.

68. "Like Gokula" (gokulapurera chanda) — Nadia after Gaura's departure resembles Gokula after Krishna's departure for Mathura. MS "ka": "how many" (kata for katho, so too GPT).

69. "[The master] of Madhavi Dasa" (mādhavī dāsera thākura paṇḍita) — the poet calls Jagadananda his master (thakura), i.e. he was evidently his follower. MS "gha": "sees" (dekhi), "sobbing" (ḍukuri); "ka", "ca": "of anyone" (kāra); GPT1: "fell, crashing down" (āchāri).

22. Ramananda — "bhāla bhāli nāce gaurāṅga raṅgiyā..." (PK 2257)

Lila: the Lord's kirtana — evidently in Nilachala: Gauranga dances, Nitai supports Him from behind; Murari, Mukunda and Vasu sing to the kartals and mridangas; the Lord asks: "Speak, speak, Narahari!" and looks at Gadadhara; coming up to Svarupa and Rupa, He asks for the flute and stands in the tribhanga pose; Advaita rejoices, mighty Kashishvara supports Him. The presence of Svarupa, Rupa and Kashishvara points to Nilachala, where the Gaudiyas came for the Ratha-yatra. Signature: "Ramananda". Raga dhanashi.⁷⁰

- 22.1. (Refrain) Splendidly, splendidly joyful Gauranga dances!
Intoxicated with prema, with His roar He destroys the filth of Kali; behind Him Nitai walks, supporting [Him].

22.2. Kartals and mridangas sound, all sing aloud — with Him Murari, Mukunda, Vasu; hearing the pada, Gora Raya [dances] —
His feet do not touch the ground — the ocean of prema surges in waves.⁷¹

22.3. Lord Gaurahari asks: "Speak, speak, Narahari!" — and looks at Gadadhara on His left; blessed is dear Gadadhara, whose life is Chaitanya:
"Gadai's Gauranga," people sing.⁷²

22.4. Coming up to Svarupa and Rupa, He says: "Give Me the enchanting flute!" — now He stands bent in three places;
His speech a heap of nectar; now, softly, softly laughing,
He raises both arms and cries "Hari".⁷³

22.5. "Glory, glory to the Jewel of the twice-born!" — an auspicious cry rose up, Advaita's bliss increased;
mighty Kashishvara supports Advaita, and Ramananda, seeing it, rejoices.⁷⁴

70. Signature: "Ramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 289 (printed p. 278), 21st pallava, after the heading "Then a description of Sri Gauranga's form in sankirtana", no. 40 (mark " ৪০ ঙ্গে৭ "); raga dhanashi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2362. GPT1 — p. 261, no. 42 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 42. The next PK pada, 2258, "nāce śacīnandana bhakata-jībana-dhana", which GPT gives with the signature of Narahari (catalogue NS-007), is signed by Lochana Dasa in PK. On the attribution to Ramananda see note 24.

71. "The pada" — the song the kirtanias sing. This tripadi line has three members.

72. "Gadai's Gauranga" (gadāira gaurāṅga) — "Gadadhara's Gauranga", a set expression for the inseparability of the Lord and Gadadhara Pandita.

73. Svarupa Damodara lived with the Lord in Puri; Rupa Gosvami came to Puri in 1516–1517 (CC Antya 1). MS P-R-Sa: "Coming up to Svarupa, He says: 'Do give Me the enchanting flute!'" (svarūpera... deha nā) — without Rupa. The request for the flute and the tribhanga pose are the mood of Krishna (cf. note 43).

74. "The Jewel of the twice-born" (dvijamaṇi) is Gaura. Kashishvara was the Lord's mighty servant in Puri, who cleared a path for Him through the crowd (CC Adi 10).

23. Madhavi Dasa — "ānande nācata saṅge bhakata..." (PK 2290)

*Lila: the festival of colours (phagu) in Nilachala: young Gaura dances with the devotees, they shower one another with coloured powder; the women of Puri run to see, the people of Nilachala watch the play with delight; kartals and khol sound. Signature: "Madhavi Dasa". Raga vasanta.*⁷⁵

23.1. In bliss, with the devotees, dances the young king Gaura:
scattering phagu powder, they shower one another in the midst of the city of Nilachala.⁷⁶

23.2. Hearing of it, the women, full of love, ran out to the road;
seeing Gaura, they were bewildered and could not take their eyes off [His] face.⁷⁷

23.3. Raising both arms, He goes about dancing together with the devotees;

the people of Nilachala, full of longing [to see], watch the play with delight.

- 23.4. The kartals sound, [people] cry "Splendid, splendid!", and the khol sounds as well;
Madhavi Dasa rejoices in his heart and ceaselessly cries "Haribol".

75. Signature: "Madhavi Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 300 (printed p. 289), 21st pallava, no. 73 (mark " १७ ३३९० "); raga vasanta; MS P-R-Sa no. 2394. GPT1 — p. 260, no. 39 (raga vasanta); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 39. On the attribution see note 67.

76. Phagu is the red powder (abir) with which people shower one another at the spring festival of Holi (Dola-yatra; the Phalguna full moon is the day of the Lord's appearance). MS P-R-Sa: "city" (pura for purī).

77. MS P-R-Sa: "having come, all look" (āsiyā sakali dekhe). On such images see note 21.

24. Ramananda — "hari hari aiche ki hoyaba hāmāra..." (PK 3057)

*The poet's prayer: "Hari, Hari! Will I have such fortune — to see Gaura's pastimes with His companions in Nadia: dance and kirtana on the bank of the Ganga, the Lord in His place in Srivasa's house — Nityananda on the right holding the parasol, Gadadhara on the left; someone will take me there, and I shall see His moonlike face; and when, calling His mother, He comes home to dine..." In PK it stands among the prayer-padas (prarthana). Signature: "Ramananda". The raga is the same as that of the preceding pada.*⁷⁸

- 24.1. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! Will I have such [fortune] — joyfully, together with the companions, Lord Gaura's pastimes in Nadia to behold?

- 24.2. On the bank of the Suradhuni, in the taste of dancing, my Lord will sport in kirtana — shall I see it, filling my eyes?
My long-held desire will be fulfilled.

- 24.3. When in Srivasa's house, with His own,
He sits in His place,
Nityananda on the right holding the parasol, Pandita Gadadhara on the left —

- 24.4. then someone will take me and lead me there, and I shall see that moonlike face;
my whole body will be covered with thrills, and I shall attain the bliss of prema.

- 24.5. When, calling His mother, He comes home and sits to eat and drink — what Ramananda will behold in bliss!
Then my two eyes will not have been in vain.⁷⁹

78. Signature: "Ramananda". PK: vol. 4, PDF p. 253 (printed p. 244), among the prayer-padas, no. 73 (mark " १७ ३०६१ "); "the same raga"; MS P-R-Sa no. 2554. GPT1 — pp. 491–492 (sect. 7, "Prarthana"; first line "hari hari aiche bhāgya hoyaba hāmāra" — "will I have such good fortune"). On the attribution see note 24. A prayer in the form of a longing to see the pastimes of Navadvipa is common among later poets (cf. the prarthanas of Narottama Dasa); but it may also be the word of a contemporary yearning after the sannyasa for the days of Navadvipa. MSS "ka", "kha", "ca", P-R-Sa in 24.1: "to me" (āmāra for hāmāra).

79. "Calling His mother" (janani sambodhane) — MS "ka": "with address to the mother" (sambodhana). GPT1: "...then I shall see [it] and make both eyes fruitful".

Chapter 7. Praise of Nitai and Chaitanya, the Appearance of Nityananda and Gaura, Nimai's Childhood, the Abhisheka, Kirtanas, the Sannyasa, Nilachala, the Deities at Ambika, Prayers

*Padas of contemporaries known from the *Padakalpataru (PK), in the order of the lilas: praise of Nitai and Chaitanya and of the sankirtana (Krishnadasa); Nityananda's appearance at Ekachakra (Krishnadasa); Gaura's appearance and His childhood play in Shachi's house (Vasu Ghosha); the Govardhana of bhakti in Navadvipa (Chaitanyadasa); the abhisheka in Srivasa's house (Krishnadasa); the dance of the Lord hearing of Vrindavana (Ramachandra); Nityananda's dance (Vasu Ramananda); separation in autumn (Krishnadasa); the sannyasi Lord on the seashore (Ramananda); Nilachala (Paramananda); the Deities of Gaura and Nitai in Gauridasa's house at Ambika (Krishnadasa); and Krishnadasa's prayers. The text follows PK, checked against the scans, with the variants of the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) and the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Krishnadasa — "prema-sindhu gorā rāy..." (PK 2343)

Praise of Nitai and Chaitanya: Gaura is an ocean of prema, Nitai the wave upon it; Rupa and Sanatana, diving into this ocean, bring up jewels and string them on the thread of bhakti; the kirtana of the lilas is a blossoming lotus forest. In PK it stands in the 23rd pallava (the form and qualities of Chaitanya and Nityananda). Raga dhanashi.¹

1.1. An ocean of prema is Gora Raya, Nitai the wave upon it, on all four sides — the wind of compassion.

Prema surges and spills over — the world draws breath again:
everyone's heat and thirst are gone.²

1.2. (Refrain) Behold, behold the merciful Nitai and Chaitanya!

To the swans and chakravakas — the devotees — They call: "Drink, drink!"
Having found such a thing, why stay deprived?³

1.3. Diving, Rupa and Sanatana bring up many treasures, jewels, and carefully string a garland of them.

Making the creeper of bhakti the thread — take it, souls, adorn your necks:
the scorching heat of the sun will go.⁴

1.4. The sankirtana of the taste of the lilas is a blossoming lotus forest, whose fragrance has filled the world.

The forest of flowers has bloomed, the bees are intoxicated — yet Krishnadasa, having found it, has stayed deprived.⁵

1. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 319 (printed p. 308), 23rd pallava, no. 12 (mark " ১২ ২৩৪৩ "); raga dhanashi; ms. P-R-Sa no. 2447. GPT1 — pp. 32–33, no. 19 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sect. 1.3, no. 19. Which Krishnadasa wrote the pada is not established: PK gathers under this signature padas of different poets (including Krishnadasa Kaviraja); the mention of Rupa and Sanatana dates it not earlier than 1514–1516. Majumdar does not discuss it.

2. "The world draws breath again" (jagata hāphān chāre) — like one exhausted by the heat breathing with relief; ms. "ka" and GPT1 — hākāla ("the world cries out"). Ms. "kha": "sin" (pāpa) instead of "heat".

3. Hamsa-swans and chakravakas are water birds living on the ocean of prema; the image continues the ocean metaphor.

4. Rupa and Sanatana Gosvami are disciples of the Lord whose books opened the treasures of bhakti. Ms. "gha": "the thread of a book" (grantha) instead of "creeper". "The heat of the sun" is worldly suffering; GPT1: "your burning will go".

5. The humility usual with Vaishnava poets: the poet considers himself deprived of what is being given to all.

2. Krishnadasa — "nabadvīpe śuni śimhanāda..." (PK 2089)

*The sankirtana in Navadvīpa as a battle: Gaurachandra is the great chariot-warrior, Nityananda the general, Advaita the vanguard; the enemies are bound with a noose of the rope of prema; the Lord, mounted on the elephant of Kali, sets up outposts on every side. In PK it stands in the 17th pallava (the dance and pastimes of Gauranga). Raga ramakeli.*⁶

2.1. (Refrain) In Navadvīpa a lion's roar was heard!

The Vaishnavas arrayed themselves, starting the sankirtana of Hari — the fools took it for a calamity.⁷

2.2. Gaurachandra is the great chariot-warrior, Nityananda the general, Advaita at the head of the army.

With a noose of the rope of prema they bound many foes;
unceasingly thunders the name of Hari.

2.3. Sri Chaitanya wages the battle, mounted on the elephant of Kali, in the array of a hero, the crusher of godlessness.

To deliver the souls of the Kali age the Lord came to the earth and set up outposts on all four sides.⁸

2.4. High and low — all obtained the treasure of prema by a particle of the mercy of Nitai and Chaitanya.

But Krishnadasa, seeing Yama before him, grieves deeply:
he has not found even a trace of prema.⁹

6. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 226 (printed p. 215), 17th pallava, no. 31 (mark " ଓଃ ଶଠଶ "); raga ramakeli; ms. P-R-Sa no. 2198; after the pada a PK rubric: here the pada "kali timira ghora..." is also sung. GPT1 — p. 274, no. 85 (raga ramakeli); GPT2 — sect. 4.2. The catalogue's former first line ("kali-jība tarāite...") is the beginning of the third stanza. Which Krishnadasa it is has not been established.

7. "A lion's roar" is the thundering kirtana; "the fools" (mūṛhamati) are the opponents of the kirtana in Navadvīpa (cf. CB Madhya 23).

8. "Mounted on the elephant of Kali" (kali-gaje ārohaṇa): the Kali age, subdued, serves the Lord as His war elephant; mss. "ka", "kha", "ca": "mounted on an elephant" (kari-gaje). GPT1: "Nityananda is the charioteer" (sāraṭhi) instead of "the general". The Lord crushes godlessness (pāṣaṇḍa) not with weapons but with the holy name: cf. CC Adi 17 — the Kazi subdued by the kirtana.

9. Yama is the lord of death. The self-abasement usual with Vaishnava poets.

3. Krishnadasa — "jaya jaya mahāprabhu jaya gauracandra..." (PK 2847)

*A nama-kirtana: glory to Mahāprabhu, His parents, Navadvīpa, the Ganga, the Lord's consorts and His devotees. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the morning lila (32nd pallava, the "eightfold lila"). Raga "kau".*¹⁰

3.1. Glory, glory to Mahāprabhu, glory to Gaurachandra!

Glory to Vishvambhara, glory to the ocean of mercy!

3.2. Glory to the Son of Shachi, glory to Pandita Nimai!

Glory to Mishra Purandara, glory to Mother Shachi!

3.3. Glory, glory to Navadvīpa, glory to the Suradhuni!

Glory to Lakshmi and Vishnupriya, the Lord's consorts!¹¹

3.4. Glory, glory to the devotees who dwell in Navadvīpa!

Glory, glory to the feet of Nityananda and Advaita!

3.5. Ever hoping for the two feet of Nityananda, Krishnadasa has sung this nama-sankirtana.¹²

10. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 4, PDF pp. 179–180 (printed pp. 170–171), 32nd pallava, "Now the morning lila. Sri Gaurachandra", no. 10 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga "kau" (an abbreviation; so also GPT1). GPT1 — pp. 22–23, no. 62 (without couplet 3.3); GPT2 — sect. 1.2, no. 62. The attribution is not established; the hope placed in Nityananda's feet in the signature points rather to a poet of Nityananda's branch than to Krishnadasa Kaviraja.

11. Mishra Purandara is Jagannatha Mishra, the Lord's father. Suradhuni is the Ganga. Lakshmi is Lakshmipriya, the Lord's first consort; Vishnupriya the second.

12. Nama-sankirtana — the singing of the Lord's names.

4. Krishnadasa — "rāṇhadeśe nāma ekacakrā grāma..." (PK 1116)

*Nityananda's appearance: in Radha-desha, in the village of Ekachakra, in the house of Hadai Pandita, on the bright thirteenth of Magha, Haladhara was born; Hadai celebrates his son's birth, the earth sways with joy; Advaita in Shantipura perceives that Rama, Krishna's elder brother, has appeared. In PK: "Then the appearance of Shri Nityananda-chandra" (3rd shakha, 18th pallava, the "janma-lila"). Raga shri.*¹³

4.1. In Radha-desha, in the village named Ekachakra, in the house of Hadai Pandita, in the auspicious month of Magha, on the bright thirteenth, Haladhara was born.¹⁴

4.2. Hadai Pandita, filled with joy, holds a festival for his son.
The circle of the earth sways, unable to contain the bliss.

4.3. The Lord of Shantipura, rejoicing, divined something:
in His heart He knew: surely there is born Rama, the elder brother of Krishna.¹⁵

4.4. The hearts of the Vaishnavas grew serene, they float in an ocean of bliss.
"Even this wretched sinner will be delivered," says the unhappy Krishnadasa.¹⁶

13. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 265 (printed p. 252), 3rd shakha, 18th pallava (the "janma-lila"), section "tataḥ śrīnityānandacandrābirbhāḥ", no. 5 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga shri; ms. P-R-Sa no. 1614. GPT1 — p. 416, no. 7 (raga shri); GPT2 — sect. 6.1, no. 7. In the catalogue the pada was listed as PK 1117 (PK 1117 is the next pada, below, no. 5). Which Krishnadasa it is has not been established.

14. Radha-desha (Rarh) is the region west of the Ganga. Hadai Pandita (Hadai Ojha) is Nityananda's father. Haladhara ("bearer of the plough") is Balarama: Nityananda is Balarama Himself. Magha is January–February; the same date is in the Advaita-prakasha. Ms. "ka" and P-R-Sa: "Radha-desh" (without the locative ending).

15. The Lord of Shantipura is Advaita Acharya. Rama is Balarama, Krishna's elder brother.

16. "Unhappy" (dukhī) is the poet's humble name for himself.

5. Krishnadasa — "bhubana-ānanda-kanda balarāma nityānanda..." (PK 1117)

*Praise of Nityananda, descended in the Kali age: He is golden like the champaka, the nails of His fingers are a row of moons, His face eclipses the full moon, His arms reach His knees; bee-devotees hover at His lotus feet. In PK it is the next pada of the same section. Raga suhai.*¹⁷

5.1. The root of the world's bliss, Balarama Nityananda, has descended in the Kali age.
All sorrows are gone: seeing that moon-face, people float on waves of bliss.¹⁸

5.2. (Refrain) Glory, glory to Nityananda-Rama!
His lustre is that of the golden champaka, on His fingers a row of moons;
by His beauty He has conquered millions of Kamadevas.¹⁹

5.3. Seeing that face, to what can the full moon compare?
Long eyes, eyebrows like bows.
Arms reaching the knees, palms like land-lotuses,
a waist slender as a lion's.²⁰

5.4. At His lotus feet the bee-devotees hover;
His half-words pour out nectar.
"Now the souls of this Kali age will be delivered," says the humble, unhappy Krishnadasa.²¹

17. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 265–266 (printed pp. 252–253), 18th pallava, no. 6 (mark " ୧୨୩୪ "); raga suhai (P-R-Sa: shri); ms. P-R-Sa no. 1615. GPT1 — p. 416, no. 8 (raga suhai); GPT2 — sect. 6.1, no. 8. Which Krishnadasa it is has not been established.

18. Mss. "ka", "kha": haila (the same form, "descended"); P-R-Sa: "in an ocean of bliss" (sāgare) instead of "on waves".

19. According to Ray's apparatus, the refrain is marked only in ms. P-R-Sa; in GPT1 too it stands after the first stanza. Kamadeva is the god of love: the Lord's beauty surpasses that of millions of Kamadevas.

20. "As a lion's" — literally "as the elephant's enemy's" (kari-ari); ms. "ka": airi, "ca": vairi (same meaning).

21. Ms. "kha": "bringing nectar" (āniyā). Ms. "ka": "are delivered" (haila), P-R-Sa: haiba ("will be delivered"); GPT1: "the souls of the Kali age are all delivered".

6. Vasu Ghosha — "jaya jaya kalaraba nadiyā nagare..." (PK 1121; BR, p. 763)

*Gaura's appearance: in Nadia cries of "Jaya!" resound; at the full moon of Phalgunā, under the Phalgunī nakshatra, Gora was born to Shachi; as in the Dvapara age Krishna appeared to Yashoda, so now He has appeared in Nadia to deliver the souls of the Kali age. Narahari Chakravarti cites the pada in the *Bhakti-ratnakara in the account of the Lord's appearance. According to Majumdar, Vasu Ghosha's padas on the Lord's birth and childhood are poetic invention: Vasu was not in Navadvīpa at that time. Raga tūḍī (BR: basanta).²²

6.1. Glory, glory! — cries resound in the city of Nadia:
Gora has appeared from Shachi's womb.²³

6.2. At the full moon of Phalgunā, under the Phalgunī nakshatra, at an auspicious moment Gora was born, the jewel of the twice-born.

6.3. His radiance eclipsed the full moon — the darkness, losing hope, went far away.²⁴

6.4. In the Dvapara age Krishna appeared in Nanda's house — the whole world knows of His birth from Yashoda.

6.5. Now He has been born to Shachi in Nadia to deliver all the souls of the Kali age.

6.6. So says Vasudeva Ghosha, cherishing hope in his heart, trusting in his mind in the two feet of Gaura.²⁵

22. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 267 (printed p. 254), 18th pallava, no. 10 (mark " ୧୦ ୧୧୧୧ "); raga tūḍī; ms. P-R-Sa no. 1619. BR, 12th wave: 1912/1913 eds. — p. 763 ("tathāhi gīte basantaḥ"), 1960 ed. — vv.

895–900; in BR lines 6.3–6.5 differ (see VAR). GPT1 — p. 51, no. 2 (raga tudi or karuna); GPT2 — sect. 2.1, no. 2. Majumdar: Vasu's padas on the birth and childhood (PK 1121, 1150, 1151, 1161 and others) are the poet's invention; we translate them as a poetic contemplation of lilas known from the biographies (CB Adi 2–5; CC Adi 13–14).

23. "From Shachi's womb" is the ordinary language of the biographies about the Lord's appearance: the Lord is not born like a conditioned soul but manifests Himself, as Krishna appeared to Devaki (Bhag. 10.3; CC Adi 13). BR: "Gorachand was born".

24. The Lord appeared during a lunar eclipse (CC Adi 13.89–98); the poet plays on this: the moon was dimmed before His radiance.

25. Vasudeva Ghosha is Vasu Ghosha. Mss. "ka", "kha", P-R-Sa: bharasā (the same). BR: "sings Vasudeva Ghosha... trusting in the two feet of Lord Gora".

7. Vasu Ghosha — "gorā-rūpe ki diba tulanā..." (PK 1137)

*Gaura's form: neither gold of the highest assay, nor lightning in a cloud, nor a garland of champakas, nor the golden ketaki, nor gorochana can compare with Him; the fragrance of His body surpasses kunkuma. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the festival of Sri Radha's birth; no raga is given.*²⁶

7.1. To what shall I compare the form of Gora?

Even gold of the highest assay does not compare with it.²⁷

7.2. Lightning in a cloud is no likeness of this form; a garland of champakas does not compare with it.

7.3. The petal of the golden ketaki does not compare, pure gorochana does not compare.²⁸

7.4. The fragrance of His body, surpassing kunkuma, captivates the heart.

Says Vasu: out of what did the Creator fashion Gora?²⁹

26. Signature: "Vasu". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 274 (printed p. 261), 18th pallava, "Now the festival of Sri Radhika's birth. There — Sri Gaurachandra", no. 11 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); according to Ray's apparatus — ms. P-R-Sa nos. 371 and 1641 and ms. P-R no. 21 (the pada recurs in the manuscripts). GPT1 — p. 110, no. 1 (raga shri; the beginning of the section on the Lord's form); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 1. According to Majumdar, PK 1030 = 1137 (the pada stands twice in PK); he counts it among Vasu's padas on Gaura's form.

27. "Gold of the highest assay" (kaṣīla bāna sonā) — gold tested on the touchstone; P-R: another reading (kaṣīda kāmṇā). Mss. "ka", "kha", "ca" and GPT1: "likeness" (upamā) instead of "comparison".

28. Ketaki is the screw-pine with golden flowers; gorochana is a bright yellow pigment. P-R-Sa and P-R, instead of "golden": "with the form" (rūpera, rūpe).

29. Kunkuma is saffron. P-R-Sa, P-R: "the form, so captivating" (rūpa ati) instead of "the fragrance of the body".

8. Vasu Ghosha — "eka mukhe ki kahaba gorācāndera līlā..." (PK 1141)

*The infant Gaura crawls about the courtyard: saliva trickles down His little face, His lips are redder than a ripe bimba, on His little arms are bracelets, on His feet anklets, on His neck a tiger's claw amulet, on His back a golden chain with a silken tassel. In PK: "Now parental love befitting infancy. Sri Gaurachandra" (the beginning of the 19th pallava). Raga tudi.*³⁰

8.1. With one mouth how can I tell the lilas of Gorachand?

Shachi's Child crawls on all fours, starting all kinds of games.³¹

8.2. Saliva trickles down His little face — how lovely it is!

His lips are redder than a ripe bimba fruit.³²

8.3. On His lovely little arms are armlets and bracelets; on His feet makara-headed anklets, on His neck a tiger's claw.³³

8.4. On His back a golden chain with a silken tassel.

Says Vasudeva Ghosha: "I give my very self for Him."³⁴

30. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 275 (printed p. 262), 3rd shakha, 19th pallava, "atha bātsalyaṃ kaumārakālocitaṃ yathā. śrīgauracandraḥ", no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐ४ॐ "); raga tudi; ms. P-R-Sa no. 1648. GPT1 — p. 62, no. 2 (raga tudi); GPT2 — sect. 2.2, no. 2. Among Vasu's childhood padas Majumdar names "PK 1140" — evidently PK 1141: PK 1140 is a pada of Uddhava Dasa on Radha's birth. On his assessment see note 22.

31. P-R-Sa instead of the second line: "crawling, He plays in all kinds of ways".

32. Mss. "ka", "ca": nāle (the same, "saliva"). Mss. "ka", "kha", "gha", "ca": "lovely" (sundara) instead of "red" (suraṅga). The bimba is a fruit with a bright red skin, a common comparison for lips.

33. Armlets (aṅgada) and bracelets (balayā), makara-headed anklets (magarā khāru), the tiger's claw (bāghanakha) are common ornaments and amulets of children in Bengal.

34. "I give my very self" (nichani āpanā) — the nichhani rite: one waves something around a beloved one and gives it away (here — oneself) for his welfare.

9. Vasu Ghosha — "kiye hāma pekhaluṃ kanaka-putaliyā..." (PK 1150; BR, p. 774)

*The boy Gaura dances in Shachi's courtyard, all covered with dust, amid naked boys, crying "Hari, Hari!"; His mother listens to the jingling of His anklet bells. Narahari Chakravarti cites the pada in the *Bhakti-ratnakara: Srinivasa, in Navadvipa, is told how Vishvambhara danced in this courtyard. In PK: "Now parental love befitting childhood and boyhood. Sri Gaurachandra". Raga mayur (BR: kamoda).³⁵

9.1. What a golden doll I have seen!

In Shachi's courtyard He dances, all grey with dust.³⁶

9.2. On all sides naked boys surround Him, and in their midst Gora dances, saying "Hari, Hari!"

9.3. On reddish lotus feet the jewel of the twice-born runs about;

His mother listens with joy to the jingling of His anklet bells.³⁷

9.4. Says Vasudeva Ghosha, who knows the taste of the childhood play:

"Blessed are the people of Nadia, blessed is Navadvipa!"³⁸

35. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 279 (printed p. 266), 19th pallava, no. 10 (mark " ॐ ॐ४ॐ "); raga mayur (mss. "gha", "ca": maur). BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed. — p. 774 ("gīte rāgaḥ kāmōda"), 1960 ed. — vv. 1035–1038. GPT1 — p. 63, no. 4 (raga beloar — dashakoshi); GPT2 — sect. 2.2, no. 4. On Majumdar's assessment see note 22.

36. "What... I have seen" (kiye hāma pekhaluṃ) is a Vrajabuli turn of phrase.

37. "The jewel of the twice-born" is the young brahmana Nimai; GPT1: "the sun-jewel" (dinamaṇiyā); BR: "on radiant lotus feet". In 9.2 mss. "gha", "ca": beṛiyā (the same, "surrounding"); ms. "gha": "Gaura". Ms. "ka": "the sweet jingle of the bells".

38. BR after the pada: "O Srinivasa, in this courtyard Vishvambhara danced in all kinds of ways — a wonderful sight".

10. Vasu Ghosha — "śacīra āṅgināya nāce biśvambhara rāy..." (PK 1151; BR, p. 774)

*Hide-and-seek: Vishvambhara dances in the courtyard and, laughing, hides from His mother, covering His face with the end of His cloth: "I have hidden!" — Shachi plays along: "Vishvambhara, I cannot see You!"; holding the end of her sari, He skips along with the gait of a wagtail. In BR it comes right after the previous pada. The same raga (BR: vibhasa).*³⁹

10.1. In Shachi's courtyard Vishvambhara Raya dances; laughing, turning about, He hides from His mother.

10.2. Covering His face with His cloth, He says: "I have hidden!"

Shachi says: "Vishvambhara, I cannot see You!"⁴⁰

10.3. Holding the end of His mother's sari, on restless little feet
He goes skipping with the gait of a wagtail.⁴¹

10.4. Says Vasudeva Ghosha: "A wondrous beauty!
Seeing the form of the Child, the world is filled with longing."

39. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 279 (printed p. 266), 19th pallava, no. 11 (mark " ॐ ॐॐॐ "); "tathā rāga" (mayur); ms. P-R-Sa no. 1657. BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed. — p. 774 ("gīti bibhāṣaḥ"), 1960 ed. — vv. 1040–1043. GPT1 — p. 63, no. 5 (beloar — dashakoshi); GPT2 — sect. 2.2, no. 5.

40. P-R-Sa: "on the face" (badane) — the same meaning.

41. The wagtail (khañjana) is a bird with a lively, skipping gait; a common poetic comparison.

11. Vasu Ghosha — "gorā nāce śacīra dulāliyā..." (PK 1161; BR, pp. 774–775)

*Shachi's darling Gora dances, the boys around Him clap their hands: "Haribol!"; on His head a red cap, on His neck golden beads, His mother has lovingly tied His little dhoti; the poet exclaims: "Take Him in your arms — Gora is the life of my life!" In BR it is the third pada of the same series. In PK: "Now the rasa of parental love, another mode. Shri Gaurachandra" (the beginning of the 20th pallava). Raga bhatiyari (BR: bhatyali).*⁴²

11.1. (Refrain) Gora dances, Shachi's darling;
the boys have gathered around, all clap their hands, saying "Haribol, Haribol!"

11.2. On His head a red cap, on His neck golden beads; with love His mother has tied His little dhoti tight.⁴³

11.3. Lovely curling hair, a well-formed body;
a dress that charms the world, eyebrows — Kamadeva's bow.

11.4. Silver and golden ornaments adorn His body charmingly.
As He lifts His feet — red lotuses — the anklet bells ring.

11.5. In Shachi's courtyard He dances and dances, babbling half-words.
Says Vasudeva Ghosha: "Hold Him, hold Him, take Him in your arms — Gora is the life of my life!"⁴⁴

42. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha". PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 282–283 (printed pp. 269–270), 3rd shakha, 20th pallava, "atha bātsalyarasah prakārāntaram yathā. śrīgauracandraḥ", no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐॐॐ "); raga bhatiyari; ms. P-R-Sa no. 1680. BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed. — pp. 774–775 ("punaḥ rāga bhātyāli"), 1960 ed. — vv. 1044–1048. GPT1 — p. 63, no. 3 (raga bhatiyari); GPT2 — sect. 2.2, no. 3. The catalogue's former first line ("śacīra āṅgane nācaye saghane") is the beginning of the last stanza.

43. "Cap" (catunā) — a child's cap; ms. "ca": catulā. "Beads" (kāṃṭhi) — a string of beads. Ms. "ka": parāñāche (the same, "has tied").

44. Ms. "ka": "Gora, Gora is the life of my life"; BR: "Gora is like the life of my life".

12. Chaitanyadasa — "dekha dekha aparūpa gaurāṅga-bilāsa..." (PK 1242)

An allegory: in Navadvipa Gauranga again manifests the lila of lifting Govardhana. He bids the people of Kali worship the "Govardhana" of pure bhakti: the nine kinds of bhakti are its peaks, the five rasas its fruits, pulaka, tears and trembling its adornment. The "Indra" of the Kali age, on the "Airavata" of irreligion, sends a downpour of lust, lightnings of anger and a hail of greed, but Gauranga lifts the mountain of bhakti; Kali, put to shame, begs forgiveness and vows not to touch those who sing the Lord's glory. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the "Govardhana-yatra" (3rd shakha, 23rd pallava).

*Raga gandhara (P-R-Sa: dhanashi).*⁴⁵

- 12.1. (Refrain) Behold, behold the wondrous play of Gauranga!
Again the lifting of the hill — in the order of the former lila —
He has manifested in Navadvipa.⁴⁶
- 12.2. "People of the world, worship the Govardhana of pure bhakti!" — such is the law He gave in the Kali age.
The nine branches of bhakti beginning with hearing are its peaks, like wish-fulfilling trees;
the five rasas are the fruits that adorn them.⁴⁷
- 12.3. Sprouts of pulaka are its beauty, streams of tears captivate the heart, a gentle breeze is its lovely trembling.
Serve this best of hills, offering it your own senses as gifts — you will obtain the jewel of prema, the desired boon.⁴⁸
- 12.4. Seeing how people lived, the king of the gods of the Kali age shook with anger.
On the Airavata of irreligion, together with Indrani — evil-mindedness — he came with his army arrayed.⁴⁹
- 12.5. The clouds of lust poured down, the thunderbolts of anger were hurled — a great fear seized the people.
Under the blows of the stones of greed and delusion, under the harsh winds of envy and the rest, steadfastness and dharma are ceaselessly blown away.⁵⁰
- 12.6. Seeing the fear of the living beings, the merciful Sri Gauranga conceived a means in His heart:
Himself accepting the essence of a devotee's bhava,
He lifted the mountain of bhakti.⁵¹
- 12.7. Under its shelter people forgot grief and sorrow, everyone's fear of Kali was dispelled.
Then Kali, the king of the gods, ashamed of his defeat, offers praise to the lotus feet.
- 12.8. Having begged forgiveness for his offence, he humbly says:
"All souls are under the Lord's shelter;
whoever sings Your glory — over him I have no claim," — this he solemnly confirmed.⁵²
- 12.9. The Lord showed him mercy — "Blessed Kali" became his name, and to this day the world proclaims it.
Says Chaitanyadasa: under the guise of the Govardhana lila — from age to age the deliverance of souls.⁵³

45. Signature: "Chaitanyadasa" ("caitanyadāsete bale"). PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 312–313 (printed pp. 299–300), 3rd shakha, 23rd pallava, "atha gobarddhana-yātrā. taducita-śrīgauracandraḥ", no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐॐॐ "); raga gandhara (P-R-Sa: dhanashi); ms. P-R-Sa no. 1776. In the catalogue this pada was wrongly listed as PK 1243 by Krishnadasa (KR-013); PK 1243 is the next pada, on the Govardhana-puja in Vraja, signed "Krishnadasa" (Krishna-lila; not translated). The pada was not found in GPT1. Chaitanyadasa was, according to Majumdar, a contemporary of the Lord (cf. chapters 4–6); the allegorical form, however, suggests rather a later author.

46. Krishna lifted Govardhana, protecting Vraja from Indra's wrath (Bhag. 10.24–25); the poet sees in Gauranga's preaching of bhakti a "repetition" of that lila.

47. The nine kinds of bhakti are hearing, chanting, remembering and so on (Bhag. 7.5.23–24). The five rasas are shanta, dasya, sakhya, vatsalya, madhurya. Mss. "ka", "kha", "ca", P-R-Sa: "limbs" (aṅga) instead of "peaks" (śṛṅga).

48. Pulaka is the bristling of the body's hair in ecstasy; tears and trembling are also sattvika-bhavas. Serving the Lord of the senses with the senses is the definition of bhakti (Narada-pancharatra, quoted in Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu 1.1.12).
49. Airavata is Indra's elephant, Indrani his consort: here "the king of the gods" is Kali himself, the personified age.
50. Ms. "kha", P-R-Sa: mahā (the same, "great").
51. "Accepting the essence of a devotee's bhava" — in this avatara the Lord accepts the mood of His devotee (CC Adi 4).
52. Mss. "ka", "kha", "ca": khemāyā (a dialect form of "having begged forgiveness").
53. "Blessed Kali" (dhanya kali) — cf. Bhag. 11.5.36 and 12.3.52: the wise praise the Kali age, for in it the highest goal is attained by sankirtana.

13. Krishnadasa — "ānande bhakatagaṇa dei jaya-raba..." (PK 1570)

*Gaura's abhisheka in Srivasa's house: the devotees cry "Jaya!", Gauranga is bathed with panchagavya, panchamrita and the water of a hundred pots; He sits on a jewelled platform; Advaita and Nityananda float in prema, Mukunda, Murari and others sing, Haridasa dances crying "Hari!"; the men and women of Nadia see it all with their own eyes. In PK: "Now the abhisheka-vilasa. First, that of Sri Gaurachandra" (3rd shakha, 31st pallava). Raga suhai.*⁵⁴

- 13.1. In bliss the devotees raise the cry "Jaya!";
in the house of Srivasa Pandita there is a great festival.
- 13.2. With panchagavya, panchamrita, the water of a hundred pots they joyfully perform the abhisheka of Gauranga.⁵⁵
- 13.3. On the jewelled platform sits Gorachand;
a wondrous beauty — a snare for the hearts of women.⁵⁶
- 13.4. The Lord of Shantipura and Nityananda Raya, gazing at Gauranga's face, float away in prema.⁵⁷
- 13.5. Mukunda, Murari and others sing sweetly; crying "Hari!", Haridasa dances all around.
- 13.6. Says Krishnadasa: the abhisheka of Gorachand the men and women of Nadia see with their own eyes.⁵⁸

54. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 465 (printed p. 452), 3rd shakha, 31st pallava, "athābhiṣeka-bilāsaḥ. ādau śrīgauracandrasya", no. 2 (mark " ३ १५० "); raga suhai; ms. P-R-Sa no. 2114. GPT1 — p. 239, no. 5 (raga suhai); GPT2 — sect. 4.1, no. 5. The catalogue's former first line ("ratana-bedīra para...") is the beginning of the third couplet. The next pada of PK (1571) is Vasu Ghosha's pada on the abhisheka (chapter 1, no. 2). Which Krishnadasa it is has not been established. On the Lord's abhisheka in Srivasa's house see CB Madhya 9.

55. Panchagavya — the five products of the cow; panchamrita — the five nectars (milk, curd, ghee, honey, sugar); the Deity is bathed with them at the abhisheka.

56. The image (as in the padas on Krishna) speaks of the Lord's irresistible beauty, not of mundane passion; worship of Gaura in the mood of "gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya Vaishnava tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati): in Navadvipa, according to CB (Adi 15), the Lord did not even jest with women.

57. The Lord of Shantipura is Advaita. Mss. "ka", "kha", P-R-Sa: "having seen" (heri); P-R-Sa: "form" (rūpa) instead of "face".

58. "With their own eyes" (parateka = pratyakṣa).

14. Ramachandra — "dekha śacīnandana jagata-jībana-dhana..." (PK 2064)

*The Lord's dance: the Son of Shachi, the treasure of the world's life, ceaselessly gives out prema; in ecstasy He dances, crying "Hari!"; hearing of Vrindavana's glories, He rolls on the ground and laughs; Kashishvara, Abhirama, Pandita Purushottama and Narahari Dasa sing His glory; at the sound of the khol and karatalas children and wealthy alike come running. In PK it stands in the 17th pallava (the dance and pastimes of Gauranga). Raga "the same" (tathā rāga).*⁵⁹

- 14.1. Behold: the Son of Shachi, the treasure of the world's life, ceaselessly offers people the treasure of prema.
Rapt in bhava, the Best One — His golden body thrilling — crying "Hari" again and again, Lord Gora dances.⁶⁰
- 14.2. (Refrain) The essence of all avataras is the Gora-avatara!
His peerless body surpasses the colour of gold, from His reddish eyes flow streams of prema.
- 14.3. Hearing Vrindavana's glories, this jewel of the twice-born rolls on the ground;
overflowing with bhava, my Lord laughs.
Kashishvara, Abhirama, Pandita Purushottama sing His glory, and with them Narahari Dasa.⁶¹
- 14.4. Hearing the khol and karatalas, children and wealthy alike come running — all in hope of prema.
Whoever's heart is awakened to such qualities of Gaura — his servant is Ramachandra Dasa.⁶²

59. Signature: "Ramachandra Dasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 217 (printed p. 206), 4th shakha, 17th pallava, no. 6 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ ॐ "); "tathā rāga"; ms. P-R-Sa no. 2173. GPT1 — p. 250, no. 6 (raga beloar; without stanza 14.4, i.e. without the signature); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 6. According to Majumdar, Ramachandra is probably Ramachandra Kaviraja of Nityananda's branch (not his namesake, the friend of Narottama), a companion of the Lord: Narahari Chakravarti cites another pada of his (PK 2186 = BR p. 919, chapter 1) as the testimony of an eyewitness.

60. "Lord Gora" (gorā pahum); ms. "kha", P-R-Sa: "crying 'Hari, Hari', the Lord dances".

61. Kashishvara is a servant of the Lord (according to CC a disciple of Ishvara Puri, later in Puri); Abhirama Thakura is a companion of Nityananda; Pandita Purushottama is a companion of the Lord (CC Adi 10–11 names several Purushottamas); Narahari Dasa is Narahari Sarakara. The place (Navadvipa or Puri) cannot be determined with certainty from the list of companions.

62. The khol is the clay drum of kirtana, the karatalas are hand cymbals.

15. Vasu Ramananda — "aruṇa basane bidita bhubane..." (PK 2331)

*Nityananda's dance: in red garments, with a dancer's turban, He dances, looking around and crying "Hari, Hari"; His gait is that of a mighty elephant, His anklet bells ring; in ecstasy He knows no directions and roars "Gaura!"; the devotees roll on the ground gazing at His moon-face, and Vasu Ramananda weeps, clasping Nitai's feet. In PK it is the last pada of the 22nd pallava (on Nityananda). The same raga (suhai).*⁶³

- 15.1. In red garments, renowned in the world, with a dancer's turban on His head, looking around on every side He cries "Hari, Hari!" — and dances in all manner of ways.⁶⁴
- 15.2. (Refrain) Lovely Nitai dances!
In those reddish eyes, in that moon-face — how much sweetness there is!⁶⁵
- 15.3. Lovely is His gait — like a mighty elephant's,
His anklet bells jingle.
Overcome by bhava, knowing no directions,
He roars out: "Gaura!"⁶⁶
- 15.4. All the devotees roll on the ground gazing at that moon-face.
And Vasu Ramananda weeps, disconsolate, clasping the feet of Nitai.

63. Signature: "Vasu Ramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 315 (printed p. 304), 4th shakha, 22nd pallava, no. 38 (mark " ୧୮ ୨୦୦୨ "); "tathā rāga" (after the preceding pada — suhai); ms. P-R-Sa no. 2435. Not found in GPT1 or KGC. In Ray's index of poets it stands among the padas of Vasu Ramananda. The red garments, turban and jingling ornaments recall the description of Nityananda in Gauda after 1515 (CB Antya 5–6), but the pada names no place.

64. A dancer's turban (naṭapaṭi pāga) — a gay turban, as worn by Krishna-Natavara. Mss. "ka", "ca": "Hari, Hari" instead of "looking around" (heri heri).

65. Ms. "gha": kata nā (the same meaning).

66. According to Ray's apparatus, the lines "Lovely is His gait... jingle" were omitted by scribal error in mss. "ka", "kha", "ca" and P-R-Sa.

16. Krishnadasa — "śarata-cānda jini gorā-mukha cānda..." (PK 1743)

*Separation in autumn: Gauranga, whose face surpasses the autumn moon, gazes at the autumn moon and weeps, remembering the happiness of the autumn season, sobbing aloud; the heart breaks at the sight of His face, even a fool loses his composure; all the dear companions weep. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to "separation befitting autumn": "Shri Mahāprabhu, overcome by that bhava" (8th pallava). Raga sindhura.*⁶⁷

16.1. The moon-face of Gora, surpassing the autumn moon, gazes at the autumn moon — and weeps.⁶⁸

16.2. Remembering again and again the happiness of autumn,
Lord Gauranga weeps, sobbing aloud.⁶⁹

16.3. The heart breaks at the sight of that face; even a fool cannot keep his composure.

16.4. All the dear companions weep in distress.
Krishnadasa says: "I am a great sinner."

67. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 92 (printed p. 81), 4th shakha, 8th pallava ("separation befitting spring and the other seasons"), "atha śaratkālocita-birahaḥ. tadbhābākṛāntaḥ śrīmahāprabhuḥ", no. 33 (mark " ୧୧ ୨୧୪୦ "); raga sindhura; ms. P-R-Sa no. 967. Not found in GPT1. Which Krishnadasa it is has not been established.

68. Autumn is the time of the rasa ("the autumn nights", Bhag. 10.29.1). The Lord's weeping is separation in Radha's mood — pure prema, not worldly longing (CC Antya 14–20).

69. P-R-Sa: "the face of autumn" (mukha) instead of "happiness".

17. Ramananda — "dekha dekha jība gaurāṅgacāṁḍera līlā..." (PK 2248)

*The sannyasi Lord: He who in a moment enchanted hundreds of thousands of gopis has exchanged His yellow garments for the kaupina and the staff; leaving the happiness of the Kalindi's bank, He stands awesome on the seashore; in the Rama-avatara He held the bow, in Gokula He played the flute, and now, out of compassion for souls, He has taken the sannyasi's staff; the poet says: this is no sannyasi's garb, but the armour of a hero crushing godlessness. In PK it stands in the 21st pallava (Gauranga's sannyasa). Raga varadi.*⁷⁰

17.1. (Refrain) Behold, souls, the lila of Gaurangachand!

He who in the twinkling of an eye enchanted hundreds of thousands of gopis — why has He become a sannyasi?⁷¹

17.2. Leaving His yellow garments, putting on the string and kaupina, the crooked He has made a straight staff.
Leaving the happiness of the Kalindi's bank, awesome is He on the shore of the sea.⁷²

17.3. In the Rama-avatara He held the bow, in Gokula He filled the flute with sound, and now, out of compassion for souls, taking the staff, He has become a sannyasi.⁷³

17.4. Taking a new staff and a water-pot,
He has settled on the shore of the sea.
Says Ramananda: this is no sannyasi's garb — it is the armour of a hero crushing godlessness.⁷⁴

70. Signature: "Ramananda". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 285–286 (printed pp. 274–275), 4th shakha, 21st pallava (Gauranga's sannyasa), no. 31 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga varadi; ms. P-R-Sa no. 2353. GPT1 — p. 18, no. 49 (raga varadi); GPT2 — sect. 1.2, no. 49. In the catalogue (RM-001) this pada was confused with the preceding PK 2247 ("goloka chāṛiyā pahu kene vā abanī"); that one is signed in PK "Govinda Dasa", in GPT "Nayananda", and Ramananda is only mentioned in it ("Raya Ramananda weeps"). The attribution of PK 2248 to Vasu Ramananda is not proven (the signature is only "Ramananda"); by its content the pada was written after the sannyasa, about the Lord in Puri.

71. The gopis are Krishna's friends in Vraja; their prema is pure, without a trace of the mundane — the highest love of God.

72. "The crooked" (bākuyā) — the reading is unclear; probably "crooked" (bām̐kuyā): Krishna, who stood "bent in three places" (tribhanga) with the flute, now holds the straight staff of a sannyasi. The Kalindi is the Yamuna. "Awesome" (paracaṇḍa = pracaṇḍa).

73. Mss. "ka", "kha", "ca", P-R-Sa: "holding the bow" (dhariyā).

74. The staff (danda) and the water-pot (karaṅga, kamandalu) are the sannyasi's belongings; mss. "ka", "kha", P-R-Sa: "taking along" (laiyā saṅge) instead of "taking a water-pot". "The armour of a hero" (bīra-bānā — a warrior's array): the Lord's sannyasa is a weapon against godlessness; cf. note 8.

18. Paramananda — "śrīnityānanda caitanya hare..." (PK 2971)

A nama-kirtana in Vrajabuli: the Son of Shachi, descended in Nadia, first of all spread the holy name; He dances in kirtana, Gadadhara at His left; tears of prema wash away the darkness of Kali; He embraces all without distinction; living in Nilachala, He beholds the Lord of the Yadus (Jagannatha); He goes from house to house for the sake of the fallen, offering prema. In PK it is unsigned, in the 34th pallava (nama-sankirtana); in GPT the last line carries Paramananda's signature. Ragini "kau", tala madhyaman (according to ms. "gha").⁷⁵

18.1. (Refrain) Sri Nityananda, Chaitanya, Hari!

18.2. The Son of Shachi, descended in Nadia, having taken the form of Gaura of radiant hue, first of all spread the holy name in the world — who else so compassionately saves the fallen?⁷⁶

18.3. He who delights in dance in the taste of sankirtana, all thrilled with unbroken pulaka, the benefactor of the devotees, laughs, dances and sings, enraptured — the people of the three worlds cry "Glory!" — so He enchants.⁷⁷

18.4. Overcome by bhava, He stands in the tribhanga pose;
at His left shines the joyful Gadadhara;
on all sides the companions have gathered and shine — so glows the Son of Shachi, who delights in Vrindavana.⁷⁸

18.5. Unceasingly streams of prema flow from His eyes; sprinkling, they wash away the darkness of Kali.
He embraces all without distinction — peerless are His qualities, form and bhava, boundless!⁷⁹

18.6. In Nilachala dwells the Son of Shachi and beholds God, the Lord of the Yadus;
His body anointed with radiant sandal paste —
His whole form calls forth delight.⁸⁰

18.7. Sweetly, sweetly He utters the name of Hari, for the fallen He goes from house to house;
the merciful Lord Himself offers prema —
the fear of the world's people He drives away.⁸¹

75. PK: vol. 4, PDF pp. 221–222 (printed pp. 212–213), 4th shakha, 34th pallava (nama-sankirtana), no. 14 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); "rāgīnī kau — tāla madhyamāna" (according to Ray, this heading is only in ms. "gha"). In PK there is no signature: the last line is "jaga-janake bhaya dūrahi bhājata" ("He drives away the fear of the world's people"). GPT1 — p. 403, no. 5 (raga dhanashi; the section on Puri), where the same line reads "paramānandaka bhaya dūrahi bhāgata" ("He drives away Paramananda's fear") — Paramananda's signature; the catalogue's attribution (PA-007) rests on it. The catalogue connected Paramananda with PK 2966 and 2974: PK 2966 is a pada of Gopala Dasa on Radha and Krishna; PK 2974 ("hare hare govinda hare") does bear Paramananda's signature, but it is a nama-kirtana to Krishna without gaura-lila (not translated). Majumdar ascribes Paramananda's Vrajabuli padas to Paramananda of Vrindavana, a follower of Rupa, not to Paramananda Gupta; authority C.

76. The last words of the stanzas (kohe, mohe, sohe...) are Hindi exclamatory endings ("who?", "enchants", "shines"), usual in Vrajabuli nama-kirtanas.

77. "Glory!" (balihāri) — literally "I give myself for Him".

78. Tribhanga is the "thrice-bent" pose of Krishna with the flute; "who delights in Vrindavana" (bṛndābana-raṅgī) is Krishna. Ms. "gha": another reading instead of "gathered" (ota nita).

79. Ms. "gha": "tears of prema flow" (bahata premajala); "ka", "kha", "ca": siṃcata (the same, "sprinkling"); "ka": mohata, "kha": mocata ("wash away"); "ka", "kha": kara (the same, "embraces").

80. The Lord of the Yadus (yadunandana) is Jagannatha. GPT1: "beholds every day".

81. "Himself offers prema" (premaḥi yācata) — He gives it without waiting to be asked. Ms. "ka": "fallen people" (patitaloka); "ka", "kha": liye (the same, "for the sake of").

19. Krishnadasa — "ākula dekhiyā tāre kahe gaura dhīre dhīre..." (PK 2359)

The continuation of PK 2358 (chapter 1, no. 24). Seeing Gauridasa distraught, the Lord softly says: "We have stayed with you"; He comes to the Pandita with two Deities, and four stand before Gauridasa — the Lord, Nityananda and Their Deities; the Lord bids him keep whichever two he wishes and promises, for the sake of his faith, to eat at his house, asking for food; Gauridasa cooks, and all four partake; having thus turned his heart, the Lord left Both with him in Their Deities, while the two brothers Themselves went to Nilachala. In PK it stands in the section on Gauridasa Pandita (24th pallava, "the character of Gaura's devotees"). The same raga (bhatiyari).⁸²

19.1. Seeing him distraught, Gaura says softly, softly:

"We have stayed with you.
Know it for certain: in this house of yours
We have stayed, the two brothers."⁸³

19.2. Having consoled him thus, taking two Deities, the Lord appeared before the Pandita.
Four stood there side by side — the Pandita was amazed, tears of bhava flow from his eyes.⁸⁴

19.3. Again the Lord says to him: "Whichever you wish, those two keep in your house.
For the sake of your faith I will eat at your house, asking for food — know it in your heart: it is true, true."

- 19.4. Hearing this, the king of panditas set about cooking — and the four partook of the meal.
Offering flower garlands and clothes, presenting betel and the rest, he anointed Their whole bodies with sandal paste.
- 19.5. Having strengthened his faith in every way and turned his heart, the Lord left Both in his house.
For the Pandita's love the two brothers eat there, asking for food — while They Themselves went to the city of Nilachala.⁸⁵
- 19.6. The Pandita serves Them: whenever They wish for whatever, so They sport.
Such is my master Gauridasa; hoping for his feet, says the humble, lowly Krishnadasa.⁸⁶

82. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 324–325 (printed pp. 313–314), 4th shakha, 24th pallava, no. 7 (mark " ୧ ୨୭୯୩ "); "tathā rāga" (after PK 2358 — bhatiyari); ms. P-R-Sa no. 2463. GPT1 — p. 406, no. 15 (raga kamoda; right after PK 2358 = GPT1 no. 14); GPT2 — sect. 5.5, no. 15 (in the catalogue GD-003, wrongly ascribed to Gauridasa and to PK 2360). The first line in the catalogue (KR-011, "nityānandacāṇḍa...") is the end of PK 2357. According to Majumdar, Krishnadasa is Gauridasa's younger brother; he dates PK 2358 to the Lord's lifetime, and this pada directly continues it. Cf. Murari 4.14.12–17.

83. Ms. "kha": "seeing" (dekhite); "ka": "with you" (tomāra); GPT1: "We have stayed, the two brothers, as captives" (bandī).

84. The four are the Lord, Nityananda and Their two Deities (so also GPT1's note). Ms. "ka": "murti, murti" (mūrti mūrti). The Deity is not a statue but the Lord Himself, manifesting Himself out of love for His devotee: the Lord shows Gauridasa that He and His Deity are one.

85. Ms. "ka", P-R-Sa: "then" (sei) instead of "whenever". "Asking for food" (khāy māgi) — the Lord Himself asks Gauridasa for food, reciprocating his love.

86. "Master" (prabhu) is Gauridasa, the poet's elder brother and, it seems, his teacher.

20. Krishnadasa — "dekha dui bhāi gaura nitāi..." (PK 1576)

*The abhisheka of Gaura and Nitai in Gauridasa's house: the two brothers sit on the altar as if the moon and the sun had come down from the sky; Thakura Pandita with his people pours scented water over Them to the sound of conches, bells, gongs, flutes, vinas, khols and karatalas; having bathed and dressed Them, he seats Them on a throne, performs puja, feeds Them, offers betel and sandal, puts on garlands and performs arati. In PK the pada concludes a series of padas, in the section on the abhisheka (31st pallava), about the festival at Gauridasa's: in the two preceding ones (signed "Svarupa") the Lord and Nityananda promise Gauridasa in a dream to come and stay in his temple, he prepares the festival, and They come. Raga varadi.*⁸⁷

- 20.1. Behold: the two brothers, Gaura and Nitai, sit upon the altar,
as if the moon and the sun, leaving the sky, had come down to the earth.⁸⁸
- 20.2. Seeing it, Thakura Pandita rejoices;
taking his people along,
filling many pots with scented water,
he pours it over the heads of Both.
- 20.3. Conches, bells, gongs, flutes, vinas, pipes, khols and karatalas sound;
cries of "Jaya, jaya!", shouts of "Hari, Hari!" — on all sides the devotees sing.⁸⁹

- 20.4. Having bathed and dressed Them, he seated Them on the throne.
Lighting incense and lamps, taking a plate of arghya, he performed the puja of Both.⁹⁰

- 20.5. Having fed Them with all kinds of offerings, at the end — betel and sandal;
putting on flower garlands and performing arati, Krishnadasa bowed down [before Them].

87. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 467 (printed p. 454), 3rd shakha, 31st pallava, no. 8 (mark " ୪ ୨୫୭୦ "); raga varadi; ms. P-R-Sa no. 2146. GPT1 — p. 241, no. 12 (raga varadi); GPT2 — sect. 4.1, no. 12. The pada belongs to the same story as PK 2358–2360 (here nos. 19, 21), but PK places it in the section on the abhisheka. Which Krishnadasa it is, is not stated; by the theme, probably Gauridasa's younger brother.

88. Mss. "ka", "kha", "gha", "ca": nāmīlā āsiyā (the same, "came down"); "ka", "kha": "night and the sun" (nīśā) instead of "the moon".

89. P-R-Sa: bāje (the same, "sound"), gāhe (the same, "sing").

90. Arghya is a respectful offering of water with flowers and rice. P-R-Sa: arghyathālī (the same).

21. Krishnadasa — "śrībṛndābana nāma ratna-cintāmaṇi-dhāma..." (PK 2360)

Praise of Gauridasa: in Vrindavana, the abode of chintamani jewels, beside Krishna and Balarama, was Subala-chandra — now he has become Gauridasa and lives in Ambika; Nitai and Chaitanya accepted his service, and all four partook of his food; as Subala once subdued Rama and Kanu, so now this has become manifest; knowing nothing but Nitai and Chaitanya, he kept the two brothers Themselves in his house. In PK it is the next pada of the same section. The same raga (bhatiyari).⁹¹

- 21.1. There is Sri Vrindavana, the abode of chintamani jewels;
there, beside Krishna and Balarama, was he, named Subala-chandra — now he has become Gauridasa and lives in the city of Ambika.⁹²

- 21.2. Nitai and Chaitanya accepted his service — four murtis partook of his food.
As Subala once subdued Rama and Kanu, so now it has become manifest.⁹³

- 21.3. Nothing but Nitai and Chaitanya does he know — who can tell the greatness of his prema?
He kept in his house before his very eyes — who else could do so? — Nitai and Chaitanya, the two brothers.

- 21.4. In prema he leaps and bounds, thrilled all over, he roars, now he weeps, now he laughs.
Adorning his body with the dust of his lotus feet, says the humble, lowly Krishnadasa.

91. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 325 (printed p. 314), 24th pallava, no. 8 (mark " ୪ ୨୫୭୦ "); "tathā rāga"; ms. P-R-Sa no. 2464. GPT1 — p. 458, no. 19 (raga bhatiyari; the section on the companions); GPT2 — sect. 6.3. After the pada a section on Rupa and Sanatana begins in PK.

92. Subala is a cowherd friend of Krishna in Vraja; according to the Gaura-ganoddeshā-dīpikā (128), Gauridasa is Subala. In P-R-Sa "named" and "abode" are interchanged. Chintamani is the wish-fulfilling jewel: according to the scriptures, Vrindavana is made of them.

93. The four murtis are the Lord and Nityananda and Their Deities (cf. no. 19); ms. "ka": "forms" (mūrtte). Rama and Kanu are Balarama and Krishna.

22. Krishnadasa — "nitāi caitanya dom̐he baṛa abatāra..." (PK 2991)

*A prayer of repentance: Nitai and Chaitanya are the greatest avatars, none will be more generous than They; They delivered mlecchas, chandalas and blasphemers; yet the poet has gained nothing — he did not worship Their feet, he himself put poison into his mouth; the whole world drowned in the prema of the gaura-kirtana, but not a drop touched him. In PK it stands in the 36th pallava (prayers). Raga shri.*⁹⁴

22.1. Nitai and Chaitanya — Both are great avatars; such merciful givers there will never be again.⁹⁵

22.2. Mlecchas, chandalas, blasphemers, the godless — how many of them They delivered by Their mercy!⁹⁶

22.3. In such an avatara nothing at all fell to my lot — alas, cruel life, in what contentment you abide!

22.4. However many avatars have come into the world — one like this, brother, never comes.

22.5. Not worshipping the two feet of such a Lord, with my own hand I raised poison to my mouth and ate it.⁹⁷

22.6. The world drowned in the prema of the gaura-kirtana — alas, not a drop has touched the unfortunate one.

22.7. Krishnadasa weeps, tearing his hair:
"Shame, shame! Why does the unfortunate one not die?"

94. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 4, PDF p. 228 (printed p. 219), 36th pallava (prarthana), no. 7 (mark " ୧ ଶ୍ରୀ "); raga shri; ms. P-R-Sa no. 2500. GPT1 — p. 14, no. 34 (raga shri); GPT2 — sect. 1.2, no. 34. Which Krishnadasa it is has not been established.

95. Ms. "gha": dayālu (the same, "merciful").

96. Mlecchas are foreigners and unbelievers; chandalas are untouchables. P-R-Sa: "hundreds" (śata) instead of "how many".

97. Ms. "ka" and GPT1: "lotus feet" (pādapadma).

23. Krishnadasa — "adoṣa-daraśī mora prabhu nityānanda..." (PK 2992)

*A prayer to Nityananda: Lord Nityananda sees no fault in people, yet the poet did not worship His feet; at the news of Nitai's mercy even stone melts, but his heart does not soften; Nitai and Chaitanya do not count offences and give prema to all alike. In PK it is the next pada. The same raga (shri).*⁹⁸

23.1. My Lord Nityananda sees no fault in anyone — yet I did not worship the lotus feet of such a Lord.

23.2. Alas, I myself do not know what kind of demon I am:
having found so merciful a Master, I did not worship Him.⁹⁹

23.3. Alas, life of the unfortunate one, in what contentment do you abide?
Why do you not die crying "Nitai"?

23.4. At the news of Nitai's mercy stone melts — but my cruel heart, alas, does not soften at it.

23.5. Nitai and Chaitanya do not count offences — to all and sundry They give Their prema-bhakti.

23.6. When I utter His name, my heart does not melt.

Krishnadasa says: "I am the most unfortunate of all."¹⁰⁰

98. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 4, PDF p. 228 (printed p. 219), 36th pallava, no. 8 (mark " ୯ ୧୧୧୧ "); "tathā rāga" (shri); ms. P-R-Sa no. 2501. GPT1 — p. 433, no. 63 (raga shri; the section on Nityananda); GPT2 — sect. 6.1, no. 63.

99. Mss. "ka", "kha": kemata (the same, "what kind of").

100. Ms. "ca", P-R-Sa: "is not touched" (lāgaye) instead of "does not melt" (galaye).

24. Krishnadasa — "jaya jaya nityānanda rāy..." (PK 3006)

*A prayer to Nityananda: the poet confesses his sins and reminds the Lord of His name "Purifier of the fallen": if He rejects the sinner, that name will bear a stain; He once delivered even yavanas — He will not push him away either, if He does not despise him. In PK it stands in the 36th pallava. The same raga.*¹⁰¹

24.1. (Refrain) Glory, glory to Nityananda Raya!

My offences and sins have no end — deliver me by Your own mercy!

24.2. My mind is wicked, I have no attraction to Your name —

I am not even ashamed to say it.
How many births in a row have I destroyed myself — that is why such are my deeds.¹⁰²

24.3. You are an ocean of mercy, the friend of sinners;

if this time You reject me, then on Your peerless, pure name "Purifier of the fallen"
there will be a great stain.

24.4. I have heard with my own ears: You once delivered yavanas and so many offenders.

Krishnadasa reckons: You will not be able to push him away, if You do not despise him in Your heart.¹⁰³

101. Signature: "Krishnadasa". PK: vol. 4, PDF p. 233 (printed p. 224), 36th pallava, no. 22 (mark " ୧୧ ୭୦୦୭ "); "tathā rāga" (the raga of this series of padas is not named separately); ms. P-R-Sa no. 2515. GPT1 — pp. 432–433, no. 62 (raga suhai; the section on Nityananda); GPT2 — sect. 6.1, no. 62. Which Krishnadasa it is has not been established.

102. "Destroyed myself" (ātmaghāta) — lived forgetting the Lord, to the harm of the soul.

103. Yavanas are foreign Muslims; cf. the Lord's mercy to the Kazi in Navadvipa (CC Adi 17).

Chapter 8. Vasu Ghosha: the Gaura Avatara and Gaura's Form, the Lord's Kirtana and Bhavas in Navadvipa

*Padas of Vasu (Vasudeva) Ghosha known from the *Padakalpataru (PK), in the order of the lilas: praise of the Gaura avatara and His qualities; Gaura's form in Nadia; the Lord's dance and kirtana with the devotees on the bank of the Ganga; the Lord in Radha's mood — gaura-chandrikas to the sections of PK on Radha's states of love (prema-vaichittya, vasaka-sajja, khandita, mana). Majumdar regards Vasu Ghosha as an eyewitness of the Navadvipa kirtanas and counts these padas among his padas on the Lord's form and bhava. The text follows PK, checked against the scans, with the manuscript variants from PK's apparatus, the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934), the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) and the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Vasu Ghosha — "ki kahiba śata śata tuyā abatāra..." (PK 2292)

*Praise of the Gaura avatara: of hundreds of incarnations, the poet holds dear Gauranga alone; as Rama built a bridge across the ocean, Gaura made kirtana a bridge to carry across the lame, the dull and the blind; the poet knows neither japa, nor austerity, nor Vedic reasoning, and begs Gauranga to carry him across too. In PK it stands at the end of the 21st pallava. Raga barari.*¹

1.1. What shall I say of Your hundreds and hundreds of incarnations?

Gaurangachand alone is my life.

1.2. In the incarnation of Vishnu You are a beggar asking for prema, taking four with You: Shiva, Shuka, Narada...

²

1.3. In the incarnation of Rama You built the bridge across the ocean — but now Your fame will resound through all the world.

³

1.4. In the age of Kali You made kirtana the bridge: let all the lame, the dull and the blind cross over with ease.

⁴

1.5. By what qualities do men dance, by what qualities women? By Gora's qualities the fourteen worlds are intoxicated.

⁵

1.6. I know neither japa, nor austerity, nor this Vedic reasoning. Says Vasu: "Gauranga, carry me across!"

1. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 300 (printed p. 289), 21st pallava, no. 75 (mark " ৭৫ ঙ্গলং "); raga barari; MS P-R-Sa no. 2396. GPT1 — p. 46, no. 67 (raga barari); GPT2 — sect. 1.3, no. 67. The catalogue listed the pada twice: under PK 2294 (wrongly: PK 2294 is a pada of Atmarama Dasa on Nityananda, "āre mora nitāi nāyara") and under PK 2292. Majumdar counts PK 2292 among Vasu Ghosha's stavas and prarthanas.

2. The sense of the line is not fully clear. Probably the poet speaks of Gaura as the Lord Himself (Vishnu) come as a devotee — a "beggar" asking for prema — together with the greatest bhaktas: Shiva, Shuka, Narada (and presumably Brahma; "janā cāri" — "four," or simply "a handful of people"). The Gaudiya tradition sees in Gaura's associates incarnations of these bhaktas (Advaita — Shiva, Srivasa — Narada; GGD).

3. Rama built the bridge (setu-bandha) to Lanka. MS P-R-Sa: "at last" (abaśeṣa) instead of "but now."

4. The "bridge" of kirtana carries one across the ocean of worldly existence. MSS "ka," "ca" and GPT1: without "all" (yata); "kha": "let them cross over now."

5. The fourteen worlds — the whole universe (the seven higher and seven lower planetary systems).

2. Vasu Ghosha — "nā jāni ki jāni mora bhela..." (PK 2210)

Praise of Gaura's qualities: remembering them, trees and creepers weep, the forest deities, beasts and birds weep, stones melt, no one can stay at home; the poet loses himself. In PK it stands in the 20th pallava ("Sri Gaurachandra — another mode"). Raga suhai.⁶

2.1. (Refrain) I do not know what has happened to me:
thinking of Gauranga's qualities, I have forgotten my body.

2.2. Remembering Gora's qualities, the trees and creepers weep; remembering His qualities, the deities of the forest weep.⁷

2.3. Remembering Gora's qualities, the stones melt; remembering His qualities, no one stays at home.

2.4. Vasudeva Ghosha weeps, remembering His qualities; at His qualities beasts and birds weep, finding no rest.

6. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 272 (printed pp. 260–261), 20th pallava, no. 27 (mark " ১৭ ২২১০ "); raga suhai; MS P-R-Sa no. 2318. GPT1 — pp. 43–44, no. 57 (raga suhai); GPT2 — sect. 1.3, no. 57. Majumdar does not discuss this pada separately.

7. Cf. CC Madhya 17: in the forests of Jharikhanda the beasts and birds, trees and creepers came into ecstasy hearing the Lord sing the holy name. GPT1: "no one remains in the house" (raya ghare) — the same meaning.

3. Vasu Ghosha — "gorā-guṇa gāo gāo śuni..." (PK 2185)

*Praise of Gaura: the poet asks that His qualities be sung; the Lord is the touchstone of prema; a single glance of His dries up the ocean of grief of all souls; His eyes are full of tears, His words are engraved on the heart, His body is covered with the thrill of ecstasy. In PK it stands in the 20th pallava. Raga mallar.*⁸

3.1. (Refrain) Sing, sing of Gora's qualities — let me hear!
By the fruit of many pious deeds that Lord has been revealed to us — the touchstone of the rasa of prema.⁹

3.2. This ocean of grief of all souls
He dries up in the blink of an eye.
Without the touch of even a drop of that prema, with what will you cool your heart?

3.3. His reddish eyes are the abode of Varuna when the Merciful One gazes;
in His sweet talk every word is as if written into the heart.¹⁰

3.4. He sways in prema; the thrill of ecstasy fills His body from head to foot.
Says Vasudeva: a thousand streams are flowing — as if Sumeru were being bathed.¹¹

8. Signature: "Vasudeva." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 262–263 (printed pp. 251–252), 20th pallava, no. 2 (mark " ২ ২১৮৫ "); raga mallar; MS P-R-Sa no. 2290. GPT1 — pp. 41–42, no. 50 (raga mallar); GPT2 — sect. 1.3, no. 50. The catalogue listed the pada twice (by GPT and by PK). Majumdar counts PK 2185 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava.

9. The touchstone (paraśa-maṇi) turns iron into gold; so the prema the Lord bestows transforms the soul.

10. Varuna is the lord of the waters: the Lord's eyes are full of tears, like the ocean. "Written into the heart" — lit. "written, laid out upon the ribs" (pāṁjare pātiyā likhane). GPT1: "reddish eyes" (aruṇa-nayane), "gaze" (nirikhaṇe) — the same meaning.

11. Sumeru is the golden mountain; the Lord's golden body, washed by streams of tears, is like Sumeru with rivers running down it.

4. Vasu Ghosha — "cīta-cora gaura mora..." (PK 341)

*Gaura's form: the stealer of hearts, intoxicated with prema, embraces the destitute and the fallen; His name is the cause of the deliverance of the worlds; for the sake of souls He left His abode and appeared in Nadia like the autumn moon; the Creator fashioned Him an ocean of rasa; seeing Him, all sorrow departs. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika at the beginning of the 6th pallava (abhisarikas of the rainy season, etc.). Raga tori.*¹²

- 4.1. The stealer of hearts is my Gaura, intoxicated with prema, immersed, enraptured;
the destitute He takes in His embrace — the friend of the fallen and the low.
- 4.2. His name is the cause of the deliverance of the worlds;
for the sake of souls He left His abode and appeared in the town of Nadia like the autumn moon.¹³
- 4.3. Who can find the limit of His boundless glory?
He steals the very life of young women.
From what did the Creator fashion Gaura — a vast ocean of rasa?¹⁴
- 4.4. Looking and looking, joy arises, all the sorrow of the heart is taken away.
Says Vasu Ghosha: what beauty is this!
Beholding it, the heart is full of bliss.

12. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 232 (printed p. 220), 2nd shakha, 6th pallava ("Now the abhisarika, vasaka-sajja and the rest befitting the rainy season. First of all, Sri Gaurachandra"), no. 1 (mark " ५ ७४५ "); raga tori; PK gives no manuscript number or variants. GPT1 — pp. 131–132, no. 60 (raga tori); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 60. Majumdar counts PK 341 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's form.

13. "Left His abode" — the spiritual world, Goloka (cf. CC Adi 3: the Lord descends to give souls prema). "Appeared" (prakaṭa hailā) — the Lord is not born like a conditioned soul but reveals Himself. GPT1: "appeared in the town of Nadia like the autumn moon."

14. "Steals the very life of young women" is a stock image of the poetics of describing beauty; we translate faithfully. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never looked at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta).

5. Vasu Ghosha — "dekha dekha gorā naṭa-rāy..." (PK 2143)

*The form of Gaura, the king of dancers: His face is the autumn moon with a gentle smile; champaka buds in His curls; golden earrings, lips redder than the bimba; His voice is a wave of nectar drowning the world in the rasa of Hari; His arms are lovelier than an elephant's trunk; His chest is a golden mountain, His navel a lotus lake; He wears crimson cloth, and ankle-bells ring on His feet. In PK it stands in the 18th pallava (the form of Gauranga). Raga gandhara.*¹⁵

- 5.1. Behold, behold Gora, the king of dancers!
His face is the autumn moon, and on it a gentle, gentle smile;
seeing it, chaste women swoon.¹⁶
- 5.2. On His head, curling locks, and in them champaka buds — and the bee-hearts of young women.
At the roots of His lotus ears golden earrings sway;
His lips surpass the ripe bimba fruit.¹⁷

5.3. From His conch-like throat come soft words, a wave of nectar that drowns the world in the rasa of Hari.
Surpassing the trunk of a mighty elephant are His two rounded arms, and on them armlets and bracelets shine.

5.4. His chest a golden mountain, His navel a lotus lake; seeing His waist, the lion runs away.
He is clad in crimson cloth, ankle-bells ring on His feet —
Vasu Ghosha sings of Gora's qualities.¹⁸

15. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 247 (printed p. 236), 18th pallava (the form of Sri Gauranga, etc.), no. 35 (mark " ୩୫ ୧୫୪୭ "); raga gandhara; MS P-R-Sa no. 2250. GPT1 — p. 116, no. 15 (raga gandhara; the refrain is marked after the first stanza); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 15. The catalogue listed the pada under PK 2144 (wrongly: PK 2144 is the next pada, no. 11 here), while under PK 2143 it gave a first line from PK 2139 (Govinda Dasa). Majumdar counts PK 2143 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's form.

16. The words about women are a stock image of the poetics of describing beauty; we translate faithfully (see note 14).

17. Champaka is a tree with fragrant golden flowers; the bimba is a fruit with bright red skin, a usual comparison for lips. "The bee-hearts of young women" is an image of beauty that draws every heart (see note 14).

18. "The lion runs away" — the Lord's slender waist surpasses a lion's (a usual comparison). Crimson (saffron) cloth is a frequent detail of Gaura's form in Vasu's padas (cf. no. 15).

6. Vasu Ghosha — "jāmbunadacaya rucira gañjaya..." (PK 2087)

*Gaura's form: the radiance of His body outshines a heap of the finest gold; His arms, anointed with sandal, are like the trunk of a king of elephants; the youthful dancer, absorbed in bhava, with faltering voice, dances throughout Nadia, knowing neither day nor night; on the bank of the Ganga, beneath a young tree, He sits revealing Himself and sprinkles all His servants with prema. In PK it stands in the 17th pallava (the dance and play of Gauranga). Raga dhanashi.*¹⁹

6.1. Outshining a heap of jambunada gold, the radiance of His body glitters;
His arms, anointed with sandal and adorned, shine like the trunk of a king of elephants.²⁰

6.2. I beheld Gaura, the youthful dancer, the hero; in seeing Him, bliss knows no end.
His body is rapt in bhava, His heart overflowing, in His throat a faltering voice.²¹

6.3. Filling the whole town of Nadia with endless delights, the Knower of rasa, the Wise One, dances; manifold artistry, the grace of play —
He knows neither day nor night.

6.4. On the bank of the Suradhuni, at the roots of a young tree,
He sits, revealing Himself.
Sings Vasudeva Ghosha: the gift of prema has been received —
He has sprinkled all His servants with it.²²

19. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 225 (printed p. 214), 17th pallava, no. 29 (mark " ୩୯ ୧୦୮୭ "); raga dhanashi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2196. GPT1 — p. 131, no. 58 (raga dhanashri; the second stanza "I beheld Gaura..." serves as the refrain); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 58. The catalogue's former first line ("aichana bhāba bujhai nā pāriye") is the reading of MS P-R-Sa in the closing lines (see note 22). Majumdar counts PK 2087 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's form.

20. Jambunada is the finest gold (according to the Puranas, from the river Jambu). GPT1: "surpassing" (gañjana). MS "kha": "beautifully adorned" (sumaṇḍita).

21. "Hero" (nāyara, i.e. nāgara) — the graceful hero, a usual epithet of Gaura with Vasu Ghosha. MS P-R-Sa: "young" (naba) instead of "dancer."

22. The Suradhuni is the Ganga. "Revealing Himself" (nija parakāśe) — in His true form (or "in His own radiance"). MS P-R-Sa, instead of the last two lines: "Such a bhava cannot be understood, says Vasudeva Ghosha." GPT1: "Vasudeva Ghosha sings."

7. Vasu Ghosha — "abatāra bhāla gaurāṅga abatāra kailā bhāla..." (PK 665)

*Kirtana in Navadvipa: wondrous is Gauranga's incarnation — even Jagai and Madhai dance; the moon, the sun and the stars dance, Vasuki in the underworld dances repeating "Gora, Gora"; the devotees and all the destitute dance; the Lord delivers the dull, the blind, the infirm and the fallen — only the poet is left deprived. In PK it is a gaura-chandrika in the 6th pallava (rasodgara). The raga is that of the preceding pada — vibhasa.*²³

7.1. Wondrous is the incarnation — wondrously has Gauranga descended!
Jagai and Madhai are dancing — such is His great power!²⁴

7.2. The moon dances, the sun dances, and the stars dance; in the underworld Vasuki dances, repeating: "Gora, Gora!"²⁵

7.3. The devotees dance, enraptured; all the destitute dance, intoxicated with prema.

7.4. He delivers the dull, the blind, the infirm, the fallen.
Says Vasu Ghosha: "I alone have been left deprived."²⁶

23. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 57–58 (printed pp. 44–45), 3rd shakha, 6th pallava (rasodgara), no. 2 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); "tathā rāga" — the raga of the preceding pada PK 664 (Chaitanyadasa, part 06, no. 10) — vibhasa; MS P-R-Sa no. 1140. GPT1 — pp. 248–249, no. 2 (raga vibhasa), right after PK 664; GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 2. Majumdar does not discuss this pada separately.

24. Jagai and Madhai are the robber brothers whom the Lord and Nityananda delivered in Navadvipa (CB Madhya 13; CC Adi 17); their dancing in the kirtana is a sign of the Lord's all-conquering mercy. "Great power" (baṛa ṭhākuraḷa) — the Lord's majesty. MS "ka": "made" (kaila).

25. Vasuki is the king of the serpents in the lower worlds (Patala). MS "ka," GPT1: "saying" (bali); "ca": vole; "kha": "Gora" only once.

26. MSS "gha," "ca": atura (the same, "infirm"); P-R-Sa: "the infirm and the rest" (aturādi). The usual self-abasement of Vaishnava poets.

8. Vasu Ghosha — "kāṁcā se soṇāra tanu..." (PK 2100)

*Gaura's dance: His body is pure gold, whole Gangas flow from His eyes; His companions surround Him and sing to karatalas and mridangas; seeing this, the Suradhuni surges in waves; the poet marvels at His smile. In PK it stands in the 17th pallava (the dance and play of Gauranga). Raga gandhara (as for PK 2098).*²⁷

8.1. His body is pure gold, every limb brimming over; how many Suradhunis flow in waves from His eyes!²⁸

8.2. (Refrain) Gora dances in supreme bliss; surrounding Him on all sides, His companions sing.

8.3. In their hands are karatalas, the mridanga sounds;
seeing this, the Suradhuni surges in waves.

8.4. His limbs are powerless with bhava, His speech falters.
Says Vasu: how sweet is that smile of joy!²⁹

27. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 230 (printed p. 219), 17th pallava, no. 42 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); "tathā rāga" — the raga of PK 2098–2099 — gandhara; MS P-R-Sa no. 2209. GPT1 — p. 257, no. 28 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 28. Majumdar counts PK 2100 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's form.

28. "Pure gold" — lit. "raw (unworked) gold" (kāṁcā soṇā), i.e. native gold without alloy. The Suradhuni is the Ganga: tears flow from the Lord's eyes like rivers.

29. MSS "ka," "ca," P-R-Sa: "surrounding" (beṛiyā) in 8.2; "kha," "ca," P-R-Sa: "sounds" (bājaye) in 8.3. In 8.4 MSS "kha," "ca": "body" (tanu) instead of "limbs"; P-R-Sa: hu; MS "ka" omits the word; MS "ka" and GPT1: "the smile of the lips" (mukha) instead of "the smile of joy." GPT1 reads with MSS "ka," "ca," "kha": beṛiyā, bājaye, tanu.

9. Vasu Ghosha (?) — "gorā nāce prema-binadiyā..." (PK 2079)

*Dance in the sankirtana: the Lord of all the worlds, rapt in the play of prema, dances in Nadia without regard to direction, crying "Hari!" with tears; distributing to souls the wealth of Goloka's prema, He dances in the sankirtana and begs everyone He sees: "Take the sweet name!" In PK it stands in the 17th pallava. Raga tori.*³⁰

9.1. (Refrain) Gora dances, rapt in the play of prema:
the Lord of all the worlds sports in Nadia.

9.2. Dancing and dancing, Gora knows no direction;
moon-faced, He cries "Hari!", weeping and weeping.

9.3. Distributing to souls the wealth of Goloka's prema, Gora dances in the sankirtana, crying: "Haribol!"

9.4. Whomever He sees, He begs: "Take the sweet name!"
Vasu Ghosha, not having received it, weeps without end.³¹

30. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 222 (printed p. 211), 17th pallava, no. 21 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); "tathā rāga" — the raga of PK 2078 — tori; MS P-R-Sa no. 2188. GPT1 — p. 252, no. 14 (raga tori); GPT2 — sect. 4.2. The attribution is doubtful: according to PK's apparatus, couplet 9.4 with the signature "Vasu Ghosha" is found only in MS P-R-Sa; in GPT1 the pada ends differently, with the signature of Balarama Dasa (see note 31). Majumdar counts PK 2079 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. The next pada, PK 2080 ("sabahuṁ gāyata sabahuṁ nācata"), which the catalogue assigned to Vasu, is by Govinda Dasa.

31. According to PK's note, couplet 9.4 is found only in MS P-R-Sa. GPT1 has instead: "His body brims with prema, a gentle smile on His lips; Balarama Dasa alone was left deprived of this rasa." GPT1: "rapt in the play of prema" (prema binodiyā).

10. Vasu Ghosha — "śuni bṛndābana-guṇa..." (PK 2078)

*Dance in the kirtana: hearing of the glories of Vrindavana, Gaura, maddened by rasa, raises His arms and cries "Hari!", whirls in the dance, and streams flow from His eyes; He is beyond purusha and prakṛiti and enchants Manmatha Himself; His body thrills with ecstasy and is anointed with perfume and sandal. In PK it stands in the 17th pallava (the dance and play of Gauranga). Raga tori.*³²

10.1. Hearing of the glories of Vrindavana, His heart maddened by rasa, raising both arms, He cries: "Hari!"
Whirling, Gora Raya dances — how many streams are flowing:
His two eyes are pitchers of prema.

10.2. A dancer skilled in rasa, greedy for kirtana — how many merry companions are with Him!
In the sidelong glances of His eyes hundreds of thousands of Lakshmis play.³³

10.3. Beyond purusha and prakṛiti, enchanting Manmatha Himself,
He is the very limit of the joy of beauty.
Gaura is an ocean of rasa, deep, an elusive thief:
the pride of the town's women could not stand.³⁴

10.4. His neck held high, beautiful as Manmatha,
His body rejoices, thrilling with ecstasy;
perfume and sandal anoint His body — in such prema Vasu Ghosha is drowning.³⁵

32. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 222 (printed p. 211), 17th pallava, no. 20 (mark " ३० ३०९८ "); raga tori; MS P-R-Sa no. 2187. GPT1 — p. 252, no. 13 (raga tori); GPT2 — sect. 4.2, no. 13 (the catalogue knew it only from GPT). Majumdar counts PK 2078 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava.

33. The sense is not fully clear. Lakshmi is the goddess of beauty and fortune: in the Lord's glances are countless Lakshmis, i.e. all the beauty and good of the world. "In the sidelong glances" follows MSS "ka," "kha," "gha," "ca," P-R-Sa and GPT1 (apāṅge); PK's main text has anaṅge ("in the tremulous Ananga"). MSS "ka," "kha": lakhimi.

34. "Beyond purusha and prakriti" — the Lord transcends both the enjoying spirit and material nature. "Enchanting Manmatha Himself" (the god of love) — cf. Bhag. 10.32.2: Krishna is "the Manmatha of Manmatha himself." "Elusive thief" (gabhīra caura, the stealer of hearts); MSS "ka," "kha," "ca," P-R-Sa and GPT1: "deep and serene" (gabhīra dhīra). "The pride of the town's women could not stand" — an image of beauty that captivates every heart; we translate faithfully (see note 14).

35. "Perfume" — apparently chuya (cuyā, fragrant oil); the word cuvaka is unclear (GPT1 has the same, by the OCR). MSS "ka," "kha," "ca," P-R-Sa: "thus" (aiche) instead of "in such"; GPT1: "thus Vasu Ghosha speaks of prema" (bhāṣe).

11. Vasu Ghosha — "kāṁcā kāñcana maṇi gorā-rūpa..." (PK 2144)

*Play on the bank of the Ganga: Gaura, lovelier than a jewel of pure gold, wearing a garland of fresh flowers and leaning on Narahari, strolls with Nityananda and His companions, crying "Hari, Hari!"; He roars like a lion, the hairs of His body stand on end; Gadadhara holds His left hand, Govinda sings; remembering the rasa of the Vrindavana lilas, the Lord smiles softly and speaks with longing. Narahari Chakravarti quotes the pada in the *Bhakti-ratnakara: Srinivasa is shown the bank of the Ganga where the Lord sported with His companions. In PK it stands in the 18th pallava. Raga kamoda.³⁶

11.1. Lovelier than a jewel of pure gold is Gora's form, rippling with waves of prema;
on His neck a garland of fresh flowers sways beyond compare, and He leans upon Narahari.³⁷

11.2. (Refrain) He sports in supreme bliss:
taking Nityananda with Him, on the bank of the Ganga, rejoicing,
He cries with His own people: "Hari, Hari!"³⁸

11.3. His body is powerless with bhava, His hairs stand on end like kadamba flowers;
He roars like a lion.
His dear Gadadhara holds His left hand;
Govinda sings of His qualities.³⁹

11.4. With a slight smile on His lips the Lord laughs softly, softly and speaks with such longing.
He remembers all those games, the rasa of the Vrindavana lilas — what can Vasudeva Ghosha say?⁴⁰

36. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 247 (printed pp. 236–237), 18th pallava, no. 36 (mark " ३६ ३६८... " — the last digit is cut off in the scan; by the sequence of marks — 2144); raga kamoda; MS P-R-Sa no. 2251. BR, 12th wave: ed. 1913 — p. 962 (raga kamoda), ed. 1960 — vv. 3083–3086; KGC — 28th kshanada (shukla-trayodashi), no. 1, pp. 222–223 (raga kamoda). GPT1 — p. 282, no. 16 (raga kamoda); GPT2 — sect. 4.3, no. 16. The catalogue listed it under "214?" and separately under GPT; PK 2144 given for another line (VG-008) is an error (that is PK 2143, no. 5 here). Majumdar names "PK 2140" among Vasu's padas on bhava — PK 2140 belongs to Govinda Dasa; probably PK 2144 is meant.

37. Narahari is Narahari Sarakara Thakura of Shrikhandā, the Lord's constant companion in the Navadvipa kirtanas (cf. parts 02, 03). MSS "kha," "gha": "with waves of prema" (prema); P-R-Sa adds after this stanza: "His face a full moon, a gentle smile on it, nectar flowing from His eyes; the devotees, like chataka birds, drink and drink without end, day and night intoxicated with prema." BR, KGC: "He leans upon Narahari" (helana).

38. MSS "ka," "kha," "gha" and GPT1: "on the bank of the Yamuna" — the Lord sees the Ganga as the Yamuna (cf. CC Madhya 3); MS "ca": "on the Ganga." BR: "with His beloved ones"; KGC begins the pada with the refrain: "Gauranga sports in supreme bliss."

39. Gadadhara Pandita is the Lord's closest companion, in whom the Gaudiya tradition sees Sri Radha. Govinda is apparently Govinda Ghosha, Vasu's brother, a kirtana singer. BR, KGC: "dear Gadadhara, holding His left hand" — the same.

40. The Lord remembers the Vrindavana lilas in Radha's mood — this is pure prema, not a worldly feeling. BR: "now and again He smiles from the corners of His reddish eyes and speaks with what longing"; KGC: "now He smiles... now He weeps from the corners of His reddish eyes." BR, KGC, GPT1: "what can I, Vasudeva Ghosha, say" (ki baliba).

12. Vasu Ghosha — "hari hari gorā kene kām̐de..." (PK 764)

*The Lord's bhava: His companions do not understand why Gora weeps; tears fall like pearls from a broken string; remembering Vrindavana and looking at His own body, He calls "Rai, Rai!" and falls senseless; Gadadhara embraces Him and says something into His ear — and the Lord laughs aloud. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section on Radha's prema-vaichittya (the beginning of the 9th pallava). Raga gandhara.*⁴¹

12.1. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! Why does Gora weep?

His companions ask the reason, gazing at the moon of Gora's face.⁴²

12.2. His reddened eyes, from the fullness of prema, grow twice as red; the tears of prema stream and stream — as if from a broken string pearls were falling one after another.⁴³

12.3. Remembering Vrindavana, He sighs again and again, looking at His own body; pressing both hands to His breast, crying "Rai, Rai!", He fell to the ground senseless.⁴⁴

12.4. Then dear Gadadhara embraced Him and said something into His ear — and again He laughs aloud, gladdening the people, while Vasu Ghosha pines away in tears.⁴⁵

41. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 115–116 (printed pp. 102–103), 3rd shakha, 9th pallava ("Now Sri Radha's prema-vaichittya. The Sri Gaurachandra befitting it"), no. 1 (mark " १७४ "); raga gandhara; MS P-R-Sa no. 1264. GPT1 — p. 284, no. 24 (raga gandhara); GPT2 — sect. 4.3, no. 24. Balarama Dasa's pada with the same opening ("hari hari gorā kene kām̐de / nā jāni thekilā pahum̐ kāra premaphām̐de," GPT1 no. 39) is a different pada; the catalogue wrongly linked it with PK 764. Majumdar counts PK 764 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. Prema-vaichittya is Radha's state in which, though near Krishna, She feels separation from Him out of the excess of love.

42. MS P-R-Sa: "not understanding the reason" (nā bujhiye kārāṇa).

43. MSS "ka," "ca": gām̐thila, P-R-Sa: gathita (the same, "strung"); P-R-Sa: "pearls" (mukutāphala) and "fall" (khasatahi).

44. Looking at His golden body, the Lord remembers Sri Radha, whose complexion and bhava He has accepted (CC Adi 4), and calls Her — "Rai." MS P-R-Sa has "Govi, Govi" instead of "Rai, Rai" and "falls to the ground" (dharāṇīte paṇe); MS "kha": "sighs again" (niśvāsai puna).

45. MS "ka": "sitting down" (basiyā) instead of "embraced"; P-R-Sa: "Gaura" (gaura) instead of "again." "Pines away in tears" (maraye jhuriyā) — lit. "dies weeping": a usual expression of boundless longing.

13. Vasu Ghosha — "aruṇa nayane dhārā bahe..." (PK 356)

*The Lord in Radha's mood — vasaka-sajja: with reddened eyes and bowed head, He starts at the sight of a shadow and rolls on the ground; having spread lotus petals, He sits alone, absorbed in meditation; seeing this, the poet speaks to Him, clasping His feet. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section on vasaka-sajja (6th pallava). Raga suhai.*⁴⁶

13.1. Streams flow from His reddened eyes;
Gora sits with His head bowed.

13.2. Seeing a shadow, He starts in His heart and again and again rolls on the ground.⁴⁷

13.3. Having spread out lotus petals, the Lord sits absorbed in meditation.⁴⁸

13.4. Sitting in seclusion, all alone,
He lives the bhava of vasaka-sajja.⁴⁹

13.5. Vasudeva Ghosha, seeing this, says something to Him, clasping His feet.

46. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 241 (printed p. 230), 2nd shakha, 6th pallava ("Now the vasaka-sajja. The Sri Mahaprabhu befitting it"), no. 5 (mark " & ॐॐ "); raga suhai (MS P-R — kedara); MSS P-R-Sa no. 468, P-R 17.1. Not found in the OCR of GPT1. Majumdar counts PK 356 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. The vasaka-sajja is the heroine who adorns herself and the bower and waits for her beloved; in the gaura-chandrika the Lord lives this bhava of Radha waiting for Krishna — this is pure prema, not a worldly feeling.

47. The shadow seems to Him to be Krishna approaching. MSS "ka," "kha": "astonished" (camakita); P-R, instead of "Seeing a shadow... heart": "what bhava is in His heart!" MSS P-R-Sa, P-R: "again and again" (kṣaṇe kṣaṇe, khane khane) — the same.

48. The bed of petals prepared for the Beloved is a detail of the vasaka-sajja bhava. MS P-R: "tender leaves" (komala) instead of "lotus petals," and "Gora sits absorbed in meditation."

49. MS P-R-Sa: ekāmbare, P-R: ekāsare (the same, "alone").

14. Vasu Ghosha — "āji kene gorācāṁḍera birasa bayāna..." (PK 370)

*The Lord in Radha's mood — khandita: Gorachand's face is cheerless, His eyes full of tears, His lips pale, His body weary, His steps unsteady; the poet wonders where Gora was and in hope of what rasa He spent the night without sleep. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section on the khandita (6th pallava). Raga vibhasa or tori.*⁵⁰

14.1. Why is Gorachand's face so cheerless today?
What bhava is in His heart — His eyes are full of tears?⁵¹

14.2. Why has the moon of His face withered — for what reason?
Why have His red lips grown pale?

14.3. His limbs are powerless with weariness — He cannot hold Himself up; swaying and swaying, He falls whenever He takes a step.⁵²

14.4. Says Vasu Ghosha: where was Gora?
In hope of what rasa did He spend this night?⁵³

50. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF pp. 250–251 (printed pp. 239–240), 2nd shakha, 6th pallava ("Now the khandita. The Sri Gaurachandra befitting it"), no. 19 (mark " ॐ ॐ "); raga vibhasa or tori (MS P-R — "southern shri"); MS P-R 17.1 (according to PK's apparatus). The pada is in the index of GPT1 ("āji kene gorācāṁḍera birasa badana"), but its text was not found in the OCR. Another pada of Vasu with a similar opening is "āju kene gorācāṁḍera birasa bayāna / ke āila ke āila..." (GPT1 p. 313, section "Separation," no. 1). Majumdar counts PK 370 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. The khandita is the heroine who has waited in vain all night for her beloved and is offended; in the gaura-chandrika the Lord, in Radha's mood, has spent the night without sleep waiting for Krishna — hence the reddened eyes, the pallor and the weariness. This is pure prema; we translate faithfully.

51. MSS "ka," "ga": paṛeche (the same, "has arisen"); P-R: "has risen" (uṭheche).

52. MS P-R, instead of couplet 14.2: "How much nectar His moon-face pours forth — why then has that face withered?" P-R: "body" (gā) instead of "limbs," "bending" (ḍhaliyā) instead of "swaying."

53. The poet's question is the bewilderment of a companion who does not know the cause; the answer is given by the gaura-chandrika itself: the Lord has waited all night (as Radha waits for Krishna). MS "ga": "in hope of what rasa did He spend this night awake."

15. Vasu Ghosha — "baraṇa kāñcana daśabāna..." (PK 476)

*The Lord in Radha's mood — mana: golden, clad in crimson, Gora sits with bowed head, tears streaming from His eyes; now He puts His palm to His head, now draws on the ground with His nail, weeps and rolls in the dust. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section on the "unyielding mana" (2nd shakha). Raga suhai.*⁵⁴

15.1. His complexion is gold of the highest assay,
He is clad in crimson cloth.

15.2. Gora sits with His head bowed;
streams flow from His reddened eyes.

15.3. Now He puts His palm to His head, now He draws on the ground with His nail.⁵⁵

15.4. Gora Raya weeps, distraught;
His golden body rolls in the dust.

15.5. Vasudeva Ghosha sings of His qualities: night and day nothing else is dear to him.⁵⁶

54. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF pp. 322–323 (printed pp. 311–312), 2nd shakha, "Now the section on mana; first, mana with a cause: the unyielding mana, when signs of enjoyment [with another] are seen on the hero's body. The Sri Gaurachandra befitting it," no. 1 (mark " ॐ ८९७ "); raga suhai; MS P-R-Sa no. 700. GPT1 — p. 311, no. 12 (raga pathamanjari; section on mana); GPT2 — sect. 4.6, no. 12. Majumdar counts PK 476 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. Mana is Radha's jealous pique with Krishna; the Lord lives this bhava of Radha — this is pure prema. "Gold of the highest assay" (daśabāna) — lit. "of tenfold assay."

55. Drawing on the ground with the nail is the usual gesture of the offended heroine in poetry. Instead of couplets 15.2–15.5, MS P-R-Sa has: "His eyes are like lotuses, tears flow down on both sides like strings of pearls falling; His body rolls on the ground — a golden mountain grey with dust; says Vasudeva Ghosha: without Gora I cannot live." MSS "ka," "ga," "ca": śira, "ca": karatale, "ka": "with the palm" instead of "on the ground," "ca": nakha — the same meaning. GPT1: "now He lays His head on His palm."

56. MSS "kha," "gha": "day and night" (dibā niśi).

16. Vasu Ghosha — "kṛṣṇa kṛṣṇa bali gorā kāmde..." (PK 525)

*The Lord in Radha's mood — mana: Gora weeps, repeating "Krishna, Krishna," tears flow from His eyes like Gangas; He does not anoint His body with sandal, and, all grey with dust, rolls on the ground; His face is dulled with pique, nothing pleases Him, neither by day nor by night does He sleep. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "mana — another mode" (the beginning of the 18th pallava). Raga suhai.*⁵⁷

16.1. Repeating "Krishna, Krishna," Gora weeps again and again;
how many Suradhunis flow from His reddened eyes!

16.2. Gora does not anoint His body with fragrant sandal;
grey with dust, He rolls on the ground.⁵⁸

16.3. His face is dulled by mana, nothing pleases Him; night and day Gora passes without sleep.

16.4. Again and again His body starts — He cannot be held;
of Gorachand's bhava of mana sings Vasu Ghosha.⁵⁹

57. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, printed p. 353, 2nd shakha, 18th pallava ("Now mana, another mode. The Shri Gaurachandra befitting it"), no. 1 (mark " ॐ & ॐ "); raga suhai; no manuscript number. In the main scan (IA in.ernet.dli.2015.337379, PDF p. 364) the page is damaged; the text was read from a second scan of the same edition (IA in.ernet.dli.2015.513340, PDF p. 372). GPT1 — p. 311, no. 15 (raga suhai; section on mana); GPT2 — sect. 4.6, no. 15. Majumdar counts PK 525 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. On mana, see note 54.

58. MS "gha": bhome (the same, "on the ground").

59. MSS "ka," "kha," "ga," "ca": kṣaṇe (the same, "again and again") and dharaṇa; MS "ka": "of the various bhavas" (nānā) instead of "of the bhava of mana."

Chapter 9. Vasu Ghosha: the Lord's Bhavas, Separation, Nityananda, Prayers

*Padas of Vasu (Vasudeva) Ghosha known from the *Padakalpataru (PK), in the order of the lilas: Gaura in the kirtana of Navadvipa, His form, His rest and the boat play on the Ganga; the Lord in Krishna's mood and in the mood of Radha pining in separation (gaura-chandrikas to the sections of PK on impending and accomplished separation); the devotees' longing for Gaura who has gone; praise of Nityananda; stavas and prarthanas — prayers to Gauranga. Majumdar regards Vasu Ghosha as an eyewitness of the Navadvipa kirtanas and counts these padas among his padas on the Lord's bhava, on Nityananda and among his stavas. The text follows PK, checked against the scans, with the manuscript variants from PK's apparatus, the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934) and the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Vasu Ghosha — "nabadvīpe udaya karilā dvija-rāja..." (PK 1494)

Gaura in the kirtana of Navadvipa: the moon risen in the darkness of Kali among the stars, His companions; grey with dust, He sways on the waves of bhava, sings "Hari, Hari" and stands still in the tribhanga pose; at His left is Gadadhara; remembering Vrindavana, the Lord weeps and pours a downpour of the holy name upon the world. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "the spring rasa." Raga dhanashi or vasanta.¹

1.1. (Refrain) In Navadvipa the king of the twice-born has risen² — dense is the darkness of Kali, but Gorachand shines amid the stars — His companions.

1.2. In kirtana, brimming over with love, grey all over with dust,
He sways on the waves of bhava; karatalas in His hands, He sings, "Hari, Hari!" — and again and again stands still, bent in three places.³

1.3. At His left is dear Gadadhara, and on his shoulder rests the Lord's graceful arm that reaches to the knees.⁴
Remembering Vrindavana, ceaselessly yearning,
He sheds streams of tears from His reddish eyes.

1.4. His eyes pour and pour like a fresh raincloud,
His teeth shine brighter than lightning.
Vasudeva Ghosha sings: to deliver the souls of the age of Kali,
He has rained a downpour of Hari's name.⁵

1. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 432 (printed p. 419), 3rd shakha, 27th pallava, section "atha bāsantī rāsālilā taducita-śrīgauracandra" (gaura-chandrika to the spring rasa), no. 70 (mark " ৭০ ১৪৯৪ "); raga dhanashi or vasanta; MS P-R-Sa no. 2044. GPT1 — p. 131, no. 59 (raga dhanashi). Majumdar counts PK 1494 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava.

2. "Dvija-rajā," "king of the twice-born," is both the moon and the best of brahmanas: Gaura is a brahmana risen over Navadvipa like the moon.

3. Tribhanga is the pose of Krishna playing the flute (bent at the neck, waist and knee): in kirtana the Lord spontaneously assumes Krishna's form.

4. Gadadhara Pandita, according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika, is a manifestation of Radha; he stands at Gaura's left as Radha stands at Krishna's left. MS "kh": "ājāno"; P-R-Sa: "ajāne" (the same).

5. MS "kh": "pours" (barikhata). P-R-Sa: "like" (yena) instead of "brighter than" (jini).

2. Vasu Ghosha — "cala dekhi giyā gorā ati manohare..." (PK 973)

*Gaura's form in Nadia: "Come, let us go and see Gora!" — His body brighter than tested gold, His arms reaching to the knees like golden pillars, a red cloth at His waist, a garland of malati down to His feet; the poet is ready to give his life for Him. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "anuraga: setting out to the tryst by night." Raga suhai.*⁶

2.1. Come, let us go and see Gora, beautiful beyond words:

wondrous is Gora's form in the town of Nadia!

2.2. His body, tender and radiant, outshines tested gold;

who, seeing the waves of His eyes, can keep his composure?

2.3. His arms reach to His knees like golden pillars, a red cloth is at His waist, broad are His hips.⁷

2.4. A garland of malati sways on His neck down to His feet.

Says Vasu: "Come — I will give my life for Him!"⁸

6. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 200 (printed p. 187), 3rd shakha, 12th pallava, section "tataḥ punaśca abhisārānūrāgaḥ rātrau yathā śrīgauracandraḥ," no. 1 (mark " ५ ५९७ "); raga suhai; MS P-R-Sa no. 1423. The same pada stands in PK a second time — PK 2176 (vol. 3, PDF pp. 259–260, printed pp. 248–249; 19th pallava, no. 9; MS P-R-Sa no. 2284), in the section of padas spoken by the women of Nadia, with the ending "Says Vasu: 'I will go and offer [Him] my youth'; so too in GPT1 (p. 161, no. 15, raga shri), among padas in nagari-bhava. Majumdar counts PK 973 among the padas on the Lord's form and PK 2176 under nagari-bhava. The PK 973 recension is translated here; the 2176 recension belongs to nagari-bhava: worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta).

7. Long arms, a broad chest and broad hips are marks of a great personality (mahapurusha) according to the samudrika-shastra; so too Vrindavana Dasa and Krishnadasa Kaviraja describe the Lord's form.

8. Literally "I will give my life as nichhani" — a rite in which something precious is waved around a beloved person to ward off misfortune and then given away; here the poet gives his very life.

3. Vasu Ghosha — "śutiyaḥ gorācāṁḍa śayana-mandire..." (PK 656)

*Gorachand lies in His bedchamber on a wondrous couch, languid; it is as if the Creator had strained lightning from the clouds and put all rasa into Him; Vasudeva Ghosha looks on in joy. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "languor after the play" (rasalasa). Raga vibhasa.*⁹

3.1. Gorachand lies in His bedchamber on a wondrous couch, on a lovely bed.

3.2. Languid is the body of Gora, the king of dancers — how can I tell the beauty of His body? It cannot be told!¹⁰

3.3. As if lightning had been carefully strained from the clouds — so much rasa did the Creator put in, fashioning Him!

3.4. A lovely bed, wondrous pillows —

Vasudeva Ghosha looks on with joy in his heart.

9. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 51 (printed p. 38), 3rd shakha, section "atha rasālasa taducita-śrīgauracandra," no. 1 (mark " ५ ७६७ "); raga vibhasa; MS P-R-Sa no. 1131. GPT1 — pp. 361–362, no. 53 (raga vibhasa). According to PK's index of first lines (vol. 5), the same pada stands in PK a second time — PK 2474 (vol. 4, the section on the night and morning plays); in the scan of vol. 4 (IA 354459) the leaf with PK 2474–2478 is missing between PDF pp. 44 and 45, so its variants have not been checked. The catalogue wrongly linked PK 656 to the GPT pada "nācata śacītanaya gaurasundara..." (VG-057). Majumdar counts PK 656 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. PK's section "rasalasa" is about the languor of Radha and Krishna after the night's play; the gaura-chandrika shows the Lord wearied by the night's kirtana and bhava.

10. MSS "gh," "c": "Gaura lies" (śutiya āchena gaura) instead of "Gorachand lies"; "k," "c": "in absorption" (ābeśe), "gh": "in languor" (alase) instead of "languid" (ālase; GPT1 — "ābeśe," with "ālase" in a note); P-R-Sa: "how can I tell the beauty of His body" (ki kaba añgera śobhā), "says Vasudeva Ghosha" (kaya) instead of "looks on" (dekhe).

4. Vasu Ghosha — "nā jāniye gorācāmḍera kona bhāba mane..." (PK 1409)

*The boat play on the Ganga: Gorachand goes to the bank with His companions, steps into a boat with Gadadhara and steers it Himself; everyone cries "We are sinking!" and bails out water, and, remembering the former play, floats in the waters of prema, while the Lord, looking at Gadadhara, gently smiles. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "the boat play" (nauka-vilasa). Raga tudi.*¹¹

4.1. I do not know what bhava is in Gorachand's heart:

He went with His companions to the bank of the Suradhuni.¹²

4.2. Taking with Him dear Gadadhara and others,

Gaura stepped into a boat, overwhelmed by prema.

4.3. Becoming the helmsman Himself, He steers the boat;

"We are sinking, sinking!" all cry, and bail out the water.

4.4. All the companions call out, "Hari, Hari!" — remembering the former play, some float in the waters of prema.¹³

4.5. Looking into Gadadhara's face, He smiles ever so gently — so says Vasudeva Ghosha, with jubilation in his heart.

11. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 388 (printed p. 375), 3rd shakha, 26th pallava, section "atha naukā-bilāsa taducita śrīmahāprabhu," no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga tudi; MS P-R-Sa no. 1925. GPT1 — p. 333, no. 38 (raga tudi; among the padas on the dana-lila). Majumdar counts PK 1409 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. Compare Ramananda's pada on the same play (PK 1417, chapter 6).

12. Suradhuni, "the river of the gods," is the Ganga.

13. "The former play" is Krishna's play with Radha and the gopis in a boat on the Yamuna (nauka-lila); the Lord at the helm is Krishna, Gadadhara is Radha. MSS "k," "c," P-R-Sa: "Himself" — āpani (the same); P-R-Sa: "guides" (bahe) instead of "steers" (bāya), "with joy" (hariṣe) instead of "with jubilation" (ullāse). GPT1: "smiles to Himself" (mane mane hāse).

5. Vasu Ghosha — "āre mora gorā dvijamaṇi..." (PK 54)

*The Lord in the mood of Krishna stricken with purvaraga: "Radha, Radha!" Gora calls, weeps and rolls on the ground, chants Radha's name with great devotion, rivers of tears flow from His eyes, and again and again He loses consciousness. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "Sri Krishna's purvaraga." Raga suhai, tala jayajayanti.*¹⁴

5.1. O my Gora, jewel of the twice-born!

"Radha, Radha!" He calls, weeps and rolls on the ground.

5.2. Gora chants Radha's name with great devotion, and streams of the Suradhuni flow from His reddish eyes.¹⁵

5.3. Again and again Gora's body rolls on the ground, again and again, uttering Radha's name, He swoons.

5.4. His body is thrilled with gooseflesh, His voice falters.

Says Vasu: "Why is Gora so agitated?"

14. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 51 (printed p. 40), 1st shakha, section "śrīkṛṣṇasya pūrvvarāgaḥ taducita-śrīmahāprabhu," no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐ "); "suhai jayajayanti." GPT1 — p. 297, no. 16 (jayajayanti). Majumdar counts PK 54 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. Usually the Lord abides in Radha's mood, but His companions also saw His mood of Krishna longing for the gopis (cf. CC Adi 17: the Lord chants "Gopi, gopi!").

15. Streams of the Suradhuni (the Ganga) are His tears. MS "kh" and GPT1: "how many Suradhunis flow...". Line 5.2 is repeated by Radhamohana Dasa in his pada on Gaura and Gauridasa (GPT1, p. 290, no. 43).

6. Vasu Ghosha — "sakala bhakata meli ānande hulāhuli..." (PK 2041)

*In the morning the devotees come with joyful cries to see Gauranga, but He has not slept all night and His face is wan; rising, He sits down again on the ground, alone, apart; the devotees are alarmed, not understanding what bhava has risen in His heart; one washes His face, another tidies His hair. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika "on the next day" to the section "recollections of the complete union." Raga pahida.*¹⁶

- 6.1. All the devotees together, with joyful cries,
came to see Gauranga.
Gauranga is lying down, no one is near Him;
He has stayed awake all night, His face is wan.
- 6.2. (Refrain) Here is a great wonder:
rising, Gaura Hari sat down again on the ground, and sits with no one beside Him.¹⁷
- 6.3. Seeing this, the devotees were alarmed:
why is His face so cheerless?
All say, "Alas, alas! Nothing can be understood — what bhava has risen in His heart today?"
- 6.4. One gently washes His face with water, another tidies His hair.
"We know nothing: Gora is bhava embodied" — and sad is Vasu Ghosha's face.¹⁸

16. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 210 (printed p. 199), 4th shakha, 16th pallava ("samriddhiman sambhoga: recollections"), section "atha dināntare śrīmadgauracandro yathā," no. 18 (mark " ১৮ ২০৪৯ "); raga pahida. GPT1 — p. 312, no. 17 (pahida), just before the section on separation; in GPT2 — in the section on the antya-lila (the catalogue had it twice: VG-080 and VG-122). The place is not named. Majumdar counts PK 2041 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. The PK section shows Radha, on the next day, recalling the night of union with Krishna; the gaura-chandrika shows the Lord absorbed in such recollections.

17. MSS "k," "kh": "Gauranga" instead of "Gaura"; "k," "kh," "c" and GPT1: "having sat" (basiyā) instead of "sat." In MS "k" there is a lacuna mark in place of the word "with joyful cries" (hulāhuli).

18. "Bhava embodied" (bhābera mūrati): the Lord, in whom Radha's bhava manifests in its fullness.

7. Vasu Ghosha — "āju kene gorācāmḍera birasa bayāna..." (PK 1598)

*The Lord in the mood of Radha foreseeing separation: Gorachand's face is cheerless, He asks, "Who has come?" and weeps; the devotees around have fainted, not understanding the cause; crying "Hari, Hari," Gora sighs heavily. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "impending separation." Raga suhai, tala kandarpa.*¹⁹

- 7.1. Why is Gorachand's face so cheerless today?
"Who has come? Who has come?" He says, and tears stream down.²⁰
- 7.2. All around, the devotees, weeping, have fainted:
why Gauranga is so, they cannot understand.²¹
- 7.3. To look at that face — the heart is wrung:
how many Suradhunis pour from His eyes!
- 7.4. Crying "Hari, Hari," Gora sighs heavily;
Vasu strikes his head with his hand and speaks, faltering with tears.

19. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 18 (printed p. 7), 4th shakha, 2nd pallava, section "atha bhābī birahaḥ tadbhābākrāntaḥ śrīmahāprabhuḥ" ("impending separation; Sri Mahaprabhu, overwhelmed by this bhava"), no. 1 (mark " ১ ১৫৯৮ "); "suhai kandarpatāla"; MS P-R-Sa no. 806. GPT1 — p. 313, no. 1 (suhai, kandarpa) — the first pada of the section on separation. Majumdar counts PK 1598 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava.

20. The PK section: Radha learns that Akrura has come for Krishna to take Him to Mathura; the Lord in Radha's mood asks, "Who has come?" GPT1: "'Who has come? Who has come?' — and tears stream down" (kari instead of vali).

21. MS "k": "kena" (the same, "why"); "gh": "they cannot understand His heart" (bujhilu mana) instead of "cannot understand the cause"; "k": "before Him" (samukha) instead of "that face" (se mukha); MS "kh" lacks the word "jāni" ("is wrong," literally "I know not how"); P-R-Sa: "weep" (jhure) instead of "pour" (jhare).

8. Vasu Ghosha — "roi roi jape gorā kṛṣṇa-nāma-madhu..." (PK 1634)

*The Lord in the mood of Radha separated from Krishna: weeping, Gora chants the honeyed name of Krishna; He whose feet Shiva and Brahma do not attain sits under a tree, having left all company and all comforts; His golden body is adorned with the treasures of bhava; seeing Him, all weep. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "accomplished separation." Raga suhai.*²²

8.1. Weeping and weeping, Gora chants the honey of Krishna's name — as if a spotless moon were showering nectar.²³

8.2. He whose feet Shiva and Brahma do not attain by worship has sat down under a tree, forsaking all company.²⁴

8.3. Leaving all comforts, He has grown weak;
His golden body is adorned with the treasures of bhava.²⁵

8.4. Seeing Him, all the people weep ceaselessly; Vasudeva Ghosha's heart can find no rest.

22. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 37 (printed p. 26), 4th shakha, 4th pallava, section "atha bhūta-birahaḥ nāyikā proṣitabhartṛkā tadbhābākrāntaḥ śrīgauracandro yathā" ("accomplished separation; the heroine whose beloved has gone abroad; Sri Gaurachandra, overwhelmed by this bhava"), no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga suhai (P-R: sindhura); MS P-R-Sa no. 857, MS P-R no. 40.19. GPT2 — in the section on separation (the catalogue had it as VG-043 and VG-115; one pada). Not found in GPT1. Majumdar counts PK 1634 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava. Sitting under a tree, having left all company — the Lord after His sannyasa.

23. MSS "k," "kh," "c," P-R-Sa and GPT2: "as if a spotless moon were pouring nectar" (jharaye; "k," "kh," "gh," "c," P-R-Sa and GPT2 — vimala, "spotless," instead of niramala, the same).

24. MSS "k," "c": "whose feet they do not attain by devotion (bhakti)"; P-R: "by seeking" (khuji).

25. MS P-R: "He left all comforts, renouncing strength" (chāḥala saba sukha tejyā śakati); "k," "kh," P-R: "went" (gela) instead of "has grown weak" (bhela aśakati — literally "became powerless"). The treasures of bhava are the sattvika-bhavas: tears, trembling, gooseflesh and the other signs of prema. P-R: "the heart finds no rest" (sthira).

9. Vasu Ghosha — "birale basiyā ekeśvare..." (PK 1635)

*The Lord as a sannyasi in separation: alone, in solitude, He ceaselessly chants the name of Hari; His body, once anointed with sandal, now cares for nothing but dust; He has left the pastimes with Lakshmi and lives under a tree, has left the flute and taken the sannyasi's staff; He knows neither day nor night. In PK it is the second gaura-chandrika to the section "accomplished separation." Raga suhai.*²⁶

9.1. In solitude He sits alone and ceaselessly chants the name of Hari.

9.2. His body was anointed with fragrant sandal — now nothing pleases Him but dust.²⁷

9.3. The Lord has left the pastimes with Lakshmi — now His dwelling is beneath a tree.²⁸

9.4. Leaving the enchanting flute from His hands,
He has taken the staff and become a sannyasi.

9.5. He knows neither day nor night.
Says Vasu: "The heart is breaking!"²⁹

26. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 37 (printed p. 26), 4th shakha, 4th pallava, "tathā rāga" (P-R: sindhura), no. 2 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ ॐ "); MS P-R-Sa no. 858, P-R no. 40.41. KGC 12.1 and 23.1 (raga barari; the same pada twice) and GPT2 (no. 11, barari) — in a fuller recension (see note 29). The catalogue also listed it as BD-040 (by a misreading of the KGC bhanita as "Balarama"; in KGC the signature is "Vasu"). Majumdar counts PK 1635 among Vasu's padas on the Lord's bhava.

27. MS P-R: "alone" (ekāsare) instead of "alone" (ekeśvare); MS "k": "else" (āra) instead of "other" (āna). After 9.2 MS P-R has the couplet: "The crown of all incarnations, / the wish-fulfilling gem of the destitute" (it is also in KGC and GPT2).

28. Lakshmi is the goddess of fortune, the Lord's eternal consort; in Gaura-līla — Lakshmi-priya and Vishnu-priya. MS P-R: "He left" (chāṛāla) instead of "the Lord has left"; "now" — P-R: "ibe" (the same); instead of "leaving the enchanting flute from His hands" — P-R: "He left the garland of forest flowers" (chāṛāla banamālā).

29. MSS "k," "kh," P-R-Sa: "heeds not" (māna) instead of "knows not" (jāna); P-R: "jāne" (the same); "parāṇe" (the same). In KGC and GPT2 the pada is longer: after 9.1 — "The crown of all incarnations, / the wish-fulfilling gem of the destitute"; after 9.2 — "Ornaments of jewels / He does not touch even in dreams"; instead of 9.3–9.4 — "He left the pastimes with Lakshmi — / why then does He dwell beneath a tree? / He left the garland and the flute — / now, taking the staff, He has become a sannyasi" (GPT2: "He left the enchanting flute from His hands"); then — "Spurning laughter and play, / His eyes are swollen with weeping"; "Making prema His treasure, / He has taken all the destitute with Him"; the ending — "He bathes in the waters of prema. / Says Vasu: 'The heart is breaking!'"

10. Vasu Ghosha — "majhu mane lāgala śela..." (PK 451)

*A lament for Gaura who has turned away from His lover: a spear has pierced the heart, life has become fruitless; if one is never again to see Gora's face, what joy is there in life? Without Gora life cannot be held. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "repentance after a quarrel" (kalahantarita). Raga pathamanjari.*³⁰

10.1. A spear has pierced my heart:

Gaura has turned away from me.

10.2. My life has become fruitless —

a cruel Creator has sent me grief.

10.3. To whom shall I tell this grief?

When I begin to speak, my breast is torn apart.³¹

10.4. If I am never again to see Gora's face, what joy is there for me in life?³²

10.5. Vasudeva Ghosha sings this rasa:

without Gora life cannot be held.

30. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 307 (printed p. 296), 2nd shakha, section "punaśca kalahāntarita taducita-śrīgauracandraḥ," no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga pathamanjari (P-R: suhai); MS P-R-Sa no. 640, P-R no. 22.1. GPT1 — p. 312, no. 19 (pathamanjari), following a pada of Radhamohana on the Lord in the mood of mana and separation; GPT2 — in the section of the laments of Shachi and Vishnu-priya after the sannyasa (no. 16). Whose words these are, the author does not say; the PK section shows Radha repenting that in anger She rejected Krishna. We translate it as the lament of a devoted soul separated from Gaura. Majumdar does not discuss this pada.

31. MS P-R in 10.2: "majhu" instead of "mora" (the same, "my"); "k," "g," P-R-Sa: "eha dukha" (the same); P-R: "to whom then shall I tell this grief" (hāma kāhe kahabahiṁ dukha).

32. MSS "k," "g," "c," P-R: "taba"; P-R-Sa: "tabahi" (the same; "then"); P-R: "kibā sukha" (the same).

11. Vasu Ghosha — "kata dine heraba gorācāṁḍera mukha..." (PK 2279)

*The devotees' longing for Gaura after the sannyasa: when shall we see Gorachand's face, when will the Lord embrace us, when will our ears hear His words? The people of Nadia weep, not seeing Gora. In PK it is the section "the devotees' longing" in the pallava on Gauranga's sannyasa. Raga suhai.*³³

11.1. When shall I see Gorachand's face?

When will all the sorrow of my heart be stilled?

11.2. When will the Lord Gora clasp me in His embrace?

When will fate be kind to me?³⁴

11.3. When will the auspicious day dawn for my ears — to hear day and night the words of the Moon-faced One?

11.4. Says Vasu Ghosha, remembering Gora's virtues:

the people of Nadia weep, not seeing Gora.³⁵

33. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 296 (printed p. 285), 4th shakha, 21st pallava ("The sannyasa of Shri Gauranga, etc."), section "atha bhaktagaṇasya utkaṇṭhā yathā," no. 62 (mark " ১১ ১১৯ "); raga suhai; MS P-R-Sa no. 2383, P-R no. 41.11. GPT1 — p. 387, no. 14 (suhai); GPT2 — sect. 5.4, no. 14. Majumdar counts PK 2279 among Vasu's stavas and prarthanas. Next in PK (2280) comes Vasu's pada "gorā-guṇe prāṇa kānde..." (chapter 5).

34. MS P-R: "shall I see" (dekhiba); instead of "when will all the sorrow of my heart be stilled" — P-R: "at the sight of Gora's face [sorrow] will cease" (gorāmukha daraśe ṭuṭaba); P-R-Sa, P-R: "kore," "more" (the same).

35. MSS "k," "kh," "gh," "c," P-R-Sa and GPT1: "śrabāṇe haibe" (the same); P-R: "sings" (gāya) instead of "says," "the Lord's" (pahum) instead of "Gora's"; instead of "the people of Nadia weep" — MS "kh": "how can life be kept [, not seeing Gora]" (kemanē rahibe prāṇa); P-R: "weeping, the eyes are dying" (jhuriyā maraye āmkhi).

12. Vasu Ghosha — "nitāi kebala patita janāra bandhu..." (PK 2314)

*Praise of Nitai: He alone is the friend of the fallen, an ocean of jewels amid the destitute; in separation from Gaura He looks all around and calls, "Lord Gora Raya!" and falls unconscious; His companions take Him in their arms and weep; tears of prema flow from His reddish eyes, with a thundering voice He calls, "Brother, brother!" and the earth trembles under His steps; He gave the world prema through sankirtana — why then has Vasu been left out? In PK it stands in the pallava "Description of Sri Nityananda's virtues." Raga sindhura.*³⁶

12.1. (Refrain) Nitai alone is the friend of fallen people.

By the fruit of the living beings' age-old pious deeds the Creator has granted them, amid their poverty, an ocean of jewels.³⁷

12.2. Looking all around, He goes and calls, "Lord Gora Raya!" — and falls unconscious to the ground.

His dear companions gather, take Nitai in their arms and weep, gazing at His moonlike face.

12.3. His eyes, red as a fresh lotus, brim with tears of prema — as if the Mandakini were streaming down Sumeru.³⁸

With a voice deep as the thunder of clouds He calls, "Brother, brother!" — under the weight of His steps the earth trembles.

12.4. Merciful Nitai gave the living beings the shelter of prema — such mercy is known to all the world.

Through the sankirtana of the name so dear to Him He delivered the people of the world —
why then has Vasu been left out?³⁹

36. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 308 (printed p. 297), 4th shakha, 22nd pallava ("Description of Shri Nityananda's virtues"), no. 21 (mark " ১১ ১১৯ "); raga sindhura; MS P-R-Sa no. 2418. KGC 27.2 (sindhura; "of Shri Nityananda-chandra"); GPT1 — pp. 423–424, no. 31 (sindhura); GPT2 — sect. 6.1, no. 31. Majumdar counts PK 2314 among Vasu's padas on Nityananda.

37. MS "kh": "to the living beings" (jībe); P-R-Sa: "jība" (the same). KGC: "the Creator brought and joined [to them]" (bidhi āni milāola); GPT1: "amid poverty, an ocean of love" (pīṛitera sindhu).

38. The Mandakini is the heavenly Ganga; Sumeru is the golden mountain: the tears flowing down Nitai's golden-hued body. MSS "k," "kh," "gh," "c," KGC and GPT1: "red as gunja berries" (guṇjāruṇa). MS "kh": "meli," P-R-Sa: "mile" (the same: "gather"); P-R-Sa: "holding" (kare) instead of "take in their arms." KGC and GPT1: "and the Lord [Nitai] weeps, gazing at the moonlike face," "with thunderous sound again He calls, 'Brother!'"

39. "The name so dear to Him" (nija-nāma), literally "His own name": the name of Gaura, whom Nitai regards as His own. KGC: "He gave the living beings prema unknown even to the Creator; by His own virtues, giving prema, He flooded the three worlds — / only Vasudeva Ghosha is left out"; so too GPT1.

13. Vasu Ghosha — "saṁkīrtane nityānanda nāce..." (PK 2315)

*Nityananda dances in sankirtana with His dear companions near Him, while Govinda and Madhava Ghosha sing; embracing the fallen, He weeps and says, "I owe you much — take the wares of prema! I will destroy your misfortunes and give you prema with interest"; Vasu pines in tears, remembering such mercy. In PK it is the next pada of the same pallava. Raga shri.*⁴⁰

- 13.1. In sankirtana Nityananda dances,
His dear companions near Him.
- 13.2. Hearing the song of Govinda and Madhava Ghosha, who could keep hold of life?⁴¹
- 13.3. Embracing the fallen by the neck, the Lord weeps, full of compassion.
- 13.4. With a faltering voice He speaks to the fallen — hearing it, stones split apart:⁴²
- 13.5. "I owe a great debt to all of you — take, take the wares of prema!
- 13.6. I will destroy all your misfortunes,
I will give you prema — and with interest besides!"⁴³
- 13.7. With love they gaze at His moonlike face, and He, embracing them by the neck, weeps.
- 13.8. Remembering such mercy,
Vasu Ghosha pines away in tears.

40. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 308–309 (printed pp. 297–298), 4th shakha, 22nd pallava, no. 22 (mark " ২২ ২৩১৫ "); raga shri; MS P-R-Sa no. 2419. Not found in GPT1 or KGC. Majumdar counts PK 2315 among Vasu's padas on Nityananda.

41. Govinda and Madhava Ghosha, Vasu's brothers, were kirtana singers. According to the Chaitanya-bhagavata (Antya 5) the Ghosha brothers were the singers in Nityananda's kirtanas in Gauda; the pada pictures these kirtanas. MS "k": "ghoṣe" (the same).

42. MS "gh": "patitere" (the same).

43. MS "k": "tā sabhāra" (the same: "to all of you") instead of "to sabhāra" in 13.5 and 13.6. "With interest" — byāja.

14. Vasu Ghosha — "jaya jaya jagannātha śacīra nandana..." (PK 2192)

*Praise of Gaura — Jagannatha, the son of Shachi: in Nilachala He holds the conch, disc, club and lotus, in Nadia the staff and water pot of a sannyasi; formerly He slew Ravana and manifested the splendour of the pastimes of Goloka, now in Radha's mood He has come as Gora and preached the name Hare Krishna; He is Gaura, He is Krishna, He is Jagannatha. In PK it stands in the pallava "Sri Gaurachandra — another mode." Raga tirota.*⁴⁴

- 14.1. Glory, glory to Jagannatha, the son of Shachi, whose feet the three worlds worship!
- 14.2. In Nilachala He holds the conch, disc, club and lotus, in the town of Nadia — the staff and water pot in His hands.⁴⁵

14.3. Some say that formerly He slew Ravana;
He manifested the splendour of the pastimes of Goloka.⁴⁶

14.4. And now, in the mood of Sri Radha, He is the Gora-avatara:
Gaura has preached the name "Hare Krishna."⁴⁷

14.5. Vasudeva Ghosha says with folded palms:
He is Gaura, He is Krishna, He is Jagannatha.

44. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 265 (printed p. 254), 4th shakha, 20th pallava, no. 9 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga tirota; MS P-R-Sa no. 2300. GPT1 — p. 4, no. 3 (tirota); GPT2 — sect. 1.2, no. 3. The catalogue listed the pada twice: VG-001 (from GPT, wrongly linked to PK 2151) and VG-131 (PK 2192, only the ending). Majumdar counts PK 2192 among Vasu's stavas and prarthanas.

45. Nilachala is Puri; Jagannatha is the Lord Himself (Vishnu with four emblems); in Nadia He is a sannyasi with a staff (danda) and water pot (kamandalu).

46. Slaying Ravana is Rama's lila; the pastimes of Goloka are Krishna's lila. MSS "k," "kh," "gh," "c": "purube" (the same: "formerly").

47. "The name 'Hare Krishna'" is the maha-mantra "Hare Krishna Hare Krishna Krishna Krishna Hare Hare / Hare Rama Hare Rama Rama Rama Hare Hare." MS "kh": "ei" instead of "sei" in 14.5; GPT1: "He who is Gaura is Krishna, is Jagannatha" (yei gaura sei kṛṣṇa).

15. Vasu Ghosha — "gaurāṅga nahita ki mene haita..." (PK 2345)

*Had there been no Gauranga, who would have revealed to the world the glory of Radha and the summit of the rasa of prema, the way into the sweetness of Vrindavana and devotion in the mood of the maidens of Vraja? In the ocean of worldly existence there is none more merciful than He; the poet reproaches himself for his heart of stone. In PK it stands in the pallava on the form and virtues of Chaitanya and Nityananda.*⁴⁸

15.1. Had there been no Gauranga, what would have become of us?
How would we have lived?
The glory of Radha, the summit of the rasa of prema — who would have made it known to the world?⁴⁹

15.2. The very essence of the art of entering the sweetness of the sweet forest of Vrinda, devotion in the mood of the young maidens of Vraja — who would have had the power for it?⁵⁰

15.3. Sing then again and again of Gauranga's virtues,
O my mind, becoming simple!
In this ocean of worldly existence one so merciful is not to be found — not one.

15.4. Saying "Gauranga," he has not melted — how does he still live?
Surely of stone they have fashioned the heart of Vasu!⁵¹

48. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 319–320 (printed pp. 308–309), 4th shakha, 23rd pallava ("Description of the form and virtues of Sri Chaitanya and Nityananda"), no. 14 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); "tathā rāga"; MS P-R-Sa no. 2449. Majumdar counts PK 2345 among Vasu's stavas and prarthanas. In GPT1 (pp. 12–13, no. 30, raga vibhasa) and GPT2 (sect. 1.2, no. 30) it bears the signature "Narahari" and ends in the first person: "Saying 'Gauranga,' I have not melted — how do I still live? Surely of stone they have fashioned the heart of Narahari" (in the catalogue — NG-002). The attribution is disputed: PK (and MS P-R-Sa) give Vasu, GPT gives Narahari.

49. "How would we have lived" — literally "how would [we] have kept the body" (kemanē dharita de). MSS "k," "gh": "kemanē" instead of "ki mene" ("how would it have been"); "kh": "ki manē" (the same); GPT: "tabe ki haita" ("what then would have been"). Cf. CC Adi 3–4: the Lord came to taste Radha's prema and to give the world raganuga-bhakti.

50. "The maidens of Vraja" are the gopis. Devotion in their mood (raganuga-bhakti) the Lord gave the world through Rupa, Sanatana and His other companions.

51. MS P-R-Sa: "becoming simple" — haiyā (the same; the main text has hailā).

16. Vasu Ghosha — "gaurāṅga tumi more dayā nā chāriha..." (PK 3007)

*A prarthana to Gauranga: "Do not withdraw Your mercy from me, keep me at Your reddish feet; for them I have left everything and bidden farewell to kin on both sides; give me the shade of Your feet." In PK it is the section "prayer again," on Sri Gaurachandra. Raga shri.*⁵²

16.1. Gauranga, do not withdraw Your mercy from me; making me Your own, keep me at Your reddish feet.

16.2. For the sake of Your feet I have left everything; finding Your cool feet, I have taken shelter in them.

16.3. To this kin and to that I have bidden farewell forever — keep me at Your feet, calling me Your own.⁵³

16.4. Vasudeva Ghosha says, clasping Your feet:
in Your mercy, shelter me in the shade of Your feet.

52. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 4, PDF p. 233 (printed p. 224), 4th shakha, 36th pallava, section "punah prārthanā tatra śrīgauracandraḥ," no. 23 (mark " ২৩ ৩০০৭ "); raga shri; MS P-R-Sa no. 2516. Not found in GPT1, GPT2 or KGC. Majumdar counts PK 3007 among Vasu's stavas and prarthanas. MS "k": "You will not withdraw... You will keep" (chāribe, rākhibe).

53. "To this kin and to that" (e kule o kule) — to family and to the world, to this shore and to that: to all worldly and heavenly hopes. "Bidden farewell forever" — literally "given tilanjali" (the funeral offering of water with sesame).

17. Vasu Ghosha — "āre mora gaurāṅga soṇā..." (PK 3008)

*A prarthana to Gauranga: "O my gold, Gauranga, how much I prayed — and found You; I have no one of my own — keep me at Your feet; give the nectar of prema and the shade of Your cool feet to one tormented." In PK it is the next pada of the same section. Raga shri.*⁵⁴

17.1. (Refrain) O my Gauranga, my gold!
How much I prayed — and I have found You.

17.2. I can call no one my own — keep me beneath Your feet, making me Your own.⁵⁵

17.3. Your face — with what can it be compared? Only with the moon.
Give the nectar-rasa of prema, and let it be proclaimed abroad.⁵⁶

17.4. Cooler than the lotus are Your feet — give their shade, then, to Vasu Ghosha, tormented by the heat.

54. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 4, PDF p. 233 (printed p. 224), 36th pallava, "tathā rāga" (shri), no. 24 (mark " ২৪ ৩০০৮ "); MS P-R-Sa no. 2517. Not found in GPT1, GPT2 or KGC. Majumdar counts PK 3008 among Vasu's stavas and prarthanas.

55. MS "kh": "balite" (the same: "to call"); "k": "rākhaha" (the same).

56. "Let it be proclaimed abroad" (rahuka ghoṣaṇā) — let all the world know of Your mercy to the unworthy.

Chapter 10. Nayananda and Balarama Dasa: the Gaura-avatara, the Kirtanas of Navadvipa, Gaura and Gadadhara, Shantipura

*Padas of Nayananda (Nayana Mishra), the nephew and disciple of Gadadhara Pandita, and padas signed by Balarama Dasa, in the order of the lilas: praise of the Gaura-avatara; the kirtanas of Navadvipa, where Gaura dances beside Gadadhara; Gauranga's form; His bhava — the Lord weeps gazing at Gadadhara's face; a spring night on the Ganga and the spring swing; Shantipura after the sannyasa and the departure for Nilachala; Nityananda in Gauda. Majumdar counts Nayananda among the Lord's contemporaries: like his other padas, the pada on Gaura and Gadadhara ("premera gr̥hiṇī se paṇḍita gadādhare") is cited by Narahari Chakravarti in the *Bhakti-ratnakara as testimony; for Balarama Dasa Majumdar accepts three padas from the Bhakti-ratnakara (many padas of a later Balarama Dasa bear the same signature, so the attribution of the rest is doubtful). The text follows the Padakalpataru (PK), checked against the scans, with the manuscript variants from PK's apparatus, the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR), the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934) and the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Balarama Dasa — "kaliyuga-matta-mataṅgaja-maradane..." (PK 617)

*Praise of the Gaura-avatara: the age of Kali is a mad elephant, Gaura is the king of lions who has appeared in the mountain cave of Navadvipa; at the roar of sankirtana sins and the mystic perfections flee, and on the wretched He hangs necklaces of the pearls of the holy name. The gaura-chandrika at the opening of PK's 3rd shakha. Raga kamoda.*¹

1.1. When the mad elephant of the Kali age was crushed, the she-elephant of evil thinking fled far away;

on the low and the wretched He hung, as much as their necks would hold, hundred-stranded necklaces of the pearls of the Name.²

1.2. (Refrain) Wondrously shines Gaura:

in the mountain cave of the city of Sri Navadvipa the king of lions has risen!

1.3. Hearing the battle roar of sankirtana, the leopards — the sins — run away;

the does — anima and the other perfections — are frantic with fear, abandoning the pride of their merits.³

1.4. Renunciation, sacrifices, the vows of yama, pilgrimages, fasts — like hares and jackals they flee as if scorched.

Balarama Dasa says: that is why in the world only the sound of Hari's name is renowned.⁴

1. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 14 (printed p. 1), opening of the 3rd shakha, section "śrīgauracandra" (gaura-chandrika), no. 1 (label " ১ ৬১৭ "); raga kamoda; P-R-Sa MS no. 1091. GPT1 — p. 25, no. 1 (kamoda). The catalogue's link to the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR p. 901) is mistaken: there it is a different pada signed by Narahari — "bali-kali-matta-mataṅgaja-maradana gaurasiṃha nācata nadiyāya". The pada is in elaborate Vrajabuli; which of the Balarama Dasas wrote it is not established.

2. MS "ka": "the elephant (like) Yama"; P-R-Sa: "mataṅgajamabadane" (corrupt). GPT1 in a note: "the elephant's roar." MSS "ka", "ca": "far" (dūra). MS "ka": "pearl" (motima); so also GPT1. "Hundred-stranded necklaces" — śata-dāma, a necklace of many strands.

3. Anima (the power of becoming minute) and the other eight siddhis are the mystic perfections of yoga; before sankirtana they lose their worth, like does before a lion. The word "puṇabata" (here "merits," from puṇya) is unclear; MS "ka" has "pumabata," "kha," "gha," "ca" "pumarata," P-R-Sa "patharata." MSS "ka," "kha," "ca," P-R-Sa: "islands" (dvīpagāṇa) instead of "leopards" (dīpigaṇa); MSS "ka," "gha," "ca": "forest" (bana), "kha": "in the forest" instead of "battle" (raṇa).

4. MS "ca": "like" (sama); MS "ka": "moon" (śaśī) instead of "hare." MSS "ka," "ca": "Hari" instead of "sound" (dhani). The thought: nama-sankirtana is the dharma of the age of Kali (cf. CC Adi 3, 17), and all other means give way before it.

2. Balarama Dasa — "baṇa abatāra bhāi baṇa abatāra..." (PK 2207 = BR p. 956)

*The great incarnation: Gaura distributes the storehouse of prema to the fallen; women of noble families dance in the sankirtana; the one whom all drove away as untouchable is now the one whose foot-dust the gods beg for; even yavanas sing the holy name. Raga shri (BR — dhanashi).*⁵

2.1. A great incarnation, brothers, a great incarnation!

To the fallen He has given away the storehouse of prema.

2.2. How wondrous are Gorachand's pastimes:

a king — and he carries a Vaishnava's palanquin on his shoulder!⁶

2.3. No likeness can be found for such an incarnation:

amid the sankirtana the wives of noble families dance.⁷

2.4. The one whom everyone shunned, saying, "Do not touch!" — from him the gods now beg the dust of his feet.

2.5. Even yavanas dance, sing and take the name of Hari — yet in such an incarnation Balarama is left out.⁸

5. Signature: "Balarama." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 271 (printed p. 260), 4th shakha, 20th pallava, section "śrīgauracandra — prakārāntara," no. 24 (label " ३४ ३५०९ "); raga shri; P-R-Sa MS no. 2315, P-R 9.15. BR, 12th wave (1913 ed., pp. 956–957, "punardhānaśī"): the pada is sung within the account of Navadvipa. Majumdar cites it among the BR testimonies of Balarama Dasa (the detail of the noble wives dancing in the sankirtana is new). The catalogue had assigned it to PK 2208, which is a pada of Ananta Dasa. GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 36.

6. Who this "king" is, the pada does not say: perhaps the Lord Himself, the King of all, who serves His devotees, or a king (Prataparudra) humbly serving the Vaishnavas. BR: "a Vaishnava's bag (jholā)" instead of "palanquin (dolā)"; MS P-R: "bears" (bahe) instead of "holds."

7. MS P-R: "in sankirtana people dance, having abandoned all (other) dharmas." BR: "nāpi" (corrupt), "bomhāri."

8. BR: "all people" (saba loka) instead of "sarvva loka." A yavana is a non-Hindu (a Muslim); cf. the conversion of Chand Kazi (CB Madhya 23; CC Adi 17).

3. Nayananda — "jaya re jaya re gorā śrīśacī-nandana..." (PK 2)

*Glory to Gora, the son of Shachi, dancing His auspicious dance: Srivasa, Ramananda, Mukunda and Vasu sing; the mridanga and the mandiras resound; one anoints Gora with sandal paste, another puts on Him a malati garland; some call Him Rama, others the Kandarpa dear to Radha, but the poet knows only this: He is Gadadhara's life. A mangalacharana — the second pada of PK. Raga kamoda.*⁹

3.1. Glory, glory to Gora, the son of Sri Shachi, beautiful in His auspicious dance!

In the bliss of kirtana Srivasa and Ramananda,

Mukunda and Vasu sing His virtues.¹⁰

3.2. "Dang drimiki drimi" — the madal sounds,

the mandiras ring sweetly, conch, karatalas and bells resound, blending with the rhythm of His feet.¹¹

3.3. One anoints Gora's body with fragrant sandal paste, another puts on Him a malati garland;
 pierced to the heart by the flower-arrow of love,
 the companions are lost in bhava.¹²

3.4. Some say Gora is the beloved of Janaki, others — the Five-arrowed One dear to Radha; Nayananda's heart knows nothing else:
 He is the life of my Gadadhara.¹³

9. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 13 (printed p. 2), 1st shakha, 1st pallava (mangalacharana), no. 2 (label " १ "); raga kamoda; P-R-Sa MS no. 1, P-R 1.3 and 38.1 (raga "kamoda-mallara," P-R "mallara"). KGC — 30th kshanada (purnima), no. 1, gaura-chandrika (kedara); GPT1 — p. 4, no. 4 (kedara or mangala); GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 4. The catalogue gave the PK number as "45" (PK 45 is a pada of Radhamohana on Radha's purvaraga).

10. MS P-R: "suthāna re," "guṇa-gāna re" (with the refrain particle "re"); KGC lacks "re." Srivasa is the master of the house where the night kirtanas of Navadvipa were held; Ramananda here is probably Vasu Ramananda; Mukunda is the singer Mukunda Datta; Vasu is Vasudeva (Vasu) Ghosha.

11. The syllables imitate the madal (mridanga): MSS "ka," "kha," "gha," "ca": "dāṃ drimiki drimi drimi"; P-R-Sa: "tā drimi ki drimi"; P-R 1.3: "drimiki drimiki drimi"; P-R 38.1: "dāṃ drimi drimi," "mandirā"; KGC: "drāṃ drimiki drimi." Mandiras are small cymbals.

12. In the PK scan the epithet of the sandal paste is partly illegible; "fragrant" (sugandhi) follows KGC and GPT1. MS P-R 38.1: "One anoints Gora's body with sandal paste, (one offers) fragrant karabira," "kora re" instead of "bhora re." MSS "kha," "gha," "ca," P-R, P-R-Sa: "the (female) companions" (sahacari). The flower-arrow is Kamadeva's weapon; here it is the hearts pierced by love for the Lord.

13. MSS "kha," "gha," P-R, P-R-Sa: "say" (bale); "ka": "says" (kahata), so also KGC. The beloved of Janaki (Sita) is Rama. The Five-arrowed One is Kamadeva; "the Five-arrowed One dear to Radha" is Krishna as the transcendental Madana (aprakrita-madana, CC Madhya 8), not the worldly god of desire. Gadadhara Pandita, according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika, is a manifestation of Radha; Nayananda calls Gaura the life of his Gadadhara. MSS "ka," P-R-Sa: "āmāra"; P-R: "hāmāri."

4. Balarama Dasa — "bhāla raṅge nāce mora śacīra dulāla..." (BR p. 837)

*Gaura dances in the kirtana of Navadvipa: sandal paste all over His body, His garland swaying, pearls on His chest, His ankle bells ringing; the kinnaras learn singing from Him, the gandharvas contemplate His dance; the lotuses shrink before His eyes. Raga dhanashi.*¹⁴

4.1. How beautifully my darling of Shachi dances!
 Sandal paste over all His body, His garland swaying.

4.2. On His broad chest is a necklace of "elephant" pearls, to the rhythm of His feet the ankle bells ring out.¹⁵

4.3. How many bends of the body He knows, in measure and out of measure — in all the city of Nadia there is no such artist!¹⁶

4.4. The kinnaras learn from hearing His soft singing, the gandharvas, seeing His tandava, sink into meditation.¹⁷

4.5. The lotus shrinks on seeing His eyes, when He smiles, His teeth shed the radiance of lightning.

4.6. His lips are redder than the bandhuli flower — and that smile!
 Gazing at this form, Balarama Dasa weeps.¹⁸

14. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed. (Murshidabad), pp. 837–838 ("gīte yathā — dhānāśī"); 1960 ed., vv. 1884–1889. The pada is not in PK or GPT1. In Narahari Chakravarti it is sung in the account of the path by which the Lord went with kirtana from Srivasa's house to the Ganga and back; Majumdar cites it among the three BR padas of Balarama Dasa.

15. Gaja-mukta is the pearl believed to be born in an elephant's head — the finest pearl. 1913 ed.: "jhañcāra," 1960 ed.: "jhañkāra" (ringing).

16. Chhanda-bichhanda — dancing in measure and with departures from it (syncopations).

17. The kinnaras and gandharvas are celestial singers and musicians. Tandava is the vigorous male dance.

18. Bandhuli (bandhuka) is a bright red flower. "oṭakhāni" — "the lips" (oṭha, oṣṭha); 1913 ed.: "...oṭakhāni hāma" (corrupt), 1960 ed.: "oṭakhāni hāsa."

5. Balarama Dasa — "hari hari maṅgala bharala khiti-maṇḍala..." (PK 2065)

*Gaura dances, spreading through the world the storehouse of rasa — the kirtana of His own virtues; His form robs Manmatha of his senses; the Name that Shiva and Brahma seek in the depths of the heart He strings into a necklace and gives to the fallen. Raga mangala.*¹⁹

5.1. Hari, Hari! The circle of the earth is filled with blessing — a shop of the treasures of rasa has opened:
the kirtana of His own virtues, the jewel of prema
He ceaselessly spreads abroad.

5.2. (Refrain) The skilful dancer, youthful Gaura, dances;
His heart is ceaselessly stirred by bhava,
there is no end to the joy of prema.

5.3. That body, shining like pure gold — it is the Creator who fashioned it!²⁰ Manmatha has fainted: in every limb there is such beauty that, seeing it, he has lost his wits.

5.4. The Name that Shiva and the Four-faced One worship, seeking it in the depths of the heart — of such a Name He carefully strings a necklace and gives it to the fallen.

5.5. Seeing the souls sunk in a dark well, the Lord appeared in Navadvipa;
the treasure of prema He gave away, filling the world — only Balarama Dasa is left out.

19. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 217 (printed p. 206), 4th shakha, 17th pallava "śrīgaurāṅgera nṛtyādi līlā" (Gaurāṅga's dance and other pastimes), no. 7 (label " ୧ ୪୦୬୫ "); raga mangala; P-R-Sa MS no. 2174. GPT1 — p. 274, no. 86 (mangala); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 86. Majumdar does not discuss the pada; its attribution to one of the Balarama Dasas is not established. MS "kha": "kara" instead of "karu" (5.4).

20. "The Creator fashioned" is a poetic figure of wonder: the Lord's body is eternal and spiritual (sac-cid-ananda), not created by Brahma.

6. Balarama Dasa — "nācata gaura sunāgara-maṇiyā..." (PK 2066)

*Gaura's dance: a golden body, reddish garments, tears like rain, a merciful glance that drowns the world in the ocean of prema; He embraces the fallen, and at His leaps and roars the hearts of the godless tremble. The raga is not named ("the same raga" — mangala).*²¹

6.1. (Refrain) Gaura dances, the jewel of refined youths;
His feet, which put the wagtails to shame, delight the eye,
His ankle bells ring with a sweet "ran-ran."²²

6.2. His body has a natural golden lustre — whoever looks, the whole world is enchanted;

millions of Madanas faint at it;
His garments are like the rays of dawn.

6.3. His body sways, He cannot stand steady,
His two eyes pour like clouds unceasingly;
He drowns the world in the ocean of prema, glancing mercifully from the corners of His eyes.

6.4. Absorbed in that rasa, He knows no limit,
He embraces the fallen and fills the world.
Balarama says: seeing His leaps and thunderous roars, the hearts of the godless tremble.²³

21. Signature: "Balarama." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 217–218 (printed pp. 206–207), 17th pallava, no. 8 (label " ୪ ୨୦୬୬ "); P-R-Sa MS no. 2175. GPT1 — p. 250, no. 7 ("yathārāga"); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 7. Its attribution to one of the Balarama Dasas is not established.

22. Sunagara-mani, "the jewel of refined youths," is an epithet of Krishna; the poet sees Krishna Himself in the dancing Gaura. The wagtail (khañjana) is an image of nimble, light feet or eyes.

23. P-R-Sa: "on the earth" (bhūṭala) instead of "in the world" (bhubana). "lakṣa" is a leap (cf. "lakṣe lakṣe" in BR). GPT1: "majāyāi," "pāoi," "aruṇakiraṇa ambara baniyā" (without "kiye").

7. Balarama Dasa — "gobinda mādhaba śrīnibāsa rāmānande..." (PK 2067 = BR p. 922)

*Kirtana in Navadvipa: Govinda, Madhava, Srinivasa (Srivasa), Ramananda, Murari and Mukunda sing; hearing of His former (Vrindavana) pastimes the Lord falls senseless and rolls in the dust; seeing Gadadhara, He weeps; He calls out, "Shripada!" — and Nityananda, understanding the secret of His heart, weeps too. Raga mallara-kamoda (BR — dhanashi).*²⁴

7.1. Govinda, Madhava, Srinivasa, Ramananda, Murari and Mukunda sing together, as their own choir.²⁵

7.2. Hearing of His former virtues, maddened, in the bliss of kirtana the Lord falls senseless.

7.3. What a wonder — words cannot tell it:
the Lord of Goloka rolls in the dust!²⁶

7.4. His heart is overflowing with bhava — He sees Gadadhara and weeps in longing, His eyes brimming with tears.

7.5. "Shripada!" the Lord calls, falls to the ground and weeps; understanding the secret of His heart, Nityananda weeps.²⁷

7.6. Seeing this, people of all three kinds weep, drunk with Gora's rasa, but of this joy Balarama Dasa has been deprived.

24. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 218 (printed p. 207), 17th pallava, no. 9 (label " ୫ ୨୦୬୭ "); raga mallara-kamoda; P-R-Sa MS no. 2176. BR, 12th wave (1913 ed., p. 922, "punardhānaśī"), right after Balarama's pada "...nā darabe balarāma pāṣāṇa-hṛdaya". GPT1 — p. 275, no. 87 (shri-mallara); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 87. Majumdar cites the pada as testimony of Balarama Dasa: a kirtana with the Ghosha brothers, Srivasa, Vasu Ramananda, Murari and Mukunda.

25. Govinda and Madhava are the Ghosha brothers, the singers of Navadvipa; Srinivasa is Srivasa Pandita; Ramananda is Vasu Ramananda; Murari is Murari Gupta; Mukunda is Mukunda Datta. MS "ka," BR, GPT1: "mili" (together) instead of "meli."

26. MSS "ka," "ca," P-R-Sa: "goloka-" (without the case ending); so also GPT1. In BR this couplet is followed by the refrain mark (dhru).

27. Shripada is the Lord's respectful way of addressing Nityananda. MSS "ka," "kha," "gha," "ca": "to the ground" (dharāṇī) instead of "bhūme"; BR: "prabhu bhūme"; GPT1: "śrīpāda bali pahum̐ dharaṇī paṇi kām̐de." BR: "gadādhare dekhi" (7.4).

8. Nayananda — "maṇḍalī racyā saha care..." (PK 2068)

*The companions have formed a circle, and in the middle Gora dances: with Him are Gadadhara and Nityananda; from house to house He, Shyamasundara Himself, distributes love and devotion and with sankirtana offers everyone the treasure of prema; men dance in the mood of women, women in the mood of men. The poet and his friends seek shelter at Gadadhara's feet. Raga kedara.*²⁸

8.1. (Refrain) The companions have formed a circle, in the middle is Gora, the best of dancers.

8.2. Vishvambhara dances, with Him Gadadhara, Nityananda Raya dances;
recalling their former pastimes, they taste the joy of prema — each grasps it according to his own nature.²⁹

8.3. From house to house — Shyamasundara Himself in person —
He gives away love and devotion;
He performs sankirtana and begs all to take the treasure of prema, together with all His companions.³⁰

8.4. Men dance in the mood of women, young women in the mood of men;
each having found his own bhava, his own nature, people of every caste dance.³¹

8.5. Nayananda says: the bliss of Nadia — the whole world is drunk with bliss.
We whose life is full of sorrow take shelter at the feet of Madhava's son.³²

28. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 218 (printed p. 207), 17th pallava, no. 10 (label " ୨୦ ୨୦୬୮ "); raga kedara; P-R-Sa MS nos. 2177 and 2213. GPT1 — pp. 250–251, no. 8 (kedara); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 8. PK 2104 (vol. 3, PDF p. 231, no. 46) is another recension of the same pada (after P-R-Sa no. 2213): "...nāce nityānanda bhāyā pūraba-kautuka bhuñje prema-sukha saba saha care lai yā," after which Raya refers back to PK 2068.

29. "Former pastimes" are the pastimes of Vrindavana. P-R-Sa: "sabhāre" (to all) instead of "svabhābe" (by one's own nature); PK 2104 and GPT1 (in a note): "brother Nityananda" (bhāyā, bhāiyā).

30. Shyamasundara, "the dark beauty," is Krishna: the poet sees in Gaura Krishna Himself going from house to house. P-R-Sa: "merciful to all" (sabhāre sadaya haiyā) instead of "together with all His companions."

31. In the ecstasy of kirtana the devotees forget the worldly distinction of sex: each dances in the bhava that has opened within him. P-R-Sa: "dance" (nācata), "women" (prakṛti) instead of "young women" (yubati).

32. "Madhava's son" is Gadadhara Pandita, the son of Madhava Mishra; Nayananda is his nephew and disciple. MSS "ka," "kha," P-R-Sa: "duḥkhita"; "gha": "jībajana" (souls). GPT1: "duḥkhita jībana, mādhabanandana, caraṇe śaraṇa morā."

9. Nayananda — "duhum̐ duhum̐ piriti āratī nāhi ṭuṭe..." (PK 2069 = BR p. 925)

*Gaura and Gadadhara dance, drunk with each other's love: Gauranga with Gadadhara's rasa, Gadadhara with Gauranga's pastimes; they are like Sita and Rama, like Radha and Kanu; in Nadia reigns the joy of the kirtana of prema, and the mistress of the house of prema is Pandita Gadadhara, while Shachi's son is the touchstone of prema. Raga pathamanjari (BR — kamoda).*³³

9.1. Their love and longing for each other never break off, at their touch so much supreme joy arises!³⁴

- 9.2. My Gauranga dances, drunk with Gadadhara's rasa, and Gadadhara dances, drunk with Gauranga's play.
- 9.3. Prakriti and purusha — are they not Janaki and Sri Rama?
Are they not Radha with Kanu, Rati with the god Kama?³⁵
- 9.4. The grace of their limbs surpasses countless Anangas — how can I find a likeness for the limit of their greatness?
- 9.5. What to say of the moon beside His face — every day it is born and dies;
what is the lotus beside His hands and feet — it falls apart under the weight of frost!³⁶
- 9.6. The joy of the kirtana of prema is in the city of Nadia;
the mistress of the house of prema is Pandita Gadadhara.³⁷
- 9.7. The touchstone of prema is Shachi's son:
He delivered the people of the world by giving them the treasure of prema.
- 9.8. Nayananda tells of the play of these two:
hearing of it, the heart is captivated — what is there to reason about?³⁸

33. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 219 (printed p. 208), 17th pallava, no. 11 (label " ९९ २०७९ "); raga pathamanjari; P-R-Sa MS nos. 2178 and 2460. BR, 12th wave (1913 ed., p. 925, "punaḥ kāmadaḥ"): Narahari Chakravarti cites the pada in the account of Navadvipa as testimony ("ohe śrīnibāsa kichu kahila nā haya suradhunīṭire gorā raṅge bilasaya"). GPT1 — p. 251, no. 9 (pathamanjari); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 9. Majumdar counts the pada among the testimonies of the closeness of Gauranga and Gadadhara (catalogue: NN-029 = NN-015). In the catalogue the padas NS-005, BD-018 and BD-022 had been wrongly linked to PK 2069. PK 2356 (24th pallava, vol. 3, PDF p. 324) repeats the same pada.

34. MS "gha," GPT1: "the heart" (marama) instead of "supreme" (parama); BR: "paraśe parama sukha jāni kata uṭhe."

35. Prakriti and purusha are the female and male principles: Gadadhara, the manifestation of Radha (the pleasure energy, hladini-shakti), and Gaura, Krishna Himself. Rati and Kama (Kamadeva) are the deities of love; the poet's comparisons are images of beauty and intimacy, not of worldly passion: according to Gaudiya teaching, Krishna is the transcendental Madana (aprakṛita-madana, CC Madhya 8). BR, GPT1: "Radha and Kanu at play (keli)"; BR: "purusha and prakriti."

36. The moon wanes and waxes; the lotus withers in the winter frost — but the Lord's face, hands and feet are always beautiful. MS "ka": "the moon-face" (mukha-cāṁḍa); "gha": "karapada"; BR: "What likeness is the moon? Every day it is born and dies; the hands and feet — lotuses? (Lotuses) fall apart from the frost."

37. "The mistress of the house of prema" (premera gṛhiṇī) is Gadadhara as the manifestation of Radha. BR: "prema-saṅkīrtana-sukha."

38. MSS "kha," "gha," P-R-Sa: "behāra" (the same). BR: "kahaye nayanānanda ānanda bihāra" ("...the play of bliss"). MS "ka," P-R-Sa: "prema-parama-maṇi" instead of "prema-paraśa-maṇi" (9.7); BR: "uddhārīlā jagajane."

10. Nayananda — "kīrttana mājhe kīrttana-naṭa-rāja..." (PK 2070)

*Amid the kirtana is the king of the kirtana dancers: a garland on His neck with bees humming over it, a moon of sandal paste on His forehead; this dancing Vishvambhara is Krishna Himself: within Krishna, without the form of Radha, incomparable gold; He takes on His lap Gadadhara, the Lakshmi of prema. Raga bhatiyari.*³⁹

- 10.1. Amid the kirtana is the king of the kirtana dancers, for the play of kirtana — all the finery of an elegant youth.⁴⁰
- 10.2. On His neck sways a garland, the bees sing over it, on His forehead is a moon of sandal paste, His brows are flower-arrows.
- 10.3. (Refrain) Look, brothers, what a wonder:
this dancing Vishvambhara is Krishna in His own form!
- 10.4. Within — "Krishna, Krishna," the hidden supreme rasa, without — the form of Radha, incomparable gold.⁴¹

10.5. The joy of prakṛiti and puruṣa — rasa with rasa — has become one:
see with your own eyes — here is the incarnation of prema!

10.6. Gadadhara, the Lakshmi of prema, He took on His lap; in the bliss of prema is Nityananda, His own brother, dear as life.⁴²

10.7. Nayanānanda tells of the hidden secret of prema:
He is like a doll of nectar, a form made of nectar.⁴³

39. Signature: "Nayanānanda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 219 (printed p. 208), 17th pallava, no. 12 (label " १२ २०९० "); raga bhatiyari; P-R-Sa MS no. 2179. GPT1 — p. 260, no. 41 (bhatiyari); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 41. The linking of pada NS-021 (Narahari) to PK 2070 is mistaken.

40. "Nāgarāli-sāj" — the attire of a nagara, an elegant youth: an epithet of Krishna the dancer, not the language of nagari-bhava. MSS "ka," "kha": "sways" (dolaye) instead of "dolāra" (10.2).

41. Cf. the teaching of Krishnadasa Kaviraja (CC Adi 1.5–6; Adi 4): Sri Chaitanya is Krishna who has accepted the bhava and the lustre of Radha. MSS "ka," "kha," "gha," "ca": "antara" (within); "ka," "kha," "gha," "ca": "paraśa" instead of "parama"; "gha": "kanā" (a particle) instead of "koṇā" ("a corner," i.e. something hidden — the reading is unclear).

42. The Lakshmi of prema (prema-lakṣminī) is Gadadhara, the manifestation of Radha.

43. MS "ka": "nigunā," "ca": "niguna," P-R-Sa: "niguni," GPT1: "nigūṇa" — slips for "nigūṛha" (hidden); the subject is the secret of prema, not "qualitylessness" (nirguna) — the Lord has spiritual qualities.

11. Nayanānanda — "sajanī aparūpa dekha siyā..." (PK 2071)

*Gaura dances in Krishna's mood: He stands still in the tribhanga pose, looks for the flute, ties His hair into a topknot like Krishna, calls "Krishna, Krishna!", strikes His chest and says, "I am that very Lord"; the Ganga seems to Him the Yamuna, Navadvipa — Gokula and Mathura. Raga dhanashi.*⁴⁴

11.1. (Refrain) Friend, come and see what a wonder:
Gaurāgachand dances, chanting "Hari-bol"!

11.2. The fragrant choicest sandal paste, the scented karabira garland sway in waves on Gora's body.
What was hidden from sight before — see, here it is before your eyes, what a gain!
He is that very One — this charming Gora.⁴⁵

11.3. He stands still, bent in three places, looks for the sweet flute, ties a topknot of His curly hair;
He calls, "Krishna, Krishna!" — slaps His chest like a wrestler, and suddenly says, "I am that very Lord!"⁴⁶

11.4. The Jahnvi He takes for the Yamuna, the trees on her bank for Vrindavana, Navadvipa for Gokula and Mathura.
Nayanānanda says: the same friends and girlfriends — and the dark body has now become Gora.⁴⁷

44. Signature: "Nayanānanda." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 219–220 (printed pp. 208–209), 17th pallava, no. 13 (label " १३ २०९१ "); raga dhanashi; P-R-Sa MS no. 2180. GPT1 — p. 251, no. 10 (dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 10. The address "friend" (sajanī) is a usual opening of a pada; the speaker is not named. PK 2123 (18th pallava, vol. 3, PDF p. 238; P-R-Sa MS no. 2230) is another recension of the same pada: "rādhā rādhā bali ḍāke... bale muṇi sabhāra ṭhākura" ("He calls, 'Radha, Radha!'... says, 'I am the Lord of all'"), closing "baraṇakhāni kāra bhābe gorā" ("by whose bhava has the form become golden").

45. "Hidden before" — the pastimes of Vraja, formerly beyond sight, are now revealed before the eyes in Gaura.

46. Tribhanga is Krishna's pose with the flute; chura is Krishna's topknot. "Mālasāṭ" is a slap of the palm on the arm or chest, as wrestlers do. In Krishna's mood the Lord speaks of Himself as Krishna — cf. CB Madhya 8–9 (the mahaprakasha).

47. The Jahnvi is the Ganga. Gaura's companions are the same as Krishna's companions in Vraja (Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika); "the dark body" is Krishna who has become golden Gaura. MSS "gha," "ca," GPT1: "the trees on the bank" (tīre taru); "ka," "ca," GPT1: "in Navadvipa" (nabadvīpe).

12. Nayanānanda — "nāce śacīra nandana dulāliyā..." (PK 2073)

*Shachi's darling son dances — the ocean of all rasas, Gadadhara's dearest friend: a tilaka of musk, a topknot, a face like a golden moon, a smile that captivates the young women of the town; on His neck a forest garland, on Him yellow garments. Raga bhatiyari.*⁴⁸

12.1. (Refrain) Shachi's darling son dances, the ocean of all rasas, the friend dearer than life to Gadadhara, ever merry in His play.

12.2. Amid a tilaka of musk is a charming topknot, wondrously framed by curls;
His face is a golden moon, His sweet nectarean smile captivates the hearts of the young women of the town.⁴⁹

12.3. On Gora's neck is a forest garland — a wondrous play — golden rings and bracelets on His arms;
He wears a pair of yellow garments — the thief of all hearts;
Nayanānanda is at His lotus feet.⁵⁰

48. Signature: "Nayanānanda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 220 (printed p. 209), 17th pallava, no. 15 (label " ୧୫ ୨୦୭୩ "); raga bhatiyari; P-R-Sa MS no. 2182. GPT1 — p. 153, no. 125 (bhatiyari); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 125. The preceding pada PK 2072 is Uddhava Dasa's ("uddhaba dāsa tāra kīṭa").

49. The words about young women are the language of nagari-bhava (Gaura as the nagara, the beloved of the town's women); we translate faithfully to the author. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never glanced at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta). GPT1: "alakā balita baṛa śobhā" ("...great beauty").

50. The forest garland (vanamala) and yellow garments (pitambara) are Krishna's attire. GPT1: "piṅgala" (yellowish) garments; "maje nayanānanda-padāmbuje" — "...Nayanānanda is immersed in (His) lotus feet."

13. Nayanānanda — "mukhakhāni pūrṇimāra śaśī..." (PK 2102)

*Gora dances, binding the hearts of all souls with prema: His face is the full moon, His lips move all the time as if chanting a mantra; the moon weeps on seeing the beauty of His face, the sun on seeing the clouds of His eyes; streams of prema run down His chest. The poet asks: shall I see Gora beside Gadadhara again? Raga dhanashi.*⁵¹

13.1. His face is a full moon: what mantra is He chanting?
Why do His lips, which mock the bimba fruit, always tremble?⁵²

13.2. (Refrain) Gora dances, merry in the dance, the hearts of all souls He binds with prema.

13.3. The moon weeps seeing the beauty of His face, the sun weeps seeing the clouds of His eyes.⁵³

13.4. Gora is brighter than fresh, unwrought gold, streams of the rasa of prema run down His chest.⁵⁴

13.5. Nayanānanda says in the joy of his heart:
shall I see Gora beside Gadadhara again?⁵⁵

51. Signature: "Nayanānanda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 231 (printed p. 220), 17th pallava, no. 44 (label " ୪୪ ୨୧୦୨ "); raga dhanashi; P-R-Sa MS no. 2211. GPT1 — p. 154, no. 126 (dhanashri); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 126.

52. The bimba is a bright red fruit, the usual comparison for lips. The Lord's lips move — He is ceaselessly chanting the holy name. MSS "ka," "kha," "gha," "ca," GPT1: "bimba bīṛambita adhara."

53. The clouds of His eyes are His eyes full of tears. MS "gha": "chāna" instead of "chānda" (beauty, shape), "haiyā" instead of "heriyā."

54. "nabāñcala" is unclear; GPT1: "Gora of new rasa" (naba rasera gorā). MSS "ka," "kha," "ca," GPT1: "of touch" (paraśera) instead of "of rasa" (rasera); "gha": "rasera."

55. The poet's question betrays longing: it seems he can no longer see Gaura beside Gadadhara in Navadvipa.

14. Nayananda — "kinā se sukhera sarobare..." (PK 2103)

Vishvambhara's dance is a lake of joy from which the waves of prema splash over the brim: the earth cannot hold His feet, His face is a golden moon pouring nectar; His companions are royal swans, bees and chakoras; the treasure of bhakti has come without effort to all the poor and wretched — Vrindavana has become the town of Nadia. The raga is not named ("the same raga" — dhanashi).⁵⁶

14.1. What a lake of joy!

The waves of prema surge and splash over the brim.

14.2. The Lord Vishvambhara dances; drunk with prema He steps — and the earth cannot hold His feet.⁵⁷

14.3. His face is shaped like a golden moon:

how much nectar it pours — there is no holding it!

14.4. His companions are royal swans;

some have become bees, others chakora birds.⁵⁸

14.5. Ever new waves of dance — the Lakshmi of prema dances, the very town of Nadia.⁵⁹

14.6. Ever new jewels of bhakti all the poor and wretched have gained without effort.

14.7. Nayananda tells the essence of joy:

that very Vrindavana has become the town of Nadia.

56. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 231 (printed p. 220), 17th pallava, no. 45 (label " ৪৫ নম্বর "); P-R-Sa MS no. 2212. GPT1 — p. 31, no. 16 (dhanashi); GPT2 gives the pada twice (sec. 1.3, no. 16; sec. 4.2, no. 31).

57. MS "gha": "from the weight (of prema)" (bhare) instead of "steps" (dhare). GPT1: "premabhare pada dhare dharaṇī nā dhare."

58. The bees cling to the Lord's lotus feet, the chakoras (birds that drink moonlight) to the moon of His face.

59. MS "ka": "lachimā." GPT1: "prema lachimā nāce nādīyā-nāgarī" — "...the town-woman of Nadia dances." The PK reading "nādīyā-nagarī" (the town of Nadia) is adopted.

15. Nayananda — "dekha dekha gorā-naṭa raṅga..." (PK 2106)

An auspicious kirtana — a circle of the great rasa where the former, Vrindavana days come alive: Nityananda, Advaita, Srivasa, Mukunda, Murari, Ramananda and Vakreshvara dance; Gora dances with Gadadhara, the mridanga resounds. In the Lord of Navadvipa are all the incarnations: each sees his own bhava before his eyes. Raga mangala.⁶⁰

15.1. (Refrain) Look, look at the dance of Gora the dancer!

An auspicious kirtana — the circle of the great rasa, in it the former days have come alive.⁶¹

15.2. The Lord Nityananda dances, Thakura Advaitachandra, Srinivasa, Mukunda, Murari,

Ramananda, Vakreshvara and all the other companions — an ocean of prema, waves of bliss.

15.3. Thakura Pandita sings, Govinda plays in bliss, Gora dances together with Gadadhara;
"drimiki drimiki thaiyā, tā thaiyā, tā thaiyā thaiyā" —
the enchanting mridanga sounds.⁶²

15.4. All the incarnations, full of joy, the essence of joy, are in this Lord of Navadvipa of mine:
whatever bhava one has — see it all before your eyes.
May this abide in Nayananda's heart!⁶³

60. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 232 (printed p. 221), 17th pallava, no. 48 (label " ৪৮ ২২০৬ "); raga mangala; P-R-Sa MS no. 2215. GPT1 — p. 258, no. 33 (mangala); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 33. The preceding pada PK 2105 ("gorā nāce naba naba raṅgiyā") is unsigned in PK, and in MS P-R it has additional stanzas with Lochana's signature; it does not belong to Nayananda. The linking of pada NS-016 ("jhulata rasamaya gaurakiśora") to PK 2106 is mistaken.

61. The maha-rasa is Krishna's circle dance with the gopis; Gaura's kirtana is like it. "The former days" are the pastimes of Vrindavana.

62. Who is called "Thakura Pandita" is unclear (perhaps Srivasa Pandita). Govinda is probably Govinda Ghosha or a mridanga player among the companions. MS "gha": "bājāyata" (plays). The syllables imitate the mridanga.

63. Gaura is the source of all incarnations (cf. CC Adi 2: Krishna is the avatari, the source of the avatars): each devotee sees in Him the One he worships. GPT1: "...nayanāndera rahu cite."

16. Nayananda — "nācaye gaurāṅga gadādhara-mukha cāñā..." (PK 2179)

*Gauranga dances gazing at Gadadhara's face: looking at each other, both are lost, they embrace, tremble and shed tears — body, mind and speech are one in them, one life; the town women of Nadia watch from afar and grasp the secret in their hearts. Raga varadi.*⁶⁴

16.1. Gauranga dances, gazing at Gadadhara's face; within, the rasa of touch has risen and flooded His heart.

16.2. Looking into each other's faces, both are lost:
each has become for the other an ocean of rasa — and a chakora drinking nectar.⁶⁵

16.3. Chest to chest, the two have embraced, they tremble, their hair stands on end, both are flooded with tears.⁶⁶

16.4. Body, mind and speech in both are one life;
every limb of theirs is made of the nectar of love.

16.5. Gora, the king of dancers, is adorned by the Pandita; from afar all the town women are watching.⁶⁷

16.6. The town women of Nadia have grasped in their hearts the One by whose grace I obtain the jewel of prema.

16.7. Subdued by Gadadhara's love is the rasa-drunk Gaura — so says Nayananda, floating in this rasa.

64. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 260–261 (printed pp. 249–250), 4th shakha, 19th pallava "śrīgaurāṅgera rūpa — nāgarī ukti" (Gauranga's form — the words of the town women), no. 12 (label " ১২ ২১৭৯ "); raga varadi; P-R-Sa MS no. 2287. GPT1 — p. 259, no. 35 (varadi); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 35.

65. The chakora is a bird believed to drink moonlight: each of the two is both the moon and the one who drinks its nectar.

66. The embrace of Gaura and Gadadhara is an expression of prema: Gadadhara is the manifestation of Radha, and their love sings of the spiritual prema of Radha and Krishna, not of a worldly feeling. MSS "ka," "kha": "duhum"; "gha": "dohē" (16.3, 16.4).

67. Raya placed the pada in the section of the nagaris' (town women's) words; here the town women only watch from afar and grasp the secret of the love of Gaura and Gadadhara. The words about young women are the language of nagari-bhava (Gaura as the nagara, the beloved of the town's women); we translate faithfully to the author. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never glanced at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta). MSS "ka," "kha," P-R-Sa: without "all" (saba).

17. Nayananda — "o rūpa sundara gaura kiśora..." (PK 2115)

*The beauty of youthful Gaura, at which one cannot gaze enough: He is prema itself made visible, a golden mountain strewn with flowers; thirsting for the prema of her who is full of rasa, He is beyond the meditation of Shiva, Shuka and Ananta; the poet is a bee at His lotus feet. Raga suhai.*⁶⁸

- 17.1. How beautiful is the form of youthful Gaura — however much I gaze, there is no end to the longing to gaze.
- 17.2. Beautiful are His hands and feet, red are His lips;
for the new girl in love — a new love.⁶⁹
- 17.3. His eyes are restless, restlessly His tears flow; to the heart of her who is full of rasa He has tied Himself with the cord of prema.
- 17.4. Is this prema itself made visible — or King Manmatha?
A golden mountain — or a gathering of flowers?⁷⁰
- 17.5. Thirsting for her prema is Sri Gauranga Raya —
He whom Shiva, Shuka and Ananta do not reach in meditation.⁷¹
- 17.6. His whole body is ringed with layers of thrilling hair; in the embrace of her who is full of prema — wave upon wave.
- 17.7. His lotus feet are a flowering mango for the bee:
so says Nayananda — in them is his heart's delight.⁷²

68. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 236 (printed p. 225), 4th shakha, 18th pallava "śrīgaurāṅgera rūpa prabhṛti" (Gauranga's form, etc.), no. 7 (label " १ ३३६ "); raga suhai; P-R-Sa MS no. 2223. GPT1 — twice: p. 136, no. 74 and p. 278, no. 2 (suhai); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 74 and sec. 4.3, no. 2. In GPT1 (p. 136) it is preceded (no. 73) by a pada signed by Narahari, "suradhunīre gaura naṭanāgara" (wrongly ascribed to Nayananda in the catalogue — NN-006).

69. "The new girl in love" (naba-anurāgiṇī), "her who is full of rasa" (rasabatī), "her who is full of prema" (prematatī) are Radha; behind this in the pada stands also Gadadhara, Her manifestation. Gaura is Krishna who longs to taste Radha's prema and has accepted Her bhava (CC Adi 1.6; Adi 4); this is spiritual prema, not worldly passion.

70. Manmatha (Kamadeva) is the god of love; the Lord is the transcendental Madana who surpasses him (CC Madhya 8).

71. "Thirsting" (lampāṭa) — of the Lord thirsting for the prema of His devotee. MS P-R-Sa: "achu," "Ananta and others" (anantādi), "nā" instead of "nāhi."

72. Sahakara is the flowering mango tree, beloved of bees. MS P-R-Sa: "balaithe"; "kha," "ca," P-R-Sa: "lahali" (17.6); "ka": "kahala," "gha": "kahaye." GPT1: "...kayala nayanānanda citabihāra" — "Nayananda has made (them) the pleasure-ground of his heart."

18. Nayananda — "āota piriti muratimaya sāgara..." (PK 2116)

*The pastimes in Nadia: the Lord is an ocean of love in person; in Him is all the wealth of Vaikuntha and Vrindavana; blessed has become the Ganga in which He bathes; in every house and temple, under every grove and in every flowering garden are His pastimes; Vishvambhara has fulfilled the hopes of all. Raga bala-dhanashi.*⁷³

- 18.1. He comes — an ocean, love itself embodied, the wondrous Lord, the king of the twice-born; ever new devotees, new devotion, new treasures — glorious is the circle of dancers.⁷⁴
- 18.2. (Refrain) Splendid, splendid are the pastimes in Nadia!
All the wealth of Vaikuntha and Vrindavana, the essence of the joy of all joys.

18.3. Blessed, blessed, thrice blessed now has the Suradhuni become:

in bliss she flows with streams of rasa;
bathing, drinking, immersion, embrace — how many, many times she meets Him!⁷⁵

18.4. In every house, in every temple, under every grove, in every flowering garden are His pastimes.
Nayanananda says: Vishvambhara with prema has fulfilled the hopes of all.

73. Signature: "Nayanananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 236 (printed p. 225), 18th pallava, no. 8 (label " ୪ ୨୨୬ "); raga bala-dhanashi; P-R-Sa MS no. 2224. GPT1 — p. 32, no. 17 (bala-dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 17.

74. "The king of the twice-born" is both the moon and the best of brahmanas. The end of the stanza is unclear ("su- / bācata"); GPT1: "naba naba bhakata, naba rasa yābata, naba tanu ratana samāja" — "ever new devotees, all new rasa, a gathering of new precious bodies."

75. The Suradhuni is the Ganga. The river is blessed because the Lord bathes in her, drinks her water and immerses Himself in her: her "embrace" and "meeting" with Him are an image of the Ganga's happiness at touching the Lord. GPT1: "...āliṅgana saṅgama, kata kata bāra."

19. Nayanananda — "gadādhara-mukha heri kibā uṭhe mane..." (PK 2114)

*The Lord's bhava: gazing at Gadadhara's face, He remembers the joys of the groves of Vrindavana, pines like a poor man who has lost a touchstone, weeps, "Hari, Hari!", sways and falls to the ground. The poet asks: from whose love comes such turmoil? Raga pathamanjari.*⁷⁶ 19.1. Gazing at Gadadhara's face — what rises in His heart?

He remembers all those joys in the groves of Vrindavana.

19.2. Hearing of those virtues, His heart pines ceaselessly — like a poor man who has lost a touchstone.

19.3. "Hari, Hari!" says the Lord, weeping and weeping; who can tell whose bhava has arisen in His heart?

19.4. His golden form sways unsteadily;
reeling and reeling, He falls and rolls on the ground.

19.5. Nayanananda says before Gadadhara:
from whose love comes such turmoil?⁷⁷

76. Signature: "Nayanananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 235 (printed p. 224), 18th pallava, no. 6 (label " ୬ ୨୨୫ "); raga pathamanjari. GPT1 — p. 278, no. 1 (pathamanjari; section "bhavavesha and pralapa"). A pada on Radha's bhava in the Lord: Gadadhara awakens in Him the memory of Vrindavana.

77. The answer is implied: it is the love (anuraga) of Radha, whose bhava the Lord has accepted; Gadadhara is Her manifestation.

20. Balarama Dasa — "gaura manohara nāgara-śekhara..." (PK 2113)

*Gaura's form and bhava: at the sight of Him countless Kamas faint, the autumn moon weeps gazing at His face; He ceaselessly chants His own name, and on looking at Gadadhara's face He cries, "Rai, Rai!" and falls to the ground, seized by the fever of separation; weeping, He takes the fallen by the hand. Raga todi.*⁷⁸

20.1. Gaura, the enchanting crown of elegant youths:
seeing Him, countless Flower-arrowed Ones faint.⁷⁹

- 20.2. His body shines brighter than gold — gazing at His face, the autumn moon weeps.
- 20.3. His gait is slower than a drunken elephant's;
from the nectar of His lips flows a sweet smile.⁸⁰
- 20.4. Ceaselessly He chants the mantra of His own name, His body is helpless in bhava, His heart overflowing.⁸¹
- 20.5. Looking at Gadadhara's face, He is in great anguish:
"Rai, Rai!" He cries and falls to the ground.⁸²
- 20.6. The clouds of His eyes pour in torrents,
His heart is filled with the sharp, cruel fever of separation.
- 20.7. Overflowing with rasa, He does not know His own from others:
weeping, He takes by the hand the fallen and the lowest.⁸³
- 20.8. Gods and asuras have plunged into this ocean of rasa — not a drop has touched Balarama Dasa.⁸⁴

78. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 235 (printed p. 224), 18th pallava, no. 5 (label " ୫୫୫୫ "); raga toti; P-R-Sa MS no. 2221, P-R 14.76. GPT1 — p. 141 (toti; without the couplet 20.6b–20.7a); GPT2 — sec. 3.1. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row BD-042); its attribution to one of the Balarama Dasas is not established.

79. "Nāgara-śekhara," "the crown of elegant youths," is an epithet of Krishna. The Flower-arrowed One (kusuma-śara) is Kamadeva.

80. MS "gha": "ruciratarā"; "ka," "kha," "ca," P-R-Sa: "racita" (20.2). MSS "ka," "kha," "gha," "ca," P-R-Sa, GPT1: "drunken" (matta) instead of "mada"; "ka," "kha," "gha," "ca," P-R-Sa: "rasa" instead of "sudhārasa."

81. Gaura chants the names of Krishna — His own name. MSS P-R-Sa, P-R: "antara" instead of "mantara"; "ka," "ca," P-R-Sa, P-R: "bharama," "kha": "marama" instead of "antara" (at the end of the line).

82. Rai is Radha: in Krishna's mood the Lord, seeing Gadadhara, calls Radha and pines in separation from Her. The PK scan has "rāha rāi" (a misprint); GPT1: "rāi rāi."

83. MS "gha," P-R: "jarajara" instead of "garagara."

84. MS P-R: "of joy" (sukha) instead of "of rasa," "people" (narinara) instead of "gods and asuras."

21. Nayananda — "kāndaye mahāprabhu gadādhara saṅge..." (PK 2181)

*Mahaprabhu weeps together with Gadadhara at the very first mention of their former love; remembering the joys of the groves, both are filled with prema, they come to greet each other with sandal paste, garlands, tulasi and durva grass, embrace and float in rasa; the three worlds are maddened by their ecstasy. Raga varadi.*⁸⁵

- 21.1. Mahaprabhu weeps together with Gadadhara — at the very first mention of their former love.
- 21.2. Remembering all those joys in the forest groves, both were filled at heart with the bhava of prema.
- 21.3. With fragrant sandal paste, garlands, tulasi and durva
the two came together to greet each other.⁸⁶
- 21.4. Smiling, touching again and again, they embrace;
both float in rasa, finding no shore.⁸⁷
- 21.5. One cannot tell who is man, who woman, who devotee;
by the ecstasy of the two the three worlds are maddened.
- 21.6. Nayananda tells of the hidden secret:
He is like a doll of nectar, a form made of nectar.⁸⁸

85. Signature: "Nayanananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 261 (printed p. 250), 19th pallava (section of the nagaris' words), no. 14 (label " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga varadi ("tathā rāga"); P-R-Sa MS no. 2289. GPT1 — p. 282, no. 17 (section "bhavavesha and pralapa"); GPT2 — sec. 4.3, no. 17.

86. Tulasi and durva grass are articles of worship: Gaura and Gadadhara greet each other like worshippers. MS "ka": "duhum" instead of "dohām"; "kha," "gha" lack the word.

87. The embrace is an expression of the prema of Radha and Krishna revealed in Gaura and Gadadhara (cf. no. 16), not of a worldly feeling. MS "ka": "bujhinu," "ca," GPT1: "bujhilum" ("...I did not grasp the limit").

88. The couplet repeats the close of PK 2070 (no. 10.7).

22. Nayanananda — "madhu-ṛtu-yāmini suradhuni-tīra..." (PK 1495)

*A spring night on the bank of the Ganga: the moon shines, the Malaya breeze blows; Gaura, the king of dancers, dances in kirtana with His companions, with Him Narahari and Gadadhara, khol and karatalas resound, the cuckoos and bees sing. The gaura-chandrika to PK's section on the spring rasa. Raga suhai.*⁸⁹

22.1. A spring night, the bank of the Suradhuni, the moon shines, the Malaya breeze blows.⁹⁰

22.2. With His companions Gaura, the king of dancers, plays amid the incomparable kirtana.

22.3. The sounds of khol and karatalas, waves of dance, arms raised, again and again they call, "Hari, Hari!"

22.4. Narahari and Gadadhara play together with Him, they dance and sing, bending in every way.

22.5. The cuckoos and bees sing on the fifth note —
Nayanananda's Lord is at play.⁹¹

89. Signature: "Nayanananda" ("nayanānanda-pahu," "Nayanananda's Lord"). PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 432 (printed p. 419), 3rd shakha, 27th pallava, section "atha bāsantī rāsālīlā taducita-śrīgauracandra" (gaura-chandrika to the spring rasa), no. 71 (label " ॐ ॐ ॐ "), right after Vasu Ghosha's PK 1494 (chapter 9, no. 1); raga suhai; P-R-Sa MS no. 2045. Not found by OCR in GPT1; GPT (GPT1 p. 336, no. 48) has a different pada of Raya Shekhara with the same lines "sahacara saṅge gaura naṭarāja biharaye nirupama kīrtana mājha" (in the catalogue NS-018, wrongly linked there to PK 1495). The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NN-030).

90. The Suradhuni is the Ganga. The Malaya breeze is the warm southern wind of spring, said by poets to blow from the Malaya hills.

91. Panchama is the fifth note of the scale; the cuckoo sings on the panchama — a sign of spring.

23. Nayanananda — "ko kahum'ājuka ānanda-ora..." (PK 1449)

*The spring swing festival: in a flowering garden young Gaura swings, with Him Nityananda and Gadadhara, the Lord of Shantipura sings, the companions shower Gora with red powder; all the people of Nadia come running. The gaura-chandrika to PK's section on the spring swing and holi. Raga vasanta.*⁹²

23.1. Who can tell how boundless today's joy is!
In a flowering garden young Gaura swings.

23.2. With Him are Nityananda and Gadadhara, the Lord of Shantipura sings merrily.⁹³

23.3. The companions shower Gora with phagu; hearing of it, all the people of Nadia come running.⁹⁴

23.4. The sounds of khol and karatalas, "Hari, Hari!" — Nayanananda is lost in bliss.

92. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 406–407 (printed pp. 393–394), 3rd shakha, section "atha bāsantī dolā hori-bilāsa tatra śrīgauracandra" (the spring swing and holi; gaura-chandrika), no. 25 (label " ২৫ ১৪৪৯ "); raga vasanta; P-R-Sa MS no. 2002. GPT1 — p. 343, no. 70 (basanta); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 70. The Dola-yatra is the spring swing festival on the full moon of Phalguna (the day of the Lord's appearance).

93. The Lord of Shantipura is Advaita Acharya. P-R-Sa: "Gadadhara and others" (gadādhara ādi).

94. Phagu (phag) is the red powder people throw at each other at the spring festivals. MS "ka": "smear" (lepai), P-R-Sa: "phelaye"; GPT1: "phāgu lepata." GPT1 in 23.4: "nayanānanda dīna ānande bibhola" ("poor Nayananda...").

24. Nayananda — "ācāryya-mandire bhikṣā kariyā caitanya..." (PK 2234)

*Shantipura after the sannyasa: Chaitanya takes His meal in Advaita's house and dances in the sankirtana in the reddish robes of a sannyasi; Mukunda and Madhavananda sing; Advaita dances clapping His hands: "After so many days Gora is in my house!" The poet, standing behind Gadadhara, sighs: what was, what has become, what is yet to be. Raga suhai.*⁹⁵

24.1. Having accepted alms in the Acharya's house, Chaitanya has blessed the fallen, the sinful and the wretched.

24.2. His body anointed with sandal paste, His garments reddish — amid the sankirtana dances Advaita's life.⁹⁶

24.3. Mukunda and Madhavananda sing at the top of their voices, Nitai and Chaitanya dance in Advaita's house.⁹⁷

24.4. Acharya Gosani dances, clapping His hands:
"After so many days — Gora-Vanamali in my house!"⁹⁸

24.5. Nayananda says, standing behind Gadadhara:
what was, what has become, and what is yet to be!⁹⁹

95. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 280 (printed p. 269), 4th shakha, 21st pallava "śrīgaurāṅgera sannyāsa ityādi" (Gauranga's sannyasa, etc.), no. 17 (label " ১৭ ২২৩৪ "); raga suhai; P-R-Sa MS no. 2339. GPT1 — p. 381, no. 48 (suhai); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 48. In the catalogue the one pada is entered twice: NN-021 (the first line, wrongly with no. 2235) and NN-027 (the second line). PK 2235 ("dhara dhara dhara dhara re nitāi") is a pada signed "Murari," not Nayananda's. Cf. CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1.

96. Reddish (saffron) robes are a sannyasi's garments. "Advaita's life" is Chaitanya.

97. Mukunda is Mukunda Datta; Madhavananda is probably Madhava Ghosha. MS "gha": "advaitera ghare."

98. Vanamali, "wearer of the forest garland," is a name of Krishna. MSS "ka," "kha," P-R-Sa: "cira dina."

99. "Behind Gadadhara" — as his companion and disciple: the poet places himself among the witnesses. The sigh is for Nimai's former life in Navadvipa, for the sannyasa and for the coming separation.

25. Nayananda — "sakala bhakata ṭhāñi haiyā bidāya..." (PK 2236)

*The farewell in Shantipura: Gaura Raya takes leave of all the devotees, bows to His mother, receives her permission, takes leave of Advaita and with "Haribol!" sets out for Nilachala; in the Acharya's house weeping arises. Raga suhai.*¹⁰⁰

25.1. Having taken leave of all the devotees, Gaura Raya set out to see Nilachala.

25.2. Bowing at His mother's feet, receiving her permission, taking leave of Advaita Acharya,

25.3. the Lord Gauranga set out, saying, "Haribol!" — in the Acharya's house the sound of weeping arose.¹⁰¹

25.4. "Gauranga, Gauranga!" all weep,
Nayananda weeps, rolling in the dust.¹⁰²

100. Signature: "Nayanananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 281 (printed p. 270), 21st pallava, no. 19 (label " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga suhai; P-R-Sa MS no. 2341. GPT1 — p. 381, no. 49 (suhai; the first three couplets, without signature); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 49. Cf. CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1.

101. GPT1: "the sound of kirtana arose" (kīrtanera rola) instead of "weeping" (krandanera rola).

102. According to PK's apparatus, the last couplet with the signature is found only in the P-R-Sa manuscript; the attribution to Nayananda is therefore not fully secure.

26. Balarama Dasa — "anukṣaṇa aruṇa-nayana ghana ghūrata..." (BR p. 975)

*Nityananda in Gauda (Saptagrama, the house of Uddharana Datta): His reddish eyes roll ceaselessly and pour nectar, He dances sprinkling the world with prema, now weeps, now laughs, falls senseless with "Hari" on His lips, runs crying "Gaura, Gaura!" and gives the jewel of prema to the destitute and the lowest. Raga dhanashi.*¹⁰³

26.1. Ceaselessly His reddish eyes roll,
His tears stream down and spread;
as if a red cloud drifting over the ocean were pouring nectar without cease.

26.2. (Refrain) Nitai dances, the beautiful moon, sprinkling the people of the world with the nectar-rasa of prema — wondrous is the beauty of His dance!

26.3. On His feet are jewelled anklets, as He moves His whole body sways;
His body is incomparable, like the peak of Meru, and the waves of bhava sparkle.¹⁰⁴

26.4. He weeps, laughs, walks slowly, with "Hari!" on His lips He falls senseless, lost to the world;
again and again He runs crying "Gaura, Gaura!"
and in bliss roars terribly.

26.5. The low, the lame, the fallen, the dull, the sick — there is no end of the wretched, yet He makes no distinction:
the ever unattainable treasure, the jewel of prema,
He Himself offers to the world and gives away freely.

26.6. When He gave away the steadfast, rare treasure of prema, all the world's sufferings went far away;
the desires of all the poor and wretched were fulfilled, even the women became maddened.¹⁰⁵

26.7. By such a merciful glance no one was left with dark days — yet Balarama Dasa was left out:
cruel is his heart, and hard.

103. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed. (Murshidabad), pp. 974–975 ("gīte yathā — dhānaśī"); 1960 ed., vv. 3738–3744; 2006 ed., vv. 3738–3744. In Narahari Chakravarti the pada is sung in the account of Saptagrama: Nityananda comes to Uddharana Datta's house and "is ever immersed in dance and kirtana." By OCR it is not found in GPT1 (on PK see below); GPT2 — sec. 6.1, no. 15 (in the catalogue BD-028, "GPT only"). Majumdar does not discuss the pada. Cf. CB Antya 5 (Nityananda in Gauda, Saptagrama). Full PK check (chapter 16): the pada is also in PK — PK 2301 (vol. 3, 22nd pallava, PDF pp. 303–304, label " ॐ ॐ ॐ ", MS P-R-Sa no. 2405; signature "balarāma dāsa kāhe bhela bañcita dāruṇa hṛdaya-kaṭhina").

104. 1913 ed.: "padatala tāla-balita maṇi mañjarī"; 1960 ed.: "padatalatale balita muṇimañjarī" (OCR). Meru is the golden mountain.

105. 1913 ed.: "abalāu unamata bhela" — "even the women (abalā) became maddened."

Chapter 11. Balarama Dasa, Yadunandana, Kanu Dasa and Others: Praise of Gaura, His Bhavas in Navadvipa, the Sannyasa, Nityananda in Gauda

*This chapter completes the core — padas of the Lord's contemporaries known from the *Padakalpataru (PK), the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) and the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC), excluding padas in nagari-bhava. Here are the remaining padas signed by Balarama Dasa; padas of Yadunandana Chakravarti (a disciple of Gadadhara Dasa) cited by Narahari Chakravarti in the Bhakti-ratnakara; and padas of Kanu Dasa (Kanu Thakura), Raya Ananta, Murari and Krishnadasa, in the order of the lilas: praise of the Gaura-avatara and of Nitai-Chaitanya; Gaura's form and His bhavas in the kirtanas of Navadvipa, when, holding Gadadhara's hand, He speaks of Radha and Vrindavana; the lament over the sannyasa; Shachi in Shantipura; the Lord in Nilachala; Nityananda, sent to Gauda, with Shachi; Gaura's bliss after long separation. Majumdar counts among the Lord's contemporaries Balarama Dasa (on the strength of three BR padas, translated in chapter 10) and Yadunandana (on the strength of his BR padas); the signature "Balarama Dasa" in PK covers padas of several poets, so the attribution of the rest is doubtful. The text follows PK, checked against the scans, with the manuscript variants from PK's apparatus, BR, the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934) and KGC; the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Balarama Dasa — "baraṇa-āśrama kiñcana akiñcana..." (PK 2212)

Praise of the Gaura-avatara: making no distinction of varnas and ashramas, of rich and destitute, Gaura gives away the prema inaccessible to Shiva and Brahma; sinners, beasts and birds weep; kings, yogis and jnanis abandon their own — only the poet's heart seems made of stone. Raga suhai.¹

1.1. Making no distinction of varnas and ashramas, of those who have and those who have not,

He takes no account of anyone's faults;
the treasure of prema, inaccessible to Shiva and Brahma,
He distributes to the people of the world, offering it Himself.²

1.2. An ocean of mercy is the incarnation of Gaura:

I would give my life to turn misfortune away from Him!³
Who knows what His qualities are, what His sweetness is?
My soul weeps — I cannot forget.

1.3. The low, the godless, the poor, the wretched, the weak and the low-born — hearing of His qualities, the whole world weeps;

even unreasoning beasts and birds weep, tears pour from their eyes:
with what has He bound the hearts of all?⁴

1.4. The king abandons royal pleasures, the yogi meditation and yoga, the jnani weeps, abandoning the taste of knowledge.

Who, then, fashioned Balarama's heart out of stone, that this rasa has not touched it?

1. Signature: "Balarama" ("kebā balarāma-hiyā..."). PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 272–273 (printed pp. 261–262), 20th pallava, no. 29 (label " ১৯ ১১১১ "); raga suhai; P-R-Sa MS no. 2320. GPT1 — p. 38, no. 38; GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 38. The catalogue (BD-010) assigns the pada to PK 2214 — a mistake: PK 2214 is a pada of Govinda Dasa, "kundana-kanaya-kalebara-kāti", and PK 2213, which follows ours (Govinda Dasa, "patita heri kānde..."), repeats its line "baraṇa-āśrama kiñcana akiñcana". Which of the Balarama Dasas wrote the pada has not been established.

2. "Those who have and those who have not" — kiñcana akiñcana. On the prema which the Lord gives away without distinguishing the worthy and the unworthy, cf. CC Adi 7.
3. "nichani laiyā mari" is a set phrase of love: "I would die taking on myself (the beloved's misfortune)"; nichhani is a rite by which misfortune is turned away from a beloved.
4. "The weak" — khīṇa; MS "ka", P-R-Sa: khala ("the wicked"). "The low-born" — jāti ("by birth"); P-R-Sa: mati ("the weak in understanding").

2. Balarama Dasa — "dekha dekha aparūpa gaura-carita..." (PK 2286)

*Gaura's pastimes are like those of Vamana: the Lord of Gokula has appeared again, and Prataparudra, like Bali, gave Him body, mind and all his possessions, asuras such as Jagai and Madhai bowed to His feet; Advaita is Bhagiratha, who brought down the Ganga of bhakti, Nityananda is Shiva, who received it; in it all the devotees bathe, and the fallen attain the supreme abode. Raga kamoda.*⁵

2.1. (Refrain) Look, look — wondrous are Gaura's deeds!

That very Lord of Gokula has now appeared — was it not so that Vamana once appeared?⁶

2.2. Seeing His majesty, Prataparudra, like Bali, gave Him body, mind and all he possessed; Jagai, Madhai and the other asuras He brought to bow at His feet.⁷

2.3. From His feet, with Advaita as Bhagiratha, flowed the stream of the Ganga of bhakti; Nityananda is Girisha: He received it and brought it down into the Himalaya...⁸

2.4. Bathing in it, all the devotees revel in the bliss of prema; the low and the fallen attained the supreme abode — only worthless Balarama is left out.⁹

5. Signature: "Balarama" ("bañcita balarāma manda"). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 298 (printed p. 287), 21st pallava "The sannyasa of Sri Gauranga and so on", no. 69 (label " ୧୫ ୧୩୮୭ "); raga kamoda; P-R-Sa MS no. 2390. GPT1 — p. 46, no. 66; GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 66. The catalogue (BD-013) assigns the pada to PK 1245 — wrongly: PK 1245 is Krishna-lila (Govardhana, signed "Chaitanyadasa"). The pada follows Ananta Acharya's PK 2285 (chapter 3, no. 9).

6. Vamana is the Lord's incarnation as a dwarf brahmana who begged three steps of land from Bali, king of the asuras, and covered the universe with them (Bhag. 8.18–21). The comparison: Gaura, like Vamana, "begs" — and receives everything.

7. Prataparudra is the king of Orissa (CC Madhya 11–14); Bali gave himself to Vamana. Jagai and Madhai are the wicked brothers of Navadvipa delivered by the Lord (CB Madhya 13). "Brought to bow at His feet" — caraṇa prabaṇa nija kela; MS "ka": prabale, "kha", "gha", "cha": prabaṇe.

8. The Ganga flowed from Vamana's foot, Bhagiratha brought it down to earth, and Shiva (Girisha, "lord of the mountains") received it on his head (Bhag. 9.9). So too Advaita called the Lord down, and Nityananda received and spread the stream of bhakti. The end of the line is unclear: PK reads "bāma-himācala māha", MSS "cha", P-R-Sa "rāma-himācala"; P-R-Sa reads "nityānanda gīma" instead of "nityānanda giriśa, dei". MSS "ka", "kha": "path" (patha) instead of "feet" (pada); "kha", P-R-Sa: "devotee" (bhakata) instead of "bhakti".

9. "The supreme abode" — parama pada; MSS "ka", "kha" and GPT1: "the supreme mercy" (parama dayā).

3. Raya Ananta — "nitāi caitanya duṭi bhāi dayāra abadhi..." (KGC 28.2)

*Nitai and Chaitanya, two brothers, are the limit of mercy: the prema inaccessible to Shiva and Brahma and sought in vain by the four Vedas They give away unceasingly; the fallen of the age of Kali, crying "Nitai-Chaitanya", dance and sing. Raga shri.*¹⁰

- 3.1. Nitai and Chaitanya, two brothers, are the limit of mercy:
the prema inaccessible to Shiva and Brahma They give away without end.
- 3.2. The prema which the four Vedas search for, to attain it — such prema the two brothers give away unceasingly.
- 3.3. The fallen, the wretched, as many as are struck down by Kali — crying "Nitai-Chaitanya!" they dance and sing.¹¹
- 3.4. The good of the whole world has come about in the rasa of sankirtana —
Raya Ananta weeps: not a drop of it has come to him.¹²

10. Signature: "Raya Ananta" ("rāya ananta"). KGC: 28th kshanada, no. 2 (1925 ed., p. 223; scan PDF p. 257), a gaura-chandrika to Radha-Krishna lila, raga shri. GPT1 — p. 40, no. 43 (raga mangala); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 43. The pada was not previously found in PK (see below). According to B. B. Majumdar, the "Raya Ananta" of KGC is Ananta Acharya of Advaita's branch (cf. chapter 4, no. 9). Full PK check (chapter 16): the pada is also in PK — PK 2337 (vol. 3, 23rd pallava, PDF p. 317, label " ୧୩୩୩ "; signature "rāya ananta kānde nā pāiyā leśe").

11. GPT1, GPT2: "the fallen, the wretched, the sinful, struck down by Kali" (patita durgata pāpī kalihata yārā).

12. "Not a drop of it has come to him" follows GPT1 (nā pāiyā leśe, "not obtaining a particle"); KGC reads śeṣe ("at the end": "weeps, not obtaining [it] at the last").

4. Krishnadasa — "soṇaro naba gauracanda..." (PK 1085)

*Remembering the youthful Gaurachandra — the moon of Navadvipa, Krishna Himself: the moon-face, eyes full of prema, locks dressed with flowers, earrings, the Kaustubha, red garments, sandal; the king of serpents holds an umbrella over Him, Lakshmi serves His feet, the devotees sing His glory; at the end the poet places his hope in Nitai too, the giver of prema. Raga bhairavi.*¹³

- 4.1. (Refrain) I remember the youthful Gaurachandra —
the graceful Vanamali,
the moon of Navadvipa, the ocean of mercy, tenderly loving His devotees.¹⁴
- 4.2. His face is the moon, His lips are red, waves of prema stream from His eyes;
the beauty of millions of moons, of millions of suns
I offer to Him as a gift to ward off harm.
His locks, dressed with flowers,
the tilaka on His brow, His shining nose,
His teeth are pearls, His smile nectar, like lightning in a cloud.¹⁵
- 4.3. Makara earrings flash on His cheeks,
His neck is lit by the Kaustubha gem, red garments, merciful words — beauty beyond measure.
His body anointed with sandal, in garlands — millions of Kamadevas are put to shame;
bracelets on arms and wrists, jewelled anklets, the sacred thread upon Him.¹⁶
- 4.4. The king of the bearers of the earth holds an umbrella over Him, the host of devotees sings His glory;
to the two feet served by Kamala
I offer myself in sacrifice.

Says humble Krishnadasa, placing his hope in Gaura's feet:
 the saviour of the fallen, Nitaichand, is the giver of prema.¹⁷

13. Signature: "Krishnadasa" ("kahata dāna kṣṇadāsa"; GPT1 reads "dīna", "humble"; "dāna" in PK is apparently a misprint). PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 251–252 (printed pp. 238–239), 15th pallava, section "rasālasopayuktārūpaṃ" (the form befitting the languor after the rasa), "śrīgauracandraḥ" — a gaura-chandrika to Radha-Krishna lila, no. 23 (label " ১৩ ১০৮৫ "); raga bhairavi; P-R-Sa MS no. 1494. GPT1 — p. 136, no. 75 (bhairava, ektala). In the catalogue (KR-006) the pada stood without a first line, marked as probably Krishna-lila: it is a gaura-pada. Which Krishnadasa wrote it has not been established (C).

14. "The graceful Vanamali" — nāgara banayāri: nagara is a graceful youth skilled in love; Banvari (Vanamali, "wearing the forest garland") is a name of Krishna. Gaura is Krishna Himself (CC Adi 1–4). MSS "ka", "kha", "gha", "cha": "Gaurasundara" instead of "Gaurachandra"; GPT1: "Remember the youthful Gaurasundara..." (soṇara).

15. "I offer to Him as a gift to ward off harm" — nichayāri (from nichhani: everything beautiful is offered up to turn misfortune away from the beloved). MSS "ka", "kha": "the beauty of His face" (mukhaśobhā). "Like lightning in a cloud" — dāmini ghanayāri; the sense of the second word is not wholly clear.

16. The Kaustubha is the gem on the breast of Vishnu-Krishna. MSS "ka", "kha", "gha", "cha" and GPT1: "sandal" (candana) instead of "armlets" (aṅgada); MS "kha": tarala instead of ratana.

17. "The king of the bearers of the earth" is Ananta-Shesha, the serpent who bears the universes; he serves the Lord as His umbrella. Kamala is Lakshmi. Instead of the first line GPT1 reads "the devotees run and sing..." (dhārata gāota bhakatabṛnda) and adds: "majestically He walks, slowly, slowly". MSS "ka", "kha", "gha", "cha": baliyā instead of baliye.

5. Balarama Dasa — "kothāya āchila gorā emana sundara..." (PK 2110)

*Gaura's form: where was such a beauty until now? He has charmed the whole town of Nadia: His hair dressed with flowers, bees hovering above it, pearls on His breast, sandal and kunkuma, the forest garland, a gliding gait, the ringing of anklets. Raga shri.*¹⁸

5.1. Where was such a beauty — Gora — until now?

With this form He has charmed the town of Nadia.

5.2. His glossy hair is dressed with flowers of every kind — rangana, malati, yuthi, bandhuli, bakula.¹⁹

5.3. Thirsting for honey, how many bees hover over them! Gazing at this form, life will not stay in the body.

5.4. A necklace of gems and pearls glitters on His breast, on every limb ornaments flash like lightning.

5.5. His body is anointed with kunkuma mixed with sandal, His arms reach to His knees, the forest garland is on His neck.

5.6. A gliding gait, swaying now to one side, now to the other — as if nectar welled up when His neck sways.

5.7. As He walks, the anklets on His feet ring sweetly — Balarama Dasa says: I give myself for Him.²⁰

18. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 233–234 (printed pp. 222–223), 18th pallava, section "atha śrīgauracandrasya rūpādibaraṇaṃ" (description of Sri Gaurachandra's form), no. 2 (label " ২ ১১১০ "); raga shri; P-R-Sa MS no. 2218. GPT1 — p. 110, no. 2; GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 2. The catalogue (BD-014) listed it as "GPT only": the PK number was found on the scan. The preceding PK 2109 ("gaura-baraṇa maṇi-ābharaṇa nātuyā-mohana beśa", with the same signature; BD-017) is in nagari-bhava (deferred).

19. Rangana (ixora), malati and yuthi (kinds of jasmine), bandhuli (pentapetes, a red flower), bakula (mimusops). GPT1: pārulī (the patali flower) instead of bāndhulī.

20. "I give myself for Him" — nichani yāna tāya (see note 3).

6. Balarama Dasa — "kusume khacita ratane racita..." (PK 2164)

*The form of Gaura the dancer: His hair dressed with flowers and gems, bees above it; a sandal tilaka, locks, earrings; at His glances the women of Nadia lose their peace; lips, smile, speech are nectar; jasmine garlands, gold and diamonds, red garments; the gait of an elephant, feet that outshine the lotus, nails that outshine the moon. Raga tori.*²¹

6.1. Dressed with flowers, studded with gems —

His glossy tresses;
drunk with honey, greedy for fragrance, swarms of bees whirl above them.

6.2. On the tablet of His brow is a tilaka of sandal, curling locks adorn it;

skilled in the tandava dance, adorned with earrings —
His rounded cheeks shine.

6.3. Seeing this form, the chaste wives of noble families abandoned their shame before their kin:

dharma, duties, modesty, honour —
as though struck by thunder.²²

6.4. By the hints of sidelong glances, by the play of the brows, all around is tinged with Ananga;

the longing of Kama has made its abode in the hearts of the young women of the world.

6.5. His lips are bandhuka flowers, sweeter than honey-wine is His half-smile;

His speech, unhurried, pitcher after pitcher pours out streams of nectar.

6.6. Garlands of jasmine here and there,

rows of lovely flowers;
greedy bees, male and female,
fly down to them, intoxicated.

6.7. Gold, diamonds, motionless lightning adorn His enchanting body;

garments that outshine the red rays of dawn captivate the young women with their colour.

6.8. His bearing and poise astonish Kama —

Gora, like pure gold;
His gait is slow, like a maddened elephant's — gazing at Him, the world forgets itself.

6.9. His lotus feet put the wagtails to shame, softly His anklets ring;

His nails outshine the moon —
so Balarama Dasa describes Him.²³

21. Signature: "Balarama Dasa" ("bani balarāma dāsa"). PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 254–255 (printed pp. 243–244), 18th pallava, no. 56 (label " ୫୬ ୨୫୭୪ "; the preceding pada of Ramananda, PK 2163, is by a misprint also labelled "୨୫୭୪"); raga tori; P-R-Sa MS no. 2271. GPT1 — p. 125, no. 42, and p. 140, no. 86 (the same pada twice); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, nos. 42 and 86. The catalogue (BD-016) gives PK 2165 (a mistake: PK 2165 is Narottama Dasa, "kāñcana darapaṇa baraṇa sugorā re").

22. The words about the women of Nadia who, seeing Gaura, lose their shame and peace are an image of the poetics of describing beauty and the language of nagari-bhava (Gaura as the nagara, the beloved of the town's women); we translate faithfully to the author. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never glanced at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "Gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta). MSS "ka", "kha": "with thrills" (pulake) instead of "with earrings" (kuṇḍale); "gha", "cha", P-R-Sa: bhaṅgita instead of bhaṅgite. The last word of 6.4 is unclear on the scan (sardana?); we read it with GPT1 as sadana ("abode"); MS "gha": sohana instead of hoyala.

23. The wagtail (khañjana) is an image of nimble, graceful feet. "Describes" — bani (from barṇana?); MSS "ka", P-R-Sa: bali ("says"). MSS "gha", "cha": lulupa instead of lolupa (6.6); P-R-Sa: kundala instead of kundana (6.8). GPT1 (6.1): kṣubdha ("agitated") instead of khubadha.

7. Balarama Dasa — "sahajai kāñcana-kānti kalebara..." (PK 2145)

*Gaura dancing, overwhelmed by Radha's prema: a body the colour of gold, before which millions of Madanas swoon; He lingers, falls to the ground, trembles, roars, sheds tears and, embracing the fallen, bathes them in His tears. Raga beloar.*²⁴

7.1. His body by nature is the colour of gold:

gazing at Him, the people of the world lose their hearts;
before Him how many millions of Madanas swoon!
His garment outshines the red rays of dawn.

7.2. Overwhelmed by Rai's prema, He walks slowly, slowly,

His heart brimming over — He falls to the ground;
sweat, trembling, again and again wave upon wave of thrills, again and again He roars: "Hum! Hum!"²⁵

7.3. His body sways, He cannot stand firm, from both cloud-like eyes the rain pours unceasingly;

drunk with that rasa, He finds no end to it, clasping the fallen to His breast, He bathes them in tears.

7.4. Crying "Hari, Hari," how much He weeps and laments! — only Balarama is left out, day and night.²⁶

24. Signature: "Balarama" ("bañcita balarāma"). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 247 (printed p. 236), 18th pallava, no. 37 (label " ୨୨ ୨୨୪୫ "); raga beloar; P-R-Sa MS no. 2252. The pada follows Vasu Ghosha's PK 2143 and 2144 (chapter 8). GPT1 — p. 116, no. 16 (beloar); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 16. The catalogue (BD-015) gives PK 788: a mistake (PK 788 is a pada of Govinda Dasa, "tapata-kāñcana-kānti kalebara").

25. "Rai's prema" — rāi-prema: the Lord appeared in Radha's bhava and complexion to taste Her love for Krishna (CC Adi 4). MSS "kha", "gha": "immersed" (magana) instead of "walks" (gamana); "ka", "kha": kara instead of karata.

26. Instead of the last couplet GPT1 reads: "Crying 'Hari, Hari,' He weeps and laments, mad with bliss day and night; hearing the sound 'Hari, Hari,' the world was saved — only lowly Balarama Dasa is left out."

8. Balarama Dasa — "bihare āju rasika-rāja..." (PK 2111)

*Gaurachandra, the king of rasikas, sports in Nadia: beauty outshining millions of Kamadevas, a moon-face, smile and speech of nectar; remembering the groves of Vraja He loses Himself, stumbles, falls into the arms of the fallen, repeats "Rai, Rai!" — all drink the nectar of prema except the poet. Raga turi.*²⁷

8.1. Today the king of rasikas,

Gaurachandra, sports in Nadia:
shining like a cluster of nagakeshara flowers,

with the lovely lustre of gold.
 The abode of the beauty of millions of Kamadevas, loveliness that enchants the world — seeing Him, the young women of the world in turmoil abandon composure and dharma.²⁸

8.2. A face whose charm outshines the rays of the boundless full autumn moon;
 a row of lovely teeth puts the kunda flowers to shame;
 on His bimba lips a sweet smile pouring out so many streams of nectar;
 His words, likewise, flow in torrents of sweet drink.²⁹

8.3. The sweet groves of the forests of Vraja, the sweet heaps of love and longing — remembering, remembering them, He loses Himself more and more, rapt day and night.
 Overcome by bhava, languid, bewildered,
 He walks, walks — and slowly stumbles;
 enraptured, He falls into the arms of the fallen, intoxicated with deep bliss.³⁰

8.4. With reddened eyes He gazes, full of compassion, unceasingly He repeats: "Rai, Rai!";
 He dances, mad with prema, rolls on the ground, wanders —
 His breast bursting with what is in His heart.
 The high, the middling, the low beings —
 all drink the nectar of prema; Balarama alone is left out, having offended the sadhus.³¹

27. Signature: "Balarama" ("tahiṁ balarāma bañcita ekale"). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 234 (printed p. 223), 18th pallava, no. 3 (label " ॐ ॐॐॐ "); raga turi (todi); P-R-Sa MS nos. 1430 and 2219. GPT1 — p. 110, no. 3 (turi). The pada is not in the catalogue (in chapter 10 it was noted from Ray's footnote to PK 2066 as "outside the catalogue"); new row BD-043.

28. Nagakeshara (keśara) is a flower with golden stamens; "cluster" — puñja (the word kuñja at the start of the line is unclear). The words about young women are the language of nagari-bhava; we translate faithfully to the author (see note 22). MS "gha": murati instead of yubati.

29. Bimba is a red fruit; kunda is white jasmine. MS "ka": "a face outshining Madana" (madana badana); P-R-Sa: "badana madana"; instead of chanda ("charm") MS "ka": basana, "kha": sadana, "gha", P-R-Sa: badana. MS "ka": nikare; P-R-Sa: racana (instead of bacana?).

30. The idea: Gaura in Krishna's bhava remembers the pastimes in Vraja (cf. CC Madhya 2). P-R-Sa: "the love of the young (gopis)" (yubati piriti) instead of "love and longing" (piriti-ārati). MSS "ka", "kha", "cha", P-R-Sa: "in ecstasy" (ābeśe) instead of "by bhava"; P-R-Sa: "dances" (naṭata) instead of the second "walks".

31. "Rai" is Radha. Cf. chapter 10, no. 20 (PK 2113: "Rai, Rai!" at the sight of Gadadhara). "Having offended the sadhus" — sādhu thāme aparādhiyā: the poet sees the cause of his being left out in an offence against the devotees. P-R-Sa: "red" (aruṇa) instead of "full of compassion" (karuṇa).

9. Balarama Dasa — "ābeśe abaśa aṅga dhīre dhīre cale..." (PK 2081)

*The Lord dances in kirtana: hearing the story of His former pastimes of love, He falls senseless, weeps at the sight of the fallen, rolls on the ground crying "Hari!"; because of His bhava householders abandon the happiness of home — only the poet remains indifferent to this rasa. Raga shri.*³²

- 9.1. Overcome by ecstasy, He walks slowly, slowly, brimming with bhava, He does not open His eyes.
- 9.2. (Refrain) The Lord dances, the connoisseur of rasa, by whose qualities wood and stone melt.
- 9.3. All the tales of former deeds, of love — hearing them, the Lord rolls senseless on the ground.³³
- 9.4. Seeing the fallen, He weeps, He cannot calm Himself, in hundreds of streams the tears pour from His eyes.
- 9.5. Covered with thrills, raising both arms, crying "Hari, Hari," swaying, He falls.
- 9.6. The hearts of chaste wives pine, their eyes pine, pining, the beasts and birds of the forests weep.³⁴
- 9.7. Because of His bhava householders abandon the happiness of home —
Balarama Dasa alone is indifferent to it all.³⁵

32. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 223 (printed p. 212), 17th pallava, no. 23 (label " ରାଗ ଶ୍ରୀ "); raga shri; P-R-Sa MS no. 1181 (?) and 2190, P-R 4.1. KGC — 3rd kshanada, no. 1 (p. 16; raga varari), a gaura-chandrika. GPT1 — p. 289, no. 41; GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 16, and 4.3, no. 41. According to B. B. Majumdar, signatures of this type ("everyone — but I am indifferent") belong to the later Balarama Dasa; attribution C.

33. "Former deeds" — puruba-carita: Krishna's pastimes in Vraja sung by the devotees; hearing them, the Lord is plunged into bhava (cf. CB Madhya 8). MS P-R: "attentive" (abahita) instead of "senseless". In KGC the refrain stands after 9.4.

34. The words about "chaste wives" are an image of how every living being pines for Gaura (see note 22). MS P-R: "young wives" (kulabadhū), "in the heart" (mane); MS "gha": "understanding, understanding, they weep in their hearts" (bujhiyā bujhiyā mane kānde) instead of "pining, they weep".

35. MSS P-R-Sa, P-R: "Balarama Dasa is indifferent to such rasa" (hena rase balarāma dāsa bimukha); KGC: "Balarama Dasa alone among all is indifferent to this rasa" (balarāma dāsa sabe e rase bimukha).

10. Balarama Dasa — "bhābabhare gara gara cita..." (BR pp. 921–922)

*The Lord in the kirtana of Navadvipa: brimming with bhava, He now rises, now sits, weeps over His former love — why is the Lord of Goloka in the midst of sankirtana? — makes no distinction of His own and others, holding Gadadhara's hand cries out what is in His heart, and falls into the arms of the devotees. Raga suhai.*³⁶

- 10.1. His heart brims with bhava:
now He rises, now He sits — He cannot come to His senses.
- 10.2. From the excess of rasa He cannot stand firm, remembering, remembering, He weeps over His former love.³⁷
- 10.3. (Refrain) The Lord dances — Gora, the king of dancers:
why is the Lord of Goloka in the midst of sankirtana?³⁸
- 10.4. He does not know who is His own and who is another, the poor, the wretched, the low and the high He does not distinguish.³⁹
- 10.5. Holding the hand of His dear Gadadhara,
He tells what is in His heart, crying out again and again.

10.6. Swaying in waves of bliss,
He sinks, reeling, into the arms of the devotees.⁴⁰

10.7. Through Gora's rasa everything is full of rasa — only Balarama's stony heart does not melt.⁴¹

36. Signature: "Bala(rama)" ("nā darabe bala-pāṣāṇa hṛdaya"). BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed., pp. 921–922 ("punaḥ suhai"), 1960 ed., vv. 3022–3028 — in Narahari Chakravarti's account to Srinivasa of the places of Navadvipa ("here Gaurachandra danced in sankirtana"); in BR the pada stands before padas of Balarama (PK 2067; chapter 10, no. 7) and Murari (PK 2121; chapter 1, no. 6). KGC — 17th kshanada, no. 1 (p. 125; raga deshaga), a gaura-chandrika. GPT1 — p. 271, no. 77 (dhanashi). Not previously found in PK (see below). In the catalogue — BD-041. Full PK check (chapter 16): the pada is also in PK — PK 635 (vol. 2, 3rd shakha, gaura-chandrika to "svayaṃ dautya," PDF p. 30, label " ॐ ॐ ॐ ", raga dhanashi, MS P-R-Sa no. 1112; repeated as PK 909); signature "nā darabe balarāma pāṣāṇa-hṛdaya."

37. "Former love" — the love of Krishna and Radha in Vraja; the Lord in His bhava remembers it.

38. Goloka is Krishna's supreme abode. The footnote in BR, and KGC: "the Lord of Gokula" (gokula-pati).

39. The couplet is only in BR (KGC and GPT1 lack it). In the 1913 ed. the middle of the line is effaced on the scan; we read it from the 1960 ed.: "dīnahīna adhama uttama nāhi māne".

40. KGC: "into the arms of the Pandita" (paṇḍitera kole), i.e. of Gadadhara Pandita; GPT1: "into the arms of the fallen" (patitera kola).

41. "Balarama" — BR: "Vala-" (bala-pāṣāṇa hṛdaya, "Vala's stony heart"); KGC: "Balarama" (balarāma pāṣāṇa-hṛdaya); GPT1: "Balarama's hard heart" (balarāma kaṭhina hṛdaya).

11. Kanu Dasa — "nija-nāmāmṛte matta anukṣaṇa..." (PK 2117)

*Gauranga's wondrous pastimes: intoxicated with the nectar of His own name, He makes everyone drink it, the lowly above all; now He says, "I am the Lord," now, "I am the servant"; now He strides like a maddened lion, now stands stunned in bhava, slaps His arms, roars with laughter, weeps, and sees before Him Shyamasundara, bent in three places. Raga vibhasa.*⁴²

11.1. Ever intoxicated with the nectar of His own name,
He makes all drink the Name, the lowly above all.

11.2. His eyes reddened, He speaks haltingly, weeps aloud and embraces whomever He meets.

11.3. (Refrain) Wondrous are Gauranga's pastimes:
now He says, "I am the Lord," now He says, "I am the servant."⁴³

11.4. Now He strides like a maddened lion, now stands stunned in bhava, now embraces the earth, as though He had found an embrace.⁴⁴

11.5. Now He slaps His arms like a wrestler and roars with laughter, now He weeps, now He speaks in a faltering voice.

11.6. Now He sees Shyamasundara, bent in three places —
Kanu Dasa says: who can understand this play?⁴⁵

42. Signature: "Kanu Dasa" ("kānudāsa kahe"). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 236 (printed p. 225), 18th pallava, no. 9 (label " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga vibhasa; P-R-Sa MS no. 2225. GPT1 — p. 278, no. 4 (vibhasa). The preceding PK 2116 is Nayananda's (chapter 10, no. 18). In the catalogue — KD-010. Kanu Dasa is Kanu Thakura, son of Purushottama Dasa and grandson of Sadashiva Kaviraja, of Nityananda's branch (Majumdar).

43. The Lord showed now the bhava of His own divinity, now the bhava of a devotee (cf. CB Madhya 9: the mahaprakasha in Srivasa's house; the Lord, coming to Himself, calls Himself the servant of the devotees). MS "ka": "the Lord is intoxicated" (pahu matta) instead of "intoxicated" (11.1); "gha", "cha": "speaks" (bola) instead of the second "ādha".

44. The sense of the second line is not wholly clear: "kheṇa dharu dharaṇī pāyā aṅga-saṅga" — apparently in His bhava the Lord embraces the earth as though embracing the Beloved.

45. Slapping one's arms (mālasāṭa) is a wrestler's gesture. Shyamasundara bent in three places (tribhanga) is Krishna with the flute: in Radha's bhava the Lord sees Krishna before Him. MSS "ka", "kha": "seeing" (dekhi); P-R-Sa: "who would not understand" (ke nā).

12. Yadunandana — "dekha dekha gorācānde..." (BR p. 909)

*Gaura, dancing, speaks of His former love: in the bhava of youth He tells of the banks of the Yamuna and the wanderings in the forests, Himself tells of Radha, holding Gadadhara's hand, weeps, laughs, rushes like a maddened elephant, and begs for the treasure of prema: He is the enchanter of Gokula. Raga bhupali.*⁴⁶

12.1. (Refrain) Look, look at Gorachand:

His colour outshines gold, His dancing enchants Madana.

12.2. He speaks of His former love:

in the bhava of youth
His body is filled with thrills.

12.3. Who knows the pain of His heart?

The banks of the Yamuna, the wanderings through the forests — of all this He speaks.

12.4. His lotus eyes are full of tears,

He Himself tells of Radha — not for a moment can He be still.⁴⁷

12.5. Holding Gadadhara's hand,

He speaks words steeped in weeping and cries: "Hari, Hari, Hari!"

12.6. His body is spent with bhava;

He rushes forward with the gait of a maddened elephant, as though trampling the forest.

12.7. Now He laughs, now weeps, now dances;

His lips tremble, He stands still, startled, now He begs for the treasure of prema.

12.8. Yadunandana says:

do you not know? The enchanter of Gokula is Gauranga, who captivates the world.⁴⁸

46. Signature: "Yadunandana" ("e yadunandana kahe"). BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed., p. 909 ("kācicca bhūpālīḥ"), 1960 ed., vv. 2862–2869. GPT1 — p. 294, no. 5 (bhupali). Not found in PK. In BR the pada belongs to a series of padas by Yadunandana Chakravarti, a disciple of Gadadhara Dasa (BR pp. 904–910), which Narahari Chakravarti puts into the mouths of the women of Nadia, "full of anuraga", talking about Gaura as He goes to the Ganga; most of these padas are in nagari-bhava (deferred), but this one is about the Lord's bhava in kirtana.

47. The Lord in Krishna's bhava remembers the pastimes in Vraja and Radha (cf. chapter 10, no. 9).

48. "You" is the friend whom the poet addresses (the frame of BR). Gokulamohana ("the enchanter of Gokula") is Krishna: Gaura is Krishna Himself. GPT1: "as though crushing hosts of monkeys" (bānara dalana janu, per OCR) instead of "as though trampling the forest" (12.6).

13. Yadunandana — "chala chala cāru nayana yugala..." (BR pp. 922–923 = PK 2246)

*Gaura, the ocean of mercy: His eyes pour rivers of tears, He roars in a thunderous voice, embraces the fallen, sings songs of the rasa, calls "Radha, Radha!" and embraces Gadadhara, asks for the flute and the peacock feather, gazing into Svarupa's face. Raga kamoda.*⁴⁹

- 13.1. His lovely eyes are brimming with tears —
 how many rivers flow in streams!
 Gora's body is filled with thrills —
 the earth cannot hold Him.
- 13.2. (Refrain) The Lord — Gora, the ocean of mercy:
 in the fullness of bhava
 His body sways; as He walks, the world forgets itself.
- 13.3. Again and again how much mercy He shows, roaring in a thunderous voice;
 seeing the lowly, His heart full of turmoil,
 He clasps and clasps them and weeps.⁵⁰
- 13.4. His lotus feet are most restless, unsteady is their gait;
 from His lotus mouth, in a faltering voice,
 He sings songs of the rasa.⁵¹
- 13.5. Crying "Aha! Aha!", raising both arms,
 He says: "Sing 'Hari, Hari!'; loudly calling "Radha, Radha!",
 He embraces Gadadhara.
- 13.6. Again and again saying, "The flute! The flute!" —
 He gazes into Svarupa's face; saying, "The peacock feather!" — He chokes with sobs:
 can Yadu understand this?⁵²

49. Signature: "Yadu" ("yadu ki bujhite pāre"). BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed., pp. 922–923 ("punaḥ kāmodaḥ"), right after Murari's PK 2121. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 285 (printed p. 274), 21st pallava, no. 29 (label " ୧୫ ୧୫୪୭ ", the second digit damaged on the scan), raga shri, P-R-Sa MS no. 2351 — without the first stanza and without a signature (last line: "who can tell it?"). GPT1 — p. 285, no. 27 (kamoda; signed Yadu) and p. 46, no. 65 (the PK recension, unsigned). KGC (26th kshanada, no. 1, pp. 207–208, raga varari) joins the first stanza of Prasada Dasa's pada "keśera beṣe bhulila deṣe" (PK 2085) to 13.1–13.5 of our pada — without 13.6 and without a signature. A variant signed "Govinda-dasiya" — GPT1 p. 10, no. 23. The pada was not in the catalogue; RM-005 ("keśera beṣe...", supposedly Ramananda's) is a pada of Prasada Dasa.

50. PK: "losing His head" (ākula haiyā) instead of "His heart full of turmoil" (ākula hṛdaya).

51. "Songs of the rasa" follows BR (rāsakeli-gīta, songs of the rasa dance); PK and GPT1 (no. 65): "songs full of rasa" (rasamaya gīta). Instead of "unsteady is their gait" (athira tāhāra rīta) PK reads "like red lotuses" (rātā-utapala-rīta).

52. In Krishna's bhava the Lord seeks His flute and peacock feather. Svarupa is Svarupa Damodara, the Lord's closest companion in Puri (before his sannyasa, Purushottama Acharya, who knew the Lord already in Navadvipa, CC Madhya 10); PK places the pada among the pastimes after the sannyasa, BR among the places of Navadvipa. PK: "who knows what bhava rises in Him, who can tell it?" (ki bhāba uṭhaye ke tāhā kahite pāre).

14. Yadunandana — "kīrtana-lampaṭa ghana ghana nāṭa..." (BR pp. 923–924)

*Gaura, greedy for kirtana, dances untiringly; seeing nothing for His tears, He walks leaning on the hand of Gadadhara Dasa, cannot tell water from land, repeats the name of Hari, sings, and, seeing the fallen, clasps them to His breast; Brahma and Shiva bow at His feet. Raga abhiri.*⁵³

- 14.1. Greedy for kirtana, He dances again and again,
 He walks — and for His tears cannot see the way.
- 14.2. (Refrain) Beautiful youthful Gaura is rapt in the rasa of former love.

- 14.3. He cannot utter even half a word,
He walks holding the hand of Gadadhara Dasa.⁵⁴
- 14.4. His red soles find no footing:
is it water, is it land, a forest or a house?
- 14.5. He repeats the name "Hari, Hari", sings abhiri — what gestures His lovely hands display!⁵⁵
- 14.6. Why He does what He does — who can fathom it?
Seeing the fallen and wretched, He clasps them to His breast.
- 14.7. Aja, Bhava and the other gods bow at His feet —
Yadu says: without mercy who can fathom His mind?⁵⁶

53. Signature: "Yadu" ("yadu kahe"). BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed., pp. 923–924 ("gīte yathā — ābhīrī"), 1960 ed., vv. 3047–3053; in Narahari Chakravarti's account: "along this path Gorachand slowly walked... in kirtana He danced in many ways". GPT1 — pp. 285–286, no. 28 (abhiri). Not found in PK. The pada was not in the catalogue.

54. Gadadhara Dasa is a companion of the Lord (CC Adi 10), the guru of Yadunandana Chakravarti.

55. Abhiri is a raga (the pada itself is marked with it); "sings abhiri" — ālāpe ābhīrī (sings the alap in raga abhiri).

56. Aja is Brahma, Bhava is Shiva. "Mind" follows the 1960 ed. and GPT1 (matī); the 1913 ed. has "māta". 1913 ed.: "dhāri kare kora" (14.6).

15. Yadunandana — "dāsa-gadādhara-prāṇa gorā..." (BR p. 924)

*Gora, the life of Gadadhara Dasa, is rapt in the memory of His former pastimes: His body is lightning, tears stream from His eyes, His face is a golden lotus, He trembles, leaps with the cry "Hari!", rolls on the ground like a golden mountain; the world drowns in prema — only the poet is left out. Raga dhanashi.*⁵⁷

- 15.1. Gora — the life of Gadadhara Dasa — is rapt in His former pastimes.
- 15.2. His body, the colour of lightning, steals hearts, from His lotus eyes tears flow.
- 15.3. The radiance of His face is a golden lotus, when He smiles, gems and pearls tumble out.
- 15.4. With abundant thrills He trembles, crying "Hari, Hari", He leaps.
- 15.5. Day and night He notices nothing in His rasa, again and again His hair and garments come loose.⁵⁸
- 15.6. Again and again He rolls on the ground — a golden mountain rolling on the earth.
- 15.7. The world floats in the rasa of prema — only Yadu, worthless, has missed it by his own fault.⁵⁹

57. Signature: "Yadu" ("yadu eṛāila dīna doṣe"). BR, 12th wave: 1913 ed., p. 924 ("punardhānaśī"), 1960 ed., vv. 3054–3060 — before Narahari Sarakara's pada "gaurāṅga ṭhekilā pāke" (chapter 3, no. 1). Not found in PK or GPT1. According to Majumdar it is one of Yadunandana's padas cited in BR as testimony (BR p. 924; in the catalogue YN-007).

58. "Hair and garments" — cikura cira (chikura, hair; chira, cloth).

59. "Has missed" — eṛāila; "worthless, by his own fault" — dīna doṣe (1913 and 1960 eds.).

16. Balarama Dasa — "naṭabara rasika ramaṇi-manomohana..." (PK 2249)

*A lament over the sannyasa: Krishna, the best of dancers, who enchanted the hearts of the gopis, covering His dark form with a golden one, has appeared to the world — and this Beloved of Radha, who wore garments marked with kunkuma from Her breast, now lives under a tree as a sannyasi: what siddhi does He seek? Raga sindhura.*⁶⁰

16.1. The best of dancers, the knower of rasa, the enchanter of young hearts, in hundreds of attires and pastimes — over His dark form clad in a golden body,
He has appeared to the whole world.⁶¹

16.2. (Refrain) Look, look — wondrous is the Lord's play:
He who was steeped in the rasa of play with His playful Beloved — such a One has taken sannyasa!⁶²

16.3. He who gladly wore garments marked with kunkuma from His Beloved's breast, who in the depth of His heart, in the frenzy of prema, longed to touch with His lips Her moon-like face —

16.4. who in Her close embrace thrilled all over with rapture, who, defeated in the contest of love,
grieved in His heart —⁶³

16.5. now, abandoning His emerald hue and jewelled ornaments, lives beneath a tree.
The first of fickle lovers — what siddhi does He seek?
Balarama Dasa does not understand.⁶⁴

60. Signature: "Balarama Dasa" ("nā bujhai balarāma dāsa"). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 286 (printed p. 275), 21st pallava "The sannyasa of Sri Gauranga and so on", no. 32 (label " ୩୨ ୨୨୪୯ "); raga sindhura; P-R-Sa MS no. 2354. GPT1 — p. 19, no. 52; GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 52. In the catalogue — BD-006 (number corrected in chapter 7). The next pada, PK 2250 ("gopīgaṇa-kuca-kuṅkume bañcita..."), is signed "Natavara" (in the P-R-Sa MS "Balarama"); not included in this chapter.

61. "Over His dark form a golden body": Krishna appeared covered by Radha's golden radiance (CC Adi 4; "Krishna within, Gaura without"). MSS "ka", "kha", "cha": bibaraṇa instead of baraṇa; Ray thinks the original reading was "śyāmari baraṇa" and in his note compares the line with PK 2259 ("antarete śyāma-tanu bāhire gaurāṅga").

62. The pada speaks of Krishna's transcendental pastimes with Radha: Their love is pure prema, having nothing in common with mundane passion (Bhaktisiddhanta: aprakṛita-shringara). The poet contrasts Krishna, the Beloved of Vraja, with Krishna become the sannyasi Gaura.

63. "Defeated in the contest of love": Krishna is defeated by Radha's love; to taste it He appeared as Gaura (CC Adi 4). MSS "ka", "kha", "cha", P-R-Sa: "in union" (saṅgama); MS "ka": "with great joy" (atiśaya sādhe), P-R-Sa: "ati apasādhe"; so too GPT1: "pulakita atiśaya sādhe"; MS "gha": manabhava instead of manasija.

64. "Emerald hue" — Krishna's dark form. "The first of fickle lovers" — lampāṭa-gurubara (literally "the foremost teacher of rakes"): a tender reproach in the spirit of the gopis, who call Krishna a deceiver (Bhag. 10.31, 10.47); we translate faithfully to the author.

17. Balarama Dasa — "hari hari e baṛa bismaya lāge mane..." (PK 2251)

*A lament over the sannyasa: He whose body was darker than a new cloud has become Gauranga; the head that wore a crown with a peacock feather is shaven; the eyes that charmed Radha are full of tears; He who sported with the gopas and gopis now does not hear even the name of a woman; the hands that held the flute hold a staff; instead of yellow silk — saffron garments. Raga shri.*⁶⁵

17.1. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! Great wonder fills my heart:
He whose body once outshone a new cloud —
why has He now become Gauranga?

17.2. He whose crown was lovely, with a peacock feather, wreathed in gunja — that head I see without hair.
He whose crooked glance captivated Radhika's heart —
His eyes are now full of tears of prema.

17.3. He who always sported with the gopas and gopis, delighting in rasa — now does not hear even the name of a woman.
He who, holding the flute in both hands, drew the women of Vraja —
why does He take a staff in those hands?⁶⁶

17.4. He whose hips were adorned with yellow silk — why does He wear saffron garments?
Finding no bottom to this bhava, Balarama Dasa, bewildered, ponders a sorrowful thought in his heart.⁶⁷

65. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 287 (printed p. 276), 21st pallava, no. 34 (label " ୭୪ ୨୨୫୨ "); raga shri; P-R-Sa MS no. 2356. GPT1 — p. 19, no. 51; GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 51. The catalogue (BD-005) listed it as "GPT only": the PK number was found on the scan.

66. Gunja are red-and-black berries from which the cowherds of Vraja make necklaces. GPT1: "He who was always with the gopis, speaking with them in many playful ways..." (sadā gopī saṅge rahe, nānā raṅge kathā kahe). A sannyasi does not listen to talk of women — thus the Lord strictly kept the rules of sannyasa (CC Antya 2).

67. MS P-R-Sa: "grievous" (biṣama) instead of "wonder" (bismaya) in 17.1.

18. Balarama Dasa — "rūpa koṭi kāma jini..." (PK 2252)

*A lament over the sannyasa: He whose beauty outshines millions of Kamadevas, who sports in Goloka, the son of the king of Vraja, the treasure of the gopis' lives — why does He roll on the ground and weep in the midst of sankirtana? He who sported with Radha, Chandravali and hundreds of young cowherd girls is now a sannyasi with a staff; abandoning His graceful attire, He goes from land to land seeking out the fallen. Raga sindhura.*⁶⁸

18.1. He whose beauty outshines millions of Kamadevas, the crest-jewel of the skilful, who sports in Goloka full of delight — the son of the king of Vraja, the treasure of the gopis' lives — why does He roll on the ground?

18.2. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! What a spear has lodged in my breast:
why does the king of rasikas weep in the midst of sankirtana?
Not understanding it, I am dying of grief.

18.3. He with whom Radha and Chandravali sported, and hundreds of young girls of Vraja — now the Lord, breast to breast, does not look at a woman's face:
why is He a sannyasi with a staff?⁶⁹

18.4. Abandoning His graceful attire, the Lord goes from land to land, seeking out the fallen in every house;
by His qualities, like a chintamani, He has saved the people of the world — only Balarama Dasa remains far away.⁷⁰

68. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 287 (printed p. 276), 21st pallava, no. 35 (label " ୭୫ ୨୨୫୨ "); raga sindhura; P-R-Sa MS no. 2357. GPT1 — p. 19, no. 50 (a footnote in GPT1 gives a manuscript variant signed by Vasu Ghosha); GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 50. In the catalogue — BD-004.

69. Chandravali is a gopi, Radha's rival. The sense of "buke buka" ("breast to breast") is unclear: probably the Lord embraces the devotees in kirtana but does not look at women. GPT1: "nā dekheṇa nārīmukha". MS P-R-Sa: "many" (bahu) instead of "the Lord" (pahu) in 18.4.

70. The chintamani is the wish-fulfilling touchstone. MS P-R-Sa: "by the gift of the chintamani of the Name" (nāma-cintāmaṇi-dāne) instead of "by His qualities, like a chintamani" (cintāmaṇi nija-guṇe).

19. Murari — "dhara dhara dhara dhara re nitāi..." (PK 2235)

*Shantipura after the sannyasa: Shachi watches her sannyasi son dancing in kirtana in Advaita's house and begs Nitai, Advaita and Srivasa to support Him when He falls and to stop the kirtana — the night is already far gone. Raga ramakeli.*⁷¹

19.1. (Refrain) "Hold Him, hold Him, hold Him, hold Him, Nitai, hold my Gauranga!
When He falls, remember that He is Your younger brother, show mercy just once!"⁷²

19.2. "Acharya Gosani, take care of Nimai —
the pupil of my eyes!
I do not know at what moment, while He dances in kirtana,
I shall lose my life."⁷³

19.3. "Listen, Srivasa: He has taken sannyasa —
He rolls on the ground;
golden in colour, a little doll of butter —
may He not be hurt!"

19.4. "Listen, devotees, stop the kirtana — the night is far gone!"
Murari says: listen, Gaurahari, see what Your mother is going through!"⁷⁴

71. Signature: "Murari" ("kahaye murāri śuna gaurahari"). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 280 (printed p. 269), 21st pallava, no. 18 (label " ৯৮ ৯৯৩৫ "); raga ramakeli; P-R-Sa MS no. 2340. The preceding PK 2233 (Vallabha Dasa) and PK 2234 (Nayananda, chapter 10, no. 24) concern the same stay of the Lord in Advaita's house. GPT1 — p. 380, no. 46 (ramakeli or turi). In chapter 10 the pada was found to have been wrongly counted as Nayananda's (NN-021/027 = PK 2234); the Murari section of the catalogue had no row for it. Whether this Murari is Murari Gupta is not proven (Majumdar doubts other padas signed "Murari" too); attribution C. Cf. Shachi in Shantipura — CC Madhya 3, CB Antya 1.

72. "Your younger brother" — anuja: Shachi sees in Nityananda Nimai's elder brother (a second Vishvarupa, as it were; cf. Shachi's dream of the two brothers, Krishna and Balarama, CB Madhya 8). MSS "ka", "kha", "cha", P-R-Sa: "hold, hold" (twice); "ka", "kha", "cha": "my Gora"; "gha": "my Gaura".

73. MSS "ka", "kha", "cha", P-R-Sa: "take care of Nitai" (nitāi) instead of "Nimai"; P-R-Sa: "of my eyes" (nayana), "some day" (kakhane) instead of "at what moment".

74. "A little doll of butter" — nanīra putalī: so tender, to a mother's feeling, is His body. Shachi's last words and the poet's signature merge: Murari asks the Lord to have pity on His mother.

20. Balarama Dasa — "gaurasundara pahum^५ nadiyā udaya kari..." (PK 2244)

*Gaura rose in Nadia and filled the world with prema, saving the low and fallen with the holy name; He weeps seeing Gadadhara, holding the hands of Svarupa and Ramananda, rolls in the dust crying "Shripada!", and Nityananda, embracing Him, weeps; the blind and the deaf go mad with His qualities, high and low become bhagavatas. Raga ramakeli.*⁷⁵

20.1. The Lord Gaurasundara, rising in Nadia, filled the world with the gift of prema;
the low, the godless, the poor, the wretched, the weak and low-born
He saved, giving them the name of Hari.

20.2. (Refrain) Hearing of the qualities of Thakura Gauranga, my soul weeps.

All the ignorant, seeing Him, their minds made steady, cry "Haribol!" and give Him their hearts.⁷⁶

20.3. Seeing Gadadhara, He weeps, He cannot calm Himself, holding the hands of Svarupa and Ramananda;
my Lord, crying "Shripada!", rolls in the dust of the earth — embracing Him, Nityananda weeps.⁷⁷

20.4. The blind, the deaf — all are maddened by Gora's qualities, they know not the quarters of the sky;
brimming with bhava, not knowing His own and others,
He delivers one person after another.

20.5. Raising His arms, He cries "Hari", embracing the fallen — the world floats in Gora's prema;
the high and the low — all have become bhagavatas, only Balarama Dasa is left out.⁷⁸

75. Signature: "Balarama Dasa" ("bañcita balarāma dāse"). PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 283–284 (printed pp. 272–273), 21st pallava, no. 27 (label " ॐ ॐॐॐ "); raga ramakeli; P-R-Sa MS no. 2349. GPT1 — p. 45, no. 63 (ramakeli); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 63. In the catalogue — BD-011; the same PK 2244 was wrongly given for YN-001, "praphullita kanaka-kamala mukhamāṇḍala" (that is GPT1 p. 118, no. 24, signed "Vijayananda Dasa", in GPT2 "Yadunandana Dasa"; not in PK). The preceding PK 2243, "jībe emana dayā kothāo nā dekhi", is signed "Vasudasa".

76. GPT1: "seeing Him, their minds unsteady" (athira mana) instead of "their minds made steady" (suthira-mana).

77. Gadadhara (Pandita), Svarupa Damodara, Ramananda Raya and Nityananda are the Lord's companions in Puri. Shripada is a respectful address to a sannyasi: so the Lord called Nityananda. MSS "ka", "kha", "cha": "the Lord" (pahu) instead of "mind" (mana): "the Lord cannot calm Himself"; "ka": "Ramananda", "Nityananda" (without case endings).

78. A bhagavata is a devotee of the Lord. MSS "ka", "kha", "cha", P-R-Sa: "embracing the pandits" (paṇḍita) instead of "the fallen" (patita).

21. Balarama Dasa — "āpanāra guṇa śuni āpanā pāsare..." (PK 2245)

*Hearing of His own qualities, Gaura forgets Himself: His saffron garments slip off, He embraces the fallen, weeping He begs Nityananda for the dust of His feet, Nitai weeps "my brother!"; Gadadhara, Ramananda, Vasu, Srivasa, Mukunda and Murari weep; young and old rejoice, beasts and birds weep. Raga varari.*⁷⁹

21.1. Hearing of His own qualities, He forgets Himself,
His saffron garment slips — He does not set it right.

21.2. For Him there are no quarters of the sky, no own and other:
clasping, clasping them, He weeps over the fallen and the low.⁸⁰

21.3. Crying "Shripada!", the Lord weeps aloud, in hundreds of streams the tears pour from His lotus eyes.

21.4. Weeping, weeping, the Lord begs for the dust of His feet; fallen on the ground, Nitai weeps, saying: "My brother, brother!"⁸¹

21.5. Dear Gadadhara and Raya Ramananda weep, seeing Gauranga's face, they cannot calm themselves.

21.6. Vasu, Srivasa, Mukunda and Murari weep; in bliss all go along — children, old men, women.⁸²

21.7. Such an incarnation, brothers, I have seen nowhere:
the world is sunk in happiness, beasts and birds weep.

21.8. The blind, the deaf, the dull — all are in bliss,
Balarama Dasa alone of all is left out of this rasa.⁸³

79. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 284–285 (printed pp. 273–274), 21st pallava, no. 28 (label " ୧୮ ୧୧୪୫ "); raga varari; P-R-Sa MS no. 2350. GPT1 — p. 45, no. 64, and p. 289, no. 40; GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 64, and 4.3, no. 40. The catalogue (BD-012) listed it as "GPT only": the PK number was found on the scan.

80. MS P-R-Sa: "for Him there are no quarters of the sky" (diga bidiga tāhe nāhi).

81. In the humility of a devotee the Lord begs Nityananda for the dust of His feet, and Nityananda calls Him brother (cf. CB Antya 5–6). GPT1 (p. 289): "fallen on the ground, He weeps: 'Nitai, Nitai, brother!'".

82. Vasu is Vasu Ghosha or Vasudeva Datta; Srivasa, Mukunda (Datta) and Murari (Gupta) are companions from Navadvipa who came to the Lord in Puri. MSS "ka", "kha", "cha", P-R-Sa: "Srinivasa" (śrīnibāsa); "as if" (yena) instead of "all" (yata).

83. MS "gha": "such an incarnation I have never seen anywhere" (āra kabhu nāhi dekhi) in 21.7. GPT1: "only Balarama Dasa is left out of this rasa" (balarāma dāsa mātra e rase bañcita).

22. Balarama Dasa — "prabhu kahe nityānanda saba jība haila andha..." (PK 2261)

*The Lord sends Nityananda to Gauda: all souls have gone blind and have not received the name of Hari — let Nityananda mercifully give the Name to everyone He sees: sinners, slanderers, disputants, students turned away from bhakti, children, men and women — and flood Gauda with the prema of sankirtana. Raga varari.*⁸⁴

22.1. The Lord says: "Nityananda, all souls have gone blind, no one has received the name of Hari.
I have one request of You: whomever You see with Your eyes, mercifully make them repeat the Name.

22.2. Hardened sinners, the wicked, slanderers, the godless — let not one of them be left out; let souls not fear that Yama will come — let them joyfully repeat the name of Hari.

22.3. Evil-minded disputants, low students, turned away from bhakti birth after birth — giving prema for Krishna to children, men and women, free them all from suffering.

22.4. Flood the land of Gauda with the prema and rasa of sankirtana, fulfil the hope of all."
Whom such an incarnation of mercy did not save — what can Balarama Dasa do?⁸⁵

84. Signature: "Balarama Dasa." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 290 (printed p. 279), 21st pallava, section "tatra nityānandacandrasya gauṛe preraṇaṁ yathā" (the sending of Nityananda to Gauda), no. 44 (label " ୪୪ ୧୧୫୫ "); raga varari; P-R-Sa MS no. 2366. GPT1 — pp. 403–404, no. 6 (varari); GPT2 — sec. 5.5, no. 6. The catalogue (BD-026) listed it as "GPT only": the PK number was found on the scan. Cf. CC Madhya 15 (the Lord sends Nityananda to preach in Gauda), CB Antya 5.

85. MS "kha": "give" (diha) instead of "make them repeat" (laoyāibe) in 22.1; "gha": pāṣaṇḍi; "ka": "flooded" (bhāsāila); "kha": karā.

23. Balarama Dasa — "birale nitāi pāñā..." (PK 2262; fuller in GPT1)

*The Lord alone with Nityananda: "Go to the bank of the Suradhuni and, taking pity on souls, give them the name of Hari; I have come to give away the Name and prema at Advaita's call, and You are My chief helper; having delivered Nilachala, I shall go south with Govinda — You hasten to Gauda." Raga varari.*⁸⁶

- 23.1. Finding Nitai alone, taking His hand and seating Him, the Lord softly speaks sweet words to Him:
"Taking pity on souls, go and make them repeat the name of Hari — go, Nitai, to the bank of the Suradhuni."
- 23.2. "To give away the Name and prema, at Advaita's thunderous call I have descended to earth; to save the souls of the Kali age, to bring them good —
You are My chief helper."⁸⁷
- 23.3. "Having delivered Nilachala, taking Govinda with Me,
I shall go to the southern country;
the charge of Sri Gauda-mandala — preaching the Name — quickly, Nitai, go there Yourself."⁸⁸
- 23.4. "What I cannot do, You will be able to do:
You are the giver of prema, the most merciful."
Balarama says: Lords, You both are equal — deliver me: I am but a beggar."⁸⁹

86. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 291 (printed p. 280), 21st pallava, no. 45 (label " ৪৫ সপ্তম পদ "); the same raga (varari); P-R-Sa MS no. 2367. PK has only the first stanza (23.1), without a signature; Ray notes that in the P-R-Sa MS the next pada, PK 2263 ("caitanya-ādeśa pāyā...", signed Premadasa), is written as the end of this one, and thinks this right, but in MSS "ka", "kha", "gha", "cha" they are separate. The full text with Balarama's signature is in GPT1, p. 404, no. 7 (varari); 23.2–23.4 are translated from GPT1 (scan PDF p. 663). Attribution C. In the catalogue — BD-027.

87. Advaita called on the Lord to appear for the deliverance of the world (CC Adi 3; CB Adi 2).

88. Govinda is perhaps Kala Krishnadasa or Govinda, the Lord's servant; according to CC (Madhya 7) the Lord went south with Kala Krishnadasa and sent Nityananda to Gauda later (Madhya 15) — the poet tells the events differently; we translate faithfully to the author.

89. "You both are equal" — domhāra samāna duhumḥ: Gaura and Nitai are equally merciful.

24. Kanu Dasa — "nādīyā nagare gelā nityānanda rāya..." (PK 2264)

*Nityananda comes to Nadia and falls at Shachi's feet; embracing Him, she weeps; He consoles her with talk of Gauranga: "Your son is well and happy, He sent me to see you and bowed many times to your feet: Gauranga is bound by your love." Raga suhai.*⁹⁰

- 24.1. Nityananda Raya came to the town of Nadia, fell like a rod at the feet of Mother Shachi.
- 24.2. Embracing Him, Shachi weeps piteously, the tears from her eyes soak her garments.
- 24.3. Crying out, crying out, she weeps with an anguished heart — with talk of Gauranga He consoles her.
- 24.4. Nityananda says: "Mother, calm your heart:
your son is well and happy.
- 24.5. He sent me to see you, many times He bowed to your feet."
- 24.6. Kanu Dasa says: "Mother, this I tell you:
Gauranga Gosani is bound by your love."⁹¹

90. Signature: "Kanu Dasa" ("kānudāsa kahe"). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 291 (printed p. 280), 21st pallava, no. 47 (label " ৪৭ সপ্তম পদ "); raga suhai; P-R-Sa MS no. 2368. GPT1 — pp. 404–405, no. 10 (suhai); GPT2 — sec. 5.5, no. 10. In the catalogue — KD-008. Cf. CB Antya 5–6 (Nityananda in Navadvipa with Shachi).

91. Kanu Dasa's words continue Nityananda's speech. GPT1: "pāṭhāiyā dilā", "karilā" (honorific forms) in 24.5.

25. Krishnadasa — "ciradine gorācāmḍera ānanda apāra..." (PK 2018)

*After long separation — Gorachand's boundless bliss: He tells the devotees of His former pastimes, His body is covered with thrills, like a kadamba bud with golden filaments; hearing the words from His lips, the devotees are consoled. In GPT1 it stands among the padas on the Lord's return to the devotees of Nadia.*⁹²

25.1. After a long time boundless is Gorachand's bliss:

He tells the devotees of His former pastimes.⁹³

25.2. From head to foot His body is filled with thrills — like a kadamba bud with golden filaments.

25.3. His heart is full of bhava, His speech falters:

after so much striving Providence has fulfilled the hope.⁹⁴

25.4. Gora, the son of Shachi, is our honour, life and wealth:

hearing the words from His moon-like lips, the heart is consoled.

25.5. Whoever has come to faith in Gorachand's pastimes — wretched Krishnadasa is the servant of his servants.

92. Signature: "Krishnadasa" ("dukhī kṣṇadāsa"). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 201 (printed p. 190), opening of the 15th pallava, section "atha samṛddhimat-sambhogasya rasodgāraḥ — tatra śrīgauracandro yathā" (a gaura-chandrika to Radha's account of full union after separation), no. 1 (label " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); no raga given. GPT1 — p. 413, no. 32 (shri), right after Vasu Ghosha's pada "āola nadīyāra loka gaurāṅga dekhite" (chapter 1, no. 23). In the catalogue (KR-003) the pada was listed under nagari-bhava (by the GPT2 section 3.2) without a first line — it is not a nagari pada. Which Krishnadasa wrote it has not been established (C).

93. "Former pastimes" — puraba-bihāra: Krishna's pastimes in Vraja (in PK the pada introduces Radha's account of Her union with Krishna).

94. It can also be understood as the words of the Lord Himself in Radha's bhava: "after so much striving Providence has fulfilled My hope." MSS "ka", "kha": jine ("outshining") instead of janu ("like") in 25.2.

Chapter 12. Vasu Ghosha: Padas from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — Appearance and Childhood, Sannyasa, the Lament of Nadia, Nilachala

*This chapter opens the group of padas known only from the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed. by Jagadbandhu Bhadra, 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934), excluding padas in nagari-bhava. Here are padas signed by Vasu (Vasudeva) Ghosha, in the order of the lilas: praise of the Gaura-avatara; Gauranga's appearance on the night of the lunar eclipse, the name-giving, His first steps and "the moon from the sky"; the Lord's morning in Navadvipa and the jhulana; Vishnupriya's forebodings, the sannyasa at Katwa, the lament of Shachi and the devotees, the Lord with Advaita in Shantipura and His departure for Nilachala; the lament of Shachi and Vishnupriya; the Lord in Nilachala, His bhava of Radha, and the festival at Shrikhanda. Two padas were found in the Padakalpataru (PK) without a signature (nos. 1 and 15) — there the text follows PK; no. 27 is an abridged recension of a pada by Govinda Dasa (PK 1463). Ten padas (nos. 1, 3–5, 9–12, 14, 17) were missing from the stage-1 catalogue: they were found in a full check of the signatures of GPT1 (the catalogue section on Vasu Ghosha has been supplemented). Majumdar considers the GPT unreliable for attributing padas to Vasu Ghosha: Jagadbandhu included spurious ones as well; the childhood padas he regards as the poet's invention, and the festival at Shrikhanda (no. 29) and the pada about Svarupa (no. 28) as forgeries. The attribution of all the padas of this chapter is therefore provisional. The Bengali original, the variants of GPT1/GPT2 and PK, and the word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.*

1. Vasu Ghosha — "abatāra baṛa abatāra kailā baṛa..." (PK 2347; GPT1 no. 68)

*Praise of the Gaura-avatara: there was no such mercy in any yuga; in every house there is the weeping of prema, the name of Hari is proclaimed; Gaura has brought a boat laden with prema to the landing and opened a market; Jagai and Madhai are saved by the name.*¹

1.1. A great incarnation, a great incarnation You have made!

Such mercy You have shown in no other yuga.

1.2. In every house the weeping of prema is heard; in the age of Kali the name of Hari is proclaimed.²

1.3. To the landing of the ocean of happiness You have brought a boat full of prema;

a fine market You have opened, Gaura — with wares of prema!³

1.4. Jagai and Madhai — they were two brothers:

by the name of Hari Chaitanya Gosani saved them.⁴

1.5. Vasudeva Ghosha says: there will be no other such;

in the age of Kali blessed is the name — the jewel Chaitanya.

1. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 320 (printed p. 309), 4th shakha, last pada of the 23rd pallava (mark " ১৬ ২৩৪৭ "), MS P-R-Sa no. 2451 — without a signature (in PK the pada ends at 1.4; it is preceded by PK 2346, signed by Balarama Dasa). GPT1 — pp. 46–47, no. 68 (raga yatharaga), with the closing couplet 1.5 — the signature of Vasudeva Ghosha; GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 68. Text of 1.1–1.4 follows PK, 1.5 follows GPT. The attribution to Vasu Ghosha is known only from GPT (a new catalogue entry, VG-154). The first line reads differently in the PK manuscripts and in GPT ("abatāra kailā baṛa baṛa" etc.), see the full version of the book.

2. "The weeping of prema" (premera kāndanā) — tears of love for God in kirtana, not worldly grief. The name of Hari as the dharma of the age of Kali — CC Adi 3, 17.

3. Images of trade: the boat (bharā — a boat's cargo; in the PK manuscripts bhārā, "load") comes in to the landing, and Gaura opens a market (hāṭa) whose "wares" are prema, given away freely. Cf. the padas about the "market" of Nityananda and Gaura (hāṭa-pattana).

4. Jagai and Madhai — the villainous brothers of Navadvipa, saved by the Lord and Nityananda (CB Madhya 13; CC Adi 17).

2. Vasu Ghosha — "nadīyā-ākāśe āsi udila gaurāṅga-śaśī..." (GPT1 p. 51, no. 3)

*The appearance of Gaurāṅga: in the sky of Nadia the moon Gaurāṅga has risen, and the moon of the sky, out of shame, has smeared its face with soot — the eclipse; conches and drums sound in every house; Jagannatha Mishra and Shachi are beside themselves with joy; in the darkness of the eclipse gods mingle with men, celestial women together with the women of Nadia gaze at the Child; the father gives gifts to the poor. Raga kalyana.*⁵

2.1. In the sky of Nadia a moon has risen — Gaurāṅga, and all are drowned in delight;
and the moon of the sky, out of shame, has smeared its face with soot, seizing the moment — as if in an eclipse.⁶

2.2. The women cry aloud: "Jaya, jaya!" — in every house bells and conches sound;
kettledrums, drums, gongs, shehnais, horns and flutes, turi and bheri trumpets and the great victory drum.⁷

2.3. Jagannatha Mishra is immersed in great bliss, Shachi's joy knows no bounds:
seeing Nimai's face, she has forgotten the pains of childbirth and, unblinking, gazes at her son's face.⁸

2.4. In the darkness of the eclipse no one recognizes anyone — gods have mingled with men;
together with the women of Nadia, celestial women, coming joyfully, behold the beauty of Gaurāṅga.⁹

2.5. Gazing at his son's face, Jagannatha, overjoyed, gives gifts to all the poor.
The world is full of bliss — the moon Gaura has risen:
this, says Vasu, is the fruit of the good fortune of living beings.

5. GPT1 — p. 51, no. 3 (raga kalyana), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 310–311); GPT2 — sec. 2.1, no. 3. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. The preceding pada of GPT (no. 2, "jaya jaya kalaraba nadiyā nagare") is PK 1121, translated in chapter 7 (no. 6). Majumdar regards Vasu's padas on the Lord's birth and childhood as the poet's invention: Vasu was not in Navadvipa at that time (and the attribution of this pada is moreover known only from GPT). The Lord's appearance on the phalgunā purnimā during a lunar eclipse, when everyone was chanting the name of Hari — CC Adi 13; CB Adi 2.

6. A play of images: the moon Gaurāṅga has eclipsed the moon of the sky, and it has hidden its face "out of shame" — this is how the poet explains the eclipse on the night of the Lord's appearance.

7. The shehnai (sānāi) is a wind instrument like an oboe; the bheṛ (bhēmūṛa) is a horn; the turi and bheri are trumpets.

8. The Lord's appearance is not the birth of a conditioned soul: He comes by His own will, in His eternal form, and Mother Shachi, like Devaki and Yashoda, only in the sweetness of love experiences it as the birth of a son (CC Adi 13; Bhag. 10.3). The words about "the pains of childbirth" convey her motherly experience in the humanlike lila.

9. "The women of Nadia" (nadīyā-nāgarī) here are simply townswomen who came to see the Child, not "nagaris" in the sense of nagari-bhava. The gods who came in human guise to see the newborn Lord — CB Adi 2.

3. Vasu Ghosha — "mīśra purandara kichu mane bicāriyā..." (GPT1 p. 62, no. 1)

*The name-giving: Purandara Mishra calls the family priest and gives him gifts, and the priest places the arghya and his blessing on the Child's head; Shachi asks that her son be given the name "Nimai". Raga suhai.*¹⁰

- 3.1. Purandara Mishra, having considered something, called to him the family priest, the best of brahmanas.
- 3.2. Wealth, jewels and ornaments he gave to the brahmana;
the brahmana, pronouncing his blessing, accepted the gift.
- 3.3. The arghya and the blessing the brahmana took in his own hands and gladly placed them on Gorachand's head.¹¹
- 3.4. Shachi Thakurani began to speak:
"Providence has given me this son — He is to me as seven sons."¹²
- 3.5. Give Him the name 'Nimai', O best of brahmanas!" — so, joining his palms, says Vasudeva Ghosha.

10. GPT1 — p. 62, section "Childhood pastimes" (bālyalīlā), no. 1 (raga suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 321); GPT2 — sec. 2.2, no. 1. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new entry VG-155). On Majumdar's view of Vasu's padas on the Lord's childhood — note 5. Purandara is another name of Jagannatha Mishra. According to CB (Adi 3–4) and CC (Adi 13–14), the name "Nimai" was given to the Child by the women (born under a nim tree — as a protection), while at the name-giving ceremony the brahmanas named Him Vishvambhara; in the poem it is Shachi herself who asks for the name "Nimai".

11. Arghya — a respectful offering (water, rice, durva grass); here it is placed on the child's head as a blessing.

12. "sāta putrera ei putra" — lit. "this son is (as) seven sons": an expression of the priceless worth of an only child. It may also allude to the children Shachi lost before the Lord's appearance (according to CC Adi 13 — eight daughters).

4. Vasu Ghosha — "māyera aṅguli dhari śīśu gaurahari..." (GPT1 p. 63, no. 6)

*The first steps: holding His mother's finger, little Gaurahari toddles step by step, pulls her by the hand, stumbles and falls; Shachi wants to take Him in her arms, but He, being stubborn, rolls on the ground; the mother wipes Him and kisses Him. Raga beloar (tala dashakoshi).*¹³

- 4.1. Holding His mother's finger, the child Gaurahari toddles forward step by step.
- 4.2. Pulling His mother by the hand, He suddenly walks faster — and, before going half a step, stumbles and falls.
- 4.3. Mother Shachi, brushing off the dust, goes to take Him in her arms — but Gora, throwing a tantrum, rolls on the ground.
- 4.4. Saying "ah, ah", the mother wipes Him with the end of her sari, takes Him in her arms and kisses the lotus of His face.
- 4.5. Vasu says: this child will roll in the dust — how long, mother, will you hold Him back out of tenderness?¹⁴

13. GPT1 — p. 63, no. 6 (raga beloar, tala dashakoshi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 322); GPT2 — sec. 2.2, no. 6. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; new catalogue entry VG-156. The neighbouring GPT padas (nos. 2–5) are PK 1141, 1161, 1150, 1151 (translated in chapter 7, nos. 8–11). On Majumdar's view — note 5.

14. The Lord's childhood play in the dust — CB Adi 4; Murari 1.6. The sweetness of these pastimes lies in Shachi's motherly love (vatsalya), which keeps her from seeing her Son's majesty.

5. Vasu Ghosha — "pūrṇimā-rajanī cāṁḍa gagane udaya..." (GPT1 pp. 63–64, no. 7)

*The moon from the sky: on the night of the full moon little Nimai, seeing the moon, cries: "Give me the moon, mother!"; the moon does not come, and in despair He falls in the dust; Shachi gives Him a picture of Radha and Krishna — and He is happy: in it, says the poet, the Lord sees His own face. Raga beloar (tala dashakoshi).*¹⁵

- 5.1. On the night of the full moon the moon rose in the sky;
seeing the moon, Gorachand rejoiced in His heart.
- 5.2. "Give me the moon, mother!" — the child cries aloud; raising her hand, Shachi calls: "Come, moon, come!"
- 5.3. The cruel moon does not come — Nimai is distraught:
weeping, He falls in the dust and tears His hair.
- 5.4. In Mishra's house there was a picture of Radha and Krishna:
to soothe her son, Shachi gave it into His hands.
- 5.5. Getting the picture, Gorachand rejoiced with all His heart;
Vasu says: in the picture, Lord, You behold Your own face.¹⁶

15. GPT1 — pp. 63–64, no. 7 (raga beloar, tala dashakoshi), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 322–323); GPT2 — sec. 2.2, no. 7. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; new catalogue entry VG-157. On Majumdar's view — note 5. The child asking for the moon is a well-known motif of Krishna's childhood pastimes as well (cf. the story of the moon in a bowl of water).

16. The sense of the signature: Gaura is Krishna Himself, who has taken the bhava and complexion of Radha (CC Adi 1.5; 4); therefore in the picture of Radha and Krishna He sees Himself: in the Child's play the poet reveals the secret of Gaura — Radha and Krishna in one form (cf. the verse of Svarupa Damodara, CC Adi 1.5).

6. Vasu Ghosha — "uṭha uṭha gorācāṁḍa niśi pohāila..." (GPT1 p. 347, no. 11)

*The awakening of Gaura: the night is over, Nadia has woken, the cuckoo is calling, the dawn has risen, the lotuses have opened — how long will You sleep, Gora, in the languor of prema? Raga dhanashi.*¹⁷

- 6.1. Rise, rise, Gorachand — the night is over; all the people of Nadia have woken and risen.
- 6.2. The cuckoo calls "kuhu" — how charming its voice;
how long will You sleep, O Gora, jewel of virtues?
- 6.3. The dawn has risen, the lotuses have opened; the moon has left the abode of the night lilies.¹⁸
- 6.4. Vasudeva Ghosha, with joy in his heart, says:
how long will You sleep, Gora, in the languor of prema?

17. GPT1 — p. 347, section "the eight periods of the day" (ashtakaliya), no. 11 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 5.2, no. 11. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Ashtakaliya songs are a meditation on the Lord's daily pastimes hour by hour; Majumdar does not discuss such padas.

18. The night lilies (kumudini) open under the moon and close at dawn; the lotuses do the opposite.

7. Vasu Ghosha — "bāyasa kokilakula ghughu dahiyāla-raba..." (GPT1 p. 351, no. 24)

*Morning and bath: the birds call, the companions call Gora; He rises, rubs His eyes, performs the morning duties, slowly anoints Himself with fragrant oil and goes with everyone to the Ganga. Raga dhanashi.*¹⁹

- 7.1. Crows, cuckoos, doves and magpie-robins are calling, and together with them all the companions call Him.
- 7.2. Casting off drowsiness, Gora rises from His bed, rubs His eyes with His hands and looks all around.
- 7.3. Having finished the morning duties with His companions, Gora slowly anoints His body with fragrant oil.

7.4. Anointed with oil, they all go toward the Ganga;

Vasu Ghosha joyfully sings the lila of bathing.

19. GPT1 — p. 351, section ashtakaliya, no. 24 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 5.2, no. 24. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. The next GPT pada (no. 25, "jalakeli gorācāmḍera manete paṛila", the water play) is PK 1108, translated in chapter 5 (no. 7). The dahiyal (dahiyāla) is the magpie-robin (Copsychus saularis), a songbird of Bengal.

8. Vasu Ghosha — "jhulata gorācāmḍa sundara raṅgiyā..." (GPT1 p. 326, no. 17)

*Jhulana: Gorachand swings on the swing, overflowing with prema; in the bhava of Radha tears stream down His face; understanding His bhava, Gadadhara swings at His left; "The flute!" Gora exclaims, gazing into his face. Raga dhanashi.*²⁰

8.1. Gorachand swings, beautiful and joyous, overflowing with the fullness of prema.

8.2. In the bhava of Radha streams of tears flood His face; understanding His bhava, Gadadhara swings at His left.²¹

8.3. "The flute!" He exclaims, gazing into Gadadhara's face;

Vasu Ghosha sings, remembering Gora's qualities.

20. GPT1 — p. 326, section "festivals of the year", no. 17 (raga dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 585); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 17. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Vasu's other pada on the jhulana (PK 1550, where Gaura sits on the swing with Gadadhara; according to Majumdar, an eyewitness testimony) is translated in chapter 4 (no. 5). Jhulana is the swing festival of Radha and Krishna in the month of shravana.

21. The bhava of Radha is pure prema, Radha's love for Krishna; in it the Lord tastes the sweetness of His own love (CC Adi 4). The left side is Radha's place beside Krishna; Gadadhara, the Lord's eternal companion, understands His mood. The cry "The flute!" is a remembrance of Krishna's flute that has seized the Lord in this bhava.

9. Vasu Ghosha — "biṣṇupriyā saṅginīre pāiyā birale..." (GPT1 p. 367, no. 4)

*Vishnupriya's foreboding: alone with a friend, she says that Nadia seems desolate to her today, the right side of her body twitches, her earring has fallen, on the bank of the Suradhuni the trees have wilted, the current has stopped, the cuckoo is silent; the poet fears that Gora may leave Navadvipa. Raga dhanashi.*²²

9.1. Vishnupriya, finding her friend alone, with an anxious heart, faltering, says:

9.2. "Why does Nadia seem desolate to me today?

There is no ease in my body, both my eyes weep.

9.3. The right side of my body twitches, my right eye;

my earring has slipped and fallen.²³

9.4. On the bank of the Suradhuni the trees and creepers have wilted, the bees do not drink honey, the leaves have withered.

9.5. Why has the current of the Jahnavi stopped?

The cuckoo is not heard — as if it had grown mute."

9.6. A great fear has settled in Vasu's heart:

lest Gora, the king of brahmanas, leave Navadvipa!

22. GPT1 — p. 367, section "sannyasa", no. 4 (raga dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 626). In the scan of GPT2 (IA 340178) p. 235 (end of sec. 5.2) is followed by p. 236, which begins with the end of no. 8 of sec. 5.3: padas nos. 1–8 (including this one and the next) are missing from it. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; new catalogue entry VG-158. The neighbouring GPT padas are on the same theme (no. 3 — Govinda Ghosha, no. 5 — Madhava).

23. According to folk belief, the twitching of the right eye and the right side of the body is an ill omen for a woman.

10. Vasu Ghosha — "pāgalinī biṣṇupriyā bhijā bastra cule..." (GPT1 p. 367, no. 6)

*Vishnupriya, as if distraught, runs home in wet clothes and, weeping, tells Shachi of the ill omens: while she was bathing her nose ring fell into the water, her right eye twitches, she keeps seeing a snake on her right; the poet: today the lord of your life will leave Navadvipa. Raga dhanashi.*²⁴

- 10.1. Vishnupriya, as if distraught, with wet clothes and wet hair, hurriedly comes home and speaks to her mother-in-law —
- 10.2. but she cannot say anything, breathless with weeping.
Shachi says: "My dear, why are you so distressed?"
- 10.3. Vishnupriya says: "What more can I say, mother?
On all sides there are ill omens — my soul trembles.
- 10.4. As I was bathing, my nose ring fell into the water:
my fortune will break, a thunderbolt will fall on my head."²⁵
- 10.5. Again and again my soul weeps, my right eye twitches, on my right I keep seeing as if a snake."
- 10.6. Weeping, Vasu Ghosha says: "What shall I say, O faithful wife?
Today the lord of your life will leave Navadvipa."

24. GPT1 — p. 367, no. 6 (raga dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 626); missing from the GPT2 scan (note 22). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; new catalogue entry VG-159. The night before the Lord's departure and Vishnupriya's grief — CC Adi 17; CB Madhya 25–26; in Lochana — Madhya-khanda.

25. The nose ring (beśara) is a sign of a married woman; its loss is an ill omen for the husband.

11. Vasu Ghosha — "prabhu kahe nijaguṇe deota sannyāsa..." (GPT1 p. 369, no. 11)

*Katwa: the Lord asks Keshava Bharati to give Him sannyasa; the people of Katwa try to dissuade Him, Bharati recalls that the scriptures allow sannyasa after fifty; the Lord replies: if death comes earlier, when will there be the company of saints? Bharati agrees, the barber is called; he does not dare touch the Lord's head — the Lord tells him to give up his trade and promises him a happy life by Krishna's grace. Raga shri.*²⁶

- 11.1. The Lord says: "By your grace give Me sannyasa!"
— "Do not become a sannyasi, Nimai, do not shave Your hair!" —
- 11.2. so all the people of Kanchana-nagara try to dissuade Him:
"Do not take sannyasa, dear child, go back home!"²⁷
- 11.3. "When one is past fifty and the passions have ceased, only then do the scriptures allow sannyasa to be given."²⁸
- 11.4. Hearing this, the Lord speaks thus:
"What do I know to say before you, O guru?"
- 11.5. If death should come before fifty, when then will there be the company of saints?"
- 11.6. Hearing this, Bharati Gosani says:
"I will give You sannyasa — listen, Nimai!"
- 11.7. Hearing this, the Lord was filled with joy and delight; then they called the barber to shave His head.
- 11.8. The barber says: "Master, I humbly submit:
there is no such person in the three worlds!

11.9. Having touched Your head with my hand, whose feet shall I touch then?

Say what you will, Master — my whole body trembles.

11.10. Touching whose feet shall I now shave every day?

I am a barber of low caste — such is my custom."²⁹

11.11. Hearing this, Vishvambhara Raya speaks, the Lord says: "Do not follow your trade any longer.

11.12. By Krishna's grace you will pass your life in happiness, and at the end your way will lead to the abode of Vishnu."

11.13. The people of Kanchana-nagara are kind-hearted;

Vasu Ghosha, with joined palms, speaks to Bharati...

26. GPT1 — p. 369, section "sannyasa", no. 11 (raga shri), checked against the scan (PDF p. 628); GPT2 — p. 236, sec. 5.3, no. 11 (scan PDF p. 525). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; new catalogue entry VG-160. The preceding GPT pada (no. 10, "kāñcana nagare eka bṛkṣa manohara", with the double signature of Krishnadasa and Vasu) is PK 2223 (VG-136), translated in chapter 4 (no. 12). The sannyasa at Katwa — CB Madhya 28; CC Adi 17, Madhya 3; Lochana, Madhya-khanda; Murari 2.18. Keshava Bharati is the Lord's sannyasa-guru.

27. Kanchana-nagara is Katwa (Kantaka-nagara) on the Ganga, where the Lord took sannyasa.

28. Apparently the words of Keshava Bharati (GPT1 gives them in quotation marks without naming the speaker): sannyasa was usually taken in old age, after the stages of grihastha and vanaprastha. The Lord's answer (11.4–11.5) is the word of a man seeking sannyasa: the Lord, who teaches by His own example, speaks of the brevity of human life, not of Himself — time has no power over Him.

29. The barber's trade is shaving and paring nails, touching people's feet; having touched the Lord's head, he can no longer touch the feet of others (the same motif in Lochana, where the barber is called Haridasa (in the 1983 ed.), and in Govinda's Karcha, where he is Deva).

12. Vasu Ghosha — "madhuśīla bale gosāñi nā bhāmṛāo more..." (GPT1 p. 369, no. 12)

*Continuation: the barber Madhushil says to the Lord: "Do not deceive me — I know You are God Himself; I shall do Your will, but first place Your feet on my head"; the Lord places His foot on his head. Raga shri.*³⁰

12.1. Madhushil says: "Gosani, do not deceive me:

You are Brahma, You are Vishnu — I know it in my heart."³¹

12.2. I shall fulfil Your wish — You are all-powerful;

I shall obey Your order without doubt.

12.3. You say: by Krishna's grace I shall live happily, and after death my way will lead to the abode of Vishnu.

12.4. The Krishna who will keep me in happiness — that is You;

Your feet are my abode of Vishnu: what else do I know?

12.5. I shall shave Your curly hair, I shall touch Your head with my hand — but first, Lord, place Your holy feet on my head."

12.6. At these sweet words the Lord placed His foot on his head — the foot, says Vasu, before which the post of Brahma is trifling.

30. GPT1 — p. 369, no. 12 (raga shri), checked against the scan (PDF p. 628); GPT2 — p. 236, sec. 5.3, no. 12. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; new catalogue entry VG-161. The barber's name is Madhushil (madhuśīla; Shil is a surname of the barber caste).

31. "You are Brahma, You are Vishnu" — the simple words of a barber who has recognized God in the Lord; according to Gaudiya teaching Gaura is Krishna Himself, the Supreme Lord, the source of both Vishnu and Brahma (CC Adi 2) — which the barber himself says in 12.4: "that Krishna is You".

13. Vasu Ghosha — "prabhura muṇḍana dekhi kānde yata paśu pākhi..." (GPT1 p. 370, no. 15)

*After the shaving: beasts, birds and people weep, a cow runs to the Lord with grass in her teeth, all stand silent like trees; the Lord, in kaupina and with staff, asks the Vaishnavas to bless Him so that His sannyasa may not become a mockery and He may attain the Lord of Vraja in Vraja, and runs crying "Where is Vrindavana?" through the land of Rarh, with Nityananda beside Him. Raga pahida.*³²

13.1. Seeing the Lord shaven, all the beasts and birds weep, all the dwellers of the holy place weep;³³
the calf does not drink milk, the cow, with grass in her teeth, runs and gazes at Gauranga's face.

13.2. People stand looking at Gauranga's face — no one can utter a word;
tears flow from both eyes as they gaze at Gauranga's face — all beings have become still as trees.

13.3. Putting on the cord and kaupina, with shaven head, leaving maya, He has become detached;³⁴
He sits, overflowing with prema, taking the staff in His hand, and says: "I am poor and lowly.

13.4. You, the best of Vaishnavas, give Me this blessing, placing both hands on My head:
I have taken sannyasa — may it not become a mockery;
may I, going to Vraja, attain the Lord of Vraja!"³⁵

13.5. Saying this, Gora Raya runs in prema with His face upturned and weeps: "Where is Vrindavana?"
The Lord wanders through the land of Rarh, Nityananda beside Him;
Vasu Ghosha weeps aloud.³⁶

32. GPT1 — pp. 370–371, section "sannyasa", no. 15 (raga pahida), checked against the scan (PDF p. 629); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 15. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. The couplet about the blessing (13.4) coincides almost word for word with Vasu's pada PK 2225 (VG-059; chapter 4, no. 13), which Majumdar considers part of the historical cycle "Nimai-sannyasa": this is a "double" of that pada, known only from GPT.

33. śrīnibāsī — lit. "dwellers of Shri (the holy place)"; the sense of the word is unclear (perhaps the people of Katwa or of Nadia).

34. "Leaving maya" — here "maya" in the everyday sense: family, home, worldly attachments that the Lord leaves on taking sannyasa; the Lord Himself is never under the power of maya. The word "ḍuri" after "shaven head" is unclear (omitted in the translation).

35. The Lord, taking the role of a devotee, prays for a blessing — to attain Krishna; cf. CC Madhya 3 (the verse of the Avanti brahmana, which the Lord recites on taking sannyasa).

36. After the sannyasa the Lord wandered for three days in a trance through the land of Rarh, seeking Vrindavana, and Nityananda led Him to the Ganga and to Shantipura — CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1.

14. Vasu Ghosha — "gaurāṅge sannyāsa diyā bhāratī kāmḍilā..." (GPT1 p. 371, no. 18)

*Having given Gauranga sannyasa and the name Sri Krishna Chaitanya, Keshava Bharati weeps; the Lord asks him for the blessing of love for Krishna, and Bharati replies: "You are my guru, I see Krishna in You; only for the sake of worldly custom do You call me guru." Raga dhanashi.*³⁷

- 14.1. Having given Gauranga sannyasa, Bharati wept;
the name "Sri Krishna Chaitanya" he gave to Nimai.
- 14.2. The Lord says: "My guru, fulfil the desire of My heart:
bless Me, that My mind may be in Krishna."
- 14.3. Bharati, weeping, says: "You are my guru; what blessing shall I give? I see Krishna."
- 14.4. You bewilder the whole world, You are the master of every play; only to keep up worldly custom do You call me guru.³⁸
- 14.5. My sannyasa has today borne fruit!"
Vasu says: "I have seen the lotus feet."

37. GPT1 — p. 371, no. 18 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 18. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; new catalogue entry VG-162. The name "Sri Krishna Chaitanya" — CC Madhya 3, CB Madhya 28; cf. Govinda's Karcha, where Bharati inwardly recognizes the Lord as God.

38. "You bewilder the world" (bhubana bhuḷāo) — of the lila of the Lord, who hides His majesty in the role of a devotee and a disciple; "the master of every play" (nāṭera guru) — He Himself arranges His lila. This is not "maya" over the Lord: by His own will He shows the form of a sannyasi in order to teach the world.

15. Vasu Ghosha — "svapane giyāchilum̐ kṣīroda-sāyare..." (PK 2269; GPT1 no. 25)

*Shachi's lament: in a dream she went to the ocean of milk, but even there did not find the treasure of virtues; she set up a market, but fate did not let her trade; where did Keshava Bharati in sannyasi garb come from? She raised her son to be a pandit — who has taken Him away to a distant land? Shachi calls: "Nimai, come!" Raga pahida.*³⁹

- 15.1. "In a dream I went to the ocean of milk — and even there I did not find the treasure of virtues;
I set up a market — but I was not let to trade:
Providence has turned against me."⁴⁰
- 15.2. From where did this Keshava Bharati come in the garb of a sannyasi?
I taught Him, instructed Him, raised Him a pandit — who, then, has taken Him away to a distant land?"
- 15.3. (Refrain) Mother Shachi calls: "Nimai, come!"
- 15.4. "My treasure, (come back) to the empty house!"

Vasu Ghosha says: "That Gorachand is the mother's life."⁴¹

39. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 293 (printed p. 282), 21st pallava "The sannyasa of Sri Gauranga etc.", no. 52 (mark " ৫২ ২১তম পদ্য "), MS P-R-Sa no. 2373 — without a signature, with the refrain "śacī māya ḍāke nimāi āya re"; in MS P-R-Sa the refrain is longer: "...what has he plotted with Bharati — he goes away, killing his mother." GPT1 — p. 374, no. 25 (raga pahida), checked against the scan (PDF p. 633); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 25: with a closing line and Vasu's signature (15.4). Text of 15.1–15.3 follows PK, 15.4 follows GPT. The attribution to Vasu is known only from GPT.

40. The ocean of milk (Kshiroda) is the abode of Vishnu; Shachi seeks her son where the Lord dwells. The "market" is an image of a settled life, of family (cf. no. 1: the market of Gaura's prema).

41. Shachi's lament in the spirit of vatsalya: motherly love, in which there is no room for thoughts of the Son's majesty, is lofty prema (CC Adi 4).

16. Vasu Ghosha — "nadīyā chāṛiyā gela gaurāṅga sundare..." (GPT1 p. 374, no. 27)

*Gauranga has left Nadia, and the devotees sink in an ocean of grief: Advaita, Srivasa, Gadadhara, Vasudeva Datta, Murari, Vakreshvara, Vasudeva and Narahari weep, Raghunandana rolls in the dust, Haridasa weeps with closed eyes, Nityananda — looking at Shachi; the poet remembers the blissful kirtanas of Nadia. Raga suhai (tala somtal).*⁴²

- 16.1. Beautiful Gauranga has left Nadia — all the devotees have sunk in an ocean of grief.
- 16.2. Advaita Acharya, Srivasa and Gadadhara weep; Vasudeva Datta, Murari and Vakreshvara weep.
- 16.3. Vasudeva and Narahari weep aloud;
Sri Raghunandana, weeping, rolls in the dust.⁴³
- 16.4. Haridasa weeps, closing both eyes;
Nityananda weeps, looking at Shachi's face.
- 16.5. Blissful kirtanas He used to hold in Nadia — remembering all that, Vasu's heart breaks.

42. GPT1 — p. 374, no. 27 (raga suhai, tala somtal), checked against the scan (PDF p. 633); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 27. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. The lament of Navadvipa after the Lord's departure — CB Antya 1; CC Madhya 3. The poet gathers all the companions into one picture of grief, without regard to where each was (Nityananda, for instance, was with the Lord at Katwa).

43. "Vasudeva" is apparently the poet himself (Vasudeva Ghosha), beside Narahari Sarakara of Shrikhanda; Raghunandana is Narahari's nephew, then still a child.

17. Vasu Ghosha — "śuniyā māyera bāṇī kahe prabhu guṇamaṇi..." (GPT1 pp. 379–380, no. 44)

*Shantipura: hearing His mother's lament, the Lord consoles her: birth after birth she is His mother and He her child; so it was with Dhruva's mother, with Kaushalya, and with Yashoda when Krishna went to Mathura; let her worship Krishna; when she weeps and calls, He will come. Shachi is silent in tears; the poet begs the Lord to return to Nadia. Raga pahida.*⁴⁴

- 17.1. Hearing His mother's words, the Lord, the jewel of virtues, says:
"Listen, mother, to My words:
birth after birth you are My mother and I am your child;
all this is written by Providence.
- 17.2. There was Dhruva's mother — she gave her son detachment, and therefore he worships the Lord who holds the disc; Raghunatha, leaving all pleasures, wanders from forest to forest — and mother Kaushalya, they say, ever weeps.⁴⁵
- 17.3. And then, in Dvapara, Krishna went to Mathura, and Nanda's queen and father Nanda remained at home.
So it is with everyone, it is not otherwise:
in vain you grieve, Mother Shachi.
- 17.4. Who will undo what the Creator has ordained?
Knowing this, steady your heart.
Worship Krishna, make this the essence of life — and there is no more samsara: you will attain the treasure of the supreme abode.
- 17.5. When you weep and call Me — I shall come:
this body was nurtured by you.

Bless Me — I am going to Nilachala;
keep Me near in your heart."⁴⁶

- 17.6. The Lord speaks words of comfort, and Shachi remains silent, and tears flow from her eyes.
Vasu says: "Gaurahari, thus I pray:
go back to Nadia again!"

44. GPT1 — pp. 379–380, section "sannyasa", no. 44 (raga pahida), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 638–639); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 44 (only the first line is recognized in the OCR). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; new catalogue entry VG-163. The pada answers Shachi's lament in the preceding GPT pada (no. 43, "nitāi kariyā āge...") — this is PK 2233 with the signature of Vallabha Dasa (in GPT — Vasu; according to Jagadbandhu's note, other collections have a different signature). The meeting with Shachi in Shantipura and the Lord's answer, "I shall always come when you call" — CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1. "Birth after birth you are My mother" — of the eternal relationship: Shachi is the Lord's eternal mother (in Krishna's lila — Yashoda; CC Adi 13).

45. Suniti, Dhruva's mother, instructed her son to seek refuge in the Lord (Bhag. 4.8); Kaushalya is the mother of Rama (Raghunatha), who went into exile in the forest.

46. According to CC Madhya 3, Shachi herself asks her son to live in Puri so that she may have news of Him; the Lord promises to come at her call (and, according to CC, comes to eat her offerings).

- 18. Vasu Ghosha — "nānāna prakāre prabhu māyere sāntvāya..." (GPT1 p. 380, no. 45)

*Shantipura: the Lord consoles His mother, Sita, Advaita's wife, reasons with Shachi; in Advaita's courtyard there is kirtana, Gaura dances embracing Nitai, Advaita follows with outstretched arms lest the Lord fall; Shantipura has become like Navadvipa; Shachi is outwardly sad, but in her heart she is blissful; for ten days the Lord stays with Advaita. Raga dhanashi.*⁴⁷

- 18.1. In many ways the Lord consoles His mother;
Sita, Advaita's wife, reasons with Shachi.
- 18.2. Shachi and all the people of Nadia the Lord comforted with His gracious glance.
- 18.3. Over Shantipura rose the cry of "Hari!" — in Advaita's courtyard the jewel Gaura dances.
- 18.4. He reels in prema, His heart knows no rest;
embracing Nitai, Nimai Pandita weeps.
- 18.5. Advaita, with outstretched arms, follows behind Him, lest Gora crash down to the ground.
- 18.6. On all sides the devotees cry "Hari, Hari!" — Shantipura has become like the city of Navadvipa.
- 18.7. About the Lord there seems the radiance of millions of moons;
in this cord and kaupina prema is manifest.
- 18.8. Seeing such a form, such ecstasy of prema, Mother Shachi is outwardly sorrowful, but in her heart is bliss.
- 18.9. The Avadhuta calms Shachi's heart;
ending the sankirtana, He seats the Lord.⁴⁸
- 18.10. Thus for ten days in Advaita's house
the Lord, blissful at heart, enjoys the meals.

18.11. Vasudeva Ghosha says, clasping His feet:

"This hope of Advaita I will not let go!"⁴⁹

47. GPT1 — p. 380, no. 45 (raga dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 639); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 45 (in the OCR the number is "७६"). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. The Lord in Shantipura for ten days, Shachi cooking for Him, kirtanas in Advaita's house — CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1.

48. The Avadhuta is Nityananda.

49. The sense is unclear: probably the poet, clasping the Lord's feet, does not want to let go of Advaita's hope of keeping Him there (or: the hope he himself places in Advaita).

19. Vasu Ghosha — "prabhu karuṇa-svare bhakata prabodha kare..." (GPT1 pp. 380–381, no. 47)

*The farewell in Shantipura: the Lord, weeping, with joined palms, begs the devotees not to withdraw their mercy from Him: He has left Navadvipa, Shachi and Vishnupriya and with their consent wishes to live in Nilachala — people travelling between Nilachala and Nadia will bring news of Him; embracing Advaita and taking the dust of Shachi's feet, He departs, and Shantipura is filled with weeping. Raga shri-gandhara.*⁵⁰

19.1. The Lord in a plaintive voice consoles the devotees, speaking as He weeps and weeps;

joining His palms, Gaurahari entreats:

"Do not withdraw your mercy from Me in your hearts!

19.2. Leaving My life in Navadvipa, I have put on saffron cloth,

I have left Shachi and Vishnupriya;

in My heart is one hope — to live in Nilachala with the consent of you all.

19.3. Between Nilachala and Nadia people come and go — through them you will have news of Me."

Saying this, Gaurahari, uttering "namo narayana", took hold of Advaita and embraced Him.⁵¹

19.4. Consoling Shachi, taking the dust of her feet, the Lord set out on His way without looking back.

Vasudeva Ghosha says: Gora goes to Nilachala —

Shantipura was filled with weeping.

50. GPT1 — pp. 380–381, no. 47 (raga shri-gandhara), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 639–640); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 47. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. The farewell in Shantipura and the departure for Puri — CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1–2.

51. "Namo narayana" is the greeting exchanged by sannyasis.

20. Vasu Ghosha — "advaita-bilāpe prabhu hailā bikala..." (GPT1 p. 382, no. 53)

*Advaita's lament: moved by His weeping, the Lord in tears says to Him: "Why such bewilderment? You Yourself determined the course of My lila; if I do not go to Nilachala, the lila will be spoiled and all You wished for will be in vain: how then will the name of Hari be preached? Do not grieve like an ordinary man: I am always with You." Advaita is comforted. Raga dhanashi.*⁵²

20.1. At Advaita's lament the Lord was overwhelmed:

like the downpour of shravana, tears pour from His eyes.

20.2. He says to Advaita Acharya: "Why such bewilderment?

You Yourself have determined the course of My lila."⁵³

20.3. If I do not go to Nilachala, the lila will be spoiled, all that You wished for will be in vain.

20.4. How then will the name of Hari be preached?
How will the people of the world find deliverance?

20.5. Why do You grieve like ordinary people?
I am always with You — believe this."

20.6. At the Lord's words Advaita was comforted.
"Glory, glory to Gauranga!" says Vasu Ghosha.

52. GPT1 — p. 382, no. 53 (raga dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 641); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 53. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS.

53. By His call Advaita brought the Lord down into this world, that He might give the world the holy name (CC Adi 3; CB Adi 2) — therefore the Lord says that Advaita "determined the course of His lila". The line "kahena advaitācāryya" is understood as "(the Lord) says to Advaita Acharya" — from the sense of the following verses (20.6: "at the Lord's words").

21. Vasu Ghosha — "āmāra nimāi gela re kemana kare prāṇa..." (GPT1 p. 383, no. 1)

*Shachi's lament: my Nimai is gone — with tulasi beads, together with Bharati, and to everyone He meets He gives the name of Hari; Vishnupriya flings herself in the dust; the poet: "Listen, Shachi Thakurani: Bhagavan has become a sannyasi to deliver living beings." Raga bhatiyari.*⁵⁴

21.1. (Refrain) My Nimai is gone — how my soul aches!
With tulasi beads in His hand Nimai goes with Bharati, and to everyone He sees Nimai gives the name of Hari.

21.2. The daughter-in-law Vishnupriya weeps, flinging herself in the dust:
how will her heart endure, not seeing His face?

21.3. This is the word of Vasudeva Ghosha: listen, Shachi Thakurani — to deliver living beings, Bhagavan has become a sannyasi.⁵⁵

54. GPT1 — p. 383, section "The lament of Shachi and Vishnupriya", no. 1 (raga bhatiyari), checked against the scan (PDF p. 642); GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 1. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS.

55. The signature consoles Shachi with the truth about the Lord's sannyasa: He took it for the deliverance of all (CC Adi 17: sannyasa, so that even the scoffers would bow to a sannyasi and receive mercy).

22. Vasu Ghosha — "hede re nadiyāra cāmḍa bāchā re nimāi..." (GPT1 p. 383, no. 2)

*Shachi, embracing her son by the neck and kissing Him, implores: she, unfortunate, has no one else; He has abandoned His old mother and left Vishnupriya in her care; all Nadia weeps — let Him come home and sing kirtana with Srivasa, Haridasa, Murari, Mukunda and Vasu; she will call the brahmanas, and He will be given the sacred thread again. Raga suhai.*⁵⁶

22.1. "O moon of Nadia, my child Nimai!
Your unfortunate mother has no one else."

22.2. Saying this, Shachi embraced Gauranga by the neck and, in the fullness of affection, kisses the lotus of His face.

22.3. "Me, Your old mother, You have abandoned, and the daughter-in-law Vishnupriya You have hung upon my neck.

22.4. For You all the people of Nadia weep; come home, my child — let the grief go far away.

22.5. Srinivasa, Haridasa and all the devotees — with all of them, my child, perform kirtana.

22.6. Murari, Mukunda, Vasu and Haridasa — why, leaving them all, did You take sannyasa?

22.7. What You did, You did — come back!
I shall call the brahmanas, and You will be given the sacred thread again."⁵⁷

22.8. Vasudeva Ghosha says: "Listen to my word:
go back again to Nadia, Gaura, jewel of virtues!"

56. GPT1 — p. 383, no. 2 (raga suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 642); GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 2. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Shachi holds her son in her arms — apparently at the meeting in Shantipura (CC Madhya 3); "Srinivasa" (śrīnibāsa) here is Srivasa.

57. A sannyasi removes the sacred thread (upavita); Shachi wants to give her son back the life of a brahmana householder. Her plea is motherly love (vatsalya), unaware of the Son's majesty.

23. Vasu Ghosha — "kāṁḍe debī biṣṇupriyā nija aṅga āchāṛiyā..." (GPT1 pp. 387–388, no. 17)

*Vishnupriya's lament: rolling on the ground, she says: "My lord, You have cast me adrift in boundless waters; at whose word did You take sannyasa? Even Raghunatha went to the forest together with Janaki; even Krishna, going to Mathura, sent Uddhava to the gopis and so preserved their lives. I shall give this body to the Ganga." Raga pahida.*⁵⁸

23.1. Devi Vishnupriya weeps, flinging herself down, rolling and rolling on the ground.
"O my lord, what have You done? You have cast me adrift in boundless waters and gone!" — so she says, sobbing.

23.2. "Leaving this house and Your mother, making me helpless, at whose word did You take sannyasa?
Even in the Vedas I hear: Raghunatha went to the forest only taking Janaki with Him."⁵⁹

23.3. And formerly the son of Nanda, when He went to Mathura, leaving all the gopis,
sent Uddhava to them, gave them news of Himself — and so preserved their lives."⁶⁰

23.4. No more shall I see the moon-face, no more serve Your feet, there will be no more that happy life;
this body I shall give to the Ganga, I shall take Your refuge."
Vasu has no hope of life."⁶¹

58. GPT1 — pp. 387–388, no. 17 (raga pahida), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 646–647); GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 17. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Below the text Jagadbandhu gives three variants (without naming the source): "mui", "eṇi", "rāmāyaṇe" (see the full version of the book).

59. Variant (GPT1 note): "in the Ramayana" instead of "in the Vedas". Rama took Sita (Janaki) with Him into His forest exile.

60. Uddhava, sent by Krishna from Mathura to Vraja with a message for the gopis (Bhag. 10.46–47). Vishnupriya reproaches the Lord: He has not left her even a message. Her lament is the lament of a wife in separation; Vishnupriya herself, according to tradition, afterwards lived under a strict vow, chanting the holy name.

61. "I shall give my body to the Ganga" is an image of the utmost despair of separation, not the description of an event.

24. Vasu Ghosha — "hede re parāṇa nilajiyā..." (GPT1 p. 388, no. 21)

*Vishnupriya reproaches her "shameless" life for not leaving the body: Gauranga has left her, He has become a sannyasi and gone — the happiness of this life is over. Raga bhupali.*⁶²

- 24.1. "O my shameless life, you have still not left the body!
- 24.2. Gauranga has left me — what honour do you still have?
- 24.3. Will you ever find Gaurangachand again?
In vain you will live in hope of love.
- 24.4. Becoming a sannyasi, my lord has gone — the happiness of this life is over."
- 24.5. So, weeping, Vishnupriya speaks.
Vasu says: life will not remain.

62. GPT1 — p. 388, no. 21 (raga bhupali), checked against the scan (PDF p. 647); GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 21. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS.

25. Vasu Ghosha — "dhika yāu e chāra jībane..." (GPT1 p. 389, no. 22)

*Lament in separation: fie on this worthless life — where has Gora, the life of my life, gone? I shall not see the moon-face nor hear His words; gone is the happiness He gave — a spear has remained in my heart; day and night I think only of the pauper's treasure — His reddish feet; fate has turned away. Raga vibhasa.*⁶³

- 25.1. Fie on this worthless life!
Where has Gora gone, the life of my life?
- 25.2. Without Gora my soul is distraught and overwhelmed, ceaselessly tears brim over in my eyes.
- 25.3. I shall not see the moon-face, I shall not hear His words —
I think: without Gora I shall enter the earth.
- 25.4. Gone is the happiness and all the wealth my lord bestowed — like a spear (the separation) has remained in my heart.
- 25.5. Apart from Gora, night and day nothing else is in my mind:
ceaselessly I think of the pauper's treasure.⁶⁴
- 25.6. The reddish soles of His feet are exceedingly beautiful — for them my heart intensely longs.
- 25.7. Fate was favourable — now it has turned away.
Says Vasudeva Ghosha: life will not remain.

63. GPT1 — p. 389, no. 22 (raga vibhasa), checked against the scan (PDF p. 648); GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 22. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Below the text in GPT1 there are five variants (without naming the source; see the full version of the book). The speaker, judging from the place in the section, is Vishnupriya (or Shachi); she is not named in the text.

64. "The pauper's treasure" — the Lord, the only wealth of one who has nothing.

26. Vasu Ghosha — "śuniyā bhakata-dukha bidariyā yāya buka..." (GPT1 pp. 409–410, no. 23)

Hearing of the devotees' sorrow, the Lord comes with His companions to Nadia in the twinkling of an eye; Gadadhara lies senseless, Narahari beside him; the Lord, rolling on the ground, cries out: "What have I done! May lightning strike the sannyasa — I will not go to Nilachala, I shall stay with the devotees!" — and loses consciousness; the companions lay Him in Gadadhara's lap, and both float in bliss. Raga dhanashi.⁶⁵

26.1. Hearing of the devotees' sorrow, His heart breaking,
Gora goes with His companions;
He whose going is swift crosses a yojana in a moment — and here is the meeting with the devotees in Nadia.⁶⁶

26.2. Gadadhara lies senseless, Narahari is beside him, no one else can speak.
Seeing the devotees' state, the sannyasi sage, rolling on the ground, speaks to Gadadhara.⁶⁷

26.3. "Alas, what have I done! May lightning strike the sannyasa:
My heart is like stone!
I will not go to Nilachala — I shall stay with the devotees."
Saying this, He lost consciousness.

26.4. The companions who were with Him ran up, lifted Gauranga and laid Him in Gadadhara's lap;
feeling each other's touch, both speak softly, softly and float in an ocean of bliss.

26.5. The eyes were cooled, seeing the face of Sri Gauranga, by the touch the heart was soothed:
"I shall not let Him go again — I shall keep Him in my heart!" — and Vasu Ghosha's bliss increased.

65. GPT1 — pp. 409–410, section "antya-lila" (the final pastimes), no. 23 (raga dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 668–669); GPT2 — sec. 5.5, no. 23. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. In GPT the pada stands before Vasu's pada on the coming of the people of Nadia to the Lord (no. 24 = PK 2041, chapter 9, no. 6), i.e. it concerns the Lord's coming to Navadvipa on His way to Vrindavana (1514/15; CC Madhya 16; CB Antya 3). The poet depicts this meeting in his own way: with him Gadadhara is in Nadia (according to CC Madhya 16 Gadadhara accompanied the Lord from Puri to Cuttack) and the Lord resolves to stay.

66. "Crosses a yojana in a moment" — hearing the devotees' call, the Lord comes to them, however long the way; the power of His love for His devotees.

67. The reading "gadādhara-bhāṣā" (lit. "Gadadhara's speech") is found in both editions of GPT; possibly a corruption of "gadagada bhāṣā" ("in a choked voice").

27. Vasu Ghosha — "āju re kanakācala nīlācale gorā..." (GPT1 p. 341, no. 64)

*Phagu in Nilachala: Gora, like a golden mountain, is lost in the play of colours together with Govinda; on His neck sways a garland of bakula, red with colour; the devotees, red with colour, sing sweetly; bhavas spread over His body, His eyes are half-closed in waves of prema; looking at Gadadhara, He smiles softly. Raga todi.*⁶⁸

27.1. Today Gora, a golden mountain, in Nilachala together with Govinda is lost in the play of colours.⁶⁹

27.2. On His neck sways a garland of bakula, red with colour;
the devotees, red with colour, sing sweetly.

27.3. So many bhavas arise — they have spread over all His body;
His eyes are half-closed in waves of prema.

27.4. Looking at Gadadhara, He smiles softly, softly — that smile Vasudeva Ghosha did not understand.

68. GPT1 — p. 341, section "festivals of the year", no. 64 (raga todī), checked against the scan (PDF p. 600); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 64. The pada repeats almost word for word — shorter and with the signature of Vasudeva Ghosha — the pada of Govinda Dasa PK 1463 ("nīlācale kanakācala gorā...", vol. 2; = GPT1 p. 341, no. 66; also in PS), which Jagadbandhu placed right here, one pada later. Probably this is a recension of Govinda Dasa's pada which, by mistake or by singers' custom, received Vasu's signature; the attribution to Vasu Ghosha is highly doubtful. Another pada on the phagu in Nilachala is by Madhavi Dasa (PK 2290; chapter 6).

69. Govinda is Krishna; in Puri, at the festival of Dola-yatra, His festival Deity (Dola-Govinda) is sprinkled with coloured powder. Perhaps the poet means the Lord's play with the Deity at this festival.

28. Vasu Ghosha — "svarūpera kare dhari bale kām̐di gaurahari..." (GPT1 pp. 306–307, no. 25)

*The Lord in the bhava of Radha disappointed in Her waiting (vipralabdha): holding Svarupa's hand, He weeps — the night has passed in vain, the moon has set, Shyama has not come; the bed of flowers has wilted, the garland has withered; "Come, Svarupa, to the Suradhuni, let us set all this afloat; let honour and family be lost — I shall throw Myself into the water"; the poet: where can the pain of this heart be eased? Raga kamoda.*⁷⁰

28.1. Holding Svarupa's hand, weeping, Gaurahari says:

"My Shyama is not with Me!

In vain have I spent the night — the moon has set;

My heart is breaking.

28.2. (Refrain) Where is My beloved Shyama?

The bed of flowers has wilted, the garland has withered —

I have not tasted the honey of Shyama's love.

28.3. Come, Svarupa, let us go to the waters of the Suradhuni — let us set all this afloat.

Let honour and family be lost — I shall live no more:

I shall leap into the water and give up My life.⁷¹

28.4. That dark moon of Mine — in whose bower does He spend the night?

Why has He turned away from Me?"

Says Vasudeva Ghosha: in this sorrow the heart burns — where can the pain of this heart be eased?⁷²

70. GPT1 — pp. 306–307, section on the vipralabdha, no. 25 (raga kamoda), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 565–566); GPT2 — sec. 4.5, no. 25. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Majumdar considers that the pada does not belong to Vasu: Svarupa Damodara was not the Lord's companion in Navadvīpa (at that time he was called Purushottama Acharya), while the Suradhuni (the Ganga) here points to Navadvīpa. Cf. another GPT pada with the same signature and the same opening, "svarūpera kare dhari gorārāya" (chapter 3, no. 14). Such bhavas of the Lord in Puri, in the company of Svarupa — CC Antya 14–19.

71. Radha's words in separation: "let honour and family be lost" is a sign of prema that gives up for Krishna everything the world values; this is not worldly passion but the highest, pure love (CC Adi 4). The Lord in the bhava of Radha speaks Her words (Svarupa in this lila is Radha's friend Lalita). "I shall leap into the water" is the utmost expression of separation (vipralambha), in which prema reaches its peak.

72. "The dark moon" (kālaśaśī) is Krishna; the kunjā is a bower-grove in Vrindavana.

29. Vasu Ghosha — "ki ānanda khaṇḍapure ṭhākura naraharira ghare..." (GPT1 p. 353, no. 30)

The festival at Shrikhanda: in the house of Narahari Thakura all the mahantas gather, the twelve gopas, the sixty-four mahantas and the six Gosvamis; Srinivasa seats everyone according to rank, in the middle — Gaurahari between the two Prabhus, Nityananda and Advaita; Raghunandana serves the food, Mahaprabhu puts a mouthful into Nitai's mouth, Narahari and Gadadhara feed each other; after the meal Srinivasa gives out garlands and sandal. Raga dhanashi.⁷³

29.1. What bliss in Shrikhanda, in the house of Narahari Thakura!

Who can describe the joy of this festival?

All the mahantas have come and, floating in the rasa of the bliss of prema, gaze at the moon of Gaura's face.

29.2. The twelve gopalas and with them the sixty-four mahantas, and then the six Gosvamis;

all the branches and sub-branches — all the devotees have come, joyfully singing Gaura's qualities.⁷⁴

29.3. Srinivasa seated each one in his place —

the mahantas sat in rows;

according to each one's standing he seated them all,
and between the two Prabhus — Gaurahari.

29.4. On the right — Nityananda, on the left — Advaitachandra, and to His left — Gadadhara Acharya.

All sat down to the meal; then Raghunandana came and began to serve the food.

29.5. Mahaprabhu in joyful delight, taking a mouthful in His hand, puts it into Nitai's mouth;

so also Narahari and Gadadhara feed each other in the happiness of prema.

29.6. After the meal — the cry: "Glory to Gaura, jewel of brahmanas!" — and all together rinsed their mouths.

Srinivasa in joyful delight, taking mouth-fresheners, gave everyone garlands and sandal.

29.7. Blessed is Narahari Thakura, in whose house Sri Chaitanya is present Himself — together with Nityananda!

Seeing this, the Vaishnavas cry "Hari!" again and again —
Vasu begs for His two feet.⁷⁵

73. GPT1 — p. 353, section ashtakaliya, no. 30 (raga dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 612); GPT2 — sec. 5.2, no. 30. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Majumdar cites it as an example of forgery in GPT: the participation of the six Gosvamis is impossible — they never left Vrindavana together; moreover, the festival is arranged by Srinivasa Acharya, who came to Shrikhanda only after the Lord's departure (Bhakti-ratnakara, Prema-vilasa). The attribution to Vasu Ghosha is unreliable (D).

74. The twelve gopalas are companions of Nityananda (in the bhava of the cowherd boys of Vraja); the sixty-four mahantas are devotee-preachers in Bengal (a later tradition); the six Gosvamis are Rupa, Sanatana, Jiva, Gopala Bhatta, Raghunatha Bhatta and Raghunatha Dasa. "Branches and sub-branches" — the image of the tree of Chaitanya (CC Adi 10–12).

75. The presence of Chaitanya and Nityananda "Themselves" at a festival arranged by Srinivasa is understood in the tradition as Their appearance (avirbhava) in the devotees' kirtana: thus, according to the Bhakti-ratnakara and the Narottama-vilasa, the Lord with His companions appeared at the festival in Kheturi. The poet, however, describes the festival as if the Lord were present in person, together with Gadadhara, Advaita and Narahari.

Chapter 13. Balarama Dasa, Murari, Yadunatha, Ananta, Ramachandra: Padas from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — from Krishna's Resolve to the Prayers

*This chapter continues the group of padas known from the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed. by Jagadbandhu Bhadra, 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934), excluding padas in nagari-bhava. Here are padas signed by Balarama Dasa, Yadunatha Dasa, Murari, Ananta (Raya Ananta) and Ramachandra, in the order of the GPT sections (that is, of the lilas): the nandi prologue (Krishna's resolve to appear as Gaura), praise of the Gaura-avatara and wonder at the sannyasa, Gaura and Gadadhara, childhood plays, the kirtanas of Navadvipa, the bhava of Radha, the Lord's morning, the people of Nadia in Shantipura, the waiting for His return, praise of Nityananda and Advaita, the books of Jiva Gosvami, and prayers. Checking against the Padakalpataru (PK) showed that nine padas listed as "GPT only" or missing from the catalogue altogether are in PK (nos. 4–7, 9, 15, 19–21) — there the text follows PK with the GPT variants; no. 4 is signed by Vasu Ghosha in PK, no. 5 by "Natavara," no. 8 is Balarama's pada PK 2201 (formerly misidentified with Lochana's pada PK 2203; corrected in the full PK check of chapter 16). Seven padas (nos. 4, 5, 8, 9, 19, 20, 25) were missing from the stage-1 catalogue: they were found in a full check of the signatures of GPT1. Majumdar considers the GPT unreliable for attribution; padas of several poets are known under the signature "Balarama Dasa"; the "Ramachandra" of nos. 24–25 is, by his own words, a grandson of Vamshivadana who lived after the Lord's departure. The attribution of the padas of this chapter is therefore provisional. The full PK check (chapter 16) found nos. 16 (PK 2512) and 18 (PK 1976) in PK as well; their variants have been added. The Bengali original, the variants of GPT1/GPT2, PK and KGC, and the word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.*

1. Balarama Dasa — "śunaite rāi bacana adharāmṛta..." (GPT1 p. 2, no. 2)

*Prologue (nandi) of the Gaura-pada-tarangini: having heard Radha tell of Her dream in which She saw a golden youth, Krishna reveals to Her that He Himself will take that form: three desires — to know what Her prema is like, what its sweetness is, and what happiness She tastes — were not fulfilled in Vraja; taking Her bhava and lustre, making Her prema His guru, He will rise in Nadia.*¹

- 1.1. Hearing the nectar of Rai's words, the clever Kanu, full of rasa, received, know it, the fair one's consent — to reveal Her bhava in His own self.²
- 1.2. "Beautiful one, the form of Gaura you have spoken of no one knows: only by your prema will you make Me such."
- 1.3. "What your prema is like, what its sweetness, in what happiness you are absorbed — these three longed-for treasures were not fulfilled in Vraja; what can I say — I have found no end to them."³
- 1.4. Having pondered, I have understood: except in your very form this joy can never be tasted.
Taking your bhava and lustre, making your prema My guru, I shall rise in Nadia.
- 1.5. I shall fulfil My heart's longing, remove My heart's obstacle, distribute to the world the treasure of prema."
Balarama Dasa says: my Lord is all-merciful — and I, lowest of men, have not served Him.

1. GPT1 — printed p. 2, section "Nandi, or Prelude" (nāṇḍī vā pūrvābhāsa), no. 2, no raga given; checked against the IA scan in.ernet.dli.2015.477854 (PDF p. 261); GPT2 — sec. 1.1, no. 2. The pada is not in the Padakalpataru (PK), the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR), the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC) or the Padamrita-samudra (PS). Padas nos. 2–4 are a dialogue of Krishna and Radha continuing no. 1 (Radha's dream of a golden youth, signed by Jagadananda) and concluded by no. 5 (Vaishnava Dasa). Majumdar considers the GPT unreliable for attribution; padas of several poets are known under the signature "Balarama Dasa," and this pada on the purpose of the Gaura-avatara contains nothing pointing to an eyewitness — the attribution is provisional (C).

2. Kanu (Kan) is Krishna. "To reveal Her bhava in Himself" is what Krishnadasa Kaviraja names as the cause of the Gaura-avatara: Krishna, taking Radha's bhava and lustre, tastes His own sweetness (CC Adi 1.5–6; 4).

3. The three desires — CC Adi 1.6 and 4: to know the greatness of Radha's love, the sweetness of Himself which Radha tastes, and the happiness She feels. The poet puts this theological motif into Krishna's mouth almost word for word.

2. Balarama Dasa — "bāṁdhu he śunaite kām̐pai dehā..." (GPT1 p. 2, no. 3)

*Radha's reply: at this news Her body trembles — He is the life of Vraja; like a fish without water or a serpent without its jewel, Vraja cannot live a moment without Him; will He, leaving Her, reveal prema with His brother and friends on the bank of another river?*⁴

2.1. "Beloved, hearing this my whole body trembles.

You are the life of Vraja: without You how will Vraja keep its footing?

2.2. As a fish without water, as a serpent without its jewel gives up its life, so Vraja without the sight of You for even half a moment — You know what its state will be.

2.3. Having finished everything, what perfection will You attain, what happiness will You find?

Will others know Your heart? For this my breast is torn.

2.4. You dwell in the groves and bowers of Vrindavana, You, Kanu, best of lovers; day and night, without the sight of You, all will pine and give up their lives.

2.5. With Your elder brother, with Your friends You will sport on the river bank — and forgetting me You will reveal prema?" Balarama Dasa does not understand.⁵

4. GPT1 — p. 2, no. 3, no raga (scan PDF p. 261); GPT2 — sec. 1.1, no. 3. In 2.5 GPT1 reads "pāsarabi mujhe" (you will forget me), GPT2 "parihari mujhe" (abandoning me). Radha's anguish is not worldly sorrow but the highest prema (mahabhava) by which Vraja lives; the fear of separation is inseparable from it (CC Madhya 2).

5. "Elder brother" — Balarama, who appeared in the Gaura-lila as Nityananda; "friends" — the cowherd boys who became the Lord's associates. The "river bank" (yamunāṭaṭa) is in the poem the bank of the Yamuna; in the Gaura-lila its place is taken by the Ganga of Navadvipa. Radha's fear is answered by Krishna in the next pada: He will not leave Vraja (3.4) — in Bhaktisiddhanta's teaching Navadvipa and Vraja are non-different, and Gaura is Radha and Krishna in one form (CC Adi 4.55–56).

3. Balarama Dasa — "śunaha sundari majhu abhilāṣa..." (GPT1 p. 2, no. 4)

*Krishna's reply: He will reveal the prema of Vraja; with all the cowherd men and boys He will sport in Nadia; the two bodies will merge into one, and He will ceaselessly repeat Her name; He will never leave Vraja — without Vraja prema is not attained.*⁶

3.1. "Hear, beautiful one, My desire:

the prema of Vraja I shall reveal to the world.

3.2. Gathering all the cowherd men and boys, in the town of Nadia I shall begin My play.

3.3. Our bodies, joined, will become one, and My lips will ceaselessly repeat your name.

3.4. Leaving Vraja, I shall never go away:

without Vraja prema is not attained.

3.5. With the bhava of Vraja I shall fulfil My heart's desire" — this Balarama Dasa has known by realization.⁷

6. GPT1 — p. 2, no. 4, no raga (scan PDF p. 261; the last line is smudged in the scan, the reading "anubhabi jānala" is confirmed by GPT2); GPT2 — sec. 1.1, no. 4.

7. "Two bodies will become one" — Gaura is Radha and Krishna united in one form (CC Adi 1.5; 4.55); "repeat Her name" — the Lord in Navadvipa and Puri cries "Radha, Radha!" "The heart's desire" (mana-kāma) is the thirst to taste Radha's love, not worldly lust.

4. Vasu Ghosha (in GPT1 — Balarama Dasa) — "purabe bāndhila cūrā ebe keśa-hīna..." (PK 2255; GPT1 p. 18, no. 47)

*The Lord's sannyasa as Krishna's transformation: formerly He tied His hair in a top-knot — now His head is shaven; instead of the milk-pail in His left hand — the sannyasi's water-pot; in the Treta-yuga He held the bow, in the Dvapara the flute, in the Kali-yuga He took the staff; Balarama has become an avadhuta, Kanai a sannyasi. Raga gandhara.*⁸

4.1. Formerly He tied His hair in a top-knot — now He is without hair; leaving the dress of the best of dancers, He has put on the kaupina.

4.2. A pail for milking the cows was in His left hand — after that very pattern Gora has taken the sannyasi's water-pot.⁹

4.3. In the Treta-yuga He held the bow, in the Dvapara the flute; in the Kali-yuga, taking the staff, He has become a sannyasi.

4.4. Vasu Ghosha says: listen, people of Nadia:
Balarama is an avadhuta, Kanai a sannyasi!¹⁰

8. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 288 (printed p. 277), 21st pallava "The sannyasa of Sri Gauranga, etc.," label " ଓଟ ସଂହାର ", raga gandhara, MS P-R-Sa no. 2310 — signed by Vasu Ghosha (4.4: "bāsughoṣa kahe..."). GPT1 — p. 18, section "Mangalacharana," no. 47 (gandhara), checked against the scan (PDF p. 277): the same pada, but in 4.4 "balarāma kahe śuna nādīyānibāṣī," i.e. signed by Balarama; the compiler of GPT1 himself noted that a manuscript and PK ascribe it to Vasu Ghosha. GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 47. The pada was missing from the stage-1 catalogue (new row); the attribution to Vasu Ghosha (per PK) is preferable: the signature "Balaram" in GPT1 probably arose from the second half of 4.4, where Balarama's name refers to Nityananda.

9. Kaupina — the loincloth of the renunciant; karanga (karaṅga) — the sannyasi's water-pot (kamandalu). The poet sets the marks of Krishna the cowherd beside those of Gaura the sannyasi: the milk-pail in His left hand has "become" the water-pot.

10. Avadhuta — a renunciant above outward rules; so Nityananda was called, who is Balarama (CC Adi 5; CB Adi 9). Kanai (Kanu) is Krishna, appearing as Gauranga. The Lord's sannyasa is not the renunciation of a conditioned soul but a lila for the deliverance of the people of Kali-yuga (CC Adi 17; CB Madhya 26).

5. Balarama Dasa (in PK — "Natavara") — "gopīgaṇa-kuca-kuṅkume bañcita..." (PK 2250; GPT1 p. 18, no. 48)

*Wonder at the Lord's sannyasa: He whom the maidens of Vraja embraced, whose body was coloured with their kunkuma, is now in saffron cloth, covered with thrills, with streams of tears of prema; the dark-bodied Dancer of Vrindavana has become a pauper begging prema from house to house. Raga dhanashi (in GPT1 — kedara).*¹¹

5.1. Bereft of the kunkuma from the gopis' breasts, He has a ruddy cloth shining on His body;
His body, whose lustre puts gold to shame, is from the joy of Rai's touch.¹²

5.2. Look, look — the wondrous play of Gaura!
He who was the teacher of love to hundreds of thousands of young maidens has now taken sannyasa.¹³

5.3. He whom the maidens of Vraja ceaselessly held in their firm embrace is now all thrilling with goosebumps, and tears of prema stream from His eyes.

5.4. That best of dancers, with a body dark as a rain-cloud, who roamed the forest of Vrinda — says Natavara — now, a pauper, begs prema from house to house.¹⁴

11. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 286 (printed p. 275), 21st pallava, label " ଓଓ ଝଝଓ ", raga dhanashi, MSS P-R-Sa no. 2355 and P-R no. 12 — signature "kahaye naṭabara" (according to Ray's apparatus, P-R-Sa reads "balarāma"). GPT1 — pp. 18–19, no. 48 (kedara), checked against the scan (PDF p. 277): "kahaye balarāma naṭabara so aba..." — signed by Balarama. GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 48. In PK the pada follows PK 2249 of Balarama (chapter 11, no. 16), where it was noted that PK 2250 is signed "Natavara" and had not been translated; it was missing from the catalogue (new row). Attribution to Balarama — per P-R-Sa and GPT1 (C).

12. The first half-line in PK reads "kuṅkume bañcita" ("bereft of the kunkuma"); formerly Krishna's body was ruddy with the gopis' kunkuma, now the sannyasi's cloth is ruddy; GPT1 reads "kuṅkume rañjita" ("coloured with kunkuma"). Gaura's golden lustre comes from Radha's touch: He has taken Her complexion (CC Adi 4).

13. "Guru-lampata" (guru lampāṭa) — literally "the foremost of lovers": the language of madhurya-rasa. The gopis' love for Krishna is not worldly passion but the purest prema, only called "kama" (CC Madhya 8; Adi 4.165–171); the contrast in the pada stresses that the same Krishna, the Lord of Vraja, has become a renunciant.

14. "Natavara" — in PK apparently the poet's name (or an epithet of Krishna taken by a scribe for a signature); in P-R-Sa and GPT1 — "Balarama." "A beggar of prema" — the Lord, who Himself distributes prema, in the mood of a devotee begs it of everyone (CC Adi 7).

6. Yadunatha Dasa — "gaura-baraṇa tanu sundara sukhamaya..." (PK 2180; GPT1 p. 36, no. 28)

*Gaura and Gadadhara in Navadvipa: a golden body full of bliss, a heart full of compassion; at Gaura's left is the beloved Gadadhara, and the hidden rasa is revealed, as if the circle of the rasa; in Nadia there are so many moons that the darkness has gone far away; Gaura and Gadadhara are a lake of prema that has overflowed the earth. Raga the same as that of the preceding PK pada (in GPT1 — kamoda).*¹⁵

6.1. A golden-hued body — beautiful, full of bliss; a compassionate heart — an abode of rasa; a garland of jasmine and oleander, woven row upon row, sways — a forest garland.

6.2. At Gaura's left is the best one, the beloved Gadadhara: the hidden rasa is revealed; as if the circle of the rasa had shone forth — and their speech falters with prema.¹⁶

6.3. In the town of Nadia so many moons — the darkness has gone far away;
however many spotless lamps are lit — beside them they cannot even be discerned.

6.4. Gaura and Gadadhara are a lake of prema: overflowing, it has filled the earth;
Dasa Yadunatha, cheated by fate, not getting even a touch of it, weeps.¹⁷

15. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 261 (printed p. 250), label " ଓଓ ଝଝଓ ", raga "tathā" (the same as PK 2179), MS P-R-Sa no. 2288. GPT1 — p. 36, no. 28 (kamoda), checked against the scan (PDF p. 295); GPT2 — sec. 3.1 (OCR, line 25224). In the catalogue (YD-006) the pada was listed as "GPT only"; it is found in PK — core. In PK it stands among Nayananda's padas on Gaura and Gadadhara. On Yadunatha Dasa (Kavichandra), a fellow villager of Jagannatha Mishra, see the catalogue (CB Madhya 1; CC Adi 11); other padas signed "Yadunatha Dasa" in PK are PK 2125, 2126, 2191 (chapter 6).

16. Gadadhara Pandita is the Lord's eternal associate, in whom Vaishnavas see a manifestation of Radha (GGD 147–153); the "hidden rasa" is their prema, not worldly intimacy. The "circle of the rasa" is the image of Krishna's rasa-lila showing through the kirtana of Gaura and Gadadhara.

17. "Cheated by fate" is the usual formula of humility in a poet's signature.

7. Balarama Dasa — "yata yata abatāra-sāra..." (PK 2346; GPT1 p. 38, no. 37)

*Praise of the Gaura-avatara: among all incarnations the incarnation of Gora is renowned; prema for Krishna, inaccessible even to Brahma, the Lord distributed down to the chandalas; the flood of prema has drowned foreigners and unbelievers, beasts and birds sing and weep in kirtana — only Balarama has been left out. Raga bhatiyari.*¹⁸

7.1. Of all and all the incarnations the essence — renowned has remained my incarnation of Gora!

7.2. Prema for Krishna and the treasure of the Name, hard for even Brahma to obtain, the Lord gave down to the chandalas and filled the world with them.

7.3. In the flood of prema foreigners, unbelievers and the rest — all people, immersed, laugh, dance and sing.

7.4. Beasts and birds, tigers, deer, the creatures of the waters laugh, weep, dance, sing and perform kirtana.

7.5. Heaven, earth and the netherworlds have drowned in prema for Gora — left out has been only Dasa Balarama.

18. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 320 (printed p. 309), 23rd pallava, label " ॐ ॐॐॐ ", raga bhatiyari, MS P-R-Sa no. 2450; it is followed in PK by PK 2347 (chapter 12, no. 1). GPT1 — p. 38, no. 37 (bhatiyari), checked against the scan (PDF p. 297); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 37. In the catalogue (BD-009) the pada was listed as "GPT only"; it is found in PK — core (C). A chandala is an outcaste beyond the varnas; the gift of prema to all without distinction — CC Adi 7; CB Madhya 13.

8. Balarama Dasa — "saba abatāra sāra gorā abatāra..." (PK 2201; GPT1 p. 38, no. 39)

*Praise of the Gaura-avatara: such mercy there has never been; the Lord, entreating, gave prema to the humble and fallen; whoever does not serve such a treasure of mercy drinks poison with his own hands and will not be saved even in millions of kalpas. Raga shri.*¹⁹

8.1. The essence of all incarnations is the incarnation of Gora:
such mercy is seen nowhere else.

8.2. To the humble, the destitute, the low, the fallen — to each one the Lord, entreating and entreating, gave the treasure of prema.

8.3. Whoever does not serve such a treasure of mercy has lifted poison with his own hand and drunk it.

8.4. Whoever has been left out at such an incarnation will find no deliverance even in millions of kalpas.

8.5. And I, low as I am, have not served such a Lord — says Balarama: now I am burning and perishing.²⁰

19. GPT1 — p. 38, no. 39 (shri), checked against the scan (PDF p. 297); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 39. The pada is in PK — PK 2201 (vol. 3, 20th pallava "Śrī-Gauracandra — prakārāntara," PDF p. 269, printed p. 258, label " ॐ ॐॐ ", raga "tathā", MS P-R-Sa no. 2309) — with the same signature of Balarama ("...kahe balarāma ebe marinu puṛiyā" — "now I am burning"). The earlier statement that 8.1–8.4 are the beginning of Lochana Dasa's pada PK 2203 was mistaken: PK 2203 begins "ke yābe ke yābe bhāi bhāba-sindhu pāra" (MS P-R-Sa no. 2311) and merely stands near this pada (corrected in the full PK check, chapter 16). Balarama's signature is attested both in PK and in GPT — C. The pada was missing from the stage-1 catalogue (row BD-045).

20. "Burning and perishing" (PK: marinu puṛiyā; GPT: paṛiyā — "fallen and perishing") is a formula of penitence in the signature (cf. 7.5); the poet speaks of himself, not of the Lord.

9. Balarama Dasa — "nabadvīpa-gagane uyala dina rāti..." (PK 2196; GPT1 p. 39, no. 40)

*Gaura as a rain-cloud: in the sky of Navadvīpa a cloud stands day and night, watering all that lives; a downpour of the nectar of prema; foul weather has covered the world; the peacock-devotees dance, the frog-non-devotees croak in the water; the creeper of bhakti has overspread the three worlds; the lightning of kirtana has burnt the forest of yoga, the thunder has split knowledge; the serpent of karma is driven out, the chataka is satisfied; the earth has drowned — only Balarama is left on the mountain of samsara. Raga kamoda.*²¹

- 9.1. In the sky of Navadvipa a cloud has risen and stays day and night:
with a downpour of rasa it has watered all that lives — the unmoving and the moving.
- 9.2. Look, look: Gaura is the incarnation of a cloud, ceaselessly raining the nectar of prema!
- 9.3. Since then the whole world is wrapped in foul weather;
with the rasa of Hari the people of the world, intoxicated, have forgotten themselves.
- 9.4. In frenzy the peacock-devotees dance;
the non-devotees — the frogs — croak, sunk in the water.²²
- 9.5. The creeper of bhakti has overspread the three worlds:
the fruit of prema the high and the low have received.
- 9.6. With the thunderbolt of kirtana the forest of yoga is burnt, and knowledge too the cloud's thunder splits apart.
- 9.7. From the hole of the heart the serpent of karma is driven out;
the waves of Kali's burning intoxication have subsided.
- 9.8. The scorched chataka has drunk its fill;
in all ten directions rivers have flowed.
- 9.9. The earth has drowned, for no one is there any dry place — on the mountain of samsara only Balarama is left.²³

21. PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 266–267 (printed pp. 255–256), 20th pallava, label " ଶତ ଶିଖର ", raga kamoda, MS P-R-Sa no. 2304. GPT1 — p. 39, no. 40 (kamoda), checked against the scan (PDF p. 298); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 40. The pada was missing from the catalogue (new row); core (PK, C). core (PK, C).

22. Images of the rainy season: peacocks dance at the sight of clouds, frogs croak in the water; so the Bhagavata describes the rains in Vraja (Bhag. 10.20), and the poet transfers the images to Gaura's kirtana. "Croak" (royata) — literally "weep, wail."

23. The chataka is a bird that drinks only rainwater — an image of the soul thirsting only for prema. "Rivers" (nadiyā) puns on the name Nadia. "The mountain of samsara" — the poet is left "high and dry," not washed by the flood of prema (cf. 7.5).

10. Ananta (Raya Ananta?) — "gaura nabaghana premadhārā bariṣila..." (GPT1 p. 40, no. 44)

*Gaura's mercy as husbandry: the young cloud Gaura has rained down prema; the hard soil of evil thoughts is broken by the ploughing of bhakti, and prema has sprouted in hearts; Nitai waters the shoot with the water of bhakti, and the tree of prema grows day by day, bearing fruit for all. Raga suhai.*²⁴

- 10.1. Gaura, a young rain-cloud, has poured down streams of prema:
thirsty, scorched souls have drunk their fill.
- 10.2. The hard soil of evil thoughts is broken by the tillage of bhakti — in the hearts of living beings a shoot of prema has sprung up.
- 10.3. That shoot Nitai watered with the water of bhakti, and day by day the tree of prema grew higher.
- 10.4. It has borne the fruits of prema for all living beings —
Ananta has been left out by the turns of his own karma.

24. GPT1 — p. 40, no. 44 (suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 299); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 44 (last word "kammaphere"). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: AN-010; the signature given in the catalogue as "...karmadoṣe" reads "karmaphere" in the scan). In GPT it follows the pada of Raya Ananta from KGC (no. 43, chapter 11, no. 3), and the signature "Ananta" here is probably the same poet's — Ananta of Advaita's branch (per M-1961); attribution only by GPT (C). The image of Nityananda watering the shoot of devotion — cf. the "tree of prema," CC Adi 9.

11. Murari — "śacīra āṅginā mājhe bhubanamohana sāje..." (GPT1 p. 77, no. 47)

*Childhood: in the middle of Shachi's courtyard, enchanting the world, little Gorachand crawls on all fours; holding His mother's finger He toddles and falls; a tiger-claw swings at His neck, His chest is wet with dribble, on His moon-face is the lightning of a smile; Shachi takes the dusty child to her breast, but He, crying, climbs down and rolls on the ground again; Murari, laughing, says: this is no child for the lap — Gaurahari will become a sannyasi. Raga pahira.*²⁵

11.1. In the middle of Shachi's courtyard, in an attire that enchants the world, Gorachand crawls on all fours; holding His mother's finger, now He toddles along — and, tripping, falls down.

11.2. A tiger-claw swings at His neck, His chest is wet with dribble, on His moon-face is the lightning of a smile; covered all over with dust — can a mother bear it? — she lifts Him to her breast.

11.3. Crying, displeased at this, Gora climbs down from her lap and rolls on the ground again;

Murari, laughing, says: "This is no child for the lap — Gaurahari will become a sannyasi."²⁶

25. GPT1 — p. 77, section "Childhood plays," no. 47 (pahira), checked against the scan (PDF p. 336); GPT2 — sec. 2.2, no. 47. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Catalogue: MU-001; the row MU-006 ("...hāsiyā murāri bole e nahe kolera chele," after Majumdar's reference to GPT1 p. 77) is the same pada (a duplicate). Majumdar considers this pada doubtful: the signature merely names Murari, and he ascribes the padas on the Lord's infancy to later imagination. The attribution to Murari Gupta is unproven (C). A tiger-claw (bāghanakha) is an amulet on a child's neck.

26. The first syllable of line 11.3 is cut off in the GPT1 scan ("[kām]diyā"), restored by sense and metre. Murari's words foretell the sannyasa; in CB (Adi 4–5) the child's future greatness is spoken of by an astrologer and neighbours, while Murari is Nimai's senior fellow student (CB, Adi-khanda).

12. Murari — "śacīra dulāla manoraṅge..." (GPT1 pp. 77–78, no. 48)

*Children's kirtana: Shachi's darling son plays with boys of His age; Gora is in the middle, the children around Him; holding hands they whirl in time and clap; Gora cries "Hari, Hari!", the children echo, and Kali trembles; Murari is full of joy — the reign of sin is over. Raga kamoda.*²⁷

12.1. Shachi's darling son, with a joyful heart, plays with children of His own age.

12.2. Gora is in the middle, the children all around;
He dances and smiles ever so gently.

12.3. Holding one another by the hand, they whirl in time and dance.

12.4. Now they clap their hands together, now someone cries: "Well done, well done!"

12.5. When Gora calls out "Hari, Hari!" — the children call out "Hari!" along with Him.

12.6. Hearing "Hari bol!" again and again,
Kali trembles, sensing disaster.

12.7. Murari is filled with joy:
the reign of sin is over.²⁸

27. GPT1 — pp. 77–78, no. 48 (kamoda), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 336–337); GPT2 — sec. 2.2, no. 48. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. Catalogue: MU-007 (the first line given in the catalogue, "gorā sabe bale hari hari," after Majumdar's reference, is 12.5). Majumdar allows that it may be an interpolation; the attribution to Murari Gupta is unproven (C).

28. Murari's name in the last couplet is the poet's signature (or a mention of Murari Gupta as a witness). Little Nimai's games, repeating the name of Hari with the children — CB Adi 4; CC Adi 14.

13. Yadunatha (?) — "nityānanda saṅge nāce prabhu gauracandra..." (GPT1 p. 271, no. 76)

*The kirtana of Gaura and Nityananda: the Lord dances with Nityananda, His associates after Him; the earth floats in tears; He embraces the fallen and weeps, calls His devotees, embraces Gadai; He calls Govinda, Madhava and Vasu. Raga suhai.*²⁹

- 13.1. With Nityananda dances the Lord Gaurachandra, and after Him dance His associates — the host of devotees.
- 13.2. The earth floats away on the tears of their eyes; raising both arms, all cry: "Hari, Hari!"
- 13.3. His body quivers with bhava — how many streams flow!
Embracing the fallen by the neck, He sobs.
- 13.4. His own devotees He Himself calls together, and, embracing Gadai by the neck, He weeps again and again.
- 13.5. "Govinda, Madhava, Vasu — come here!" He calls;
Yadu says: the darling of the Lord's life weeps.³⁰

29. GPT1 — p. 271, no. 76 (suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 530); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 76. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. It is entered twice in the catalogue: YD-007 and YN-013 (a duplicate; the signature "yadu kahe" — Yadunatha or Yadunandana, not established); C. Govinda, Madhava and Vasu are the Ghosha brothers, the Lord's kirtana singers (CC Adi 10; Madhya 11).

30. "The darling of the Lord's life" (prabhura parāṇa-putalī, literally "the doll of the Lord's life") — probably Gadadhara (Gadai), named in 13.4.

14. Raya Ananta — "nadīyā-ākāśe saṁkīrtana-megha sāje..." (GPT1 p. 271, no. 79)

*Sankirtana as a thunderstorm: in the sky of Nadia the cloud of kirtana has gathered, khol and karatalas thunder, the roars of "hum" are like thunderclaps; the two Lords rain down the name; the associates dance, and the lightning of bhava flashes; Nadia and Shantipura are flooded with the rain of prema. Raga suhai.*³¹

- 14.1. In the sky of Nadia the cloud of sankirtana has gathered:
khol and karatalas are its deep thunder.
- 14.2. Roars of "hum-hum" — thunderclaps — sound again and again;
the two Lords, the clouds, pour down a rain of the Name.
- 14.3. The associates dance and sing, pausing now and then, and in them the lightning of bhava flashes again and again.
- 14.4. By the rain of prema Nadia and Shantipura are flooded — only the heart of Raya Ananta has not dissolved in this rasa.³²

31. GPT1 — pp. 271–272, no. 79 (suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 531); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 79. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: AN-009, GPT only; C). The signature "Raya Ananta" is as in KGC 11.2 and 28.2 (chapters 4, 11); per M-1961 this is Ananta of Advaita's branch.

32. "The two Lords" — Gaura and Nityananda; "Shantipura" — Advaita's town: the kirtana has swept both places. Literally: "the heart of Raya Ananta did not lose itself in the rasa."

15. Balarama Dasa — "hari hari gorā kene kānde..." (PK 2254; GPT1 p. 289, no. 39)

Why does Gora weep? Having left the bank of the Kalindi and the plays by the kadamba, what does He seek on the shore of the ocean? He who danced the rasa with millions of gopis now, having taken sannyasa, weeps; the eyes at whose glance Kamadeva swooned pour out streams of tears; the head whose top-knot charmed the world is shaven; instead of yellow garments, saffron; instead of the dark form, golden. The poet does not know the reason — the reason is she whose colour it is. Raga suhai (in GPT1 — gandhara).³³

15.1. Hari, Hari! Why does Gora weep?

I do not know in whose snare of love He has been caught.

15.2. Leaving the bank of the Kalindi and the plays by the kadamba, what does He now desire on the shore of the ocean?

15.3. He who danced the rasa with millions of gopis — now, having taken sannyasa, why does He weep?

15.4. Those eyes, at whose play Ananga himself swooned, now pour out hundreds of streams.

15.5. That head whose enchanting top-knot captivated the world — now without hair: everything turned upside down!

15.6. Why has He changed yellow garments for saffron cloth, why has He changed the dark form for a golden hue?

15.7. Balarama Dasa says: I do not know the reason — the reason for it is she whose colour it is.³⁴

33. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 288 (printed p. 277), 21st pallava, label " ୭୭ ୧୧୫୫ ", raga suhai, MS P-R-Sa no. 2309. GPT1 — p. 289, no. 39 (gandhara), checked against the scan (PDF p. 548); GPT2 — sec. 4.3, no. 39. In the catalogue (BD-024) the pada was listed as "GPT only" (in chapter 8 the erroneous link to PK 764 — a pada of Vasu Ghosha with the same opening, translated in chapter 8 — was corrected); it is found in PK — core (C). Kalindi is the Yamuna; the kadamba is the tree of Krishna's plays; the ocean shore is Puri.

34. The poet's answer: Gaura is Krishna who has taken Radha's colour and bhava, and He weeps from Her prema (CC Adi 4). Ananga (Kamadeva) is the god of love; "swooned" — an image of Krishna's beauty, which captivates Cupid himself (Madana-mohana). The Lord's sannyasa and tears are not the sorrow of a conditioned soul but prema.

16. Yadunatha Dasa — "prabhāte jāgila gorācāṁḍa..." (GPT1 p. 349, no. 18)

The Lord's morning in Navadvipa: Gorachand has awoken, and all see Him quite different; His eyes, red with sleep, are half-closed, He stretches like the golden bow of the god of love; the devotees come at dawn; having washed, Gaurahari sits in the circle of His own. Raga suhai.³⁵

16.1. At dawn Gorachand awoke, and all see Him quite different.

16.2. His eyes, reddened with sleep, keep closing, the lids half-shut with languor.

16.3. Interlacing His fingers, He stretches His whole body — like the golden bow of Ananga.³⁶

16.4. The devotees came to see Him and gathered joyfully in the morning.

16.5. Having washed His face, Gaurahari sits down — and His own surround Him on all sides.

16.6. Such are the plays in the town of Nadia;
Yadunatha sees them always, being close by.³⁷

35. GPT1 — p. 349, section "Ashtakaliya" (morning), no. 18 (suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 608); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 18. The pada is not in BR, KGC or PS; it is in PK — PK 2512 (vol. 4, 30th pallava "Aṣṭakālīya nitya-līlā," "atha dibāyāṃ yathā," raga bibhasa, PDF p. 56, label " ॐ ३८३३ "; found in the full PK check of chapter 16 — M-1961's reference is correct; catalogue: YD-003). PK reads "herai sakale bayana chānda" ("all look upon the form of His face") and "yadunātha dekhe gadāi pāśa" ("Yadunatha sees it beside Gadai," that is, Gadadhara); the main text is kept after GPT1, the PK readings are in the full version of the book. The preceding GPT pada (no. 17) is by Ghanashyama, the following (no. 19) by Narahari.

36. Ananga is the god of love; the comparison with his bow is a traditional image of a slender, curving body.

37. The signature seems to speak of the poet as an eyewitness of the Navadvipa plays; on this ground M-1961 considers Yadunatha a contemporary of the Lord (Yadunatha Kavichandra is mentioned among the Lord's associates in CB). GPT only — C.

17. Murari — "calila nadīyāra loka gaurāṅga dekhite..." (GPT1 pp. 378–379, no. 42)

*After the sannyasa: at Nityananda's word the people of Nadia go to Shantipura to see Gauranga — Shachi in front, everyone after her; on every lip is "Ha Gauranga!"; without Gauranga they were living dead and seem to have revived at Nitai's words; Nadia is emptied, and behind them all goes Murari. Raga dhanashi.*³⁸

17.1. The people of Nadia set out to see Gauranga:

Shachi in front, and all the rest behind.

17.2. "Ha Gauranga, ha Gauranga!" is on every lip; streams pour from their eyes, the heart bursts with grief.

17.3. Without Gauranga they had been living dead — and at Nitai's words they seemed to come back to life.

17.4. In the heart one desire: to see Gauranga's face;

all hurry to Shantipura, breathless with running.

17.5. The town of Nadia was emptied of its men; behind them all, following, went Murari.³⁹

38. GPT1 — pp. 378–379, section on the sannyasa, no. 42 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 637–638); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 42. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: MU-008). It continues no. 40 (PK 2231, "prabhure rākhīyā śāntipure," signed by Murari; chapter 6, no. 20), where Nityananda comes to Nadia to call everyone to Shantipura. Majumdar considers Murari Gupta's authorship unproven (C).

39. Nityananda brought Shachi and the people of Navadvipa to Shantipura, to Advaita, where the Lord was after His sannyasa — CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1. "Behind them all went Murari" — Murari Gupta as a witness (or the poet's signature).

18. Yadunatha Dasa — "āsibe āmāra gaurāṅgasundara..." (GPT1 p. 412, no. 29)

*Waiting: my Gaurangasundara will come to Nadia! Seeing Him from afar I shall perform the auspicious rites — set out water-pots with mango twigs, plant banana saplings, hang garlands; the women of Nadia will run to see, in every house "Hari, Hari!" will resound; His mother will rush to Him, embrace Him, bathe Him in tears and take Him home; Yadunatha, looking on, will fall down and take His lotus feet. Raga turi.*⁴⁰

18.1. My Gaurangasundara will come to the town of Nadia!

Seeing Him from afar, thrilled, I shall perform the auspicious rites.

18.2. I shall fill water-pots, set mango twigs in them, and arrange them in rows;

I shall bring banana saplings, plant them, and hang garlands on them.

18.3. Hearing that He has come, the women of Nadia will come running to see;

cries of "Hari, Hari!" and "Jaya, jaya!" will rise in every house.

18.4. Hearing it, His mother will at once rush to Him and take Him in her arms; bathing His body in her tears, she will quickly lead Him home.

18.5. All the devotees, seeing Him, will rejoice in the bliss of prema;
Yadunatha, looking on, will fall prostrate and take His lotus feet.⁴¹

40. GPT1 — p. 412, no. 29 (turi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 671); GPT2 — no. 29 (OCR, line 44957). The pada is not in BR, KGC or PS; it is in PK — PK 1976 (vol. 3, 12th pallava "Bhābollāsa," raga turi, PDF pp. 182–183, printed pp. 171–172, label " ୪ ୨୨୭ "; found in the full PK check of chapter 16; catalogue: YD-004; M-1961 mentions this pada under Yadunatha's name). The PK signature reads "yadunātha yāñā paṇi loṭāiyā" ("Yadunatha, coming, will fall..."; GPT "cāñā," "looking"); the other PK readings are in the full version of the book. C. Water-pots with mango twigs (pūrṇakumbha) and banana saplings at the entrance are Bengali rites of welcome.

41. The pada is a dream of the Lord's return (cf. CC Madhya 16: the Lord comes to Gauda and meets His mother at Kuliya). The speaker is a devotee of Nadia (perhaps the poet himself); the "women of Nadia" here are townswomen, not "nagaris" in the sense of nagari-bhava.

19. Balarama Dasa — "rūpe guṇe anupamā lakṣmī-koṭi-manoramā..." (PK 2299; GPT1 pp. 426–427, no. 43; KGC 23.2)

On Nityananda: He with whom countless maidens of Vraja sported in the rasa-lila — why has He become an avadhuta? The teacher of all lovers, the wish-fulfilling tree of rasa — why does He wander in renunciation? Balarama, from whose chapters come Sankarshana and Shesha, who dwells eternally in Goloka — why is He in the midst of sankirtana? Nityananda has plunged everyone into the rasa of Gaura — only the poet is left aside. Raga kalyani (in KGC and GPT1 — gandhara).⁴²

19.1. Peerless in beauty and virtue, more charming than millions of Lakshmis — the maidens of Vraja, tens of thousands —
He with whom they sported in the joy of the rasa-lila — why has that Lord become an avadhuta?⁴³

19.2. Hari, Hari! To whom shall I tell this sorrow?
The teacher of all lovers, the wish-fulfilling tree of rasa — why does He wander in renunciation?

19.3. Sankarshana and Shesha are incarnations of His chapters and parts; He dwells eternally in Goloka
—
Krishna's elder brother, Mahaprabhu Balarama — why is Nitai in the midst of sankirtana?

19.4. Beyond the reach of Shiva and Brahma, beyond the agamas and nigamas — in the Kali age, Sri Nityananda:
He has plunged every single person into the rasa of Gaura — aside has remained only Balarama, the unworthy.⁴⁴

42. PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 303 (printed p. 292), 23rd pallava, label " ୭ ୨୨୭ ", raga kalyani. KGC — 23rd kshanada, no. 2 (p. 180, gandhara; tesseract kgc.txt, line 6326). GPT1 — pp. 426–427, section on Nityananda, no. 43 (pahira or gandhara); GPT2 — sec. 6.1, no. 43. In KGC and GPT stanzas 19.3 and 19.4 are rearranged by half-lines (the second halves of 19.3 and 19.4 change places). The pada was missing from the catalogue (new row); core (PK, KGC), C.

43. Nityananda is Balarama; Balarama's rasa-lila with the maidens of Vraja — Bhag. 10.65 (Balarama, coming from Dvaraka to Vraja, spent two spring months in the rasa-lila with the gopis). The question "why has He become an avadhuta" is poetic wonder, not doubt.

44. According to CC (Adi 5) Nityananda-Balarama is the source of Sankarshana, Maha-Vishnu and Shesha. "Balarama, the unworthy" (balarāma manda) is the poet himself; a play on names: Balarama-Nityananda has saved everyone, while the poet Balarama is left aside.

20. Balarama Dasa — "gajendra-gamane yāya sakaruṇa-diṭhe cāya..." (PK 2298; GPT1 p. 427, no. 44)

The Avadhuta comes, an ocean of mercy: with the gait of a king of elephants, with compassion in His glance, shaking the earth; His roar frightens the unbelievers, He floats in prema with the host of the immortals; this is Balarama, the son of Rohini, from whose chapters come Sheshashayi and Sankarshana; now in the dress of a pauper He goes from land to land, saving the three worlds. If you wish to attain the lilas of Vraja, serve His feet. Raga mangala.⁴⁵

20.1. He walks with the gait of a king of elephants, He looks with compassion — at His steps the earth sways; surpassing a maddened lion, He makes the earth tremble — the unbelievers, hearing it, lose their strength.

20.2. Here comes the Avadhuta — an ocean of mercy!
His mind overflowing with prema, He performs Hari-sankirtana — Purifier of the fallen, Friend of the destitute.

20.3. He walks roaring — the unmoving and the moving shake, the host of the immortals floats in prema; with His companions, in the joy of many games, He unseen accomplishes every task.⁴⁶

20.4. Sheshashayi, Sankarshana, Narayana — the source of incarnations — are counted as chapters of His chapters; ocean of mercy, Giver of bhakti, Benefactor of the world — this is Rama, the son of Rohini.

20.5. Whose lilas are an abode of beauty, sung by the agamas and nigamas, whose form enchants Madana himself — now in the dress of one who owns nothing the Lord goes from land to land and saves the three worlds.

20.6. If in your heart there is the wish to attain the lilas of Vraja, the essence of all refinement, says Balarama Dasa, the wish will be fulfilled: serve, serve the feet of Shripada.⁴⁷

45. PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 302–303 (printed pp. 291–292), 23rd pallava, label " ୯ ଶଶିବ ", raga mangala, MS P-R-Sa no. 2402. GPT1 — p. 427, no. 44 (mangala); GPT2 — sec. 6.1, no. 44. The signature is garbled in the GPT1 OCR; by PK — "balarāma dāse kaya". The pada was missing from the catalogue (new row); core (PK), C.

46. "Unseen accomplishes every task" — Nityananda, playing with His companions, secretly fulfils the Lord's plan (the preaching of the Name in Gauda).

47. Shripada is a respectful name for Nityananda. According to CC (Adi 5–6) Nityananda's mercy is the way to the service of Radha and Krishna in Vraja.

21. Balarama Dasa — "bandiba advaita śire ye ānilā dhīre dhīre..." (PK 2348; GPT1 p. 449, no. 35)

*Praise of Advaita: I bow to Advaita, who brought Mahaprabhu to the earth — the son of Nanda become the son of Shachi; He saved the high and the low by the gift of bhakti; the flood of prema is from Nitai, Advaita its wave, the wind of Chaitanya has raised it to the sky: the worlds of the nagas, men and gods have drowned, the flood of prema has filled Goloka — only Balarama has been left out. Raga "tatha" (in GPT1 — mangala).*⁴⁸

21.1. I bow my head to Advaita, who slowly, gradually brought Mahaprabhu to the earth —
Him who is the son of Nanda and also the son of Shachi, whose friend is Nityananda Raya.⁴⁹

21.2. My Lord is Advaita Gosani!
The high and the low He saved by the gift of bhakti — there is no other giver so merciful.

21.3. He brought the high and the low together in embrace — and all the blind and the deaf;
the lame set off running and, making all call "Hari, Hari!", dance with both arms raised.

21.4. The flood of prema is from Nitai, Advaita is a wave in it, the wind of Chaitanya raises it high; the waves touch the sky, in heaven no one can escape — they have pierced the seven netherworlds.

21.5. The worlds of the nagas, of men and of gods have drowned, the flood of prema has filled Goloka; some dance, some sing, some laugh, some run — and the earth is especially blessed.

21.6. He who performs such plays is Advaita Acharya, an endless, boundless abode of rasa; by such a flood of prema all the unmoving and the moving are blessed — Balarama alone has been left out.

48. PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 320–321 (printed pp. 309–310), beginning of the 24th pallava "Description of the qualities of Sri Advaita," label " ॐ ॐ ॐ ॐ ", raga "tathā", MSS P-R-Sa no. 2452 and P-R no. 18. GPT1 — pp. 449–450, section on the associates, no. 35 (mangala), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 708–709); GPT2 — sec. 6.3, no. 35. In the catalogue (BD-029) it was listed as "GPT only"; it is found in PK — core (C).

49. Advaita by His prayers (with Ganga water and tulasi leaves) called the Lord to the earth — CC Adi 3; CB Adi 2. "Slowly" (dhīre dhīre) — by long worship.

22. Balarama Dasa — "bhābera ābeśe bahu sītāpati mora pahum̐..." (GPT1 p. 450, no. 36)

*Advaita announces the advent: absorbed in bhava, the husband of Sita sat in a yogic posture — and suddenly with a thunderous roar He sprang up: "I have brought Him, brought Him to the earth! He who will save the world has risen in Nadia!" — and He dances; at His dance the earth trembles, men and women dance with the Lord of Shantipura; Advaita's roar has pierced the seven heavens and resounded in the Paravyoma — the three worlds have learned of Mahaprabhu's coming. Raga suhai.*⁵⁰

22.1. Absorbed in bhava, the husband of Sita, my Lord, sat in a yogic posture; suddenly — what bhava in His heart? — with a thunderous roar of "hum-hum" He abruptly sprang up.

22.2. "I have brought Him, brought Him to the circle of the earth!
He who will save the world has risen in Nadia!" — saying this He dances with arms upraised.

22.3. At His violent dance the mortal world quaked, the earth cannot bear the weight; with the Lord of Shantipura men and women dance merrily — as if a market of bliss had opened.

22.4. At Advaita's roar the seven heavens are pierced, a ringing has reached the Paravyoma; the three worlds have learned of Mahaprabhu's coming — boundless is Balarama's joy.⁵¹

50. GPT1 — p. 450, no. 36 (suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 709); GPT2 — sec. 6.3, no. 36. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: BD-030); C. Before it in GPT (no. 34) is a short unsigned pada on the joy of Advaita and Sita on the night of the Lord's appearance.

51. Paravyoma is the spiritual sky, Vaikuntha. Advaita, learning of the Lord's appearance, dances in Shantipura — CB Adi 2; CC Adi 13 (on the night of the appearance Advaita and Haridasa dance in Shantipura).

23. Balarama Dasa — "rūpa sanātana saṅge śrījība gosāñi..." (GPT1 p. 466, no. 39)

*The books of Sri Jiva: together with Rupa and Sanatana, Sri Jiva Gosani wrote countless books on bhakti; for his purification the poet names some: *Gopala-virudavali, Krishna-pada-chihna, Sri Madhava-mahotsava, Radha-pada-chihna, Gopala-champu, Rasamrita-shesha, Kripambudhi-stava, Sapta-sandarbha, Sutramalika, Dhatu-sangraha, Krishnarchana, Sankalpa-kalpavriksha, Harinamamrita-vyakarana: he opened the gates of bhakti. Raga velaor.⁵²

23.1. Together with Rupa and Sanatana, Sri Jiva Gosani wrote so many books on bhakti that they cannot be counted.

23.2. Wishing in my heart to be purified,
I shall glorify the names of a few books.

- 23.3. Gopala-virudavali, Krishna-pada-chihna, Sri Madhava-mahotsava, Radha-pada-chihna;
- 23.4. Sri Gopala-champu, and Rasamrita-shesha, Kripambudhi-stava, and especially the Sapta-sandarbha;
- 23.5. Sutramala, Dhatu-sangraha, Krishnarchana, Sankalpa-kalpavriksha, Harinama-vyakarana.
- 23.6. All these books he wrote — how many names shall I tell?
 He opened the gates of bhakti, says Balarama.⁵³

52. GPT1 — p. 466, section on the associates and followers, no. 39 (velaor), checked against the scan (PDF p. 725); GPT2 — sec. 6.3, no. 39. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: BD-031). A pada on the writings of Jiva Gosvami (after the Lord's departure) is not Gaura-lila in the narrow sense; a poet who lists Jiva's books lived no earlier than the end of the 16th century (C).

53. Titles: Gopala-virudavali, Madhava-mahotsava, Gopala-champu, Sankalpa-kalpavriksha, Hari-namamrita-vyakarana, Sutramalika, Dhatu-sangraha are well-known works of Jiva; Rasamrita-shesha is his supplement to the Bhakti-rasamrita-sindhu; Krishnarchana-dipika is a manual of worship; Krishna- and Radha-pada-chihna describe the marks on the feet; the Sapta-sandarbha is probably the Shat-sandarbha (six sandarbhas) together with the Krama-sandarbha; the Kripambudhi-stava is perhaps one of Jiva's hymns. Cf. CC Adi 10.85; Madhya 1.

24. Ramachandra — "hāhā mora ki chāra adṛṣṭa..." (GPT1 p. 492, no. 25)

*A prayer: alas, how wretched my lot — when Gaura appeared, I was not born; I did not see Gaurachandra, nor Nityananda, nor Advaita, nor Thakura Sarakara, nor Srivasa and Gadai; the essence of all incarnations, the Sri Gauranga-avatara, I did not see; I am the grandson of Vamshivadana, the Lord's dear associate — so why is Ramachandra so base? Raga dhanashi.*⁵⁴

24.1. Alas, alas, how wretched is my lot!

When Gaura appeared, I was not born — therefore I am low and sinful.

24.2. I did not see Gaurachandra, did not see Nityananda, did not see Advaita Gosani; the feet of Thakura Sarakara I did not see, did not see Srivasa and Gadai.

24.3. What fate has karma written for me — none of them did I see; why was I born alone?

The essence of all incarnations, the incarnation of Sri Gauranga, I did not see — why did I not die?

24.4. The Lord's dear associate is Thakura Vamshivadana: I am his son's son.

O Gaura, O Nityananda! Why then is Ramachandra so dull of mind, so wicked?⁵⁵

54. GPT1 — p. 492, section of prayers (prārthanā), no. 25 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 751); GPT2 — sec. 7, no. 25. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: RC-003). The poet says plainly that he was born after the Lord's departure and that he is the grandson of Vamshivadana (Vamshi Dasa) — this is Ramachandra Gosvami (Ramaī), Vamshivadana's grandson and Jahnava's adopted son (16th–17th c.), not a contemporary of the Lord; cf. the padas signed "Ramachandra" PK 2064, 2186 (chapters 1, 7), which sound like eyewitness accounts — apparently another poet. Attribution by GPT (C).

55. "Thakura Sarakara" is Narahari Sarakara of Shrikhandā. Vamshivadana Thakura is the Lord's associate, guardian of Shachi and Vishnupriya after the sannyasa (according to tradition). "Dull of mind," "wicked" are the poet's formulas of humility about himself.

25. Ramachandra — "prabhura lāgiyā yāba kon deśe..." (GPT1 pp. 492–493, no. 26)

*A prayer of longing: to what land shall I go for the Lord, who will show me the way? Will I have the fortune to see Gauranga's feet? Gora is my master, Gora my refuge, Gora my whole wealth; if I do not see Him, I shall give up this wretched life; let my soul, becoming a bird, fly to where He is and serve Him; let my body mingle with the dust of His feet. Raga dhanashi.*⁵⁶

25.1. For the Lord, to what land shall I go, who will show me the way?

Shall I see Gauranga's feet — will I have such fortune?

25.2. Gora is my master, Gora my refuge, Gora my whole wealth; and if I cannot see Him, I shall give up this wretched life.

25.3. My soul, becoming a bird, will fly to the land where the Lord dwells, and will always be near the Lord, having become His servant.

25.4. With the dust of Gauranga's feet this wretched body of mine will mingle; says Ramachandra: tasting the honey of His lotus feet, I shall lose myself.⁵⁷

56. GPT1 — pp. 492–493, no. 26 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 751–752); GPT2 — sec. 7, no. 26. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row RC-007). Its position next to no. 25 suggests the same Ramachandra (Vamshivadana's grandson); attribution by GPT (C).

57. "Master" (pati) — here "lord, refuge" in the spirit of dasya, not in the sense of nagari-bhava. "To what land shall I go for the Lord" — the longing of a poet who lived after the Lord's departure; cf. Narottama Dasa's prayers to Gaura.

26. Balarama Dasa — "bhāi re sādhusaṅga kara sādhu haiyā..." (GPT1 pp. 515–516, no. 59)

*A prayer-instruction: brothers, keep the company of saints, becoming saints yourselves — you will cross the ocean of existence, singing of Nitai and Chaitanya; having obtained, after eight million four hundred thousand births, the rare human body, do not waste it; I wear beads and marks, but there is no trace of devotion in me — like the makal fruit: handsome outside, worthless within; sandal makes all the trees around it like itself — but Balarama, without the company of saints, has remained in the well of existence. Raga kamoda.*⁵⁸

26.1. Brothers, keep the company of saints, becoming saints yourselves:

you will cross the ocean of existence and find great bliss, singing the glories of Nitai and Chaitanya.

26.2. Weary of wandering through eight million four hundred thousand births, you have at last obtained the rare body;

laying all upon the great and not walking the path of bhakti, you let your life pass in vain.⁵⁹

26.3. Wearing beads and marks, but having not a trace of devotion, I go about showing myself to people — like the makal fruit: red, handsome and fine to look at, but break it open — fit only to be thrown away.

26.4. The trees and creepers growing near the sandal tree it makes like itself by its breeze;

but this essence — the company of saints — wretched Balarama has not: he has remained in the well of existence.⁶⁰

58. GPT1 — pp. 515–516, section of prayers, no. 59 (kamoda), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 774–775); GPT2 — sec. 7, no. 59. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: BD-033). A prayer of general content; its refrain (the names of Nitai and Chaitanya) links it to Gaura, and so it is translated; other prayers signed by Balarama without Gaura content are not translated (see the catalogue). C.

59. 8,400,000 species of life — Padma Purana; CC Madhya 19. "Laying all upon the great" (mahatera dāya diyā) — the sense is not quite clear: probably "relying on the mercy of the great but making no effort of one's own."

60. The makal is a fruit handsome outside and inedible within — an image of feigned piety. The sandal tree that makes the neighbouring trees fragrant is an image of the company of saints (sādhu-saṅga), CC Madhya 22.

Chapter 14. Vamshidasa, Nayananda, Shivananda, Yadu, Govinda and Vasu Ghosha, Krishnadasa, Kanu Dasa and Others: Padas from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — Completing the "GPT Only" Group

*This chapter completes the group of padas by poets other than Narahari that are known from the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed. by Jagadbandhu Bhadra, 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934), excluding padas in nagari-bhava. The padas follow the order of the lilas: mangalacharana and praise of the Gaura-avatara, Gaura's form, the abhisheka in Srivasa's house and the adhivasa of the kirtana of the "seven groups," Gaura with Gauridasa in the bhava of Krishna and of Radha, the goshta-bhava and the festival of colours, the decision to take sannyasa and the lament after it, the Ratha-yatra in Puri, Nityananda (His marriage — in a pada that Majumdar considers a forgery — His dance and His mercy), Ramananda Raya. Seven padas are signed "Yadu" (nos. 4, 5, 20–23, 26); five of them are also in the Padakalpataru (PK 2459, 2460, 1546, 1547, 2300; and PK 1548 without signature, no. 23) — there the text follows PK with the GPT variants; who this "Yadu" is — Yadunatha Kavichandra, a contemporary of the Lord, or the later Yadunandana — is not established. Checking against the text of GPT1 showed that the stage-1 catalogue had ascribed to Vamshi, Gauridasa, Paramananda and Narahari a good many padas of other poets: of the seven padas of "Vamshi," six belong to others (Vaishnava Dasa, Premadasa, Rajavallabha, Govinda Dasa, Vasu Ghosha, or are unsigned); instead, a goshta-pada of Vamshidasa (no. 15) is translated, and the pada "āhā mari kothā gela gorā kāmācā sonā" (no. 19 — "Vamshi" in the catalogue) is signed by Vasu Ghosha; the padas of "Gauridasa" are signed by Jagannatha Dasa and Chaitanyadasa, those of "Paramananda" by Vrindavana Dasa and Gopala Dasa. Four padas (nos. 9, 17, 23, 26) were missing from the catalogue. Majumdar considers the GPT unreliable for attribution; the attribution of all the padas of this chapter is therefore provisional (C; D only where authenticity itself is in doubt: an added signature, a forgery). The Bengali original, the variants of GPT1/GPT2 and PK, and the word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.*

1. Vamshidasa — "jaya re jaya re mora gaurāṅga rāya..." (GPT1 p. 5, no. 8)

*Mangalacharana: glory to Gauranga, to Nityananda and to Gaura's devotees; the poet asks Sitanatha — Advaita Acharya — to give him the shade of His feet and to keep his wicked mind there: he has no other hope. Raga kamoda.*¹

1.1. Glory, glory to my Gauranga Raya!

Glory to Nityananda the moon, glory to Gaura's devotees! Sitanatha, give me the shade of Your feet!

1.2. Glory, glory to my Acharya Thakura! I am helpless, utterly fallen:

be merciful — keep this sinful mind of mine at Your feet.²

1.3. In Your feet alone I trust — I see no other way;

keep my wicked mind at Your holy feet — this I beg at Your feet.

1.4. Whatever I long for at all times — all of it You know.

Says Vamshidasa: fulfil all my hopes — what more shall I say?

1. GPT1 — p. 5, section of mangalacharana, no. 8 (kamoda), checked against the scan IA in.ernet.dli.2015.477854 (PDF p. 264); GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 8. The pada is not in PK, the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR), the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC) or the Padamrita-samudra (PS) (catalogue: VV-001). Under the signature "Vamshi, Vamshidasa" there are padas of Vamshivadana Thakura, the Lord's associate, and of a later Vamshidasa (by Majumdar, PK 2851 is his; see chapter 6, no. 16); this pada is a prayer with no sign of an eyewitness; attribution by GPT (C).

2. "Acharya Thakura" — by the refrain (Sitanatha, the husband of Sita) this is Advaita Acharya. After the Lord's sannyasa Vamshivadana lived with Shachi and Vishnupriya in Navadvipa (according to tradition); a prayer to Advaita is possible from him, but the pada may also belong to a disciple of Advaita's line.

2. Nayananda — "gorā mora guṇera sāgara..." (GPT1 p. 31, no. 15)

*Praise of Gaura in images: He is an ocean of virtues where waves of prema rise; a spotless moon pouring the nectar of the holy name; the Himalayan peak from which the Ganga of prema flows; a wish-fulfilling tree; a new cloud that cools everyone; a mine of bliss. Raga dhanashi.*³

- 2.1. My Gora is an ocean of virtues:
in it waves of prema rise without cease.
- 2.2. My Gora is a spotless moon:
day and night the nectar of Hari's name drips from it.
- 2.3. My Gora is the peak of the Himalayas:
from it the Ganga of prema flows without cease.
- 2.4. My Gora is a wish-fulfilling tree that gives prema:
in the shade of His feet living beings dwell happily.
- 2.5. My Gora is a new rain-cloud:
pouring rain, He cools men and women.
- 2.6. My Gora is a mine of bliss:
Nayananda's life is given for Him as a ransom.⁴

3. GPT1 — p. 31, section of praise of the Gaura-avatara, no. 15 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 290); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 15. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: NN-003). Nayananda Mishra is the nephew and disciple of Gadadhara Pandita; his padas on Gaura in PK were translated in chapters 4 and 10. This pada is known only from the GPT (C).

4. "Given as a ransom" (nichani) — a rite in which something dear is waved around the beloved and given away to avert harm from him: the poet gives his life for Gaura. In 2.1 GPT1 has "guṇera nāgara" (a misprint or misreading), GPT2 "guṇera sāgara": the image of an ocean with waves requires "sagara."

3. Shivananda — "akhila bhubana bhari hari-rasa-bādara..." (GPT1 p. 35, no. 25)

*The cloud of Chaitanya: a downpour of Hari's rasa has filled the universe, and the devotees, like chataka birds, drink and ask for more; the cloud was born on the full moon of Phalgun and flooded high and low with prema; the holy name became the maha-mantra, prema was given out by handfuls, the fallen became bhagavatas, Jagai and Madhai were saved; the poet laments that he has remained in forgetfulness. Raga mangala.*⁵

- 3.1. Filling the universe, a downpour of Hari's rasa pours from the cloud of Chaitanya;
the devotees, like chataka birds, drink and drink without end, every moment begging for the water of prema.
- 3.2. The full moon of Phalgun is the cloud's birthday; that cloud poured the downpour:
high and low — it flooded all with the water of prema: Gora is a great ocean of mercy.
- 3.3. Making living beings His yantra and Hari's name the maha-mantra, He gave prema by handfuls from hand to hand;
all the low and wretched became bhagavatas — so Gauranga's glory grew.⁶
- 3.4. There were Jagai and Madhai — them too He saved with prema: such mercy He showed to living beings.
Says Shivananda-dasa: why have I remained in the forgetfulness of maya? Lord, give me the shade of Your feet!⁷

5. GPT1 — p. 35, no. 25 (mangala), checked against the scan (PDF p. 294); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 25. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. In the catalogue (SS-001) the first line was wrong: "iha kaliyuga dhana nityānanda caitanya" is the preceding GPT pada (no. 24), signed by Haridasa; the pada signed "dāsa śībānanda" is no. 25. Whether this is Shivananda Sena, the father of Kavi Karnapura, is unclear (C); Majumdar considers Shivananda Sena the author of padas on the Lord composed in His lifetime.

6. The full moon of Phalguna is the day of the Lord's appearance (1486). "Yantra" and "mantra" — an image from ritual: as a sacred diagram and a mantra serve worship, so living beings became the Lord's vessel and Hari's name the great mantra. The sense of the line is not quite clear. A footnote in GPT1 gives "durgata" (distressed) for "duḥkhita" (wretched). "Glory" (ṭhākuraṇi) — the Lord's majesty, lordship.

7. Jagai and Madhai — CB Madhya 13; CC Adi 17. "The forgetfulness of maya" (māyā-bhole) — the poet of himself: "maya" here in the everyday sense — forgetting God and attachment to the world; it has nothing to do with the Lord.

4. Yadu — "eke se kanayā-kaṣila tanu..." (PK 2459; GPT1 p. 120, no. 27)

*Gauranga's form: His body like gold tested on the touchstone, outshining the moon; curls tied in a knot, garments of red silk; raising His arms He stretches — and lightning seems to flash; the gaze slips over His body, over which waves run; all pride is broken. Raga "the same" (in GPT1, "yatharaga").*⁸

4.1. First of all, His body, like gold tested on the touchstone:

as if it subdues even the spotless moon.

4.2. And then — the curly locks tied in a knot:

even a trace of that beauty intoxicates the playful fair ones.⁹

4.3. How wondrous is Gauranga's beauty — coveted by the fair women of the three worlds!

4.4. In the guise of His red silk garment the red passion of young hearts seems to overflow.

4.5. Raising His arms, He stretches His whole body — and in its radiance lightning seems to flash.

4.6. The gaze cast upon His body slips off:

over all His body waves run in play.

4.7. A lovely garland of keshara flowers — says Yadu: all pride is broken.¹⁰

8. PK — vol. 4 (pt. 2), 4th shakha, 29th pallava, mark " २ २४६७ ", raga "tatha," checked against the scan IA 354459 (PDF p. 35, printed p. 26); in PK the pada stands among the gaura-chandrikas to the description of beauty (before it, Premadasa's PK 2458; after it, PK 2460 and the description of Radha's beauty, "atha śrīrādhāyām yathā"). GPT1 — p. 120, section on Gaura's form, no. 27 ("yatharaga"), scan PDF p. 379; GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 27. The pada is not in BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: YD-008). The signature "yadu" (Yadu) may belong to Yadunatha Kavichandra, a contemporary of the Lord (M-1961 ascribes to him padas on Gaura's bhavas), or to the later poet Yadunandana Dasa (17th c.); PK 2459–2460 show no sign of an eyewitness; C.

9. "Playful fair ones" (raṅgiṇī), "young hearts" (4.4), "pride" (4.7) — the motif of the townswomen captivated by Gaura's beauty: the language of nagari-bhava (Gaura as nagara); we translate faithfully to the author. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never looked at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta). In PK the pada is a gaura-chandrika: it sets the tone for the description of the beauty of Radha and Krishna, and the attraction here is an image of prema for Krishna, not of a worldly feeling. "Knot" (loṭana) — hair gathered in a knot; "cāṁcara keśa" — curly locks.

10. "Red silk... red passion" — a play on words: "raga" means both "red colour" and "attraction, love." Keshara — the nagakeshara flower (or kadamba). "Pride is broken" (bhāṅgala māna) — "mana," the beloved's offended pride, melts before Gaura's beauty. PK manuscripts: "ka" — "chāla," "uchāla," "araṅga" for "chale," "uchale," "taraṅga"; "kha, gha, cha" — "madana" for "damana" (4.1: "subdues Madana").

5. Yadu — "bikaca kanayā-kamala-kāmṭi..." (PK 2460; GPT1 p. 120, no. 28)

*Gauranga's form and bhava: the lustre of a full-blown golden lotus, a face like the full moon, teeth like pomegranate seeds, lips redder than the bandhuli; He walks intoxicated with an unknown rasa, with the gait of a king of elephants; tears flow from His reddish eyes; remembering His former love He weeps, thundering like a new cloud, and calls: "Where is Gadadhara?" Raga "the same."*¹¹

- 5.1. A lustre like that of a full-blown golden lotus, a face shining like the full moon.
- 5.2. Teeth in an even row, like pomegranate seeds, lips red — redder than the bandhuli flower.¹²
- 5.3. Sweet, sweet is Gauranga's beauty — coveted by the eyes of the three worlds.
- 5.4. Who knows with what rasa He is ever intoxicated? — His gait is slow, like a king of elephants'.
- 5.5. From His reddish eyes tears stream — is it a pair of chakoras pouring out nectar?¹³
- 5.6. Remembering His former love, He weeps — as a new cloud thunders.
- 5.7. "Where is Gadadhara?" He calls.
Says Yadu: the Lord is caught in a whirlpool.¹⁴

11. PK — vol. 4 (pt. 2), 29th pallava, mark " ॐ २८७० , " raga "tatha," checked against the scan (PDF pp. 35–36); GPT1 — p. 120, no. 28 ("tatharaga"); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 28. The pada is not in BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: YD-009); attribution as for the preceding (C).

12. "Shikhara" (śikhara) — in poetics, a ruby the colour of a ripe pomegranate seed; PK manuscripts "ka, kha" and the GPT: "daśana sikara nikara" (a row of drops), "cha": "śikara." Bandhuli — a red flower (Pentapetes phoenicea), a common image for lips. "Redder" (āti = ati; "ka, kha": "ati").

13. Chakoras — birds that drink moonlight; Gaura's eyes are a pair of chakoras on the moon of His face. GPT: "āsiyā base ki cakora jorā" — "has a pair of chakoras come and settled?"

14. "Former love" — the love of Vrindavana: remembering His lila as Krishna, the Lord calls Gadadhara — the associate in whom the tradition sees a manifestation of Radha (Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika 147–153). His tears and "thunder" are manifestations of prema, not of worldly grief. "Caught in a whirlpool" (ṭhekilā pāke) — in the power of prema, unable to come out of it. PK MSS "ka, kha, cha": "lorā," "jorā"; "gha": "kānde ki."

6. Govinda Ghosha — "snāna kari śrīgaurāṅga basilena dibyāsane..." (GPT1 p. 240, no. 9)

*The abhisheka in Srivasa's house: after the bath Gauranga sits on a splendid seat with Nitai and Gadai to His right and left; Advaita offers sweets and payasa, Srivasa runs to bring the dishes; Gora eats with Nitai and Gadai, Advaita gives Him tambula, Narahari fans Him with a chamara, gazing at the three forms; Advaita places tulasi at His feet, saying "Krishnaya namah." Raga mangala.*¹⁵

- 6.1. Having bathed, Sri Gauranga sat on a splendid seat, with Nitai and Gadai to His right and left; Advaita, seated before Him, holds sweets and payasa in His hands, Srivasa runs to and fro serving.
- 6.2. Ah, ah, what bliss of the abhisheka!
With Nitai and Gadai Gora sat down to eat — the devotees watch in bliss.
- 6.3. Having finished His meal, Gora rinsed His mouth, Advaita placed tambula in His mouth;
Narahari, standing beside, gazes at the three forms and joyfully fans Him with a chamara.¹⁶
- 6.4. Placing tulasi leaves with sandal at Gora's feet, the Acharya says: "Krishnaya namah!"
Says Govinda Ghosha: and all, rejoicing, began to call out "Hari!" again and again.¹⁷

15. GPT1 — p. 240, section of the abhisheka, no. 9 (mangala), checked against the scan (PDF p. 499); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 9. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: GG-008). The preceding GPT pada (no. 8) is PK 1538 with the signature of the three Ghosha brothers (chapter 1, no. 4), on the same scene: Gauranga on the throne after the abhisheka, the meal with Nityananda, tulasi from Advaita; this pada is its continuation with the signature of Govinda Ghosha alone. Govinda Ghosha is the Lord's associate, an eyewitness according to Majumdar; but the pada is known only from the GPT (C).

16. Gadai — Gadadhara Pandita. "The three forms" — Gaura, Nitai and Gadai; Narahari Sarakara, the Lord's associate from Shrikhanda, served Him with the chamara (CB Madhya 9 names Narahari among those present; cf. chapter 1, nos. 3–4). The abhisheka and the "great revelation" (mahaprakasha) in Srivasa's house — CB Madhya 9; Murari 2.12; CC Adi 17.

17. "Krishnaya namah" — "obeisance to Krishna": Advaita worships Gaura as Krishna Himself. The Acharya — Advaita Acharya.

7. Vasu Ghosha — "jaya jaya dhvani uṭhe nadīyā-nagare..." (GPT1 p. 240, no. 10)

*The abhisheka: cries of "Jaya!" throughout Nadia; Advaita roars: "I have brought Him!" — and dances, Haridasa after Him; Srivasa and his brothers dance; devotees come running from all sides. Raga dhanashi.*¹⁸

7.1. Cries of "Jaya, jaya!" have risen in the town of Nadia:
today is Gora's abhisheka in the Pandita's house.

7.2. "I have brought Him, brought Him!" cries Advaita Gosani;
He lets out a great roar, oblivious of everything around.¹⁹

7.3. Arms raised, "Nara" dances — "ta-theiya, ta-theiya!"; behind Him Haridasa goes round, dancing.

7.4. Srivasa, Shripati, Shrinidhi and Shrirama dance in delight — a joy to the eyes.

7.5. "Glory to Gauranga, glory to Advaita and Nitai!" — crying so, the devotees come running.

7.6. Some dance and sing in prema, some laugh in prema;
the lila of Gora's abhisheka is sung by Vasu Ghosha.

18. GPT1 — p. 240, no. 10 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 499); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 10. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: VG-165). The colloquial form "enechi, enechi" ("I have brought") is modern Bengali, unusual for the 16th century; by it the pada is probably late or reworked; Majumdar warns that the GPT contains forgeries under Vasu's name; but this pada shows no sign of forgery. C.

19. By His worship and His call Advaita "brought" the Lord to earth (CC Adi 3; CB Adi 2); for this the Lord called Him "Nara" (nārā, 7.3) (CB, Madhya-khanda). "The Pandita" — Srivasa Pandita; Shripati, Shrinidhi and Shrirama are his brothers (CC Adi 10).

8. Vasu Ghosha — "gorā-abhiṣeka kathā adbhuta kathana..." (GPT1 p. 240, no. 11)

*The abhisheka: hearing the wonderful news, the devotees run to the Pandita's house and dance, crying "Glory to Gorachand!"; with them the whole universe dances — moon, sun, stars, Brahma, Indra, the gods, the nagas, the guardians of the quarters. Raga dhanashi.*²⁰

8.1. Wonderful is the news — of Gora's abhisheka:
hearing it, the devotees run to the Pandita's house.

8.2. Running together, they dance joyfully; raising both arms, they cry: "Glory to Gorachand!"

8.3. The moon dances, the sun dances, the stars dance;
Brahma dances, Vayu dances, the Thousand-eyed dances.

- 8.4. Aruna and Varuna dance, all the gods;
in the underworld Vasuki dances, the nagas dance.
- 8.5. Heaven dances, earth dances, the underworld dances;
in supreme bliss the guardians of the ten quarters dance.
- 8.6. In bliss the devotees roar out — boundless is the joy in Vasu Ghosha's heart.²¹

20. GPT1 — p. 240, no. 11 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 499); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 11. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. In the catalogue (VG-031) it was listed under section 3.2, "nagari-bhava" — wrongly: it is the abhisheka, section 4.1, with no nagari motif; it had not been translated. GPT only (C).

21. The Thousand-eyed — Indra; Aruna — the charioteer of the Sun; Varuna — lord of the waters; Vasuki — king of the naga serpents. The rejoicing of the whole universe at the Lord's revelation — cf. CB Madhya 9 (the gods come to see the mahaprakasha).

9. Krishnadasa — "abhiṣeke gauracāṁḍera ānanda apāra..." (GPT1 p. 241, no. 13)

*The abhisheka: Gaurachand in boundless bliss tells the devotees of His former plays; His body thrills, His speech falters; listening to Him, the devotees' hearts are comforted. Raga suhai.*²²

- 9.1. At the abhisheka boundless is Gaurachand's bliss:
He tells the devotees of His former plays.²³
- 9.2. From head to foot His body thrilled:
the golden hairs stood like a kadamba bud.
- 9.3. The heart melts in bhava, the speech falters with emotion:
with great effort fate has fulfilled our hope.
- 9.4. Shachi's son Gora is the treasure of the life of all:
hearing the words of His moonlike mouth, the heart was comforted.
- 9.5. Whoever has come to believe in Gorachand's lila — wretched Krishnadasa is the servant of his servants.

22. GPT1 — p. 241, no. 13 (suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 500); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 13. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row KR-020). The preceding GPT pada (no. 12, "dekha dui bhāi gaura nitāi") is Krishnadasa's PK 1576 (chapter 7). The signature "Krishnadasa" in GPT and PK covers padas of several poets; attribution by GPT (C).

23. "Former plays" — Krishna's lilas in Vraja and the deeds of earlier avatars: during the mahaprakasha the Lord revealed to each devotee his past and His own former lilas (CB Madhya 9–10). In 9.4 "jāti-prāṇadhana" (lit. "the life-treasure of the kin/of all") — the sense is not quite clear.

10. Vasu Ghosha — "aguru candana lepiyā gorā-gāya..." (GPT1 p. 243, no. 19)

*The abhisheka: Gora's body is anointed with aguru and sandal, the associates fan Him with chamaras and pour water over Him; they wipe His face, put on Him a garland of malati, dress Him in red garments and ornaments; Vasudeva gazes at that form. Raga dhanashi.*²⁴

- 10.1. Having anointed Gora's body with aguru and sandal, the dear associates fan Him with chamaras.
- 10.2. Someone, bringing water and holding it in his own hands, pours it over Gauranga as his heart desires.
- 10.3. The face that outshines the moon they wipe to make it shine still more;
on Gora's body is a garland of malati flowers.
- 10.4. Red garments and various ornaments shine on Him —
Vasudeva gazes at that form.

24. GPT1 — p. 243, no. 19 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 502); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 19. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: VG-164). GPT only (C). The bathing, anointing and dressing of the Lord at the abhisheka — cf. Vasu Ghosha's PK 1536–1537 (chapter 1, nos. 2–3) and CB Madhya 9.

11. Parameshvari Dasa — "prabhura ādeśa pāñā bhakata sakala..." (GPT1 p. 246, no. 27)

*The adhivasa of the kirtana: at the Lord's command the devotees form seven groups, led by Nityananda, Mukunda, Advaita, Gadadhara, Vasu Ghosha, Murari and Narahari; fourteen madals and fourteen pairs of kartals resound; in the courtyard pots of curd mixed with turmeric are broken, and with it they mark one another's foreheads. Raga dhanashi.*²⁵

- 11.1. Having received the Lord's command, all the devotees divided into seven parts and formed seven groups.
- 11.2. At the head of the first group was Nityananda;
the lead singer of the second was Mukunda.
- 11.3. The head of the third was Sitapati Himself;
Gadadhara became the leader of the fourth.
- 11.4. Of the fifth — Vasu Ghosha, of the sixth — Murari;
the leader of the seventh group was Narahari.
- 11.5. All at once fourteen madals thundered;
from fourteen pairs of kartals rose a great clamour.
- 11.6. Setting curd with amrasara in pots, in the courtyard they broke them, mixing it with turmeric.²⁶
- 11.7. The curd mixed with turmeric all took up, and in the bliss of prema they mark one another's foreheads.
- 11.8. Thus was the adhivasa — the blessing of the kirtana — performed; in the bliss of prema sings Parameshvari Dasa.

25. GPT1 — p. 246, no. 27 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 505; the catalogue had "p. 247"); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 27. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: PD-003). The signature "parameśvarīdāsa" is the same as that of the preceding GPT pada (no. 26 = PK 23, the kirtana festival at Advaita's house, chapter 5, no. 4), which this pada continues. Parameshvari (Parameshvara) Dasa is an associate of Nityananda, one of the twelve gopals (CC Adi 11). By the user's decision it is translated though known only from the GPT (C).

26. Madal (mridanga, khol) — a clay drum; kartals — hand cymbals. "Seven groups" (sāta dala, sampradayas) — as at the Ratha-yatra in Puri (CC Madhya 13), where there were also seven groups and fourteen mridangas; here the poet carries that arrangement over to a kirtana in Navadvipa. "Amrasara" (āmrasāra) — the sense is unclear (perhaps mango juice or treacle). Marking with turmeric and curd is a festive ritual game (cf. the "dadhi-haridra" of the Nanda-utsava).

12. Vasu Ghosha — "gaurīdāsa saṅge kṛṣṇa-kathā-raṅge..." (GPT1 p. 291, no. 49)

*Gaura with Gauridasa: in a joyful talk about Krishna They embrace, intoxicated with bhava; Gauridasa puts a garland of champaka on the Lord — and, looking at its golden colour, the Lord remembers Radha: "Gauridasa, Radha has come to My mind!" — and longs to see Her. Raga dhanashi, tala dashakushi.*²⁷

- 12.1. With Gauridasa, joyfully talking of Krishna, Gaurahari sat;
the heart absorbed in bhava, again and again They embrace, arms round each other's necks.
- 12.2. Restraining the bhava and seating the Lord, Gauridasa at once brought from the house a garland of champaka and suddenly put it round His neck.

12.3. At the champaka garland my Gaura Raya looks and looks:

He remembered Radha's colour — a stream of prema flows over His body.

12.4. The Lord says: "Listen, Gauridasa, Radha has come to My mind!"

Says Vasu Ghosha: a longing to see Rai, full of rasa, seized Him.²⁸

27. GPT1 — p. 291, section on the Lord's bhava, no. 49 ("dhānāśrī daśakuśī"), checked against the scan (PDF p. 550); GPT2 — the same section, no. 49 (also in the GPT2 index of first lines: "gaurīdāsa saṅge kṛṣṇakathāraṅge — bāsu ghoṣa"). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: VG-166; the first line in the catalogue, "kata kathā raṅge," is corrected from the scan to "kṛṣṇa kathā raṅge"). GPT only (C). Before it in the GPT stand padas of Radhamohana Dasa (nos. 43–44) on the same theme: Gaura with Gauridasa, whom He calls Subala.

28. Gauridasa Pandita in Krishna's lila is the cowherd Subala, Krishna's intimate friend and helper in His meetings with Radha (Gaura-ganoddeshā-dīpikā 128). The golden champaka garland reminds the Lord of golden Radha; here Gaura is in the bhava of Krishna longing for Radha — this is the prema of Vraja, not a worldly feeling. "Listen" — the text has "prabhu kahe bāsa, śuna gaurīdāsa": the word "bāsa" is unclear (by the rhyme, a form of address; possibly a corruption).

13. Vasu Ghosha — "gaurīdāsa kari saṅge ānandita tanu raṅge..." (GPT1 p. 292, no. 50)

*Gaura with Gauridasa on the bank of the Suradhuni: in bhava the Lord trembles, tears stream from His eyes, He looks into Gauridasa's face — and suddenly falls senseless; Gauridasa lifts Him up: "What is Your sorrow?" — "It cannot be told: My heart is breaking." In the bhava of Radha Gaurahari cannot restrain His heart. Raga bhatiyari, tala dashakushi.*²⁹

13.1. Taking Gauridasa with Him, joyful, thrilled in body, goes Gora, the treasure of virtues; from bhava His body trembles, tears stream from both eyes — He looks into Gauridasa's face.

13.2. Suddenly losing consciousness in the ecstasy of prema, Sri Chaitanya fell on the bank of the Suradhuni;
Gauridasa gently lifted Him into his arms: "Tell me, what is Your sorrow?"

13.3. "It is not a thing to be told — how shall I tell it? My heart is breaking — I am dying."
Says Vasu: ah! — in the bhava of Radha Gaurahari cannot hold His heart.³⁰

29. GPT1 — p. 292, no. 50 ("bhāṭiyāri daśakuśī"), checked against the scan (PDF p. 551); GPT2 — the same section, no. 50. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: VG-167). GPT only (C).

30. The bhava of Radha is pure prema, the torment of separation from Krishna (vipralambha); "I am dying" is the Lord's speech in that bhava, an expression of the utmost intensity of prema, not of worldly grief (cf. CC Antya 14–20). Gauridasa is Subala (see above), the confidant of the secrets of Radha and Krishna; therefore it is to him that the Lord almost discloses His torment.

14. Vasu Ghosha — "bṛndābanera bhābe gorā phirāya pām̐cani..." (GPT1 p. 330, no. 28)

*Goshtha-bhava in Navadvīpa: in the bhava of Vrindavana Gora twirls a herding stick and calls the cows, "Ava, aba!"; Shachi is called to come and see Gora going to the forest to tend the cows; Srivasa's wife runs, and the poet after her. Raga dhanashi.*³¹

14.1. In the bhava of Vrindavana Gora twirls the herding stick;
"Ava, aba!" calls Gora, the jewel of virtues.

14.2. Gorachand is absorbed in that bhava:
the bhava of Vrindavana has taken hold of Gora.

14.3. They say to Shachi: "Come, let us see — Gora is going to the forest to tend the cows!"

14.4. Srivasa's wife set off running;

says Vasudeva Ghosha: I had to go too.³²

31. GPT1 — p. 330, section of the year's festivals (goshtha-yatra), no. 28 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 589); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 28. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: VG-170). GPT only (C). Gaura's goshtha-lila in Navadvipa is also described by Vasu Ghosha in BR (p. 935) and PK 1186, 1353 (chapter 1).

32. "Herding stick" (pām̐cāni) — the stick for driving cows; "aba, aba" — the cowherds' call. Srivasa's wife is Malini, the Lord's nurse.

15. Vamshidasa — "śrīnandanandana śacīra dulāla cale goṭhe pāya pāya..." (GPT1 pp. 330–331, no. 30)

*Goshtha-lila in Navadvipa: Nanda's son, become Shachi's darling, goes to the pasture, Nityananda, Rohini's son, running ahead; Abhirama — Shridama — drives the cows, Gauridasa — Subala — joins the band; Navadvipa has become Gokula, all the associates are dressed as cowherd boys; the poet goes with them. Raga lalita.*³³

15.1. Sri Nandanandana, Shachi's darling, goes to the pasture step by step;

Rohini's son, Nityananda Raya, runs ahead of His Brother.

15.2. Shridama the friend — Abhirama Svami — drives the cows and calves;

Subala — Gauridasa Pandita — came and quickly joined the band.³⁴

15.3. Navadvipa today has become Gokula, as at the end of the Dvapara-yuga;

all the associates took up herding sticks, putting on the dress of cowherd boys.

15.4. Cries of "Ava, aba!" filled the sky — the gods look and laugh; together with them all to the pasture went this wretched Vamshidasa.

33. GPT1 — pp. 330–331, no. 30 (lalita), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 589–590); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 30. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. In the catalogue (VV-007) the preceding GPT pada (no. 29, "abhirāma ḍāke dvārete...") was listed under Vamshi, but it is unsigned (it ends with the words "bāsu yāya niyā chātā" — "Vasu carries the umbrella"), does not belong to Vamshi and is not translated; the pada signed "baṁśīdāsa" is no. 30. Attribution by GPT (C). Cf. Vamshivadana's goshtha-pada PK 2564 (chapter 1, no. 12).

34. According to the Gaura-ganoddeshā-dipikā, Abhirama Thakura is Shridama and Gauridasa Pandita is Subala, Krishna's cowherd friends; Nityananda is Balarama, Rohini's son. Vamshivadana himself, according to the GGD, is Krishna's flute.

16. Krishnadasa — "khelata phāgu gorā dvijarāja..." (GPT1 p. 339, no. 59)

*The festival of colours: Gora, king of the twice-born, plays with red powder (phagu) with Gadadhara and Narahari, with Nitai and Advaita; Ramananda Raya plays with Sarvabhauma, Murari and Mukunda with Srivasa and Svarupa; in pairs they shower each other with phagu to cries of "Hori, hori!"; some dance, some sing. Raga basanta, tala ekatali.*³⁵

16.1. Gora, king of the twice-born, plays phagu with the whole circle of Gadadhara and Narahari.

16.2. With Nitai and Advaita He plays with relish:

now playful abuse, now sport — all drunk with prema.³⁶

16.3. With Sarvabhauma plays Ramananda Raya, with Srivasa and Svarupa — Murari and Mukunda.

16.4. In pairs they play phagu to cries of "Hori, hori!"; with Gadadhara plays Gora, the jewel of the twice-born.

16.5. Some dance, some sing, clapping their hands;

says humble Krishnadasa, floating in bliss.

35. GPT1 — pp. 339–340, section of the year's festivals (dola, phagu), no. 59 (basanta, ekatali), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 598–599); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 59. The pada is not in BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: KR-004); on PK see below. Signature "dīna kṛṣṇadāsa" — attribution by GPT (C). The next GPT pada (no. 60) is also signed by Krishnadasa (no. 17); no. 61 is Shivananda's (BR, chapter 5). Full PK check (chapter 16): the pada is also in PK — PK 1464 (vol. 2, PDF p. 413, label " ४० १४७४ ", raga basanta, MS P-R-Sa no. 2017; PK: "khelata phāgu gorā dvija-rāja / gadādhara narahari domhāra samāja... dīna kṛṣṇadāse kahe ānande bhāsiyā").

36. Playful abuse (gāli) is a custom of the Holi festival. The poet brings together associates of Navadvipa and of Puri (Sarvabhauma, Ramananda and Svarupa were with the Lord only in Nilachala); historically this is not a single scene but a song-image of the Lord's festival with His associates.

17. Krishnadasa — "phāgu khelata gorā gadādhara saṅge..." (GPT1 p. 340, no. 60)

*The festival of colours: Gora plays with Gadadhara, the two showering each other with kunkuma and squirting from syringes; both are red from head to foot with phagu — as if in Vraja Kanu and His beloved were playing; the devotees supply phagu, dance and sing; the poet grieves that he was not born in that happy time. Raga basanta, tala ekatali.*³⁷

17.1. Gora plays phagu with Gadadhara:

the two shower each other with kunkuma.

17.2. They squirt from syringes, throw balls of gulal — from the phagu both are red from head to foot.

17.3. They play as if in Vraja Kanu and His beloved;

on the lips of both, again and again: "Hori, hori!"³⁸

17.4. From all sides the devotees supply phagu:

some dance, some sing in bliss.

17.5. In Krishnadasa's heart a thorn has remained:

in such a happy time he was not born.

37. GPT1 — p. 340, no. 60 (basanta, ekatali), checked against the scan (PDF p. 599); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 60. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row KR-021). The poet says plainly that he was born after the Lord's departure — so this is not a contemporary but a later poet with the same signature (C).

38. Phagu (phāgu), gulal — the red powder of the Holi festival (dola-yatra); kunkuma — red powder. Gadadhara is, by tradition, a manifestation of Radha (GGD 147–153); Gaura's play with Gadadhara reflects the plays of Radha and Krishna in Vraja; this is the prema of Vraja, not a worldly amusement. "Hori" — the festival cry.

18. Govinda Ghosha — "prāṇera mukunda he tomarā ki sudhāo āmāya..." (GPT1 p. 366, no. 2)

*The Lord discloses to Mukunda His decision to take sannyasa: He left Goloka seeing the sufferings of living beings, but the panditas and students do not accept His teaching; to save them He will shave His head and take sannyasa — then even the blasphemers will go mad with the holy name and prema. Mukunda falls senseless; the poet begs the Lord not to end the lila in Nadia. Raga pahira.*³⁹

18.1. "Mukunda, My life, what are you asking Me?

The pain I carry in My heart I have no one to tell," — saying this, Gora Raya weeps.

18.2. "Seeing the sufferings of living beings, I left the bliss of Goloka and took a human birth;

as much hardship as I have suffered, so much you too have suffered — and all the labour has gone for nothing.

18.3. The panditas and students do not accept Me, they do not take My teaching; thinking of this I lose My reason: how will they be saved, how will they be rid of the fear of hell?

18.4. After long thought I have made firm My heart: soon I shall leave the life of the home;

shaving My head, putting on the cord and the kaupina, without delay I shall take sannyasa.

18.5. Then all the blasphemers, hearing the cries of 'Hari, Hari!', will go mad with the holy name and prema;
all will go to the eternal abode, My desire will be fulfilled, and My whole descent will bear fruit."⁴⁰

18.6. When the Lord spoke thus, Mukunda lost consciousness and only after a while came to himself; says Sri Govinda Ghosha: "It is not fitting for You to end the lila in Nadia."

39. GPT1 — p. 366, section "Presage of the sannyasa, the sannyasa, and the journey to Shantipura," no. 2 (pahira), checked against the scan (PDF p. 625); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 2 (nos. 1–8 of this section are missing from the GPT2 scan). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: GG-009). It continues GPT pada no. 1 = PK 1606 of Govinda Ghosha (Gadadhara brings the news to Mukunda, chapter 1, no. 15). Govinda Ghosha is the Lord's associate, an eyewitness according to Majumdar; this pada is known only from the GPT (C).

40. The reason for the sannyasa is the same as in CC Adi 17 (the Lord sees that the students and panditas of Navadvipa offend Him and do not accept the holy name, and resolves to take sannyasa so that, honouring a sannyasi, they may be saved) and CB Madhya 26. "Blasphemers" (pāṣaṇḍī) — those who reject bhakti. "Goloka" — Krishna's eternal abode; the Lord's descent is by His own will, not by the law of karma.

19. Vasu Ghosha — "āhā mari kothā gela gorā kām̐cā sonā..." (GPT1 p. 385, no. 6)

*A lament after the sannyasa: where has Gora — pure gold — gone? Life did not go out with the words; what use are eyes when their pupil is gone; His face will be seen no more, His words heard no more; the poet laments that he did not die before. Raga dhanashi.*⁴¹

19.1. Ah! Where has Gora gone — pure gold?
As I speak, my soul weeps; I forget myself.

19.2. While I spoke these words, life did not go out with them:
for the sake of what happiness has the soul not left the body?

19.3. If the pupil of the eye is gone, what use are the eyes?
No more shall I see Gora's moonlike face.

19.4. No more shall I hear from smiling lips words steeped in nectar; where shall I find Gauranga, the treasury of virtues?

19.5. Says Vasu Ghosha, remembering Gora's virtues:
why did I not die before everyone?⁴²

41. GPT1 — p. 385, section of the lament after the sannyasa, no. 6 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 644); GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 6. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. In the catalogue it was listed under Vamshi (VV-008); in the GPT2 OCR (because of the two-column layout) the last line of another pada — "...śāśuṛī badhūra rodana śuniyā, baṁśī gaṛāgaṛi yāya" (the end of Vamshi's PK 1855, GPT1 pp. 385–386, no. 9; chapter 1) — landed next to it. The pada itself is signed by Vasu Ghosha (new row VG-173). GPT only (C).

42. "Gone" — the Lord has left Navadvipa, having taken sannyasa (1510); there is no question of death. "Why did I not die" is the usual formula of laments, for a devotee to whom separation from the Lord is harder than death.

20. Yadu — "aparūpa ratha-āge..." (PK 1546; GPT1 p. 321, no. 2)

*The Ratha-yatra: before the chariot Gora Raya dances, and all the blessed ones sing with Him; in bhava He knows neither day nor night and, gazing at Jagannatha's face, dances overflowing with bliss; khols and kartals resound, cries of "Jaya!" from gods, men and sages rise to the sky; the people of Nilachala and pilgrims from many lands swim in the ocean of prema. Raga imana.*⁴³

20.1. Wondrous — before the chariot
Gora Raya dances, and all the blessed ones, as many as there are, sing together.

20.2. Overcome by bhava, He knows not whether it is night or day — in ecstasy He is aware of nothing; gazing at Jagannatha's face, in great bliss He dances, His heart overflowing.

20.3. Khol and kartals, a sweet kirtana, ceaseless "Haribol!"; cries of "Jaya, jaya!" from gods, men and sages rise to the heavens.⁴⁴

20.4. The hearts of the people of Nilachala and of folk from many lands overflow; all swim in the ocean of prema — but wretched Yadu is luckless.

43. PK — vol. 2, 3rd shakha, 29th pallava (the Ratha-yatra: "śrīgauracandrasya rathāgre nartanaṃ yathā"), mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ ॐ ", raga imana (MS P-R-Sa no. 2091 — "imana kalyāṇa"), checked against the scan IA 336618 (PDF pp. 454–455; the end of the first stanza is effaced in the scan — given from GPT1). GPT1 — p. 321, section of the Ratha-yatra, no. 2 (imana), scan PDF p. 580; GPT2 — sec. 5.1 (Ratha-yatra), no. 2. Before it in PK stand a pada of Vaishnava Dasa (PK 1544) and an excerpt from CC Madhya 13 (PK 1545). In the catalogue — YD-010. Signature "dukḥi yadu abhāgiyā"; who this Yadu is — Yadunatha Kavichandra or the later Yadunandana — is not established; the pada, like the following ones, is close to the account of CC Madhya 13 and is probably late (C).

44. Khol — the mridanga; kartals — hand cymbals. "Haribol" — "Utter Hari's name!"

21. Yadu — "caudike mahānta meli karaye kīrtana keli..." (PK 1547; GPT1 p. 322, no. 3)

*The Ratha-yatra: on all sides seven kirtana groups, fourteen khols resound, Jagannatha rejoices; in the middle, among Nityananda, Advaita, Srivasa and Haridasa, Gaurahari dances, the earth shakes under His steps, on His body the eight sattvika-bhavas; in ecstasy He dances, and Jagannatha moves slowly after Him; grief and sorrow are gone, prema has flooded all that lives. Raga mangala, tala kandarpa.*⁴⁵

21.1. On all sides great souls have gathered and give themselves to the sport of kirtana — seven groups sing songs;

fourteen khols resound, the roar has pierced the sky — seeing it, Jagannatha rejoices.

21.2. Maddened Nityananda, Acharya Advaitachandra, Pandita Srivasa, Haridasa — taking them all with Him, Gaurahari dances in the middle, and around Him the circle of devotees.

21.3. They cry "Hari, Hari!" — under the steps the earth sways, from the eyes flow streams of tears; waves of prema play on His body, surpassing Mount Sumeru — on it all eight sattvika-bhavas.⁴⁶

21.4. In ecstasy Gora Raya goes dancing — slowly, slowly moves Jagannatha; amazed and joyful, He watches the sankirtana of prema of His own circle of associates.⁴⁷

21.5. Gone are grief and sorrow, prema has flooded the people — the unmoving and the moving, beasts and birds;
says Yadu: incomparable is this abode of the plays of prema — whoever saw it became its companion.

45. PK — vol. 2, 29th pallava, mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ ॐ ", raga mangala, tala kandarpa (MS P-R-Sa no. 2092), checked against the scan (PDF p. 455); GPT1 — p. 322, no. 3 ("maṅgala-kandarpatāla"), scan PDF p. 581; GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 3. In the catalogue — YD-011. The pada retells CC Madhya 13 (seven groups, fourteen mridangas, eight sattvika-bhavas); attribution as for the preceding (C).

46. The eight sattvika-bhavas — stupefaction, perspiration, horripilation, faltering of the voice, trembling, change of colour, tears, fainting (CC Madhya 13). Sumeru — the golden mountain: an image of the Lord's golden body.

47. The second line of this stanza ("ānanda bismaya mana...") is not in PK — the stanza is incomplete there; it is given from GPT1. "Amazed and joyful" — according to CC Madhya 13, Jagannatha, seeing the Lord's dance, rejoices and slows the chariot; here it apparently refers to Jagannatha watching the kirtana.

22. Yadu — "līlākārī jagannātha..." (GPT1 pp. 322–323, no. 5)

*The Ratha-yatra: halfway along, Jagannatha's chariot suddenly stops; gods, asuras and men pull it, the temple servants curse, at the king's order hundreds of elephants are harnessed — it does not move a step; then Gora Raya goes behind and pushes the chariot with His head — and it races off with the speed of the wind; the pilgrims rejoice, the poet is amazed at the power of the Two. Raga imana.*⁴⁸

22.1. Jagannatha is playing:

midway along the road, as it goes, the chariot suddenly stops.

22.2. Gods, asuras and men pulled the chariot — and still it does not move;

the parichha and the pujaris, canes in hand, curse in every way.⁴⁹

22.3. At the king's order hundreds of mighty elephants are harnessed on both sides;

they pull the chariot with all their strength — yet the best of chariots does not move a single step.

22.4. Then Gora Raya goes behind the chariot and pushes it with His head — and with the speed of the wind, in a moment, it sped a hundred yojanas.

22.5. "Glory to Gaura!" — raising both arms, the pilgrims cry;

grasping the power of the Two, Yadu was filled with wonder.⁵⁰

48. GPT1 — pp. 322–323, no. 5 (imana), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 581–582); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 5. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: YD-013). It retells CC Madhya 14 (the chariot stops, the king orders elephants to be harnessed, the Lord pushes it with His head). Signature "yadu"; a late pada after the CC (C).

49. "Is playing" (līlākārī) — the stopping of the chariot is the play of Jagannatha Himself. Parichha — the temple superintendent; pujaris — the priest-servants.

50. "A hundred yojanas" — poetic hyperbole (in the CC the chariot "rolled on, rumbling"). "The Two" — Jagannatha and Gaura.

23. Yadunatha Dasa — "caitanya nitāi āre dona bhāi nāce re..." (PK 1548 unsigned; GPT1 p. 323, no. 6)

*The Ratha-yatra: the two brothers, Chaitanya and Nitai, dance, khols and kartals sound; the golden lotus sways in the ocean of the nectar of prema, and its wave touches all — high, middling and low; the seven groups sing aloud, and to each it seems that Gora Raya is dancing everywhere at once; the poet begs a particle of mercy. Raga ramakeli, tala trayar.*⁵¹

23.1. Chaitanya and Nitai — the two brothers — dance!

Khols and kartals, the sweet fifth note — "ta-theiya, ta-theiya" it sounds.

23.2. The golden lotus sways in the ocean of the nectar of prema;

high, middling, wretched and low — that wave touches all.⁵²

23.3. The seven groups sing to Jagannatha at the top of their voices;

all can see: Gora Raya is dancing everywhere at once.⁵³

23.4. Unprecedented majesty, unprecedented sweetness are revealed in this lila;

Yadunatha Dasa floats in the bliss of prema and begs from the Lord a particle of mercy.

51. PK — vol. 2, 29th pallava, mark " & ॐ8८ ", ramakeli, tala trayar (MS P-R-Sa no. 2093; "tālatrayaṃ" is absent in MSS ka, kha, cha and P-R-Sa), checked against the scan (PDF p. 455); PK has only 23.1–23.2, without a signature. GPT1 — p. 323, no. 6 (ramakeli), scan PDF p. 582 — with two more stanzas (23.3–23.4) and the signature "yadunātha dāsa"; GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 6. It was missing from the catalogue (new row YD-015). GPT1 also attached the signature "yadunātha dāsa" to verses of the CC (no. 4 = PK 1545; YD-012, excluded), so the signature and the additional stanzas of GPT1 are not beyond doubt (D).

52. The golden lotus is Gaura. "The fifth note" (pañcama) — the fifth degree of the scale, the voice of the kokila. MSS ka, kha, cha and P-R-Sa: "uttama adhama" for "uttama madhyama"; P-R-Sa in 23.1: "caitanya nitāi re dona bhāi saṅge pariśada nāce re" ("with the brothers the associates dance").

53. According to CC Madhya 13 the Lord, dancing among the seven groups, appeared in all of them at once, and each group thought He was with it.

24. "Ramananda" — "ohe nitāi nīlācala nā chāṛiba āra..." (GPT1 p. 405, no. 13)

The Lord tells Nityananda that He will not leave Nilachala again: Haridasa has wound up his lila, Advaita, Srinivasa, Puri, Damodara, Vishvarupa and Krishnadasa are gone; He bids Nitai live as a householder — go to the Pandita, who will give Him two daughters — and be merciful to the fallen; Gauda is His own abode. Holding Nitai's hand, the Lord weeps, repeating "Hari, Hari." Raga dhanashi.⁵⁴

24.1. "Nitai, I shall not leave Nilachala any more.

There was Haridasa, dear to Me as life — he has wound up his lila; with whom shall I now play?

24.2. Advaita, Sri Srinivasa, Puri, Damodara Dasa — they have gone, leaving this joy; who will share rasa with Me, with whom shall I wander? They have gone, laying a stone upon My breast.⁵⁵

24.3. Vishvarupa, My brother — there is no news of him: he went away, taking renunciation;

Krishnadasa, a mine of rasa — I shall hear his songs no more: he too has gone, driving a spear into My heart.

24.4. Nitai, live as a householder — go to the Pandita: seeing You, he will be happy; with care he will give You two daughters in marriage — show him Your own form.⁵⁶

24.5. The fallen, the low, the ignorant — do not grieve them, be merciful to all;

call them Your own, have pity on living beings — Your mercy will be proclaimed in the three worlds.

24.6. And that land is My own abode; keep My glory, Balarama," — saying this mercifully, the Lord weeps.

Holding Nitaichand's hand, the Lord says "Hari, Hari!" — Ramananda's heart finds no rest.⁵⁷

54. GPT1 — p. 405, section on Nityananda in Gauda, no. 13 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 664–665); GPT2 — sec. 5.5, no. 13 (GPT1 p. 405 — as cited by Majumdar). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: RM-015). Signature "rāmānanda." Majumdar considers the pada a forgery composed to justify Nityananda's marriage; it also departs from tradition: Advaita outlived the Lord, and the Lord sent Nityananda to preach in Gauda long before Haridasa's departure (CC Madhya 15; Antya 11). We translate it as a text of the GPT without accepting it as authentic (D).

55. If "gone" is understood as departure from the world, this contradicts the CC and CB: Advaita and Svarupa Damodara were with the Lord to the end of His lila; perhaps their leaving Puri is meant. "Puri" — probably Paramananda Puri; "Damodara Dasa" — Svarupa Damodara or Damodara Pandita; "Krishnadasa, a mine of rasa" — it is unclear who is meant.

56. "The Pandita" — Suryadasa Pandita (Sarakhel), father of Vasudha and Jahnava, whom Nityananda married (CC Adi 11; Bhakti-ratnakara 12). "Show him Your own form" — Nityananda as Balarama. Nityananda's marriage and His householder life in Gauda are His own will, manifested at the Lord's command for the sake of preaching; Nityananda, Balarama, is not subject to worldly attachments.

57. "That land" (seha) — apparently Gauda, the land of Nityananda's preaching. "Balarama" — an address to Nityananda (He is Balarama). The signature "Ramananda": according to Majumdar, neither Ramananda Raya nor Ramananda Vasu is the author of this pada.

25. Vasu Ghosha — "aruṇa-basane bibidha bhūṣaṇe śirete pāga laṭapaṭiyā..." (GPT1 p. 423, no. 30)

*Nityananda's dance: in red garments and ornaments, His turban slipping askew, He whirls, arms raised, crying "Hari, Hari!"; His gait is that of a maddened elephant, His ankle-bells ring; in bhava, heedless of the quarters, He roars: "Gaura!"; the devotees roll on the ground, gazing at His moonlike face. Raga bala-suhai.*⁵⁸

25.1. In red garments, in various ornaments, the turban on His head slipping askew,

He whirls round and round, both arms raised — He dances, crying "Hari, Hari!"

25.2. Merry Nitai dances!

In the reddish eyes, in the moonlike face — how much sweetness!

25.3. Lovely is His gait — like a maddened elephant's, His ankle-bells ringing; overcome by bhava, heedless of the quarters, He roars: "Gaura!"

25.4. All the devotees roll on the ground, gazing at that moonlike face;
Vasudeva Ghosha, wretched, deprived, begs the Giver for the rasa of prema.⁵⁹

58. GPT1 — p. 423, section on Nityananda, no. 30 ("bālā suhai"), checked against the scan (PDF p. 682); GPT2 — sec. 6.1, no. 30. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: VG-171). GPT only (C). The GPT1 footnotes give variants from an unnamed source: "bidita bhubane" ("known to the world") for "bibidha bhūṣaṇe," "sundara" for "raṅgiyā," and a different last line — "basu rāmānande, kāmde nirānande, nitāi caraṇa dhariyā" ("Vasu Ramananda weeps in sorrow, clasping Nitai's feet"); there the pada is signed by Vasu Ramananda.

59. "The Giver" (dāniyā) — Nityananda, the giver of prema. The turban (pāga) and red garments are the appearance of Nityananda the avadhuta in Gauda (CB Antya 5).

26. Yadu — "nitāicāṁḍa dayāmaya..." (PK 2300; GPT1 p. 429, no. 51)

*Nityananda's mercy: never was there one so merciful to the people of Kali; His body now darkens, now brightens, now turns yellow; He laughs, He weeps, unaware of Himself; He tries to say "Gora" and cannot; His eyes, red with love for Gaura, swim in tears; drowning Himself, He has flooded the earth — only Yadu has remained on the mountain of worldly existence. Raga pathamanjari.*⁶⁰

26.1. Nitaichand is merciful, Nitaichand is merciful!
Such mercy to the living beings of Kali there never was.

26.2. Now He is dark, now fair, now His body turns yellow;
now He laughs, now He weeps — He is unaware of Himself.

26.3. Now He stammers "Go... go..." — He cannot say "Gora";
His eyes, red with love for Gora, swim in tears.

26.4. Drowning Himself in those waters, He has flooded the earth — only Yadu has remained on the mountain of worldly existence.⁶¹

60. PK — vol. 3, 4th shakha, 22nd pallava ("Description of the virtues of Sri Nityananda"), mark " १ २००० ," pathamanjari, MS P-R-Sa no. 2404, checked against the scan (PDF p. 303); GPT1 — p. 429, no. 51 (pathamanjari), scan PDF p. 688; GPT2 — sec. 6.1, no. 51. It was missing from the catalogue (new row YD-016). Signature "yadu": Yadunatha Kavichandra or the later Yadunandana — not established (C).

61. Changes of colour (vaivarnya), laughter and tears are the sattvika-bhavas of prema. "The mountain of worldly existence" (bhava-acala) — existence, immovable like a mountain: the poet of himself, unmoved by the flood of prema. PK MSS "ka, kha, cha": "śīta" ("cold") for "pīta"; "gha": "galita."

27. Kanu Dasa — "preme mātoyārā nitāi nāgara..." (GPT1 p. 432, no. 60)

*Praise of Nityananda: lovely Nitai is intoxicated with prema, an ocean of incomparable prema and mercy; making no distinction between His own and others, He gives prema beyond the injunctions of the Vedas, saves sinners, weeps for the fallen, gives prema generously as from an inexhaustible treasury; the poet asks for a place at His feet. Raga dhanashi.*⁶²

27.1. Lovely Nitai is intoxicated with prema:
incomparable prema — an ocean of mercy.

27.2. His heart is brimming with prema:
the Lord does not distinguish who is His own and who is not.

27.3. Where on earth is such mercy?
He gives prema beyond the reach of the Vedic injunctions.⁶³

27.4. Delivering sinners is His ceaseless work; for the sufferings of the fallen tears stream from His eyes.

27.5. Offering prema of His own accord, He gives it to all without stint — like a lovely inexhaustible treasury.

27.6. Says Kanu Dasa with joined palms:
give this wretched servant a place at Your feet.

62. GPT1 — p. 432, section on Nityananda, no. 60 (dhanashi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 691); GPT2 — sec. 6.1, no. 60. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: KD-004). Signature "kānu dāsa" — Kanu Thakura (Kanurama Dasa), son of Purushottama Dasa, associate of Jahnava (cf. PK 2327, chapter 5); attribution by GPT (C).

63. "Nagara" (nitāi nāgara) — here an epithet, "lovely, elegant," usual in praise of Nitai, not the motif of nagari-bhava. "Beyond the reach of the Vedic injunctions" (bedabidhi-agocara) — the prema of Vraja is above the rules of Vedic dharma (CC Adi 4).

28. Kanu Dasa — "bidyānagarādhīpa apāra sampadaśālī..." (GPT1 pp. 454–455, no. 9)

*Praise of Ramananda Raya: the ruler of Vidyanagara, owner of boundless wealth, received Gauranga in his house and gave Him the bee of his mind; glory to Ramananda, with whom the Lord tasted boundless bliss; in a dialogue of questions and answers they established the goal and the path of the living being; his padas of rasa are like a full-blown red lotus, the life of the rasikas; the poet begs for Ramananda's feet. Raga kamoda.*⁶⁴

28.1. The ruler of Vidyanagara, owner of boundless wealth, Rama Raya, first among men, receiving Sri Gauranga in his house, gave His feet the bee of his own mind.

28.2. Glory, glory to Raya Ramananda!
With him my Lord Sri Gauranga tasted boundless bliss.

28.3. The two, in the form of questions and answers, examined the sacred teaching — and learned what the path of sadhana is for living beings; his padas of rasa are like a full-blown red lotus: the life of those who know rasa.⁶⁵

28.4. Always place the dust of Ramananda's feet on your head — and serve: this is the essence of the essence of service, the treasure.

Kanu Dasa, poor in wit, poor in madhura-rasa: Rama Raya, give me your holy feet!

64. GPT1 — pp. 454–455, section on the associates, no. 9 (kamoda), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 713–714); GPT2 — sec. 6.3, no. 9 (in the GPT2 index: "bidyānagarādhīpa — kānudāsa"). The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: KD-005). Signature "kānudāsa"; attribution by GPT (C).

65. The Lord's conversation with Ramananda Raya on the Godavari — CC Madhya 8 (the Lord's questions and Ramananda's answers on sadhya and sadhana — the goal and the path). The GPT1 print has "svādhyaṅya nirṇaya" ("established [the meaning of] the study of scripture"); by sense one would expect "sādhyera nirṇaya" ("established the goal"). Ramananda's padas are his verses on rasa (including the drama Jagannatha-vallabha, whose songs the Lord heard in Puri, CC Madhya 2, Antya 5).

Chapter 15. Krishnadasa, Kanu Dasa, Vasu Ghosha, Yadunandana, Nayananda, Yadu, Ramananda, Chaitanyadasa: the rest of the "GPT only" group and finds of a full check of signatures

This chapter completes the group of padas by the other poets (apart from Narahari) that are known from the "Gaura-pada-tarangini" (GPT1 — 1st ed. by Jagadbandhu Bhadra, 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934), without the padas in nagari-bhava. It contains padas missed by earlier checks (in the OCR text of GPT1 some headings "N pada" lack the danda, and such padas merged with their neighbours) and finds of a full manual re-check of the signatures of all contemporary poets throughout GPT1. Four of the finds turned out not to be "GPT only": they are in the "Padakalpataru" (PK 2099 — Yadunandana, PK 2101 — Yadu, also in the "Bhakti-ratnakara", PK 2083 — unsigned, PK 1867 — Chaitanyadasa); there the text is given from PK with the readings of GPT. The padas follow the order of the lilas: praise of the Gaura-avatara, Advaita's call and the Lord's appearance, goshta-bhava and the kirtanas of Navadvipa, Shachi's lament after the sannyasa, the Lord's bhavas in Puri, Nityananda. The language of some padas (nos. 1, 3–5, 14) has New Bengali forms — by these they are probably late; Majumdar in general considers GPT unreliable for attribution. Hence the attribution of padas known only from GPT is conditional (C, the late ones included: late language alone does not indicate a forgery). The Bengali original, variant readings and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Krishnadasa — "āre re ninduka bhāi..." (GPT1 p. 14, no. 35)

*Rebuke of a blasphemer: Gauranga is the essence of all avatars; when drunkenness, killing of the unborn and debauchery under the guise of tantric religion had overrun Bharata and people had begun to worship yakshas, rakshasas and Vishahari, Sri Chaitanya appeared in Navadvipa, gave everyone the name of Hari, saved Jagai and Madhai, united brahmanas with yavanas; whoever does not believe this has no deliverance. Raga dhanashi.*¹

1.1. "Hey, brother blasphemer, have you no understanding at all? In vain you bear a pair of eyes!

The essence of all avatars is the avatara of Sri Gauranga — and you pass Him by with disregard.

1.2. Drunkenness, violence, killing of the unborn, debauchery — under the guise of tantric religion they overran Bharata;

yakshas, rakshasas and Vishahari people began to worship with all kinds of offerings.²

1.3. Seeing the misery of the living beings, my Lord Sri Chaitanya appeared in Navadvipa:

the saving name of Hari — the taraka-brahma — He Himself offered and gave to all, and removed the decline of dharma.³

1.4. Jagai, Madhai and others who did evil without end He saved by the name of Hari;

He united brahmanas and yavanas — made them embrace: see it with your own eyes but once!

1.5. He made atheists into devotees, gave the lame the power to walk, granted the blind their sight."

Says lowly Krishnadasa: if you do not believe this, there is no more deliverance for you.⁴

1. GPT1 — p. 14, section of mangalacharana, no. 35 (dhanashi), checked against the scan IA in.ernet.dli.2015.477854 (PDF p. 273); GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 35. The pada is not in PK, the "Bhakti-ratnakara" (BR), the "Kshanada-gita-chintamani" (KGC) or the "Padamrita-samudra" (PS); it was missing from the catalogue (new row KR-022). Under the signature "Krishnadasa" PK has 22 padas by different poets. The denunciation of "tantric religion" and words like "killing of the unborn" (bhrūṇahatyā) point to a late origin (18th–19th c.); C.

2. Cf. Vrindavana Dasa's description of Navadvipa before the Lord's appearance: people worship yakshas with wine and meat and honour Vishahari (CB Adi 2). Vishahari is Manasa, the goddess of snakes. "Tantric religion" here means the rites with wine and the like that the poet denounces.

3. "Taraka-brahma" — the name that carries one across the ocean of birth and death: the maha-mantra "Hare Krishna," which the "Kali-santarana Upanishad" calls the destroyer of the taint of Kali. "Decline of dharma" echoes Bhagavad-gita 4.7–8.

4. Jagai and Madhai — CB Madhya 13; CC Adi 17. "Brahmanas and yavanas embraced": the Lord accepted all without distinction of caste — thus Haridasa Thakura, born in a Muslim family, was one of His closest associates (CB Adi 16); the Kazi became His devotee (CC Adi 17).

2. Krishnadasa — "śāntipurera buṛāmālī..." (GPT1 pp. 14–15, no. 36)

*An allegory of the tree of Chaitanya: the old gardener of Shantipur (Advaita) brought a seedling from the garden of Vaikuntha and gave it to the gardener Nitai; in Nadia grew the tree of Chaitanya and bore two fruits — the Name and prema; Nitai gives them out to all, down to chandalas and yavanas, whether they wish it or not; the poet laments that he did not see that tree and did not know the merciful gardener. Raga suhai.*⁵

- 2.1. The old gardener of Shantipur, emptying the garden of Vaikuntha, brought a single seedling; finding the gardener Nitai, He put the seedling into His hands — "Plant it with care," said Nara.⁶
- 2.2. Nadia is the finest place: laying out a garden there, the gardener planted the tree of Chaitanya;
the tree grows day by day, its branches and leaves past counting: watering it with care, He brought it up.
- 2.3. Receiving the water of bhakti, the beautiful tree bore two fruits — the Name and prema; in hope of these two fruits the birds — the living beings — come every day and chatter without cease.
- 2.4. The joyful gardener Nitai, a basket on His head, gives out the two fruits to all;
there is no distinction of caste — everyone's sorrow is gone: each one gets the taste of the fruit.
- 2.5. "Hold it, take it, take it!" — crying out, the joyful gardener Nitai gave out the fruits down to the chandalas; whoever asks receives, whoever does not ask receives too: even the yavanas tasted the fruit.⁷
- 2.6. What a turn of my karma: I did not see that tree, I did not know that merciful gardener!
Krishnadasa, full of bad desires, holding a straw between his teeth, says: shame, shame on my wretched fate!

5. GPT1 — pp. 14–15, section of mangalacharana, no. 36 (suhai), scan PDF pp. 273–274; GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 36. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row KR-023). Date of composition not established; attribution by GPT (C).

6. Nara (nārā) is Advaita Acharya: so the Lord called Him (CB). In Krishnadasa Kaviraja the tree of bhakti is the Lord Himself, who is also the gardener; the first sprout is Madhavendra Puri (CC Adi 9); here the allegory is different: the seedling is brought by Advaita, who called the Lord down, and the gardener is Nityananda, who gives out the fruits.

7. "Whoever does not ask receives too": Nityananda gave prema even to those who did not seek it (CC Adi 5; CB Antya 5). "Holding a straw between the teeth" is a sign of complete humility.

3. Kanu Dasa — "ekadina kamalākṣa kana haridāse..." (GPT1 p. 448, no. 32)

*Advaita (Kamalākṣa) says to Haridasa: many years have passed, and the hope with which He came to earth is not fulfilled; the Lord of Vaikuntha Himself told Him that He would descend to earth for the sake of the suffering living beings and bade Him come before Him; can the Lord's promise be in vain? The poet: the Lord never speaks untruth — He will surely appear. Raga dhanashi.*⁸

- 3.1. One day Kamalākṣa says to Haridasa:
"The wish with which I came to earth —

- 3.2. many years have passed, and the hope is unfulfilled:
my austerity is fruitless, I am in despair.
- 3.3. The Lord of Vaikuntha with His own lips told me:
'The earth is burdened with sins, the living beings weep in sorrow;
- 3.4. to destroy the sorrow of the living beings I shall descend to earth;
You Yourself set foot there before Me.'
- 3.5. Can that promise of the Lord have proved vain?
Will the sorrow of the living beings not be removed through me?"⁹
- 3.6. Says Kanu: the Lord never speaks untruth — by the good fortune of the living beings He will surely appear.

8. GPT1 — p. 448, section on Advaita, no. 32 (dhanashi), scan PDF pp. 707–708; GPT2 — sec. 6.2, no. 32. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row KD-012). Signature "Kanu" (kānu); Kanu Thakura, the son of Purushottama, is a poet of the next generation, and the language of the pada (sādhana biphala, pāpabhārākrānta) is New Bengali: the pada is probably late; C. Kamalaksha is Advaita's childhood name.

9. Advaita Acharya is Maha-Vishnu Himself; He appeared before the Lord in order to call Him down (CC Adi 3, 6; CB Adi 2). His "despair" is not ignorance but compassion for the living beings and longing for the Lord's appearance, expressed in lila. The conversation of the Lord with Advaita in Vaikuntha that is spoken of here is not described in CC or CB; CC (Adi 3) speaks of Advaita's resolve to call Krishna by worship with Ganga water and tulasi. Haridasa Thakura came to Advaita in Shantipur (CB Adi 16).

4. Kanu Dasa — "cauddaśata sātā śāke..." (GPT1 p. 449, no. 33)

*The Lord's appearance: in the year 1407 of the Shaka era, on the full moon of Phalgunā, during a lunar eclipse, Advaita Acharya was offering tulasi leaves to the Ganga; suddenly He leapt up with a thundering cry and broke into a dance: "I have brought, I have brought Gaura to Nadia!" — and Haridasa understood that Gaurāṅga had been born. Raga dhanashi.*¹⁰

- 4.1. In the year fourteen hundred and seven of the Shaka era, on the day of the full moon, at the time of the lunar eclipse, in the month of Phalgunā,
- 4.2. Advaita Acharya Prabhu, with a heart full of devotion, was offering tulasi leaves to the Ganga.
- 4.3. Suddenly Nara leapt up with a thundering cry;
Haridasa was astonished, seeing His manner.
- 4.4. "I have brought, I have brought Gaura, I have brought Him to Nadia!" — crying so, He dances, intoxicated with bliss.¹¹
- 4.5. Haridasa understood: Gaurāṅga was born.
Grasping the hidden meaning, Kanu is beside himself with joy.

5. Vasu Ghosha — "abhirāma ḍāke dvārete..." (GPT1 p. 330, no. 29)

*Goshtha-bhava in Navadvipa: Abhirama calls Gaura at the door to come and play — the game of Vraja was grazing the cows, the game of Nadia is sankirtana; the time for going to the pasture is passing, but Gaura, offended, sits on Mother Shachi's lap; Shachi asks where they will go; Gorachand sets out for the pasture, and Vasu carries an umbrella for Him. Raga lalita.*¹²

- 5.1. Abhirama calls at the door: "Hey, Gaura, will You come and play?
You are giving Yourself airs — sitting on Mother Shachi's lap!
- 5.2. The game of Vraja is grazing the cows, the game of Nadia is sankirtana — the boys are mad for it;
'Ha-re-re!' — we shall see there; let us go to the bank of the Suradhuni.

5.3. The hour is past — the time for going to the pasture has gone: Gaura, tell us, will You come or not?
You have taken offence — sitting on Mother Shachi's lap!"

5.4. Hearing Abhirama's words, Mother Shachi says: "And where will you all go?"
Gorachand will go to the pasture — Vasu goes carrying the umbrella.¹³

6. Yadunandana — "gaurāṅga-sundara naṭa-purandara..." (PK 2099; GPT1 p. 138, no. 80)

*Gauranga's dance: He is the lord of dancers, the manifest body of prema, like a new cloud or a golden Madana moulded of nectar; for the sweetness of His face and smile one gives the autumn moon as a ransom; His eyes defeat the wagtail; the poet longs for His red feet. Raga mayura.*¹⁴

6.1. Gauranga the Beautiful, lord of dancers — the manifest body of prema:
is He a new cloud, is He a golden Madana? — as if moulded of nectar.¹⁵

6.2. (Refrain) Wondrously dances Gauranga — an ocean of bliss!
For the sweetness of His face, for the cunning of His smile one gives the autumn moon as a ransom.

6.3. What eyes — they defeat the wagtail! How lovely the curve of His brows!
His two red feet — this Yadunandana longs for them.

10. GPT1 — p. 449, section on Advaita, no. 33 (dhanashi), scan PDF p. 708; GPT2 — sec. 6.2, no. 33. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row KD-013). Signature "Kanu"; the language is New Bengali (akasmāt, sacakita) — the pada is probably late; C.

11. The time of the Lord's appearance — Shaka 1407 (1486 AD), the full moon of Phalguna, a lunar eclipse — CC Adi 13; there it is also said that at the hour of His birth Advaita Acharya in Shantipur and Haridasa Thakura danced in bliss. Advaita's worship with Ganga water and tulasi, by which He called Krishna down, — CC Adi 3. "I have brought" — Advaita called the Lord to earth; cf. the same words in the pada on the abhisheka (chapter 14, no. 7). Nara (nārā) is Advaita.

12. GPT1 — p. 330, section on goshta-bhava, no. 29 (lalita), checked against the scan (PDF p. 589); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 29. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS. In the catalogue (VV-007) the pada was listed as "unsigned," but the last line names Vasu (bāsu yāya niyā chātā) — thus the poet often brings himself into the lila as a participant; new row VG-174. The colloquial language (halo, yeye, śune) points to a late origin; C. Cf. other padas on Gaura's goshta-bhava in Navadvipa: chapter 1, nos. 11–12; chapter 14, nos. 14–15.

13. Abhirama Thakura (Ramadasa) is an associate of Nityananda, one of the twelve gopals; the tradition sees in him Shridama, Krishna's friend (Gaura-ganoddeshā-dipika). In the pasture the cowherd friends hold an umbrella over Krishna; naming himself, the poet becomes one of them.

14. PK — vol. 3, 17th pallava ("śrīgaurāṅgera nṛtyādi līlā"), mark " ৪৯ ২০৯৯ ", raga "tathā" (mayura, as for PK 2097), MS P-R-Sa no. 2208, checked against the scan (PDF p. 230, printed p. 219); GPT1 — p. 138, section on Gaura's beauty, no. 80 (mayura), scan PDF p. 397; GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 80. The pada was missing from the catalogue (new row YN-014). Signature "yadunandana": Yadunandana Chakravarti, a disciple of Gadadhara Dasa (by Majumdar a contemporary of the Lord; his padas are in BR, chapter 11), or the later Yadunandana Dasa (17th c.) — not established; C.

15. "A new cloud" is the form of Krishna, "a golden Madana" the form of Gaura: within the golden Gaura the dark Krishna is hidden. Madana (Kamadeva) is an image of beauty; Krishna is Madana-mohana, "He who enchants Madana himself": the point is a beauty before which the god of love is powerless, not worldly attraction. GPT1 has "sudhāya garala janu" ("as if poison in nectar") — apparently a misprint for "gaṇala" ("moulded"). "Gives as a ransom" (nichiye) — a rite that averts misfortune from the beloved (cf. chapter 14, no. 2).

7. Nayananda (?) — "nāce re bhāli gaurakiśora bara-raṅgiyā..." (PK 2083 unsigned; GPT1 p. 284, no. 23)

*A dance in Radha's bhava: young Gaura dances, His golden body quivering with prema; remembering Vrindavana, Govardhana and the bank of the Yamuna, He falls and cries: "The flute!"; in Radha's bhava He takes on Radha's colour and repeats "Radha, Radha!" — and Gadadhara, understanding the hint, smilingly takes his place at His left. Raga turi.*¹⁶

7.1. He dances — ah, young Gaura, finest of merry ones!

The beautiful body of Gaura, shining like gold, quivers under the weight of prema.

7.2. Remembering Vrindavana, Govardhana, the bank and the groves of the Yamuna, He sways and falls;

"The flute! the flute!" He cries again and again, and stands still, as if gazing at the flute at His lips.

7.3. In the bhava of Sri Radha, Gora took on the colour of Radha; from His lips — "Radha, Radha!"; understanding the hint, His dear Gadadhara playfully took his place at the left.¹⁷

8. Yadu — "gorā mora baṛai raṅgiyā..." (PK 2101; BR pp. 925–926; GPT1 p. 257, no. 30)

*Kirtana on the bank of the Suradhuni: Gaura dances in the midst of His associates — Gadadhara and Narahari on either side, and Srivasa, Haridasa, Mukunda, Murari, Vasu, Ramai, Damodara and Jagadisha singing; "Hari! Hari!" is heard on all sides; seeing the moon of His face, one forgets all torments. Raga suhini.*¹⁸

8.1. (Refrain) My Gora is a great merry-maker:

on the bank of the Suradhuni — with new merry companions.

8.2. The associates sing, enchanting hearts;

in their midst dances Gaura — the jewel among brahmanas.

8.3. Gadadhara and Narahari — on the right and the left;

Srivasa and Haridasa sing the name of Hari.

8.4. With Him are Mukunda, Murari, Vasu, Ramai;

Damodara and wise Jagadisha sing.¹⁹

8.5. On all sides is heard: "Hari! Hari!" — the ocean of prema has risen in waves of nectar.

8.6. Seeing the moon of His face, one is freed of all torments.

Says Yadu: who could forget such beauty?

9. Ramananda — "drāṃ drimiki drimi mādala bājata..." (GPT1 p. 335, no. 45)

*The Lord's dance in kirtana: the madala thunders, Srivasa and all the associates sing; His arms reach to His knees, His body is as of gold, in red garments He shines like the morning sun; now He trembles, now His hair stands on end, now, raising His arms, He cries "Hari! Hari!", cherishing His former prema; with Him are Nityananda, Advaita and the associates; at this play even a diamond softens. Raga gandhara.*²⁰

9.1. "Drang-drimiki-drimi" thunders the madala: how many talas, how many well-matched rhythms!

He dances the dance of the whole universe — Srivasa and all the others sing.²¹

9.2. His arms reach to His knees, His body is as of pure gold; in red garments — the whole world trembles: like the morning sun.

9.3. Now He trembles, now His hair stands on end, now He waves His arms;

now, raising them high, He cries: "Hari! Hari!" — cherishing His former prema.

9.4. The avadhuta moon, Thakura Advaita, and with them all the associates.

Says Ramananda: at this play a diamond softens and wood melts.

16. PK — vol. 3, 17th pallava, mark " ॐ ॐॐॐ ", raga turi, MS P-R-Sa no. 2192, checked against the scan (PDF p. 223, printed p. 212); in PK the pada is unsigned. GPT1 — p. 284, section on bhavavesha, no. 23 (turi), scan PDF p. 543: the second half of the last line is replaced by the signature "kahe nayanānanda dāsa"; GPT2 — sec. 4.3, no. 23. The pada is not in BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row NN-031). Nayananda, the nephew of Gadadhara Pandita, is a contemporary poet (chapters 4, 10, 14); but his signature is found only in GPT — the attribution is conditional (C).

17. The pada passes from Krishna's mood (memory of Vrindavana, the call of the flute) to Radha's: Gaura is Krishna Himself who has taken on Radha's bhava and golden colour (CC Adi 4). Gadadhara Pandita — the tradition sees in him a manifestation of Radha (Gaura-ganoddesha- dipika 147–153); the left side is Radha's place beside Krishna. "As if gazing at the flute at His lips" (muralī-mukha heriyā) may also mean "gazing at the face with the flute," that is, seeking Krishna with His eyes. PK MS "P-R-Sa": "rādhikāra" for "śrīrādhāra."

18. PK — vol. 3, 17th pallava, mark " ४७ ३५०३ ," raga suhini, MS P-R-Sa no. 2210, checked against the scan (PDF pp. 230–231, printed pp. 219–220). BR — ed. 1912/1913, pp. 925–926 (12th wave, "gīte yathā kāmodaḥ"), ed. 1960, vv. 3077–3082: Narahari Chakravarti quotes the pada while showing Srinivasa the places of Navadvipa, right after a pada of Nayananda "duhum̐ duhum̐ piriti..." (PK 2069, chapter 10, no. 9). GPT1 — p. 257, section on dance and kirtana, no. 30 (suhini), scan PDF p. 516; GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 30. The pada was missing from the catalogue (new row YD-017). Signature "yadu": BR quotes nearby padas of Yadunandana Chakravarti, a disciple of Gadadhara Dasa; most probably it is he, though Yadunatha Kavichandra is not excluded; B (the pada is in BR).

19. Gadadhara Pandita, Narahari Sarakara, Srivasa Pandita, Haridasa Thakura, Mukunda Datta, Murari Gupta are the Lord's associates in Navadvipa. Vasu is Vasudeva (Ghosha or Datta); Ramai — Shrirama Pandita, Srivasa's brother (or Ramai Pandita); Damodara — Damodara Pandita; Jagadisha — Jagadisha Pandita. The night kirtanas of Navadvipa — CB Madhya 8; CC Adi 17.

20. GPT1 — p. 335, section "rasa and maharasa," no. 45 (gandhara), scan PDF p. 594; GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 45. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row RM-017). Signature "Ramananda" without "Vasu": Vasu Ramananda or the later Ramananda Dasa (see the catalogue) — not established; C. The kirtanas in Srivasa's house — CB Madhya 8.

21. "The dance of the whole universe" (akhila bhuvanaka nāca) — possibly "a dance in which the whole universe is drawn." "Former prema" — the prema of Vrindavana, of Krishna's lila. The avadhuta moon is Nityananda. "A diamond (vajra) softens, wood melts" — even the hardest hearts melt. "Like the morning sun": GPT1 has "pātara" (= prātara, "morning").

10. Vasu Ghosha — "paṛiyā dharaṇītale śoke śacī..." (GPT1 p. 372, no. 21)

*Shachi's lament after the Lord's departure: fallen on the ground, she complains of cruel fate — her priceless treasure has been stolen; Gorachand's bracelets, necklace and bed lie abandoned, Nadia is plunged in darkness; she is ready to become a yogini and go in search of Him, to sell herself as a maid to whoever will give her back Gauranga; the poet: do not weep, Shachi — for the sake of the living beings Nimai has become a sannyasi. Raga karuna.*²²

10.1. Fallen on the ground, Shachi weeps in grief and says: "Cruel fate has become my enemy!

I had a priceless treasure — what fate has stolen Gorachand, the darling doll of my soul?

10.2. The bracelets from His arms, Gorachand's necklace, the bed, the silk, the gold-woven rug — all lie abandoned: Gaura has left me, and I go on living in vain.

10.3. Gauranga has gone — Nadia is plunged in darkness, my heart tosses about.

I shall become a yogini, I shall go where I can find Gauranga — I shall weep, my arms around His neck.

10.4. Whoever gives me back Gauranga — to him I shall sell myself without price, I shall be the maid of his servant."

Says Vasudeva Ghosha: why do you weep, Shachi? For the sake of the living beings Nimai has become a sannyasi.²³

11. Vasu Ghosha — "svarūpera mukhe śuni mānalīlā..." (GPT1 p. 290, no. 42)

The Lord in Radha's bhava: hearing from Svarupa of the mana-lila, He is plunged into the bhava of the Loving One (Radha), dances crying "Radha-kunda!", slowly walks to the bank of the "Yamuna," sits by the water and, His face bowed, is lost in thought; the poet: only one who has realized rasa in the heart knows its essence. Raga dhanashi, tala dashakushi.²⁴

11.1. (Refrain) Young Gaura is in bhavavesha:

hearing from Svarupa's lips of the mana-lila, the jewel of brahmanas was lost in the bhava of the Loving One.²⁵

11.2. "Radha-kunda! Radha-kunda!" — crying out, He dances with arms flung up; streams of prema flow from both His eyes.

One cannot understand where His bhava is drawing Him: slowly, slowly He walks, His gait surpassing the king of elephants.

11.3. Coming to the bank of the Yamuna, sitting right by the water, He is lost in thought; seeing the waves of that bhava, I can understand nothing: He sits with His holy face bowed.

11.4. Says Vasudeva Ghosha: one who has realization in his heart — he, the connoisseur of rasa, knows the essence of rasa; one who has no realization — to him it is unknowable: his life has been in vain.

12. Vasu Ghosha — "svarūpera kāche gaurahari..." (GPT1 p. 306, no. 24)

*The Lord in the bhava of Radha disappointed in waiting (vipralabdha): weeping before Svarupa, He says that in vain He set the snares of love — Kala-chand did not come to the kunjā, the dew is falling, the night has passed for nothing; having said this, He rolls on the ground. Raga suhai.*²⁶

12.1. Before Svarupa Gaurahari, weeping, speaks, sobbing aloud:

12.2. "In vain I laid the snares of love —
Kala-chand did not come to the kunjā.

12.3. Drip, drip — the dew is falling;
the night has grown very deep.

12.4. In vain I watched the road of hope, in vain I spent this night."²⁷

12.5. Having said this, He rolls on the ground;
Vasu Ghosha moans: "Alas, alas!"

22. GPT1 — p. 372, section on the sannyasa, no. 21 (karuna), checked against the scan (PDF p. 631); GPT2 — sec. 5.3, no. 21. The pada is not in PK (including Vasu's sannyasa cycle PK 2221–2229, chapter 4), BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row VG-175). The preceding pada of GPT (no. 20) is Vasu's PK 2221 (chapter 4, no. 10). GPT only; C.

23. "I shall become a yogini" — I shall go as a wandering ascetic to find my son: so speaks a mother's love (vatsalya). "For the sake of the living beings": the Lord took sannyasa so that even the proud, seeing a sannyasi, would bow before Him and receive prema (CC Adi 17; CB Madhya 26). Shachi's grief after the sannyasa — CC Madhya 3; CB Antya 1.

24. GPT1 — p. 290, section on bhavavesha, no. 42 (dhanashi, dashakushi), checked against the scan (PDF p. 549); GPT2 — sec. 4.3, no. 42. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row VG-176). Svarupa Damodara was with the Lord in Puri and sang Him songs in keeping with His bhava (CC Madhya 10; Antya 14–19); the "Yamuna" is apparently the sea or a river in Puri which the Lord in His bhava takes for the Yamuna (cf. CC Antya 18). Majumdar doubts that GPT padas in which Svarupa is with the Lord belong to Vasu (see chapter 12, no. 28); GPT only; C.

25. The mana-lila is the play of Radha's offended pride (mana), the highest manifestation of Her love for Krishna. "The Loving One" (bhābinī) is Radha. Radha's bhava is pure prema, not a worldly feeling; the Lord tastes it in order to know Radha's love (CC Adi 4). Radha-kunda is Radha's pond near Govardhana.

26. GPT1 — p. 306, section on Radha's moods (vasaka-sajja, vipralabdha), no. 24 (suhai), checked against the scan (PDF p. 565); GPT2 — sec. 4.5, no. 24. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row VG-177). The next pada of GPT (no. 25, "svarūpera kare dhari...") was translated in chapter 12 (no. 28). GPT only; C.

27. The Lord in Radha's bhava speaks Her words (Svarupa in this lila is Radha's friend Lalita). Kala-chand, "the dark moon," is Krishna; a kunjā is a bower in Vrindavana. The Lord's bhavas in Puri in Svarupa's company — CC Antya 14–19.

13. Chaitanyadasa — "ki baliba bidhātāre e dukha sahāya..." (PK 1867; GPT1 p. 281, no. 12)

*The divine madness of prema (divyonmada): the poet does not know what to say to the Creator — seeing Gora's face, how can one still live? The Lord sits with faded face, tears pour like the heavenly Ganga onto the peak of Sumeru; now He rubs His face and head, now He leaps up and runs, now He falls senseless; His breath stops — all weep. Raga suhini.*²⁸

13.1. What shall I say to the Creator, who makes us bear this pain?

Seeing Gora's face, why does life not leave me?

13.2. He sits with a faded face, tears pour from both His eyes — like a stream of the heavenly Ganga onto the peak of Sumeru.

13.3. Now He rubs His face and head, now He leaps up and runs; utterly spent, He falls to the ground senseless.

13.4. There is no breath in His nostrils — seeing this, all weep;
the heart of Chaitanyadasa cannot be calm.²⁹

14. Vasu Ghosha — "nitāi āmāra parama dayāla..." (GPT1 p. 424, no. 32)

*Nityananda's flood of prema: Nitai brought a flood of prema into the world, and it filled the rivers and canals; the wave carried away sinners and sufferers alike, the devotees sport in it, some swim; Nadia and Shantipur went under — and started a boat race; Nitai laughs, and the poet flounders in the waves. Raga sindhura.*³⁰

14.1. (Refrain) My Nitai is supremely merciful:

bringing a flood of prema, He blessed the world — filled the rivers and canals with prema.

14.2. The wave of prema struck — no one was left aside: sinners and sufferers were carried off by the current;

all the devotees together sport in that prema, and some go swimming.

14.3. Nadia went under, Shantipur is sinking in prema — the two together have started a boat race;
seeing this, Nitai laughs; all float in prema, and Vasu Ghosha flounders, gulping water.³¹

15. Kanu Dasa — "āota nityānanda adabhuta cāmḍa..." (GPT1 pp. 431–432, no. 59)

*Praise of Nityananda: Nityananda comes — a wondrous moon with the enchanting gait of a dancer; His face and eyes are lotuses, His lips brighter than the dawn, His teeth pearls; with the nectar of His words He sprinkles those scorched by worldly existence, with the rays of the name "Hare Krishna" He dispels the darkness of bad desires; around Him are His companions like stars. Raga kalyana.*³²

15.1. (Refrain) Nityananda comes — a wondrous moon:

natural is His gait, beautiful His dancing step — a form that enchants the people of the three worlds.

15.2. His face and eyes are pure, beautiful lotuses, and over them, like bees, the pair of brows;
the lustre of His red lips is brighter than the dawn, His teeth a string of pearls.³³

15.3. Those scorched by the heat of worldly existence He mercifully sprinkles with streams of the nectar of His words; with the rays of the name "Hare Krishna" He destroys all the darkness of bad desires.

15.4. Around Him are His merry companions, like a host of stars: night and day this moon shines.

Hoping for the feet, tender as young shoots, of Sri Jahnava-vallabha, speaks Sri Kanu Dasa.³⁴

28. PK — vol. 3, 10th pallava ("nānābidha biraha"), at the beginning of the cycle "atha dibyonmādasya daśa daśāḥ | tatra śrīgauracandraḥ" (a gaura-chandrika to the ten states of Radha in divine madness), mark " སྒྲྀ སྒྲྀལྱེ " , raga suhini, checked against the scan (PDF p. 135, printed p. 124); GPT1 — p. 281, section on bhavavesha, no. 12 (suhini), scan PDF p. 540; GPT2 — sec. 4.3, no. 12. The pada is not in BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row CD-008). Chaitanyadasa, according to Majumdar, is probably a contemporary of the branch of Gadadhara (chapters 4–7); B.

29. The Lord's state is the divine madness of prema in separation from Krishna, not a worldly illness or grief: He rubs His face against the walls of the Gambhira (CC Antya 19); in the deepest swoon of prema His breath stops (cf. CC Antya 14, 17). "Why does life not leave me" is the sorrow of a devotee who sees the Lord's suffering in separation. The heavenly Ganga (Mandakini) flowing down the golden mountain Sumeru is an image of the tears streaming down Gaura's golden body. PK MSS: "uṭhe" — kha; "durabale" — cha; "bhome" — cha.

30. GPT1 — p. 424, section on Nityananda, no. 32 (sindhura), checked against the scan (PDF p. 683); GPT2 — sec. 6.1, no. 32. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row VG-178). Colloquial words (bāichāli — boat race, hābuḍubu khāya — "flounders, gulping water") point to a late origin; C. Nityananda's preaching in Gauda — CB Antya 5–6.

31. The flood of prema that inundated the world is an image from CC Adi 7: Advaita called the Lord down, Nityananda spread prema all over Gauda. Nadia (Navadvipa) is the Lord's place, Shantipur Advaita's. "Flounders" — the poet's humility: he cannot swim in this flood.

32. GPT1 — pp. 431–432, section on Nityananda, no. 59 (kalyana), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 690–691); GPT2 — sec. 6.1, no. 59. The pada is not in PK, BR, KGC or PS (catalogue: KD-011). Kanu Thakura, the son of Purushottama, grew up in the care of Jahnava-devi ("Prema-vilasa") — the signature "Sri Jahnava-vallabha" (Jahnava's husband, Nityananda) fits him; but the pada is known only from GPT; C.

33. GPT1 and GPT2 have "bhujayuga" ("pair of arms"), apparently a misprint for "bhuruyuga" ("pair of brows"): "bees over the lotuses of face and eyes" is the usual image of brows. "A string of pearls": GPT1 "motikala," GPT2 "motiphala" ("pearl").

34. GPT2: "abadhūta cāmḍa" ("the avadhuta moon") for "adabhuta cāmḍa" ("wondrous moon"), 15.1. "Hare Krishna" is the maha-mantra which Nityananda, at the Lord's command, gave to everyone (CB Madhya 13).

Chapter 16. Yadu: Two Gaura-padas from the Padakalpataru Found in the Full Check of PK

*This chapter is the result of a full check of all four volumes of the *Padakalpataru (PK) by the signatures of the poets contemporary with Mahaprabhu on Majumdar's list. Only three gaura-padas turned out to be unknown to the catalogue and to translations 01–15, all signed "Yadu" (Yadunatha): two are translated here, the third (PK 703) is in nagari-bhava and is deferred to the section of nagari-padas. The other results of the check are PK numbers for padas previously known only from the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT), the Bhakti-ratnakara or the Kshanada-gita-chintamani and already translated (YD-003 = PK 2512, YD-004 = PK 1976, AN-007 = PK 2328, AN-008 = PK 2337, BD-028 = PK 2301, BD-041 = PK 635, KR-004 = PK 1464, VG-151 = PK 2668), and a correction: Balarama's pada "saba abatāra sāra..." (chapter 13, no. 8) is PK 2201, bearing his signature in PK itself, not Lochana Dasa's pada PK 2203; the notes of those chapters have been supplemented. Both padas of this chapter stand in the 20th pallava of PK ("Sri Gaurachandra — other descriptions") and are also in GPT1 (p. 37, nos. 33–34): praise of the Gaura-avatara, before whom all living beings weep, and the love of Gaura and Gadadhara. The text follows PK with the GPT variants; the Bengali original and the word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Yadu — "jalera jība kānde dekhiyā pratibimba..." (PK 2209; GPT1 p. 37, no. 34)

Praise of the Gaura-avatara: at the sight of Gorachand all living beings weep — the creatures of the water seeing His reflection, the beasts and birds in the forests; trees thrill, stones melt, the blind weep aloud hearing of Him, the wives of noble families weep, the deaf and the helpless, infants leaving the breast; there will be no such incarnation again — He saved all, only the poet is left out. Raga mangala.¹

1.1. The creatures of the water weep, seeing His reflection; in the forests the beasts and birds weep;
the trees thrill, the stones melt, the blind, hearing of Him, weep and cry aloud.

1.2. (Refrain) Wondrous is the body of Gorachand!

Boundless is what one feels: how can one tell it with a single mouth? What is in the heart does not come to the lips.

1.3. The wives of noble families — even they weep aloud; the deaf and the helpless weep in bewilderment;
the infant, leaving its mother's breast, weeps — no one knows why.²

1.4. There will be no such incarnation again: He is an ocean of nothing but mercy.

The fallen, the foolish, the inanimate and the animate — He saved them all; only Yadu was left out.³

2. Yadu — "gaura gadādhara duhum̐ tanu sundara..." (PK 2182; GPT1 p. 37, no. 33)

Gaura and Gadadhara: both are beautiful and wondrously spread prema; when, rejoicing, they touch each other, nectar flows; hand in hand, eye to eye — a sweetness beyond understanding; who, plunging into these feelings, will reach the bottom? Seeing them, people forget body and mind. Raga kedara.⁴

2.1. Gaura and Gadadhara — both are beautiful, wondrously spreading prema; when, rejoicing, they touch each other in their play, nectar pours without end.⁵

2.2. (Refrain) Behold, behold: wondrous is the love of these two!

Who, plunging into these feelings, into this art full of prema, will reach the bottom?

2.3. Hand in hand, eye to eye — the sweetness that is between them, how could I understand it?

Seeing their wondrous beauty, the body thrills: there is none like it in all the worlds.

2.4. Are they dolls of nectar, or embodiments of rasa, or is it prema itself that has taken two forms?

Seeing them, the people of the world forget body and mind — will Yadu find a limit to it?⁶

1. PK — vol. 3, 20th pallava ("Śrī-Gauracandra — prakārāntara"), label " ୨୦ ୨୨୦୯ ", raga mangala, MS P-R-Sa no. 2317 (MS P-R — 9.21), checked against the scan (PDF p. 272, printed p. 261); GPT1 — p. 37, section of praise of the Gaura-avatara, no. 34 (mangala), checked against the scan (PDF p. 296); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 34 (p. 26). The pada is not in the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR), the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC) or the Padamrita-samudra (PS). It was missing from the catalogue (new row YD-019): it was found in the full check of PK (the log of chapter 8 mentions it in passing — "PK 2209 — Yadu" — but it never entered the catalogue; the earlier checks of GPT1 signatures missed it because the signature "yadu" is garbled in the OCR). The signature "yadu": Yadunatha Dasa (Kavichandra), whose padas stand nearby in the same pallava (PK 2180, 2191; chapters 6 and 13), or Yadunandana — not established; C.

2. They weep not from grief but from the prema that the sight of the Lord awakens — so the stones melt and the trees thrill (cf. CC Madhya 17: in the forests of Jharikhanda beasts and birds danced and chanted the name together with the Lord). The wives of noble families here are among all living beings: this is not the motif of townswomen captivated by Gaura's beauty (nagari-bhava) but a picture of universal prema; cf. the wives of noble families dancing in sankirtana in Balarama's pada (PK 2207, chapter 10, no. 2). "The helpless" (jaṛa) — the dull, unable to move or understand; MS P-R: "the dumb and the deaf" (mūka badhira).

3. "The inanimate and the animate" (jaṛa ajaṛa) — the unmoving (the trees and stones of 1.1) and the moving: the Lord's mercy embraces all that exists. "Only Yadu was left out" is the usual formula of humility in signatures (cf. Balarama in PK 2201 and 2207, chapters 13 and 10): the poet speaks of himself. MS P-R-Sa: "the fallen, the foolish people" (jana for jaṛa) and "the Deliverer" (uddhāraṇa for uddhārila).

4. PK — vol. 3, 20th pallava, label " ୨୧ ୨୨୧୨ ", raga kedara, MS P-R-Sa no. 2290, checked against the scan (PDF pp. 261–262, printed pp. 250–251); GPT1 — p. 37, section of praise of the Gaura-avatara, no. 33 (kedara), checked against the scan (PDF p. 296); GPT2 — sec. 1.3, no. 33 (pp. 25–26). The pada is not in BR, KGC or PS; it was missing from the catalogue (new row YD-018) — found in the full check of PK. In PK it immediately follows Nayananda's pada on Gaura and Gadadhara (PK 2181) and stands one after Yadunatha's pada "gaura-barāṇa tanu..." (PK 2180, chapter 13, no. 6), with which it shares theme and phrasing. The signature "yadu" is the same poet as in no. 1 (see note 1); C.

5. Gadadhara Pandita, according to Kavi Karnapura's Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (vv. 147–153), is Sri Radha appearing in the Lord's lila; his whole life is service to Gaura. The intimacy of Gaura and Gadadhara is the Lord's lila with the embodiment of His internal energy: it is pure prema with nothing mundane in it, and therefore the poet sees in them "prema itself that has taken two forms" (2.4). The worship of Gaura together with Gadadhara (Gaura-Gadadhara) is accepted in Gadadhara's line; the pada has nothing to do with "gaura-nagari" (Gaura as the nagara among the women of Nadia).

6. GPT1 and GPT2 read in the refrain (2.2) "who, immersed [in it], will obtain it" (majiyā pāoba seha) instead of "will reach the bottom" (nimajiyā pāoba theha PK). "Find a limit" (pāoba pāra) — "reach the shore": admiration, not complaint; cf. the humble signature of the same poet in no. 1.

Part II. Appendix: Padas Signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini

Chapter 17. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — I: mangalacharana, Gaura's form, abhisheka, kirtana and dance, bhavavesha

Introductory note to the appendix

In the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed. by Jagadbandhu Bhadra, 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934) more than three hundred padas are signed with the name "Narahari" (narahari, "narahari dāsa", "dāsa narahari", "narahari-pahu"). Those also found in the Padakalpataru (PK) were translated in the main part (chapters 1–6): they are padas of Narahari Sarakara, which Majumdar examines as songs of an eyewitness. Here, as a separate appendix, are gathered the padas with the same signature known only from the GPT (and from the Bhakti-ratnakara) — by decision, all are to be translated, with a caveat about attribution.

Narahari is the name of two poets. Narahari Sarakara Thakura of Shrikhanda was an associate of Mahaprabhu, the teacher of Lochana Dasa, a singer of the Lord's bhavas in Navadvipa and Puri; according to the Gaura-ganoddesh-dipika (177), he is Madhumati, an intimate friend of Radha in Vrindavana. Narahari Chakravarti (also called Ghanashyama Dasa), who lived in Vrindavana in the first half of the 18th century, is the author of the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR), Narottama-vilasa, Gita-chandrodaya and other books; in the BR he inserted many of his own songs signed "Narahari" or "Ghanashyama", mostly in Vrajabuli, and often put them in the mouths of the people of Navadvipa while describing the holy places.

The signature alone does not tell whose a pada is. The index of poets in GPT2 divides the "Narahari" padas into three groups: ≈30 of Sarakara (taken from the journal Gauranga-madhuri, published in Shrikhanda), ≈171 of Chakravarti (those found in the BR) and 112 of "Narahari Dasa", undistinguished. Majumdar accepts as Sarakara's only the padas preserved in PK and regards padas known only from the GPT as unreliable; of the "Narahari" padas in the BR, by his analysis, only one belongs to Sarakara (BR p. 924 = PK 2122, chapter 3, no. 1). Sarakara's marks, according to Majumdar, are a simple Bengali without Vrajabuli, without heaped comparisons and alliterations, a correct metre, brevity; ornate Vrajabuli with chains of assonance is Chakravarti's manner. But even the index groups are not beyond doubt: thus pada no. 128 of the section on Gaura's form stands in the index on a page assigned to Sarakara, while in the BR it is put in the mouth of a woman of Nadia (below, no. 8).

Therefore each pada is marked in its heading: "probably Sarakara" — simple Bengali, absent from the BR, assigned by the GPT2 index to Sarakara; "probably Chakravarti" — the pada is in the BR (usually the language too is Vrajabuli with alliterations); "not established" — the arguments conflict or are lacking. In the lila database the padas "probably Chakravarti" have authority B (the author is a recognized acharya, the author of the Bhakti-ratnakara; his authorship is established by his works), the padas "probably Sarakara" and "not established" have authority C; no pada of the appendix has authority D (doubtful authenticity). Chakravarti's padas are a late (18th-century) poetic elaboration of the lilas by a recognized acharya: not the testimony of an eyewitness, but not a forgery either; they often follow the Chaitanya-bhagavata and the Chaitanya-charitamrita. Padas in nagari-bhava (speech of townswomen in love with Gaura) are deferred to the section of nagari padas; padas in which "Narahari" is merely mentioned among the associates while the signature is another's are excluded.

Chapter 17 is the first chapter of the appendix: three padas of mangalacharana (by the GPT2 index — Sarakara's), Gaura's form, the abhisheka in Srivasa's house and arati, kirtana and dance in Navadvipa

(a large cycle, almost all of it known also from the BR), bhavavesha — the Lord in the mood of Shiva and in the mood of Krishna. The padas follow the order of the lilas. The base text is GPT1 (tesseract recognition, doubtful places by the IA scan in.ernet.dli.2015.477854) collated with GPT2 and the BR (eds. 1912 and 1960); variants are in the full version of the book. All the padas were also checked against Narahari Chakravarti's Gita-chandrodaya — none of them is there. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "gaura-līlā daraśane icchā baṛa haya mane..." (GPT1 p. 11, no. 27)

*Mangalacharana: the poet, seeing Gaura-lila, wishes to write it down in his own tongue but does not know how; the one who will write a book of it is not yet born; the lila of Gaura and Gadadhara, which melts stone, cannot be described even by Sarasvati and Shiva — may at least the poet's few songs help someone to reveal the Lord's lila. Raga pahida. Attribution: probably Sarakara — the GPT2 index assigns the pada to Sarakara; it is not in the BR; simple Bengali tripadi; the poet speaks as an eyewitness, before books on Gaura had appeared.*¹

- 1.1. Seeing Gaura's lila, I greatly long in my heart to write it all down in our own tongue; but I am most lowly, I do not know how to write in due order — how then shall I write it?²
- 1.2. He who will write this book is not yet born — long yet is the delay before his birth;
when it is composed in our own tongue, all people will understand — when will the Lord fulfil my wish?³
- 1.3. The lila of Gaura and Gadadhara softens stone — who has the power to describe it?
Even if Sharada were to write ceaselessly, without end, and five-faced Sadashiva with her...⁴
- 1.4. If, seeing the few songs I write, someone reveals to the world the Lord's lila —
Narahari will find happiness, the grief of his heart will go: at the singing of that book stones will melt.

2. Narahari Dasa — "braja-bhūma kari śūnya nadīyāya abatīrṇa..." (GPT1 pp. 11–12, no. 28)

*Mangalacharana: an address to Gaura, recognized as the Krishna of Vraja: having emptied Vraja, He has descended in Nadia; there is no peacock feather, no yellow cloth, no flute, no curving pose — yet, since He has let Himself be seen, the mind will not be deceived: this is that very Kanai of Vraja. Raga pahida. Attribution: probably Sarakara — GPT2 index (Sarakara); not in the BR; simple Bengali tripadi.*⁵

- 2.1. Having emptied the land of Vraja, You descended in Nadia — such is Your cunning!
Giving ceaseless pain, having changed colour and bhava, You again multiply the snares of separation.⁶
- 2.2. There is no crown of peacock feather, none of that yellow cloth, in Your hand none of that enchanting flute — that flute with whose song You stole the very life of the gopis: where is that flute, Gaurahari?
- 2.3. None of those slanting eyes — now I see lovely eyes; none of that curve, none of that bending.
But since You have let Yourself be seen, the mind is not deceived by this form: You are that very Kanai of Vraja.⁷
- 2.4. Says Narahari Dasa: whoever has no faith, let him come and see with his own eyes.
To speak of what happened that day at the meeting of the two is a pain in the heart.⁸

3. Narahari — "rase tanu ḍharaḍhara gaura-kiśora-bara..." (GPT1 p. 12, no. 29)

*Mangalacharana: the Shyama of Dvapara is called Sri Krishna Chaitanya in Kali; within He is Shyama, without golden: to play with Rai in the groves, out of love He became golden; the poet fears to speak of the hidden and cannot keep silent. Raga pahida. Attribution: probably Sarakara — GPT2 index (Sarakara); not in the BR; simple Bengali tripadi.*⁹

3.1. His body brimming with rasa, the best of youths, Gaura-kishora — now His name is Sri Krishna Chaitanya.

To speak of these hidden things is a pain in the heart: without bhakti no one else will know them.

3.2. In the Dvapara age Shyama, in Kali the name Chaitanya — so are Garga's words written in the Bhagavata.

I ponder in my heart: Shyama has become Gauranga — the body of Radha and Krishna is its witness.¹⁰

3.3. Within, the dark body; without, the golden body — wondrous is Gauranga's lila!

To play with Rai, to enjoy the groves, out of love He took the golden body.¹¹

3.4. This is not a thing to be told — who knows what may come of telling it; yet not to tell is great pain in the heart.

Pondering in his mind, holding Gauranga in his heart, Narahari laments.

1. GPT1 — p. 11, mangalacharana section, no. 27 (pahida), checked against the scan (PDF pp. 270–271); GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 27 (catalogue: NG-001). Not in PK, the BR, the Kshanada-gita-chintamani (KGC) or the Padamrita-samudra (PS). The index of poets of GPT2 assigns p. 8 (padas nos. 27–29) to Narahari Sarakara (from the journal Gauranga-madhuri); the language is simple Bengali tripadi without Vrajabuli, which fits Majumdar's marks of Sarakara. But the pada is known only from the GPT; C.

2. "In our own tongue" (bhāṣāya) — in Bengali, not in Sanskrit: the first books on the Lord (Murari Gupta, Kavi Karnapura) were written in Sanskrit.

3. If the pada is genuine, it was written in the Lord's lifetime or soon after, when there were as yet no Bengali books about Gaura. Whom the poet awaits he does not say; Bengali poems on the Lord were written by Vrindavana Dasa (Chaitanya-bhagavata) and by Lochana Dasa, a disciple of Narahari Sarakara, who calls him his Thakura (Chaitanya-mangala, Sutra-khanda, ch. 1, vv. 9, 61).

4. Sharada — Sarasvati, goddess of speech; Sadashiva — Shiva, the five-faced (pañcānana). Gadadhara — Gadadhara Pandita, the inseparable associate of the Lord (in Krishna-lila — Radha): "the lila of Gaura and Gadadhara" is a favourite theme of Narahari Sarakara (cf. chapter 3, no. 1).

5. GPT1 — pp. 11–12, no. 28 (pahida), checked against the scan (PDF p. 271); GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 28. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-236); the stage-1 catalogue missed it. Not in PK, BR, KGC, PS. GPT2 index — Sarakara (p. 8). C.

6. "Having changed colour and bhava" (barṇa kari bhābāntara) — Krishna, who is dark, became golden, accepting the bhava of Radha (CC Adi 1.5; ch. 4). The speaker is a resident of Vraja who has recognized Krishna in Gaura: "the snares of separation" are his separation from Krishna, who has left Vraja for Nadia.

7. "Curve" — tribhanga, the threefold bend of Krishna's body with the flute; "slanting eyes" — Krishna's sidelong glance. Kanai — an endearing name of Krishna in Vraja. Cf. CC Madhya 8 (Ramananda Raya sees Krishna in the Lord).

8. Who "the two" are the poet does not say; it is only clear that he speaks of a meeting in which the Lord revealed Himself as Krishna to an associate who recognized Him.

9. GPT1 — p. 12, no. 29 (pahida), checked against the scan (PDF p. 271); GPT2 — sec. 1.2, no. 29. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-237). Not in PK, BR, KGC, PS. GPT2 index — Sarakara (p. 8). C.

10. Garga's words — Bhag. 10.8.13: in former ages Krishna had white, red and yellow colours, now He has become dark. The words "in Kali the name Chaitanya" are not in Garga: this is the poet's interpretation; CC Adi 3.36–40 sees in the "yellow" (pīta) colour an indication of the golden avatara of the Kali age. "The body of Radha and Krishna" — Gaura, Radha and Krishna united in one form (CC Adi 1.5; 4.55–56).

11. "Krishna within, Gaura without" — cf. Tattva-sandarbhā, mangalacharana 2 (CC Adi 3.81). "Out of love" (anurāge) — Krishna, wishing to taste Radha's love, took Her bhava and golden lustre (CC Adi 1.6; ch. 4); the golden colour is Her colour, not a worldly passion.

4. Narahari — "nācata bhubana-mano-mohana..." (GPT1 p. 135, no. 70; BR)

*Gaura's form in the dance: His colour brighter than champaka, gold and lotus, His body in sandal paste and Chinese silk, His face gentler than moons, His brows a row of bees, necklace and earrings swaying, curls scattering, His tendril-like hands playing, His feet keeping the rhythm. Raga karnata. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli with chains of comparisons.*¹²

- 4.1. He dances, the Enchanter of the minds of all the worlds — His colour surpassing champaka, gold and lotus;
His shapely, tender body anointed with sandal, He wears garments of Chinese silk, densely shining.
- 4.2. His sweet face puts to shame hosts of moons; sweetly He smiles — as if nectar were flowing;
His brows a row of bees; His eyes gleam and sway, robbing the dawn's rays of their power.¹³
- 4.3. The jewelled necklace sways, stealing all composure; the earrings tremble, flashing at His ears;
His curling locks, under their own weight, scatter and sway like strands of darkness in the wind.
- 4.4. In graceful play of His tendril-like hands, stepping on the earth, He keeps hundreds of rhythms;
Narahari, in great delight, sings His glory: who can describe this boundless beauty?

5. Narahari — "nadīyāra mājhāre nācaye gorācāṁḍa..." (GPT1 p. 135, no. 72; BR)

*Gaura's form, from face to feet: Gorachand dancing in the midst of Nadia is a snare for every heart; seeing Him, the young wives lose their senses; His face is the autumn moon, His speech nectar, His eyes the abode of love, His brows shame Kama's bow, His curls are twined with malati, on His brow a drop of sandal; garland, long arms, slender waist, feet before whose nails Kama swoons — this is the Nagara of Gokula, the ocean of rasa. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, among the songs of the people of Nadia).*¹⁴

- 5.1. In the midst of Nadia dances Gorachand — a snare to capture the hearts of all people.
- 5.2. His body like golden filaments, His radiance beyond compare;
seeing Him, crowds of young wives lose their senses.¹⁵
- 5.3. How sweet His face — the autumn moon!
His speech a stream of nectar, cooling the afflicted.
- 5.4. Slightly mingled with a smile, His lips shine;
the pearl-row of His teeth flashes.
- 5.5. His eyes are the abode of love;
with a glance He steals the life of the whole world.
- 5.6. Who carved these brows — so full of play — to break the pride of Kama's bow?
- 5.7. The knot of His curling hair, flashing, is bent aside; around the malati twined in it, swarms of bees are circling.
- 5.8. Who can keep composure, seeing that lovely brow?
The drop of sandal on it is death to the moon's pride.
- 5.9. On His breast sways the garland that has conquered the world; whoever has seen it once keeps his eyes on it and remembers it ever.
- 5.10. How graceful the curve of His long arms!
How many movements in them — crushing the steadfastness of the chaste.

- 5.11. His slender waist — it would hide within a fist;
without price He buys hearts and refreshes the eyes.
- 5.12. The soles of His lotus feet are beyond compare;
before the radiance of His nails many a Kama swoons.¹⁶
- 5.13. Says Narahari: what play does He not know! — the Nagara of Gokula, that ocean of rasa.¹⁷

6. Narahari — "suradhunī-tīre gaura naṭa-nāgara..." (GPT1 p. 136, no. 73; BR)

*Gaura's dance on the bank of the Suradhuni: Gaura, the graceful dancer, sports with His associates, captivating the eyes of the world; His body outshines a golden mountain, His arms put to shame an elephant's trunk, again and again He cries "Hari, Hari!"; seeing Gadadhara, He sheds tears like a cloud of the month of Shravana, and the earth trembles beneath His feet. Raga somaraga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*¹⁸

- 6.1. On the bank of the Suradhuni, Gaura, the graceful dancer, sports together with His associates;
the peerless, many-sided dance, ever-new sweetness — steals the eyes of all the people of the world.
- 6.2. His body, robbing a golden mountain of its pride, shines with abundant thrills;
the curve of His arms, which surpass an elephant's trunk, puts to shame hundreds of Kamas.¹⁹
- 6.3. His teeth flash, lovely — the lustre of kunda flowers — in a soft smile on His sweet lips;
His face sways, His lips cry ceaselessly "Hari, Hari!" — who, hearing it, can keep composure?
- 6.4. His heart overflows when He sees Gadadhara: His eyes pour tears like a cloud in the month of Shravana; says Narahari: the earth trembles under the weight of His lovely, light feet.²⁰

7. Narahari — "biharata surasarita-tīra..." (GPT1 pp. 151–152, no. 119; BR)

*Gaura's form on the bank of the Ganga, from face to feet: youthful, He sports by the river; His colour outshines lightning, gold and kunkuma, His face is a snare for the eyes of young wives, His curls dark clouds, His brows serpents; broad chest, slender waist, lotus feet about which bee-devotees hover; a cloud of mercy, He ever showers the nectar of prema — only foolish Narahari it does not touch. Raga nataraga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli with strings of comparisons.*²¹

- 7.1. By the bank of the heavenly river strolls Gaura — young, in unchanging youth: the lustre of His body crushes the pride of lightning, gold and kunkuma; His moon-face torments Madana, a snare for the eyes of all young wives; in His smile His teeth gleam — a row of kunda flowers.
- 7.2. The colour of dense collyrium, His curling locks steal composure; peerless shine His pure attire and scattered tresses;
the tilaka on His brow flashes brightly, His brows are gracefully gliding serpents; the corners of His restless eyes, tinged with rasa, are an abode of beauty.²²
- 7.3. Earrings touch His cheeks, on His neck the forest garland; long arms, bracelets, tender palms — I give my life for them!
His broad, peerless chest destroys the steadfastness of many a noble wife; His graceful, slender waist humbles the pride of the lion.

- 7.4. His arms sway, His knees are youthful; His feet are rays of the red dawn; to the sweet fragrance of these lotuses cling the bee-devotees, intoxicated; a cloud of mercy, famed in the world, He ever showers the nectar of prema — only foolish Narahari is not touched by a single drop.²³

8. Narahari — "ki jāni ki bhābe bhābita antara..." (GPT1 p. 154, no. 128; BR)

*Gaura's form with Gadadhara: absorbed in an unknown bhava, His eyes reddened, He holds Gadadhara's hand and says something — as if honeyed; His lips a bandhuli flower, His teeth lightning, His smile pours nectar; He dances in the guise of a nagara, the thief of the hearts of the women of Nadia — this is Gora, the Enchanter of Gokula. Raga vallari. Attribution: not established (more likely Chakravarti) — the GPT2 index assigns the page to Sarakara, but the pada is in the BR, where it is sung by a woman of Nadia.*²⁴

- 8.1. Who knows by what bhava His heart is seized — both eyes are reddened; holding Gadadhara's hand, what He says I do not know — as if steeped in honey.²⁵
- 8.2. His lips a tender bandhuli flower, His teeth a flash of lightning; mingled with His smile pours a sea of nectar — the splendour of His moon-face.
- 8.3. In the guise of a nagara dances the Thief of the hearts of Nadia's women; says Narahari: do you not know? Gora is the Enchanter of Gokula.²⁶

12. GPT1 — p. 135, section on Gaura's form (3.1), no. 70 (karnata); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 70. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-238). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 835–836; ed. 1960, vv. 1861–1864), right after a pada signed "Ghanashyama" and before the pada "nācata gaura puruba rase bhora" (below, no. 13). Not in PK, KGC, PS. The GPT2 index assigns p. 92 to Chakravarti. B.

13. "Robbing the dawn's rays of their power" (aruṇa-kiraṇa-bhara harāi) — the eyes, reddened by prema, outshine the dawn.

14. GPT1 — p. 135, no. 72 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 72 (catalogue: NG-072). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 907; ed. 1960, vv. 2830–2842), among the songs which Narahari Chakravarti puts in the mouths of the people of Nadia remembering the Lord. Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

15. "The young wives lose their senses" (5.2), "crushing the steadfastness of the chaste" (5.10), "the Nagara of Gokula" (5.13) — the motif of the townswomen captivated by Gaura's beauty: the language of nagari-bhava (Gaura as nagara); in the BR the pada is in fact put in the mouth of a woman of Nadia. We translate faithfully to the author. Vrindavana Dasa stresses that in this incarnation the Lord never looked at another man's wife; worship of Gaura in the spirit of "gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta). The attraction here is an image of the all-attractiveness of Bhagavan, not of a worldly feeling.

16. Description "from face to feet" (nakha-shikha) is the usual genre for describing Krishna's form; "many a Kama" — Gaura is more beautiful than countless gods of love (cf. Bhag. 10.32.2: Krishna is "the enchanter of Manmatha himself").

17. "The Nagara of Gokula" — Krishna, the beloved of the gopis of Gokula: the poet recognizes Krishna in Gaura. "What play does He not know" — the Lord is expert in every lila.

18. GPT1 — p. 136, no. 73 (samaraga); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 73. In the catalogue it stood as a pada of Nayananda (NN-006; chapter 10 excluded it: the signature is "narahari bhāṭa"); here a new row NG-239. BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 911; ed. 1960, vv. 2881–2884): Ishana shows Srinivasa the place on the bank of the Ganga where the Lord danced, and this song is cited. Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

19. "Natanagara" (naṭanāgara) — "skilled, graceful dancer": an epithet, not a motif of nagari-bhava. Kama (Kusumashara — "He whose arrows are flowers") — the god of love: the Lord's beauty is above Kama's.

20. Gadadhara Pandita is Radha in Krishna-lila (Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika 147–153): at the sight of him Krishna's love for Radha awakens in the Lord. Shravana — a month of the rainy season (July–August).

21. GPT1 — pp. 151–152, section on Gaura's form, no. 119 (nataraga); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 119. In the catalogue this pada stood by mistake under the first line of the preceding one, no. 118 (NG-073 "āhā mari gorā-rūpera ki diba tulanā" — signed by Vasu, "bāsu kahe"); the first line is corrected. BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 890; ed. 1960, vv. 2630–2633). The GPT2 index assigns p. 103 to Chakravarti. Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

22. "Brows — serpents" (bhāṇa-bhujaga) — the thin, curving brows are likened to gliding snakes; "abode of beauty" (chabidhāma).

23. "Destroys the steadfastness of many a noble wife" (7.3) — the same motif of the townswomen as in no. 5 (see note 15). The last words differ among the witnesses (GPT1 "mati mandakababha", GPT2 "mati manda karaha", BR "mati mandaka bahu"); the sense is "only foolish Narahari is not touched (by the nectar) at all": the poet's usual self-abasement.

24. GPT1 — p. 154, no. 128 (vallari); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 128 (catalogue: NG-074). The GPT2 index assigns p. 104 to Sarakara (this page has two padas signed Narahari — nos. 128 and 129); but no. 128 is in the BR (12th wave; ed. 1912, p. 909; ed. 1960, vv. 2858–2861); Chakravarti cites it as the song of a certain woman of Nadia ("kācit — ballarī") and opens it with an address to a friend: "Friend! What a wondrous form! The body thrilled, peerless — like a new king Madana." The two attributions conflict; by the BR, Chakravarti is more likely. Not in PK, KGC, PS. C. The neighbouring no. 129 (address to women friends, the wish "to keep Him in the heart") is nagari-bhava and is deferred.

25. Gadadhara — see note 20. Cf. PK 2122 of Narahari Sarakara (chapter 3, no. 1): the Lord in the mood of Krishna embraces Gadadhara.

26. "Nagara, the thief of the hearts of Nadia's women" — the motif of the townswomen (see note 15). The address "do you not know" is to the listeners; in the BR, to the speaker's friend.

9. Narahari — "āju abhiṣeka sukhera abadhi..." (GPT1 pp. 241–242, no. 14; BR)

The abhisheka in Srivasa's house: Gaura, the treasury of virtues, sits on the throne; His curls stream down His back like the Yamuna down a golden mountain; Nityananda and Advaita recite the abhisheka mantras, Srivasa and others pour fragrant water from pitchers on the Lord's head; Jagadisha, Vasudeva, Narayana, Mukunda, Madhava sing, Govinda and Govindananda play the mridanga, Vakreshvara dances; the invisible gods shower flowers, the devoted wives cry "Jaya!". Raga suhai or mayura. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, account of the abhisheka).²⁷

9.1. Today is the abhisheka — the very limit of happiness: on the throne sits Gora, the treasury of virtues;

peerless is the beauty of His bearing — no one on earth can keep composure.

9.2. Smooth curling locks adorn His head and stream down His back — their lustre charms the mind, as if on the peak of a golden mountain the stream of the Yamuna were flowing.²⁸

9.3. His pure body shines, robbing hundreds of Kamas of their pride; who would not lose himself, glancing but once at His moon-face steeped in smiles?

9.4. Again and again reciting the abhisheka mantras, Nityananda and Advaita rejoice at heart; Srivasa and the others, pitchers in hand, pour fragrant water on the Lord's head.

9.5. Jagadisha, Vasudeva, Narayana, Mukunda, Madhava — skilled in singing — in various strains, by shruti, jati and svara, sing the song of the abhisheka, like nectar.²⁹

9.6. Govinda and Govindananda play the khol: "dha-dha, dhik-dhik, dheka, na-na" it sounds; Vakreshvara dances in a sweet rhythm; from the eyes of some flow streams of bliss.³⁰

9.7. The gods with their retinues, unseen, enchanted by the joy of the abhisheka, shower flowers layer upon layer, cry "Jaya, jaya!", their bodies thrilling.

9.8. The wives devoted to their husbands again and again cry "Jaya!" — how delightful! What ever-new auspicious rites! Seeing them, Narahari feels his heart surge with joy.³¹

10. Narahari — "ki ānanda śrībāsa-bhabane..." (GPT1 p. 242, no. 15; BR)

The abhisheka in Srivasa's house: the Lord is seated on a golden throne, mantras are recited and water is poured on His head from pitchers; the women raise the auspicious cry "ulu-ulu", instruments resound, *all sing songs of the abhisheka; the gods, beholding the abhisheka, dance; the poet offers himself to the Lord, before whose face Madana swoons. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, right after the preceding one).*³²

10.1. What bliss in Srivasa's house!

The beloved associates perform the Lord's abhisheka.

10.2. Seating Him on a golden throne, they bring fragrant water, rejoicing.

10.3. Having recited the abhisheka mantras, they pour water on the Lord's head from brimming pitchers.

10.4. The women raise the cry "ulu-ulu", various instruments resound, piercing the sky.³³

10.5. All sing songs of the abhisheka; their eyes ceaselessly shed streams of bliss.

10.6. The gods, crying "Jaya, jaya!", dance with what delight, beholding the abhisheka!

10.7. Enchanting is the beauty of the abhisheka:
His tender body shines.

10.8. Narahari offers himself to Him; before His nectarean face Madana swoons.³⁴

11. Narahari — "śrī-śacī māyere āge kari..." (GPT1 p. 242, no. 16)

*The abhisheka: the women of Nadia, row upon row, follow Shachi to Srivasa's house to see Gora's abhisheka; the devotees pour Suradhuni water on His head, wipe Him, dress Him in dry silk; Shachi puts sandal, gorochana and perfume on His forehead; the women raise the cry "ulu-ulu", the khol, the kartals and the ramshinga horn resound. Raga suhai. Attribution: not established — the pada is not in the BR; simple Bengali tripadi; the GPT2 index assigns the page to Chakravarti (because of the neighbouring pada).*³⁵

11.1. Letting Mother Shachi go before them, all the women of Nadia walk in rows upon rows; they come to the house of Srivasa Pandita to see Gora's abhisheka.

11.2. Gora's abhisheka is a wondrous lila: no one has ever seen the like with his own eyes; filling pitchers with Suradhuni water, all the devotees pour it on Gora's head.

11.3. Wiping His body with the edge of a silk cloth, they gave Him dry silk garments to wear; on His brow Mother Shachi lovingly placed sandal, gorochana and the perfume chua.³⁶

11.4. The women raise the cry "ulu-ulu", on all sides sounds "Glory to Gauranga!"; khol, kartals and ramshinga resound — Narahari looks on, rejoicing at heart.

12. Narahari — "jaya jaya ārati gaura-kiśora..." (GPT1 p. 244, no. 21; BR)

*Gaura's arati: young Gaura shines on the throne like a golden mountain; Advaita, seized by prema, performs arati gazing at His Lord; on the right Nityananda, on the left Gadadhara, someone holds a parasol over the Lord, Srivasa throws flowers, Narahari tirelessly waves the chamara, Shuklambara anoints Him with sandal, Murari cries "Jaya!", Madhava, Vasu Ghosha, Purushottama, Vijaya, Mukunda sing, instruments resound, Vakreshvara dances; the gods in the sky, Shiva and Brahma weep with love. Raga gauri. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli; signature "narahari-pahu".*³⁷

- 12.1. (Refrain) Glory, glory to the arati of Gaura-kishora!
He shines on the throne like a golden mountain — the swaying Thief of the hearts of the young women of the world.³⁸
- 12.2. Sri Advaita, seized by prema, performs arati, gazing at His own Lord; on a golden tray studded with gems the lamps flash, destroying the darkness of sins.³⁹
- 12.3. On the right, a wondrous beauty: Nityananda, absorbed in rasa; on the left, Gadadhara in a graceful pose; someone holds a shining new parasol.
- 12.4. The best Srinivasa throws handfuls of flowers, Narahari tirelessly waves the chamara;
the best Shuklambara anoints Him with sandal, Murari Gupta cries "Jaya!".⁴⁰
- 12.5. Madhava, Vasu Ghosha, Purushottama, Vijaya, Mukunda and other masters of the art sing sweetly, with peerless distinctions of ragas, shrutis, murchhanas, gramas and the seven svaras.
- 12.6. Muraja, mridanga, changadaka, vina, nishana, bamboo flutes sound without end; again and again bells ring, jhanjharis clash, cymbals thunder deeply.⁴¹
- 12.7. Vakreshvara dances in great joy — with graceful, skilful movements of a dancer;
he calls out "dhikat, dhikat, dhidhi kat, tak thai thai" — in various ways.
- 12.8. In the bhava of the former lila, the rasika Gadadhara is beside himself; Shridhara, Gauridasa, Haridasa — who can describe them all? — the devotees are beyond themselves, seeing the sweet smile on Gaura's face.⁴²
- 12.9. In the sky the gods with their retinues are immersed in bliss; the lord of the gods with effort keeps himself hidden;
the Lord of Parvati and the Four-faced thrill, streams of tears pour from their eyes.⁴³
- 12.10. Ananta-Shesha in the three worlds joyfully recounts His glory, the munis praise Him, uttering new names;
the poet Narahari's Lord — the ornament of Vraja, full of rasa, bestower of supreme bliss on Nadia.⁴⁴
27. GPT1 — pp. 241–242, section on abhisheka and adhivasa (4.1), no. 14 ("suhai or mayura"); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 14. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-240). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 893; ed. 1960, vv. 2662–2665): Narahari Chakravarti tells of the abhisheka in Srivasa's house and cites first the pada of Vasu Ghosha PK 1536 (chapter 1, no. 2), then this one and the next. GPT2 index — Chakravarti (p. 152, no. 14). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B. The abhisheka in Srivasa's house — CB Madhya 9 (mahaprakasha).
28. The Yamuna, a dark river, down a golden mountain — the dark curls down the Lord's golden back.
29. Jagadisha (Pandita), Vasudeva (Ghosha or Datta), Narayana, Mukunda (Datta), Madhava (Ghosha) — kirtana singers of Navadvipa. Shruti, jati, svara — terms of musical theory: microtones, classes of melodies, notes.
30. Govinda (Ghosha) and Govindananda — kirtana singers; "dha-dha, dhik-dhik..." — rhythm syllables of the mridanga (khol).
31. "The wives devoted to their husbands" (patibratā nārīgaṇa) — the women present at the abhisheka, as in the pada of Vasu Ghosha PK 1537 (chapter 1, no. 3); "jaya" and the cry "ulu" are auspicious acclamations.
32. GPT1 — p. 242, no. 15 (dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 15 (in the catalogue NG-136, wrongly in the "nagari-bhava" section: it is the abhisheka, sec. 4.1). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 894; ed. 1960, vv. 2666–2673), right after the preceding; then Ishana tells Srinivasa about Srivasa's maidservant Duhkhi, whom the Lord named Sukhi (CB Madhya 9). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.
33. "Ulu-ulu" (ulululu) — the auspicious cry of Bengali women at rites.
34. "Offers himself" (āpanā nichaye) — Bengali nichhani: the rite of waving something around the beloved and offering oneself for his welfare; a sign of selfless love. Madana (Kama) swoons before the Lord's beauty.

35. GPT1 — p. 242, no. 16 (suhai); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 16 (in the catalogue NG-137, wrongly in the "nagari-bhava" section). Not in BR, PK, KGC, PS. The GPT2 index assigns p. 153 to Chakravarti — probably because of pada no. 15 on that page (no. 10). C.

36. Gorochana — a yellow pigment for tilaka; chua (cuyā) — a fragrant resin, perfume. Shachi herself adorns her Son after the bathing — cf. CB Madhya 9.

37. GPT1 — p. 244, no. 21 (gauri); GPT2 — sec. 4.1, no. 21 (in the catalogue PA-005, wrongly as a pada of Paramananda; excluded in chapter 11). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 846–847; ed. 1960, vv. 2018–2027): Ishana shows Srinivasa the place in Navadvipa where Gadadhara adorned the Lord with flowers and the associates performed arati to Him. GPT2 index — Chakravarti. Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

38. "Thief of the hearts of the young women of the world" — an epithet of Krishna applied to Gaura: the same motif as in no. 5 (note 15).

39. "His own Lord" (nija nātha) — Advaita worships Gaura as the Lord whom He called down by His prayers (CC Adi 3).

40. Srinivasa — Srivasa Pandita; Narahari with the chamara — Narahari Sarakara, the Lord's associate already in Navadvipa (cf. PK 2128, chapter 4, no. 4); Shuklambara — Shuklambara Brahmachari; Murari Gupta.

41. Muraja, mridanga, changadaka — drums; nishana — kettledrum or horn; jhanjhari — small cymbals.

42. "In the bhava of the former lila" (pūraba rase) — Gadadhara, in Krishna-lila Radha (Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika 147–153). Shridhara — the seller of plantain leaves (CB Madhya 9); Gauridasa — Gauridasa Pandita; Haridasa — Haridasa Thakura.

43. The lord of the gods (surapati) — Indra; the Lord of Parvati — Shiva; the Four-faced — Brahma. "With effort keeps himself hidden" (yatane karata parihāra) — the gods are present invisibly.

44. "The poet Narahari's Lord" (narahari-pahu, lit. "Narahari-Lord") — the Lord whom Narahari serves (cf. "nayanānanda-pahu" — "the Lord of Nayanānanda", chapter 10); Chakravarti's usual form of signature. "Bestower of supreme bliss on Nadia" (nāḍyāpura-paramānanda-kārī) — in the catalogue the word "paramānanda" was taken for the signature of the poet Paramananda.

13. Narahari — "nācata gaura puraba-rase bhora..." (GPT1 p. 261, no. 44; BR)

*Kirtana in Navadvipa: Gaura dances, absorbed in the rasa of the former lila; His smile dispels the darkness of sin, the earth trembles at His step; He roars like a lion, and the Kali age flees in fear; the associates sing, khol and kartals resound, the whole world is intoxicated. Raga somaraga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli. With this pada begins the large cycle "Gaura's dance" of the GPT (sec. 4.2), almost all of which is known also from the BR.*⁴⁵

13.1. (Refrain) Gaura dances, absorbed in the rasa of the former lila;

His body flashes, crushing the pride of a golden mountain — it steals the heart even of bodiless Kama.⁴⁶

13.2. Softly He smiles — the beauty of His moon-face destroys the dense darkness of sin;

keeping the rhythm, His light lotus feet step — and the earth trembles, unable to bear their weight.

13.3. His two eyes are the young dawn, swaying; He is adorned with constant, abundant thrills;

again and again He roars with a might surpassing a lion's — and the mighty Kali age flees in great fear.⁴⁷

13.4. The song of the dear associates pierces the sky, khol and graceful kartals play; the whole world is intoxicated, says Narahari — His pure, boundless fame has filled the universe.

14. Narahari — "nṛtyata gauracandra janarañjana..." (GPT1 p. 262, no. 45; BR)

*The dance of Gaura and Nityananda: both are golden mountains, Their glance steals Kama's pride, Their speech flows with nectar; the associates sing, the mardala sounds, the gods on the paths of the sky shower flowers, the world is full of the cry "Jaya!". Raga deshapala. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁴⁸

14.1. Gaurachandra, the delight of the people, and Nityananda, the destroyer of the fear of calamity, dance: Their lotus eyes surpass ever-new khanjana birds, Their glance steals Kama's pride; both bodies flash — golden mountains; in the dance Their feet strike the earth; Their faces, mingled with smiles, shine like moons; when They speak, it is as if nectar were flowing.⁴⁹

- 14.2. Peerless is this beauty — it cannot be told; surrounding Them, the associates sing Their virtues; sweetly, sweetly, softly the mardala plays: "dha-dha, dhigi-dhigi, dhikat, dhilanga"; the gods with their retinues on the paths of the sky again and again shower choice flowers; the cry "Jaya, jaya, jaya" fills the world — what can Narahari say of the waves of prema?

15. Narahari — "āju ki ānanda saṅkīrtane..." (GPT1 p. 262, no. 46; BR)

*The sankirtana of Gaura and Nityananda: all are beside themselves with prema, from everyone's eyes rivers of tears flow, some fall on one another, others roar, tremble, embrace one another and cannot let go, take the dust of one another's feet and roll on the ground; Lord and servants are all alike in this. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); simple Bengali tripadi.*⁵⁰

- 15.1. (Refrain) What bliss today in the sankirtana!
Gaura and Nityananda dance — the root of supreme bliss — together with Their dear associates.
- 15.2. Dancing, they cry: "Well done, well done!"; khol and kartals resound — all are beside themselves with prema; from everyone's eyes pour streams like the current of a river; some fall upon one another.
- 15.3. Someone, thrilling, roars and shouts aloud; someone trembles, unable to stand steady; someone, looking at another, opens his arms, embraces him — and cannot let him go.
- 15.4. Someone seizes another's feet and puts the dust of his feet on his head; someone, falling to the ground, rolls in the dust;
Lord and servants are in one state: seeing this, Narahari in great bliss sings the virtues of the Lord.⁵¹

16. Narahari — "nācata gaurāṅga-cāṁḍa bibhora bhābete..." (GPT1 p. 262, no. 47)

*Gauranga dances, seized by bhava; in the same bhava, on His left, Gadadhara dances; Nitai follows behind so that His golden body may not fall to the ground; the Lord embraces the fallen. Raga pathamanjari. Attribution: not established — the pada is not in the BR (the GPT2 index, however, assigns its page to Chakravarti); simple Bengali payar.*⁵²

- 16.1. Gaurangachand dances, seized by bhava; in the same bhava on His left dances Gadadhara.
- 16.2. Lest His body of pure gold should fall to the ground, Nitaichand keeps following close behind Him.⁵³
- 16.3. My Gauranga dances, swaying, rocking; khol and kartals sound: "ta-dhiya, ta-dhiya".
- 16.4. He seizes and embraces the fallen who have gone astray — only sinful Narahari is not immersed in this rasa.

17. Narahari — "nācata gauracandra guṇadhāma..." (GPT1 p. 263, no. 49; BR)

*Gaura's dance: the radiance of His body outshines a golden mountain and lightning; His smile steals composure, earrings tremble, curls are decked with flowers, a garland on His chest, His arms in new play, His feet keeping the rhythm; the associates sing, khol and khamak resound. Raga bangala. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁵⁴

- 17.1. (Refrain) Gaurachandra dances, the abode of virtues;
the radiance of His body flashes, charming the heart — it casts far away both golden Meru and garlands of lightning.
- 17.2. His lovely face crushes Madana's pride; His sweet smile steals the composure of young wives; at His ears tremble jewelled earrings surpassing the young dawn; both His eyes sway — how beautiful they are!⁵⁵
- 17.3. His smooth curling locks are decked with flowers; on His restless, lovely chest — a garland; in the peerless, ever-new play of His arms His feet keep a graceful rhythm.
- 17.4. The Lord moves, beside Him shine the dear associates, singing sweet ragas, intoxicated with rasa;
the whole world rejoices, says Narahari; khol and khamak sound in every manner.

18. Narahari — "nācata gauracandra naṭabhūpa..." (GPT1 p. 263, no. 50; BR)

*The dance of Gaura, king of dancers: a form crushing the pride of a hundred thousand Kamas; He roars in bhava, spreads His arms, smiles, His face is the autumn moon; the devotees sing, outdoing the kinnaras, the ocean of prema has flooded the earth — only Narahari it does not touch. Raga belavali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁵⁶

- 18.1. (Refrain) Gaurachandra dances, the king of dancers:
a form crushing the pride of a hundred thousand Kamas — the delight of the people of all the worlds.
- 18.2. Ceaselessly seized by peerless bhava, He roars — wondrously, beautifully;
He sets His auspicious feet on the earth, moves with both arms outspread.
- 18.3. Sweetly He smiles, His lips soft and lovely, the play of His face surpasses the autumn moon;
His eyes, petals of a red lotus, sway: who can tell how much rasa He reveals?
- 18.4. Sweetly the devotees sing ever-new songs, crushing the pride of the host of kinnaras;
the ocean of prema has surged and flooded the earth — only foolish Narahari it has not touched.⁵⁷

19. Narahari — "nācata dvija-kula-candra gaurahari..." (GPT1 p. 264, no. 52; BR)

*The dance of Gaurahari, moon of the brahmana line: auspicious feet, absorption in the bhava of the former lila, body thrilling, curls like a cloud on a golden mountain, a garland of malati, His face a snare of Kama; the associates sing, the world sinks in an ocean of happiness. Raga nata. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁵⁸

- 19.1. (Refrain) Gaurahari dances, the moon of the twice-born line;
His auspicious, fear-removing feet He sets on the earth, assuming wondrous poses.
- 19.2. Ceaselessly seized by the bhava of the former lila, His body is covered with thrills, as if with kadamba flowers;
His smooth, glossy curling locks — like a cloud on the peak of a golden mountain.⁵⁹
- 19.3. A garland of malati flowers, wondrously arrayed, sways, hanging on His restless, lovely chest;
His face is Kama's snare, the delight of the heart; His eyes sway — a pair of red lotuses.
- 19.4. Seeing the peerless dance, the dear associates sing sweetly, showering rasa;
the whole world sinks in an ocean of happiness — only foolish Narahari stays far off, untouched.

20. Narahari — "nācata gaura nikhila-naṭa-panḍita..." (GPT1 p. 264, no. 53; BR)

*The dance of Gaura, most skilled of dancers: the radiance of His body, outshining the sun, lights up all directions; He roars like a lion, and the elephant Kali trembles; leaps and stamping feet shake the earth; the associates sing, the sound of the khol reaches the sky; the wicked, trembling, seek refuge at His feet. Raga ghantarava. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁶⁰

20.1. Gaura dances, the most skilled of all dancers; with peerless movements He takes away Madana's pride; crushing the pride of the blazing sun, with the radiance of His body He lights up all the quarters.

20.2. Intoxicated, He roars beyond compare, stronger than a lion — hearing it, the mighty elephant Kali trembles;

again and again leaps, a graceful, restless gait — at the strokes of His feet the earth shakes.⁶¹

20.3. The associates crush the pride of the kinnaras, singing in jubilation — a nectarean sound flows; many khols and khamaks play, the sound touches the sky — who can keep composure?

20.4. Before His peerless might the wicked tremble, seek refuge, fall at His feet; the fame of the poet Narahari's Lord fills the world: ceaselessly He gives away the highest, rarest treasure.⁶²

45. GPT1 — p. 261, section on dance and kirtana (4.2), no. 44 (somaraga); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 44. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-241). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 836; ed. 1960, vv. 1865–1868), right after the pada "nācata bhubana-mano-mohana" (no. 4). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

46. "The rasa of the former lila" (puraba-rasa) — the bhava of Krishna-lila, which the Lord experiences in kirtana. "Bodiless" (atanu) — Kama, burnt by Shiva.

47. The Lord's roar in kirtana — cf. CB Madhya 23 (nagara-kirtana); the Kali age fleeing before the sankirtana is a frequent image.

48. GPT1 — p. 262, no. 45 (deshapala); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 45 (catalogue: NG-140). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 839; ed. 1960, vv. ≈1905–1908). GPT2 index — Chakravarti (p. 167, no. 45). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

49. Khanjana — the wagtail, a bird with restless eyes, a usual comparison for eyes. "Destroyer of the fear of calamity" — an epithet of Nityananda.

50. GPT1 — p. 262, no. 46 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 46 (catalogue: NG-141). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 839; ed. 1960, vv. 1909–1912), right after the preceding. GPT2 index — Chakravarti (p. 167, no. 46). The language is simple Bengali tripadi, without Vrajabuli; by language alone the pada could be Sarakara's, but it is in the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

51. "Lord and servants are in one state" (prabhu bhṛtya eka rīti) — in the ecstasy of kirtana the Lord and the devotees are equally seized by prema. Cf. CB Madhya 8 (the night kirtanas in Srivasa's house).

52. GPT1 — p. 262, no. 47 (pathamanjari), checked against the scan (PDF p. 521); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 47 (catalogue: NG-142). Not in BR, PK, KGC, PS. The GPT2 index assigns p. 167 (padas nos. 45–47) to Chakravarti, but only nos. 45 and 46 were found in the BR. Simple Bengali payar; C ("not established").

53. "Pure gold" — GPT1 "bhāḍara soṇāra" (the reading is unclear in the scan), GPT2 "bhāḍra soṇāra"; the sense is "golden body". Nityananda follows the dancing Lord to catch Him should He fall in ecstasy — cf. CC Madhya 13 (Ratha-yatra).

54. GPT1 — p. 263, no. 49 (bangala); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 49 (catalogue: NG-143). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 841; ed. 1960, vv. 1941–1944): "here, right by the house, is the lovely place where the Lord was beside Himself in sankirtana". Before it in the GPT stands no. 48, signed "Ghanashyama Dasa" (not included in the appendix). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

55. "Steals the composure of young wives" — the motif of the townswomen (note 15).

56. GPT1 — p. 263, no. 50 (belavali); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 50 (catalogue: NG-144). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 842; ed. 1960, vv. 1945–1948). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

57. Kinnaras — celestial singers. "Only Narahari it has not touched" — the poet's usual self-abasement (cf. no. 7.4).

58. GPT1 — p. 264, no. 52 (nata); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 52 (catalogue: NG-145). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 882; ed. 1960, vv. 2560–2563), right after a pada signed "Ghanashyama" ("nācata gaura bhābabhare garagara", in the GPT no. 51). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

59. Kadamba flowers are round and covered with filaments; hairs standing on end in ecstasy are compared to them. "A cloud on a golden mountain" — dark curls above the golden brow.

60. GPT1 — p. 264, no. 53 (ghantarava); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 53. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-242). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 883; ed. 1960, vv. 2564–2567), right after the preceding. Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

61. "The elephant Kali" (kali-bāraṇa) — the Kali age, like a mad elephant tamed by the lion Gaura (cf. "gaurasiṃha" in no. 24).

62. "The poet Narahari's Lord" (narahari-paḥumka) — see note 44. "The wicked... seek refuge" — the conversion of sinners, like Jagai and Madhai (no. 22).

21. Narahari — "suradhunī-tīra parama niramala thala..." (GPT1 p. 265, no. 54; BR)

*Gaura's dance on the bank of the Suradhuni: at a pure place by the river the generous devotees rejoice, sing nectarean songs, play instruments; Gaura-kishora dances anointed with sandal, His face outshines autumn moons, His necklace flashes, His anklets tinkle. Raga biragupta. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁶³

21.1. The bank of the Suradhuni is a most pure place; there all the generous devotees rejoice, sing many nectarean songs, play instruments of every kind.

21.2. (Refrain) Gaura-kishora dances, the jewel of virtues;
His lovely body is anointed with sandal — a wondrous form, stealing the hearts of women.⁶⁴

21.3. His eyes, petals of a pure lotus, sway; the play of His brows, the new charm of His locks;
His face shames hosts of autumn moons, His smile crushes the pride of millions of Madanas.

21.4. On His restless, lovely, broad chest flashes a jewelled necklace, outshining lightning; when the poet Narahari's Lord keeps the rhythm with His feet — how sweetly the anklets tinkle!

22. Narahari — "āju ki ānanda nadīyā-nagare..." (GPT1 p. 265, no. 55; BR)

*After the deliverance of Jagai and Madhai: the men and women of Nadia run to see the brothers and talk among themselves: they shine like the sun — where has their sinful body gone? The brothers, in bhava, weep, tremble, roll in the dust, cannot take their eyes off Gora's face, bathe Nitai's feet with tears, take the dust of the feet of Advaita, Gadadhara, Srivasa, and, holding straw between their teeth, with arms raised, beg the Lord and His associates for mercy. Raga gurjari. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, the account of Jagai and Madhai).*⁶⁵

22.1. What bliss today in the town of Nadia! To see Jagai and Madhai, women and men run from every side and talk with one another.

Someone says, standing apart: "Look, look at the two of them! Now they shine like the sun — where has that sinful body gone?"

22.2. Someone says: "Ah, ah! Seized by bhava, they keep sitting down, bursting into tears — streams rush from their eyes, they cannot check them, they are beside themselves."

Someone says: "Look, an unheard-of thing: their bodies thrill and constantly tremble; grey with dust, they fall to the ground and roll, remembering nothing."⁶⁶

22.3. Someone says: "How they gaze at Gora's moon-face — as though floating in some great happiness! Drunk with the nectar of His smile, they fall and roll at His feet."

Someone says: "Look, gazing at Nitaichand, how bitterly they repent in their hearts: touching His two feet, they bathe them — perform abhisheka — with their tears."⁶⁷

22.4. Others say: "Look, they sit beside the ascetic Advaita, beside Gadadhara, Srivasa and the others, they wander about, full of peerless joy, and take the dust of everyone's feet."

Others: "There the two, with broken hearts, stand aside with straw between their teeth and, raising their arms, say to the poet

Narahari's Lord and His associates: 'Have mercy!'"⁶⁸

23. Narahari — "nācata gaura naṭana-pañḍita-bara..." (GPT1 pp. 265–266, no. 56; BR)

*The dance of Gaura, best of skilled dancers: His body outshines kunkuma and lightning, His smile pours nectar, His glance crushes the pride of Madanas; raising His arms He cries "Hari, Hari!"; the associates sing, instruments resound; He gives the world the treasure of prema — only Narahari is left out. Raga meghamallara. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁶⁹

23.1. (Refrain) Gaura dances, the best of skilled dancers;

His body, shaming kunkuma and garlands of lightning, is adorned with peerless, abundant thrills.

23.2. Red lips, the tender moon-face shining, teeth like kunda flowers, a light smile pouring nectar;

His lotus eyes, the delight of the people, are full of rasa; His glance crushes the pride of hundreds of Madanas.

23.3. Raising His arms, which put to shame golden lotus stalks, He cries "Hari, Hari!" — His heart overflowing;

His auspicious, tender, graceful feet He sets on the earth in manifold movements.

23.4. Small cymbals, khamaks, many khols sound; the associates sing sweetly, sweetly;

He gives away throughout the world the treasure, the jewel of prema — only foolish, sinful Narahari is left out.

24. Narahari — "bali-kali-matta-mataṅgaja-maradana..." (GPT1 p. 266, no. 57; BR)

*The lion Gaura, crusher of the mad elephant Kali, dances in Nadia; the world is full of the cry "Jaya!", people run from all sides, the associates sing, drums thunder, the earth trembles; giving prema, the Lord embraces the sinners. Raga devakiri. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁷⁰

24.1. The crusher of the mighty mad elephant Kali, the lion Gaura, dances in Nadia;

the cry "Jaya, jaya!" fills the whole world, from everywhere people gather and come running.

24.2. The dear associates sing mightily and beautifully — waves of rhythms beyond even the kinnaras; muraja and mridanga thunder: "drimiki drimi drimi, drimikat, dhikat, dhilanga".⁷¹

24.3. The earth trembles as He sets down His lotus feet; peerless are the swaying movements of His body;

His eyes surpass the young dawn in beauty; at His lovely glance many a Kama starts.

24.4. The sweetness of His face shames hosts of moons; He smiles gently, pouring out nectar; giving prema, the poet Narahari's Lord, spreading His arms, embraces the sinners.

25. Narahari — "nācata gaura naṭana-janarañjana..." (GPT1 p. 266, no. 58; BR)

*Gaura's dance: hearing of the former love, He thrills and trembles; His eyes are full of tears, like pearls; seeing Gadadhara, He embraces him again and speaks of the secret of His heart, unable to restrain Himself; the ocean of prema surges, the sinners float in happiness — only Narahari it does not touch. Raga bhupali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁷²

25.1. Gaura dances, delighting the people by His dance; His body crushes the pride of all the Madanas; He thrills, gracefully trembling, again and again beside Himself, hearing the story of the former love.⁷³

25.2. His eyes, petals of a red lotus, are brimming with tears; the moisture flashes like strings of pearls; when He laughs, His teeth flash like lightning — peerless are His soft, sweet lips.

25.3. Spreading His lovely long arms, which take away the pride of an elephant's trunk, He sees Gadadhara, embraces him again, speaks of what lies in His heart — and cannot restrain Himself.⁷⁴

25.4. The peerless ocean of prema surges, raising mighty, playful waves; the sinful, the fallen, the afflicted float in happiness — only sinful Narahari it does not touch.

26. Narahari — "nācata gaura parama-sukha-sadanā..." (GPT1 pp. 266–267, no. 59; BR)

*The dance of Gaura, abode of supreme happiness: His thrilling body crushes Madana's pride, His glance is full of compassion, His smile steals the heart, His gait is like a royal elephant's; with faltering voice He cries "Hari, Hari!", gives away the treasure of prema, fulfilling the desires of all — only the poet is left out. Raga natanarayana. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁷⁵

26.1. (Refrain) Gaura dances, the abode of supreme happiness; shining with constant, abundant thrills, His graceful body torments Madana, crushing his pride.

26.2. His eyes, petals of a pure lotus, sway; His glance, full of compassion, is lovely with the beauty of dawn; His face, spurning the autumn moon, shines with a smile; His gleaming teeth instantly steal the heart.

26.3. His gait, ever new, takes away the pride of a royal elephant; as He steps, the earth rejoices; His heart overflowing, His voice faltering, He ceaselessly cries "Hari, Hari!" — a peerless wealth of bhava has risen in Him.

26.4. Intoxicated, giving away the peerless treasure, He has removed misfortunes; His fame has filled this world; He has fulfilled the desires of all — only Narahari is left out: vain is his birth, shame on his life!⁷⁶

27. Narahari — "nācata śacī-tanaya gaura..." (GPT1 p. 267, no. 60; BR)

*The dance of Gaura, the son of Shachi: His sweetness charms the mind, His body thrills, His smile pours nectar, His anklets ring in rhythm, Kama is ashamed before His movements; the world sings His virtues and sinks in happiness — only Narahari burns in the forest fire of worldly existence. Raga nata. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁷⁷

27.1. Gaura, the son of Shachi, dances — His sweetness charms the mind; on His body, which crushes a golden mountain, rows of thrills are shining.

- 27.2. His moon-face gleams, pouring nectar in a gentle smile; with the corners of His restless eyes He reveals so much rasa!
- 27.3. With His feet He keeps the rhythm, the anklets ring out resoundingly; seeing His many new movements, Kama dies of shame.
- 27.4. The people of the world sing His virtues, sinking in a stream of happiness;
only deprived, lowly Narahari burns in the forest fire of worldly existence.⁷⁸

63. GPT1 — p. 265, no. 54 ("beragupta"); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 54 (catalogue: NG-146). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 891; ed. 1960, vv. 2634–2637), right after the pada "biharata surasarita-tīra" (no. 7). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

64. "Stealing the hearts of women" (ramaṇī-manacora) — an epithet of Krishna; the motif of the townswomen (note 15).

65. GPT1 — p. 265, no. 55 (gurjari); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 55. In the catalogue the first line of this pada merged with another, a wedding pada (NG-030: GPT2 2.3, no. 11 "ki ānanda nadīyā-nagare" — on Nimai's wedding); here a new row NG-243. BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 898; ed. 1960, vv. ≈2725–2732), in the account of Jagai and Madhai. GPT2 index — Chakravarti (p. 169, no. 55). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B. The deliverance of Jagai and Madhai — CB Madhya 13; CC Adi 17.

66. "Their bodies thrill... roll" — signs of prema (sattvika-bhavas) awakened in the former evildoers.

67. Madhai wounded Nityananda by throwing a shard of an earthen pot at Him (CB Madhya 13); the brothers' repentance before Nityananda — CB Madhya 13–15 (Madhai builds a ghat on the Ganga and bows down to everyone).

68. "Straw between the teeth" (dante tṛṇa) — a sign of humility and of begging forgiveness. "The poet Narahari's Lord" — see note 44.

69. GPT1 — pp. 265–266, no. 56 (meghamallara); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 56 (catalogue: NG-147). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 901; ed. 1960, vv. 2765–2768). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

70. GPT1 — p. 266, no. 57 (debakiri); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 57. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-244; BD-007 referred to it as "BR p. 901 — a pada of Narahari"). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 901; ed. 1960, vv. ≈2761–2764), before the preceding one. Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

71. Rhythm syllables of the drum; "beyond even the kinnaras" (kinnara-duragama) — the celestial singers. The reading "drimiki drimi drimi" follows GPT1 and GPT2 (the recognition is faulty).

72. GPT1 — p. 266, no. 58 (bhupali); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 58. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-245). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 902; ed. 1960, vv. 2769–2772). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

73. "The story of the former love" (pūruba-pīriti-parasaṅga) — the account of the love of Radha and Krishna in Vraja; hearing it, the Lord enters into bhava.

74. Gadadhara is Radha in Krishna-līla (note 20). The Lord's feelings for Gadadhara are the prema of Krishna-līla, not a worldly attachment.

75. GPT1 — pp. 266–267, no. 59 (natanarayana); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 59 (catalogue: NG-148). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 902; ed. 1960, vv. 2773–2776). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

76. "Has removed misfortunes" (harala bipada) — freed the living beings from the calamities of worldly existence. The poet's self-reproach is the usual ending of the padas of this cycle.

77. GPT1 — p. 267, no. 60 (nata; in GPT2 unnumbered, after no. 59); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, after no. 59. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-246). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 903; ed. 1960, vv. 2779–2782). Not in PK, KGC, PS. B.

78. "The forest fire of worldly existence" (bhāba-dāba-dāha) — the image of saṃsāra as a burning forest (cf. Vishvanatha Chakravarti's Sri Gurvasthaka, 1: "saṃsāra-dābānala...").

28. Narahari — "āju śaṅkara-carita śuni..." (GPT1 pp. 283–284, no. 22; BR)

*The Lord in the mood of Shiva: hearing a song of Shankara's deeds, the son of Shachi became Shankara — a radiance brighter than the silver mountain, a body smeared with ashes, a horn in His hand, the damaru sounding, three eyes, serpents for ornaments and clothes, matted locks on His head. Raga malavashri. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, the account of the singer of Shiva); Vrajabuli.*⁷⁹

- 28.1. Today, hearing of Shankara's deeds, the son of Shachi became Shankara;
His radiance sways, surpassing the silver mountain — He has stolen the composure of the world.⁸⁰

- 28.2. His body, adorned with ashes, is graceful — it takes away Ananga's pride; in His lovely hand He holds a horn and blows it; charmingly the damaru sounds.
- 28.3. Restless and lovely are the corners of His three eyes, His moon-face shines; pure and tender are His cheeks, on His brow the eyebrows curve.
- 28.4. Huge serpents are His ornaments and garments, the hide shines brightly; on His head lovely, tangled, heavy matted locks — seeing this, Narahari is beside himself.⁸¹

29. Narahari Dasa — "ki bhābe gaurāṅga mora bhābita thāke..." (GPT1 p. 292, no. 52)

The Lord in the mood of Krishna: seized by bhava, He calls "Radha!", the Ganga reminds Him of the Yamuna, a flower garden — of Vrindavana; with His companions He plays, standing in the threefold bend and asking for the flute; taking Gadadhara for Radha, He says something unknown to him and does not take His eyes off his face; Gadadhara, understanding the bhava, stands at His left. Raga mallara. Attribution: probably Sarakara — the GPT2 index assigns the page to Sarakara; not in the BR; simple Bengali payar; the content is close to Sarakara's pada PK 2122.⁸²

- 29.1. By what bhava is my Gauranga seized?
Again and again, in bhava, He calls: "Radha!"
- 29.2. Seeing the Bhagirathi, He remembers the Yamuna;
a flowering garden He takes in His heart for Vrindavana.⁸³
- 29.3. With His companions the Lord begins so many games;
standing in the threefold bend, He says: "The flute, the flute!"⁸⁴
- 29.4. Taking Gadadhara for Radha, who knows what He says to him; without blinking He gazes at the Pandita's face.
- 29.5. Understanding the bhava, Gadadhara stands at His left;
this rasa Narahari Dasa does not comprehend.⁸⁵

79. GPT1 — pp. 283–284, section on bhavavesha (4.3), no. 22 (malavashri); GPT2 — sec. 4.3, no. 22 (catalogue: NG-153). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 834; ed. 1960, vv. 1841–1844): Ishana tells Srinivasa that here a singer of Shiva sang and danced, playing the damaru, and the Lord, in the mood of Maheshvara, crying "I am Mahesha!", climbed onto his shoulders (a retelling of CB Madhya 8). GPT2 index — Chakravarti. Not in PK, KGC, PS. B. Before it in the GPT (no. 21) stands a pada signed Narahari about the Lord in the mood of Balarama (for the next chapter).

80. The mood of Shiva is one of the moods the Lord displayed in Navadvipa (CB Madhya 8; cf. the moods of Varaha, Nrisimha, Balarama); the Lord is the source of all His manifestations, and Shiva is His partial manifestation and the greatest of Vaishnavas (Bhag. 12.13.16; Brahma-samhita 5.45). This is not God turning into a demigod: hearing of His devotee, the Lord takes on his form and mood. The silver mountain — Kailasa.

81. Shiva's attributes: ashes, the horn (shringa) and the small drum damaru, the third eye, serpents, a hide (of tiger or elephant), matted hair (jata).

82. GPT1 — p. 292, no. 52 (mallara; the recognition is incomplete, text from GPT1 and GPT2); GPT2 — sec. 4.3, no. 52. The pada was not in the catalogue (new row NG-247). Not in BR, PK, KGC, PS. The GPT2 index assigns pp. 187–188 to Sarakara (here stand no. 51 = PK 853, a pada of Sarakara, and this one). The content repeats the motifs of Sarakara's pada PK 2122 (chapter 3, no. 1; Majumdar places it in the Navadvipa lila); the Ganga seems the Yamuna, a garden Vrindavana, the Lord is in the mood of Krishna with Gadadhara as Radha. C.

83. Bhagirathi — the Ganga. Cf. Rupa Gosvami, Chaitanyashtaka (Stava-mala) 1.6 and CC Antya 14–15 — in Puri the sea seems to the Lord the Yamuna, and the groves Vrindavana.

84. The threefold bend (tribhaṅga) — Krishna's pose with the flute. Here the Lord is in the mood of Krishna, not of Radha.

85. Gadadhara is Radha in Krishna-lila (note 20); understanding the Lord's bhava, he stands at the left, where Radha stands beside Krishna. This is the prema of Vraja, not a worldly feeling. "Does not comprehend" — the poet's humility.

Chapter 18. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — II: kirtana and dance (conclusion), bhavavesha, the festivals of the year, prarthanas

Continuation of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 18: the end of the cycle of kirtana and dance in Navadvipa (GPT, section 4.2), two padas on the Lord's bhavas (the bhava of Balarama; the Lord in the bhava of Radha waiting for Krishna), the festivals of the year — the "twelve-month lila" (GPT, section 5.1: the swing-jhulana, Janmashtami and Nanda-utsava, Radhashtami, the remembrance of the rasa-lila, spring and Holi) and two prarthanas. Before translation the "Narahari" signatures in these sections were checked throughout in GPT1 (tesseract recognition): the catalogue had missed several more padas. The base text is GPT1 (doubtful places from the scan), collated with GPT2 and with the Bhakti-ratnakara (eds. 1912 and 1960; almost all padas of the chapter are in its 12th wave); PK, KGC, PS and the Gita-chandrodaya have been checked. Padas signed "Ghanashyama" (the same Narahari Chakravarti) are not included in the appendix. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "kibā khola karatāla bāje..." (GPT1 p. 267, no. 61; BR)

Kirtana: the khol and karatalas sound, the associates stand around; they sing the sweet lila at which wood and stone melt; Gaura dances, and no one knows by what bhava He is seized; His body thrills, streams of tears flow from His eyes; He embraces the fallen and gives the treasure of prema to everyone — only the poet is left out. Raga nata. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); short payar with Vrajabuli forms.¹

1.1. How the khol and karatalas resound!

All around stand the adorned associates.

1.2. Today they sing the sweet lila — hearing it, wood and stone melt.

1.3. (Refrain) Joyfully the beautiful Gora dances — who knows by what bhava He is seized?

1.4. His body is covered with fresh thrills — as if a golden jackfruit were shining.²

1.5. Like the current of the celestial river, streams flow from both His eyes.³

1.6. Again and again raising both arms,

He thunders: "Hari, Hari!"

1.7. Seeing the most fallen and sinful, again and again He clasps them in His embrace.

1.8. To each and every one He gives the treasure of prema, passing over only one wretched Narahari.⁴

1. GPT1 — p. 267, no. 61 (nata); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 61 (catalogue: NG-249). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 903; ed. 1960, vv. 2783–2790): Ishana, showing Srinivasa Navadvipa, quotes it at the house of Sanjaya, "dear to the Lord", where Vishvambhara danced, right after the pada "nācata śacītanaya gaura" (chapter 17, no. 27). The GPT2 index assigns the page to Chakravarti. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The Lord's dancing in kirtana in Navadvipa — CB Madhya 8, 23; CC Adi 17.

2. Thrills (pulaka) are one of the sattvika-bhavas, signs of prema: the hairs stand up like the spikes on the rind of a jackfruit (panasa).

3. "The celestial river" (surasarit) is the Ganga.

4. Self-reproach is the usual ending of the padas of this cycle (cf. chapter 17, nos. 13–27): the poet regards himself as the only one passed over by the mercy given to all.

2. Narahari — "bhubanamohana gorācāṁḍa..." (GPT1 p. 268, no. 63; BR)

*Dancing in prema: Gorachand, enchanter of the world, dances weeping, cries "Hari!", embraces the fallen, floods everyone with His rasa, throws Himself on the ground and rolls in the dust; seeing this, all living beings weep. Raga varadi or dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave), though its language is a simple Bengali payar.*⁵

2.1. Gorachand, the enchanter of the world — a net that snares the hearts of all people.⁶

2.2. The Lord dances, seized by prema;
His reddened eyes swim in tears.

2.3. Raising His arms, He cries: "Hari, Hari!" — and, seizing the fallen, clasps them to His breast.

2.4. With His own rasa He floods everyone;
all around His associates sing.

2.5. Flinging His most tender body to the ground,
He falls and rolls in the dust.

2.6. Seeing this, all living beings weep;
Narahari's heart finds no rest.

5. GPT1 — p. 268, no. 63 (varadi or dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 63 (catalogue: NG-149). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 904; ed. 1960, vv. 2795–2800), at the same place, the house of Sanjaya; after the pada — "under this tree the Lord stayed a while and went on by the road to the Ganga". Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

6. Marginal variants of GPT1: "purifier of the world" instead of "enchanter of the world", "of all living beings" instead of "of all people". These are the readings of the second occurrence of the same pada in the BR: Narahari Chakravarti quotes it twice — at the house of Sanjaya (vv. 2795–2800) and at the house of Srivasa (ed. 1960, v. 3397 ff., "bhubanapābana gorācāṁḍa | akhila jībera mana-phāṁḍa").

3. Narahari — "nācata gaurakiśora. suradhunīṭire ujora..." (GPT1 p. 268, no. 65; BR)

*Dancing on the bank of the Suradhuni: young Gaura with hundreds of associates, making no distinction between His own and others, gives away the treasure of prema, weeps in a peerless bhava and, speaking in a faltering voice, takes Gadadhara by the hand. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); short payar with Vrajabuli forms.*⁷

3.1. Young Gaura dances, illuminating the bank of the Suradhuni.

3.2. With Him are hundreds of associates; in the kirtana His movements are peerless.⁸

3.3. Making no distinction between His own and others,
He gives away the treasure of prema.

3.4. Immersed in a peerless bhava,
He sheds tears from His reddened eyes.

3.5. Uttering so many words in a faltering voice,
He takes Gadadhara by the hand.⁹

3.6. Again and again His body trembles — what can Narahari grasp of this play?

7. GPT1 — p. 268, no. 65 (dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 65 (catalogue: NG-250). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 912; ed. 1960, vv. 2889–2894): Ishana shows the bank of the Ganga where the Lord danced with His associates and quotes several padas in a row (including the next one, no. 4); after them — "having spread the good fortune of the Ganga, the Lord went home this way with His associates". Not in PK, KGC, PS. The Gita-chandrodaya (ed. 1948, no. 30) has a pada with the same opening ("heranu gaurakiśora | suradhanīṭire ujora"), but it is a different song — signed by Kavishekhara Raya and with a different text after the first couplet; the common opening is probably a current formula. B.

8. The BR reads: "in the kirtana — peerless play" (raṅga instead of aṅga).

9. Gadadhara Pandita is Radha in Krishna-lila (cf. chapter 17, note 20): in the dance the Lord turns to him in the bhava of Krishna-lila. This is the prema of Vraja, not worldly attachment.

4. Narahari Dasa — "gaura suradhunīṭire nācata..." (GPT1 p. 268, no. 66; BR)

*Dancing on the bank of the Suradhuni: Gaura's body takes away the pride of a golden mountain, His locks are adorned with flowers, at the sight of His arms and breast Kama loses his peace; He walks with the gait of a king of elephants, from His lotus eyes flow as it were two Gangas, the earth rejoices at the rhythm of His feet. Raga gauri. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli with chains of assonance.*¹⁰

4.1. Gaura dances on the bank of the Suradhuni with His skilful associates;
His body, full of supreme sweetness, takes away the pride of a golden mountain.

4.2. His peerless locks are adorned with ketaki, kunda jasmine and bright flowers; seeing the curve of His arms and His broad chest, Ananga loses his peace.¹¹

4.3. Seized by bhava, He steps, putting to shame the king of elephants, and thunders unceasingly; tears roll from His lotus eyes — as if two Gangas had appeared.

4.4. When His unsteady feet keep the rhythm, the earth rejoices beyond measure;
Narahari Dasa cries: "Glory, glory!" — what can be said of this play?

10. GPT1 — p. 268, no. 66 (gauri, gaurāṭī); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 66 (catalogue: NG-251). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 912; ed. 1960, vv. 2895–2898), right after the preceding pada, at the Ganga. The GPT1 recognition of this pada is faulty; the readings are restored from GPT2 and the BR (see the full version of the book). Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

11. Ananga ("the Bodiless") is Kama, the god of love: the Lord's beauty surpasses Kama's (a usual image of the gaura-padas). Ketaki and kunda are flowers.

5. Narahari Dasa — "bali-kalidamana śamanabhayabhañjana..." (GPT1 p. 269, no. 67; BR)

*The son of Shachi dancing in the midst of the kirtana: subduer of Kali and of the fear of death, skilful giver of prema, more beautiful than a golden mountain; at the rhythm of His feet the earth sways, He spreads His arms, smiles, and seeing Gadadhara's face loses His composure; His eyes reveal the former play of Vraja. Raga belavali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*¹²

5.1. Subduer of mighty Kali, dispeller of the fear of Yama, giver of joy to the people of all the worlds, skilled in giving away the rare treasure of prema, taking away the pride of all the wish-fulfilling trees —¹³

5.2. (Refrain) the son of Shachi dances in the midst of the kirtana;
His body, lovelier than a golden mountain, shines like a new king Manmatha.

5.3. At the rhythm of His feet the earth sways; gracefully bending, He spreads His arms; smiling gently, His lips tremble — and seeing Gadadhara's face, He loses His composure.

5.4. His lotus eyes sway, turning again and again, revealing the peerless former play;
the skilful associates rejoice — only Narahari Dasa is deprived of this rasa.¹⁴

12. GPT1 — p. 269, no. 67 (belavali); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 67 (catalogue: NG-150). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 921; ed. 1960, vv. 3018–3021): "here Gaurachandra, with joy in His heart, danced in sankirtana in a wondrous bhava". Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

13. "Subduer of mighty Kali" — the Lord who conquers the age of Kali by sankirtana; "the fear of Yama" — the fear of death and its consequences. The wish-fulfilling tree (sura-taru, kalpa-vriksha) grants only what is asked for, but the Lord gives prema beyond asking.

14. "The former play" (pūraba raṅga) is Krishna's lila in Vraja, which the Lord remembers in the dance. Gadadhara is Radha in Krishna-lila (note 9).

6. Narahari — "āju gorā nagarakīrtane..." (GPT1 p. 269, no. 68; BR)

*The night-time city kirtana: adorned Gora walks with His associates, dances, pours down a rain of prema; gods disguised as men shower flowers, the townspeople run and sing, fools hearing the lion's roar expect disaster; hundreds of thousands of lamps are burning, the whole world is intoxicated. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, the account of the night kirtana); Bengali payar.*¹⁵

6.1. Today Gora is in the city kirtana:

having dressed Himself, He goes with His dear associates.

6.2. Beautifully shines the attire on His body;

He dances in every manner, charming the hearts of the world.

6.3. Ceaselessly He pours down a rain of prema;

in the midst of Nadia flows a river of bliss.

6.4. The gods, mingling with men, shower flowers with joy in their hearts.¹⁶

6.5. All the townspeople run; in the depths of their hearts they sing the virtues of Gorachand.

6.6. Fools, hearing the lion's roar, grow sullen and expect disaster.¹⁷

6.7. Hundreds of thousands of lamps are burning — what comparison is there? Earth and sky are lit up.

6.8. What does Narahari know how to tell?

The world is intoxicated — no one can keep his composure.

15. GPT1 — p. 269, no. 68 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 68 (catalogue: NG-151). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 927; ed. 1960, vv. 3104–3111): Ishana tells of the night kirtana, when the Lord went through the streets of Navadvipa by the light of hundreds of thousands of lamps, while "the foolish pashandis took it for a calamity" (v. 3103). Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The night procession with kirtana through Navadvipa (to the Kazi's house) — CB Madhya 23; CC Adi 17.

16. According to the CB (Madhya 23), gods who had taken human form were also in the procession.

17. "The lion's roar" (siṃhanāda) is the loud singing of Hari's names. "Fools" are the opponents of kirtana (pashandis), who expected the noise to bring down the ruler's wrath.

7. Narahari — "śacīra dulāla gorā nāce..." (GPT1 pp. 269–270, no. 69; BR)

*The dance of the son of Shachi: Gora offers to anyone the treasure unattainable for the gods; seeing the fallen, He cannot restrain Himself, waves of bhava rise in Him; His face and breast are bathed in tears; devotees intoxicated with prema circle around, no one can keep his composure. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Bengali payar.*¹⁸

- 7.1. (Refrain) Gora, the darling son of Shachi, dances:
the treasure unattainable for the gods He offers to whoever comes.
- 7.2. Seeing the fallen, He cannot restrain Himself; again and again waves of bhava rise in Him.
- 7.3. A radiance surpassing gold flashes;
how beautiful He is, covered with abundant thrills!
- 7.4. His holy face and breast are bathed in tears; raising both arms, He cries again and again: "Hari!"
- 7.5. All around move devotees intoxicated with prema;
cries of "Glory, glory!" fill earth and sky.
- 7.6. Looking at the Lord, no one can keep his composure;
Narahari, fallen at His reddish feet, weeps.

18. GPT1 — pp. 269–270, no. 69 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 69 (catalogue: NG-152). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 948; ed. 1960, vv. 3381–3386): at the house of Srivasa — "how Gaura plays in Navadvipa even Brahma cannot fathom; the fortunate will see the dances, kirtana, bhavas and mercy of this place" (vv. 3379–3380). Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

8. Narahari — "nāce gorā guṇamaṇi..." (GPT1 p. 270, no. 70; BR)

*The dance of Gora, mine of prema, among His associates — like a golden moon among the stars; His body more tender than a shirisha flower, a smile on His red lips; seeing the fallen, He weeps, and as it were the Suradhuni flows from His eyes; the khol and karatalas sound, all are intoxicated — only the poet is left out. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Bengali tripadi.*¹⁹

- 8.1. Gora dances, the jewel of virtues, a very mine of prema, His dear associates around Him; a wondrous beauty — as if a golden moon had risen among the stars.
- 8.2. His body, more tender than a shirisha flower, is lovely, covered with thrills;
the full-blown lotus is left far behind, Madana weeps before His face; a smile is on His red lips.²⁰
- 8.3. Striking so many poses, He raises His arms and cries "Hari!" — ceaselessly He rains nectar;
His heart is full of compassion: seeing the fallen He weeps, and from His eyes flows a stream like the Suradhuni.
- 8.4. The khol and karatalas sound, lovely is His gait — who, seeing this, would not be enchanted?
No grief or sorrow remains, all the people are intoxicated — only Narahari is deprived of this joy.

19. GPT1 — p. 270, no. 70 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 70 (catalogue: NG-252). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 949; ed. 1960, vv. 3387–3390), right after the preceding pada, at the house of Srivasa. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

20. The shirisha is a tree with very delicate flowers (an image of tenderness). Madana (Kama) "weeps" seeing that the Lord's face is more beautiful than his own.

9. Narahari — "nācata naṭabara gaurakiśora..." (GPT1 p. 270, no. 72; BR)

Young Gaura, the best of dancers, enchants the world with new movements: the radiance of His body is peerless, a garland of forest flowers sways on His neck, His moon-face pours nectar which the *chakora-devotees drink; He sings the names of Hari, and all weep — only the poet's heart does not melt. Raga suhai. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*²¹

- 9.1. Young Gaura dances, the best of dancers; with new movements He sends the world into rapture.
- 9.2. The peerless radiance of His body flashes;
seeing it, countless Kamas swoon.
- 9.3. His large eyes sway;
on His neck swings a garland of forest flowers.
- 9.4. His radiant moon-face pours down nectar — the chakora-devotees drink it to the full with their eyes.²²
- 9.5. Again and again He utters the sweet name of Hari — who, hearing it, does not weep without end?
- 9.6. The sinful and the fallen are intoxicated with the rasa of prema — only Narahari's hard breast does not melt.

21. GPT1 — p. 270, no. 72 (suhai); GPT2 — sec. 4.2, no. 72. The pada was not in the catalogue — new row NG-254 (the signature sweep had matched it to another pada). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 952; ed. 1960, vv. 3430–3435), right after a pada of Vasu Ramananda (GPT1 no. 73), before the account of Advaita's dance in the house of Srivasa. The GPT2 index assigns the pages of this place to Chakravarti. Not in PK (PK 2065 "nācata naṭabara gaura kiśora" is a different pada, by Balarama Dasa), KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

22. The chakora is a bird which, by poetic tradition, feeds on moonlight: the devotees "drink with their eyes" the beauty of the Lord's face.

10. Narahari — "prabhu biśvambhara priya parikara..." (GPT1 p. 283, no. 21; BR)

*The Lord's dream of Balarama: Vishvambhara tells His associates that at night He saw a beautiful chariot with a palm-tree banner arrive here; a tall man with an earring in one ear, a pitcher in His hand, dressed in blue and with a blue cloth on His head, swaying, looked around and asked for Him by name again and again — Haladhara must have come; having said this, the Lord was absorbed in the bhava of Balarama. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave) and is set in the account of Nityananda's arrival in Navadvipa; Bengali tripadi.*²³

- 10.1. Lord Vishvambhara says to His dear associates: "Listen to what I saw in a dream.
What a wondrously made, beautifully adorned chariot with a palm-tree banner has come here!
- 10.2. I saw a handsome man of tall stature — what can He be compared with?
In one ear an earring, and what a neck! His moon-face enchants the world.
- 10.3. A dark pitcher in His hand, a blue cloth on His head, and He was fittingly dressed in blue;
He looked about on all sides and walked swaying — who, seeing that gait, could keep his composure?
- 10.4. Calling My name, He asked for Me again and again — Haladhara must have come."
Having said this, Narahari's Lord was absorbed in the bhava of Balarama.²⁴

23. GPT1 — p. 283, sec. 4.3 (bhavavesha), no. 21 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 4.3, no. 21 (catalogue: NG-253). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 826; ed. 1960, vv. 1731–1734): Nityananda came to Navadvipa and stayed with Nandana Acharya; the Lord, knowing this, in the temple of Vishnu where He worshipped Vishnu and where the Vaishnavas gathered, "told here the dream of that night"; after the pada Srivasa and others, seeing the Lord in this bhava, offer prayers, and Haridasa and Srivasa are sent to search for Nityananda (vv. 1735–1738). The GPT2 index assigns this page to Chakravarti. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The dream and the bhava of Balarama — CB Madhya 3; cf. Murari 2.14 (the bhava of Balarama).

24. The palm-tree banner (tala-dhvaja), blue garments, an earring in one ear are marks of Balarama (Haladhara, "Bearer of the plough"); the one who has come is Nityananda, the Balarama of Gaura-lila, whom the Lord recognises before meeting

Him. "Narahari's Lord" (narahari-prabhu) is the Lord whom the poet serves (cf. chapter 17, note 44). The bhava of Balarama is one of the bhavas the Lord revealed in Navadvipa: a manifestation of His own fullness, not a transformation into another.

11. Narahari — "pālaṅka upare gaurāṅga sundara..." (GPT1 p. 306, no. 23)

*The Lord in the bhava of Radha waiting for Krishna (vasaka-sajja): beautiful Gauranga sits sadly on the couch; He has decked the bed with flowers because Shyama promised to come, but the night is almost over — where is the dark moon? Kala has not come — how much longer to bear the burning of love? "I will break off love with cruel Shyama!" Raga dhanashi. Attribution: not established — the pada is not in the BR; the GPT2 index assigns the page to "Narahari Dasa" (undistinguished); simple Bengali tripadi, like the neighbouring pada of Sarakara PK 307 (GPT1 no. 22), which it follows in content.*²⁵

11.1. On the couch beautiful Gauranga sits in sadness:

His heart is seized by the bhava of Radha — He shows the state of vasaka-sajja.²⁶

11.2. He says: "My dark friend said He would come — and I decked the bed with flowers; the night is almost gone — where is He, the dark moon? The night has passed in vain.

11.3. Kala has not come — how much longer will the heart bear the burning of love?"

Narahari conveys: "I will break off love with that cruel Shyama!"²⁷

25. GPT1 — p. 306, sec. 4.5 (abhisara, rasodgara, utkanthita), no. 23 (dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 4.5, no. 23 (the catalogue did not know this pada — new row NG-255; the signature sweep had matched it to another pada). Before it (no. 22) stands Narahari Sarakara's pada "kī lāgiyā mora gaurasundara basiṃ grhera mājhe" (PK 307, chapter 3, no. 3) on the same theme. Not in BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. C.

26. Vasaka-sajja is the heroine who has adorned herself and the bed and waits for her beloved (one of the eight states of the heroine in alankara-shastra; Rupa Gosvami, Ujjvala-nilamani). The Lord, Krishna Himself, appeared in order to taste Radha's love for Him (CC Adi 4), and lives through Her waiting and separation. This is pure prema, not worldly passion: Radha's bhava is the highest manifestation of the hladini-shakti.

27. Anger at Krishna (mana) is one of the expressions of Radha's prema, in which love only grows stronger; the words "I will break off love" are not a cooling but the voice of wounded love. PK 307 has a similar ending (chapter 3, no. 3). The pronoun "I" is the Lord's speech in Radha's bhava, which the poet conveys.

12. Narahari — "jhulata rasamaya gaurakiśora..." (GPT1 p. 324, no. 10; BR)

*Jhulana: on the bank of the Suradhuni, under a lofty tree, a peerless swing has been made; the skilful associates gently swing young Gaura, sing and play; the people of Nadia leave their homes and run to see His smiling face, the gods shower flowers, and Narahari cannot count the virtues of the Lord of his life. Raga mallara or imana. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, the beginning of the account of jhulana); Vrajabuli.*²⁸

12.1. (Refrain) Young Gaura, full of rasa, is swinging;

on the bank of the Suradhuni, under a lofty tree, a peerless, charming swing has been made.

12.2. The skilful associates gently swing Him and sing, rapt in the rasa of the melodies; they utter a sweet "dhik-dhik-dhini" and play on so many sweet-sounding instruments.²⁹

12.3. Crowds of the men and women of Nadia leave their homes and come, unable to restrain themselves; their eyes, unblinking, gaze at His moon-face lit with a smile.

12.4. The gods in the sky, immersed in bliss, with their companions shower flowers and cry "Glory!"; Narahari, intoxicated by the virtues of the Lord of his life, speaks of them without end — and cannot count them.³⁰

28. GPT1 — p. 324, sec. 5.1 (the "twelve-month lila"), no. 10 (mallara or imana; in the recognition the number is distorted — "১৪"); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 10. In the catalogue — row NS-016 (with a wrong reference to PK 2106, a pada of Nayananda); a Narahari pada, known only from the GPT and the BR, now assigned to the appendix (new row NG-256). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 938; ed. 1960, vv. 3263–3266): "by Gaurachandra's will the six seasons are always embodied in Nadia; to delight the rainy season, here the Lord swings on a swing" (vv. 3261–3262). The GPT2 index assigns these pages to Chakravarti. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Jhulana-yatra is the swing festival in the month of Shravana (July–August).

29. "Dhik-dhik-dhini" are rhythmic syllables (bol) chanted to the drum.

30. "The Lord of Narahari's life" (narahari-prāṇanātha) is Lord Gaura (cf. note 24).

13. Narahari — "āju suradhunītīre gorārāya..." (GPT1 p. 324, no. 11; BR)

*Jhulana: Gora Raya swings on the bank of the Suradhuni, looking at Gadadhara's face, and in His joy cannot sit still; all sing of the former swinging, and everyone runs to see. Raga mallara. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); short Bengali payar.*³¹

13.1. Today on the bank of the Suradhuni Gora Raya swings on the swing — in how many ways!

13.2. Looking at the face of dear Gadadhara, in His joy He cannot sit still.³²

13.3. All sing of the former lila of the swing; who does not run to see this beauty?

13.4. Fixing their eyes on the Lord of Narahari's life, some, returning home, tell how happy they are.³³

31. GPT1 — p. 324, no. 11 (mallara); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 11 (catalogue: NG-158). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 939; ed. 1960, vv. 3267–3270), right after the preceding one. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

32. "The former lila of the swing" is the jhulana of Radha and Krishna in Vraja; the Lord remembers it with Gadadhara, who in Krishna-lila is Radha (note 9).

33. So in GPT2 ("kata sukhī"); the GPT1 recognition has "kata sakhī" ("tells her friend"); in the BR the line is damaged. The next pada of the GPT (no. 12, "jhulata jhulata sundara rasamaya gorā...", also signed by Narahari and also in the BR) is the speech of a townswoman who has resolved to forget her shame before her family for Gaura's sake — nagari-bhava; it is assigned to the section of nagari padas (new catalogue row NG-257).

14. Narahari — "āju gorā suradhunītīre. jhule kibā lalita hindore..." (GPT1 p. 325, no. 13; BR)

*Jhulana in the rainy season: Gora swings on a charming swing by the Suradhuni, His form flashes like lightning in the dark clouds, the thunder of the mridanga is like a storm, the peahens dance, Nadia rejoices, creepers and trees thrill; Narahari, looking at the Lord's face, gently rocks the swing. Raga mallara. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); short Bengali payar.*³⁴

14.1. Today Gora on the bank of the Suradhuni swings on a charming swing.

14.2. And what a rainy season it is!
Darkness from the gathered clouds.

14.3. Gora's form flashes like lightning, stealing the life of the world.

14.4. Sweetly the associates sing — as if pouring down so much nectar.

14.5. The mridanga resounds like thunder — the peahens dance.³⁵

14.6. The town of Nadia rejoices, creepers and trees are covered with thrills.

14.7. All run to see,
and each has so many desires.

14.8. Narahari, looking at the Lord's face, gently, gently rocks the swing.³⁶

34. GPT1 — p. 325, no. 13 (mallara); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 13 (catalogue: NG-159). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 940; ed. 1960, vv. 3275–3282), after pada no. 12 (nagari). Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

35. Images of the rainy season: Gaura is the lightning, the thunder of the drum the storm; peacocks (here peahens) dance on hearing thunder.

36. Narahari Sarakara is an associate of the Lord who served Him in Navadvipa (in the pada on the arati he waves the chamara — chapter 17, no. 12); Chakravarti, describing the Navadvipa lila, often speaks in the person of Narahari the associate.

15. Narahari — "gorā pahu dole hindolete..." (GPT1 p. 325, no. 14; BR)

*After the jhulana: the Lord swings, looking at Gadadhara's face, His golden body thrills; the rejoicing associates take Him down from the swing and seat Him under a kadamba tree; Nityananda weeps with prema, Advaita roars; Srivasa and others lovingly bring delicacies; Gora Raya feeds everyone, and Narahari partakes of the remnants. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); short Bengali payar.*³⁷

15.1. Lord Gora swings on the swing — how much happiness in the bhava He remembers!

15.2. He looks at Gadadhara's face, thrills fill His golden body.

15.3. The associates, rejoicing at heart, take Him down from the swing,

15.4. to seat Him at the roots of a kadamba;
Nitai swims in tears of prema.

15.5. Advaita gives a thunderous roar — a boundless ocean of happiness swells.

15.6. Srivasa and the others with care bring and set out all kinds of delicacies.

15.7. Gora Raya is the life of all; will He eat Himself? —
He feeds everyone.

15.8. Can this joy be described?
Narahari partakes of the remnants.³⁸

37. GPT1 — p. 325, no. 14 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 14 (catalogue: NG-160). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 940; ed. 1960, vv. 3283–3290), the last pada of the account of jhulana. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The next GPT pada signed Narahari (no. 16, "āju racita naba ratana-hindora") is PK 1559 (catalogue: NG-161 = NS-032), already translated (chapter 4).

38. The last couplet is restored from GPT2 and the BR ("abaśeṣa bhuñje narahari"; distorted in the GPT1 recognition). The remnants of the Lord's food (mahaprasada) are the highest mercy for a servant (cf. CC Antya 16).

16. Narahari — "gorā mora gokulera śaśī..." (GPT1 p. 327, no. 20; BR)

*Janmashtami and Nanda-utsava in the house of Srivasa: Gora, smiling, announces "Today is Krishna's birth!" and dances in a cowherd's dress; Nitai with a staff, Gauridasa, Ramai and Sundara with carrying-poles, Srivasa and Advaita scatter turmeric and yoghurt, Mukunda and Madhava sing, the women perform auspicious rites — the house of Srivasa has become the house of Nanda. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, the account of the festival of Krishna's birth); Bengali payar.*³⁹

- 16.1. My Gora is the moon of Gokula;
smiling, He says: "Today is Krishna's birth!"
- 16.2. Seized by bhava, He cannot remain still:
putting on a cowherd's dress, He dances with joy in His heart.
- 16.3. Nitai, dressed as a cowherd, with a staff in His hand dances, bending in every way.
- 16.4. Gauridasa, Ramai and Sundara dance in cowherd dress, with lovely carrying-poles on their shoulders.⁴⁰
- 16.5. Srivasa and Advaita in cowherd dress scatter turmeric and yoghurt with joy in their hearts.
- 16.6. Some play on various instruments;
Mukunda and Madhava sing of the lila of the birth.
- 16.7. The women perform auspicious rites;
the house of Srivasa is like the house of Nanda.⁴¹
- 16.8. Again and again cries of "Glory!" ring out; people run, and no one can keep his composure.
- 16.9. With what longing they gaze, filling their eyes!
This beauty makes the world forget everything, says Narahari.

39. GPT1 — p. 327, sec. 5.1 (subsection "janma-līlā"), no. 20 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 20 (catalogue: NG-162). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 930–931; ed. 1960, vv. 3160–3168). According to the BR account (vv. 3148–3159), one day in the house of Srivasa the Lord said, laughing: "Tomorrow is Krishna's birthday"; Srivasa and the others prepared everything, at night they performed Krishna's abhisheka and spent the night in sankirtana; in the morning the Lord and His associates put on cowherd dress (Nityananda was the most skilful at it), with pots of yoghurt and butter on carrying-poles they entered Srivasa's courtyard, Srivasa and Advaita scattered yoghurt and turmeric — "the house of Srivasa became like the house of Nanda". Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Nanda-utsava is the festival on the day after Janmashtami (Krishna's birth, Bhadra krishna-ashtami): the cowherds of Vraja in their joy drenched one another with milk, yoghurt and butter (Bhag. 10.5). Cf. CC Madhya 15 — Nanda-utsava in Puri, where the Lord also appears in cowherd dress.

40. Ramai is probably Abhirama (Ramadasa), Sundara is Sundarananda: both among the twelve "cowherd boys" (gopas) of Nityananda; Gauridasa Pandita is Subala in Krishna-lila. In this lila they reveal their eternal bhava of cowherd friends.

41. Auspicious rites (maṅgala) — the "ulu-ulu" cry, lamps and so on, with which women greet the birth of a child; Nanda is Krishna's foster-father in Vraja.

17. Narahari — "gokulera śaśī gorā guṇarāśi..." (GPT1 pp. 327–328, no. 21; BR)

*Nanda-utsava: on the day of His former birth Gora dances in cowherd dress; Nitai dances with Ramai and Sundara, Advaita pours a pot of yoghurt on His head, Srivasa and others sprinkle turmeric on Advaita, Shankara and Murari dance with carrying-poles, Mukunda and others sing. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Bengali tripadi.*⁴²

- 17.1. The moon of Gokula, Gora, a treasury of virtues — on the day of His former birth with what joy He dances in cowherd dress, His heart seized by that bhava!

- 17.2. Nitai in bliss dances in cowherd fashion together with Ramai and Sundara; Advaita, running up with a pot of yoghurt, pours it on Nitai's head.
- 17.3. Srivasa and the others playfully sprinkle turmeric on Advaita and laugh;
Shankara and Murari, carrying-poles on their shoulders, dance in cowherd dress.
- 17.4. Mukunda and the others sing and play various instruments, gazing at the moon of Gora's face;
Narahari sings well: moment by moment the ocean of bliss swells.

42. GPT1 — pp. 327–328, no. 21 (dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 21 (catalogue: NG-163). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 931; ed. 1960, vv. 3169–3172), right after the preceding one. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Shankara is Shankara Pandita, brother of Damodara Pandita; Murari is Murari Gupta.

18. Narahari Dasa — "gauraguṇamaṇi barajaśaśadhara..." (GPT1 p. 328, no. 22; BR)

*Nanda-utsava: on the day of Krishna's birth, the eighth of Bhadra, Gaura is with His associates in the house of Srivasa; like the cowherds of Vraja all put on turbans, flowers, bracelets; with carrying-poles and staffs they dance in a courtyard covered with mud of turmeric, yoghurt and butter, crying "hi-hi!"; Nitai sprinkles turmeric on the Lord, Advaita smears Nitai's face with butter, they roll in the mud; the gods shower flowers, people run from all sides. Raga mayura. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli with long chains of assonance.*⁴³

- 18.1. Gaura, the jewel of virtues, the moon of Vraja — on the eighth day of Bhadra, when He appeared before — lovingly abides with His associates in the house of Srivasa; tying soft, jaunty turbans, adorning their heads with flowers and leaves, putting on bracelets and new waistcloths, all dress like the cowherds of Vraja.
- 18.2. Some carry on their shoulders painted poles with pots of yoghurt, others have staffs in their hands; stepping gracefully, they shine in the courtyard, where there is a mud of turmeric, yoghurt and butter;
crying "hi-hi!" without end, covered with thrills, stirred in body and mind, they dance with peerless grace, enchanting the whole world.⁴⁴
- 18.3. Laughing with joy, Nitai says so many things and sprinkles turmeric and yoghurt on the Lord's body; at once Advaita smears fresh butter on Nitai's face;
mighty Nitai playfully seizes Him, and they roll with delight in the thick mud; all smeared, Advaita dances there at once, flinging
His arms to the sky.
- 18.4. Vasudeva, Mukunda, Madhava and others sing of the festival of the birth; the musicians play many instruments: "dha-dhi-dhiki-taka-dhini-ni-ni";
the gods shower flowers, Narahari Dasa gazes at his Lord; no one can keep his composure — men and women run from all sides.

43. GPT1 — p. 328, no. 22 (mayura); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 22. The pada was not in the catalogue — new row NG-258. BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 931–932; ed. 1960, vv. 3173–3176), right after the preceding one. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The eighth day of the dark half of Bhadra (August–September) is Janmashtami; "before" — in Krishna-lila.

44. "Hi-hi!" is the cowherds' cry. The playful romp of Nityananda and Advaita in the mud of yoghurt and turmeric is a game of the Nanda-utsava, in which the Lord's associates reveal the bhava of the cowherd boys of Vraja (cf. CC Madhya 15).

19. Narahari — "āju gorācāmda gaṇasaha gopabeśe..." (GPT1 p. 328, no. 23; BR)

*Radhashtami in the house of Pundarika Vidyanidhi: Gorachand with His associates in cowherd dress, smiling, looks at Gadadhara and weeps with bliss; Mukunda, Madhava and Vasu sing of Radhika's birth, the Lord dances, the earth sways; Gauridasa with a carrying-pole, Vidyanidhi scatters butter, turmeric, milk and yoghurt; men and women run to see; Narahari dances crying "Glory!". Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, the account of Radhashtami); Bengali payar.*⁴⁵

19.1. Today Gorachand with His associates in cowherd dress moment by moment sinks deeper into that rasa.

19.2. Gently smiling, He looks at Gadadhara; streams of tears of bliss flow from both His eyes.⁴⁶

19.3. Mukunda, Madhava and Vasu, with joy in their hearts — all sing of the birth of Radhika.

19.4. The khol and karatalas sound, auspicious for the world;
the Lord dances — the earth sways.

19.5. Gauridasa and others dance with carrying-poles on their shoulders; seeing this cowherd dress, who can stay calm?

19.6. With what fervour Pundarika Vidyanidhi dances, scattering butter, turmeric, milk and yoghurt!

19.7. Nitai, Advaita, Srivasa and the others, seeing this play, float in an ocean of happiness and cannot take their eyes away.

19.8. Men and women run to see this play;
standing in the courtyard, they look in all directions.

19.9. Seeing the peerless sweetness of Gora's form, some say: "Is it not a golden Kama dancing?"⁴⁷

19.10. The gods dance, showering flowers; joyfully Narahari dances with cries of "Glory, glory!"

45. GPT1 — p. 328, no. 23 (kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 23 (catalogue: NG-234, formerly NS-017; there and in the sweep the signature is "nāce narahari"). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 932–933; ed. 1960, vv. 3183–3192): one day the Lord, laughing, said to Pundarika Vidyanidhi: "Tomorrow at your house is the festival of the birth of Sri Radhika"; Vidyanidhi prepared everything, and the next day the Lord came to him with His associates, and an abhisheka in honour of Radhika's birth was performed there (vv. 3177–3182). Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Radhashtami is the eighth day of the bright half of Bhadra, the day of Sri Radha's appearance. Pundarika Vidyanidhi is an associate of the Lord, in Krishna-lila Vrishabhanu, Radha's father (Gaura-ganoddesh-dipika 54), hence the festival is held at his house.

46. Gadadhara is the Radha of Krishna-lila (note 9): on Radha's birthday the Lord looks at him with bliss.

47. "A golden Kama" is an image of the Lord's beauty (cf. note 11); among the onlookers are both men and women — this is not the nagari motif.

20. Narahari Dasa — "rādhikā-janama-utsabe mātiche..." (GPT1 p. 329, no. 25)

Radhashtami: Gora rejoices at the festival of Radhika's birth, and with Him in cowherd dress dance His associates skilled in dancing; the madal, khol, cymbals, karatalas, khamaka, ramashinga, gopi-yantra and khanjari resound; Mukunda and others sing, the boys take up the melody; the sound of conches and *the cowherds' call mingle with it — and the poet sings together with all. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: not established — the pada is not in the BR; the language is late Bengali (present continuous forms: mātiche, bājiche, miśiche, gāiche) with heaped-up onomatopoeia; probably a comparatively late pada.*⁴⁸

- 20.1. At the festival of Radhika's birth Gora, Shachi's darling, full of joy, is rapt; putting on cowherd dress, His associates skilled in dancing dance with Him.
- 20.2. The madal booms: "tadrim, tadrim", to the beat "dhika-dhinna" the khol sounds;
"jhanana-jhanan" — the clash of cymbals, the karatalas sound with a loud din.⁴⁹
- 20.3. "Gab-gab-gab" — the khamaka resounds, "bheu-bheu, bhon-bhon" — the ramashinga blares;
"dim-dim-dim" — the gopi-yantra sounds, "takrita-tadhin" — the khanjari tambourine.
- 20.4. Mukunda and all the others sing on the low notes, the boys take the melody on the fifth;
again and again in three registers the seven notes rise with all the murchhanas.⁵⁰
- 20.5. With this mingles the boom of conches and gongs, mingles the cowherds' call "aba-aba"; together with all sings Narahari Dasa: "I offer myself in sacrifice for Gora!"⁵¹

48. GPT1 — p. 329, no. 25 (dhanashi; text checked against the scan, PDF p. 588); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 25 (catalogue: NG-164). Before it (no. 24) stands a pada on the same festival signed "Ghanashyama" (it is also in the BR; not included in the appendix). This pada is not in BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. C.

49. The madal is a large drum; the khol is the clay drum of kirtana; cymbals (jhāmjhari) and karatalas are small brass cymbals.

50. The khamaka is a one-stringed plucked instrument; the ramashinga a curved horn; the gopi-yantra a one-stringed instrument of wandering singers; the khanjari a tambourine. The low notes are shadja (kharaja); the fifth is panchama; three registers (gramas), seven notes (svaras), murchhanas — concepts of Indian music theory.

51. "Ava-aba" (ābābā) is the cry of cowherds calling the cows (cf. the padas on taking out the cows: "ābā ābā rabe"). "I offer myself in sacrifice" (balihāri yāi... nichani) is an expression of utmost devotion.

21. Narahari — "sarasa suradhunī-pulina-bana..." (GPT1 p. 334, no. 43; BR)

*Remembrance of the rasa-lila: seeing the grove on the sandy bank of the Suradhuni, young Gaura remembers the former play of the rasa and is absorbed in bliss; His face eclipses the moon, He dances in the threefold bend to the sweet thunder of the mridanga, the associates sing of the rasa of the rasa dance, and Narahari's heart overflows. Raga shri. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, the account of the rasa-lila in Navadvipa); Vrajabuli.*⁵²

- 21.1. Seeing the grove on the lovely sandy bank of the Suradhuni, young Gaura remembered the former play of the rasa — and was absorbed in joy.⁵³
- 21.2. His body, which takes away Madana's pride, flashes like a garland of lightning;
the sweetness of His moon-face, which eclipses the moon, pours down nectar without end.
- 21.3. Today, performing a peerless dance, He stands in a charming threefold bend;
"drimiki-drimi-drimi-drim" — sweetly, sweetly the mridanga sounds.
- 21.4. The skilful associates sing, rapt in the joy of the rasa of the rasa dance;
at this wondrous play, rare even for the gods, Narahari's breast overflows.

52. GPT1 — p. 334, sec. 5.1 (subsection "rasa and maharasa"), no. 43 (shri); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 43. The pada was not in the catalogue — new row NG-259. BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 941; ed. 1960, vv. 3297–3300): "here Gaurachandra revealed great bliss, remembering the former rasa of the rasa dance" (v. 3291), after a pada of Vasu Ghosha on the same subject. The GPT2 index assigns these pages to Chakravarti. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The next GPT pada (no. 44, "kī madhura madhuniśā" — the rasa of Balarama revealed by Nityananda; in the catalogue wrongly VG-048, Vasu Ghosha) is also signed Narahari and also in the BR; as a pada about Nityananda it is translated in chapter 24, no. 13 (new row NG-260).

53. The rasa-lila is Krishna's circle dance with the gopis on an autumn night in Vrindavana (Bhag. 10.29–33), the summit of the lila of love. The Lord, remembering it on the bank of the Ganga, experiences it as Krishna Himself; this is the pure prema of Vraja, not worldly passion (Bhag. 10.33.39: one who hears of the rasa is freed from lust).

22. Narahari — "basanta samaya suśobhita..." (GPT1 p. 338, no. 55; BR)

*Spring in Nadia: the trees and creepers blossom, the cuckoos call, the bees hum, the southern breeze blows; Gora, the Nagara of Gokula, plays with His associates on the bank of the Suradhuni: Mukunda and Madhava sing, all throw flower-pollen phagu at one another, Nitai, Advaita, Gadadhara and Srivasa play phagu; the gods cannot keep their composure. Raga basanta. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, the account of the spring games); Bengali payar.*⁵⁴

22.1. Beautiful is the springtime:

how the trees and creepers of Nadia blossom!

22.2. Ceaselessly the cuckoos call, swarms of bees roam about and hum.

22.3. A gentle southern breeze blows;

the heart overflows — no one can remain still.

22.4. Gora, the Nagara of Gokula, joyfully plays with His associates on the bank of the Suradhuni.⁵⁵

22.5. Mukunda, Madhava and others sing, all play the mridanga, the mandira and many instruments.

22.6. Taking flower-pollen for phagu, someone, softly laughing, throws it on Gora's body.⁵⁶

22.7. Some dance in various ways;

Gorachand throws phagu over everyone.

22.8. Nitai, Advaita, Gadadhara,

Srivasa and others play phagu with one another.

22.9. Seeing this wondrous play, the gods cannot keep their composure.

22.10. Who does not cry "Glory!"?

Narahari says: the earth is filled with happiness.

54. GPT1 — p. 338, no. 55 (basanta); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 55 (catalogue: NG-166). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 941–942; ed. 1960, vv. 3303–3312): "Gaurachandra plays in spring with His associates; here the wondrous phagu games began" (vv. 3301–3302). Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

55. "The Nagara of Gokula" (gokulanāgara) is an epithet of Krishna, the "skilful lover" of Vraja; here it indicates that Gaura is Krishna Himself, not the nagari motif (cf. chapter 17, note 15).

56. Phagu (phāgu) is the red powder (abir) people throw on one another at the spring festival of Holi (Dola-yatra, phalguna-purnima); here flower-pollen is used instead.

23. Narahari — "phāgu khelata gaurakiśora..." (GPT1 p. 338, no. 56; BR)

*The phagu game: young Gaura in special attire, the radiance of His body eclipses lightning; with a golden syringe in hand He squirts saffron water, the associates toss abir, and sky and earth turn red; the associates dance fearlessly, sing of the lilas of Vraja, and cry "Ho-ho, Hari!" Raga basanta. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁵⁷

23.1. Young Gaura plays phagu, in special, radiant attire.

23.2. The radiance of His body surpasses a garland of lightning — at the sight of it hundreds of Kamas swoon.

23.3. Taking a golden syringe in His hand,
He squirts saffron water.

23.4. Without end they toss abir and gulal — both the sky and the earth turn red.⁵⁸

23.5. Seeing the moon of the Lord's face, the associates dance without fear.

23.6. Together they sing of the lilas of Vraja;
no one can keep his composure.

23.7. They play on many sweet-sounding instruments, beating the rhythm "dhiki-dhiki-taka".

23.8. Crying "Ho-ho, Hari!", all are beside themselves; what can Narahari, whose mind is so small, say?

57. GPT1 — p. 338, no. 56 (basanta); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 56 (catalogue: NG-167, its first line not recognised in the catalogue). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 942; ed. 1960, vv. 3313–3320), right after the preceding one. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The next GPT pada (no. 57, "phāguyā khelata gaurakiśora") is signed "Ghanashyama" and is not included in the appendix.

58. Abir and gulal are the red and pink powders of the spring festival; saffron water (keshara-vari) is coloured water with which people drench one another.

24. Narahari — "gaura gokula-nāha naṭabara..." (GPT1 p. 339, no. 58; BR)

*A spring game on the bank of the Suradhuni: Gaura, the Lord of Gokula, best of dancers, with His associates dressed in every possible way; His body eclipses a golden mountain, His face the moon; syringe in hand He tosses phagu; the associates cry "Hori!"; a cloud of gulal hides the sun, the sky glows red; musk and saffron are poured on Nitai's head, Advaita frowns and claps His hands; the mridangas thunder. Raga basanta. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli with long chains of assonance.*⁵⁹

24.1. Gaura, the Lord of Gokula, best of dancers, with His associates dressed in every way, plays on the bank of the Suradhuni, increasing the joy of spring;
the radiance of His body humbles a golden mountain, lovely as Kama incarnate; a gentle smile pouring nectar flashes, His face crushes the pride of the moon.

24.2. His pair of lotus eyes is charming, His sidelong glance restless and peerless; gracefully taking the syringe, He tosses phagu by handfuls;
around Him shine the skilful associates, adorned, immersed in bliss, and crying "Hori!" they look at the Lord's face — whose eyes would not be soothed?⁶⁰

24.3. Intoxicated by touch they play, filling the path of the sky with gulal; hiding the rays of the sun, the sky glows red;
crushed paste of musk and saffron they joyfully pour on Nitai's head, while Advaita, knitting His brows and clapping His hands, charms people's hearts.⁶¹

24.4. Skilful dancers dance, the drummers beat the mridanga and muraja:

"thungut-theta-taka-taka-thodi-drimikat-da-drimiki-drimi";

Narahari says: most sweetly the singers sing, keeping the shrutis and svaras — and all the gods, men and women, forgetting their composure, run to see.

59. GPT1 — p. 339, no. 58 (basanta); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 58 (catalogue: NG-168). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 944; ed. 1960, vv. 3339–3342). Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

60. "Hori" (hori) is the cry of the Holi festival.

61. Advaita's frowning is play: the elder associate "gets angry" to make everyone laugh (cf. no. 18).

25. Narahari — "suradhunīṭire taruṇa taru-ballaṛī..." (GPT1 pp. 340–341, no. 63; BR)

*A spring dance: on the bank of the Suradhuni young trees and creepers in new leaves and flowers, the bees hum, intoxicated by the scent, cuckoos and parrots flit around; there young Gaura dances, anointed with saffron, musk and sandal, red with phagu; the associates sing, the gods cry "Glory!", Narahari plays the mridanga. Raga dhanashi or basanta. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave, in the cycle of the dance); Vrajabuli.*⁶²

25.1. On the bank of the Suradhuni are young trees and creepers — ever new leaves, flowers opening; intoxicated by the fragrance, swarms of bees hum, cuckoos and parrots flit all around.

25.2. (Refrain) There young Gaura, the best of dancers, dances; anointed with saffron, musk and sandal, His body, red with phagu, shines all the more.

25.3. Peerless attire, garments, jewelled ornaments; His garland of forest flowers sways charmingly; with new movements that charm the hearts of the world, again and again He beats the rhythm with His feet.

25.4. Most sweetly the associates sing, gazing at the moon of His face, rejoicing without end; the gods in the sky, immersed in bliss, cry "Glory, glory!", Narahari plays the sweet-sounding mridanga.

62. GPT1 — pp. 340–341, no. 63 (dhanashi or basanta); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 63 (catalogue: NG-169; in the GPT2 recognition the number is "७७"). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 891–892; ed. 1960, vv. 2638–2641): in the BR this and the next pada stand in the cycle of the dance on the bank of the Ganga, right after the pada "suradhunīṭira parama niramala thala" (chapter 17, no. 21); after them — "having played on the bank of the Ganga, the Lord went home this way" (v. 2650). Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

26. Narahari — "āju suradhunīṭire sundara gaura nṛtye bibhora..." (GPT1 p. 342, no. 67; BR)

*A spring dance, a description of His form: beautiful Gaura, absorbed in dance on the bank of the Suradhuni, sprinkled with drops of phagu and sandal; tilaka, locks, earrings, lotus eyes, smile, arms, broad chest, a garland of malati, a belt with bells, anklets; the associates sing raga basanta, the people of Nadia run to see; "blessed is the age of Kali: in it the Lord of Gokula plays". Raga basanta. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); Vrajabuli.*⁶³

26.1. Today on the bank of the Suradhuni beautiful Gaura is absorbed in dance; His body, sprinkled with drops of phagu and fragrant sandal, shines.

26.2. On His forehead a peerless tilaka flashes, lovely is the weight of His locks; the earrings in His ears adorn His cheeks, the arch of His brows is boundless.

- 26.3. His restless eyes are lovely lotuses, the radiance of His face conquers the moon;
His red lips with a gentle, gentle smile, His teeth put pearls to shame.
- 26.4. His arms are golden lotus stalks, His broad chest crushes Manmatha; on His neck a lovely, skilfully woven, swaying garland of malati.
- 26.5. On His slender waist a belt with bells, He wears beautiful garments; peerlessly His anklets jingle — all His attire intoxicates.
- 26.6. Seeing the wondrous beauty, the associates are immersed in His virtues, which have no end; cymbals, muraja and mridanga play, they sing raga basanta.
- 26.7. Hearing it, the gods in the heavens cannot keep their composure; from all sides run the men and women of the young town of Nadia.
- 26.8. Throughout the world cries of "Glory!" resound, a stream of prema overflows;
Narahari says: blessed is the age of Kali — in it the Lord of Gokula plays.⁶⁴

63. GPT1 — p. 342, no. 67 (basanta); GPT2 — sec. 5.1, no. 67 (catalogue: NG-170); the GPT2 index assigns this pada (p. 220, no. 67) to Chakravarti. BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 892; ed. 1960, vv. 2642–2649), right after the preceding one. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

64. "Blessed is the age of Kali" — because in it the Lord appeared, giving prema through sankirtana (cf. Bhag. 11.5.36: "the wise value the age of Kali, in which everything is attained by sankirtana").

27. Narahari Dasa — "gaurāṅgacāṁḍa hera nayanera koṇe..." (GPT1 p. 488, no. 3; PK 116)

*Prarthana: the poet has taken refuge at the cool feet of Gauranga, he has no one but the Lord; he begs Nityananda for mercy: before, They saved sinners and gave away prema — let Them now show the world the deliverance of the most sinful; with a straw between his teeth he asks Gauranga and Nitai not to leave him without hope. Raga kedara. Attribution: not established — the pada is in PK, but without a signature (the last couplet with Narahari's name is not there); the GPT2 index assigns the page to "Narahari Dasa" (undistinguished); not in the BR; simple Bengali payar.*⁶⁵

- 27.1. Gaurangachand, look at me at least from the corner of Your eye:
I have taken refuge at Your cool feet.
- 27.2. I have laid my burden on You — I have no one;
if You show no mercy, to whom shall I go?
- 27.3. Lord Nityananda, show compassion:
in distress a lowly, wretched man calls You.
- 27.4. Before, You saved sinners — and now You do not save?
Show the world now the deliverance of the most sinful!
- 27.5. Not having received Your mercy, I wander weeping;
yet before You gave away prema, Yourself offering it to the world.⁶⁶
- 27.6. Reveal that mercy and deliver me:
I have heard that You are the merciful Lord — let the world see it.
- 27.7. Gauranga, Nitai, do not leave me without hope! — with a straw between his teeth says Narahari Dasa.⁶⁷

65. GPT1 — p. 488, sec. "the devotee's dainya and prarthana", no. 3 (kedara); GPT2 — sec. 7, no. 3 (catalogue: NG-235, formerly NS-023). The pada is in PK: vol. 1, PK 116 (the concluding "prayer" of the 5th pallava, "anya prārthanā") — without a signature and without the last couplet; the readings of the PK manuscripts are in the full version of the book. Who added the couplet with Narahari's name is unknown. Not in BR, KGC, PS, the Gaura-charita-chintamani or the Gita-chandrodaya. C.

66. Cf. CC Adi 7: the Lord and Nityananda give away prema indiscriminately, "without asking who is worthy".

67. "A straw between the teeth" is a sign of humility and supplication (cf. chapter 17, note 68).

28. Narahari — "mari mari ogo nadīyā mājhe..." (GPT1 p. 494, no. 30)

*Golden Navadvipa: a wondrous beauty in the midst of Nadia — the house of Shachi captivates the world, around it are rows of golden palaces, in the golden courtyards golden men and women; trees, creepers, beasts and birds have become golden, the Ganga flows as a golden stream, the sky and the whole world have become golden — so great is the power of the beauty of the poet's Lord. Raga "as one likes" (yatharaga). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in Narahari Chakravarti's Gaura-charita-chintamani (where it is put in the mouth of a woman of Nadia); not in the BR; Bengali payar with repetitions.*⁶⁸

28.1. Ah, ah, people! What a wondrous beauty in the midst of Nadia!

I do not know who built the house of Shachi, which captivates the world.

28.2. All around shine rows of new golden palaces;

in the golden courtyards play so many golden men and women.

28.3. And another wonder — look: the whole town of Nadia has become golden; golden kadamba trees are adorned with golden creepers.

28.4. All the beasts and birds, all the insects and moths are like gold;

who has stolen the whiteness? The Jahnavi has become a golden stream.⁶⁹

28.5. The sky has become golden — what is this? Look: the whole world is like gold — so great, it seems, is the power of the beauty of the poet Narahari's Lord.⁷⁰

68. GPT1 — p. 494, sec. "the devotee's dainya and prarthana", no. 30 (yatharaga; checked against the scan, PDF p. 753); GPT2 — sec. 7, no. 30. The pada was not in the catalogue — new row NG-261 (the catalogue made from the GPT2 recognition had missed it). The pada is in Narahari Chakravarti's Gaura-charita-chintamani (ed. Haridasa Dasa, 1947; recognition in the OCR text) with the heading "kācicca" ("a certain [woman sings]"), right after a pada about the townswomen of Nadia. Not in BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Chakravarti's framing is the speech of a woman of Nadia (the motif of the townswomen, cf. chapter 17, note 15); the pada itself speaks only of the Lord's beauty transforming His abode — we translate faithfully to the author.

69. The Jahnavi is the Ganga. The white waters of the Ganga have become golden from Gaura's radiance.

70. "The poet Narahari's Lord" (narahari-pahu) — see note 24. Navadvipa is a spiritual abode (dhama), non-different from Vrindavana (cf. the next GPT pada, no. 31: "where Krishna is, there is Vraja"); the gold is an image of Gaura's radiance, which it reflects.

Chapter 19. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — III: the childhood pastimes of Nimai

Continuation of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 19: padas on the Lord's childhood from the "Balya-lila" section of the GPT (2.2). First come three padas which Narahari Chakravarti quotes in the Bhakti-ratnakara while showing the house of Jagannatha Mishra (the first feeding with rice, Nimai in His father's arms, the first steps); then a large cycle in which the old men and elderly women of Navadvipa, coming at dawn to the house of Shachi, gaze at Gaura, bless Him and recall His childhood pranks. Almost the whole of this cycle is found in the Gaura-charita-chintamani of Narahari Chakravarti (chapters 5 and 6 of the "morning pastimes": the love of the old men and the love of the women in vatsalya) — a strong argument for Chakravarti; two padas (nos. 24 and 27) have not been found in any witness. The index of poets of GPT2 assigns the padas of the section to Chakravarti (those found in the BR) or to an undistinguished "Narahari Dasa" (the GCC padas); none to Sarakara. According to Majumdar, the padas on the birth and childhood of Nimai are late: Narahari Sarakara, who lived in Shrikhanda, did not see the Lord's childhood, and the "Narahari" padas known only from the GPT are unreliable for attribution. Before translation the "Narahari" signatures in sections 2.1–2.2 were checked throughout in GPT1 (tesseract recognition): the catalogue had missed 14 padas of this section (13 of them in this chapter). The base text is GPT1 (doubtful places from the scan), collated with GPT2, the BR (eds. 1912 and 1960) and the Gaura-charita-chintamani (ed. 1947); PK, KGC, PS and the Gita-chandrodaya have been checked. The childhood games of the Lord are the lila of Bhagavan, not an ordinary childhood (note 2). The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "nadīyāra nārī puruṣa..." (GPT1 p. 65, no. 10; BR)

The first feeding with rice: the men and women of Nadia gather with gifts; the Child sits on Nilambara's lap in new ornaments; tasting grains of sweet rice, He smiles; all praise Shachi and Jagannatha. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); tripadi with chains of chiming sounds.¹

- 1.1. The men and women of Nadia, counting it the reward of their pious deeds, in great joy gather for Nimai's first feeding with rice — each bringing various gifts.²
- 1.2. They gaze their fill at the beauty of Shachi's son on the lap of fortunate Nilambara:³
all in ever-new ornaments, a silk cloth about His hips, the hem of His garment swaying.
- 1.3. His body surpasses a golden lotus, and His face — what can compare? — the splendour of the moon;
how wondrously, tasting grains of sweet rice, He flashes a gentle smile!
- 1.4. At such a festival who can keep his composure? The joy cannot be put into words.
All praise Shachi and Jagannatha — Narahari's heart overflows with happiness.

1. GPT1 — p. 65, section 2.2 ("Balya-lila"), no. 10 (kamoda; checked against the scan, PDF p. 324); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 10. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-262). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 768; ed. 1960, vv. 956–959): Ishana, showing Srinivasa the house of Jagannatha Mishra, says that here at six months the Lord was given His first rice and named, and quotes the pada. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The first feeding with rice (annaprashana) — CB Adi 4; CC Adi 14; Murari 1.6.

2. The childhood games of the Lord are not an ordinary childhood but the lila of Bhagavan (balya-lila): by His own will He appears as an infant and a child for the sake of His eternal associates who love Him in vatsalya (parental love). Shachi and Jagannatha Mishra are His eternal parents (in Krishna-lila, Yashoda and Nanda, CC Adi 13); their love, like the love of the people of Navadvipa, is pure prema, not worldly attachment. So the whole Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) understands Gaura's childhood games, and so they are to be understood in all the padas of this chapter.

3. Nilambara Chakravarti — the Lord's maternal grandfather (CC Adi 13).

2. Narahari — "jagannātha miśra mahāsukhe..." (GPT1 p. 65, no. 11; BR)

Jagannatha Mishra fondles his son; Nimai climbs down from his lap and crawls about the courtyard, looking back; Shachi calls Him into her arms — "dust will stick to You"; He climbs up to her, smiling. Raga tudi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave).⁴

2.1. Jagannatha Mishra in great happiness takes his son on his lap and kisses the moonlike face.

2.2. The father adorns the hair on His little head — running his fingers through it, his heart overflows with love.

2.3. From His father's lap Nimai gracefully gets down to roam about the courtyard.

2.4. On all fours He crawls about the courtyard; golden nupuras ring on His lovely feet.⁵

2.5. As He crawls, He looks back;

Mishra stands watching the sweetness of His movements.

2.6. His mother comes before Him and says:

"Come up into my arms, darling — dust is sticking to Your body."

2.7. Putting His little hand in His mother's hand,

He climbs onto her lap, smiling and smiling.

2.8. His little teeth shine like drops of milk;

when they show in His smile — who can keep his composure?

2.9. Whomever He looks at with both eyes, him He immerses for ever in an ocean of happiness.

2.10. Beautifully He shines on His mother's lap;

Narahari offers himself to the Enchanter of the world's heart.⁶

4. GPT1 — p. 65, no. 11 (tudi; scan, PDF p. 324); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 11 (catalogue: NG-006). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 769; ed. 1960, vv. 970–979): Ishana shows the courtyard where the Lord crawled on His knees (jānu-caṁkramaṇa), quotes the pada of Vasu Ghosha "ek mukhe ki kahiba" (GPT no. 2, chapter 12) and after it this one. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Cf. Murari 1.6; CC Adi 14.

5. Nupuras — ankle bells.

6. "Offers himself" (nichani) — Bengali nichhani: the rite of waving something around the beloved and offering oneself for his welfare (cf. chapter 17, note 34). The signature of this cycle is usually "Narahari offers himself..." or "Narahari's life is Nimai".

3. Narahari — "śacī ṭhākuraṇī cāru chāṁḍe..." (GPT1 p. 65, no. 12; BR)

The first steps: Shachi teaches Gora to walk, holding out her finger; He stands up, takes two or four steps, lets go of the finger and falls; His mother takes Him in her arms and nurses Him. Raga tudi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave).⁷

3.1. Shachi Thakurani tenderly teaches Gorachand to walk.

- 3.2. Very gently she says, smiling:
"Come, take hold of my finger."
- 3.3. Hearing this, the Moon of Nadia joyfully takes hold of His mother's finger with a smile.
- 3.4. Slowly, slowly He rises and stands up, and takes two or four steps.
- 3.5. Letting go of the finger, He falls to the ground;
Shachi takes Him in her arms and kisses His little face.
- 3.6. Climbing onto her lap, He swings His little feet, and the nupuras ring on His reddish soles.
- 3.7. Fingering with His little hand, He drinks at the breast — there is no comparison for it.
- 3.8. He looks about on all sides with charming gestures — Narahari offers himself for this.

7. GPT1 — p. 65, no. 12 (tudi; scan, PDF p. 324); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 12. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-263). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 770–771; ed. 1960, vv. 990–997, "todi"): Ishana says that here in the courtyard the Lord took His first steps, quotes a verse from Murari's Shri-Krishna-Chaitanya-carita (part 1: "walking with His reddish feet, He took from the earth the fever of separation") and the pada. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The first steps — Murari 1.6; CB Adi 4; cf. the pada of Vasu Ghosha "māyera aṅguli dhari" (chapter 12).

4. Narahari — "gaura-badana sukha-sadana sudhāmaya..." (GPT1 p. 66, no. 15; GCC)

*The old men of Navadvipa gaze at Gaura's face: each offers himself for Him; trembling, in tears, leaning on one another, they say: who created Mishra's son, who has stolen our hearing, mind and eyes? A moment without Him is like a kalpa; people tease us as madmen, we have forgotten all order in eating and sleeping, home has grown hateful, we have no love for our own sons. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in his Gaura-charita-chintamani; Vrajabuli with chains of chiming sounds.*⁸

- 4.1. Again and again the old men gaze at the face of Gaura — the abode of happiness, full of nectar;
counting many of their births crowned with fruit, each again and again offers his whole self for Him.
- 4.2. They totter, their eyes brimming with tears, their bodies covered with abundant thrills; leaning on another's hand, someone speaks soft, sweet words:
- 4.3. "Tell me, who fashioned Mishra's son, who has stolen my hearing, my mind and my eyes?
A moment when I do not see Him is like a kalpa; I am thrown into turmoil, and not a drop of steadiness remains."⁹
- 4.4. It is boundless happiness to follow Him everywhere; for this everyone laughs at us, calling us madmen;
but as soon as those words reach our ears, the heart rejoices all the more.
- 4.5. Eating, walking, sleeping, speaking — all order is forgotten, everything goes topsy-turvy;
the household routine is nothing but a burden, and we have no love for our own sons."¹⁰
- 4.6. Having spoken thus, they fall silent, absorbed within, and again cherish desires in their hearts.
How can I, Narahari Dasa, the crest-jewel of fools, describe their overflowing supreme love?

8. GPT1 — pp. 66–67, no. 15 (yatharaga; scan, PDF pp. 325–326); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 15 (catalogue: NG-007). Gaura-charita-chintamani (GCC) — chapter 5 ("morning pastimes": the love of the old men), pada 8, the last song of the chapter. In the GCC this whole cycle is framed by Gaura's morning in Navadvipa: at dawn He sits in the courtyard of Shachi's house among His associates, and the people of the town gather to gaze at Him; therefore many padas of the cycle speak of Gaura no longer as an infant, and the childhood pranks in them are recollections. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Cf. the love of the people of Navadvipa for Nimai — CB Adi 6–7.

9. A kalpa is a day of Brahma, an immeasurably long time; cf. the gopis' complaint about the blinking of the eyelids that hinders them from seeing Krishna (Bhag. 10.31.15).

10. Cf. Parikshit's question why the people of Vraja loved Krishna more than their own sons (Bhag. 10.14.49–57) — Krishna is the Soul of all souls. Chakravarti transfers this to the people of Navadvipa.

5. Narahari — "rajanī prabhāta teji nija gṛha..." (GPT1 p. 67, no. 16; GCC)

*At dawn the old men, leaning on their sticks, come to Shachi's courtyard and cannot take their eyes off Gaura; each prays for Him: to the Creator for long life, to Vishnu for grace and universal love, to Shiva for fame and freedom from misfortune, to Sarasvati for invincible learning, to Bhagavati that they may always see Nimai. Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*¹¹

- 5.1. At the end of the night, leaving their homes, the venerable old men all come to the lovely courtyard of Shachi, and in their hearts joy upon joy arises.
- 5.2. They stand leaning on their sticks and again and again gaze at Gaura's body, as if after long days, with great toil, they had found a jewel for their hearts.
- 5.3. One, overcome by love, says to the Creator: "Fulfil all His wishes; may He live longer than I, may He, the beautiful one, always live in this town of Nadia."¹²
- 5.4. Another, with joined palms, says to Vishnu: "Cast a gracious glance on the son of Mishra; may He be a stranger to no one, may all love Him and ceaselessly sing His virtues."
- 5.5. Another says to the Lord of Kailasa: "Increase the radiance of each of His limbs; may His fame fill the world, may there be plenty; ward off the hosts of invincible misfortunes."
- 5.6. Another says to Sarasvati: "Make Him a pandit, invincible, so that He may never know defeat"; another says to Bhagavati: "May we always see Nimai — the life of Narahari."

11. GPT1 — p. 67, no. 16 (vibhasa; scan, PDF p. 326); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 16 (catalogue: NG-008). GCC — chapter 5, pada 6; in the GCC it is followed by a short stanza (rasika-chandas) with the same signature — "thus all the old men ceaselessly bless Him..." — which is not in the GPT. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

12. The old men pray to Brahma (the Creator), Vishnu, Shiva (the Lord of Kailasa), Sarasvati and Bhagavati (the goddess Durga) for Gaura's welfare — this is how vatsalya, parental love, shows itself: in it the devotee forgets the Lord's majesty and, seeing Him as in need of protection, entreats all the gods on His behalf (cf. the cowherds of Vraja and Yashoda entrusting Krishna to the protection of the gods, Bhag. 10.6, 10.7). The sweetness (madhurya) of this love, by the will of yogamaya, hides from them the majesty (aishvarya) of the Lord; this is not independent worship of the demigods, and the Lord, of course, needs no one's protection. Bhagavati here is an epithet of the goddess, not of Bhagavan.

6. Narahari — "gaura-sneha-bhare gara gara gāta..." (GPT1 p. 67, no. 17; GCC)

*At the end of the night the old men, overflowing with love for Gaura, tell their households about Him; unable to live without His darshan, they gather all their strength, rise from their beds and, trembling, sticks in hand, go to Him. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*¹³

- 6.1. Their bodies overflowing with love for Gaura, the old men rejoice at the end of the night.
- 6.2. Each told his household everything in detail;
hearing it all, they rejoice without end.

6.3. Unable to stay without the darshan of Gaura, they left their beds, gathering all their strength.

6.4. Sticks in hand, bodies trembling —
Narahari watches this matchless spectacle.

13. GPT1 — p. 67, no. 17 (dhanashi; scan, PDF p. 326); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 17 (catalogue: NG-009). GCC — chapter 5, pada 5 (yatharaga). GPT1 has "tejala šeṣe" ("left... at last"), the GCC "tejala šeja" ("left their beds"); the GCC reading is adopted. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

7. Narahari — "śuna mora bāṇī nā jāni ki habe..." (GPT1 p. 67, no. 18; GCC)

*An old man says to his household: "I have grown utterly decrepit, and Nimai is our life and all our wealth; I always want to see Him, but have no strength to walk. Worship the gods, give gifts to brahmanas, send Him presents that please Him; go with Narahari to Shachi, teach her auspicious rites and make Nimai swear to give up His obstinacy." Raga suhai. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*¹⁴

7.1. "Listen to what I say: I do not know what will be — I have grown utterly decrepit.
Our treasure of life, all our wealth, is Nimai, the solace of the soul.

7.2. (Refrain) Ah, I always long to see Him!
But I have no strength to walk — that is my grief: Providence has turned against me.

7.3. Worship the gods, give gifts to the brahmanas, always think of His welfare; carefully send Him various presents — whatever pleases Him.

7.4. Go with Narahari and teach Shachi auspicious rites;
let Nimai swear to give up His dreadful obstinacy."¹⁵

14. GPT1 — p. 67, no. 18 (suhai; scan, PDF p. 326); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 18. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-264). GCC — chapter 5, pada 4 (yatharaga). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

15. The poet introduces himself into the lila as one of the people of Navadvipa ("go with Narahari") — a frequent device of Chakravarti in the GCC. "Obstinacy" (āṁkhuṭi) — Nimai's childish whims, of which the following padas tell (cf. CB Adi 6: the neighbours' complaints to Jagannatha Mishra).

8. Narahari — "niśi parabhāta samaye yerūpa ānanda śacīra ghare..." (GPT1 p. 68, no. 19; GCC)

*The joy in Shachi's house at dawn cannot be told even by a thousand mouths through hundreds of yugas: Gaurachand, who gives happiness to His own, has spread in the courtyard a net that enchants the world; people leave their beds, come running, drown in the ocean of His beauty and cannot go home. Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*¹⁶

8.1. What joy there is in Shachi's house at the end of the night — not even in hundreds of yugas could a thousand mouths describe a fraction of it!¹⁷

8.2. How many games Gaurachand knows to give happiness to His own!
It seems that in the middle of the courtyard He has spread a net that enchants the world.

8.3. Leaving their beds, running and running, everyone gathers, rejoicing; drowned in the ocean of that beauty, they can no longer return home.

8.4. A wondrous love ceaselessly arises in everyone's heart;
they give body and mind to those reddish feet, says Narahari Dasa.

16. GPT1 — p. 68, no. 19 (vibhasa; scan, PDF p. 327); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 19. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-265). GCC — the first pada of chapter 7, which is devoted to the townswomen of Navadvipa (nāgarī) seized by love for Gaura; the pada itself speaks only of the joy of all who come at dawn to Shachi's house, without the nagari motif, and in the GPT it stands in the section on childhood — therefore it is translated here. In Chakravarti's frame it belongs to the motif of the townswomen (cf. chapter 17, note 15): worship of Gaura in the spirit of "gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

17. "A thousand mouths" — an allusion to the thousand-headed Ananta-Shesha, who eternally sings of the Lord and finds no end to His qualities.

9. Narahari — "āhā mari mari gaurāṅgacāṁḍera carite..." (GPT1 p. 68, no. 20; GCC)

*The people of Nadia cannot live through the night without Gaura: in sleep they see only Him and at dawn they wake with His name; matchless are their old men and women; Gora, overflowing with tenderness, speaks sweet words with these old kinsfolk. Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*¹⁸

9.1. Ah, who does not pine for the deeds of Gaurangachand!

The people of Nadia cannot live through the night without seeing Him.

9.2. Lying down, in their dreams they know nothing else: Gora is all their wealth; at dawn they wake crying "Gora, Gora!", absorbed in that rasa.

9.3. There is no one to equal all these old men and women; who with such care created their beautiful nature and conduct?

9.4. Narahari offers himself to his Lord: among all these old kinsfolk Gora, overflowing with tenderness, says something to them in sweet words.

18. GPT1 — p. 68, no. 20 (vibhasa; scan, PDF p. 327); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 20 (catalogue: NG-010, wrongly as no. 10). GCC — chapter 5, pada 1; the chapter opens with the heading "Again in the morning — the excellence of the old men's love". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

10. Narahari — "śuna he sumati ati nirajane..." (GPT1 p. 68, no. 21; GCC)

*One old man tells another in secret: "It seems the Son of the Lord of Vraja has appeared here: there is no one in Nadia who does not pine for His qualities; Srivasa, Murari and the others do not live without His darshan; the ascetic Advaita of Shantipur is constantly here and tells everyone of His sweet qualities. Make Gorachand the necklace of your throat." Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*¹⁹

10.1. "Listen, wise one, in great secrecy I tell you a hidden thing: it seems that the Son of the Lord of Vraja, who was in Vraja, has appeared here."²⁰

10.2. There is no one in the town of Nadia who does not pine for His qualities; Srivasa, Murari and all the others do not live without His darshan.

10.3. The resident of Shantipur, the ascetic Advaita, is constantly here, and with what zeal He tells of His sweet qualities to whomever He meets!

10.4. Ah, will there ever be another such wondrous youth? Make Gorachand, Narahari's all, the necklace of your throat."

19. GPT1 — p. 68, no. 21 (vibhasa; scan, PDF p. 327); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 21 (catalogue: NG-011). GCC — chapter 5, pada 2, marked "someone says" (kopyāha); the address there is "listen, O worthy one, O wise one" (śuna ohe sati he sumati), that is, apparently to his wife. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Srivasa, Murari and Advaita, "who do not live without His darshan", are a sign of the GCC frame (Gaura's morning among His associates in Navadvipa after His return from Gaya); the "youth" here is the young Gaura.

20. The old man guesses the truth: Sri Gauranga is Krishna Himself, the Son of Nanda, the Lord of Vraja (CC Adi 1-4); "secret" — because in this incarnation the Lord hides His divinity (the "concealed" avatara of the Kali-yuga, Bhag. 7.9.38).

11. Narahari — "śuna ohe sati nadīyā basati..." (GPT1 p. 68, no. 22; GCC)

Another old man says to his wife: "Not in vain have I lived in Nadia — in my old age Providence has been merciful: I have gazed my fill at Nimai; a moment without Him, and my soul weeps. Worship the gods, make vows for His welfare, reward the astrologers; go with Narahari to Shachi's house and perform auspicious rites." Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.²¹

- 11.1. "Listen, good wife: my life in Nadia has been crowned with fruit;
in my old age Providence has been merciful — there is no end to my happiness.
- 11.2. With these two eyes I have gazed my fill at Nimaichand, the son of Shachi; not seeing Him for half a moment, my soul always weeps bitterly.
- 11.3. May I die taking His misfortunes upon myself: I have never seen or heard of anyone like Him;²² worship the gods with various rites and make vows for His welfare.
- 11.4. Generously reward the astrologers so as to propitiate the planets; go with Narahari to Shachi's house and perform auspicious rites there."

21. GPT1 — pp. 68–69, no. 22 (vibhasa; scan, PDF pp. 327–328); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 22. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-266). GCC — chapter 5, pada 3, marked "and another [says]" (kopi ca). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. On the prayers to the gods for the Lord see note 12.

22. "To die taking His misfortunes upon oneself" (bālāi laiā mari) — a Bengali expression of tender love: "may all His troubles fall on me".

12. Narahari — "āju śubhakṣaṇe pohāila niśi..." (GPT1 p. 69, no. 23; GCC)

An auspicious dawn: the people of Nadia run to Shachi's house to see Gaurangachand; Gora sits in the middle of the courtyard, surrounded by His associates like the moon by the stars; all have forgotten themselves and cannot take their eyes off His face. Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.²³

- 12.1. Today at an auspicious hour the night has ended;
the people of Nadia are immersed in bliss.
- 12.2. To see Gaurangachand with love, all come running to Shachi's house.
- 12.3. In the middle of the courtyard Gora is shining, the stealer of the hearts and eyes of all the world.
- 12.4. On all sides His associates shine —
He among them like the moon among the stars; but what is that comparison!
- 12.5. No one remembers anything — everyone's eyes are fixed on that face.
- 12.6. What can Narahari tell with only one mouth?
Each rejoices in his own rasa.

23. GPT1 — p. 69, no. 23 (vibhasa; scan, PDF p. 328); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 23 (catalogue: NG-012, wrongly as no. 13). GCC — the first pada of chapter 6, devoted to the love of the women in vatsalya ("morning pastimes": the love of the elderly women). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

13. Narahari — "advaita-gharaṇī sītā ṭhākuraṇī..." (GPT1 p. 69, no. 24; GCC)

Sita Thakurani, Advaita's wife, gazes unblinking at Gaura's smile; remembering His new deeds, she becomes as she was before, weeps, carefully instructs Shachi, blesses and praises. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.²⁴

- 13.1. Advaita's wife, Sita Thakurani — the very embodiment of rasa — with unblinking eyes gazes at the beautiful smile on Gaura's face.
- 13.2. Thinking and thinking of His new deeds, she became just as she was before;²⁵ unable to restrain herself — streams of tears flow from both her eyes.
- 13.3. So many words arise in her heart, her mind is faint with tenderness; and with care she gives Shachi instructions on what to do.
- 13.4. Blessing without end, she praises [Him] — there is no limit to her happiness.
Narahari says: who has the power to understand all these deeds?

24. GPT1 — p. 69, no. 24 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 328); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 24. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-267). GCC — chapter 6, pada 2. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Sita Thakurani — the wife of Advaita Acharya; according to CC Adi 13, she came with gifts to bless the newborn Lord.

25. "As before" (pūraba pāra) — apparently as in the days of His appearance, when she first came to the Child (CC Adi 13); another reading is possible — as in the former (Krishna-)lila.

14. Narahari — "śrībāsa-banītā ati sucaritā..." (GPT1 p. 69, no. 25; GCC)

*Srivasas wife, tenderness incarnate, chaste and modest, her face covered with the hem of her cloth, stands beside Sita and gazes at Gaura, who sits in the middle of the courtyard among His dear associates; Malini floats in the ocean of His beauty. Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*²⁶

- 14.1. Srivasas wife, virtuous, like tenderness itself in bodily form, always modest, chaste, devoted to her husband — there is none like her in the world.
- 14.2. Her whole matchless body has blossomed with joy; half covering her face with the hem of her cloth, she stands beside Sita and cannot take her eyes off [Him], rejoicing at heart.
- 14.3. In the middle of the courtyard, surrounded by His dear associates, sits Gora;
His beautiful moonlike face flashes, and His body is like gold.
- 14.4. What can I say of all these ever-new [wonders]? Malini floats in the ocean of that beauty.²⁷
May Narahari Dasa die warding off misfortune from this wondrous love!

26. GPT1 — pp. 69–70, no. 25 (vibhasa; scan, PDF pp. 328–329); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 25 (catalogue: NG-013, wrongly as no. 15). GCC — chapter 6, pada 3 (the editor of the GCC marked the name "mālyānī" with a question mark). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

27. Malini (mālyānī = mālīnī) — the wife of Srivasa Pandita, in Krishna-lila the nurse Ambika (Gaura-ganoddesh-dipika); in Navadvipa she cared for the Lord with motherly love.

15. Narahari — "rajanī-prabhāte śacīdebī cite..." (GPT1 p. 70, no. 26; GCC)

*At dawn Shachi, weeping with joy, clasps Sita's feet and begs: "Be gracious to Nimai, bless Him with a long life; this child is the apple of my eye; let Him stay at home and give up His restlessness; after Vishvarupa He is my life — let there be no separation." Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*²⁸

- 15.1. At dawn there is no end to the joy in the heart of Shachi-devi; gazing at that face, she cannot restrain herself — tears flow from her eyes.
- 15.2. Clasping Sita's feet, she earnestly speaks sweet words:
"All my hope is in you, O revered one: I do not know what is good and what is bad.
- 15.3. Regarding Nimaichand as your own, be always gracious to Him; give such a blessing that He may live long and happily.

15.4. I have no one — what more shall I ask? — this child is the apple of my eye; make it so that He always stays at home, giving up His restless ways.

15.5. And I say more: [Vishvarupa is gone] — now this Nimai is my life and soul; give me this boon: that there be not half a moment of separation."²⁹

15.6. Having said much more like this, she quickly performs auspicious rites.

What can Narahari tell with one mouth of the incomparable love of the mother?

28. GPT1 — p. 70, no. 26 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 329); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 26. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-268). GCC — chapter 6, pada 4 (GCC scan, p. 60). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Shachi's fear that her younger son too will leave home like Vishvarupa — CB Adi 7.

29. Vishvarupa, the Lord's elder brother, took sannyasa and left home (CB Adi 7; CC Adi 15). In the GCC the line reads differently: "...Vishvarupa — this is my Nitai, my life and soul" (nitāi instead of nimāi) — Shachi sees her elder son in Nityananda (cf. Shachi's dream of her two sons, Krishna and Balarama — CB Madhya 8; cf. GPT no. 40, where Nitai loves Nimai as Balarama loved Krishna). Translated according to the GPT.

16. Narahari — "śacīra ālaya ālo haiyāche..." (GPT1 p. 70, no. 27; GCC)

*The elderly women of Navadvipa stand in Shachi's courtyard and gaze at Nimai; each prays for Him: one gives Him all her merit, others will worship Shiva, the Ganga, Chandi, Lakshmi — that He may live long, not leave Nadia, never go abroad to earn money, and be rich; their love for Him is stronger than for their own sons; "may we see this boy in Nadia birth after birth". Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*³⁰

16.1. Shachi's house is full of light — what can I say of such happiness!
The elderly women stand there and gaze, rejoicing at heart.

16.2. One says: "Ah, the lamp of the family, Nimai, the treasury of virtues, has come and appeared to make our eyes fruitful."

16.3. Another says: "Ah, may Shachi's son always be well!
I have given Him all my merit — may He escape many thorns."

16.4. Another says: "Ah, for His sake I shall worship the Lord of Kailasa, that He may live long and stay like this in Nadia."

16.5. Another says: "Ah, every day I shall worship the Ganga and ask for a boon:
may Shachi's darling live joyfully in His own home with His own people."³¹ 16.6. Another says: "Worshipping Chandi, I shall ask for what is in my heart:

may He never go abroad to earn money."

16.7. Another says: "Ah, I worship Lakshmi, and there is a reason for it:
may He become very rich without effort and never know want."

16.8. Another says: "Ah, and listen to this too — I do not understand what goes on in my heart:
a love arises for Him a hundred times stronger than for my own son."

16.9. Another says: "Ah, I leave my house and come here for His sake — and I do not know how my soul endures it when I must leave even for a moment."

16.10. Another says: "Ah, fortunate Shachi performed many pious deeds — that is why she obtained this Moon of Nadia, the treasure of life for all."

16.11. Another says: "Ah, say what you will, I ask only this of the Creator:
that birth after birth I may see this boy in Nadia."

16.12. Thus, seized by love, they speak without end.

Narahari says: have I the power to tell of the love of them all?

30. GPT1 — pp. 70–71, no. 27 (yatharaga; scan, PDF pp. 329–330); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 27. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-269). GCC — chapter 6, pada 5. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. On the prayers to the gods for the Lord — note 12: this is vatsalya, not independent worship of the demigods; Chandi is the goddess Durga. Lakshmi, to whom the woman prays, is in Gaura-lila His eternal consort Herself (Lakshmipriya).

31. An unwitting sadness which the poet puts into these wishes: the Lord would later go "abroad" — to East Bengal (CB Adi 14; CC Adi 16) — and would take sannyasa, leaving home (CB Madhya 26–28).

17. Narahari — "āju ki ānanda śrīśacī-bhabane..." (GPT1 p. 71, no. 28; GCC)

*Dawn in Shachi's house: Vishvambhara sits among His dear associates and gives happiness to each in his own bhava; the old men and women, faint with tenderness, weep as they gaze at His face and tell one another of His deeds. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*³²

17.1. What joy there is today in the house of Sri Shachi at the end of the night!

Among His dear associates Vishvambhara shines in a charming pose.

17.2. Whatever one's bhava, in that bhava He responds, and He makes everyone happy;³³ never have I seen such an artist, a jewel of qualities, enchanting the world.

17.3. All the old men and women are faint under the weight of tenderness; gazing and gazing at that moonlike face, no one can keep his composure.

17.4. Tears flow unceasingly from their eyes, bliss is in the depths of their hearts; and again they tell one another the deeds of Gauranga, the life of Narahari.

32. GPT1 — p. 71, no. 28 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 330); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 28 (catalogue: NG-014). GCC — chapter 6, pada 6 ("bṛddha naranārī"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

33. Cf. Bhagavad-gita 4.11: "As they surrender to Me, so I reciprocate with them" — the Lord responds to each in his own rasa.

18. Narahari — "nadīyāra ati puṇyabatī patibratā-gaṇera..." (GPT1 p. 71, no. 29; BR)

*The pious married women of Nadia think more of Shachi's son than of their own sons: as soon as the night ends, they go to Him with trays of gifts, see Him playing on His mother's lap, take Him in their arms and forget themselves. Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave).*³⁴

18.1. What a disposition of heart the pious women of Nadia, devoted to their husbands, have!

Their thoughts are not on their own sons — ceaselessly they speak of the deeds and ways of Shachi's son.

18.2. Seeing that the night is ending, they disregard their beds — they cannot hold back even for half a moment; filling trays with various delicacies, in rows they carry them to the Moon of Nadia.

18.3. As soon as they enter Shachi's house, an ocean of joy surges in their hearts;
they all see: on His mother's lap sits Gora, the Moon of Gokula, playing.

18.4. Their eyes are soothed, and the women's souls — taking Him in their arms, they forget their bodies.

Narahari says: ah, ah, how beautifully this love was fashioned!

34. GPT1 — p. 71, no. 29 (vibhasa; scan, PDF p. 330); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 29. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-270). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 771; ed. 1960, vv. 1000–1003): Ishana says that the women of Navadvipa used to come here at dawn to see Gaurachandra, and quotes the pada (immediately after no. 3). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the GCC. B. This is love in vatsalya (the women are mothers, the Lord an infant in Shachi's arms), not the nagari motif.

19. Narahari — "śuna śuna prāṇasakhi tomāre baliye go..." (GPT1 p. 72, no. 30; GCC)

*A woman of Navadvipa says to her friend: "Blessed is life in Nadia: in Treta there was Kaushalya, in Dvapara Yashoda, in Kali fortunate Shachi; blessed is Jagannatha Mishra; Shachi is like the Mother of the world: who else could have borne so many childish pranks? Some god has shown mercy — now Nimai has become good, but He was a dreadful scamp." Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*³⁵ 19.1. "Listen, listen, dear friend, I tell you: blessed is life in this Nadia!

In the Treta-yuga there was queen Kaushalya, in the Dvapara Yashoda, and in the Kali-yuga fortunate Shachi.³⁶

19.2. Blessed is Jagannatha Mishra, known to all the world — there is no limit to his holy merit; and his wife, devoted to her husband and full of tenderness — she who has such a son, Nimai.

19.3. Truly I would call her the Mother of the world: who else has such a nature?

Who could bear so many childish pranks? There is none like her in the world.

19.4. I do not know what god has shown mercy — that is why all is well now; otherwise, you know, Nimai, the life of Narahari, was a dreadful scamp."

35. GPT1 — p. 72, no. 30 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 331); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 30. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-271; the first line in catalogue row NG-015 had mixed it with no. 31). GCC — chapter 6, pada 7, marked "a certain [woman] says" (kācidāha). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The words "now all is well, but He was a scamp" show the GCC frame: the women recall the childhood of Gaura, who is already a youth (cf. note 8).

36. Kaushalya — the mother of Rama; Yashoda — the mother of Krishna in Vraja; Shachi — the mother of Gaura in the Kali-yuga. Chakravarti places her in the line of the Lord's eternal mothers.

20. Narahari — "nimāicāṁḍera kathā tomāre baliye go..." (GPT1 p. 72, no. 31; GCC)

*Another recalls: "Nimai is the chief of scamps: born on the full moon of Phalguna during an eclipse, He cried wildly and would not take the breast; only the great ascetic of Shantipur, who knows the nature of this child, by some trick got Him to suck. I do not fear what people say: from His very birth He has been a great scamp." Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*³⁷

20.1. "I'll tell you about Nimaichand: Nimai is the chief of scamps; such obstinacy I have never seen anywhere else — truly blessed are His father and mother!

20.2. On the full moon of Phalguna, at the time of the eclipse, having been born, He cried wildly;³⁸ however they tried, the child would not take the breast; seeing this, everyone was frightened.

20.3. The resident of Shantipur, the great ascetic Gosani, who knows the nature of this child —

I do not know by what trick He got Him to suck the breast — and everyone calmed down.³⁹

20.4. Let them say what they like — I am not afraid, I have judged it so in my heart:

the treasure of Narahari's life will be a great scamp — it began from His very birth."

37. GPT1 — p. 72, no. 31 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 331); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 31 (catalogue: NG-015). GCC — chapter 6, pada 8, marked "and another [says]" (anyā ca). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

38. "Having been born" — the author's word; the Lord is not born as conditioned souls are: by His own will He appears from the womb of Shachi, as Krishna from the womb of Devaki (Bhag. 10.3; CC Adi 13). His appearance on the full moon of the month of Phalguna during a lunar eclipse, when everyone was chanting the name of Hari — CC Adi 13; CB Adi 3.

39. "The great ascetic of Shantipur" — Advaita Acharya. According to the Advaita-prakasha, the newborn would not take the breast until He heard the holy name; in Chakravarti, Advaita calms the Child "by some means". The Infant's crying stilled by the name of Hari — CC Adi 13, 14; CB Adi 4.

21. Narahari — "parāṇa nimāi mora khēpā baṛa baṭe go..." (GPT1 p. 72, no. 32; GCC)

*A woman recalls: little Nimai, all covered in dust, was crawling about the courtyard, called His mother, climbed into her arms and suddenly burst into inconsolable sobs, struggled, and no one could calm Him; one woman in despair clapped her hands and said "Hari" — and at once He fell silent, laughed and hugged her neck; all sang "Hari, Hari", and He, not yet able to stand, danced holding His mother's hand. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁴⁰

- 21.1. "Nimai, my life, is a great scamp, it's true: one day I saw with my own eyes:
His wondrous little body all grey with dust, He was crawling on all fours about the courtyard.
- 21.2. With a smile on His beautiful moonlike face He called: 'Mama!' — and at once Shachi came running; having climbed into her arms, He suddenly burst into inconsolable sobs — seeing it, one's heart broke.
- 21.3. However she tried, He would not be soothed — again and again He threw Himself about;
'What has happened, what has happened?' — the pious lady wept; no one could stay calm.
- 21.4. Just then a woman in despair clapped her hands and said: 'Hari!'
Hearing this, the restless child stopped crying and, laughing, hugged her neck.
- 21.5. All rejoiced and sang: 'Hari, Hari!' — and Nimai climbed down from her arms;
He could not yet stand, but, holding His mother's hand, He danced merrily.
- 21.6. Why He had cried, no one understood — everyone just wondered to themselves.
That is how Nimai, the life of Narahari, knows how to play His pranks."⁴¹

40. GPT1 — pp. 72–73, no. 32 (yatharaga; scan, PDF pp. 331–332); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 32 (catalogue: NG-016). GCC — chapter 6, pada 9. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The same pada is printed in the GPT a second time — p. 76, no. 42, raga vibhasa (catalogue: NG-023), in a shortened and altered form: without the episode of the name of Hari (lines 21.3b–21.4a are merged into one: "however she tried, He would not be soothed — laughing, He hugged her neck"), with an added line "all the townspeople were enchanted, seeing that wondrous form" and the ending "...knows how to play"; the variants are in the VAR, and it is not translated separately. The Infant's crying stilled by the name of Hari — CC Adi 14; CB Adi 4 (the Lord cries, and the women, clapping their hands, sing "Hari").

41. "Play His pranks" (khēpāmi) — on the lips of those who love Him this is an affectionate word; the meaning of the lila, according to the CB and CC: the Lord cries so that everyone will sing the name of Hari.

22. Narahari — "nimāi cañcala khēpā kichui nā māne go..." (GPT1 p. 73, no. 33; GCC)

*A woman recalls: holding the hem of His mother's cloth, the little one was walking about the courtyard, saw His shadow and began to play with it, and there lay a snake — He lay down on its terrible hood; all ran up in horror, the snake tried to slip away, and He caught it again; Shachi carried Him off in her arms; then a bird flew by — "Catch it for Me!" — and He wept bitterly until He Himself forgot it. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁴²

- 22.1. "Nimai is restless and a scamp, He heeds nothing; listen to what happened one day:
holding the hem of His mother's cloth, He was walking about the courtyard — and saw His own shadow there.
- 22.2. Letting go of the hem, He began to play with His shadow, and there was a snake; lying down on its terrible hood — what bliss! — He feared nothing at all."⁴³
- 22.3. Crying 'Alas, alas!' all came running; the snake tried to slip away, and He caught it again;
everyone trembled, and Shachi in distress carefully took Him up in her arms.

- 22.4. Just then a bird flew past — how charmingly He looked at it!
 'Catch it for Me!' He said again and again, and wept, His arms around His mother's neck.
- 22.5. From His eyes, two streams like a necklace of sapphires: the kohl was washed away; that moonlike little face grew dim — can one bear to look at it?
- 22.6. Whatever anyone said — He would not yield to anyone's words; one's heart broke hearing His crying;
 and then the child, the life of Narahari, forgot it Himself, and His heart grew calm."

42. GPT1 — p. 73, no. 33 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 332); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 33. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-272). GCC — chapter 6, pada 10. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

43. The snake in the courtyard of Mishra's house, on whose coils the crawling Infant lay down — CB Adi 4; BR 12 (ed. 1960, vv. 982–983): "that is why Ananta-deva passed along this road". It is Ananta-Shesha, the Lord's couch, come to serve Him; that is why the Child knows no fear.

23. Narahari — "soṇāra nimāi mora parāṇa-putali go..." (GPT1 p. 73, no. 34; GCC)

*A woman recalls: if Nimai is not given what He wants — there is trouble; once, holding His mother's hem, He cried and begged for butter and rolled in the dust; Shachi brought butter from somewhere, He ate it and said: "I am a cowherd's son, nothing but this pleases Me"; when they laughingly asked Him: "Which cowherd's, then?" — He ran away, and Shachi said in embarrassment: "Well, well." Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁴⁴

- 23.1. "Golden Nimai, the doll of my soul — are there such games anywhere in the world!
 Whatever He wants — if it is not given, there is trouble: no one can soothe Him.
- 23.2. One day Nimai, holding the hem of His mother's cloth, was crying: 'Give Me butter!'
 The more they tried to soothe Him, the more He rolled in the dust — He could not calm down for a moment.
- 23.3. I do not know where His mother brought butter from, but she put it in Nimai's hands;
 having eaten the butter, He says: 'I am a cowherd's son; nothing but this pleases Me.'⁴⁵
- 23.4. Looking into His face, we laughed and asked: 'Which cowherd's little son are You, then?'
 Hearing this, the child — the life of Narahari — ran away, and Shachi said in embarrassment:
 'Well, well!'"

44. GPT1 — p. 73, no. 34 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 332); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 34 (catalogue: NG-017). GCC — chapter 6, pada 11. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

45. The Lord lets slip the truth about Himself: He is Krishna, the son of the cowherd Nanda, who loves butter (cf. no. 10 and note 20). Shachi is embarrassed: a brahmana's son calls himself the son of a cowherd; by the will of yogamaya her motherly love does not let her reflect on these words.

24. Narahari — "ekadina nirjane nimāi ghare bule go..." (GPT1 p. 73, no. 35)

*Three wonders of childhood: Shachi sees in the house footprints with the marks of a flag, a vajra and a goad — Mishra says these are the footprints of their household Deity Gopala; another day Shachi hears the sound of a flute and the name "Radha" pouring from Nimai's mouth; a third time two thieves carry Nimai off for His ornaments, but, deluded, return to Shachi's house, leave Him and flee. Yatharaga. Attribution: not established — the pada is neither in the GCC (although it stands in the middle of its cycle) nor in the BR or other witnesses; the metre is uneven, the refrain "go" is placed carelessly — perhaps a later imitation of the cycle.*⁴⁶

- 24.1. One day, when Nimai was wandering alone about the house, Shachi saw wondrous footprints; very secretly, calling Mishra Purandara into the house, she shows him these footprints.

- 24.2. Mishra sees in the footprints a flag, a vajra, a goad and other marks; the best of the Mishras ponders within himself and secretly says to Shachi: "These are the footprints of our household Deity Gopala."⁴⁷
- 24.3. Another day Shachi hears: from Nimai's mouth pours the sound of a flute, and in it the words "Radha, Radha"; seeing such play, Shachi fell silent from fear.⁴⁸
- 24.4. Another day two thieves, coveting His ornaments, carried Nimai off; "Nimai, Nimai!" Shachi calls aloud and weeps; they search for Him everywhere.
- 24.5. Meanwhile the two thieves, bewildered by some illusion, taking Shachi's house for their own, came back there, set the child down from their shoulders onto the ground and hastily ran away.⁴⁹
- 24.6. Having regained their lost treasure, all rejoiced, but could understand nothing; seeing the plight of the thieves, Narahari began to smile slyly.

46. GPT1 — pp. 73–74, no. 35 (yatharaga; scan, PDF pp. 332–333); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 35. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-273). It is not in the GCC: in chapter 6 the pada "soṇāra nimāi" (no. 23) is followed immediately by "śunaye nimāira kathā" (no. 25). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. C. The pada retells all three episodes closely following the Chaitanya-bhagavata (Adi 4–5).

47. Footprints with the marks of a flag (dhvaja), a vajra (thunderbolt) and a goad (ankusha) — the marks on the soles of Bhagavan. In CB Adi 4, Jagannatha Mishra and Shachi, seeing these footprints, decided that their household Bala-Gopala had walked about the house, and worshipped Him.

48. The sound of the flute and the name of Radha in the child's mouth are signs that Gaura is Krishna Himself and His heart is full of Radha; Shachi, out of motherly love, is frightened, without reflecting on her son's majesty. This episode is not in the CB.

49. "Bewildered by an illusion" (ki bhule bhuli) — according to CB Adi 4, the thieves were confused by the Lord's power (vishnu-maya) and, wandering, came back to the house of Jagannatha Mishra. The Lord Himself is not subject to it: it is His energy, which He directs for the sake of His lila.

25. Narahari — "śunaye nimāira kathā ekadina sukhe go..." (GPT1 p. 74, no. 36; GCC)

*Shachi, so that Nimai may become calmer, worships a god with offerings; Nimai runs up from somewhere, eats the offering and laughingly says: "I am the God of gods, why do you not worship Me?" Shachi chases Him in fear, afraid that something may happen to her son, and He, sitting on His father's lap, complains: "Mother won't give Me anything to eat"; the father rejoices. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁵⁰

- 25.1. Listen to this about Nimai: one day Shachi-ma joyfully, with various offerings, so that restless Nimai might become good, was diligently worshipping a deity.
- 25.2. Just then He, running in from somewhere — no one even noticed — ate the offering and, laughing, says: "I am the God of gods; why do you not worship Me?"⁵¹
- 25.3. Crying "Alas, alas!" Shachi chases Him, a great fear in her heart; in distress she thinks: "What if something happens to Nimai!"
- 25.4. And meanwhile the child, sitting on Mishra's lap, says: "Mother won't give Me anything to eat." Hearing the words of Nimai, the life of Narahari, the father feels great joy in his heart.

50. GPT1 — p. 74, no. 36 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 333); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 36 (catalogue: NG-018). GCC — chapter 6, pada 12. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

51. Cf. Lochana Dasa: Nimai eats the offering to the goddess Shashthi and tells His mother that worship of Him, like watering the root, satisfies all the gods (Chaitanya-mangala, Adi-khanda; Bhag. 4.31.14). The Lord is the God of gods, and all the demigods are His servants; here He reveals this in jest, and Shachi out of love fears only for Him.

26. Narahari — "e mora nimāicāṁḍa khāite cāhile go..." (GPT1 p. 74, no. 37; GCC)

*A woman tells: let Nimai ask for food and you delay a moment — in anger He smashes the house and spoils everything; scold Him — it gets twice as bad; He fears neither father nor mother, the neighbours cannot restrain Him, He fears only Vishvarupa; He roams Nadia alone, gets into other people's houses and everywhere makes the children cry. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁵²

26.1. "This Nimaichand of mine — if He asks for food and you delay even a moment, in great anger He smashes the house and the doors, spoils and scatters everything.

26.2. Say anything to Him — He plays up twice as much; He fears neither father nor mother; none of the neighbours can restrain Him — He fears only Vishvarupa.⁵³ 26.3. I have never seen such a boy anywhere: He wanders alone through Nadia, slips unnoticed into anybody's house and playfully gets up to all sorts of things.

26.4. Wherever He goes, He makes the children cry — what can their mothers say?
At the doings of Vishvambhara, the life of Narahari, who in Nadia does not tremble?"

52. GPT1 — p. 74, no. 37 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 333); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 37 (catalogue: NG-019). GCC — chapter 6, pada 13. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Nimai's childhood pranks in Navadvipa and the neighbours' complaints — CB Adi 6; CC Adi 14.

53. His elder brother Vishvarupa (see note 29); according to CB Adi 7, Nimai loved and obeyed him.

27. Narahari — "ekadina nimāi prabeśi grhamājhe go..." (GPT1 p. 74, no. 38)

*Nimai mixed together in the house rice, dal, salt, oil, yogurt, milk, butter and ghee; His mother ran after Him with a stick, and He sat down on a heap of discarded pots; "Fie, get down, it is impure!" — "How can a pot in which bhoga was cooked for Vishnu be impure? The impurity is in your mind"; the astonished mother bathed Him and took Him in her arms: "This child is not a child, but Hari of Vaikuntha." Yatharaga. Attribution: not established — the pada is neither in the GCC (although it stands in the middle of its cycle) nor in the BR or other witnesses; the metre is uneven, the refrain "go" drops out — perhaps a later imitation.*⁵⁴

27.1. One day Nimai got into the house and made a great deal of mischief:
He mixed together rice, dal, salt, oil, yogurt, milk, butter and ghee.

27.2. Unable to bear His wildness, His mother, a stick in one hand, ran after Nimai, and the child raced ahead of her.

27.3. Where a heap of discarded pots lay, there Nimai sat down on top;
Shachi says: "Fie, fie, my son, leave that impurity, come here — I'll bathe You and take You home."⁵⁵

27.4. The child replies: "A pot in which bhoga was cooked for Vishnu — how can it be impure?
The impurity is in your mind; I see everything as pure; tell Me, Mother, what in the world is impure?"⁵⁶

27.5. Hearing words of truth from the child's mouth, the mother was amazed, bathed Him and took Him in her arms.

"This child is no child: your son is Hari who dwells in Vaikuntha," says Narahari.

54. GPT1 — pp. 74–75, no. 38 (yatharaga; scan, PDF pp. 333–334); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 38 (catalogue: NG-020). It is not in the GCC: there the pada "e mora nimāicāṁḍa" (no. 26) is followed immediately by "nimāicāṁḍera e carita" (no. 28). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. C.

55. Earthen pots in which food had once been cooked were thrown away as ritually impure; cf. CB Adi 6, CC Adi 14.

56. Cf. CC Adi 14 (the Lord, sitting on the discarded pots, answers His mother; Krishnadasa Kaviraja explains that in these words He playfully speaks like Dattatreya) and CB Adi 6; Murari 1.6. The meaning is not that the distinction between pure and impure is altogether illusory: the Lord is Vishnu Himself, everything connected with service to Him is pure, and He Himself is defiled by nothing.

28. Narahari — "nimāicāṁḍera e carita kata kaba go..." (GPT1 p. 75, no. 39; GCC)

*At bathing time on the bank of the Suradhuni Nimai gives neither men nor women any peace and quarrels with those carrying offerings to the gods; but when they complain of Him to Shachi and Mishra, He is virtue itself; all marvel: as Kanu was in the house of Nanda, so is He in the house of Shachi — it must be He. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁵⁷

28.1. "How much can I tell of such doings of Nimaichand! At bathing time on the bank of the Suradhuni neither women nor men can find any peace — such havoc He wreaks there.

28.2. Whoever goes with offerings, carefully carrying them to worship a deity — with all of them He quarrels without number: what does He not do in Nadia!

28.3. But if someone complains to Shachi and Mishra — then what good manners He has! Everyone's merriment grows: seeing Him, one loses one's wits.⁵⁸

28.4. Such as were the pranks of Kanu in the house of Nanda, such I see in the house of Shachi; Nimai, the life of Narahari — it must be He Himself: otherwise who would act like this?"⁵⁹

57. GPT1 — p. 75, no. 39 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 334); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 39. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-274). GCC — chapter 6, pada 14. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Nimai's pranks on the ghats of the Ganga, the complaints of the brahmanas and the girls to Jagannatha Mishra, and Nimai's instant "good manners" — CB Adi 6.

58. According to CB Adi 6, when Mishra angrily went after his son to the Ganga, Nimai was already waiting at home — clean, without a trace of water or sand — and the accusers did not know what to say.

59. Kanu is Krishna; the poet sees in Nimai's childhood pranks the pranks of Krishna in Vraja: Gaura is Krishna Himself (cf. note 20).

Chapter 20. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — IV: the appearance of Gaura, the end of childhood, the samskaras and the betrothal

Continuation of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 20: a pada surveying Gaura's lila from the section "aishvarya and madhurya" (GPT 1.3); padas on the appearance of the Lord (section 2.1); the last padas of the section "Balya-lila" (2.2); the beginning of the section "Karnavedha and the wedding" (2.3) — the first tonsure and ear-piercing, the upanayana, the first meeting with Lakshmipriya by the Ganga, the news of the wedding and the addivasa (the wedding day follows in the next chapter). Almost all the padas of the chapter are quoted by Narahari Chakravarti in the 12th wave of the Bhakti-ratnakara, where Ishana shows Srinivasa the house of Jagannatha Mishra and tells what happened there (two are in Chakravarti's Gaura-charita-chintamani); one pada (no. 12) has not been found in any witness. According to Majumdar, the padas on the birth and childhood of Nimai known under the name "Narahari" are late: Narahari Sarakara did not see the Lord's childhood. Before translation the "Narahari" signatures in sections 1.3 and 2.1–2.3 were checked throughout in GPT1: the catalogue had missed five more padas of section 2.3 (here nos. 13 and 15, new rows NG-280, 281; NG-282...284 follow in the next chapter). The base text is GPT1 (doubtful places from the scan), collated with GPT2, the BR (eds. 1912 and 1960) and the Gaura-charita-chintamani (ed. 1947); PK, KGC, PS and the Gita-chandrodaya have been checked. On the "birth" of the Lord see note 4; on the childhood games as lila, note 2 of chapter 19; on the samskaras, note 26. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "śacīsuta gaurahari..." (GPT1 p. 26, section 1.3, no. 2; BR)

A survey of the lila: the son of Shachi appeared in Navadvipa and revealed sankirtana; He took sannyasa, remained in Nilachala and, intoxicated with Radhika's love, intoxicated the world with it; His associates are beside themselves with prema; the treasure unattainable even for the gods He gave to the world. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave).¹

- 1.1. The son of Shachi, Gaurahari, having descended in Navadvipa, displayed manifold pastimes: together with His dear associates He revealed sankirtana and increased the joy of all.
- 1.2. And then, in the dress of a sannyasi, the Lord wandered from land to land and, coming to Nilachala, remained there; intoxicated with Radhika's love, knowing neither day nor night, He intoxicated the whole world with that love.²
- 1.3. Nityananda who is Balarama, Advaita the abode of virtues, Gadadhara, Srivasa and all the rest, seeing this wondrous way, cannot keep their composure — ceaselessly overwhelmed with prema.
- 1.4. The treasure unattainable even for the gods He has, with effort, bestowed [on us] — may I die warding off all ill from such mercy!

The Lord Krishna-Chaitanya has blessed the age of Kali — Narahari Dasa sings His glory.

1. GPT1 — p. 26, section 1.3 ("aishvarya and madhurya of the Gaura-avatara"), no. 2 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 285); GPT2 — section 1.3, no. 2 (catalogue: NG-003). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 914; ed. 1960, vv. 3605–3608): Ishana, having told Srinivasa of the Lord's departure from Navadvipa to Puri, quotes this pada as a brief survey of His whole lila. Variant: the BR has "bilāilā" — "distributed", the GPT "milāilā" — "procured, bestowed". Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

2. In Puri the Lord is absorbed in the bhava of Radha longing for Krishna: it was to taste Her love that He appeared (CC Adi 4; Antya 14–20). Nityananda is Balarama Himself (1.3; CC Adi 5).

2. Narahari — "phālguna-pūrṇimā śubhakṣaṇe..." (GPT1 p. 59, section 2.1, no. 19; BR)

In the auspicious hour of the full moon of Phalguna Shachi, having given birth to a son, cannot gaze at Him enough; Jagannatha Mishra, hearing the news, floats in an ocean of happiness and performs the rites; the Ganga and the Earth forget their sorrows; with the rising of Gaurachandra the darkness of sin departs. Raga vasanta. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave).³

- 2.1. In the auspicious hour of the full moon of Phalguna Shachi, having given birth to a son, cannot take her eyes from Him.⁴
- 2.2. How many feelings rise in her heart at every moment! As if He were golden fresh butter, she dares not touch Him.
- 2.3. With what care she takes Him on her lap and sends word of the son's birth to the best of the Mishras.
- 2.4. Jagannatha, the crown of brahmanas, hearing of the birth of his son, floats in an ocean of happiness.
- 2.5. With what joy he hastens [to the son] — and, seeing the moonlike face, cannot contain himself.
- 2.6. Gathering his dear ones, he performs auspicious rites for the welfare of the son.
- 2.7. On all sides sounds "jaya, jaya"; all say: "Blessed, blessed are the father and the mother!"
- 2.8. Happiness grows in everyone's heart; the Suradhuni and the Earth forget all their sorrows.⁵
- 2.9. All ten directions have become bright; beasts, birds, trees and creepers — all have blossomed.
- 2.10. What more can Narahari say? With the rising of Gaurachandra the darkness of sin has gone.

3. GPT1 — p. 59, section 2.1 ("the appearance"), no. 19 (vasanta; scan, PDF p. 318); GPT2 — section 2.1, no. 19. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-276). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 764; ed. 1960, vv. 907–916): Ishana, showing Srinivasa the place of the Lord's appearance in the house of Jagannatha Mishra, quotes padas of Vasu Ghosha and Vrindavana Dasa on the birth and then — in a row — this one and the next four (nos. 3–5; between them a pada signed by Ghanashyama, GPT 2.1 no. 23, outside the appendix) and no. 6. Variant in the last line: the BR has "the darkness of suffering" (tāpa), the GPT "the darkness of sin" (pāpa). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The GPT1 footnotes to lines 2.8–2.9 (editor's notes) are not reproduced.

4. The poet speaks in the language of the lila: "gave birth to a son", "birth". But the Lord is not born as a conditioned soul is, by karma and in a material body: He appears (avirbhava) by His own will in His eternal form — as Krishna appeared before Devaki (Bhag. 10.3; Gita 4.6, 4.9; CC Adi 13–14). So the appearance of the Lord is understood by Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja and Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati; so too are all the padas on the "birth" in this chapter to be understood.

5. The Suradhuni ("the river of the gods") is the Ganga. The poet says that with the appearance of the Lord both the Ganga and the Earth, burdened with the sins of the age of Kali, forgot their sorrows: on the banks of the Ganga He will perform His pastimes, and the sins of the world will depart.

3. Narahari — "phālguna-pūrṇimā maṅgalera sīmā..." (GPT1 pp. 59–60, no. 20; BR)

The full moon of Phalguna: the Moon of Gokula has appeared, in every house of Nadia there is an ocean of joy; Shachi with her son on her lap in the birth-chamber; in the darkness of the eclipse crowds run to see the Child and forget themselves. Raga not stated (in the BR — dhanashi). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.⁶

- 3.1. The full moon of Phalguna — the summit of all blessings: the Moon of Gokula has appeared!
In the town of Nadia, in every house, an ocean of joy surges.

3.2. What merriment among them all!

Shachi-devi, taking her son on her lap, shines in the birth-chamber.

3.3. To see the Child they run from all sides — no one can restrain himself; in the darkness of the eclipse who can tell who is who? There is no counting the people coming.⁷

3.4. Gazing their fill at the sweetness of the Child, they forget their own bodies.

Narahari says: the son of Shachi reveals some new love!

6. GPT1 — pp. 59–60, no. 20 (no raga; scan, PDF pp. 318–319); GPT2 — section 2.1, no. 20. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-277). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 764–765; ed. 1960, vv. 917–920, "punardhānaśī"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 3.2 is the refrain (dhru).

7. The Lord appeared in the evening of the full moon of Phalguna, during a lunar eclipse, when by custom everyone was bathing in the Ganga and repeating the name of Hari (CC Adi 13; CB Adi 2–3; Murari 1.5). "The Moon of Gokula" is Krishna: Gaura is Krishna Himself, the Lord of Gokula.

4. Narahari — "parama śubha śacīgarbhe..." (GPT1 p. 60, no. 21; BR)

Gaura, the Lord of Gokula, in the womb of Shachi; the gods praise Him; on the night of the full moon, when Rahu had swallowed the moon, the Lord appeared, having first revealed His name; those entering Mishra's house, seeing the Child, lose their senses; the pride of Kali is crushed. Raga kamoda.

Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.⁸

4.1. In the womb of Shachi, in the supremely auspicious hour, abides Gaura — the Lord of Gokula; again and again the gods offer praises and bow down; the house brims with jubilation.

4.2. On the auspicious night of the Phalguna full moon, when Rahu had swallowed the rising moon — at such an hour the Lord appeared, having first revealed His name.⁹

4.3. "Jaya, jaya" resounds through the whole world, no one can restrain himself; those entering Mishra's house, beholding the Child, go mad with happiness.

4.4. They perform various auspicious rites, ever new; all desires are fulfilled.

Narahari says: the pride of mighty Kali is crushed.

8. GPT1 — p. 60, no. 21 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 319); GPT2 — section 2.1, no. 21. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-278). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 765; ed. 1960, vv. 921–924). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. "In the womb of Shachi" — on the appearance of the Lord see note 4.

9. During the eclipse all the people of Nadia, bathing, were repeating "Hari, Hari" — thus the Lord, before appearing, made the whole world sing His name (CC Adi 13). Rahu — according to the Puranas, the demon who swallows the moon at an eclipse.

5. Narahari — "jaya jaya jaya maṅgalaraba..." (GPT1 pp. 60–61, no. 22; BR)

*The night of the Phalguna full moon: from the womb of Shachi Gaura, the delight of Vraja, has appeared; His body flashes like steady lightning; the gods shower flowers, the kinnaras sing, the heavenly dancers dance; it is spring, the Malaya breeze blows, the waters of the Ganga surge; the poet is beside himself with the festivity in Mishra's house. Raga vasanta. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; ornate Vrajabuli with rhythmic syllables.*¹⁰

5.1. "Jaya, jaya, jaya!" — auspicious cries; the night of the Phalguna full moon shines anew:
from the womb of Shachi Gaura has appeared — the delight of Vraja.

The lovely body of the Child flashes — like steady lightning the colour of kunkuma;
His moonlike face gleams, sweetly shattering all composure.

5.2. Seeing the Lord's appearance, the gods with hosts of clouds shower from the sky garlands of flowers; their bodies are filled with great thrills.

How many longings in their hearts! Excitedly they sing of His lovely deeds; through the tears that flood their eyes, how many images they behold, in what rapture!

5.3. The kinnaras sing to a sweet sound, the mridanga softly plays:

"dhā-dhiki dhikitā dhik dhik dhikṣaṭak dhinnānā";

the heavenly dancers dance, enacting performances of every kind:

"uṭṭata kathai thai thai ti ai ai atennānā".¹¹

5.4. Pure and bright are all ten directions, gently blows the breeze from the Malaya hills, the flocks of cuckoos sound "kuhu" — spring, the king of seasons, is full of sweetness.

The waters of the river of the gods surge, joy spreads over the land of Nadia;

at the festivity in Mishra's house Narahari's heart is beside itself.

10. GPT1 — pp. 60–61, no. 22 (vasanta; scan, PDF pp. 319–320); GPT2 — section 2.1, no. 22. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-279). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 765–766; ed. 1960, vv. 925–928). Line 5.3: GPT1 has "nṛtyasura", the BR "nṛtyata sura" ("the heavenly ones dance") — translated after the BR; 5.4: GPT1 and GPT2 have "miśrabhubana", the BR "miśrabhabana" ("Mishra's house") — translated after the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

11. Kinnaras — heavenly singers. The syllables "dhā-dhiki...", "thai thai..." imitate the strokes of the mridanga and the dancers' counting (as in the dance padas, chapters 17–18).

6. Narahari — "bhubanamanacorā gokulapati gorā..." (GPT1 pp. 61–62, no. 24; BR)

*The birth festival: the women of Nadia come with trays of gifts, and with them, mingling with the humans, the wives of the gods; Sita-devi and Malini perform auspicious rites; the cowherd men and women, after their former nature, scatter curd in the courtyard and dance; the gods in the guise of cowherds dance with them; in Mishra's house is the custom of Nanda's house. Raga vasanta or tori. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹²

6.1. The Stealer of the world's hearts, the Lord of Gokula, Gorachand — in what an auspicious hour was He born!

How much happiness Shachi had when she saw her son's face — who else could tell it?

6.2. The women of the town of Nadia come in rows, bringing trays full of all kinds of gifts; and, richly adorned, the wives of the gods, mingling with the humans, cannot gaze at the Child enough.

6.3. Sri Sita-devi came and, entering the birth-chamber, rejoices at heart seeing the Child;

together with Malini and others, floating in merriment, she performs many auspicious rites.¹³

6.4. How many cowherd women, hundreds of cowherd men come in lovely attire, bringing curd;

all, their hearts overwhelmed, after their former nature scatter curd in the middle of the courtyard.

6.5. Clapping their hands, laughing, they dance splendidly; seeing this, the gods, taking the guise of cowherds, dance in the courtyard — who does not dance there? — again and again crying "jaya, jaya".¹⁴

6.6. So the instruments sound, such festivity is nowhere else: in Mishra's house is the custom of Nanda's house.

What can Narahari say? At the festival of the Lord's birth, for jubilation no one remembers anything.

12. GPT1 — pp. 61–62, no. 24 (vasanta or tori; scan, PDF pp. 320–321); GPT2 — section 2.1, no. 24 (catalogue: NG-004). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 765–766; ed. 1960, vv. 937–942, "punarvasanta—torī"), immediately after a pada of Ghanashyama (GPT 2.1 no. 23). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Signature "narahari ki kaba" (6.6).

13. Sita Thakurani, Advaita's wife, came to bless the newborn and brought gifts (CC Adi 13); Malini is Srivasa's wife (note 27 of chapter 19).

14. As at the festival of Krishna's birth in Nanda's house the cowherds scattered curd, milk and butter and danced (Bhag. 10.5), so here: the cowherds of Navadvipa act "after their former nature" (pūrvva svabhābete), that is, as the cowherds of Vraja. Cf. CB Adi 3 (the gods in human guise come to see the Child).

7. Narahari — "nimāicāṁḍera kathā ati aparūpa go..." (GPT1 p. 75, section 2.2, no. 40; GCC)

*One of the elderly women of Navadvipa about Nimai: where have His pranks gone — now He is grave, the pandits respect Him, the Vaishnavas are inseparable from Him; Nitai loves Him as Balai loved Krishna; Shachi is the very Queen of Vraja, Nimai and Nitai are the two stars of her eyes. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*¹⁵

7.1. "Wondrous are the ways of Nimaichand: now He is like a gracious deity of our family!

Where have all those pranks gone? Who else is as grave as He?

7.2. All the pandits living in Nadia — which of them does not respect Him?

Srivasas, Murari and all the Vaishnavas — none can bear to part from Him.

7.3. And my Nitai loves Him like His own life — as Balai loved Krishna;

it seems that very thing has appeared here again: nowhere have I seen the like.¹⁶

7.4. Blessed in this world is virtuous Shachi — it seems she is that very Queen of Vraja; Nimai and Nitai are the two stars of her eyes." Narahari offers himself to this love.

15. GPT1 — p. 75, section 2.2, no. 40 (yatharaga; scan, PDF p. 334); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 40 (catalogue: NG-021; in the GPT2 recognition the number was read as "70"). GCC — chapter 6, pada 15 (ed. 1947, printed pp. 65–66). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The pada continues the GCC cycle in which the people of Navadvipa come at dawn to Shachi's house and gaze at Gaura, returned from Gaya (chapter 19, nos. 4–28): "now" (ebe) is the time after Gaya, when Nityananda is already in Navadvipa and Srivasa and Murari are inseparable from the Lord. In line 7.3 the GCC has "kṛṣṇe yena karila balāi" ("as Balai [loved] Krishna"); the GPT "kṛṣṇa yena...", with the same sense.

16. Nityananda is Balarama, Krishna's elder brother in Vraja; Shachi is Yashoda (CC Adi 13; Adi 5). Shachi loved Nityananda as a son; cf. her dream in which Nimai and Nitai appear as Krishna and Balarama (CB, Madhya-khanda). "My Nitai" — the affectionate words of an elderly woman.

8. Narahari — "nadīyāra yata bṛddhanārīgaṇe..." (GPT1 pp. 75–76, no. 41; GCC)

*The elderly women of Nadia speak thus to one another, gaze at Gauranga's face, count themselves fortunate and bless Him. Yatharaga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC (the last pada of its 6th chapter).*¹⁷

8.1. Thus all the elderly women of Nadia speak to one another.

8.2. How wondrous is the way of them all! With what to compare it? They are full of tenderness.

8.3. Again and again gazing at the moonlike face of Gaurangachand, they count themselves fortunate.

8.4. How many times they bless Him, again and again! Narahari, hearing this, swims in happiness.

17. GPT1 — pp. 75–76, no. 41 (yatharaga; scan, PDF pp. 334–335); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 41 (catalogue: NG-022). GCC — chapter 6, pada 16 (printed p. 66): with it Chakravarti closes the chapter on the love of the women of Navadvipa in vatsalya. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The next one in GPT1, no. 42, is an abridged doublet of no. 21 of chapter 19 (NG-023) and is not translated.

9. Narahari — "nāco āre bāpa biśvambhara..." (GPT1 p. 76, no. 43; BR)

*The virtuous women, clapping their hands and saying "Hari-bol", coax little Vishvambhara to dance, promising butter and cream; He, looking at His mother, dances crying "Hari-bol"; the courtyard shines with His golden body. Raga tūdi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁸

9.1. "Dance, dear Vishvambhara! We will give You handfuls of butter, thickened milk and cream!"

- 9.2. The virtuous wives around say this tenderly to Nimaichand.
- 9.3. Saying "Hari, Hari-bol", all together clap their hands again and again.
- 9.4. Gora, looking at His mother, dances in various ways crying "Hari-bol".¹⁹
- 9.5. What a gentle smile on the moonlike face! It enchants the world, pouring out nectar in streams.
- 9.6. Lovely is the glance of His eyes; seeing the curves of His arms, who can stay calm?
- 9.7. What a sweet, sweet radiance! The courtyard gleams with the rays of His golden body.
- 9.8. Sweetly the belt of bells and the anklets jingle; Narahari offers himself to the rhythm of His feet.

18. GPT1 — p. 76, no. 43 (tudi; scan, PDF p. 335); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 43 (catalogue: NG-024). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 772; ed. 1960, vv. 1005–1012): "here is Nimai's wondrous dance: the women, clapping their hands, make Him dance" (v. 1004). In GPT1 the first word is "nāce" (a misprint?), in the BR "nāco" ("dance!"); translated after the BR. In 9.7 GPT1 has "hena aṅgera", the BR "hema-aṅgera" ("golden body") — after the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

19. Cf. CB Adi 4: when the Child cried, the women clapped their hands and sang "Hari", and He, quieted, danced — thus from infancy the Lord made everyone sing the holy name (cf. no. 21 of chapter 19).

10. Narahari — "āre mora soṇāra nimāi..." (GPT1 pp. 76–77, no. 44; BR)

*Shachi begs Nimai to play at home and not to roam about other people's courtyards: let the children come to Him, she will give Him whatever He wants; when He goes off with a band of rascals, her heart is not at rest. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²⁰

10.1. "Ah, my golden Nimai!

Do not leave Your own house for other people's courtyards — sit and play here.

10.2. The children will come to play with You — keep them all right here.

Whatever You want, I will bring You: what is lacking in my house?

10.3. If anyone calls You — say You are afraid: Your father forbids it.

When You go out of the house with a band of rascals — can a mother keep hold of her heart?

10.4. If You are out of my sight for a moment, my life will not stay in my body; Narahari knows my pain.

Heed Your mother, play at home — so that I may always see Your moonlike face."²¹

20. GPT1 — pp. 76–77, no. 44 (dhanashi; scan, PDF pp. 335–336); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 44 (catalogue: NG-025). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 772; ed. 1960, vv. 1014–1017): "here the mother, beside herself with tenderness, spoke to Nimai, looking at His face" (v. 1013). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 10.1 is the refrain (dhru) with the first line of the stanza.

21. The mother's fear for the Child is vatsalya, the pure love of the Lord's eternal mother (note 2 of chapter 19), like Yashoda's anxiety for Krishna.

11. Narahari — "raṅge nācaye śacīra bālā..." (GPT1 p. 77, no. 45; BR)

*Shachi's child dances merrily in the courtyard, grey with dust, clapping His hands and saying "Hari"; His mother gives Him cream; He whirls round, the hem of His dhoti trails on the ground, the bells and anklets jingle. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²²

11.1. Merrily dances Shachi's child, lighting up the world with His beauty.

11.2. His body surpasses a golden lotus; grey with dust — as if with flower pollen.

11.3. Lovely shine His dress and ornaments; saying "Hari", He claps His hands.

11.4. He smiles gently, sweetly and gracefully — who can keep his composure then?

11.5. How merrily He looks around on all sides! His mother gives Him handfuls of cream.

11.6. Striking poses, He whirls round again and again; the hem of His dhoti trails on the ground.

11.7. Lovely flashes the belt of bells; from it a ringing "jhini-ni".

11.8. On His feet the anklets jingle "jhunu-nu"; Narahari offers himself to them.

22. GPT1 — p. 77, no. 45 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 336); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 45 (catalogue: NG-026). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 775; ed. 1960, vv. 1049–1056), immediately after Vasu Ghosha's padas on Nimai's dance in the courtyard (PK 1151, 1161 — chapter 7). Not in PK (under Narahari's signature), KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. "Whirls" (ghume) — Vrajabuli, cf. Hindi "ghūmnā".

12. Narahari — "āji āṅginā para nadīyā bālaka saṅge..." (GPT1 p. 77, no. 46)

*Shachi's child plays in the courtyard with the boys of Nadia — like the moon among the stars; Shachi, beside herself with joy, kisses Him, wipes His sweat and fans Him; beside them stands the poet with a chamara. Raga mangala. Attribution: not established — the pada is in neither the BR nor the GCC nor any other witness; Vrajabuli; in the signature the poet himself serves in the lila (note 24).*²³

12.1. Today in the courtyard, with the boys of Nadia, Shachi's child plays merrily — as if amid a host of stars a single moon shines, lighting up all directions.

12.2. Taking various toys, all together they play various games;
smiles blossom on every face — as if a multitude of lotuses had opened at once.

12.3. Watching this play, Shachi, her heart overflowing, is beside herself with joy;
a hundred times in a moment, taking Vishvambhara in her arms, she kisses His moonlike face.

12.4. With the hem of her garment she wipes away His sweat and fans His holy body; and beside them, chamara in hand, stands the wretched Narahari Dasa.²⁴

23. GPT1 — p. 77, no. 46 (mangala; scan, PDF p. 336); GPT2 — section 2.2, no. 46 (catalogue: NG-275). Not in the BR, GCC, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. C. The following padas of the section in GPT1 — nos. 47–48 signed "Murari" (Majumdar considers them doubtful), no. 49 without Narahari's signature, no. 50 by Lochana Dasa — are not part of the appendix.

24. The poet places himself in the lila as a servant fanning the Lord with a chamara (a yak-tail whisk) — an image of inner service (manasi-seva) in meditation on the lila, usual for later Vaishnava poets; it is not a claim to have witnessed the Lord's childhood.

13. Narahari — "āju ki ānandamaya..." (GPT1 p. 79, section 2.3, no. 1; BR)

*Nimai's chudakarana (first tonsure): Shachi's house is full of people; Mishra, having adorned his son, performs the rites according to the Vedas and custom; the barber, having done his work, ties a yellow thread at the ears; the women rejoice, the brahmanas recite the Vedas, the bards compose praises. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²⁵

13.1. How joyful today! People throng to the shining house of Shachi:
a delight for all — in what a wondrous, auspicious hour Nimaichand's chudakarana is performed!

13.2. Having dressed Vishvambhara in divine clothes and ornaments and seated Him on a divine seat, Mishra carefully performs all that the Vedas enjoin and custom requires.²⁶

13.3. The worthy barber came and, having done his work, tied a yellow thread at the root of the ears;
the women raise jubilant cries — who does not cry "jaya"? Auspiciousness spread over the earth.²⁷

13.4. The brahmanas recite the Vedas, the bards compose verses of praise, the musicians play various instruments; all the dancers dance, the singers sing His pure glory — how much can Narahari tell?

25. GPT1 — p. 79, section 2.3 ("Karnavedha and the wedding"), no. 1 (dhanashi; scan, PDF p. 338); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 1. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-280). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 781; ed. 1960, vv. 1156–1159):

"here Mishra Purandara said to Shachi: Vishvambhara has reached the age for the chudakarana — and both, as the Vedas enjoin, performed the chudakarana of their son" (vv. 1154–1155). Line 13.1: GPT1 has "nimāicāmḍera cūrā, karmma ki apūrvva śubhakṣaṇe", the BR "cūrā-karmmādi apūrvva śubhakṣaṇe" — in sense the same: chuda-karma. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

26. The samskaras are the purificatory rites of a brahmana's life (chudakarana, karnavedha, upanayana and others). The Lord, Himself the goal of the Vedas, needs no purification: He accepts the samskaras following His lila in the form of a brahmana's son and setting an example for people. So Chakravarti too understands it: right after this pada the BR says that the Lord, full of consciousness and bliss, performs His lila like a human being — and the barber, before piercing His ears, saw that the holes were already there, but by the Lord's will told no one (vv. 1160–1161).

27. The yellow thread at the root of the ears is the mark for the ear-piercing (karnavedha), which was performed together with the chudakarana; hence the title of the GPT section "Karnavedha and the wedding". The women's jubilant cries (jayakāra, ulu) are an auspicious custom at Bengali family festivals.

14. Narahari — "āju nirupama gauracandra-cūrā..." (GPT1 p. 79, no. 2; BR)

*The same chudakarana: the wives of Navadvipa cry "ulu-lu" in jubilation, the brahmanas chant the Vedas, the sutas, magadhas and bandins compose tales, the musicians and dancers beat the rhythm; Mishra gives gifts to the supplicants, the gods in the sky cry "jaya". Raga belavali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; ornate Vrajabuli with rhythmic syllables.*²⁸

- 14.1. Today is the incomparable chudakarana of Gaurachandra as the Vedas enjoin: an auspicious celebration, the house is full of people;
the wives of Sri Navadvipa, by an incomparable custom, cry "ulu-lu-lu-lu-lu-lu" — what a joy for the ear!
- 14.2. The assembly of brahmanas shines; in many modes the Vedas resound, sweetly filling hearts with delight; the sutas, magadhas and bandins compose new tales of His deeds — reaching the ear, they steal the heart of the world.²⁹
- 14.3. The musicians on mridangas and other instruments play in many modes: "dhā-dhā dhilaṅga dhikhitaka dhinninā"; skilled singers sing in well-measured metres, the dancers dance beating out: "tattathai thai ti ai tinninā".
- 14.4. Thrilling all over, the jubilant Mishra, distributing many gifts, satisfies all the supplicants.
What can Narahari say? The gods, gazing at this great splendour, beside themselves, loudly cry "jaya, jaya" in the sky.

28. GPT1 — p. 79, no. 2 (belavali; scan, PDF p. 338); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 2 (catalogue: NG-027). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 782; ed. 1960, vv. 1163–1166), immediately after the account of the pierced ears (note 26). Variants: 14.1 GPT1 "de'", BR "deta"; 14.2 GPT1 "śrabaṇa pakṣagata", BR "śrabaṇapatha-gata" ("reaching the ear") — translated after the BR; 14.3 GPT1 "prabheda bhabī", BR "prabheda bhaṇi". Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. In the GPT1 signature the first letter of the name is cut off by the edge of the page ("...rahari").

29. Sutas, magadhas and bandins — court bards, singers of genealogies and panegyrists.

15. Narahari — "ki ānanda nadiyānagare..." (GPT1 pp. 79–80, no. 3; BR)

*The upanayana: all over Nadia the news that Shachi's son will receive the sacred thread; everyone hastens with gifts; Mishra gives his son the thread; Gaura in red cloth, with staff and bag, begs alms, and the heavenly women, mingling with the humans, and His associates give Him alms. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁰

- 15.1. What joy in the town of Nadia!

"The son of Sri Shachi-devi will receive the sacred thread!" — this news is in every house.

- 15.2. Who, beside himself with tenderness, does not hasten to Mishra's house with various gifts?
Mishra's incomparable house is full of people — whom will this splendour not enchant?
- 15.3. Mishra, in great joy, performs the rites according to the Vedas and gives Gorachand the sacred thread; lovely is the golden form: He wears a red cloth, in His hand a divine staff, on His shoulder a bag.³¹
- 15.4. The Lord merrily begs alms; seeing this, the heavenly women, mingling with the humans, give to Him; and the Lord's dear associates — with what merriment they put alms into His bag!
- 15.5. Who can recount all the auspicious rites, all the jubilant cries of the women?
The brahmanas chant the Vedas — who, hearing them, can keep his composure? The bards recite verses of praise.
- 15.6. Cries of "jaya, jaya" spread in all directions; dancing, singing, music of every kind.
Narahari Dasa says: the supplicants, having received fitting gifts, intoxicated with happiness, sing His glory.

30. GPT1 — pp. 79–80, no. 3 (kamoda; scan, PDF pp. 338–339); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 3. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-281; formerly its first line was confused with the wedding pada no. 11 "ki ānanda nadīyā-nagare | nimāira bibāhakathā...", NG-030). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 783; ed. 1960, vv. 1173–1178): "here Jagannatha Mishra resolved to give his son the sacred thread, fixed the day, called the relatives" (vv. 1170–1172). The next pada of GPT1, no. 4 (the upanayana: the Lord in the form of Vamana begs alms), is signed by Ghanashyama (outside the appendix); it is also in the BR (vv. 1179–1192). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

31. The red cloth, the staff and the alms-bag are the dress of a brahmachari at the upanayana; he begs his first alms from his relatives. The Lord, Bhagavan Himself, accepts the sacred thread not out of need but following the lila (note 26). According to CB Adi 8, when He put on the thread, He was seen as Vamana-deva (cf. Ghanashyama's pada no. 4, note 30). The heavenly women mingling with the humans are the same image as in no. 6.

16. Narahari — "gaurasundara parama śubhakṣaṇe..." (GPT1 p. 80, no. 5; BR)

*Gaurasundara in an auspicious hour receives the sacred thread; Shachi and Mishra perform the rites; the women rejoice, the bards praise, the singers sing, the dancers dance; the gods are beside themselves at this lila. Raga suhai. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*³²

- 16.1. In the supremely auspicious hour Gaurasundara has received the sacred thread; Shachi and Mishra, skilled in the rites the Vedas enjoin, perform them in incomparable order.
- 16.2. Various auspicious rites are performed; the noble wives cry "ulu-lu-lu-lu-lu-lu";
the bards proclaim His auspicious glory and drink in this beauty with their eyes.
- 16.3. Skilled singers sing in new metres, merrily sound the murajas and other drums;
the dancers dance, often beating out: "dhā-dhi dhikadha dhilaṅga".
- 16.4. The hearts of the gods are wholly immersed in bliss at the sight of this charming lila;
"jaya, jaya" resounds through the whole world — Narahari Dasa offers himself [to Him].

32. GPT1 — p. 80, no. 5 (suhai; scan, PDF pp. 339–340); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 5 (catalogue: NG-028). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 784; ed. 1960, vv. 1193–1196), immediately after Ghanashyama's pada; then the BR tells how Mishra took his son to study with Gangadasa Pandita (vv. 1197–1200). The following padas of the section in GPT1 — nos. 6–8 signed by Lochana, no. 9 by "Trilochana" (wedding padas, partly in nagari-bhava) — are not part of the appendix. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

17. Narahari — "ballabhaduhitā lakṣmī sucaritā..." (GPT1 p. 83, no. 10; BR)

The first meeting by the Ganga: Lakshmi, Vallabha's daughter, goes with her friends to bathe and, seeing Gaurangachand, cannot restrain her hidden love; Gora, recognising His beloved, looks at her;

*their glances secretly meet, and He goes home smiling. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³³

- 17.1. Vallabha's daughter, virtuous Lakshmi, surrounded by her friends, goes to the bank of the Ganga to bathe, timidly glancing around.
- 17.2. Seeing Gaurangachand a little way off, she feels a hidden love surge up; drinking the nectar of the sweetness of that form, she cannot keep her composure.
- 17.3. Gora, the jewel of virtues, recognising His beloved, looks at Lakshmi; her form, surpassing pure gold, seems to enter His very heart.³⁴
- 17.4. The glances of the two meet secretly from the corners of their eyes — so that no one else notices;
Narahari's Lord, smiling softly, went home in joy.

33. GPT1 — p. 83, no. 10 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 342); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 10 (catalogue: NG-029). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 787; ed. 1960, vv. 1232–1235): "one day Shachi thought of her son's marriage; His boyhood was ending, His youth beginning... to increase His mother's joy, the Lord wished to marry; He went along this road to the Ganga, and Lakshmi-devi, the Lord's beloved, came to bathe; their meeting is described by the wise" (vv. 1226–1231). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The meeting by the Ganga — CB Adi 10; Murari 1.9.

34. Lakshmipriya is the eternal consort of the Lord, Lakshmi Herself (CB Adi 10; CC Adi 14–15); that is why He "recognises His beloved". Their love is not a worldly attraction but the eternal relation of the Lord and His energy. "Narahari's Lord" (narahari pahum) is a habitual turn of Chakravarti's signature (note 44 of chapter 17).

18. Narahari — "ki ānanda nadīyā-nagare nimāira bibāhakathā..." (GPT1 p. 83, no. 11; BR)

*In every house of Nadia they talk of Nimai's wedding; all long to see it; the bards, dancers and musicians, astrologers, gardeners with garlands, hundreds of poor supplicants come running; the poet longs to see the wedding with his own eyes. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁵

- 18.1. What joy in the town of Nadia! In every house there is talk of Nimai's wedding.
- 18.2. The men and women of Nadia — the hearts of all are eager to see the wedding.
- 18.3. The bards come running, reckoning they will get much wealth.
- 18.4. The dancers, the musicians and the rest — all hasten, vying with one another, with what hopes!
- 18.5. The astrologers hasten: "We shall fix an incomparable auspicious hour for the wedding!"
- 18.6. Joyfully the gardeners go with various garlands of flowers to the house of Sri Shachi.
- 18.7. Who with one mouth can tell how many they are? The poor supplicants come by the hundred.
- 18.8. In Narahari's heart is one hope: to see the wedding festivity to the full with both eyes.

35. GPT1 — p. 83, no. 11 (dhanashi; scan, PDF p. 342); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 11 (catalogue: the wedding part of row NG-030; see note 30). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 788; ed. 1960, vv. ≈1245–1252): after the account of Vanamali Acharya's matchmaking and of the wedding day (vv. 1237–1240). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The matchmaking and the marriage with Lakshmipriya — CB Adi 10; CC Adi 15; Murari 1.9.

19. Narahari — "nadīyāra nababadhū saba biraleti kahe..." (GPT1 p. 83, no. 12; BR)

*The young wives of Nadia, apart by themselves, rejoice at the coming wedding: fortunate are Vallabha Acharya and his wife, who gain such a son-in-law; fortunate is Lakshmi, who gains a husband more beautiful than Kama; Vanamali has made a good match; today is the adhivasa — time to dress up. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁶

- 19.1. The young wives of Nadia, apart by themselves, speak with sweet smiles:
"How fortunate we are that we shall see such a wedding, floating in an ocean of bliss!"
- 19.2. One says: "The worthy Vallabha Acharya and his wife, devoted to her husband and virtuous —
I think it is for their former pious deeds that they gain so rare a son-in-law."
- 19.3. Another says: "Blessed is Vallabha's daughter, the beautiful Lakshmi — like Lakshmi herself; who else is so fortunate? She will gain a husband who surpasses Madana!"
- 19.4. Yet another says: "Vanamali has made a fine match — how much joy he has had!
Today is the adhivasa — come, let us dress up: Narahari came and told us."³⁷

36. GPT1 — p. 83, no. 12 (dhanashi; scan, PDF p. 342); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 12 (catalogue: NG-031). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 788; ed. 1960, vv. 1253–1256; the 1960 editor's heading: "the adhivasa of Nimai's wedding"). Line 19.1: GPT1 has "dhanya mora mena", the BR "dhanya morā yena" — translated after the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

37. Vanamali Acharya is the matchmaker who arranged the Lord's first marriage (CB Adi 10). The adhivasa is the pre-wedding rite on the eve of the wedding (scents, garlands, blessings). The young wives' talk is joy at the wedding, not nagari-bhava; "surpassing Madana" is the usual praise of a bridegroom's beauty. Here too the poet places himself in the lila — as the messenger calling the women to the adhivasa (cf. note 24).

20. Narahari — "śrīśacī-ālaya ati śobhāmaya..." (GPT1 pp. 83–84, no. 13; BR)

*The women of noble families, telling themselves that today is Gora's adhivasa, dress up and go in rows, lighting up the streets of Nadia, to Shachi, bow to her and, seeing the Lord in the courtyard, comfort their hearts. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁸

- 20.1. "The house of Sri Shachi is all aglow, in it an ocean of joy surges:
today is the adhivasa — adorned, the blissful Gora, the Moon of Gokula, will shine."
- 20.2. Saying this to themselves, unable to keep still, glancing around on all sides, the maidens of noble families — with what to compare it? — as if lovely garlands of moons had come out of the houses.
- 20.3. Their many-coloured clothes and ornaments shine, every limb is adorned; striking various poses, they go in rows, lighting up the streets of Nadia.
- 20.4. With what longing they come to Ai, with what reverence they bow to her!
And finding Narahari's Lord in the courtyard, they comfort their hearts gazing at that face.³⁹

38. GPT1 — pp. 83–84, no. 13 (dhanashi; scan, PDF pp. 342–343); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 13 (catalogue: NG-032). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 789; ed. 1960, vv. 1257–1260). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The pada continues the previous one: the young wives go to the adhivasa.

39. Ai ("mother") is Shachi. The women who "comfort their hearts gazing at the face" of the Lord are an image of the all-attractiveness of Bhagavan at His festival: they have come to bow to the mother and bless the bridegroom; this is not nagari-bhava. Worship of Gaura in the spirit of "gaura-nagari" is not accepted by the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta) (cf. note 15 of chapter 17).

21. Narahari — "śobhāmaya śacīra āṅgane..." (GPT1 p. 84, no. 14; BR)

*Nimai's adhivasa: the brahmanas chant the Vedas, the relatives offer scents and garlands, Gora in the assembly surpasses myriads of Kamas; Vallabha Acharya, having performed the rite, goes home; Shachi with the married women performs the auspicious rites; humans and gods together. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴⁰

- 21.1. In Shachi's shining courtyard on all sides the brahmanas chant the Vedas.
- 21.2. What joy has appeared today! In an auspicious hour — the adhivasa of Nimaichand.
- 21.3. The relatives offer scents and garlands; the radiance of Gora's body lights up all directions.

- 21.4. In the midst of the assembly Gora, the jewel of brahmanas, shines, surpassing myriads of Kamas.
- 21.5. Whoever looks even once at Gora loses his composure and forgets himself.
- 21.6. All who have come to the adhivasa are given scents, sandal paste and the like.
- 21.7. Having performed the adhivasa according to the rules, Vallabha Acharya went to his own home.⁴¹
- 21.8. There is no end to the happiness, it cannot be told: with the married women Ai performs the auspicious rites.
- 21.9. The women raise jubilant cries, the bards recite auspicious verses of praise.
- 21.10. Dancing, singing, music of every kind — no one has the power to find a comparison for it.
- 21.11. Who does not say there: "Good, good!"? Through the whole world — sweet cries of "jaya, jaya".
- 21.12. The gods, mingling with the humans, watch the merriment of the adhivasa — says Narahari.

40. GPT1 — p. 84, no. 14 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 343); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 14 (catalogue: NG-033). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 789–790; ed. 1960, vv. 1261–1272). Variants: 21.3 GPT1 "ambagaṇe", BR "āptagaṇe" ("the relatives") — after the BR; 21.8 in GPT1 the end of the line is cut off ("kare a..."), BR "kare āi" — after the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 21.2 is the refrain (dhru).

41. Vallabha Acharya, the bride's father, came to perform the bridegroom's adhivasa (by custom — with scents and garlands), and then at his own home performs the bride's adhivasa (next pada). "The married women" (āiho śuiho) are wives whose husbands are living; only they perform the auspicious wedding rites.

22. Narahari — "āju snehete bihvala haiyā..." (GPT1 p. 84, no. 15; BR)

*The bride's adhivasa: Vallabha Acharya with his relatives performs the rite; the mother adorns Lakshmi and seats her on a throne; Lakshmi, receiving scents and a garland, rejoices, while around her, invisible, throng the heavenly women; music and the women's cries. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴²

- 22.1. Today, beside himself with tenderness, Vallabha Acharya with his brahmana kinsmen performs the rite of adhivasa.
- 22.2. With what love the mother, having dressed her daughter Lakshmi in lovely clothes and ornaments, seats her on a divine throne in the middle of the beautiful courtyard — and her friends float in happiness.
- 22.3. When in the auspicious hour scents and a garland are offered to her, her heart rejoices and her form shines brighter;
hearts know no rest: around, invisible, throng hosts of heavenly women, gazing.⁴³
- 22.4. Conches, bells and various instruments, dancing, singing; the bards proclaim auspicious words;
at the women's jubilant cries Narahari cannot keep his composure — and offers himself.

42. GPT1 — p. 84, no. 15 (dhanashi; scan, PDF p. 343); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 15 (catalogue: NG-034). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 790; ed. 1960, vv. 1273–1276). Variant: 22.1 GPT1 "ātmabiprabargere" ("with his brahmana kinsmen"), BR "ārya biprabargere" ("with the worthy brahmanas"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 22.1 is the refrain (dhru). Then in GPT1 (nos. 16–27) and in the BR comes the wedding day: the morning after the adhivasa, the bath, the bridegroom's dress, the procession, the wedding in Vallabha's house, the return (chapter 21).

43. The heavenly women (debaramaṇī) come invisibly to see the wedding of the Lord and His eternal consort (cf. nos. 6 and 15).

Chapter 21. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — V: the wedding with Lakshmipriya and the beginning of the second wedding

Continuation of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 21: the end of GPT section 2.3 "Karnavedha and the wedding" — the wedding day with Lakshmipriya (the morning after the adhivasa, the water rite, the bath and dressing of the bridegroom, the procession, the wedding in the house of Vallabha Acharya, the bridal chamber, the return home) and life with Lakshmipriya; the beginning of section 2.4 "The second marriage" — the news of the wedding with Vishnupriya, the women of Nadia with Shachi, the adhivasa of bridegroom and bride, the morning of the wedding day (the bath and dressing of the bridegroom; the procession and the wedding itself follow in the next chapter). Narahari Chakravarti quotes almost all the padas of the chapter one after another in the 12th wave of the Bhakti-ratnakara, where Ishana shows Srinivasa the house of Jagannatha Mishra (two padas of section 2.4 are also in Chakravarti's Gaura-charita-chintamani); one (no. 13) has not been found in any witness. Before translation the "Narahari" signatures in sections 2.3–2.4 (GPT1 pp. 84–100) were checked throughout, in the OCR and on the scan: the catalogue had missed two padas of section 2.4 (nos. 18 and 23, new rows NG-285, 286). From section 2.4, up to the adhivasa and the morning of the wedding, the following are not translated: nos. 4 and 11 — signed Ghanashyama (outside the appendix); nos. 2, 3 and 7 — padas in nagari-bhava (a young wife's dream in which Gaura invites her to the wedding and embraces her; the "anuraga" of the women for Gaura; women who give Him "life and youth") — assigned to the section of nagari padas. The base text is GPT1 (doubtful places from the scan), collated with GPT2, the BR (eds. 1912 and 1960) and the Gaura-charita-chintamani (ed. 1947); PK, KGC, PS and the Gita-chandrodaya have been checked. On Lakshmipriya and Vishnupriya as the eternal energies of the Lord and on the wedding rites as lila see notes 2 and 30; on the motif of the women of Nadia, note 5. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "adhibāsa niśi pohāile..." (GPT1 p. 85, section 2.3, no. 16; BR)

The wedding day: the night of the adhivasa is over; Nimai, surrounded by brahmanas, performs the Vedic rites; crowds, music, songs, the praises of the bhatas, the women's cries of joy; everyone rejoices at the women's rites. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave).¹

1.1. When the night of the adhivasa had passed, everyone set about the wedding tasks.

1.2. Surrounded by brahmanas, Nimai performs the rites enjoined by the Vedas.²

1.3. The crowds cannot be described: the clamour of "take! give!" is immense.

1.4. Instruments of every kind play without pause; the singers sing song after song.

1.5. The bhatas recite verses of praise; the women raise sweet cries of joy.

1.6. All rejoice at the women's rites; Narahari floats in that ocean of happiness.³

1. GPT1 — p. 85, section 2.3 ("karnavedha and the wedding"), no. 16 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 344); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 16 (catalogue: NG-282). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 790–791; ed. 1960, vv. 1277–1282), straight after the adhivasa of the bride (no. 22 of chapter 20); then the BR gives the padas nos. 2–12 of this chapter in sequence. Variants: 1.4 GPT1 "pūrvvāpara" ("one after another"), BR "manohara" ("enchantingly"); 1.6 GPT1 "sāyare", BR "pāthāre" (both "in the ocean"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The wedding with Lakshmipriya — CB Adi 10; CC Adi 15; Murari 1.9–1.10.

2. Lakshmipriya is the eternal consort of the Lord, Lakshmi Herself (CB Adi 10; CC Adi 14–15); the Lord's wedding is not a worldly event but His lila with His own energy. The Lord, the goal of all the Vedas, is bound by nothing enjoined; He accepts the wedding rites in keeping with the lila and for the joy of His mother and His associates — as Krishna did in Dvaraka. So are all the padas of this chapter on the Lord's "marriage" to be understood.

3. The women's rites (strī-ācāra) are the wedding customs performed by married women in addition to the Vedic rites (the cries of "ulu-lu", the water rite, the anointing of the bridegroom, etc.). Here too the poet places himself in the lila as a witness and participant (cf. note 24 of chapter 20).

2. Narahari — "kulabadhūgaṇa ulasita mana..." (GPT1 p. 85, no. 17; BR)

*The wives of noble families dress to go for the water of the wedding bath; looking at Gora's face, they cry "ulu-lu"; they go, talking among themselves; anklets ring, music plays; having performed the water rite, they enter the house. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴

2.1. The wives of noble families, their hearts rejoicing, gaily dress to go for the water;

gazing again and again at Gora's moonlike face, they smile and cry "ulu-lu", and a thrill runs through their bodies.

2.2. They come out of their houses — how many feelings rise in their hearts! — intoxicated by the fragrance of the body of the Gaura-moon; their hearts know no rest, brimming with feeling; from the corners of their eyes — how many different glances!

2.3. How much they say to one another of what cannot be told! Which of them, playful, does not offer herself for Him?

With their dress, ornaments and attire they shatter all composure — who could find a likeness for that beauty?

2.4. Anklets, girdles of bells, the sounds of many instruments — how sweet, words cannot tell!

Having completed the water rite, they enter the house — and Narahari's heart overflows with joy.⁵

4. GPT1 — p. 85, no. 17 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 344); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 17 (catalogue: NG-035). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 791; ed. 1960, vv. 1283–1286). Variant: 2.1 GPT1 "pāni-sahibāre", BR "pāni sāibāre" — "to perform the water rite" (translated by the sense of both readings). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. "Pani-sai" (jala sādha) is a wedding custom: married women go with music to the Ganga and draw water for the bath of the bridegroom (or bride).

5. The poet describes the delight of the women of Nadia at the Lord's wedding in words close to the motif of the townswomen (nagaris) enamoured of Gaura. We translate faithfully to the author; but the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) does not accept the worship of Gaura in the mood of "Gaura-nagari": Gaura is Krishna Himself in the mood and lustre of Radha; He came to taste Her love, not to enjoy as a nagara. The Lord's attractiveness for the people of Navadvipa is the quality of Bhagavan, who attracts all; it is not worldly passion. The same holds for the other padas of the chapter about the women of Nadia (cf. note 39 of chapter 20).

3. Narahari — "kibā śrīśacī-bhabana mājhe..." (GPT1 p. 85, no. 18; BR)

*The wedding bath of the bridegroom: amid auspicious cries the women loosen His locks and braid them again, oiling them, rub Him with turmeric and perfumes; He is bathed with Ganga water, and the poet playfully dries Him with a towel. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁶

3.1. What [bustle] in the house of Sri Shachi! Amid manifold auspicious cries all are busy with the wedding tasks.

3.2. For Gora is the Moon of Gokula: at the bath enjoined before the wedding the ocean of joy surges beyond measure.

3.3. The wives of noble families, sweetly and gracefully, saying, "Let us oil His lovely locks," loosen and braid them again and again.

3.4. One rubs His body with turmeric; seeing the turmeric grow dim, all laugh and give their lives for Him.⁷

3.5. One anoints His body with perfumes — but the fragrance of that body robs the perfumes of their pride: with what to compare it?

3.6. They bathed Him with Ganga water; Narahari, taking a towel, dries His body as if in play.

6. GPT1 — p. 85, no. 18 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 344); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 18 (catalogue: NG-036). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 791; ed. 1960, vv. 1287–1292). Variants: 3.2 GPT1 "sthāne" ("in the place"), BR "snāne" ("at the bath") — following the BR; 3.5 GPT1 "upamā diba ki saṅge", BR-1912 "ke dibe upamā aṅge". Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 3.1 is the refrain (dhru).

7. Grown dim beside the golden radiance of the Lord's body. "Give their lives" (parāṇa nichaye) refers to the rite of nimchhani: out of love one waves something (in poetry — one's very life) around the beloved to ward off misfortune. The playful care of the women who perform the wedding rites (anointing the bridegroom with turmeric and oil) is festive merriment, not nagari-bhava.

4. Narahari — "āju kata nā ānanda mane..." (GPT1 p. 86, no. 19; BR)

*His friends dress the bridegroom: they anoint Him with sandal, draw the tilaka, adorn His curls with a garland of malati, put on earrings, necklace, bracelets and rings and a golden chain on His waist; the poet, having clothed Him in a red-bordered cloth, beholds His beauty. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁸

4.1. How much joy in the heart today! Seating Vishvambhara on a seat, His friends dress Him.

4.2. They anoint His body with fragrant sandal paste and draw a lovely tilaka on His forehead — whom would it not enchant?

4.3. Gathering the curling locks above His brow, in gladness of heart, sweetly and gracefully they wind them with a garland of malati.

4.4. They put earrings in His ears — they flash beside His cheeks, and His cheeks rob mirrors of their pride.

4.5. They put a necklace of jewels on His neck; it sways charmingly on His broad chest — who can find a likeness for it?

4.6. On His arms armlets and bracelets, on His fingers they put rings — and, looking at His face, they cannot keep their composure.

4.7. His waist is slender, slenderer than a lion's; as they adorn it with a golden chain, their eyes cease to blink.

4.8. An array that tempts the world! Having clothed Him in a red-bordered cloth, Narahari beholds His beauty.⁹

8. GPT1 — p. 86, no. 19 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 345); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 19 (catalogue: NG-037). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 791–792; ed. 1960, vv. 1293–1300). Variant: 4.6 GPT1 "cāhilā dhairaja dhare" ("having looked, they kept composure?"), BR "cāhi nā dhairaya dhare" — translated following the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 4.1 is the refrain (dhru).

9. Vishvambhara ("He who sustains the universe") is the name given to the Lord at His naming (CB Adi 4). The red-bordered cloth is the bridegroom's wedding garment. Here too the poet takes part in the lila, clothing the Lord (cf. 3.6).

5. Narahari — "beśa banāiyā sahacare..." (GPT1 pp. 86–87, no. 20; BR)

*His friends, having dressed Nimai, give Him a golden mirror; even the gods cannot take their eyes off Him; Shachi and her friends perform auspicious rites; the young wives look on from afar; bowing to His mother, Gaura sets out for the wedding amid Vedic chanting and music. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁰

- 5.1. Having dressed [Him], His friends put into His hand a golden mirror like the moon.
- 5.2. Seeing the attire of Nimaichand — what to speak of others? — even the gods cannot turn their eyes away.
- 5.3. Mother Shachi with her friends performs many auspicious rites, gazing at her son's face.
- 5.4. The young wives, standing at a distance, cannot keep their composure as they look at Gorachand.
- 5.5. The women cry "ulu-lu"; the news of the joyful wedding has filled the world.
- 5.6. Bowing at His mother's feet, Gaura Raya sets out to be married.¹¹
- 5.7. The brahmanas chant the Vedas; instruments of many kinds resound — the sound pierces the sky.
- 5.8. Who can tell of this merriment? Narahari swims in that ocean of happiness.

10. GPT1 — pp. 86–87, no. 20 (kamoda; scan, PDF pp. 345–346); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 20. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-283, chapter 20). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 792; ed. 1960, vv. 1301–1308; the 1960 editor's heading before the next pada: "the wedding of Sri Nimai"). Variant: 5.6 BR "gaurarāya" — the same. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 5.1 is the refrain (dhru).

11. The Lord bows to His mother, setting an example of respect for one's parents. On the young wives (5.4) see note 5.

6. Narahari — "āju godhūli samaya śubhakṣaṇa..." (GPT1 p. 87, no. 21; BR)

*The wedding procession: at the auspicious hour of dusk Gaura in wedding attire mounts the palanquin and, surrounded by brahmanas, moves slowly to Vallabha's house; praises, dances, songs, a sea of music; the gods gaze unblinking from the sky and descend unseen to earth; crowds, hundreds of lamps, moonlight; the Earth, the Ganga, beasts and birds rejoice. Raga bhupali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; ornate Vrajabuli.*¹²

- 6.1. Today, at the auspicious hour of dusk, Gaura — the jewel of virtues, enchanter of the world — is in the attire enjoined for a wedding, and the beauty of His tender body seems to brim over; crushing the pride of millions of Kamas, lotus-eyed, delighting people's hearts, glancing in all four directions with a soft smile, He mounts
the palanquin, shining.¹³
- 6.2. Surrounded by brahmanas He moves towards Vallabha's house — His gait very slow and sweet; the bards proclaim abundant blessings, the world is filled with cries of "jaya, jaya";
dancers dance, beating out "thai-tata", how many singers are absorbed in song to "thonga-thongina"; composing lovely [songs on His] deeds, tuning the mode, the artists rain down sweet rasa.
- 6.3. How many instruments play in every manner, the rhythmic syllables sound without a break; skilled musicians, as if churning the ocean of music, swim in it;
in the sky the gods are utterly absorbed — they gaze steadily with unblinking eyes; thrilling all over they descend unseen to earth — what delight in their hearts!
- 6.4. Countless men and women run; the broad road is incomparably beautiful; hundreds upon hundreds of lamps blaze, the moon, lord of the night, sheds its light;
the Earth has blossomed in great joy, the waters of the Jahnavi surge; what can the servant Narahari say? — beasts and birds all float in happiness.

12. GPT1 — p. 87, no. 21 (bhupali; scan, PDF p. 346); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 21 (catalogue: NG-038). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 792–793; ed. 1960, vv. 1309–1312). Variants: 6.1 GPT1 "chalakāya", "jhalakāya", BR "chalakaye", "jhalakaye"; 6.2 GPT1 "bandigaṇa, bhuri maṅgalabhāṇa", BR "bandigaṇa bhāṇa bhuri maṅgala"; 6.3 GPT1 "janu", BR "yanu" (both "as if"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The syllables "thai-tata", "thonga-thongina" imitate the dancers' counting and the strokes of the drums (cf. note 11 of chapter 20).

13. Dusk (godhūli, "the hour of cow-dust", when the herds return home) is an auspicious hour for a wedding. The palanquin (caudola) is the litter on which the bridegroom is carried to the bride's house. The wedding with Lakshmi Priya takes place in the house of her father, Vallabha Acharya (CB Adi 10).

7. Narahari — "gorācāṁḍera bibāha dekhibāre..." (GPT1 pp. 87–88, no. 22; BR)

*The young wives of Nadia, in fine dress and ornaments, their bells ringing, hurry to see Gorachand's wedding; they talk among themselves, smiling under their veils; their glances dart in all directions; seeing the poet's Lord enter Vallabha's house, they are beside themselves with joy. Raga bhupali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁴

7.1. To see Gorachand's wedding, with what longing the young wives of Nadia run — not one can keep her composure!

7.2. Incomparable attire and garments, bodies adorned with ornaments — their charm glitters and shines; as they walk, the bells of their girdles and the anklets on their feet ring; with their sweet gait they light up the road.

7.3. Absorbed in that feeling, how much they say to one another — how charmingly! — the rings at their nostrils sway; on their lovely faces hidden by veils, a soft, soft smile; whom would the radiance of that smile not enchant?

7.4. Darkened with collyrium, delighting the heart, surpassing the khanjana bird, their lovely glances [dart] on every side; and, seeing Narahari's Lord of life entering Vallabha's house, they are beside themselves with joy.¹⁵

14. GPT1 — pp. 87–88, no. 22 (bhupali; scan, PDF pp. 346–347); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 22 (catalogue: NG-039). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 793; ed. 1960, vv. 1313–1316). Variants: 7.4 GPT1 "uthalaye", BR-1960 "ulaye" (OCR?); 7.3 GPT1 "beśara", BR "besara" (the same word, "nose-ring"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 7.1 is the refrain (dhru).

15. The khanjana is the wagtail, in Indian poetry an image of lively, restless eyes. "Narahari's Lord of life" (narahari parāṇanātha) is the poet's Lord, a turn of the signature (like "Narahari's Lord", note 34 of chapter 20); the young wives' joy is festive delight at the wedding (see note 5).

8. Narahari — "ballabha-bhabane gorā rāya..." (GPT1 pp. 88–89, no. 23; BR)

*The wedding in Vallabha's house: Vishvambhara stands on a little board under the wedding canopy; the bride's mother with the married women welcomes the bridegroom, circling Him seven times with seven lamps; Vallabha Acharya brings his daughter, seats her on a throne and by the rite gives Lakshmi to the son of Shachi; Vedic chanting, cries of joy, music; from their celestial chariots the gods invisibly shower the wedding with flowers. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁶

8.1. Gora Raya in Vallabha's house increases the great joy of Vallabha Mishra.

8.2. Vallabha, rejoicing, has the auspicious rites enjoined for a wedding performed.

8.3. Vishvambhara, His heart glad, stood on the little board under the wedding canopy.¹⁷

8.4. The movements of His body steal one's life; the radiance of His form lights up the ten directions.

8.5. To what shall His moonlike face be compared? With a slight smile it destroys the pride of nectar.

- 8.6. The glance of His eyes is lovely: whomever He looks at cannot hold his composure.
- 8.7. At the roots of His ears, makara-shaped earrings; whom would the arrangement of His curling hair not enchant?
- 8.8. Armlets and bracelets sit beautifully; seeing that beauty, how many Madanas die of shame!
- 8.9. To welcome such a bridegroom, the bride's mother comes out with the married women.
- 8.10. Who can describe that beauty? With seven lamps in her hands she circles Him seven times.
- 8.11. Wondrous are the women's rites! Having welcomed the bridegroom, all go into the house.
- 8.12. Fortunate Vallabha Acharya had his daughter brought to perform the kanya-dana — the giving of the daughter.
- 8.13. They seated her on a divine throne — and it shone with the radiance of her body.
- 8.14. Her body is so tender, her smiling face surpasses the full moon.
- 8.15. She wears many-coloured garments; ornaments of many jewels glitter.
- 8.16. Such a daughter, with every prescribed rite, Mishra gave to the son of Shachi.¹⁸
- 8.17. The brahmanas chant the Vedas; all the women of noble families cry "ulu-lu".
- 8.18. Instruments of every kind resound, dancers dance, the bhatas recite verses of praise.
- 8.19. The gods, mounting their celestial chariots, invisibly shower flowers, crying "jaya!".
- 8.20. Great happiness has spread through the world — how can Narahari tell of it with one mouth?

16. GPT1 — pp. 88–89, no. 23 (kamoda; scan, PDF pp. 347–348); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 23 (catalogue: NG-040). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 794–795; ed. 1960, vv. 1317–1336). Variants: 8.3 GPT1 "sarasa hiyāya" ("with a heart full of rasa"), BR "haraṣa hiyāya" ("with a glad heart"); 8.9 GPT1 "āyogaṇa sāte", BR "āigaṇa sāthe" (the same: married women); 8.17 GPT1 "kulera kāmīnī", BR "kulera ramaṇī"; 8.18 BR "rāyabāra". The GPT1 editor's notes on 8.3 and 8.9 are not reproduced. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

17. The piri (piṛi) is a low wooden board on which the bridegroom stands or sits during the rite; choṛālā is the place of the wedding rite under the canopy.

18. Kanya-dana is the central rite of a Hindu wedding: the father gives his daughter to the bridegroom. The Lord's wedding with Lakshmipriya — CB Adi 10; CC Adi 15. Lakshmipriya is Lakshmi Herself, the eternal energy of the Lord; the marriage is His lila (note 2).

9. Narahari — "gorā guṇamaṇi prāṇapriyā saha..." (GPT1 p. 89, no. 24; BR)

*The bridal chamber: Gora is in the chamber with His beloved; the women keep coming in and going out, joke, give Him betel to put into Lakshmi's mouth, themselves offer Him betel, braid and loosen His hair, seat Lakshmi on His lap. Raga bhupali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁹

- 9.1. Gora, the jewel of virtues, with His beloved, dear as life, passes the time in the bridal chamber; the wives of noble families keep coming in and going out, full of merriment.
- 9.2. Some, inventing various pretexts, tease and laugh, laugh for the joy of their hearts; another, placing betel in Gora's lotus hand, says, "Put it into Lakshmi's mouth!"
- 9.3. One offers betel to Gora's moonlike mouth — and her affection grows and grows; another, longing to touch Him, braids His hair — and, loosening it, cannot contain herself.
- 9.4. Yet another, seating Lakshmi on Vishvambhara's lap, looks at them with a charming smile; says Narahari: the rasa that surges in the bridal chamber has no comparison.²⁰

19. GPT1 — p. 89, no. 24 (bhupali; scan, PDF p. 348); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 24 (catalogue: NG-041). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 795; ed. 1960, vv. 1337–1340). Variant: 9.1 GPT1 "śoja" (misprint), BR "se ye" — following the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

20. Vasara (bāsara) is the first night after the wedding, which the couple spend in the chamber while the women of the bride's house keep them awake joking with the bridegroom — a custom of the Bengali wedding. The women's jokes at the wedding are ritual merriment, not nagari-bhava; Lakshmipriya is the eternal energy of the Lord (note 2), and the whole scene is the Lord's lila with His energy, not worldly love.

10. Narahari — "gorācāṁḍera bibāha paradine..." (GPT1 p. 89, no. 25; BR)

*At dawn after the wedding the women run together to admire bride and bridegroom; Vallabha's fortunate wife rejoices; generous Vallabha Mishra does everything for his son-in-law; Gaurahari, having performed the wedding rites, is glad; the gods praise Vallabha. Raga todi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²¹

10.1. The day after Gorachand's wedding, at daybreak — how much joy surges up!

10.2. The wives of noble families run together from every side; seeing the beauty of bride and bridegroom, all delight their eyes.

10.3. How fortunate is Vallabha's wife! Having gained a jewel of a son-in-law, she does not know where she is.

10.4. Mishra Vallabha is generous beyond measure: what does he not do for the good of his son-in-law!

10.5. And Vallabha's son-in-law, Gaurahari, having performed the wedding rites, is filled with joy.

10.6. All has been completed as is proper; says Narahari: the gods praise Vallabha.

21. GPT1 — p. 89, no. 25 (todi; scan, PDF p. 348); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 25 (catalogue: NG-042). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 795–796; ed. 1960, vv. 1341–1346; the catalogue and the chapter plan took it for "GPT only" — the search by witnesses missed it because of garbled OCR; it was found by reading the BR straight through). Variant: 10.3 GPT1 "jāmātāratna", BR "jāmātā-ratana" (the same). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

11. Narahari — "gaura gokulacandra calu nija gehe..." (GPT1 p. 89, no. 26; BR)

*At dawn Gaura sets out for His home; Vallabha in private speaks lovingly to Him of Lakshmi; the women on the road weep, Lakshmi's friends know that her Lord is departing; conches, kettledrums, dancing, songs, Vedic chanting, praises — the world is full of cries of "jaya". Raga todi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*²²

11.1. When the night gave way to dawn, Gaura, the Moon of Gokula, set out for His own home; in private Vallabha tenderly said much to Him — he spoke of Lakshmi.

11.2. Looking at the road, all the women cannot restrain themselves — tears stream from their eyes: Lakshmi's friends know that Lakshmi's Lord is departing.²³

11.3. Conches, kettledrums and great drums sound, instruments of every kind; troupes of dancers dance, skilled singers sing songs without end.

11.4. The brahmanas chant the Vedas, the bards proclaim His virtues; the whole world is full of cries of "jaya, jaya" — what a pastime of Narahari's Lord [returning] home!

22. GPT1 — p. 89, no. 26 (todi; scan, PDF p. 348); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 26 (catalogue: NG-043). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 796; ed. 1960, vv. 1347–1350). Variants: 11.1 GPT1 "kahala lakhimī ki bāta", BR "kahala lakhimika bāta" ("spoke of Lakshmi") — following the BR; 11.2 GPT1 "karaba payāna" ("will depart"), BR "kayala payāna" ("departed"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

23. By custom the bride leaves her father's house after the wedding for her husband's house; the father entrusts his daughter to his son-in-law, and her friends lament the parting.

12. Narahari — "bibāha kariyā biśvambhara..." (GPT1 p. 90, no. 27; BR)

*Vishvambhara returns home with His young wife; the married women perform auspicious rites; Shachi, taking her daughter-in-law on her lap, blesses her with paddy and durva grass and gazes again and again at the faces of her son and daughter-in-law; the Lord gladdens everyone with sweet words and fulfils the wishes of the bhatas, dancers and musicians. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²⁴

- 12.1. Having married, Vishvambhara returned from His father-in-law's house to His own home.
- 12.2. That joy I cannot describe: the women devoted to their husbands perform all the auspicious rites.
- 12.3. Shachi, taking her daughter-in-law on her lap, blessed her, [showering her] abundantly with paddy and durva grass.²⁵
- 12.4. There is no limit to Sri Shachi's happiness: how many times she looks at her son's face and her daughter-in-law's face!
- 12.5. Seeing the beauty of Lakshmi and Vishvambhara, no one can turn away their unblinking eyes.
- 12.6. Gora Raya, enchanter of the world, gladdens everyone with sweet words.
- 12.7. For the bhatas, dancers, musicians and all the rest He fulfilled every wish.
- 12.8. Narahari cries aloud: "Oh, that I might see such merriment in Nadia!"

24. GPT1 — p. 90, no. 27 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 349); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 27 (catalogue: NG-044). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 796; ed. 1960, vv. 1351–1358). Variant: 12.4 GPT1 "śrīśacī sukhera nāhi pāra... dekhe kata bāra", BR "śrīśacī-snehera nāi pāra... cumbe kata bāra" ("there is no limit to Shachi's tenderness... how many times she kisses"). In the BR, straight after the pada, Ishana tells Srinivasa: "I saw this wedding merriment with my own eyes" (v. 1359) — whereas the signature of the pada voices the poet's wish to see such merriment (12.8): so might speak a poet who had not seen the wedding — one more argument for Chakravarti. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

25. Paddy and durva grass (dhānya dūrvā) are auspicious gifts with which a newly married couple is blessed.

13. Narahari — "lakṣmī prāya lakṣmī ṭhākuraṇī..." (GPT1 p. 90, no. 28)

*Life with Lakshmipriya: Lakshmi serves her mother-in-law and her husband day and night; Nimai Pandita teaches countless students who come from every side — as if Brihaspati were teaching in Nadia; a pupil of Gangadasa, He poses such tricky questions that no one can answer; in the evening He enjoys learning with His students by the Ganga; His fame spreads in every direction. Raga kamoda. Attribution: not established — GPT only; by its place in the cycle and its closeness to the BR narrative, rather Chakravarti.*²⁶

- 13.1. Lakshmi Thakurani, like Lakshmi Herself, serves her mother-in-law day and night.
- 13.2. To her husband — unwavering devotion: she serves her husband day and night.
- 13.3. Nimai Pandita gives lessons; countless students come from every side.
- 13.4. Such learning is to be found nowhere — as if Brihaspati were giving lessons in Nadia.
- 13.5. Vishvambhara, pupil of Gangadasa, versed in every science, is an ocean of learning.
- 13.6. Nimai poses such tricky questions that no one is able to answer them.²⁷
- 13.7. In the evening, taking His students, He goes to the bank of the Ganga and delights in learning.
- 13.8. In every direction — the fame of Nimai; Narahari is beside himself with bliss.

26. GPT1 — p. 90, no. 28 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 349; in the OCR the signature is garbled — "narahabri"); GPT2 — section 2.3, no. 28. The catalogue made from the OCR of GPT2 did not know it (new row NG-284, chapter 20). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani; but in the BR, straight after the cycle of wedding padas (no. 12), Ishana says the same in prose: Lakshmi serves Ai, her Lord is absorbed with His students in the rasa of learning, all the scholars of Nadia honour Vishvambhara (ed. 1960, vv. 1360–1364). C. Line 13.2 is metrically incomplete in GPT1. Nimai Pandita teaches — CC Adi 16. After it GPT1 (nos. 29–35) gives the Lord's learning, the journey to East Bengal and Lakshmipriya's departure — padas of Vrindavana Dasa, Lochana and Govinda Ghosha (no Narahari signatures; the pada of Govinda Ghosha is PK 1597, chapter 1, no. 1).

27. "Like Lakshmi" is a turn of praise; according to the CB and CC Lakshmipriya is Lakshmi Herself (note 2). Brihaspati is the preceptor of the gods. Tricky questions (phāmki) are knotty problems of grammar and logic with which students and pandits in the schools of Navadvipa tested one another.

14. Narahari — "nadīyā-nagare haila dhvani..." (GPT1 p. 93, section 2.4, no. 1; BR)

*Section "The second marriage". The news spreads through Nadia: Gora is marrying again — Sanatana Mishra is giving Him his daughter Vishnupriya, peerless in beauty and virtue; tomorrow is the adhivasa; the women cannot wait for morning to go to Shachi's for the water rite. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²⁸²⁹

14.1. Through the town of Nadia the news rang out: "Gora, the jewel of virtues, is marrying again!

14.2. Fortunate Sanatana Mishra will give his daughter to Nimaichand.

14.3. The maiden's name is Vishnupriya — in beauty and virtue she has no equal in the world.³⁰

14.4. Tomorrow will be the auspicious adhivasa — we shall see the wedding festivities to our eyes' content.

14.5. How soon will the night be over? Let us go to Sri Shachi's house for the water rite!"

14.6. Narahari says: "I think it was your eagerness that brought the night to an end."

28. Before section 2.4, a brief note on the lila. While the Lord was travelling in East Bengal, Lakshmipriya left this world: according to the CB and CC, the "snake of separation" from the Lord bit her, and she departed with her mind fixed on His feet; on His return the Lord consoled His mother with instruction on the transience of everything worldly (CB Adi 14; CC Adi 16; Murari 1.11–1.12). Lakshmipriya is the eternal energy of the Lord; her departure, too, is lila. In GPT1 the departure of Lakshmipriya is the subject of padas by Lochana and Govinda Ghosha (2.3, nos. 32–35; no Narahari signatures). Then Shachi, wishing to marry her son again, through the matchmaker Kashinatha arranges His marriage with Vishnupriya, the daughter of Sanatana Mishra (CB Adi 15; Murari 1.13–1.14). In the BR this account is in the 12th wave (ed. 1960, vv. 1372–1396): according to Chakravarti, Shachi herself noticed Vishnupriya at a ghat of the Ganga, the match was arranged by Kashinatha Pandita, and the expenses of a wedding "like a prince's" were taken on by Buddhimanta Khan and Mukunda Sanjaya.

29. GPT1 — p. 93, section 2.4 ("the second marriage"), no. 1 (kamoda; scan, PDF p. 352); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 1 (catalogue: NG-045). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 799; ed. 1960, vv. ≈1397–1402: the first line falls on a part lost in the OCR), straight after the account of the match; then the BR gives in sequence the padas of section 2.4 nos. 2–16 (nos. 15–24 of this chapter and nos. 2–4, 7, 11, not translated here). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

30. Vishnupriya is the eternal consort of the Lord, His own Bhu-shakti (the energy of the Earth); like Lakshmipriya (note 2), she is not a worldly wife but His own energy, and the wedding with her is the Lord's lila.

15. Narahari — "yubatī-yūtha mati gati ati adabhuta..." (GPT1 p. 94, no. 5; BR; GCC)

*The morning of the adhivasa: lines of young women who have come to Shachi's house bow down at her feet like young golden creepers weighed down with flowers; they stretch out their hands to take the dust of her feet and, covering their faces with the ends of their veils, smile softly. Raga belavali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR and in the Gaura-charita-chintamani; Vrajabuli.*³¹

15.1. Lines of young women — wondrous their thoughts and their gait — bow down charmingly; slender, they bend like young golden creepers under the weight of clusters of flowers.

15.2. At the edge of [Shachi's] lovely feet they lay their heads — their dark, lustrous hair loosened; they look like a rain-cloud fallen to the earth with a swarm of motionless lightnings.

15.3. Gently, gently they stretch out their palms, tender as shoots, longing to take the rare dust [of her feet]; their nails flash — as if jewels had come in reverence to pay homage with peerless zeal.

15.4. Covering their lotus faces with the ends of their veils, they smile softly, softly, and radiance spreads around — as if, carefully straining fresh nectar, they sprinkle it abundantly, says Narahari Dasa.³²

31. GPT1 — p. 94, no. 5 (belavali; scan, PDF p. 353); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 5 (catalogue: NG-048). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 800–801; ed. 1960, vv. 1415–1418). GCC — ch. 9 ("the desires of the nagaris of Navadvipa", morning), pada 19: there it stands among padas on the townswomen-nagaris, while in the BR and GPT it is among the wedding padas. Variants: 15.2 GPT1 and BR "śithila saroruha" ("a loosened lotus"), GCC "śithila śiroruha" ("loosened hair") — translated following the GCC; GPT1 "kira caratachu", BR "thira-cara tachu" — following the BR; 15.4 GPT1 "siñcata ghanabhāṇa", BR and GCC "siñcata ghana bhāṇa". Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The preceding GPT pada (no. 4, signed Ghanashyama; outside the appendix) describes how these women come to Ai (Shachi) and strew her feet with champaka buds; the next (no. 16) how Shachi blesses them.

32. Subtle Vrajabuli similes: the women bowing in dark garments with loosened hair are a cloud, their golden bodies the lightnings; their nails are jewels come to bow at her feet; their smile is strained nectar. On the motif of the women of Nadia see note 5.

16. Narahari — "śacī jagata-jananī jana-nītabida..." (GPT1 p. 95, no. 6; BR; GCC)

*Shachi, mother of the world, lovingly receives the young wives, asks each about her welfare and blesses her, placing a hand on her head; they answer with a smile: "Having seen these auspicious feet, how could misfortune remain with us?" — and stand with joined palms; Shachi's eyes fill with tears of tenderness. Raga todī. Attribution: probably Chakravartī — the pada is in the BR and in the Gaura-charita-chintamani.*³³

16.1. Shachi — mother of the world, who knows how to treat people, renowned for her lovely ways — regarding all as her daughters-in-law, dearer than her own life, shows them all the greatest love.

16.2. Asking each one about her welfare, she places a hand on her head and blesses her abundantly: "May your fortune ever grow; may your husbands and all your kin live long and prosper!"

16.3. Hearing this, the young wives smile inwardly and, floating in happiness, speak sweet words: "Oh, tell us — having seen these auspicious feet, why should any misfortune stay here?"

16.4. Having shyly said a little, they stand on with joined palms; the mother of Narahari's Lord of life, seeing this, is overcome with tenderness — her eyes brim with tears.³⁴

33. GPT1 — p. 95, no. 6 (todī; scan, PDF p. 354); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 6 (catalogue: NG-049). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 801; ed. 1960, vv. 1419–1422). GCC — ch. 9, pada 21 (there "jananī-tattvabida", "kara yuṛi nikaṭe dāmṛāyā rahe" — "they stand near with joined palms"). Variant: 16.3 GPT1 "āgā", BR and GCC "ogo" — following the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

34. Shachi is the Lord's mother, His eternal associate in vatsalya-rasa; blessing the wives of Nadia, she wishes them worldly welfare, as befits a mother in the lila — and they reply that after the darshan of her feet no misfortune can remain: that is the highest good.

17. Narahari — "gorā-rase bhāsi hāsi hāsi lahu lahu..." (GPT1 pp. 95–96, no. 8; BR)

*The water rite on the day of the adhivasa: at Shachi's bidding the women of noble families, young and mature, dress and go in lines for the water with auspicious articles, lotuses and trays; girdles and anklets ring, musicians go in front; celestial women invisibly mingle with them; returning, they distribute oil and turmeric and perform the women's rites. Raga not specified ("yatha-raga"). Attribution: probably Chakravartī — the pada is in the BR.*³⁵

17.1. Floating in Gora's rasa, smiling softly, softly, the women of noble families rejoice.

- 17.2. At the bidding of Shachi-devi they dress for the water rite — what merriment in their hearts!
 Beauties in early, middle and full youth, in lines, their gait so sweet; restless their lovely sidelong glances, manifold their graces — there is no comparison for them.
- 17.3. They wear garments of many kinds, on every limb ornaments of gold and jewels;
 veils gleam on their faces, peerlessly lovely braids sway on their backs;
 some carry auspicious articles in their hands, some fresh lotuses, on the heads of others trays shine, beautifully covered with silk.
- 17.4. As they walk, the bells on their girdles ring — "jhani-jhini, jhani-jhinini ni-ni-ni", the anklets on their feet — "runu-jhunu, runu-jhunu jhu-jhu" — delighting the ear with their sound;
 in front the musicians walk joyfully, playing sweet rhythms —
 "dha-dha dhing ning ning dho dhiki dhikatadhenna": with many instruments they steal away composure.
- 17.5. Invisible celestial women have merrily mingled with the wives of Nadia; having performed the water rite, all enter the house — who does not say "Blessed, blessed, blessed!"?
 They distribute oil, turmeric and the rest — who can tell all the women's rites?
 Who does not swim in that ocean of happiness? Narahari gives himself to the Lord in this [joy].³⁶

35. GPT1 — pp. 95–96, no. 8 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF pp. 354–355); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 8 (catalogue: NG-051). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 802; ed. 1960, vv. 1429–1432). Variants: 17.4 GPT1 "bālaka" ("boys"), BR "bādaka" ("musicians") — following the BR; the bells in the BR "rini jhini rini jhinini"; 17.5 GPT1 "bhubane" ("into the world"), BR "bhabane" ("into the house") — following the BR; GPT1 "narahari pahum' nichani tāhe", BR "narahari bahu nichani tāhe" ("Narahari again and again gives himself for that"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 17.1 is the opening couplet. The chapter plan had provisionally assigned this pada to the nagari section ("floating in Gora's rasa"); in substance it describes the wedding water rite (cf. no. 2), and it is translated here — with the caveat of note 5.

36. "Floating in Gora's rasa" — in joy over the Lord whose wedding is being celebrated; on the motif of the women of Nadia see note 5. The celestial women come invisibly to take part in the Lord's wedding (cf. no. 21).

18. Narahari — "śacīdebī ulasita haiñā..." (GPT1 p. 96, no. 9; BR)

*Shachi with the married women goes to the Ganga and worships her with flowers and sandal — and the Suradhuni surges, holding in her heart the feet of Shachi's son; then she worships Shashthi — and Shashthi, rejoicing, praises her own good fortune; the women return home; at home Shachi performs the auspicious rites. Raga not specified. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁷

- 18.1. Shachi-devi, rejoicing, goes to the bank of the Ganga to worship the Ganga, taking the married women with her.
- 18.2. With various flowers, perfumes and sandal paste she carefully worships the Jahnavi; and the Suradhuni surges unceasingly, holding in her heart the feet of Shachi's son.³⁸
- 18.3. Instruments play beautifully; she goes to the place of Shashthi and worships Shashthi with many offerings;
 Shashthi, floating in happiness, praises her own good fortune — her heart overflows with the virtues of Gorachand.
- 18.4. With what longing the wives go home — how great the rejoicing in all their hearts!
 Returning home, [Shachi] performs the auspicious rites — Narahari cannot find a comparison.

37. GPT1 — p. 96, no. 9 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 355; in the OCR the number is garbled — "'ma pada"); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 9. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-285). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 803; ed. 1960, vv. 1433–1436). Variants: 18.1 GPT1 "āyo suyogaṇa", BR "āiha-suihagaṇa" (the same: married women); 18.4 GPT1

"badhūgaṇa", BR "bandhugaṇa" ("kinsfolk"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 18.1 is the refrain (dhru).

38. The Ganga flows from the feet of the Lord (Bhag. 5.17), so, says the poet, she "holds in her heart" Gaura's feet. Shashthi is the goddess who protects children; the worship of the Ganga and of Shashthi before a son's wedding is a custom of Bengali mothers, and Shachi follows it in the lila. The Gaudiya tradition does not worship the demigods for separate ends; and the poet shows that the Ganga and Shashthi themselves rejoice as servants of the Lord.

19. Narahari — "gorā-bidhu adhibāsa-sukhe..." (GPT1 p. 96, no. 10; BR)

*The bridegroom's adhivasa: everyone hurries into the house; Gora's dear ones skilfully perform the rites and distribute garlands and sandal; in the midst of the assembly the son of Shachi shines like Indra among the gods; Sanatana Mishra with his people brings gifts, touches Him with perfume and cannot take his eyes from His face; Vedic chanting, cries of joy, praises, music. Raga not specified. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁹

19.1. Who, in the joy of the Gora-moon's adhivasa, would not enter the house and sit down?

Gora's dear ones show ever new skill in the rites of the adhivasa.

19.2. To each they give garlands, sandal paste and the rest — who can tell of that great merriment?

In the midst of the assembly the son of Shachi shines — like Purandara surrounded by the gods.

19.3. Mishra Sanatana with his people came at the auspicious moment with various gifts; touching [Him] with perfume, he gazes with unblinking eyes at Gora's face.⁴⁰

19.4. The brahmanas chant the Vedas, the women raise cries of joy, the bhatas recite lovely praises;

Narahari sings the rasa of the adhivasa, the musicians play on many instruments.

39. GPT1 — p. 96, no. 10 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 355); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 10 (catalogue: NG-052). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 803–804; ed. 1960, vv. 1437–1440). Variants: 19.1 GPT1 "bhūbana mājhe" ("into the world"), BR "bhabana-mājhe" ("into the house") — following the BR; GPT1 "gorā priyāgaṇa" ("Gora's beloveds"), BR "gorā-priyagaṇa" ("Gora's dear ones") — following the BR; 19.2 GPT1 "ke kata kare", BR "ke kata kabe" ("who can tell") — following the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

40. Purandara is Indra, king of the gods. Sanatana Mishra is Vishnupriya's father, the "Raja-pandita" of Navadvipa (CB Adi 15); by custom the bride's father comes to the bridegroom's house and performs his adhivasa, touching him with perfume (cf. no. 21 of chapter 20).

20. Narahari — "mīśra sanātana harṣa mane..." (GPT1 pp. 97–98, no. 12; BR)

*The bride's adhivasa in the house of Sanatana Mishra: brahmanas bring from Ai's house all that is needed for the rite, the noble brahmanas of Nadia gather in the house of the Raja-pandita; Mishra's wife and her friends perform auspicious rites; Vishnupriya, glancing shyly around, comes out and sits on a throne in the midst of the assembly — her beauty eclipses the moon; all touch her with perfume and bless her. Raga not specified. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴¹

20.1. Mishra Sanatana, his heart glad, at the auspicious moment performs his daughter's adhivasa.

20.2. Brahmanas from Ai's house came in haste, bringing everything needed for the adhivasa.

20.3. The brahmanas and worthy people of Nadia — all go to the house of the Raja-pandita.

20.4. Mishra with great respect seats everyone, presenting garlands, sandal and the rest.

20.5. What wondrous beauty in the courtyard! All sit arranged in a lovely circle.

20.6. Mishra's wife with her friends performs so many auspicious rites that I cannot tell them.

20.7. Glancing shyly on every side, Vishnupriya came out of the house.

20.8. In the midst of the assembly she sits on a throne — everyone gazes at her beauty with unblinking eyes.

20.9. Her garments and ornaments become her well; with the radiance of every limb she lights up the world.

20.10. To what shall she be compared — to gold, to lightning? The sweetness of her face steals the moon's pride.

20.11. Who can describe all that beauty? Touching her with perfume, all bless her.

20.12. The women raise cries of joy, the brahmanas chant the Vedas without pause.

20.13. The bhatas praise auspicious deeds, many instruments sound, skilled singers sing songs.

20.14. How much merriment in Mishra's house! Narahari floats in that ocean of happiness.⁴²

41. GPT1 — pp. 97–98, no. 12 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF pp. 356–357); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 12 (catalogue: NG-053). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 805; ed. 1960, vv. 1445–1458). Variants: 20.13 GPT1 "sucarita", "guṇījane", BR "svacarita", "guṇigane" — minor. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Before it in the GPT (no. 11) stands an ornate pada on the bridegroom's adhivasa signed Ghanashyama ("ghanaśyāma hiyā"; = BR vv. 1441–1444) — outside the appendix.

42. The Raja-pandita is Sanatana Mishra, the court scholar (CB Adi 15; note 40). Vishnupriya is the eternal energy of the Lord (note 30); as at Lakshmipriya's adhivasa (no. 22 of chapter 20), all the people of Nadia come to bless her.

21. Narahari — "adhibāsa dibasera pare..." (GPT1 p. 98, no. 13; BR)

*The wedding day: through Nadia rings "today is Nimai's wedding"; to see it there come invisibly Shiva with Parvati, Ananta with his associates, the residents of Vaikuntha, Brahma with his consort, Indra with Shachi, the gods, the celestial women, gandharvas and kinnaras, the heavenly dancers, the divine sages; the Yamuna and the Ganga surge; the brahmanas of Nadia gather in Nimai's house; Gaurahari, having performed the wedding rites, sits in joy. Raga not specified. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴³

21.1. On the day after the adhivasa, joy grows in the new town of Nadia.

21.2. Everywhere people run about, saying: "Today is Nimai's wedding!"

21.3. The world is full of cries of "jaya, jaya" — who would not long to see the wedding?

21.4. Shiva in joy, with Parvati, leaving Kailasa, comes to see the wedding.

21.5. Ananta with his own associates remains here unseen to behold the wedding.

21.6. All the residents of Vaikuntha, saying "we shall see the wedding", are restless at heart.

21.7. The four-faced [Brahma] with his consort longs every moment to see the wedding.

21.8. The lord of the gods, taking Shachi with him, dresses in great joy to see the wedding.⁴⁴

21.9. The gods say with zeal: "We shall see the wedding, staying in the Lord's house!"

21.10. The celestial women have resolved: "We shall make merry at the wedding together with the wives of Nadia!"

21.11. The gandharvas and kinnaras think: "We shall join the artists in song and music at the wedding!"

21.12. Indra's dancers say: "We shall dress for the wedding together with the dancers of Nadia!"

21.13. The divine sages, rejoicing at heart, long so much to see the wedding!

21.14. The Yamuna and the Jahnvi surge; the Earth rejoices in the delight of the wedding festivities.

21.15. The brahmanas and worthy people of Nadia — all go to the wedding at Nimai's house.

21.16. The son of Shachi, Gaurahari, having performed the rites enjoined for the wedding, sits [among them] in joy.

21.17. Gazing at the Lord's moonlike face, how much they say — no one can master his heart.

21.18. How much auspiciousness arises here! How can Narahari tell of it with one mouth?

43. GPT1 — p. 98, no. 13 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 357); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 13 (catalogue: NG-054). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 806; ed. 1960, vv. 1459–1476; two lines, 1469–1470, fall on a part lost in the 1960 OCR; the 1960 editor's heading — "the wedding of Sri Nimai"). Variants: 21.13 BR "debṛṣi"; 21.15 BR-1960 "brāhmaṇi(?)" — OCR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

44. "The lord of the gods" is Indra; Shachi here is his consort (not the Lord's mother). Ananta is Ananta-Shesha, the thousand-headed servant of the Lord. All the demigods and the residents of Vaikuntha themselves come to the Lord's wedding as His servants — thus the poet shows that Gaura is the Supreme Lord Himself.

22. Narahari — "gorā rasamaya sukhera ālaya..." (GPT1 p. 98, no. 14; BR)

The bridegroom's wedding bath (before the second wedding): the women, crying "ulu-lu", gaze at His face; some tremble, others anoint Him with perfumes and turmeric, rub oil into His curls, bathe Him with Ganga water, dry Him with a towel and clothe Him in a dry red-bordered cloth. Raga not specified.

Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.⁴⁵

22.1. Gora, full of rasa, abode of joy, takes the bath enjoined before the wedding;

the wives of noble families, crying "ulu-lu", gaze at His lovely moonlike face.

22.2. Some, at the breeze coming from that body, tremble again and again — more than lightning;

others, longing to touch Him, cannot master themselves as they anoint Him with perfumes, turmeric and the rest.

22.3. One, rubbing oil into His lovely curls, feels so much merriment rise in her heart; another bathes Him with Ganga water — manifold her movements, beyond compare.

22.4. Yet another, half-smiling, floating in rasa, dries His body, taking a towel in her hands;

they clothe Him in a dry red-bordered cloth — Narahari is in great merriment over it.⁴⁶

45. GPT1 — p. 98, no. 14 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 357); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 14 (catalogue: NG-055; the catalogue's first line "(gāra samaya..." is a garbling of "gorā rasamaya"). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 806–807; ed. 1960, vv. 1477–1480). Variant: 22.4 GPT1 "pidhāya e", BR "pimḍhā-ae" (the same: "they clothe"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Cf. the bath before the first wedding (no. 3).

46. The trembling and the "longing to touch" of the women who perform the bridegroom's bath are an image of the Lord's all-attractive beauty, conveyed in a lyrical manner; this is a wedding rite and merriment, not nagari-bhava (see note 5).

23. Narahari — "ki ānanda śacīra bhabane..." (GPT1 p. 99, no. 15; BR)

After the bath Gaurahari sits on a wondrous throne; the married women perform auspicious rites; His dear ones come, cannot take their eyes off Him, and joyfully dress Him for the wedding. Raga not specified. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.⁴⁷

23.1. What joy in Shachi's house! The married women perform the auspicious rites.

23.2. Having taken the bath enjoined before the wedding, Gaurahari sits on a wondrous throne.

23.3. The radiance of His form enchants the mind; His curling, glossy hair falls beautifully down His back.

23.4. His dear ones come to Gora's side — having looked once, they cannot turn their eyes away.

23.5. Intoxicated with great joy, all array Him in various ways in His wedding attire.

23.6. What can Narahari say? Let me die taking on myself the misfortunes of this peerless attire!⁴⁸

47. GPT1 — p. 99, no. 15 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 358); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 15. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-286). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 807; ed. 1960, vv. 1481–1486). Variants: 23.1 BR "ki ānanda śacī-bhabane"; 23.4 BR "priyagaṇa... nāre phirāite nayana". Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

48. "Taking on myself the misfortunes" (bālāi laiṇā mari) is a homely formula of love: may every misfortune that threatens the beloved fall on me (cf. note 7).

24. Narahari — "nadīyāra śaśī rasika-śekhara..." (GPT1 p. 99, no. 16; BR)

*The bridegroom's wedding attire: the Moon of Nadia in auspicious wedding array — His body anointed, a crescent-shaped sandal tilaka on His forehead, a crown of flowers on His head, His eyes lined with collyrium, makara earrings in His ears; paddy and durva tied with thread, a golden mirror in His right hand. Raga not specified. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴⁹

24.1. The Moon of Nadia, crown of the connoisseurs of rasa, shines beautifully in auspicious wedding attire;

His body anointed, on His forehead a lovely sandal tilaka shaped like a half-moon.

24.2. On His head a wondrous crown of many flowers: whom would its arrangement not enchant?

The line of collyrium at His eyes does not let the young chaste wives of noble families stay within the bounds of their families.⁵⁰

24.3. At the roots of His ears jewelled makara earrings; how the radiance of His cheeks flashes!

To His sweetly smiling face hosts of full moons offer themselves.

24.4. Paddy, durva and the rest tied with thread, and a beautiful golden mirror in His right hand; says Narahari: seeing every limb adorned with ornaments, who can keep his composure?

49. GPT1 — p. 99, no. 16 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 358); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 16 (catalogue: NG-056). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 807; ed. 1960, vv. 1487–1490). Variants: 24.4 GPT1 "dakṣiṇa dakṣiṇa kare" (the word repeated), BR "dakṣiṇa kare" — following the BR; 24.3 GPT1 "pūrṇima-cāṁḍera", BR "pūrṇimā-cāndera". Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Next in GPT1 (no. 17 — signed Ghanashyama; no. 18 onwards — Narahari) and in the BR comes the wedding procession to the house of Sanatana Mishra and the wedding (chapter 22).

50. The praise of the bridegroom's beauty is expressed in a conventional turn of love poetry (a beauty before which women "do not stay within the bounds of their families" is a familiar formula about Krishna); the poet speaks of the Lord's all-attractive beauty. Translated faithfully to the author; on the position of the tradition see note 5.

Chapter 22. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — VI: the wedding with Vishnupriya; the beginning of the ashtakaliya

*Continuation of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 22: the end of GPT section 2.4 "The second marriage" — the wedding procession to the house of Sanatana Mishra, the reception of the bridegroom, the wedding, the gods and celestial women at the wedding, the bridal chamber (vasara), the morning after the wedding and the Lord's return home with Vishnupriya (nos. 1–16; GPT 2.4 nos. 18–20, 22–34); the beginning of section 5.2 "Ashtakaliya" — the songs of Gaura's awakening at the end of the night (nos. 17–26; GPT 5.2 nos. 1–10). Narahari Chakravarti quotes all the wedding padas of the chapter one after another in the 12th wave of the Bhakti-ratnakara (Ishana shows Srinivasa the house of Jagannatha Mishra), and all the awakening songs in his Gaura-charita-chintamani (kiranas 2–3: the last part of the night and the awakening). Before translation the signatures in these sections were checked throughout, in the OCR and on the scan; the Bhakti-ratnakara (ed. 1960, vv. 1491–1626) was read continuously. Not translated: 2.4 no. 17 — signed Ghanashyama (outside the appendix); no. 21 — a pada in nagari-bhava (assigned to the section of nagari padas); nos. 35–38 — without the Narahari signature: an extract from Lochana Dasa's Chaitanya-mangala (no. 38 is signed "dāsa trilocana"; translated with Lochana, *Chaitanya-mangala, Adi-khanda, part 14, vv. ≈146–178); nos. 39–40 — Vrindavana Dasa (= CB Adi 15). The base text is GPT1 (doubtful places from the scan), collated with GPT2, the BR (eds. 1912 and 1960) and the Gaura-charita-chintamani (ed. 1947); PK, KGC, PS and the Gita-chandrodaya have been checked. On Vishnupriya and the wedding rites as lila see note 2; on the motif of the women of Nadia, note 5; on the ashtakaliya as eternal lila, note 36. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "gaura rasika-śekharabara..." (GPT1 p. 100, section 2.4, no. 18; BR)

The wedding procession: Gaura, surrounded by brahmanas, sets out for the wedding in a palanquin; instruments of the four kinds sound; invisible celestial dancers dance together with earthly ones, the gandharvas sing with the singers; Ananta, Brahma, Shiva, Indra, Ganesha, Parvati float in an ocean of joy; horses, elephants, guards, jesters, hundreds of banners; having gone round Nadia and paused on the bank of the Suradhuni, the procession approaches Mishra's house. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; ornate Vrajabuli.¹

1.1. Gaura, best of the crowns of the connoisseurs of rasa, surrounded by His dear brahmanas —

"joyfully I shall celebrate an auspicious wedding!" — sets out, mounting the palanquin; strings, metal, drums and winds — splendid instruments of the four kinds — sound in many manners: the sound has filled the vault of the sky.²

1.2. All the instruments are splendid and new; the boom of the mardala increases the joy: "dho-dho dhigi taga dhilanga, dha-dha ni-ni nidhiya";

invisible, the celestial dancers together with the [earthly] dancers dance the lasya without pause:
"bhana taka-taka thai-thai-thai, ai ati ni-ni-ni tiya".

1.3. Together with the singers, rejoicing, the gandharvas sing sweetly; shrutis, sweet gramas and the rest — in every manner they display their delight;

the Thousand-mouthed One, Brahma, Mahesha, the lord of the gods with his retinue, Ganesha, Girija and others — how could they keep their composure? — float in an ocean of joy.³

- 1.4. Horses, elephants, many armed men; jesters display their arts; hundreds of banners and the like shine — the crowd blocks the road; going round the town of Nadia, pausing again and again on the bank of the Suradhuni — near Mishra's house Narahari beholds this splendour.

1. GPT1 — p. 100, section 2.4 ("the second marriage"), no. 18 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 359); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 18 (catalogue: NG-057). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 809–810; ed. 1960, vv. 1495–1498), immediately after pada no. 17 on the same procession signed by Ghanashyama ("ghana ghanaśyāma hiya umatāāi"; = BR vv. 1491–1494 — outside the appendix); after it the BR gives all the wedding padas of this chapter one after another (vv. 1499–1614), then prose: Vishnupriya's service to her mother-in-law and the Lord's journey to Gaya (vv. 1615–1625). Variants: 1.1 GPT1 "surata cira" (misprint?), BR "surucira" — following the BR; 1.3 BR "surapati" — the same. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The wedding with Vishnupriya — CB Adi 15; CC Adi 16; Murari 1.14.

2. Vishnupriya is the eternal consort of the Lord, His own Bhu-shakti (the energy of the Earth); she is not a worldly wife but His own energy, and the wedding with her is the Lord's lila (note 30 of chapter 21). The Lord is bound by nothing that is enjoined; He accepts the wedding rites following the lila, for the joy of His mother and His associates (note 2 of chapter 21). So are all the padas of the chapter about the Lord's "marrying" to be understood. The instruments "of the four kinds" (tata ghana ānaddha śuśira) — strings, metal (cymbals, gongs), skin-covered (drums) and winds — are the classical division of Indian music.

3. As in the pada on the wedding day (no. 21 of chapter 21), the demigods gather at the Lord's wedding: Ananta-Shesha ("the Thousand-mouthed One"), Brahma, Shiva (Mahesha), Indra ("the lord of the gods"), Ganesha, Parvati (Girija); invisible to men, they come to serve their Lord and to behold His lila. The gandharvas are the celestial singers; shrutis and gramas are the intervals and scales of Indian music; lasya is the tender, "feminine" kind of dance.

2. Narahari — "gorācāṁḍera bibāha dekhibāre..." (GPT1 p. 100, no. 19; BR)

*The wives of noble families, with great longing, adorn themselves to see Gorachand's wedding: collyrium, braids with golden clasps, sindura and sandal, necklaces, flowers in their ears, silk saris; with stately gait they go to the wedding, and on seeing the poet's Lord they whisper. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴

- 2.1. To see Gorachand's wedding, with what longing the wives of noble families adorn themselves — not one can keep her composure!
- 2.2. Absorbed in rasa, how charmingly they line their eyes with collyrium — sidelong glances, arched brows;
smooth braids fall down their backs — how lovely the golden clasps!
- 2.3. On the forehead a dot of sindura, how beautifully the sandal shines! Their ornaments glitter; on their necks sway necklaces of gems and pearls; in their ears they put gandharaja and champaka flowers.
- 2.4. Putting on silk saris, leaving their homes, they walk with a stately gait like that of a royal elephant; seeing Narahari's Lord — the heart overflows — one whispers something into another's ear.⁵

4. GPT1 — p. 100, no. 19 (scan, PDF p. 359); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 19 (catalogue: NG-058). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 810; ed. 1960, vv. 1499–1502). Variant: in 2.3 the BR has the second half-lines interchanged ("...gandharāja cāṁpā dei kāṇe" in the first line, "...jhalamala kare ābharāṇe" in the second). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 2.1 is the refrain (dhru). The first line is the same as that of the pada on the first wedding (2.3 no. 22, no. 7 of chapter 21), but the text is different.

5. The poet describes the delight of the women of Nadia at the Lord's wedding in words close to the motif of the townswomen (nagaris) enamoured of Gaura. We translate faithfully to the author; but the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) does not accept the worship of Gaura in the mood of "Gaura-nagari": Gaura is Krishna Himself in the mood and lustre of Radha; He came to taste Her love, not to enjoy as a nagara. The Lord's attractiveness for the people of Navadvipa is the quality of Bhagavan, who attracts all; it is not worldly passion. The same holds for the other padas of the chapter about the women of Nadia (nos. 3, 11, 12; cf. note 5 of chapter 21). GPT pada no. 21 ("āhā mari ki madhura rīti": the "nagaris of Nadia" dream of being "with Gora day and night" and of touching His golden body in the bridal chamber; = BR vv. 1507–1510) is openly in nagari-bhava and is assigned to the section of nagari padas.

3. Narahari — "sai ai dekha nadīyāra cāmḍe..." (GPT1 p. 101, no. 20; BR)

*A woman says to her friend: look at the Moon of Nadia — hundreds of Kamadevas, offering themselves for His beauty, fall weeping at His feet; His glance, His face, His smile; who has arranged this wedding attire — the crown, the curls, the yellow thread and durva, the golden mirror? Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁶

- 3.1. Friend, look — there is the Moon of Nadia! Offering themselves for His world-enchancing beauty, hundreds upon hundreds of Madanas fall weeping at His feet.
- 3.2. The glance of His two eyes, drowning in rasa — I think the Creator made it to slay young women;
the beauty of His moon-face takes away the moon's pride; mingled with His smile, nectar pours down in streams.⁷
- 3.3. Ah, I die, I die! With what longing of heart has someone arranged this wedding attire!
On His head a wondrous, dazzlingly bright crown, covered by His smooth, curling, lovely locks.
- 3.4. In His hand the yellow thread and the blades of durva enjoined for the auspicious rite; the incomparable golden mirror shines beautifully;
His garments and ornaments are sweet; by the grace of every limb [He] enchants Narahari's mind.

6. GPT1 — p. 101, no. 20 (scan, PDF p. 360); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 20 (catalogue: NG-059). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 810; ed. 1960, vv. 1503–1506). The variants are minor (3.1 GPT1 "laiñā", BR "laiyā"; 3.3 GPT1 "enā", BR "e nā"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 3.1 is the refrain. The next pada in the GPT and the BR (no. 21) is in nagari-bhava (note 5).

7. "Made it to slay young women" is a conventional formula of love poetry about Krishna's beauty; here it speaks of the all-attractive beauty of the Lord (see note 5). Madana is Kamadeva, the god of love; hundreds of Madanas "offer themselves" (nichani — give themselves as a ransom) for His beauty: it surpasses the beauty of Kamadeva himself.

4. Narahari — "sanātana miśrera bhabane..." (GPT1 pp. 101–102, no. 22; BR)

*The reception of the bridegroom in the house of Sanatana Mishra: music sounds; Sanatana with his kin comes out to meet Him; the bridegroom shines in the palanquin; around Him brahmanas and worthy men, a countless crowd; the blind, holding others' hands, stand where Gaurachandra is, the lame come out on the road, the infirm totter along with sticks; all sing Gora's glories; children and old men dance; hundreds of lamps burn; Mishra, embracing his son-in-law, brings Him into the house, seats Him on a wondrous seat, showers Him with flowers and performs the reception of the bridegroom. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁸

- 4.1. What auspicious rites are performed in the house of Sanatana Mishra — who could describe them?
- 4.2. All kinds of splendid instruments sound; an immense joyful clamour surges up.
- 4.3. Sanatana with his kin comes forward to receive his jewel of a son-in-law.
- 4.4. How captivating the son-in-law's attire! He shines in the midst of the wondrous palanquin.

- 4.5. On all sides brahmanas and worthy men; the crowd of countless people cannot be counted.
- 4.6. The blind, holding others' hands, stand on the side where Gaurachandra is.⁹
- 4.7. The lame come out on the main road and gaze to their heart's content at Gora's beauty.
- 4.8. Whoever cannot walk comes slowly along the road, leaning on a stick.
- 4.9. Who does not sing Gora's glories! They do not know how happiness grows in their hearts.
- 4.10. Various instruments sound in various manners; children and old men dance — no one can stand still.
- 4.11. Hundreds of great lamps burn; the light has filled the earth and the vault of the sky.
- 4.12. Someone displays some entertainment — and all that happens there spreads over the whole earth.
- 4.13. Mishra, greatly rejoicing, embracing his son-in-law, enters the house.
- 4.14. Seating [Him] on a wondrous seat, he showers [Him] with flowers, gazing at His moon-face.
- 4.15. Cries of "jaya, jaya" sound without pause; the musicians of both sides play their instruments in rivalry.
- 4.16. Mishra performs the reception of his son-in-law; Narahari, seeing it, refreshes his eyes.

8. GPT1 — pp. 101–102, no. 22 (scan, PDF pp. 360–361); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 22 (catalogue: NG-061; the number in the catalogue is garbled — "no. 2"). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 811–812; ed. 1960, vv. 1511–1526). Variants: 4.12 GPT1 "kula-raṅga", BR "kuna raṅga" ("some entertainment") — following the BR; others are minor. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The reception of the bridegroom in Sanatana's house — CB Adi 15; in Lochana — Chaitanya-mangala, Adi-khanda, part 14, vv. 146–147.

9. The blind, the lame, the infirm — an image by which the poet shows that the Lord draws all to Himself without distinction. "The reception" (baraṇa) is the honouring of the bridegroom by the bride's father: water for washing the feet, arghya, clothes, ornaments, a garland (in Lochana, vv. 146–147, 153). "Of both sides" (domhāra) — the musicians of the bridegroom and of the bride.

5. Narahari — "nadīyāra śaśī bilasaye cāru..." (GPT1 p. 102, no. 23; BR)

*The bridegroom under the wedding canopy: Vishnupriya's mother, under various pretexts, looks at Him again and again, her feet not touching the ground; with the married women skilled in auspicious rites she places rice and durva on His head, blesses Him, circles Him seven times with a lamp and, going into the house, looks back at the poet's Lord and cannot take even half a step. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁰

- 5.1. The Moon of Nadia shines charmingly under the wedding canopy — how sweet His array!
His youthful body surpasses gold and fresh butter — seeing His bearing, who could keep composure?
- 5.2. Again and again Vishnupriya's mother, under various pretexts, gazes [at Him] with unblinking eyes; with what joy her heart overflows — her feet do not touch the ground!
- 5.3. Finely dressed, she comes with the married women, very skilled in auspicious rites; on His lovely head she places rice and durva and blesses Him in a matchless way.
- 5.4. Lamp in hand she circles [Him] seven times; having performed the reception of the bridegroom, she goes into the house, but, looking back at the Lord of Narahari, under the weight of tenderness she cannot take even half a step.¹¹

10. GPT1 — p. 102, no. 23 (scan, PDF p. 361); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 23 (catalogue: NG-062). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 812; ed. 1960, vv. 1527–1530). Variant: 5.4 GPT1 "cāhe pāṭi nā cale pada ādha" ("looks back — cannot take even half a step"), BR "cāhe pāṭiyā, cale pada ādha" ("looking back, takes half a step") — following GPT1. The signature is garbled in the GPT1 OCR ("narahabi"), so the signature-checking script misses the pada (chapter 21). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

11. The wedding canopy (chomṣālā) is the place of the rites in the courtyard of the bride's house. The reception of the bridegroom (bare urathiyā) is performed by the bride's mother and the married women: rice and durva on the head, a lamp, the sevenfold circling (in Lochana, vv. 149–152). The tenderness of the mother-in-law for the Lord is parental love, which He accepts from His associates.

6. Narahari — "sanātana miśrera gharaṇī..." (GPT1 pp. 102–103, no. 24; BR)

*The wedding: Sanatana's wife adorns her daughter; at Mishra's bidding Vishnupriya is brought out and seated on a throne under the canopy; Vishnupriya first, offering a garland, gives herself to the Lord's feet; Gaura with a smile puts a garland round her neck; They shower each other with flowers; Sanatana performs the kanya-dana, placing his daughter's hand in Vishvambhara's, and gives the dowry; at the end the homa is performed. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹²

- 6.1. The wife of Sanatana Mishra performs so many customary rites — I cannot even tell them.
- 6.2. She swims in an ocean of happiness, adorning her daughter with many ornaments.
- 6.3. Seeing Vishnupriya's beautiful attire, joy grows boundlessly in everyone's heart.
- 6.4. The venerable Mishra at the auspicious moment told his dear ones to bring his daughter.
- 6.5. Mishra's house is captivating; the spacious courtyard glitters.
- 6.6. There the wedding canopy is beautiful; they brought the daughter and seated her on a throne.
- 6.7. All the rites there are by custom are also performed — and in this is boundless merriment.
- 6.8. First the goddess Vishnupriya, offering a garland, gave herself to the Lord's feet.¹³
- 6.9. Smiling slightly, Gaura Raya put a garland of flowers round Vishnupriya's neck.
- 6.10. The two shower each other with flowers; each knows well what is in the other's heart.
- 6.11. Moment by moment the joy grows: Gaurachandra rejoices together with Vishnupriya.
- 6.12. What new beauty without end! On all sides the women raise cries of "jaya".
- 6.13. Everyone makes a clamour; various instruments sound — the sound pierces the sky.
- 6.14. The blessed Sanatana Mishra joyfully sat down to perform the kanya-dana.
- 6.15. Having performed the rites enjoined by the Vedas and the rest, he gave his daughter, placing her hand in Vishvambhara's.
- 6.16. Floating in happiness, he gave the dowry: splendid cows, wealth, land, a bed, menservants and maidservants.
- 6.17. At the very end the homa is performed: the daughter is seated at Vishvambhara's left.
- 6.18. How wondrous the sweetness of the two of Them! What can one say? Narahari gives himself for Them both.¹⁴

12. GPT1 — pp. 102–103, no. 24 (scan, PDF pp. 361–362); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 24 (catalogue: NG-063). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 812–813; ed. 1960, vv. 1531–1548). The variants are minor (6.10 GPT1 "kelākeli", BR "phelāpheli" — the same "shower each other"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The wedding — CB Adi 15; in Lochana — vv. 155–160.

13. Vishnupriya is the eternal energy of the Lord (note 2); offering the garland, she "gives herself" to the Lord (ātmasarpaṇa) — not a worldly bride but His shakti, eternally serving Him. The exchange of garlands and flowers is a wedding custom; "each knows what is in the other's heart" — the inseparability of the Lord and His energy.

14. Kanya-dana is the "gift of the daughter" by her father; the homa is the fire sacrifice; the bride is seated at the bridegroom's left. The Lord accepts these rites following the lila (note 2). "Gives himself for Them" (nichani) is a formula of love and devotion (cf. note 7).

7. Narahari — "dekhi pahum̐ka bibāha mādhuri..." (GPT1 p. 103, no. 25; BR)

*The gods at the wedding: seeing the sweetness of the Lord's wedding, Shesha, Shiva, Brahma, Indra, Ganapati and others thrill; the chariots of the gods block the path of the sky; invisible, telling one another of His deeds, the gods shower the wedding with flowers and praise the good fortune of the brahmana Sanatana; the poet longs to be intoxicated with that joy. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*¹⁵

7.1. Seeing the sweetness of the Lord's wedding, no one can stay steady:

Shesha, Shiva, Brahma, Indra, Ganapati and the others — their whole bodies thrill.

7.2. The crowd is immense: many chariots of the gods have blocked the path of the sky; sweet cries of "jaya, jaya" sound — how it was cannot be told.

7.3. In great delight, telling one another of [the Lord's] wondrous deeds, full of rasa, invisible, they pour down a rain of flowers, spreading lovely merriment.

7.4. Praising the great good fortune of the brahmana Sanatana, they are utterly enraptured;
the hope of the servant Narahari: will my mind become intoxicated with this joy?¹⁶

15. GPT1 — p. 103, no. 25 (scan, PDF p. 362); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 25 (catalogue: NG-064). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 813; ed. 1960, vv. 1549–1552). Variants: 7.3 BR "alakṣita" ("invisible") — the same; 7.4 GPT1 "bhāgabhara", BR "bhāga bhara" — the same. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

16. The demigods are the Lord's servants: invisibly they come to behold His lila and to serve it (note 3). Sanatana Mishra's good fortune is that the Lord Himself has accepted his daughter. Shesha is Ananta; Ganapati is Ganesha.

8. Narahari — "deba-ramañibṛnda biraci beśa..." (GPT1 p. 103, no. 26; BR)

*The celestial women at the wedding: adorned, with flashing bangles, their countless hosts roam the path of the sky and deem their eyes rewarded at seeing Gaura's wedding; praising Mishra's house, they thrill; with full eyes they drink in the form of the Lord and His beloved and give their lives for Them. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*¹⁷

8.1. The hosts of celestial women have adorned themselves in various ways;

[their ornaments] ring, the lustre of their conch-shell bangles flashes matchlessly.

8.2. Countless hosts roam the path of the sky, eagerness in their hearts;
they deem their eyes rewarded, seeing the wedding of the beautiful Gaura.

8.3. Praising the lovely custom of Mishra's house, they thrill all over;
new and ever new desires arise in them — composure cannot be kept.

8.4. With full eyes they drink in the form of the incomparable Lord and His beloved;
how much can Narahari say? — all give their lives for Them.¹⁸

17. GPT1 — p. 103, no. 26 (scan, PDF p. 362); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 26 (catalogue: NG-065). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 813–814; ed. 1960, vv. 1553–1556). Variants: 8.2 GPT1 "mānata diṭhi sakala nirakhi gaurabara nibāha", BR "saphala", "bibāha" — following the BR; 8.1 "bājata thara māhi" (BR 1912 "bājata thara, nāhi atula") — the sense is unclear, the translation conjectural. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

18. The celestial women, like the demigods, come to behold the Lord's lila and to serve Him (cf. no. 21 of chapter 21: "we shall make merry at the wedding together with the wives of Nadia"). "His beloved" (preyasī) is Vishnupriya, the eternal energy of the Lord (note 2). "They give their lives" (prāṇa nichani deta) is a formula of love and devotion (note 7).

9. Narahari — "āhā mari mari suranārīgaṇa..." (GPT1 p. 103, no. 27; BR)

The celestial women, watching the wedding of the Moon of Nadia, talk among themselves: Sanatana Mishra is beside himself with joy at having given his daughter to Krishna; seating his daughter at his son-in-law's left he performs the homa but cannot take his eyes from His face; Mishra's wife is as if maddened in the wedding bustle and, gazing at the poet's Lord, does not feel the ground under her feet.

*Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁹

- 9.1. Ah, I die! The celestial women, seeing the wedding of the Moon of Nadia, all swim in that ocean of beauty and sate their thirsting eyes.
- 9.2. One says to another: "Look — Mishra Sanatana's heart cannot contain his joy!
With what longing he has given his daughter to Krishna — how much he says, how many gifts of every kind he gives!"²⁰
- 9.3. Another says: "Seating his daughter at his son-in-law's left, he deems himself blessed;
he performs the homa, but his mind is not on it — he keeps gazing at the moon-face".
- 9.4. Yet another says: "Look — Mishra's wife is as if maddened in the wedding bustle; under various pretexts she gazes at the Lord of Narahari, and in her delight her feet do not touch the ground".

19. GPT1 — p. 103, no. 27 (scan, PDF p. 362); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 27. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-287). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 814; ed. 1960, vv. 1557–1560). The variants are minor (9.2 BR 1960 "kaṣe" — an OCR distortion of "kṛṣṇe"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

20. "Has given his daughter to Krishna" — the celestial women call Gaura Krishna outright: He is Krishna Himself, and Vishnupriya is His eternal energy (note 2).

10. Narahari — "deba debaramaṇī ullāse..." (GPT1 p. 104, no. 28; BR)

*Gods and celestial women talk softly of the wedding: fortunate are the people of Nadia; the brahmanas who have beautiful daughters lament that they could not give a daughter to such a bridegroom; all praise Sanatana Mishra; he completes the homa; the women raise their cries; Vishnupriya and Gorachand are led to the bridal chamber. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²¹

- 10.1. The gods and the celestial women, rejoicing, all talk of the wedding in soft voices:
- 10.2. "Fortunate are the people of Nadia! The wedding has taken place — seeing it, all rejoice".
- 10.3. All the brahmanas who have a beautiful daughter at home grieve bitterly at heart:
- 10.4. "We could not give a daughter to such a bridegroom — such happiness is not in our fate!"
- 10.5. So one says one thing, another another; all praise Sanatana Mishra.
- 10.6. The blessed Sanatana Mishra completed the homa and all the rest.
- 10.7. Gazing at his daughter and son-in-law, he feels his happiness grow moment by moment and his heart overflow.
- 10.8. Who could tell of the wedding customs? Again and again the women raise cries of "jaya".
- 10.9. Who can stay calm as the goddess Vishnupriya and Gorachand are led to the bridal chamber?
- 10.10. The Lord of Narahari, Gaura Raya, goes to the bridal chamber with such delight in His heart!²²

21. GPT1 — p. 104, no. 28 (scan, PDF p. 363); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 28 (catalogue: NG-066; GPT2 has "dekha deba ramaṇī" — "look: the celestial women..."). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 814–815; ed. 1960, vv. 1561–1570). Variants: 10.4 GPT1 "nā pārāli", BR "nā pārīlum" — following the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

22. The bridal chamber (bāsara-ghara) is the room where the newly-weds spend the first night; by custom the women of the house gather there, sing and joke with the bridegroom (nos. 11–12). The brahmanas' lament is praise of the bridegroom: such a son-in-law is not to be found again.

11. Narahari — "nadīyā-binoda gorā..." (GPT1 p. 104, no. 29; BR)

The bridal chamber: Gora, the delight of Nadia, enters the bridal chamber; the wives of noble families seat Vishvambhara with Vishnupriya and gaze unblinkingly at His face; one, wishing to touch Him, anoints Him with sandal, another sets a casket of betel before Him, a third leans towards Him in jest, yet another offers Him a handful of flowers. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.²³

- 11.1. Gora, the delight of Nadia, stealer of the lives of ever new young women, enters the bridal chamber.
- 11.2. The wives of noble families, joy in their hearts, taking Vishvambhara and Vishnupriya, sweetly, by custom, seat [Them] in the bridal chamber and gaze with unblinking eyes at that face.
- 11.3. One, wishing to touch [Him], smilingly anoints His body with fragrant sandal; another, having prepared rolls of betel, merrily sets the casket before Him.
- 11.4. Yet another, on the pretext of a jest, leans towards Him, her heart thrilling; and another stands before the Lord of Narahari and gracefully offers a handful of flowers.²⁴

23. GPT1 — p. 104, no. 29 (scan, PDF p. 363); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 29. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-288). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 815; ed. 1960, vv. 1571–1574). The variants are minor (11.2 BR "chande" for "chāṁḍe"; 11.4 BR "ḍhali' paṛe gāya"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Line 11.1 is the refrain.

24. In the bridal chamber, by custom, the married women of the house joke merrily with the bridegroom, treat Him to betel and anoint Him with sandal; the poet describes these wedding jests — this is not nagari-bhava, though the words ("stealer of the lives of young women", "wishing to touch") are close to its language. We translate faithfully to the author; for the position of the tradition see note 5. The Lord's attractiveness is the quality of Bhagavan, who attracts all; and what the women do here is service to Him: sandal, betel, flowers.

12. Narahari — "bāsara gharete gorārāya. rūpe koṭi madana mātāya..." (GPT1 p. 104, no. 30; BR)

In the bridal chamber: by His beauty Gaura Raya intoxicates millions of Kamadevas; the wives of noble families cannot take their eyes from His moon-face and whisper with their veils drawn together; one covers the thrill of her body with her cloth, another trembles in the rapture of rasa, yet another, unable to master her heart, offers her life at His reddish feet; the poet longs to see these pastimes. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.²⁵

- 12.1. In the bridal chamber Gaura Raya by His beauty intoxicates millions of Madanas.
- 12.2. The wives of noble families, joy in their hearts, give their eyes to His moon-face.
- 12.3. One, drawing her veil close to another's, says something, smiling slightly.
- 12.4. All their bodies are full of thrill — they cover it with their cloth.
- 12.5. One, standing beside another, trembles in the rapture of rasa.
- 12.6. Another, her heart without rest, offers her life at His reddish feet.²⁶
- 12.7. How much merriment in the bridal chamber — who could tell so much?
- 12.8. A great hope is in Narahari's heart: shall I see all these pastimes?

25. GPT1 — p. 104, no. 30 (scan, PDF p. 363); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 30. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-289; the row NG-067 with the same first line "bāsara gharete gorārāya" is no. 31, no. 13 here). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 815–816; ed. 1960, vv. 1575–1582). Variants: 12.6 "rāṅgā pāya" in GPT1 and BR 1912 (the BR 1960 OCR has "rādhā pāya", a distortion); 12.8 GPT1 "narahari mane baṛa āśa", BR "narahari-mane ei āśa". Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

26. "Offers her life at His feet" (nichaye jībana rāṅgā pāya) is an image of devotion to the Lord. The thrill and the "rapture of rasa" of the women in the bridal chamber are delight in the Lord's all-attractive beauty; we translate faithfully to the author, for the position of the tradition see note 5.

13. Narahari — "bāsara gharete gorārāya. biṣṇupriyā saha..." (GPT1 p. 105, no. 31; BR)

*The morning after the wedding: Gaura Raya spends the night with Vishnupriya in the bridal chamber; Sanatana and his kin are enraptured; at dawn the Lord performs the kushandika and asks Sanatana to let Him go home; Sanatana, restraining himself, places his daughter's hand in Vishvambhara's; the Lord bows to the venerable people, and they bless Him with rice and durva; Mishra's wife cannot master herself; amid Vedic chanting, the women's cries and music all perform the auspicious rites for the journey. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²⁷

- 13.1. In the bridal chamber Gaura Raya happily spends the night with Vishnupriya.
- 13.2. The merriment is endless — it cannot be told; Sanatana with his kin is enraptured with joy.
- 13.3. At dawn Gaurahari, having performed the kushandika and the other rites, was filled with joy.²⁸
- 13.4. "I shall go to My home," He says to the venerable Sanatana Mishra.
- 13.5. Sanatana, sending off his jewel of a son-in-law, keeps his composure with difficulty.
- 13.6. How much he consoled his daughter — and gave her, placing her hand in Vishvambhara's.
- 13.7. Gaurahari, setting out, bows in great joy to the venerable people.
- 13.8. What can be said of the longing of them all? With rice and durva on His head they bless [Him].
- 13.9. Mishra's wife, sending off her daughter and son-in-law, cannot keep her composure.
- 13.10. As Gora sets out for home, the brahmanas chant the Vedas on all sides.
- 13.11. The women raise cries of "jaya"; various instruments sound, the bhatas recite praises.
- 13.12. Gazing at the Lord of Narahari, all perform the auspicious rites proper for a departure.

27. GPT1 — p. 105, no. 31 (scan, PDF p. 364); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 31 (catalogue: NG-067). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 816; ed. 1960, vv. 1583–1594). Variants: 13.8 GPT1 "karite ki se bhāra sādha", BR "kahite ki se sabhāra sādha" — following the BR; 13.11 GPT1 "kāyabāra", BR "rāyabāra" (the same — a song of praise). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. The morning after the wedding and the departure — CB Adi 15; in Lochana — vv. 166–174.

28. The kushandika is the rite at the sacred fire on the day after the wedding, which completes it. The Lord, the Goal of all rites, performs them following the lila (note 2), and bows to His elders, setting an example of respect.

14. Narahari — "baraja-bhūṣaṇa gaura-bidhubara..." (GPT1 p. 105, no. 32; BR)

*The return home: Gaura, the ornament of Vraja, after the wedding rides home in the palanquin with His beloved; countless men and women watch and say to one another: "This is Lakshmi and the Lord of Lakshmi!"; the praises of the bhatas, Vedic chanting, music, dancing, singing such that the does come out of the forest; at the hour of cow-dust, having paused on the bank of the Suradhuni, He comes home. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; ornate Vrajabuli.*²⁹

- 14.1. The ornament of Vraja, the beautiful moon — Gaura, having celebrated the wedding, with playful gait goes with His beloved to His home — His splendour is wondrous beyond words; mounted on the palanquin He flashes; the stream of the nectar of His beauty overflows;
His eyes adorned, His array incomparable — He enchants the minds of all people.
- 14.2. Cries of "jaya, jaya" sound without pause; countless men and women watch and say to one another: "It is as if Lakshmi and the Lord of Lakshmi — the two of Them — were shining!";³⁰ the singers of praises in great joy proclaim ever new sweet deeds;

many brahmanas chant the Vedas again and again — and their bodies thrill.

- 14.3. Many instruments — muraja, mardala, trisari, kundali, pataha — sound abundantly:
"ku-ku nu-nu nu-nu"; throngs of musicians play sweetly in various manners;
the dancing girls and lines of dancers dance, beating out "ta-dhika dhikita dhini, ni-dhi dhenna dhiki taka", keeping time; the movements of their feet — the lustre of their bodies flashes.
- 14.4. Jati, shruti, svaras, gramas, murcchanas, tanas — ever new alapas; hearing them, the does leave the forest and run to the skilled musicians;
all around the house a great clamour; the heart of the servant Narahari overflowed:
at the hour of cow-dust, having paused on the lovely bank of the Suradhuni, [the Lord] comes home.

29. GPT1 — p. 105, no. 32 (scan, PDF p. 364); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 32 (catalogue: NG-068). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 816–817; ed. 1960, vv. 1595–1598). Variants: 14.2 GPT1 "ucarita naba naba carita madhumaya", BR "ucari naba naba carita rasamaya" — the sense is the same; the onomatopoeic syllables in 14.3 differ among the witnesses (GPT1 "ku kunu nu nunu sudhā", BR 1912 "kuku nunu nunu, mu dhā"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Jati, shruti, svara, grama, murcchana, tana, alapa are terms of Indian music (modes, intervals, notes, scales, transitions, runs, preludes).

30. "Lakshmi and the Lord of Lakshmi" — in the newly-weds the people of Nadia recognise Lakshmi and Narayana: Vishnupriya is the eternal energy of the Lord (note 2), Gaura is the Lord Himself; "the ornament of Vraja" (baraja-bhūṣaṇa) is Krishna. Cf. CB Adi 15 (= GPT 2.4 no. 39, Vrindavana Dasa): on the way back some say this is Hara and Gauri, others — Kamala and Sri Hari.

15. Narahari — "gorācāṁḍa bibāha kariyā..." (GPT1 p. 106, no. 33; BR)

*The welcome at home: Gorachand, having married, returns home in joy; the invisible gods strew the way with flowers; someone hurries to tell Shachi of the wedding; hearing the music, Shachi, beside herself with joy, comes out of the house, circles the newly-weds with countless offerings and casts them away, kisses her son's moon-face and leads her son and daughter-in-law into the house; Vishvambhara with Vishnupriya sit on the throne; the women raise cries of "ulu-lu", the bhatas recite praises, the brahmanas chant the Vedas. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³¹

- 15.1. Gorachand, having celebrated the wedding, comes home in great joy.
- 15.2. The invisible gods shower flowers along the whole way.
- 15.3. An ocean of happiness in Nadia! Someone tells Mother Shachi of the wedding.
- 15.4. Hearing the clamour of the great music, Shachidevi is beside herself with joy.
- 15.5. Mother Shachi [comes] out of the house; circling [the newly-weds], she casts away countless offerings.³²
- 15.6. Tenderly kissing the moon-face, she enters the house, leading her son and her daughter-in-law.
- 15.7. Vishvambhara with Vishnupriya sit on the throne; all the associates gaze at Them.
- 15.8. The women raise cries of "ulu-lu"; the whole house became filled with blessing.
- 15.9. The bhatas recite praises; the brahmanas chant the Vedas without pause.
- 15.10. All joyfully play various instruments. How much can Narahari tell with a single mouth?

31. GPT1 — p. 106, no. 33 (scan, PDF p. 365); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 33 (catalogue: NG-069). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, pp. 817–818; ed. 1960, vv. 1599–1610). Variants: between 15.4 and 15.5 the BR has two couplets more: "Mother Shachi outside the house waits with the chaste wives, watching the road. Gora with all comes slowly and at the door descends from the palanquin. Seeing her son and daughter-in-law, mother..." (vv. 1603–1605); in GPT1 these lines are compressed into the single couplet 15.5 — the translation follows GPT1. 15.8 BR "sakala bhubana" ("the whole world"). Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B.

32. "Circling, she casts away" (nichiyā phelaye) — the custom of nirmanchhana: the mother circles the newly-weds with offerings and casts them away, warding off all evil (in Lochana, vv. 175–178). Shachi is the mother of the Lord, eternally abiding in parental love for Him. Shachi welcomes her son and daughter-in-law — CB Adi 15.

16. Narahari — "gorā guṇamaṇi sughaṛa-śekhara..." (GPT1 p. 106, no. 34; BR)

*The Lord gives gifts and sends off the guests: to the bhatas, dancers, singers, musicians, beggars and brahmanas He gives clothes, ornaments and wealth, fulfilling their desires, and satisfies all with kind words; all go home singing the glories of Gaurahari; Shachi honours each of the women. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*³³

16.1. Gora, the jewel of virtues, the crown of the skilful, in great joy of heart sends off [with gifts] the many people who came to the wedding in excitement.

16.2. To the bhatas, dancers, connoisseurs of song, musicians, beggars and the many brahmanas
He gives to all many clothes, ornaments and riches, fulfilling their desires.

16.3. With most sweet words He skilfully satisfies everyone;
all together go to their homes, singing the glories of Gaurahari.

16.4. Sri Shachi showed so much honour to each of the women; says Narahari: they all went home in happiness.³⁴

33. GPT1 — p. 106, no. 34 (scan, PDF p. 365); GPT2 — section 2.4, no. 34 (catalogue: NG-070). BR — 12th wave (ed. 1912, p. 818; ed. 1960, vv. 1611–1614). Variants: 16.1 GPT1 "bibāhe ātula", BR "bibāhe ākula" — following the BR; 16.2 GPT1 "manorama puri", BR "manoratha pūri" ("fulfilling desires") — following the BR. Not in PK, KGC, PS, the Gita-chandrodaya or the Gaura-charita-chintamani. B. Next in the BR comes prose on Vishnupriya's service to her mother-in-law and on the Lord's journey to Gaya (vv. 1615–1625); in the GPT — nos. 35–38 (an extract from Lochana's Chaitanya-mangala) and nos. 39–40 (Vrindavana Dasa) — outside the appendix (introductory note).

34. To send off with gifts (bidāya) all who came to the wedding and served at it is the custom; the Lord is a generous host, Shachi the mistress of the house. In the chronology of the biographies the Lord's journey to Gaya follows (CB Adi 17; CC Adi 17).

17. Narahari — "jāgaha jana-mana-cora caturabara..." (GPT1 p. 343, section 5.2, no. 1; GCC)

*Ashtakaliya, the songs of awakening at the end of the night: "Awake, Stealer of hearts, jewel of Radha's heart! The night is over. You who, hearing of the deeds of Vraja, find no taste in food or sleep, who hold sankirtana dearer than life — what sleep has overcome You?" Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*³⁵

17.1. Awake, Stealer of people's hearts, best of the clever, beautiful One who sports in the town of Nadia, —
jewel of the heart of Radha, crown of women, full of rasa — You who shine with Her light!³⁶

17.2. What shall I say? Again and again [I tell You]: the night is over!
What languor is this? I understand nothing — there is much doubt in my heart.

17.3. Hearing of the virtues of the lovely deeds of Vraja, You find no taste in food or sleep; telling of them, You pass days and nights — how then is sleep pleasing to You now?

17.4. Every moment You hold dearer than life the incomparable sankirtana, the root of joy; without it a moment seems to You a kalpa — and so Narahari's heart is perplexed.³⁷

35. GPT1 — p. 343, section 5.2 "Ashtakaliya" (dvitīya ucchvāsa — aṣṭakāliyalīlā), no. 1 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 602); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 1 (catalogue: NG-171). GCC — kirana 2 (the last part of the night: "the pastimes on the bed"), pada 23. All the awakening songs GPT 5.2 nos. 1–10 are in the GCC, but in a different order: in kirana 2 as padas 14 (no.

10) and 16–23 (nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, 4, 5, 2, 1), in kirana 3 ("the awakening") as pada 8 (no. 3); between them the GCC says that these songs were sung by a clever parrot (kīra), raised by the Lord's servant, together with Narahari (pada 15), and that the sleeping Gaura, absorbed in rasa, heard a little of them (pada 24). The variants are minor (17.1 GCC "jana-mana-cora"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Cf. Gaura's awakening in Vasu Ghosha (GPT 5.2 no. 11; chapter 12, no. 6).

36. Ashtakaliya, "the eight parts of the day": songs of the Lord's eternal pastimes in Navadvipa by the hours of day and night, on the model of the ashtakaliya of Radha and Krishna in Vraja; it is eternal lila, which devotees remember in their service, not the routine of an ordinary day. The Lord's sleep is not the sleep of a conditioned soul under the sway of maya: in the GCC Gaura's night is "the pastimes on the bed", absorption in the pastimes of Vraja (cf. 17.3; no. 18: "as before"); His associates wake Him (in the GCC a parrot, as in Vraja Vrinda's parrots wake Radha and Krishna), and in their joking reproaches to the "sluggard" is their love. "Jewel of Radha's heart... You who shine with Her light" (tākara hṛdaya-ratana-rucikārī, lit. "who illumines the jewel of Her heart") — Gaura is Krishna Himself, the jewel of Radha's heart, appearing in Her mood and lustre (CC Adi 1.5).

37. Sankirtana is the congregational singing of the holy names, for which the Lord appeared (CC Adi 3); a kalpa is a day of Brahma, an image of endlessly long time.

18. Narahari — "uṭha uṭha āji eki adbhuta ghuma..." (GPT1 pp. 343–344, no. 2; GCC)

*A joking reproach to the sleeping Gaura: "Get up! What strange sleep is this? People laugh at You; were it now as before, You would run away Yourself for shame; it is well that Your Gadadhara, Narahari and the others are asleep too and the old fears are gone — otherwise they would have run away, leaving You; sleep with them, but if it gets late, do not blame Narahari afterwards". Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*³⁸

18.1. Get up, get up! What wondrous sleep are You sleeping today, O clever One!

Never have I seen such a habit in You — how much longer must I coax You?

18.2. What joy is there in such languor at this hour? Others laugh at Your doings.

Were it now as before, You would not need waking: You would run away for shame.³⁹

18.3. Likewise Your Gadadhara, Narahari and all the others are lying asleep;

those fears are gone too — so it is well; otherwise they would have run away, leaving You.

18.4. What shall I say? Lie with Your dear ones — what do You lose by it?

But if it gets very late — do not blame Narahari afterwards.

38. GPT1 — pp. 343–344, no. 2 (scan, PDF pp. 602–603); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 2 (catalogue: NG-172). GCC — kirana 2, pada 22. The variants are minor (18.3 GCC "śuyā", "thuyā"; 18.4 GCC "śuyā thāka"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

39. "As before" — a hint at the eternal lila of Vraja: at the end of the night Krishna and the gopis hurriedly leave the kunja, afraid of being seen by the elders. Gadadhara, according to Kavi Karnapura's Gaura-ganoddeshā-dīpikā, is the manifestation of Radha in Gaura's lila; Narahari Sarakara is Madhumati, Radha's friend. In Navadvipa "those fears are gone" — so the associates sleep beside the Lord. The joking reproaches are the associates' love, not censure (note 36).

19. Narahari — "śuna śuna ohe kichu nā bujhiye..." (GPT1 p. 344, no. 3; GCC)

*At Gaura's bedside: the night is over, yet He, the enchanter of the world, sleeps, absorbed in who knows what rasa; Gadadhara, his eyes on His face, sits at His feet and smilingly presses them; Narahari floats in an ocean of joy, gazing at Gauranga, and whispers something into Gadadhara's ear; others, intoxicated with Gaura-rasa, doze; someone insists that the Lord be woken. Raga lalita. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁴⁰

19.1. Listen, listen! I cannot understand — in what rasa is He lost?

The night is over, and still Gora, the enchanter of the world, sleeps.

19.2. And look at Gadadhara: his eyes fixed on the face of Gaurangachand, he sits at His feet and, smiling, joyfully presses His feet.

19.3. Narahari floats in an ocean of joy, gazing at Gauranga; with wondrous grace he whispers something into Gadadhara's ear.

19.4. Others, intoxicated with Gaura-rasa, nod in drowsiness, their senses confused; and someone insists that the Lord of Narahari's life be woken.⁴¹

40. GPT1 — p. 344, no. 3 ("lalita"; scan, PDF p. 603); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 3 (catalogue: NG-173). GCC — kirana 3 ("the awakening"), pada 8 (introduced there with the words "and someone [says]", kopi ca). Variants: 19.1 "tamu" in both GPT1 and GCC — probably "tabu" ("still"); 19.2 GCC "ām̐khi diyā". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

41. Here Narahari is a participant in the lila at the Lord's bedside beside Gadadhara; if the pada belongs to Chakravarti, this is Narahari Sarakara, the Lord's associate (introductory note in ch. 17; cf. note 39). Gadadhara pressing the Lord's feet is an image of his eternal service.

20. Narahari — "jāga jāga ohe gauraśāśī..." (GPT1 p. 344, no. 4; GCC)

*"Awake, Gaura-moon: the night is over; Your associates, leaving their homes, have gathered in the courtyard like chakoras without the moon; leave Your bed, show Yourself, sate their thirsting eyes, speak but a word, embrace them and take away their sorrow". Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁴²

20.1. Awake, awake, O Gaura-moon! How long You sleep — the night is over.
Leaving their homes, Your associates have hurried here and filled the courtyard.

20.2. I have seen none like them: they are like chakora birds without the moon;
so leave Your bed quickly, show Yourself and sate their thirsting eyes.

20.3. What shall I say? The lovely talks of [Your] deeds have fallen silent here — all stand mute; let them hear but once Your soft words steeped in nectar — take away the pain of their hearts.

20.4. They look around on all sides, their hearts restless; I have understood — they are utterly exhausted;
embrace them and drive away the suffering of their bodies, O Lord of Narahari's life!⁴³

42. GPT1 — p. 344, no. 4 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 603); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 4 (catalogue: NG-174). GCC — kirana 2, pada 20. The variants are minor (20.2 GCC "yena cakora pākhi"; 20.4 GCC "atiśaya kṛiṇa"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

43. The chakora is a bird which, according to poetic tradition, feeds only on moonlight; an image of devotees who live by beholding the Lord. The Lord's embrace is His mercy to His associates.

21. Narahari — "pohāila niśi pāila parāṇa..." (GPT1 pp. 344–345, no. 5; GCC)

*"The night is over — all have come back to life; thinking of Your deeds, no one can attend to household work, and all have hurried to You, yet You do not wake. The brahmanas of Nadia go to the Suradhuni and laugh: 'Look, Nimai Pandita is still asleep!' Get up and perform Your morning duties, or ill fame will spread about You and Narahari will be ashamed". Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁴⁴

21.1. The night is over — and all the men and women have as it were regained their lives; thinking of Your many lovely deeds, no one can attend to household work.

21.2. In great haste all have come to You, to sate themselves [with seeing You]; yet You do not wake — what a trouble! I do not know what joy there is in this sleep.

21.3. All the brahmanas of Nadia, about their business, have hurried to the bank of the Suradhuni; they laugh among themselves: "Look, Nimai Pandita is still lying asleep!"

21.4. So, I say, leave Your bed and perform Your morning duties, O Gora, jewel of virtues, or else all will spread ill fame about You — and hearing it, Narahari will be ashamed.⁴⁵

44. GPT1 — pp. 344–345, no. 5 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF pp. 603–604; the number is garbled in the OCR — "ṭ pda", and the signature-checking script misses the pada); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 5. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-290). GCC — kirana 2, pada 21. Variants: 21.2 GPT1 "nā jānaha tumi" ("You do not know"), GCC "nā jāgaha tumi" ("You do not wake") — following the GCC; 21.2 GCC "ati tvarātvāri". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

45. "Nimai Pandita" is the Lord's name in the time of His scholarship; the brahmanas go to the Ganga for the morning bath. The joking threat of "ill fame" is the love of the one who wakes Him (note 36); the eternal lila of Navadvipa includes these pastimes of the Lord in the guise of a young scholar and householder.

22. Narahari — "jāgaha jagajībana naba nadiyāpuracāmda he..." (GPT1 p. 345, no. 6; GCC)

*A hymn of awakening in solemn Vrajabuli: "Awake, Life of the world, new Moon of Nadia!" — with a chain of epithets: auspicious king Kamadeva, form the colour of gorochana, full of rasa, teeth like jasmine, eyes a snare for glances and hearts, crusher of Kama, golden lotus in the lake of the devotees' hearts, clad in cloud-coloured garments, King of dancers, He whose feet, dispelling the fear of worldly existence, are worshipped by the gods; "today, seeing Your sleep, I am perplexed". Raga bhairava. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁴⁶

22.1. Awake, Life of the world, new Moon of the town of Nadia!

Auspicious king Kamadeva, Your form is lovely as gorochana; full of rasa, overwhelmed by rasa, ornament of the connoisseurs of rasa, root of rasa!

22.2. Beautiful One, with teeth like jasmine flowers, with a soft, lovely, joy-giving face, with lovely, restless eyes — a snare for the eyes and hearts of people!

22.3. On Your beautiful chest a sweet garland; You are the delight of trembling women, stealing their composure, Yourself the abode of steadiness, crusher of Kama!

22.4. Beautiful curling hair, an incomparable graceful attire, a golden lotus that has made its home in the lake of the devotees' hearts! Neck like a lion's, pure ears, a tilaka of golden sandal, clad in cloud-coloured garments, King of dancers, delighting His dear ones!

22.5. Temple of jewel-like virtues, captivating, with a gait surpassing the elephant's, grateful, He whose feet, which shatter the burden of the fear of worldly existence, are worshipped by the gods! Dear One of Narahari, what can I say of what is in my heart? — nothing can be expressed: today, seeing Your sleep, I am perplexed.

⁴⁷

46. GPT1 — p. 345, no. 6 ("bhairaba"; scan, PDF p. 604); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 6. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-291). GCC — kirana 2, pada 16 ("rāga bhairaba"). Variants: 22.1 GCC "nadiyāpuracāmda"; 22.3 "kāma-dalata śānda" — the last word is unclear (also in the GCC), translated by the sense; 22.4 GPT1 "bhabhaktahṛdaya" (misprint). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Lines 22.1 are the refrain (dhru).

47. "Worshipped by the gods" (bṛndāraka-bandya), "dispelling the fear of worldly existence" are epithets of the Supreme Lord; "crusher of Kama" — His beauty surpasses that of the god of love, and remembrance of Him destroys lust. The attraction of women to the Lord (22.3) is the quality of Bhagavan, who attracts all (note 5). Gorochana is a bright yellow pigment; "King of dancers" (naṭendra) is the Lord dancing in kirtana.

23. Narahari — "tejaha śayana gaura guṇadhāma..." (GPT1 p. 345, no. 7; GCC)

*Dawn: "Leave Your bed, Gaura, abode of virtues: the moon has paled, the watches of the night are gone; the East, forgetting everything, has put on red out of love; the night-lotus has closed, and the bees fly to the opened day-lotus; the chakravaki rejoices with her mate; seeing these pastimes, Narahari laughs". Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁴⁸

23.1. Leave Your bed, Gaura, abode of virtues! The moon has paled, the watches of the night are gone.

23.2. The East — the [night's] companion — has forgotten everything and out of love has put on red.

23.3. The night-lotus where the bees lived has closed — and they fly to the opened day-lotus.

23.4. The chakravaki rejoices, united with her mate; Narahari, seeing so much merriment, laughs.⁴⁹

48. GPT1 — p. 345, no. 7 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 604); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 7. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-292). GCC — kirana 2, pada 17 ("punaryathārāga"). Variants: 23.1 GPT1 "gata yāminī yāma" (the last word is distorted in the GCC); 23.2 GCC "anurāga hi". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

49. Images of dawn in Indian poetry: the night-lotus (kumuda) closes, the day-lotus (kamala) opens; the chakravaka birds, separated for the night according to legend, are united in the morning. "The East, which out of love has put on red" is the dawn; "anuraga" means both "love" and "redness".

24. Narahari — "niśigata śaśī darapa dūre..." (GPT1 p. 345, no. 8; GCC)

*"The night is over — the moon's pride is far away, the chakora is in great sorrow; the stars, ashamed at their husband's humiliation, have hidden in the forest of the sky; the people of Nadia are awake — so leave Your bed, Gora; if You do not believe me, ask Narahari". Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁵⁰

24.1. The night is over — the moon's pride is far away; in great sorrow the chakora flutters about.

24.2. Ashamed at their husband's humiliation, the stars have hidden in the forest of the sky.

24.3. The people of Nadia are already awake — so, I say, leave Your bed, Gora.

24.4. If You do not believe me — then ask Narahari.⁵¹

50. GPT1 — p. 345, no. 8 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 604); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 8 (catalogue: NG-175). GCC — kirana 2, pada 18. Variants: 24.2 GPT1 "pati bīrāmbita", GCC "gati-bīrāmbana" ("seeing the [moon's] humiliation"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

51. The moon is the "husband" of the stars (nakshatras) in Indian legend. "Ask Narahari" — in the GCC these songs are sung by a parrot (note 35), who appeals to Narahari as a witness; in the GPT the line reads as the poet's signature.

25. Narahari — "jāga jāga ohe jībana gorā..." (GPT1 p. 346, no. 9; GCC)

*"Awake, Gora, my life, stealer of hearts and eyes! You are still asleep at dawn, while the neighbours are awake and chuckling; the people of Nadia praise You and run to Your house — are You not ashamed? Tell me, what do You do at night? The peacocks, the bees, the chakoraa pine without You; get up, come out into the courtyard — otherwise Narahari's fault will not be washed away". Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*⁵²

25.1. Awake, awake, O Gora, my life, stealer of the hearts and eyes of the people of the world!

I do not know in what You are lost, that You are still asleep at dawn;

open Your eyes, look: the night is over, all these neighbours are awake;

casting off sorrow, floating in an ocean of joy, they chuckle in every way.

25.2. And I say more: in this town of Nadia all praise [You] in various ways and run to Your house — are You not ashamed at all?

What strange languor You keep: dawn has come, and You cannot get up!

Tell me, what do You do at night? You are so clever — why then like this?⁵³

25.3. The peacock and the peahen are apart: neither comes near the other;

dejected, they sit in the trees — not seeing You, they do not dance.

The bee and his mate in the lovely kunjā, forgetting all, do not alight on the clusters of flowers;

"For whom should we hum?" — saying so, they do not hum and roam the forest as if distraught.

25.4. The chakora, seeing in it the likeness of Your moon-face, was devoted to the moon in the sky;

it has paled — and he, bewildered, weeps in great sorrow: "What will become of me?"

Make him happy, O treasure of joy: get up, come out and stand in the courtyard, or else, I feel, there will be trouble — then Narahari's fault will not be washed away.

52. GPT1 — p. 346, no. 9 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 605); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 9. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-293; by the opening "jāga jāga ohe" the checking script matched it with NG-174). GCC — kirana 2, pada 19. Variants: 25.1 GPT1 "paṛabāsi", GCC "paṛasa-bāsi" ("neighbours") — following the GCC; others minor. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

53. "What do You do at night?" is the joking reproach of one who loves; the Lord's nights pass in kirtana and in absorption in the pastimes of Vraja (17.3; note 36). The peacocks, bees and chakora are the nature of Navadvipa, which, like the nature of Vraja, lives by love for the Lord.

26. Narahari — "āju rajanīśeṣa samaya sukha-samāja sāje..." (GPT1 pp. 346–347, no. 10; GCC)

*Navadvipa before dawn: at the end of the night a feast of joy gathers — melodies rare even for the kinnaras, the songs of parrots, the fifth note of the cuckoos; in the blossoming kunjās the bees hum as if instruments were playing; the peacocks dance and the celestial dancers are ashamed; swans and cranes call, doves coo; the breeze stirs the leaves, dew on the grass is like tears of joy: incomparable is the town of Nadia on earth. Raga bhairava. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁵⁴

26.1. Today, at the end of the night, a feast of joy gathers:

melodies rare even for the race of kinnaras — flocks of parrots sing songs, the lovely, sweet fifth note of the cuckoos resounds.

26.2. New flowering kunjās have opened — there swarms upon swarms of bees hum so wondrously, as if sweet instruments were playing;

shadja and pairs of gamakas, lovely trills — "dhi-dhi kiti dhilanga";
the peacocks dance — seeing them, the celestial dancers are ashamed.

26.3. The swans raise auspicious calls; the cranes, hearing them, lose their composure;

the earth, as if thrilling in the guise of sprouts, bows beneath the creepers;
wondrously drunk with love, hundreds of flocks of doves shine;
"ghu-ghu" is their cooing, rolling sounds resound.

26.4. The breeze, as if offering adornment, stirs the leaves in boundless delight; in the guise of flowers it radiantly bestows coral and pearls; drops of dew fall on the grass — as if tears of joy were flowing;

says Narahari: incomparable is the town of Nadia on earth.⁵⁵

54. GPT1 — pp. 346–347, no. 10 ("bhairaba"; scan, PDF pp. 605–606); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 10. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-294). GCC — kirana 2, pada 14 ("bhairaba rāga"; in the GCC the first of the awakening songs). Variants: 26.1 GPT1 "sukha samājha sāje", GPT2 "sukha samāja sāje"; the places in 26.3 ("aṅkurachala pulaka ballīndra bhūmi namitāye", GCC "... ballīnrara bhūmi nadi tāmje") and 26.4 ("pabana miśa śiṅgāra hāra", GCC "pabana niśa śiṅgāra hara") are unclear in all witnesses — the translation is conjectural. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Further in GPT 5.2: no. 11 — Vasu Ghosha (chapter 12, no. 6), no. 12 — Jagannatha Dasa, nos. 13–14 — Radhamohana, no. 15 — signed by Uddhava Dasa (the catalogue wrongly listed it under Narahari: NG-176), no. 16 onwards — Narahari and others (chapter 23).

55. The nature of Navadvipa at dawn serves the Lord: the birds sing, the dew is tears of joy; so too in Krishna's ashtakaliya the nature of Vrindavana awakens together with Him. Navadvipa-dhama is no worldly place; according to Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati it is non-different from Vrindavana. Shadja is the first note of the scale, gamakas are ornaments of the sound.

Chapter 23. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — VII: the ashtakaliya (the last part of the night, morning, day, evening)

Continuation of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 23: the continuation of GPT section 5.2 "Ashtakaliya" (GPT1 pp. 348–362, nos. 16–51): the Lord's words in sleep at the end of the night and His awakening; the morning in Shachi's house among the companions; the pastimes of the day — the Lord playfully takes away the companions' clothes, the meal on the bank of the Ganga; the walk through Navadvipa — old men, old women, the blind, the lame, the dandies and the merchants gaze at Him; the companions' longing at night as they wait for the dawn; two "table-of-contents" padas of the ashtakaliya (the eight parts of Gaura's day and night); the evening kirtanas — the Lord's dance in the guise of Rukmini and the dance in Srivasa's courtyard. The signatures in the section were checked throughout, in the OCR and on the scan; the Gaura-charita-chintamani (GCC, kirtanas 1–4) and the 12th wave of the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) were read continuously at the relevant places. Not translated (outside the appendix): nos. 17, 52, 54 — signed Ghanashyama; no. 18 — Yadunatha Dasa (translated in chapter 13, no. 16); nos. 24, 25, 30, 32, 53 — Vasu Ghosha (no. 24 — chapter 12, no. 7; no. 25 = PK 1108 — chapter 5; no. 32 — chapter 5; no. 53 = PK 656 — chapter 9; no. 30 — the festival in the house of Narahari Thakura at Shrikhandā, signed Vasu); nos. 29, 41 — Narottama Dasa; no. 31 — Madhava (= PK 2638); nos. 33, 46 — Radhamohana; no. 44 — without the Narahari signature (= PK vol. 4); no. 45 — Vaishnava Dasa; no. 39 — a pada in nagari-bhava (assigned to the section of nagari padas). The padas on Gaura's night sleep (nos. 55–63, 65) go to the next chapter. The base text is GPT1 (doubtful places by the scan), collated with GPT2, the GCC (ed. 1947) and the BR (eds. 1912 and 1960); the PK, KGC, PS and the Gita-chandrodaya were checked. On the ashtakaliya as eternal lila and on the Lord's sleep see note 36 of chapter 22; on the motif of the women of Nadia, note 7. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "alasa abaśa pahum̐ rasika-śiromaṇi..." (GPT1 pp. 348–349, section 5.2, no. 16; GCC)

The last part of the night: the Lord, in the languor of half-sleep, speaks as in a dream words full of rasa: without the sight of Radharamana His life is burning; calling by name Gauridasa, Haridasa, Dhananjaya and dozens of companions, He asks them to sing of the deeds of the people of Vraja to quench the burning of His heart; in humility He says that enemies have subdued Him and He has taken a body in vain, and prays to be, birth after birth, a servant of the feet of the Lord of the gopis; having said this, He grows still again in sleep. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.¹

1.1. Languid and overcome, my Lord, the crown of the relishers of rasa, speaks as in a dream words full of rasa:

"Bereft of the rasa of seeing Radharamana, My life is wasting — My life is burning away."²

1.2. Listen, Gauri[dasa], Haridasa, Dhananjaya, Sanjaya, Vijaya, Mukunda, Murari, Madhava, Vasudeva, Purushottama, Shridhara, Krishnadasa, giver of joy,

1.3. Shrinidhi, Madhusudana, Vakreshvara, Satyaraja, wise Kavichandra, Shankara, Garuda, Bhagavata, Nandana, Chandrashekhara, deep Saranga,

- 1.4. Shuklambara, Yadunatha, Nakula, Vanamali, Mahesha, Shrinidhi, abode of virtues!
The Creator, most kind, understanding My heart, gave Me all of you as inseparable companions.
- 1.5. So accept My humble request: those lovely deeds of the people of Vraja, full of rasa, sing in all the beauty of sweet ragas — and quench this cruel burning of My heart.
- 1.6. How much shall I reveal the secret of My heart? These mighty wicked enemies have subdued Me; in vain I have taken a body — I have understood nothing, I have lost the way in the bewilderment of prema.
- 1.7. Again, with joined palms, I say: all of you, with joy, fulfil the heart's desire of the One who is your own — that birth after birth, without hindrance, I may be a servant of the lotus feet of the Lord of the gopis."³
- 1.8. Having spoken such words, the Lord of the twice-born, sinking for a little into sleep, again fell silent.
Narahari, bewildered, cannot describe this incomparable lovely deed, rare even for the gods.

1. GPT1 — pp. 348–349, section 5.2 "Ashtakaliya", no. 16 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF pp. 607–608); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 16 (p. ≈224). The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-295). GCC — kirana 2 ("the pastimes on the bed" in the last part of the night), pada 25: after the awakening songs sung by the parrot (padas 14–23; chapter 22, nos. 17–26, note 35), the GCC says that Gaura, absorbed in rasa, heard a little of them (pada 24) — and the Lord speaks these words in His sleep. Variants: 1.1 GCC "rasamaya bāta" ("words full of rasa"; GPT "rasa rasa bāta"); 1.6 GCC "maramaka bāta", "homīyalu"; 1.7 GCC "jaga" for "jani". The name "Shrinidhi" stands twice in the list in all witnesses. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. On the ashtakaliya and the Lord's sleep see note 36 of chapter 22.

2. Radharamana, "the beloved of Radha", is Krishna: the Lord, Krishna Himself appearing in the mood of Radha, longs for Krishna as Radha longs for Him. The list names the Lord's companions in Navadvipa, mostly known from the biographies: Gauridasa Pandita (in the GCC "gauri"), Haridasa Thakura, Dhananjaya, Sanjaya, Vijaya Dasa, Mukunda Datta, Murari Gupta, Shridhara, Vakreshvara Pandita, Satyaraja Khan, Garuda Pandita, Nandana Acharya, Chandrashekhara Acharya, Shuklambara Brahmachari, Nakula Brahmachari, Vanamali and others.

3. The words of 1.6–1.7 are the Lord's humility (dainya) in the mood of a devotee: He, the Supreme Lord, is subject neither to maya nor to the "enemies" (lust, anger and the rest), but, relishing the mood of a bhakta, speaks of Himself as a fallen soul — cf. His words "there is not a trace of love for Krishna in Me" (CC Madhya 2.42), the prayer "birth after birth, causeless devotion to You" (Shikshashataka, CC Antya 20.29) and the verse "a servant of the servant of the servant of the lotus feet of the Lord of the gopis" (CC Madhya 13.80). The reading "prema bharāti" (GCC "prema bharāti") is unclear; understood as "prema-bhrānti", "the bewilderment of prema".

2. Narahari — "śuti rahum̐ sundara gaurakīśora..." (GPT1 pp. 349–350, no. 19; GCC)

*Dawn: the beautiful young Gaura is still asleep; the companions read prose and verse, sing songs about Him to instruments, compose verses, loudly recite the names, weep in humility; the cows low, calling their calves — and the Lord, hearing them, wakes, stretches, yawns, leaves the chamber and asks for the hobbling rope, calling Gauridasa and the others by their former names. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁴

- 2.1. The beautiful young Gaura still lies [asleep].
The sun is already on its way to the east, people are waking — the night is over.
- 2.2. Someone reads the sweetest prose and verse, wholly absorbed in it — a wondrous thing!
Someone, to the sound of many instruments, beautifully sings songs of the Lord's loving deeds.
- 2.3. Someone composes lovely verses, someone by vow loudly recites the names, someone, struck down by humility, is drunk with the rasa of bhakti — not even an autumn downpour compares with it.

- 2.4. The cows low, distressed by the weight of their udders — they must give milk to their calves; hearing their call, the Lord at once woke and sat up on the bed.
- 2.5. Then He stretched, covered both eyes with His lovely palms, yawned a little, left the chamber and goes with an eager heart, asking again and again for the hobbling rope.⁵
- 2.6. Seeing Gauridasa and the others, He joyfully calls each by his former name.

Narahari says: wondrous is this lovely deed — is it deep sleep, or a play of prema?

4. GPT1 — pp. 349–350, no. 19 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF pp. 608–609); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 19, pp. 224–225 (catalogue: NG-177). GCC — kirana 3 ("the awakening"), pada 10. Variants: 2.2 GCC "kou" for "koi" (and so on); 2.3 GCC "śabda ghaṭāpaṭatara nāhi hoyā" for "śarada ghaṭā paṭatara..." — the end of the line is unclear in both readings, the translation is tentative ("not even the roar of autumn clouds compares with it" by the GCC); 2.4 GPT1 "rata sapiyā ana" — a misprint, corrected by the GCC "batasa piyāana" ("to give milk to the calves"); 2.5 GCC "puna tanu moṛi" ("stretched His body"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

5. The hobbling rope (chāmḍana-ḍora) is used to tie a cow's hind legs at milking. Woken by the lowing of the cows, the Lord is in the mood of a cowherd boy of Vraja: He hurries to the cows and calls the companions by their "former names", their names in Krishna's lila (thus Gauridasa Pandita is Subala, Krishna's friend, according to Kavi Karnapura's Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika). Here too the Lord's sleep is absorption in the lilas of Vraja (note 36 of chapter 22).

3. Narahari — "pekhaha gauracandra aparūpa..." (GPT1 p. 350, no. 20; GCC)

*Morning: Gaurachandra, still drowsy, sits on a jewelled seat; the radiance of His body fills the three worlds and rises in the hearts of His own; His smile is lovelier than a forest of lotuses, His sleepy eyes are reddish; jasmine flowers fall from His loosened hair like stars to the earth. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁶

3.1. Behold the wondrous Gaurachandra!

On a gleaming lovely seat of jewels sits the incomparable king Kamadeva.

- 3.2. His beautiful body crushes the pride of the peaks of the mountain of the gods; His mighty radiance has filled the three worlds; ceaselessly rising in the hearts of His own, He crushes the pride of millions of suns and moons.

- 3.3. His lovely face with its gentle smile — a forest of blossoming lotuses is no match for it; His reddish eyes droop in deep drowsiness — and destroy the shame, fear and family honour of young women.⁷

- 3.4. From His loosened hair fall jasmine flowers — as if stars, leaving the sky, were falling to the earth. What poet will describe this wondrous pose? Narahari again and again offers himself for it.

6. GPT1 — p. 350, no. 20 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 609); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 20 (catalogue: NG-178). GCC — kirana 3, pada 12 (before it the GCC has pada 11 "guṇamaṇi gauracandra dvijarāja", which is not in the GPT: Gaura comes out of the chamber and sits on the seat). Variants: 3.1 GPT1 "bilapita" (a misprint), GCC "bilasata"; 3.3 GCC "nāśata yubati-lāja-bhaya-kula". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. "The mountain of the gods" is Sumeru, the golden mountain; "king Kamadeva" (manamatha-bhūpa) — an image of beauty surpassing that of the god of love.

7. The line repeats a common formula of love poetry about the all-attractive beauty of Krishna. We translate faithfully to the author; but the Gaudiya tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) does not accept the worship of Gaura in the mood of "Gaura-nagari": Gaura is Krishna Himself in the mood and lustre of Radha; He came to taste Her love, not to enjoy as a nagara. The Lord's attractiveness for the people of Navadvipa is the quality of Bhagavan, who attracts all; it is not worldly passion. The same holds for the other places of the chapter speaking of the young women of Nadia (no. 22, v. 22.2). GPT pada no. 39 ("nadiyāra śaśi raṅge rājapathe": a young woman "has drowned in the rasa of Narahari's Lord and given up shame and family"; = BR 12, vv. 2380–2383) is in nagari-bhava and is set aside for the section of nagari padas. "Offers himself for it" (niramañchana) — the rite of "warding off" (nirmanchhana): the lover waves something around the beloved and gives it (or himself) away for him, averting misfortune.

4. Narahari — "śrīśacībhabane adhika sukha āja..." (GPT1 p. 350, no. 21; GCC)

*Morning in Shachi's house: Gaura sits on a seat, around Him circle upon circle of companions, like gods around Sumeru; someone, leaning on another's hand, stands still as a painting; someone's cloth is slipping; someone, startled, has run from his bed with sleepy eyes — all drink, like bees, the honey of His face. Raga lalita. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁸

4.1. Great joy today in the house of Sri Shachi:

on an incomparable seat sits the beautiful Gaurachandra, king of the twice-born.

4.2. Around the Lord — circle upon circle of dear companions, wondrously beautiful, like the gods surrounding Mount Sumeru: even Shesha cannot describe this beauty.

4.3. Someone, leaning his hand on another's hand, stands still like a painted doll; someone's cloth is slipping, and he does not set it right — what feeling is he experiencing?

4.4. Someone, startled, has left his bed and come — his eyes still drooping in deep drowsiness.

Narahari says: they are like bees drunk on the honey of this lotus-face.

8. GPT1 — p. 350, no. 21 ("lalita"; scan, PDF p. 609); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 21. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-296). GCC — kirana 4 ("the Lord surrounded by devotees"), pada 2 (pada 1 of kirana 4 is a list of companions signed Ghanashyama). Variants: 4.3 GCC "kaichana bhāba na anubhaba hoyā" ("what feeling — it cannot be grasped"); 4.4 GCC "mukha pañkaja-madhupāne". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Shesha (Ananta) is the thousand-mouthed serpent who eternally sings the Lord's glories.

5. Narahari — "āju ānanda parabhāta śacī-aṅganahi..." (GPT1 p. 350, no. 22; GCC)

*A joyful morning in Shachi's courtyard: the companions come and go, sing, dance, whisper and laugh, embrace and bow to one another, ask whether the night passed well, call one another blessed; someone recites verses, someone with a sigh takes a blade of grass between his teeth; the companions are countless — like a surging ocean of joy. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁹

5.1. Today a joyful morning in Shachi's courtyard — unending love, new delights of every kind!

Someone comes and goes, someone sings a lovely raga, dances wondrously, wanders drunk with rasa.

5.2. Someone, putting his lips to another's ear, softly says many words — and, laughing, collapses, unable to stand; someone calls another and embraces him; someone bows down at someone's feet.

5.3. Someone asks another whether the night passed well; someone says: "Now all is well — from seeing the Lord";

someone says to another: "Blessed are you, blessed! Sorrow will go at the mere touch of the breeze from your body."

5.4. Someone recites verses and prose; someone with a sigh takes a blade of grass between his teeth; the companions are countless — as if an ocean of joy had surged: how can Narahari describe it with one mouth?¹⁰

9. GPT1 — p. 350, no. 22 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 609); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 22 (catalogue: NG-179). GCC — kirana 4, pada 3 (the search through the witnesses missed it because of the garbled OCR; found by reading the GCC continuously). Variants: 5.1 GCC "bhaṅga hu neha" (OCR unclear); 5.2 GCC "kahu bacana"; 5.4 GCC "kutakāri" (OCR). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

10. A blade of grass between the teeth is a sign of humility: so one begs for mercy in Bengal. The Lord's companions honour one another ("blessed are you!") — for each of them is His eternal intimate.

6. Narahari — "ki kahaba ājuka aparūpa raṅga..." (GPT1 p. 351, no. 23; GCC)

*The courtyard of Shachi's house: Gaurahari and the companions are like a host of moons in a clear starless sky, which will dispel the darkness of the threefold miseries; like an arena of mighty wrestlers, who will overcome the asuras averse to the Lord's feet; like a field of blossoming wish-fulfilling trees giving priceless fruits — no one will be left without. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*¹¹

6.1. What shall I say of today's wondrous delight!

In the midst of the spacious courtyard shine Gaurahari and His dear companions, inseparable from Him.

6.2. Is it a host of moons shining brightly in the clear starless [sky]?

Surely they will destroy the dreadful, densest darkness of the world's threefold miseries.

6.3. Is it an arena that removes the burden of the fear of worldly existence — a lovely assembly of mighty wrestlers?

Having overcome the invincible asuras averse to the Lord's feet, they will surely accomplish their work.

6.4. Is it a field free of every obstacle, where wish-fulfilling trees have appeared and blossomed?

They will give away incomparable, priceless fruits; Narahari says: surely no one will be left without.

11. GPT1 — p. 351, no. 23 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 610); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 23 (catalogue: NG-180). GCC — kirana 4, pada 4. Variants: 6.2 GCC "uḍugaṇa-bihīna bimala ākāśa kiye..." (the GPT lacks the word "ākāśa", "sky"; supplied in brackets); 6.4 GCC "phire" for "kiye" (OCR). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The threefold miseries are those from one's own body and mind, from other beings and from the forces of nature. "The asuras averse to the Lord's feet" — the godlessness of the age of Kali; the companions are warriors of sankirtana who conquer it with the holy name; "the wish-fulfilling trees" — the companions who give everyone the fruit of prema (cf. CC Adi 9: the Lord is the gardener and the tree of prema).

7. Narahari — "gorācāṁḍera kibā e līlā..." (GPT1 p. 351, no. 26; BR)

*The Lord in the mood of His former lila: as in Vraja He stole the gopis' clothes, so now, glancing at His dear companions, He playfully takes away their clothes and then, His purpose fulfilled, gives them all back. Raga shri. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; plain Bengali.*¹²

7.1. What a lila of Gorachand!

Once He stole the gopis' clothes — now He is lost in that mood.

7.2. Glancing at His dear companions,

He playfully takes away their clothes — who knows the secret of this?¹³

7.3. As if everything had become as it was then;

having reached the limit of joy and fulfilled His purpose, He gives everyone back their clothes.

7.4. Seeing this, Narahari Dasa says:

who in the world would not go mad singing this lovely deed?

12. GPT1 — p. 351, no. 26 ("śrīrāga"; scan, PDF p. 610); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 26 (catalogue: NG-181). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 946; ed. 1960, vv. 3358–3361): Ishana shows Srinivasa the place where "Gaurachandra manifested His former lila — He stole the clothes of the devotees" (v. 3355), and quotes Murari Gupta's verses about it (in our translation, Murari 2.10.16–17: "at the beginning of the night" the Lord pulled the clothes off His servants, filled with bhava, and gave them back a moment later). Variants: 7.1 GPT1 "gārācāṁḍera" (a misprint), GPT1 and GPT2 "bibhola hailā", BR "bihvala hailā"; 7.3 BR "yena haila sakali sei". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

13. The stealing of the clothes (cīra-haraṇa) is Krishna's pastime in Vraja (Bhag. 10.22): by carrying off the clothes of the bathing gopis He fulfilled their vow and desire and removed the last barrier between them and Himself; it is a play of pure prema, not a worldly prank. Here the Lord repeats it with the devotees in whom the mood of the gopis has awakened (cf. Murari 2.10.15–17) — this is the "secret" of the lila the poet has in mind.

8. Narahari — "suradhunīṭire kata raṅge..." (GPT1 pp. 351–352, no. 27; BR)

*Midday on the bank of the Suradhuni: Srivasa and Murari have food brought; Advaita seats everyone in a circle on palasha leaves; Nitai, forgetting Himself, feeds Gora sweets, Advaita gives Nitai a drink, Nitai puts sweets into Advaita's mouth; the companions merrily feed one another and snatch food from one another's leaves, and drink the water of the Suradhuni; Narahari carefully gathers the remnants. Raga saranga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁴

- 8.1. On the bank of the Suradhuni, in many delights, Gaura wanders with His dear companions.
- 8.2. Two praharas of the day have passed — who knows what was then in the Lord's mind?
- 8.3. At that hour Srivasa and Murari had all kinds of food brought on platters.
- 8.4. The Moon of Nadia rejoices, gazing with a gentle smile at the Lord of Sita.
- 8.5. Advaita, with great joy in His heart, seated everyone — how lovely! — in a circle.
- 8.6. Spreading palasha leaves there,
He serves everyone all kinds of dishes.
- 8.7. Given leave to eat,
all gaze steadily at Gora's face.
- 8.8. Nitai cannot contain Himself:
love surges in His heart — who can fathom it?
- 8.9. Sweet rice, cream, fresh butter, curd cheese
He puts into Gora's mouth and forgets Himself.
- 8.10. Advaita with His own hand gives Nitaichand a curd drink.
- 8.11. Lovely Nitai, the mighty, puts sweet balls into Advaita's mouth.
- 8.12. Their bodies thrilled with rapture — what merriment arose among the companions!
- 8.13. Someone eats after first putting food into another's mouth, someone snatches [food] from another's leaf.
- 8.14. There are sweets of many kinds — eating them, everyone's joy grew boundless.
- 8.15. Handful after brimming handful all drink the cool water of the Suradhuni.
- 8.16. Whatever was left on the leaves
Narahari Dasa carefully gathered.¹⁵

14. GPT1 — pp. 351–352, no. 27 ("sāraṅga"; scan, PDF pp. 610–611); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 27 (catalogue: NG-182). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 937–938; ed. 1960, vv. 3241–3256): Ishana shows Srinivasa the bank of the Ganga where "the Lord with His companions holds a vana-bhojana" (a meal in the open, v. 3240). Variants: 8.3 BR-1960 "prabāsa murāri" (OCR; GPT1 on the scan "śrībāsa murāri"); 8.8 BR "kibā mehā" for "kibā lehā"; 8.9 BR "kṣīra sara nabanīta chenā"; 8.10 BR "chenā pānā". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Two praharas are half the daylight (a prahara is a quarter of the day): in the ashtakaliya this is midday, the time of Gaura's pastimes on the bank of the Ganga (below, no. 18, v. 18.4).

15. The meal of the Lord and His companions is prasada; the remnants from the leaves of the Lord and His eternal companions are mahaprasada, precious to a devotee: so the poet gathers them "carefully" (cf. CC Antya 16 on the glory of the remnants of the Vaishnavas' meals). Srivasa, Murari, Advaita ("the Lord of Sita"), Nitai (Nityananda) are the Lord's closest companions in Navadvipa. The curd drink (chānā-pānā) is curd cheese mashed with water and sugar.

9. Narahari — "āju gorā parikara saṅge..." (GPT1 p. 352, no. 28; BR)

*After the meal Gora wanders with His companions along the bank of the Suradhuni; standing in the shade of a tall tree, He says something sweet and gazes at the Suradhuni, takes Gadai by the hand and gently smiles. Raga saranga. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁶

9.1. Today Gora with His companions, having finished the merry meal, joyfully wanders along the bank of the Suradhuni.

9.2. Standing in the shade of a very tall tree, saying something sweet, He gazes again and again at the Suradhuni.

9.3. Gently taking Gadai by the hand,

He softly smiles — what nectar pours forth! Who could keep his composure?

9.4. Ah, how sweet this is!

Narahari says: the desire in my heart — may my mind drown in this rasa.

16. GPT1 — p. 352, no. 28 ("sāraṅga"; scan, PDF p. 611); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 28. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-297). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 938; ed. 1960, vv. 3257–3260) — immediately after no. 8. Variants: 9.2 GPT1 "rahi ati uccatara chāya", BR "rahi ati ucca taruchāya" (the BR reading is adopted); 9.3 BR "dhariyā gadādhara-kare", "dhairaya dhare"; 9.4 BR "manuka cita" (OCR). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. Gadai is Gadadhara Pandita (on him see note 39 of chapter 22).

10. Narahari — "gaura bidhubara barajamohana..." (GPT1 p. 354, no. 34; BR)

*The walk through Nadia (the afternoon part of the ashtakaliya): countless old men come out onto the road and gaze at Gaura with joy — "who created this beautifully formed Ananga? How could we hide Him forever in the casket of the heart?" — and bless Him without end. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*¹⁷

10.1. Gaura, the best of moons, the Enchanter of Vraja, walks through Nadia; countless old men who have come out onto the road gaze at Him with joy in their hearts.

10.2. Someone says: "What is this — a beautifully formed Ananga? Who created Him?"

Such a wondrous abundance of beauty has come before our eyes!"

10.3. Someone says: "What love is born — it cannot be put into words;

how could we keep Him always in the casket of the heart — tell me, what means is there?"

10.4. Someone in every way gives blessings without end;

Narahari Dasa ceaselessly drinks in the Lord's sweetness with his eyes.¹⁸

17. GPT1 — p. 354, no. 34 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF p. 613); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 34 (catalogue: NG-183, "in the BR"). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 868; ed. 1960, vv. 2358–2361): Ishana tells Srinivasa that the Lord, "to dispel the sorrow of the Vaishnavas and to make Himself known", walked through Nadia in beautiful attire, and men and women, seeing Him, spoke to one another (vv. 2353–2357); then follow in a row nos. 10–14 and GPT pada no. 39 (vv. 2358–2383). Variants: 10.3 BR "dharaba anukṣaṇa" ("I shall keep"; GPT "dharaya"); 10.4 BR "nirata dīṭhi bhari leta" (GPT "niyata"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. In the ashtakaliya the walk through the town is the fifth part of the day, in the afternoon (no. 18, v. 18.5; no. 19, v. 19.6).

18. Ananga ("the bodiless") is Kamadeva, the god of love: the Lord's beauty surpasses his. "The Enchanter of Vraja" (barajamohana): Gaura is Krishna, who enchants Vraja. The old men, seeing Gaura, bless Him as the cowherds of Vraja blessed the young Krishna — their love is parental (vatsalya).

11. Narahari — "āju ki ānanda nadīyāya..." (GPT1 pp. 354–355, no. 35; BR)

*Old women stand in rows by the road and gaze at Shachi's darling: "He is not human!"; "blessed is Shachi, whom this Moon-faced One calls mother"; "may He walk through Nadia like this and never leave it"; "may He always be well — let us take His misfortunes on ourselves". Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁹

11.1. What joy today in Nadia!

How many old women, standing in rows by the road, gaze at Shachi's darling!

11.2. One says to another: "He is not human — I have understood it, having thought it over; such a youth I have never seen or heard of since I was born in the land of Bharata."

11.3. Another says again and again: "What can I say? Now, after so many days, all sorrows have come to an end."

A third says: "What is in my heart I cannot express; blessed is life in this Nadia!"

11.4. One says: "Blessed is Shachi! How many pious deeds she has done — and her love cannot be told:
this Moon-faced One always calls her 'mother' — who else has such fortune?"

11.5. One says: "May He go about Nadia like this with all the people"; another says: "I have one thing in my heart — that golden Nimai may never leave Nadia."

11.6. One says: "I pray to the Creator for this alone — that He may always live in Nadia in well-being."
Gora is Narahari's life, the very pupil of the eye; may I die taking His misfortunes upon myself!²⁰

19. GPT1 — pp. 354–355, no. 35 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF pp. 613–614); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 35. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-298). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 868–869; ed. 1960, vv. 2362–2367) — immediately after no. 10. Variants: 11.4 BR "karila kateka puṇya"; 11.5 GPT1 and GPT2 "sakala prakṛti saṅge laiṇā" ("with all the people"), BR "sakala sukṛti-saṅge laiṇā" ("with all the pious"); 11.6 BR "narahari-prāṇa gorā, kebala āṁkhera tārā, ihāra bālāi laiṇā mari". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

20. "He is not human": the women of Nadia perceive Bhagavan in Gaura. "May I die taking His misfortunes upon myself" (bālāi laiṇā mari) is a Bengali formula of motherly love. The last line apparently continues the women's speech, with the poet's signature inside it ("Gora is Narahari's life").

12. Narahari — "gaurāṅga-gamana śuni andhagaṇa..." (GPT1 p. 355, no. 36; BR)

*The blind, hearing that Gauranga is coming, step outside; having gained eyes, they gaze and gaze: "The Creator made us blind to give us great bliss — so that we should see nothing else; whoever has not seen this beauty is blind though he has eyes; Narahari is witness: I have given these eyes to golden Nimai." Raga bhupali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²¹

12.1. Hearing that Gauranga is coming, the blind step outside; having gained eyes, they gaze and gaze, and their bodies are full of rapture.

12.2. One, taking another by the hand, softly says: "Today [our blindness] has borne fruit:
to give us great bliss the Creator made us blind — He did not let us see anything else.

12.3. The heart drinks the nectar of this beauty — what happens to it cannot be known; whoever has not seen such beauty is blind, though he has eyes.

12.4. Again and again [the eyes] run to see Him and know no restraint;
Narahari is witness: I have given these eyes to golden Nimaichand."²²

21. GPT1 — p. 355, no. 36 ("bhūpālī"; scan, PDF p. 614); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 36. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-299). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 869; ed. 1960, vv. 2368–2371). Variants: 12.2 BR "bidhi kaile andha"; 12.3 BR "e rūpa amiyā, piyā e nā hiyā" (understood accordingly: "the heart drinks the nectar of this beauty"); 12.4 BR "āṁkhi nā dhairya bāṁdhe", "somṇīlu". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

22. "Having gained eyes" (pāiyā nayana): the blind receive sight at the sight of the Lord, and the only meaning of sight for them is to see Him; the miracle here is a sign of mercy, and still more an image: truly sighted is only one who sees the Lord (12.3).

13. Narahari — "nadīyā bhramaye gorā guṇamaṇi..." (GPT1 p. 355, no. 37; BR)

*The lame, hearing that Gora is walking through Nadia, come out onto the road and cannot take their eyes off His face: "Now I understand, merciful Creator, why You made me lame: if I were not lame, I would have gone off on business to distant lands and died there without knowing Him; let me remain lame, so as always to see Narahari's Lord in Nadia." Raga todī. Attribution: probably Chakravartī — the pada is in the BR.*²³

13.1. Hearing that Gora, the jewel of virtues, is walking through Nadia, the lame went out onto the road; gazing with unblinking eyes at that face, their hearts overflow with joy.

13.2. One says: "Listen, merciful Creator, now I have understood:
the purpose for which You made me lame — that fruit You have brought forth now, after so many days.

13.3. If I were not lame, I would have gone to distant lands on household business; had I died there without knowing [of Him], there would have been no end to my sorrow.

13.4. I pray to the Creator: let me remain lame like this — so as always to see in Nadia Narahari's Lord to my eyes' content."

23. GPT1 — p. 355, no. 37 ("tuṇi"; scan, PDF p. 614; the number is garbled in the OCR — "७| pada"); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 37 (catalogue: NG-184). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 869–870; ed. 1960, vv. 2372–2375). Variants: 13.2 GPT1 "ye lāgiyā paṅgu, karile saphala, phalāle eteka dine", BR "ye lāgiyā paṅgu karile se phala, phalā'le eteka dine" (the sense is the same; translated by the BR); 13.3 BR "nā jāniye tathā". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. So in nos. 12–13: every circumstance of life gains meaning if it leads to the Lord.

14. Narahari — "bhubanamohana gorā guṇamaṇi..." (GPT1 p. 356, no. 38; BR)

*Gora walks along the royal road, and hundreds of Kamadevas swoon at His feet; people run from all sides and give Him body, mind and life; the young dandies of Nadia, glancing at Him, lose their foppish pride, and the connoisseurs of elegance become like fireflies before the moon. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravartī — the pada is in the BR.*²⁴

14.1. Gora, enchanter of the world, the jewel of virtues, walks along the royal road with countless graces;
hundreds upon hundreds of Kamadevas, swooning, roll at His lotus feet.

14.2. From all sides people come running, enchanted by His incomparable beauty; who does not offer [Him] body, mind and life, telling one another of His lovely deeds?

14.3. All the young dandies who stroll about the town of Nadia in fashionable dress — glancing at Gorachand, they lost their foppish pride.

14.4. Those who in the world pass for refined and are drunk with the delight of elegance — says Narahari — have become like fireflies before the moon.²⁵

24. GPT1 — p. 356, no. 38 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF p. 615); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 38 (catalogue: NG-185, "in the BR"). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 870; ed. 1960, vv. 2376–2379). Variants: 14.4 GPT1 and GPT2 "khadyota yemana, kichu āge haila temana tāṛā" — "kichu" is clearly an error; the BR reading "bidhu āge" ("before the moon") is adopted; 14.2 BR "kebā nāhi nichaye". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The next GPT pada (no. 39; BR vv. 2380–2383) is in nagari-bhava (note 7).

25. "Dandies" (nabīna nāgara) are the fops of the town, men; there is no nagari-bhava here: the Lord's beauty humbles the pride of those who prided themselves on their beauty and refinement.

15. Narahari — "nagarabhramaṇe bāhira haiyā..." (GPT1 p. 356, no. 40)

*Walking through the town, Gora goes into the houses of merchants; they joyfully give Him their goods. "I am a poor brahmana pandita," says Gauranga, "how shall I pay?" — "Pay when You can, and if You cannot — no matter; since You were born we have lived happily; bless us and give us the dust of Your feet." Raga dhanashi. Attribution: not established — the pada is known only from the GPT; plain Bengali.*²⁶

- 15.1. Going out for a walk through the town, Gora goes into the houses of various merchants; the merchants, beside themselves with joy, bring all kinds of goods and give them to Him.
- 15.2. Gauranga says: "I am a brahmana pandita, friends, and very poor; where shall I get the price for all these things you are giving?"
- 15.3. The merchants say: "Be kind and accept all this; when You can, You will pay, and if You cannot, we do not ask for payment."
- 15.4. Since You were born we have lived happily with our wives and sons; cast an auspicious glance on us, bless us, give us the dust of Your feet for our heads and breasts."
- 15.5. Pleased with their words, the Moon of Nadia went home.
Narahari says: blessed are the merchants, blessed, blessed are all the people of Nadia!²⁷

26. GPT1 — p. 356, no. 40 ("dhānāṣṭi"; scan, PDF p. 615); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 40. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-300). Not in the BR, GCC, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya; plain Bengali without Vrajabuli — according to Majumdar, rather a sign of Sarakara, but the pada exists only in the GPT, and the story is common to the biographies; "not established", C.

27. Cf. the account in the Chaitanya-bhagavata (Adi-khanda) of how Nimai Pandita went round the shops of Navadvipa — the weaver, the cowherd, the sellers of perfumes, flowers and betel — and the merchants joyfully gave Him their goods, saying "You will pay later". The Lord calls Himself "a poor brahmana" in the lila of a brahmana scholar; the merchants feel that their happiness comes from Him.

16. Narahari — "mari mari gauragaṇera carita..." (GPT1 p. 357, no. 42; GCC)

*Night: Gaura's companions know nothing but Him even in sleep; separated from Him for the time of sleep, they look at the sky — is the dawn near? — and listen for the cries of peacocks and cuckoos. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*²⁸

- 16.1. Ah! Who has the power to understand the ways of Gaura's companions?
In sleep and in dreams they know nothing but Gauranga.
- 16.2. The gentle smile of that moon-face crushes the pride of nectar; not seeing it even for half a moment, they feel that little while as a kalpa.
- 16.3. What shall I say of them! Separated [from Him] for the time of sleep, they are in great agitation:
"How soon will the night end?" they say, and look at the sky.
- 16.4. They listen for the cries of peacocks, doves, cuckoos;
Narahari says: anxiously they think how to bring the dawn nearer.²⁹

28. GPT1 — p. 357, no. 42 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 616); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 42 (catalogue: NG-187). GCC — kirana 2 (nishanta, the last part of the night), pada 2: immediately after pada 1 (= GPT 5.2 no. 63, Navadvipa at night: the companions sleep around the Lord's chamber; that pada goes to the next chapter). Variants: 16.1 GCC "kichu nā jāne āra"; 16.3 GCC "ki kaba se saba śayana bicchede". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

29. The companions' separation from the Lord for the time of sleep is also a lila of love: cf. the gopis of Vraja, for whom a moment without Krishna is like a yuga. The cry of the birds is the sign of dawn; in Krishna's ashtakaliya the birds of Vrinda likewise wake Radha and Krishna.

17. Narahari — "ko barāṇaba parikaragaṇa-leha..." (GPT1 p. 357, no. 43; GCC)

The end of the night: the companions tremble, dreaming of seeing Gaura rise from His bed, drinking the nectar of His words and touching His feet to drive away the sorrow of their hearts; their hearts long like the chataka waiting for the cloud. Raga not stated. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.³⁰

17.1. Who can describe the love of the companions?

Seeing that the end of the night is very near, their bodies thrill unceasingly.

17.2. Taking courage, they build up their hopes: "The night is going, now the morning comes; seeing the new grace of Gaura rising from His lovely bed, we shall satisfy these eyes.

17.3. The nectar of words from His gently smiling lips we shall drink our fill with our ears, trembling; touching His feet with our hands, we shall drive the sorrow of the heart far away."

17.4. So many hopes arise in the heart — they sink still deeper, singing His virtues.

Narahari says: the heart, like the chataka [awaiting] the cloud, longs — and does not itself know why.

30. GPT1 — p. 357, no. 43 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 616); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 43 (catalogue: NG-188). GCC — kirana 2, pada 3. Variants: 17.1 GCC "nirakhi niśānta niśānta-sumantara" (OCR); 17.3 GCC "śrabaṇa camaka bhari piyaba bhūri"; 17.4 GCC, like the GPT, "utkaṇṭhita (nāhi) samujhata anidāna" — the word "nāhi" is in brackets in both editions (an editor's supplement?); the sense is tentative. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. The chataka is a bird that, according to tradition, drinks only rainwater from the cloud — an image of the devotee who waits for the Lord alone.

18. Narahari — "niśi abaśeṣe lasata nadīyāśāśī..." (GPT1 pp. 358–359, no. 47; BR)

A "table of contents" of the ashtakaliya in Vrajabuli — the eight parts of Gaura's day and night: at the end of the night, sleep in His chamber; in the morning, bathing in the Suradhuni, the meal and a short rest; in the forenoon, pastimes in the companions' houses; at midday, pastimes on the bank of the Suradhuni; in the afternoon, the walk through Nadia; at dusk, the return home to Shachi; at pradosha, the house of Srivasa; at night, sankirtana and sleep again. Raga not stated (in the BR — shri). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.³¹

18.1. At the end of the night the Moon of Nadia rests on the bed in His chamber;

the rays of His body sparkle, delighting people — there is no equal to His grace, which crushes Kamadeva.

18.2. In the morning, performing the auspicious rites, He bathes in the Suradhuni with great joy; having eaten all kinds of food with His companions, He lies down for a moment — all the servants serve Him.

18.3. In the forenoon, having gladdened everyone, the Stealer of hearts goes out in new attire; with His companions He sports in the companions' houses — how to understand what this love is? There is no end to its ways.

18.4. Blessed is the time of midday: lakes, groves, the cool bank of the Suradhuni;

what poet will describe the many pastimes there? The gods, watching, lose their composure.

18.5. Wondrous is the time of afternoon: He walks with His companions through Nadia; the beauty conquers the world, a downpour of rasa pours — seeing it, the men and women of the town are in rapture.

18.6. At dusk He goes home — Sri Shachidevi rejoices, looking at His face; a wondrous joy: hundreds of people come again and again to see the Lord.

18.7. At the time of pradosha, having gladdened His mother's heart, He comes to the house of dear Srivasa;

there the devotees are in great enthusiasm, and the Lord puts on beautiful attire — the sweetest custom.

18.8. At night, in the clear hours, drunk with sankirtana, with a joyful heart, in boisterous delight — and again with His companions He lies down in His own house, Narahari's Lord, the young Gaura full of rasa.³²

31. GPT1 — pp. 358–359, no. 47 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF pp. 617–618); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 47 (catalogue: NG-189, "in the BR"). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 947; ed. 1960, vv. 3371–3378, "śrīrāga"): Ishana tells Srinivasa that the wise remember Chaitanya's eternal lila by the eight parts of the day, quotes the Sanskrit verses of "the ancients" (vv. 3366–3370: nishanta — sleep in His house; morning — rising, bathing, the meal; forenoon — the devotees' houses; midday — pastimes on the bank of the Ganga; afternoon — the walk through Navadvipa; dusk — the return home; pradosha — the house of Srivasa; night — the festival of sankirtana) and then this pada, which retells them. Variants: 18.1 BR "śayana seje", "manorañjana"; 18.2 BR "abagāhana kara", "gala-chana śayana" (GPT "palachana śayana" — understood as "pala-kṣaṇa", "for a moment"); 18.3 BR "premaka gati naha ora"; 18.7 BR "pahu rāi subeśa" (OCR). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

32. Gaura's ashtakaliya follows the model of the ashtakaliya of Radha and Krishna (the eight parts of the day in Vraja); it is eternal lila, which devotees remember in their service (note 36 of chapter 22). The chapter follows these parts: sleep and awakening (nos. 1–6), midday at the Ganga (nos. 7–9), the walk through Nadia (nos. 10–15), night (nos. 16–17), kirtana in the houses of Srivasa and Chandrashekhara (nos. 20–22).

19. Narahari — "niśīṣeṣe gorā ghumera ābeṣe..." (GPT1 p. 359, no. 48; GCC)

*The same "table of contents" of the ashtakaliya in plain Bengali: sleep at the end of the night; in the morning, Gaura in the courtyard among His companions; bathing in the Suradhuni, the meal and rest; in the forenoon, in the houses of Shuklambara and other devotees; at midday, in a flower garden; in the afternoon, the walk through Nadia; in the evening, at home, worship of the Deity to please His mother; at pradosha, the house of Srivasa; at night, sankirtana and sleep. Raga todi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*³³

- 19.1. At the end of the night Gora, absorbed in sleep, lies on the bed;
there is no one who, seeing that beauty even once, could keep hold of his heart.
- 19.2. In the morning, having woken, He sits in the courtyard surrounded by His companions; playfully stealing the hearts of the people of the world, He enters them and dwells there.
- 19.3. Having cleaned His teeth and so on — the bath in the Suradhuni in joyful rapture; in His own house — the merry meal with His companions, and then rest.
- 19.4. In the forenoon — in the houses of Shuklambara and other devotees:
overcome by the rapture of prema, He sports in many ways.
- 19.5. At midday — in a most charming flower garden:
with His companions in their finery, drunk with the waves of countless delights.
- 19.6. In the afternoon, putting on attire that enchants the world — the pleasure-walk through the town of Nadia: there is no end to the beauty.
- 19.7. In the evening — the return home, wondrous in every way:
He diligently worships the Deity and so on — what pleases His mother.
- 19.8. At pradosha — into the house of Srivasa, with great joy in His heart:
there He performs wondrous deeds, as the hearts of His dear companions desire.
- 19.9. At night — sankirtana with all His companions; and again in His own house blissful rest, says Narahari Dasa.³⁴

33. GPT1 — p. 359, no. 48 ("tuṛī"; scan, PDF p. 618); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 48 (catalogue: NG-190). GCC — kirana 1 (mangalacarana), pada 61, "rāga toṛī": before it the GCC says that Narahari arranged the eight parts of the day (dawn, morning, forenoon, midday, afternoon, evening, pradosha, night) following "the view of the crest-jewel of poets, a devotee of Gaura" (pada 59), and gives it as the "summary" (sūtra) of the ashtakaliya, which it then unfolds kirana by kirana. Variants: 19.3 GCC "suradhuni sināna"; 19.6 GPT1 and GPT2 "bhramaṇa bibāda" — an error, corrected by the GCC "bhramaṇa-binoda"; 19.7 GCC "kariye yatane"; 19.9 GCC "parikarasaha sukhe saṁkīrtana kari", "nijagrhe". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

34. "Worships the Deity" (deba-bandanā): the worship of the household Deity of Vishnu in Shachi's house; the Lord, Krishna Himself, in the lila of a brahmana householder performs the duties of a devotee and pleases His mother. Shuklambara Brahmachari is a companion of the Lord at whose place the Lord ate the rice he had begged (CB, Madhya-khanda).

20. Narahari — "bhubanamohana gaura naṭabara..." (GPT1 p. 360, no. 49; BR)

*The evening kirtana: Gaura, the best of dancers, today dances in the guise of Rukmini — a description of the attire and beauty from the hair to the feet: many-coloured silks, a jewelled band, earrings, collyrium, a nose-pendant, a necklace, conch bangles, a golden girdle with bells, ankle-bells. Raga shankarabharana. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*³⁵

20.1. Gaura, enchanter of the world, the best of dancers, the Enchanter of Vraja, crown of the relishers of rasa, today dances a new dance in the guise of Rukmini — He shines incomparably;

the lustre of His body surpasses a golden mirror — He sparkles, lovely and tender;
His beautiful, wondrously many-coloured dress — He is arrayed in various silks.

20.2. The locks of His hair are charmingly arranged; ground musk and patterned sandal paste shine freshly on His forehead; the jewelled band captivates the mind;
the earrings sway at His tender cheeks; His lovely brows are like bees;
His lotus eyes with charming collyrium are lovelier still.³⁶

20.3. His lips are like the bimba fruit; His nose is like a parrot's beak, with a pendant;
His face is the moon; His teeth crush the pride of jasmine;
His neck has three lines like a conch, His breast is tender; the jewelled necklace steals Ananga's composure; on His slender hands are conch bangles, on His fingers rings, a delight [to the eye].

20.4. His incomparable shapely belly pours out rasa, [His waist] shames the pride of a young lion;
His slender middle of the sweetest charm — a golden girdle with bells shines;
when He gracefully steps on the earth — the earth becomes very soft;
Narahari offers his life for Him; the ankle-bells ring out jhanana.

35. GPT1 — p. 360, no. 49 ("śaṅkarābharāṇa"; scan, PDF p. 619); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 49 (catalogue: NG-191). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 913–914; ed. 1960, vv. 2913–2916, "rāga śaṅkarābharāṇa"): in the house of Chandrashekhara Acharya, Sadashiva and Buddhimanta Khan prepare costumes; the Lord is to dance in the guise of Lakshmi and others; Shachi comes with her daughter-in-law to watch; Mukunda begins the kirtana; "the Lord became Rukmini — no one could recognise Him" (vv. 2903–2912); after the pada the BR says that the Lord is the embodiment of all His energies: He dances now in the guise of Parvati, now in the guise of Lakshmi (vv. 2917–2918). Variants: 20.1 BR "barajabhūṣaṇa" ("ornament of Vraja"), "aṅgaruci jini' kanaka darapaṇa"; 20.2 GPT1 "sarasa lasata lalāṭa taṭa maṇi, bandhanā mana mohaye" — divided by the BR "lalāṭa-taṭa maṇi-bandhanā"; 20.3 GPT1 "daśana mukunda madabharabhañjana", BR "daśana sukunda madabhara tathanā" (OCR) — understood as "daśana kunda-mada-bhara-bhañjana" ("the teeth crush the pride of jasmine"); 20.4 BR "bhaṅgi saṅge", "nichai". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

36. The Lord's dance in the guise of Rukmini (and of Lakshmi, Adya-shakti) in the house of Chandrashekhara is described by Vrindavana Dasa (CB Madhya 18): there the Lord appears in the form of His own energy, and the devotees see in Him the Mother of the universe. The Lord is the source of all energies; the form of Rukmini, queen of Dvaraka, is a manifestation of His own shakti, not a worldly disguise; the description of beauty "from the hair to the feet" is the traditional praise (nakha-shikha) of the Lord's form.

21. Narahari — "āju śubha ārambha kīrtane..." (GPT1 pp. 360–361, no. 50; BR)

The night kirtana in Srivasa's courtyard: Gaurasundara in a joyful dance among His companions; His feet keep time, and the earth trembles; on the left Gadadhara, on the right Nitai, in front the intoxicated Advaita; Vasudeva, Srivasa, Vijaya, Vakreshvara, Mukunda and others sing, Rama, Govinda and

*Garuda play the mardala; the world is full of cries of "jaya!". Raga mayura. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*³⁷

- 21.1. Today is the auspicious beginning of the kirtana: Gaurasundara in a joyful dance shines sweetly among His skilful companions in the courtyard of Srivasa; the lovely lustre of His body shames the pride of golden filaments [of the lotus] and delights Kamadeva;
His lotus eyes glance restlessly in all directions and captivate people's hearts.
- 21.2. Dancing, with the tenderest feet He keeps time — and the earth trembles;
He makes the hastaka gestures, quivering and graceful — the radiance of His hands like young shoots;
His teeth outshine a string of pearls; His soft smile pours nectar;
the fresh sweetness of His lovely face conquers a host of autumn moons.
- 21.3. His glossy curling hair is bound up, the tilaka and sandal paste are charmingly applied;
a wealth of ornaments sparkles on His body — His graceful bends cannot be described;
on the Lord's left is Gadadhara Pandita, on His right lovely Nitai, in front the intoxicated Sri Advaita; seeing this, the gods come running.
- 21.4. Vasudeva, Srivasa, Nandana, Vijaya, Vakreshvara, Narayana, Gopinatha, Mukunda, Madhava — these wondrous masters sing;
Rama, and on the left Govinda, Garuda and others play the mardala: "dhikata tadhika, dhini-ni-ni-ni-ni-ni," says Narahari; the world is filled with cries of "jaya, jaya!"³⁸

37. GPT1 — pp. 360–361, no. 50 ("māyūra"; scan, PDF pp. 619–620); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 50 (catalogue: NG-192 — with the wrong number "no. 57"). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 885–886; ed. 1960, vv. 2568–2571, "punaḥ — māyūra"); in a series of padas on the kirtana in Srivasa's house. Variants: 21.1 GPT1 "mudita nartabane" (a misprint); 21.3 GPT1 "sanathukhe" (a misprint; on the scan "sammukhe"); 21.4 GPT1 "ghāsudeba" (a misprint), BR-1960 "bāsudeba, prabāsa, nakhana..." (OCR garbled), "rāma bāme garuṣa, gobinda ādi bāye, mardala dhiki tā tā dhik". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B.

38. Srivasa's courtyard (Srivasa-angana) is the place of the Lord's night kirtanas in Navadvipa (CB Madhya-khanda; CC Adi 17). The singers and musicians are the Lord's companions: Vasudeva (Datta or Ghosha), Srivasa, Nandana Acharya, Vijaya Dasa, Vakreshvara Pandita, Narayana, Gopinatha, Mukunda Datta, Madhava (Ghosha), Rama (Shrirama, Srivasa's brother?), Govinda, Garuda Pandita; "dhikatā tādihika, dhini-ni-ni..." are drum syllables (bol).

22. Narahari — "nācata śacītanaya gaurasundara..." (GPT1 p. 361, no. 51; BR)

*Gaura's dance in the kirtana: the mridangas sound, He sings in a sweet voice; His form from the hair to the feet — flowers in His hair, earrings, tilaka, brows like bees, a face outshining the moons, His smile, arms like an elephant's trunk, a broad chest with a garland, a slender waist; His feet shame the morning sun. Raga ashavari. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*³⁹

- 22.1. The son of Shachi dances, beautiful Gaura, enchanter of hearts!
Many mridangas sound, beating out "dhi-dhikat dhilang";
He sings in a sweet voice — the bends of His body are wondrously lovely.
- 22.2. Today an incomparable rasa rejoices: He sports among His dear devotees;
His lovely attire sparkles, robbing young women of their composure;
His beautiful hair is adorned with flowers, earrings in His ears, His cheeks are mirrors, tilaka on His forehead, His lovely brows are bees above His lotus eyes.
- 22.3. His nostrils are the abode of fragrance; His face shames a host of moons;
His soft smile, His teeth are jasmine, His speech sweet;
His neck steals Madana's pride; His arms surpass an elephant's trunk; soft armpits, a broad chest — on it sways an incomparable garland.

22.4. His navel shines with three folds, the line of hair is like a little snake;
His slender waist with its girdle crushes the pride of a young lion;
He is clad in beautiful garments; even Shesha cannot describe His thighs;
the feet of Narahari's Lord shame the young morning sun.

39. GPT1 — p. 361, no. 51 ("āśābarī"; scan, PDF p. 620); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 51. The catalogue listed it under Vasu Ghosha (VG-057, "5.3 no. 51"), but the signature is "narahari pahum̐ padatale...": new row NG-301, VG-057 corrected. BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 890; ed. 1960, vv. 2624–2627, "punaḥ — āśābarī"); in the same series of kirtana padas (preceded by a pada of Govinda Dasa). Variants: 22.1 BR "bhaṅgi parama śohana"; 22.2 BR "yubati-dhiraya-mocanā"; 22.3 GPT1 "kakṣa mṛdu bilāsa bakṣa", BR "kakṣa mṛdu, biśāla bakṣa" (the BR reading is adopted); 22.4 BR "pahire bara basanabeśa", "taruṇāruṇe gañjanā". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC or the Gita-chandrodaya. B. "Robbing young women of their composure" is the same formula as in no. 3 (note 7).

Chapter 24. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — VIII: Gaura's night sleep; Nityananda

Continuation of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 24: the end of GPT section 5.2 "Ashtakaliya" — the songs on Gaura's night sleep (GPT1 pp. 362–365, nos. 55–63, 65: the companions gaze at the sleeping Lord and do not dare to wake Him), then section 6.1 "Nityananda" (GPT1 pp. 414–439) — all padas signed Narahari (nos. 10, 26, 64–69, 71–78, 80, 81: the advent at Ekachakra, the first meeting with the Lord, the coming to Gauda, Panihati, Khardaha, the wedding, praises), with the addition of the pada on Balarama's rasa manifested by Nityananda (section 5.1, no. 44). The signatures in both sections were checked throughout, in the OCR and on the scan; the Gaura-charita-chintamani (GCC, kiranas 2–4) and the 12th wave of the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) were read continuously at the relevant places. Not translated (outside the appendix): 5.2 nos. 54, 64 and 6.1 nos. 6, 11, 19, 70, 79 — signed Ghanashyama; the other padas of section 6.1 are by other poets (Atmarama, Govinda Dasa, Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa, Lochana, Jnanadasa, Vasu Ghosha, Balarama Dasa, Kanu Dasa, Raya Ananta and others; some were translated earlier). The base text is GPT1 (doubtful places by the scan), collated with GPT2, the GCC (ed. 1947), the BR (eds. 1912 and 1960) and the Gita-chandrodaya; the PK, KGC and PS were checked. On the ashtakaliya as eternal lila and on the Lord's sleep see note 36 of chapter 22. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "ko baraṇaba bara gaura uttāna śayana..." (GPT1 p. 362, section 5.2, no. 55; GCC)

The end of the night: Gaura sleeps on His back; the poet describes His form — the shining limbs, the face outshining autumn moons, the earrings, lips, teeth, the necklaces on His chest, the folded hands: as if even in sleep He were pleading with an offended beloved. Raga not specified ("yathārāga"). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.¹

1.1. Who can describe the delightful beauty of fair Gaura sleeping on His back?

His shapely, graceful limbs shine, robbing hosts of steady lightning of their pride.

1.2. The sweet light of His face, which conquers young maidens, defeats hosts of autumn moons;

His ears and clear cheeks are adorned with new earrings, matchless, set with gems and pearls.

1.3. His lips, putting to shame the bimba fruit and the rays of dawn, are slightly closed, lovely, full of radiance;

the white, beautiful light of His teeth gleams — the stars and the jasmine stay far behind.

1.4. On His broad chest are many necklaces, and on it His hands, joined palm to palm, rest unmoving.

Narahari says: this cannot be grasped — surely He is pleading before an offended beloved.²

1. GPT1 — p. 362, section 5.2 "Ashtakaliya", no. 55 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 621); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 55, p. ≈233–234 (catalogue: NG-193, "5.3" — wrongly). GCC — kirana 2 (the "pastimes on the couch" in the last part of the night), pada 18: before it Gadadhara, waking first, serves the Lord's feet, and He turns onto His back (padas 15–16); then comes a pada of Ghanashyama (GPT no. 54) and this one. Readings: 1.1 GCC "bara gaura sarasa uttāna śayana"; "dāminī-puñja" ("of lightning") — GPT1 and GPT2 "yāminī puñja" ("of nights"), a misprint; the GCC reading is adopted; 1.4 GCC "anubhaba na hota" (GPT "anubhava nohata"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS, Gita-chandrodaya. B. On the ashtakaliya and on the Lord's sleep see note 36 of chapter 22.

2. The Lord's sleep is not the sleep of a conditioned soul: He is absorbed in the lilas of Vraja and, in the mood of Krishna, pleads in sleep with Radha who is in mana (offended pride) — the folded hands betray His inner mood (cf. in the same kirana of the GCC, pada 13: in sleep Gaura calls upon "the crown of beautiful women" to wake). "Which conquers young maidens" is a stock formula of the lyric on Krishna's all-attractive beauty (cf. note 7 of chapter 23); here it refers to Gaura as Krishna Himself.

2. Narahari — "ki kahaba gaura śayana anupāma..." (GPT1 pp. 362–363, no. 56; GCC)

*Gaura's matchless sleep: His limbs shine like Kama embodied; His body is soft as fresh butter — it seems to melt on the couch; His breathing gently lifts His belly, as the Malaya wind stirs the waves of a river on Sumeru. The poet prays that the Lord may so rest on the couch of his heart. Raga lalita. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*³

2.1. What shall I say of Gaura's matchless sleep!

Each of His shapely limbs shines — as if Kama himself, in visible form, were displaying his play here.

2.2. His body is soft as a lump of fresh butter churned from a golden ocean of milk; and, wonder of wonders, without the sun's heat it seems to melt upon the couch.

2.3. Languid, limp, He breathes softly, and His radiant belly rises and falls — as if the Malaya wind, touching Sumeru, drove the quiet waves of its river.

2.4. Words cannot convey it — who could compose it? However long one looks, the eyes are never sated.

Narahari says: when will He so recline on the couch of my heart and give me joy?⁴

3. GPT1 — pp. 362–363, no. 56 ("lalita"; scan, PDF pp. 621–622); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 56, p. ≈234 (catalogue: NG-194). GCC — kirana 2, pada 7 ("lalita rāga"; preceded by a description of the chamber and the couch). Readings: 2.2 GCC "kṣīrododadhi" ("ocean of milk"; GPT "kṣīroda dadhi"); 2.4 GCC "biracaba" (GPT1 "viracana"). Under line 2.3 GPT1 has an editor's note on the reading "bilāse" (not reproduced). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

4. The comparison with Kama (Manmatha) is a common image of the poetry on Krishna; but Krishna is "the Manmatha of Manmatha himself", who enchants even the god of love (Bhag. 10.32.2), and Gaura's beauty is not mundane: the poet prays not for anything sensual but that the Lord may reign in his heart. Sumeru is the golden mountain — an image of Gaura's golden body.

3. Narahari — "ki kaba analpa talpa jhalakata ati..." (GPT1 p. 363, no. 57; GCC)

*Gaura's couch: spacious, spotless as autumn, fashioned by Kama himself; the white pillows are like blocks of Kailasa and the stilled waves of the Ganga; heaps of flowers, a painted canopy of moonbeams, a silver frame set with gold and gems. Raga lalita. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli (the text is obscure in places).*⁵

3.1. What shall I say! The spacious couch shines beyond measure, spotless as the autumn season; wondrous, beyond even the dreams of the king of the gods, a charming work of mighty Manobhava.

3.2. Lovely pillows, full of languor and awakening desire, shine — there is nothing like them in the world: like blocks of Hara's mountain, whole lumps of fresh curd, the stilled waves of the Ganga.

3.3. On it, in heaps — karavira, kunda, ketaki, golden lotuses, jasmine; and when all their tender flowers are strewn, one can no longer tell that this is Gaurahari's couch.

3.4. It is as if the Creator painted pictures on a cloth of moonbeams and with great care brought it into the Lord's chamber;

Narahari will say: this couch rises on a silver frame studded with gold and gems.⁶

5. GPT1 — p. 363, no. 57 ("lalita"; scan, PDF p. 622); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 57, p. ≈234 (catalogue: NG-195). GCC — kirana 2, pada 8 ("yathārāga"; right after no. 56). Readings: 3.2 GCC "ālasa-dhara jana lālasa-kara bara bālisa" (GPT "ālasa dhara jala lāṣa karabara bāṣa"; translated after the GCC: "... awakening desire in people"); 3.3 GCC "bandhūṇa", "kṛta nayana", "sumanagaṇa" (GPT "bandhure", "kṛtanayana", "samana gana"); 3.4 GCC "deyala", "bhaṇaba sumati" (the sense of "sumati urathita" is unclear; taken as "rises beautifully"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

6. Manobhava ("born of the mind") is Kama: the Lord's couch is the matchless furnishing of His eternal chamber; yet even in this sumptuous picture "Gaura-Hari" is Krishna Himself, not a worldly prince. Hara's mountain is Kailasa, the white abode of Shiva; curd and the waves of the Ganga are images of whiteness.

4. Narahari — "mari mari gaura-mūṛati aparūpa..." (GPT1 p. 363, no. 58; GCC)

*One of the companions, looking at the sleeping Lord: wondrous is Gaura's form; alas that I have only two eyes; I keep this treasure in my heart; every morning I see Him, but I have never seen such sleep — shall I wake Him today? Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁷

4.1. Ah, ah! Wondrous is Gaura's form — the enchanter of the world, king Manmatha.

4.2. What can I do — I was not given countless eyes! Cruel fate, letting me see Him, gave me grief as well.

4.3. I keep this longing, filling my heart with it; like a priceless jewel I reveal it to no one.

4.4. Who sculpted His body, this graceful frame? It is all my wealth, matchless in the world.

4.5. Every day at the end of the night I see Him, but such sleep I have never seen.

4.6. So I understand: a new, unheard-of sleep reigns. Narahari: shall I wake Him now?⁸

7. GPT1 — p. 363, no. 58 ("bibhāṣa"; scan, PDF p. 622); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 58, p. ≈234 (catalogue: NG-196). GCC — kirana 3 ("the awakening"), pada 4 ("ko 'pi ca — bibhāṣa rāgeṇa", "and another [said] in raga vibhasa"): after a pada describing the sleeper (3.3) the GCC puts padas 4–7 into the mouths of various companions who have come to the Lord's chamber at dawn. The readings differ insignificantly (4.5 GCC "kavahi"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

8. "King Manmatha" — cf. note 4. Hiding one's love (4.3) is a mark of mature prema: the devotee does not display his feeling. "A new sleep": the Lord is absorbed in lila more deeply than usual; the companion hesitates to wake Him, not daring to interrupt His bliss.

5. Narahari — "dhani dhani āju rajanī dhani lekhi..." (GPT1 p. 363, no. 59; GCC)

*Another companion: blessed is this night! The Lord, greedy for sankirtana, did not close His eyes at night, speaking of Vraja in His former mood — and now He has sunk into a matchless sleep and speaks nectarean words in it; it is already dawn, and He does not wake. Raga bhairava. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁹

5.1. Blessed, blessed — I count this night blessed!

Such sleep of the Lord, greedy for the rasa of sankirtana, I have never seen.

5.2. He who, maddened by His own former bhava, ceaselessly speaks of lovely Vraja — whose eyelids do not close even for a moment, who stays awake all night and so meets the dawn —

5.3. He has now sunk into a matchless, deep sleep: will He wake — or is this a still greater play?

Wondrous is the way of His sleep: as if in a dream, He utters words like nectar.

5.4. The night has gone, the morning has come — and He who sports in Nadia still does not wake.

How can one grasp this deed of Narahari's Lord? I cannot even say whether this sleep will break.¹⁰

9. GPT1 — p. 363, no. 59 ("bhairava"; scan, PDF p. 622); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 59, p. ≈234 (catalogue: NG-197). GCC — kirana 3, pada 5 ("ko 'pi ca — bhairava rāga"). Readings: 5.3 GPT1 and GPT2 "adbhuta ghuma karīta" — a wrong word division; the GCC reading "ghumaka rīta" ("the way of sleep") is adopted; 5.4 GCC "bujhaba". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

10. "Former bhava" is the mood of Vraja: the Lord, Krishna Himself, in the mood of Radha and the gopis, does not sleep at night, speaking of Vraja and of Krishna (cf. CC Antya 14–19: the Lord's nights in the Gambhira). The word "maddened" (unamata) refers to the madness of prema, not to anything mundane. His sleep too is lila, "a still greater play": in sleep He utters words full of the rasa of Vraja (cf. no. 1 of chapter 23).

6. Narahari — "pekhaha aparūpa pahumka bilāsa..." (GPT1 pp. 363–364, no. 60; GCC)

*Another companion: behold the Lord's wondrous sleep! He whose radiance is not revealed even in the hearts of the gods shines in this chamber brighter than suns; sages perform sacrifices for ages to imagine Him on the couch of their hearts — and here He is easily reached; it is not the praises of Brahma and Shiva that please the Lord but the words of the parrot in its cage — the custom of Vraja returns. Raga lalita. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*¹¹

6.1. Behold the wondrous play of the Lord!

His sleep — lovely, boundless, sweet — gives rise to the joy of body, mind and eyes.

6.2. He, a glimpse of whose bodily radiance is not revealed in the hearts of the gods, however great their effort — that mass of radiance, by good fortune, shines in this chamber, outdoing rows of suns.

6.3. To imagine Him on the fine couch of their hearts, sages perform sacrifices kalpa after kalpa — and on this couch He, so hard for them to reach, is easily found: what poet can describe this couch's good fortune?

6.4. The words of Brahma and Shiva do not gladden Him now — yet He listens with love to the parrot in its new cage, chattering on.

How long will the poet Narahari's Lord stay hidden? His former custom is plainly showing itself.¹²

11. GPT1 — pp. 363–364, no. 60 ("lalita"; scan, PDF pp. 622–623); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 60, p. 235. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-302). GCC — kirana 3, pada 6 ("ko 'pi ca — rāga lalita"). Readings: 6.2 GPT1 "suruci puñja sukṛti iha mandira mājha" — GCC and GPT2 "so rucipuñja" (adopted); 6.4 GCC "suprakāṭa". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

12. Brahma and Shiva glorify the Lord with hymns, but the confidential lila is open not to them but to the companions of Navadvipa. The parrot is the one who, according to the GCC, was reared by a servant of the Lord and sings the awakening songs at dawn (chapter 22, note 35): in Vraja Vrinda's parrots wake Radha and Krishna — the "former custom" of Vraja reveals itself in Navadvipa. The sages "imagine" the Lord on the couch of the heart — an image of meditation: what is not reached by yoga is revealed in love.

7. Narahari — "hera cāñā dekha rajanī pāne..." (GPT1 p. 364, no. 61; GCC)

*Another companion: look — who ever knew such sleep? The pose of the hands and feet, the eyes, the moon-face, the smile that seems to drip nectar; one cannot tell whether He sleeps or wakes; it will be hard to wake Him. Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*¹³

7.1. Here, look, see this night: who ever knew such sleep?

7.2. How beautifully His hands and feet lie! I never knew that sleep could be like this.

7.3. And the eyes — so charmingly closed: how can languor be like this?

7.4. The beauty of His moon-face is greater still: as if nectar dripped from His gentle smile.

7.5. I cannot tell whether He sleeps or not; what is in my heart I cannot utter.

7.6. How much can Narahari say of it? It seems it will be hard to wake Him.¹⁴

13. GPT1 — p. 364, no. 61 ("bibhāsa"; scan, PDF p. 623); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 61, p. 235 (catalogue: NG-198). GCC — kirana 3, pada 7 ("ko 'pi ca — rāga lalita"; the GCC edition notes that the Agartala manuscript lacks this pada).

Readings: 7.1 GCC "hera cāya dekha gaurāṅga pāne" ("look at Gauranga"; GPT "rajanī pāne", "at the night"); 7.2 GCC "kara-pada-bhaṅgimā", "kabhu"; 7.3 GCC "subhagati"; 7.5 GCC "kahite nāri". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

14. The Lord's sleep cannot be told from waking; it is not the unconsciousness of a conditioned soul but absorption in lila (cf. 5.3: "or is this a still greater play?").

8. Narahari — "gorācāṁdera rajanī śayana..." (GPT1 p. 364, no. 62; GCC)

*The companions gaze at the sleeping Gorachand, and their eyes are refreshed; joyful, they banter with one another and again and again admire His sleep. Raga vibhasa. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC.*¹⁵

8.1. Gorachand's night sleep: gazing and gazing at it, everyone's eyes find rest.

8.2. Each one's heart is full of joy, and playfully they tell one another many things.

8.3. Can a poet describe it — the matchless virtues of Gauranga?

8.4. Again and again, with full eyes, they gaze at the sweetness of the sleep of the poet Narahari's Lord.¹⁶

15. GPT1 — p. 364, no. 62 ("bibhāsa"; scan, PDF p. 623); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 62, p. 235 (catalogue: NG-199). GCC — kirana 3, pada 9 ("yathārāga"; before it, pada 8: Gadadhara sits at the Lord's feet and presses them, while Narahari "floats in an ocean of happiness"). Readings: 8.1 GCC "gaurāṅga cāndera rajanī-śayana"; 8.2 GCC "ati ānanda hṛdaya". The search of the witnesses had missed it (distorted OCR of the GCC); found by reading the GCC continuously. Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

16. "Playfully they tell" — the companions' loving talk about the Lord; it too is part of His lila (cf. chapter 23, no. 5: the companions honour one another).

9. Narahari — "kibā se niśira śobhā..." (GPT1 pp. 364–365, no. 63; GCC)

*Night in Nadia: the moon has washed the town, the trees blossom, a cool wind blows, all the inhabitants sleep in bliss; around the Lord's chamber are His dear companions, some asleep, some awake; others have gone home at His bidding and pine. The poet prays to be near at this hour. Raga bhairava. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC (it opens the nishanta-lila).*¹⁷

9.1. How lovely is that night — a heap of blessings filling the town of Nadia!

The moon, a washerman, with his own hands has washed all darkness from it.

9.2. Wondrous young trees and creepers shine with a sweetness that enchants sages; over the freshly opened flowers bees roam in hope of honey.

9.3. Softly, softly a cool breeze blows, breathing waves of fragrance; in supreme bliss all the inhabitants of Nadia lie asleep.

9.4. The deep house [of the Lord], ever full of happiness — its beauty has no bounds; in all three worlds I have seen nothing to compare with it.

9.5. Around the Lord's chamber all His dear companions have taken their places; some sleep, some lie awake — who can fathom such love?

9.6. And others, at His bidding, lie in their own homes, pining;
Narahari: when will it be so for me — when shall I too be near at that hour?¹⁸

17. GPT1 — pp. 364–365, no. 63 ("bhairava"; scan, PDF pp. 623–624); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 63, p. 235 (catalogue: NG-200). GCC — kirana 2, pada 1 ("rāga bhairava"): the first pada of the description of the ashtakaliya ("first, nishanta", the end of the night), right after the "table of contents" in kirana 1 (cf. chapter 23, no. 19). Readings: 9.1 GCC has, at the words "purā se", an editor's mark of a reading "bāsa" (sense: "abode"); 9.2 GCC "praphullita naba kusume bhramara bhramaye madhura āśe" ("bees roam" — the subject missing in the GPT is restored after the GCC); 9.5 GCC "keha śuñā keha jāgiyā rayeche". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

18. The moon as a "washerman" washing away darkness is a familiar image of moonlight. The pining of the companions sent home is a lila of separation (cf. chapter 23, nos. 16–17). The poet's wish "to be near at that hour" is a prayer for eternal service to the Lord in His nitya-lila.

10. Narahari — "ratana mandira madhi śuti gora sundara..." (GPT1 p. 365, no. 65)

*The Lord sleeps in a chamber of jewels, surrounded by His companions, like the moon among the stars; at the end of the night the companions sing auspicious songs, as court singers wake a prince; the Lord leaves sleep and sits up on the couch to listen. Raga turi. Attribution: not established — only in the GPT; Vrajabuli.*¹⁹

10.1. In the chamber of jewels fair Gora sleeps, enjoying the play of sleep;
the host of dear companions sleeps all around the beloved Lord.

10.2. As in the wide sky the moon, encircled by rows of stars — what poet has the power to describe that wondrous beauty?

10.3. Seeing that the night is ending, the companions sing auspicious songs — as court singers and bards strike up a tune to break a prince's sleep.

10.4. Leaving sleep, He who sports in Nadia sat up on the couch to listen;
enchanted Narahari is enchanted beyond measure, beholding that joy.²⁰

19. GPT1 — p. 365, no. 65 ("tuṭī"; scan, PDF p. 624; the last pada of section 5.2); GPT2 — section 5.2, no. 65, p. ≈235–236. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-303). Not found in any witness (GCC, BR, PK, KGC, PS, Gita-chandrodaya). The GPT1 OCR is badly distorted ("batana mandira maṇi śuṇaṭha ... bhugcai śanabilāsa"); the text follows the scan. Before it, no. 64 is a pada of Ghanashyama on the Lord's chamber (= GCC 2.10). "Not established", C.

20. Vaitalikas and magadhas are court singers and bards who woke kings with songs and praises. The Lord's awakening by His companions' songs is the beginning of the morning lila (cf. the awakening songs, chapter 22, nos. 17–26). The companions sleep "around" the Lord, as in 9.5.

11. Narahari — "āhā mari āju ki ānanda..." (GPT1 p. 417, section 6.1, no. 10; BR)

*Nityananda's advent at Ekachakra, in the house of Hadai Pandita: the parents' joy; Advaita in Shantipura roars and dances: "I have brought Balavira!"; the gods shower flowers; the Ojha gives gifts; blessed are the land of Radha and the bright thirteenth night of the month of Magha. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²¹

11.1. Ah, what joy today!

In Ekachakrapura, in the house of Hadai Pandita, Nityananda has descended!

11.2. His body is most tender, like fresh golden butter; by His beauty the world is enchanted.
Gazing at His moon-face, Padmavati and Hadai Pandita cannot contain their delight.

11.3. Sri Advaita in Shantipura roars in a flood of joy and cannot be still for a moment;
He dances with arms raised, slaps His sides and says: "I have brought, I have brought Balavira!"

11.4. Brahma and the other gods shower Him with flowers; "Jaya, jaya!" resounds without end; all the gandharvas and kinnaras play hundreds of instruments and sing His glory — an ocean of happiness.

11.5. The Ojha, most fortunate, for his son's welfare gives away gifts beyond counting; in what merriment the people come running — the house is too crowded to enter!

11.6. Blessed is the land of Radha, blessed that nakshatra and that day, blessed the bright thirteenth night of Magha!

Narahari says: well done! Blessed, blessed is the age of Kali — by His appearance He has destroyed the heaps of sorrow.²²

21. GPT1 — p. 417, section 6.1 "Nityananda", no. 10 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF p. 676); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 10, p. ≈273 (catalogue: NG-202, "in the BR"). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 824–825; ed. 1960, vv. 1711–1716): Narahari Chakravarti, showing Srinivasa the places of Navadvipa, tells of Nityananda, His parents and the day of His advent — the bright thirteenth night of Magha (a Sanskrit verse, v. 1709) — and introduces the pada with the words "this joy the wise have described in many ways"; then follows a pada of Ghanashyama (GPT no. 11). Readings: 11.2 BR "putramukha nirakhiyā" ("gazing at their son's face"; GPT "candra mukha"), "hārāi" (GPT "hārāi"); 11.5 BR "yautuka laiṇā" ("bringing gifts"; GPT "kautuka laiṇā", "in merriment"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

22. Nityananda is Balarama Himself, the first expansion of Krishna (CC Adi 5); therefore Advaita, foreseeing His advent, cries: "I have brought Balavira" ("the hero Bala", Balarama) — just as He called Gaura into the world. Ojha is Hadai Pandita's family title. On Nityananda's childhood at Ekachakra — CB Adi 9. The land of Radha (Rāṇḍa) is the region of Bengal west of the Ganga where Ekachakra lies.

12. Narahari — "bhābe gara gara nitāi sundara..." (GPT1 p. 422, no. 26; BR)

*The first meeting in Navadvipa: seeing Gorachand's radiance, Nityananda enters ecstasy — roaring, rolling on the ground, sighs, laughter, leaps, trembling; at last He grows still in Vishvambhara's embrace; the Lord, holding Him in His lap, weeps; Srivasa and the others weep. Raga mayura. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²³

- 12.1. Overflowing with bhava, beautiful Nitai, seeing Gorachand's radiance — how much wells up in His heart! He cannot stand still; on every limb new waves of thrill.
- 12.2. What madness! Now a lion's roar, now He rolls on the ground; now long sighs, now loud laughter; His cloth slips off, He floats in tears.
- 12.3. Now leap after leap, now His whole body trembles; now He runs — no one can hold Him; now, saying something, He grows still and sinks into Vishvambhara's embrace.
- 12.4. Taking Nityananda in His lap, the Lord floats in tears — such is the way of love!
Narahari says: Srivasa and the others around weep; no one can keep composure.²⁴

23. GPT1 — p. 422, no. 26 ("māyura"; scan, PDF p. 681); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 26. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-304; the catalogue row NG-203 had by mistake given the first line of no. 64). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 874; ed. 1960, vv. 2437–2440): Nityananda has come secretly to Nadia; the Lord with the devotees goes to Him in Nandana Acharya's house; at the Lord's sign Srivasa recites the verse on Krishna entering Vrindavana (Bhag. 10.21.5) — "hearing the verse on Krishna, Nityananda entered the bhava that everyone sings of". Readings: 12.1 BR "gorā-mukhacāndera chaṭā" ("the radiance of Gora's moon-face"); 12.2 BR "loṭāyaye dharaṇītale". The Navadvipa-parikrama is the same as the BR. Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

24. The Lord's first meeting with Nityananda in Nandana Acharya's house — CB Madhya 3; CC Adi 17. Nityananda's "madness" (unmāda) is the madness of prema: the ecstasy of Balarama hearing of His younger brother Krishna — not a worldly derangement. Vishvambhara is the Lord's name in Navadvipa.

13. Narahari — "ki madhura madhuniśā..." (GPT1 p. 335, section 5.1, no. 44; BR)

*A moonlit spring night by the Ganga, which is like the Yamuna; remembering His former pastimes, Nityananda trembles; seeing this, Gaurasundara enters ecstasy; all sing of Balarama's rasa; gods and men dance; through all the world — "Jaya, Nityananda, son of Rohini!" Raga kedara. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²⁵

- 13.1. What a sweet spring night! The moon has lit the quarters, a gentle Malaya breeze blows;
the Jahnavi is like the Yamuna, its banks are pure; cuckoos, peacocks and parrots call.
- 13.2. What festivity today in Nadia!
Remembering His former play, Nitai thrills all over and cannot be still for a moment.
- 13.3. Seeing Nitai's ways, Sri Gaurasundara, in great love, is overcome; no one can keep composure — all sing in many tunes of Balaichand's rasa-lila.
- 13.4. Gods and men dance together with arms raised; many instruments play without end;
Narahari Dasa says: through all the world — "Jaya, jaya Nityananda, son of Rohini!"²⁶

25. GPT1 — p. 335, section 5.1 ("festivals of the year"), no. 44 ("kedāra"; scan, PDF p. 594); GPT2 — section 5.1, no. 44, p. ≈214. The catalogue had assigned it to Vasu Ghosha (VG-048); the signature is "dāsa narahari kaya" (NG-260). BR 12

(ed. 1912, p. 945; ed. 1960, vv. 3351–3354): "once here Nityananda-Haladhara, rejoicing in the rasa of His former rasa-lila..." — among the places of Navadvipa, after a pada on Holi; then follows the account of the stealing of the companions' clothes (cf. chapter 23, no. 7). Readings: 13.1 BR "kuhure kokila"; 13.2 BR "āju ki kautuka nadiyāte"; 13.3 BR "gāya sabhe nānā chāmde". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

26. Balarama's rasa — Bhag. 10.65: coming to Vraja, Balarama spent the moonlit nights of two spring months with the gopis on the bank of the Yamuna (madhu-madhava); this is His own eternal lila, not a worldly one. Nityananda, Balarama Himself, remembers it by the Ganga, and Gaura, Krishna Himself, seeing His elder brother's bhava, is Himself overcome. "Sweet night" (madhuniśā) is a night of the month of Madhu (spring).

14. Narahari — "gorāpreme gara gara nitāi āmāra..." (GPT1 p. 433, no. 64; BR, Gita-chandrodaya)

*Nityananda comes to Gauda: overflowing with love for Gaura, He weeps, thrills, walks with an elephant's gait, embraces the fallen and makes them repeat "Hari!". Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR and in the Gita-chandrodaya.*²⁷

14.1. My Nitai, overflowing with love for Gora!

From His crimson eyes flows a stream like the Suradhuni.

14.2. Waves of thrill shine on the Lord's body;

with the gait of a lordly elephant He goes, swaying.

14.3. Seeing the fallen, He spreads both arms, embraces them and makes them say again and again: "Hari, Hari!"

14.4. Who else will be such an ocean of mercy?

Narahari: He descended to deliver the fallen.²⁸

27. GPT1 — p. 433, no. 64 ("dhānaśī"; scan, PDF p. 692); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 64, p. ≈286 (catalogue: NG-203 — with a garbled first line). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 967; ed. 1960, vv. 3632–3635): the Lord sends Nityananda from Puri to Gauda (CB Antya 5 is quoted there); Nityananda, passing through Utkala, comes to Gauda — "everywhere the word spread: Nityananda Raya has come, intoxicated with prema", — and people run to see Him. Gita-chandrodaya (ed. 1948), section on Nityananda, pada 2. Readings: 14.2 BR and Gita-chandrodaya "śobhe hema gāya" ("on His golden body"; GPT "śohe pahum' gāya"); 14.3 BR "kroṇe kari", "bolāya"; 14.4: see note 28. Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

28. 14.4 in the GPT and BR-1960 reads "narahari adhama tārite abatāra"; BR-1912 has "narahari-adhama" ("to deliver fallen Narahari"), the Gita-chandrodaya "adhama tāriteo" ("to deliver even fallen Narahari"); the poet counts himself among the fallen. "An elephant's gait", "swaying" — the majestic gait of Nityananda, intoxicated with prema for Gaura (not with worldly drink).

15. Narahari — "prabhu nityānanda rāma..." (GPT1 p. 433, no. 65; BR)

*Nityananda's life in brief: birth from Padmavati, twelve years of play at Ekachakra; leaving home with a sannyasi; twenty years of pilgrimage; coming to Nadia, where He cast away His staff and water-pot; the journey with the Lord to Puri and the Lord's broken staff; the return to Gauda by the Lord's order and the giving of prema to all. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²⁹

15.1. Lord Nityananda-Rama, matchless in beauty and virtues, was born from Padmavati's womb; with His companions He played joyfully for twelve years in Sri Ekachakra.

15.2. When Gora had appeared, He left home on the pretext of a sannyasi's company; He wandered among the holy places and after twenty years joyfully came to Nadia.

15.3. Finding Gorachand, His very life, caught in that net of love, He cast His staff and water-pot far away; ever intoxicated with sankirtana, He went with the Lord to Kshetra and broke the Lord's staff into three pieces.

15.4. By the Lord's order He came from Kshetra to Gauda and did the work dear to the Lord's heart; the refuge of Narahari Dasa, the Husband of Vasudha and Jahnava, gave prema to everyone He met.³⁰

29. GPT1 — p. 433, no. 65 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF p. 692); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 65. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-305). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 996; ed. 1960, vv. 4018–4021): after the account of the wedding and of Nityananda's life in Khardaha — "the poets glorify the virtues of Padmavati's son in many ways"; then follow the padas on Advaita. Readings: 15.2 BR "tīrtha-paryāṇa ka're"; 15.4 BR "basu-jāhṇabāra pati" (GPT "basu jāhṇabāra pati"). The Navadvipa-parikrama is the same as the BR. Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

30. Childhood at Ekachakra and the departure with a sannyasi — CB Adi 9; Nityananda broke the Lord's staff on the way to Puri (CC Madhya 5; CB Antya 2); He was sent by the Lord to preach in Gauda — CB Antya 5. The numbers ("twelve", "twenty" years) follow the poet's account. "Was born from Padmavati's womb" (15.1) is the author's word: Nityananda, Balarama Himself, appears by His own will (cf. 11.1: "has descended"; on the Lord's "birth" see note 4 of chapter 20). On the caveat about Nityananda's marriage — no. 20.

16. Narahari — "kṛṣṇera agraja rāma rohiṇīnandana..." (GPT1 pp. 433–434, no. 66; BR)

*Praise of Nityananda: He is Balarama, Krishna's elder brother, the Lord of Varuni and Revati; now He is Nitai, Chaitanya's elder brother, the Husband of Vasudha and Jahnava; His form, dance, tears, mercy to the fallen; the poet laments that he did not serve Him. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³¹

16.1. Rama, Krishna's elder brother, the son of Rohini — the treasure of the lives of His two beloveds, Varuni and Revati —

16.2. blessed in the age of Kali is He, beautiful Nitai, Chaitanya's elder brother, Padmavati's son.

16.3. The loving Lord of the lives of Vasudha and Jahnava by His own goodness became merciful to the living beings.

16.4. Intoxicated with love for Gora, He knows neither day nor night;
He sanctified the earth by giving the nectar of prema.

16.5. With love for Gora His crimson body shines, outdoing molten gold.

16.6. Earrings sway in His ears, captivating the minds of sages;
His arms reach to His knees — matchless beauty.

16.7. Who would not forget himself, seeing His broad chest?
Chaste wives of noble families give up their kin for Him.

16.8. From His moon-face never cease the words "Gora, Gora!" — and tears from His eyes run down His face and chest.

16.9. With His dear companions, in that same rapture, all float in the ocean of the joy of sankirtana.

16.10. The treasure of virtues dances so as to enchant the world — the utmost limit of beauty, unattainable even for the gods.

16.11. Who, looking at Nitaichand, can stay steady?
Even a heart of stone melts.

16.12. To sinners and the fallen His mercy is boundless — such a Lord wretched Narahari did not serve!³²

31. GPT1 — pp. 433–434, no. 66 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF pp. 692–693); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 66, p. ≈286 (catalogue: NG-204, "in the BR"). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 994–995; ed. 1960, vv. 3997–4008): after the wedding and a quotation from the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika on Vasudha and Jahnava — "the poets sing the deeds of Nityananda, the Saviour of the fallen". Readings: 16.2 BR "padmābatīra kumāra"; 16.7 BR "satī kulabatī tilāñjali dei kule". The Navadvipa-parikrama is the same as the BR. Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

32. Varuni and Revati are Balarama's consorts; Vasudha and Jahnava are their incarnations (Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika, quoted in BR 12, v. 3992). "Give up their kin" (16.7; lit. "offer their family the water of funeral rites") is the same formula as that used of the gopis who left everything for Krishna: it speaks of the all-attractive spiritual beauty of Nityananda-Balarama, which frees the soul from worldly bonds, not of a worldly attraction (on Balarama's own rasa with the gopis — Bhag. 10.65; see no. 13). Nityananda is Balarama Himself, the original spiritual master (CC Adi 5).

17. Narahari — "āhā mari ki nitāira śobhā..." (GPT1 p. 434, no. 67; BR)

*Panihati, the house of Raghava Pandita: Nityananda dances in sankirtana with arms raised, calls "Gora!", floats in tears of bliss and gives the poor the treasure of prema. Raga gandhara. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³³

17.1. Ah, what beauty of Nitai!

How wondrously He dances with arms raised — enticing the whole world!

17.2. Again and again He calls: "Gora!" — and His body, a golden mountain, ever floats in tears of bliss.

17.3. His heart overflows with compassion:

He makes the poor and lowly rich, giving them the gem of prema.

17.4. With what feeling He gently smiles!

Narahari says: [that smile] robs chaste wives of their composure and their rules.³⁴

33. GPT1 — p. 434, no. 67 ("gāndhāra"; scan, PDF p. 693); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 67. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-306). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 968; ed. 1960, vv. 3649–3652): "first Nityananda with His companions came to Panihati... who can describe the singing and dancing in the house of Raghava Pandita!" Readings: 17.3 GPT1 "kare mahādhvani" ("raises a great cry") — BR "kare mahādhani" ("makes [them] rich"; adopted); 17.4 BR "dhairaya-dharama nāśe". The Navadvipa-parikrama is the same as the BR. Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

34. Panihati and the kirtana in Raghava's house — CB Antya 5. On the formula of 17.4 see note 32: it is an image of Nityananda's all-attractive spiritual beauty, which frees from worldly bonds, not of worldly temptation.

18. Narahari — "kibā nācai nitāicāṁḍa..." (GPT1 p. 434, no. 68; BR)

*The same place: Nitaichand's dance among His companions; He calls "Gora!", the poor run to Him, feeling the breeze of His mercy; all drown in prema, Kali's pride retreats. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁵

18.1. How Nitaichand dances!

His body shines with matchless beauty — a snare for all eyes.

18.2. With what new movements He looks about — who knows in what joy He is!

Raising His arms that reach to His knees, He calls again and again: "Gora!"

18.3. He ever floats in the rasa of kirtana with His dear companions;

the poor and lowly run to Him from all sides, feeling the breeze of His mercy.

18.4. All are maddened, floating in the waters of prema; Kali's pride has gone far away;

counting the virtues of the poet Narahari's Lord, who in the world would not shed tears?³⁶

35. GPT1 — p. 434, no. 68 ("dhānāśī"; scan, PDF p. 693); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 68, p. ≈287 (catalogue: NG-205). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 968; ed. 1960, vv. 3653–3656; "punaḥ dhānāśī", right after no. 67). Readings: 18.1 BR "kibā nācaye nitāicāṁḍa"; 18.2 BR "nā jāni ki raṅge bhorā". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

36. "Maddened" (māṭila) — with prema. The poet Narahari's Lord here is Nityananda.

19. Narahari — "āju ānande nitāicāmde..." (GPT1 pp. 434–435, no. 69; BR)

*Nityananda's abhisheka at Panihati: He is seated on a throne, Damodara bathes Him with fragrant Ganga water to mantras; the gods, mingling with men, look on; Narahari brings a dry cloth and anoints Him with sandal. Raga ashavari. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁷

- 19.1. Today, in joy, having seated Nitaichand on a beautiful throne — no one can contain his delight.
- 19.2. Taking fragrant Ganga water and reciting mantras, Damodara joyfully pours it over His head.
- 19.3. With cries of "Jaya, jaya!"
the gods, mingling with men, gaze at His beauty with full eyes.
- 19.4. Some sing, rejoicing in the abhisheka;
Narahari brings a dry cloth and anoints His body with sandal.³⁸

37. GPT1 — pp. 434–435, no. 69 ("āśābarī"; scan, PDF pp. 693–694); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 69. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-307). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 969; ed. 1960, vv. 3658–3661): "there the abhisheka of Sri Nityananda was performed..."; then prose: Nityananda is seated on a couch and garlanded, Raghava holds the umbrella; Nityananda asks for a kadamba garland, and kadamba flowers are found on a lemon tree (vv. 3662–3665). Readings: 19.4 GPT "pāiyā śuṣkabāsa narahari, candana dei se aṅge" — BR "parāiyā śuṣka bāsa narahari, candana dei se raṅge" ("having dressed [Him] in a dry cloth... anoints with sandal in joy"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

38. The abhisheka and the kadamba miracle in Raghava's house — CB Antya 5. Who the Damodara performing the bath is cannot be established from this text alone. "Narahari" in 19.4 is a participant in the event; if the pada belongs to Narahari Chakravarti, this is not a signature but a mention of a companion (probably Narahari Sarakara), and the pada has no signature. The gods "mingle with men" — they come to the festival unrecognized (cf. no. 20).

20. Narahari — "basudhā jāhṇabā debī śobhābadhi..." (GPT1 p. 435, no. 71; BR)

*The adhivasa of the brides — Vasudha and Jahnava, the daughters of Suryadasa Pandita: the brahmanas bless them, placing rice and durva grass on their heads; their mother is beside herself with joy; the women friends perform auspicious rites; the heavenly women watch unseen. Raga bhupali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*³⁹

- 20.1. Vasudha and Jahnava Devi, the utmost of beauty — their bodies adorned with the ornaments of the adhivasa;
their lovely radiance shines like lightning, kunkuma and ketaki.
- 20.2. Around them the brahmanas count themselves fortunate, looking joyfully at the brides;
reciting the Vedas, they bless them, placing rice and durva grass on the heads of both.
- 20.3. The pandita's wife hardly feels the ground beneath her feet, barely restrains her heart; the women friends perform every kind of auspicious rite and how eagerly they cry "ulu-lulu"!
- 20.4. Conches, bells and many instruments sound — there is no din to compare with it;
Narahari says: the heavenly women, unseen, watch it with great delight in their hearts.⁴⁰

39. GPT1 — p. 435, no. 71 ("bhūpālī"; scan, PDF p. 694); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 71, p. ≈288. The catalogue (NG-207) had run its first line together with the first line of no. 73 ("basudhā jāhṇabā debī śobhābadhi bhubanapābana nitāi mora"); no. 73 is the new row NG-309. BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 991–992; ed. 1960, vv. 3965–3968): after the bridegroom's adhivasa at Badagachhi in Krishnadasa's house (vv. 3948–3956; there a pada of Ghanashyama, GPT no. 70), Suryadasa at Saligrama performs the adhivasa of his daughters — "although he had seen his daughters' glory in a dream, he was still overcome by a father's tenderness". Readings: 20.1 BR "taṛita-kunkuma ketakī yānu"; 20.3 BR "karu sakhikula". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

40. Nityananda's wedding is His lila, not a worldly event: Nityananda, Balarama Himself, is not subject to worldly bonds, and Vasudha and Jahnava are incarnations of His eternal consorts Varuni and Revati (note 32); Jahnava Devi later became one of the foremost teachers of the Gaudiya Vaishnavas. The adhivasa is the pre-wedding consecration; "ulu-lulu" is the jubilant cry of Bengali women. The pandita's wife is the brides' mother, Suryadasa's wife.

21. Narahari — "koṭi manamatha-garababhara-hara..." (GPT1 pp. 435–436, no. 72; BR)

*The wedding procession: Nitai-Haladhara in wedding attire rides in a new palanquin; brahmanas and bards praise Him, the people run to look; singers, dancers and musicians; torches turn night into day; the gods unseen shower flowers. Raga deshapala. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*⁴¹

- 21.1. Crusher of the pride of millions of Kamadevas, most handsome Nitai-Haladhara rides in a new palanquin, His beauty brimming over;
in wedding attire, with ornaments of many kinds on His body, with lovely lotus-eyes, a charming gentle smile on His shining face.
- 21.2. Intoxicated by drinking His beauty, the brahmanas cry "Jaya, jaya";
the bards rejoice and again and again proclaim His spotless fame;
leaving their homes, men and women run, finding no rest, and, unblinking, gaze at Him from all sides, floating in the bliss of beholding.
- 21.3. Skilled singers sing, keeping tala, shruti and svara, the sweet ragas with their murchhanas and gramas;
dancers dance, beating out: "kataka thaita thai-thai nini ni na";
musicians play many instruments — their skill has no equal:
"thongka na na na na khunga khungkata dhodhilanga dhiki-dhiki nina".
- 21.4. By the glare of countless torches on the earth the night became bright as day;
amid a great din all the people fill the roads;
seeing from the sky, the gods unseen, thrilled with joy, shower flowers lavishly;
the matchless play of the Lord of Narahari Dasa enchants people's minds.⁴²

41. GPT1 — pp. 435–436, no. 72 ("deśapāla"; scan, PDF pp. 694–695; the heading is garbled in the OCR — "ṁṁ parda"); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 72. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-308). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 993; ed. 1960, vv. 3973–3976): "at dusk the Lord set out from Badagachhi to Saligrama for the wedding; instruments sounded..."; then follows the wedding in Suryadasa's house ("according to the custom of the world and the shastras Suryadasa gave Nityananda his two daughters", v. 3983). Readings: 21.2 GPT1 (scan) "karata bhūsurabṛnda jaya jaya" (OCR "ṭṣabṛnda"), BR "bhūsurabṛnda"; 21.4 BR "dibasa sama bhela rajanī ujora", "saptalokagati patha śohaye" (GPT "divasa sava", "sava loka gati-patha"). The onomatopoeic syllables of drums and dance (21.3) differ among the witnesses; given after GPT1. Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

42. Tala is rhythm, shruti and svara are microtones and tones, murchhana and grama are the modes of classical music. Haladhara ("bearer of the plough") is a name of Balarama. On Nityananda's wedding see note 40.

22. Narahari — "bhubanapābana nitāi mora..." (GPT1 p. 436, no. 73; BR)

*Nityananda goes to the house of Gadadhara Dasa: He calls "Gora!", walks like an intoxicated elephant, with a malati garland on His chest; whomever He glances at even once He plunges into the ocean of prema; the poet laments that he did not serve Him. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴³

- 22.1. My Nitai, the purifier of the world — who knows in what bhava He is, ever absorbed in it!
- 22.2. Calling "Gora, Gora!", He raises both arms and goes swaying like an intoxicated elephant.
- 22.3. On His neck a malati garland glitters, playing upon His broad chest.

- 22.4. On His lovely face — a sweet smile, as if the moon were pouring out heaps of nectar.
- 22.5. His eyes, red as lotuses, brim with tears;
that glance is suffused with lovely compassion.
- 22.6. Whomever He looks at even once with those eyes,
He plunges into the ocean of prema.
- 22.7. The poor, the lowly, the wretched — He rejects no one:
who else gives prema like this?
- 22.8. Narahari did not serve such a Lord — and stayed drowning in the poison of sense objects.⁴⁴

43. GPT1 — p. 436, no. 73 ("dhānaśī"; scan, PDF p. 695); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 73. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-309; see note 39). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 970; ed. 1960, vv. 3680–3687): "having stayed at Panihati, He set out for Navadvipa to see Ai (Shachi); the Purifier of the world with His companions, absorbed in bhava, goes to the house of Gadadhara Dasa"; then follows Gadadhara Dasa's mercy to the kazi of that village (v. 3689). Readings: 22.8 GPT1 "biṣayabiṣeṣe rahila maji" — BR "biṣaya-biṣete rahila maji" ("drowning in the poison of sense objects"; adopted). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

44. "Like an intoxicated elephant" is an image of the majestic gait of Nityananda, intoxicated with prema for Gaura, not with worldly drink. Gadadhara Dasa is a companion of Nityananda; on his house and the kazi — CB Antya-khanda.

23. Narahari — "nitāi guṇanidhi śobhāra abadhi..." (GPT1 pp. 436–437, no. 74; BR)

*Khardaha: Nityananda's beauty, outshining the morning sun; He walks swaying like an elephant, calling "Gora!", with tears of bliss; gods and men run to touch His feet, and the age of Kali trembles before His might. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴⁵

- 23.1. Nitai — treasure of virtues, the utmost of beauty: from what nectar did the Creator so lovingly fashion Him!
The radiance of His body outshines the morning sun — seeing it, who could keep composure?
- 23.2. His arms reach to His knees like serpents; His matchless movements float in joy;
His face — a host of autumn moons — sheds nectar with a slight smile.
- 23.3. Calling "Gora, Gora!", His heart overflowing, He goes swaying like an elephant; from His trembling eyes, red as lotuses, streams of bliss pour down.
- 23.4. Gods and men run to Him from all sides in the hope of touching those rarest feet;
Narahari Dasa: before the Lord's might the mighty age of Kali trembles with fear.⁴⁶

45. GPT1 — pp. 436–437, no. 74 ("dhānaśī"; scan, PDF pp. 695–696); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 74. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-310). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 971–972; ed. 1960, vv. 3698–3701): "Lord Nityananda came to Khardaha, surrounded by His companions; in the middle, Nityananda, enchanting Kamadeva"; before it is a pada of Vrindavana Dasa ("bande prabhu nityānanda", GPT 6.1 no. 5). Readings: 23.1 BR "gaṛhila sādhe", "prabhātera bhānu jini' tanuchaṭā"; 23.3 BR "hili' duli' cale kuñjara-pārā". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

46. Nityananda in Khardaha — CB Antya 5. The age of Kali "trembles": with Nityananda's coming the power of Kali recedes, and the holy name and prema flood Gauda.

24. Narahari — "nitāi karuṇānidhi..." (GPT1 p. 437, no. 75; BR)

*Khardaha: Nityananda dances with His companions, making the poor rich in prema; He knows neither day nor night, weeps calling "Gora!", is covered with dust; all weep hearing of His virtues — only Narahari is far away. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴⁷

- 24.1. Nitai — an ocean of mercy: Providence has brought Him to us.
- 24.2. The poor, the lowly and the wretched He made rich, giving them the wealth of prema.

- 24.3. With His dear companions He goes about, joyfully dancing.
- 24.4. Who knows with what prema He is intoxicated: He knows neither day nor night.
- 24.5. Calling "Gora, Gora!", He weeps; not for a moment can He restrain Himself.
- 24.6. His body is grey with dust — seeing this, who can stay steady?
- 24.7. Who does not weep over His virtues? Narahari alone is far away.⁴⁸

47. GPT1 — p. 437, no. 75 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF p. 696); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 75, p. ≈288 (catalogue: NG-208, "in the BR"). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 972; ed. 1960, vv. 3706–3711): "coming to Khardaha, the Lord with His people — in the temple-house of Purandara Pandita... dances and distributes the rarest treasure". Readings: 24.1 BR "āṇi' bilāyala bidhi" ("Providence brought and distributed [Him]"); couplet 24.5 is absent from the BR. Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

48. "Only Narahari is far away" — the poet's humility (cf. 16.12, 22.8). Purandara Pandita is a companion of Nityananda.

25. Narahari — "gorāpreme mātīyā nitāi..." (GPT1 p. 437, no. 76; BR)

*The same place: intoxicated with love for Gaura, Nityananda dances, falls into the arms of the fallen, weeps, thrills; Kamadeva swoons at His beauty; the poet drowns in the beauty of His feet. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁴⁹

- 25.1. Intoxicated with love for Gora, Nitai intoxicates the world, looking at it with compassionate eyes.
- 25.2. He dances, raising His arms that reach to His knees, and, swaying, falls into the embrace of the fallen.
- 25.3. How His heart overflows with happiness!
Face and chest are washed by the tears from His eyes.
- 25.4. On every limb — waves of thrill;
Madana swoons, seeing the radiance of His form.
- 25.5. On His lovely moon-face, a gentle smile;
speaking sweet words, He pours out heaps of nectar.
- 25.6. What new grace in His crimson feet!
Narahari's life has, as it were, drowned in it.⁵⁰

49. GPT1 — p. 437, no. 76 ("dhānaśī"; scan, PDF p. 696); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 76. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-311). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 972; ed. 1960, vv. 3712–3717; "punaḥ dhānaśī", right after no. 75). Readings: 25.6 GPT1 (scan) "narahari-parāṇa majila mene tāya" — BR "yena tāya" (adopted). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

50. "Intoxicated", "intoxicates" — with prema for Gaura; Nityananda gives the world the same intoxication of love for the Lord. Madana is Kamadeva: his beauty pales before Nityananda's spiritual beauty.

26. Narahari — "bhubane jaya jaya nitāi dayāmaya..." (GPT1 p. 437, no. 77; BR)

*The same place: merciful Nitai removes the fear of the round of births and maddens the fallen with prema; He dances calling "Gaurahari!", falls in the dust; the whole world, seeing Him, forgets its sorrow. Raga gurjari. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁵¹

- 26.1. Through all the world — "Jaya, jaya!": merciful Nitai by His goodness removes the fear of samsara;
the low and wretched He ceaselessly maddens with the gift of prema.
- 26.2. Calling "Gaurahari!", He dances with arms raised and, swaying, falls to the ground;
His tender body — or a golden mountain? — is covered with dust, and how beautiful it is in it!
- 26.3. His eyes, surpassing lotus petals, brim with tears, and again and again the streams flow; on His face a gentle smile pours out heaps of nectar — a moon dispelling the darkness of sin.

26.4. In what bhava He overflows, trembling all over — how can Narahari Dasa describe this play?

All moving and unmoving beings, seeing the excellent Lord, have forgotten the burden of sorrow and float in happiness.⁵²

51. GPT1 — p. 437, no. 77 ("gujari"; scan, PDF p. 696); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 77. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-312). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 972–973; ed. 1960, vv. 3718–3721; "punaḥ gurjari"); after it Nityananda leaves Khardaha for Saptagrama, for Uddharana Datta. Readings: 26.2 BR "gaurahari buli"; 26.3 BR "kaluṣa tama nāśi" śaśi-pārā". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

52. "Maddens" (unamata) — with the gift of prema, not with worldly madness. Nityananda removes the fear of samsara: His mercy as the original guru opens the way to Gaura (cf. no. 28).

27. Narahari — "nityānanda haraṣa hiyā māha..." (GPT1 pp. 437–438, no. 78; GCC)

*Morning in Shachi's house, the Lord among the companions: Nityananda, gazing at His younger brother, plunges into the ocean of His beauty and thinks: "Before, I saw the wondrous dark body — but Gaura's golden body captivates me still more; this secret rasa cannot be fathomed"; He prays never to be separated from Him and longs for a body made all of eyes. Raga velavali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁵³

27.1. Joy in Nityananda's heart:

gazing at His younger brother, forgetting everything, He plunges into that ocean of beauty.

27.2. In His mind He reflects: "Before, I saw the wondrous dark body; but Gaura's body steals my heart still more — how can I fathom this secret rasa?

27.3. This is the rarest treasure — now, somehow propitiating [the Creator], I will ask him for a boon:

may there never be separation — may He stay fixed forever before my eyes."

27.4. Such hopes arise in His heart — the way of prema is matchless and boundless; again and again, in longing, the poet Narahari's Lord asks the Creator for a body made all of eyes.⁵⁴

53. GPT1 — pp. 437–438, no. 78 ("belābali"; scan, PDF pp. 696–697); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 78. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-313). GCC — kirana 4 ("the Lord among the devotees", morning in Shachi's courtyard), pada 8 ("belābali"); before it (pada 7) is a pada of Ghanashyama on Nityananda gazing at Gaura's face amid the companions. Readings: 27.1 GCC "nityānanda harṣa hiya māha", "anuja nihāri bisāri sakala"; 27.4 GCC "premaka gati". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

54. Nityananda is Balarama: "before" (in Vraja) He saw dark Krishna, and now Krishna has appeared as golden Gaura — in the mood and radiance of Radha (CC Adi 1.5), and this "secret rasa" captivates Him even more. The prayer for a "body of eyes" is like the gopis' complaint against the Creator who made eyelids (Bhag. 10.31.15): Nityananda, the Lord Himself, relishes the mood of a loving servant and brother. The poet Narahari's Lord here is Nityananda.

28. Narahari — "aparūpa pahumka prema balihāri..." (GPT1 p. 438, no. 80; GCC)

*The same place: Nityananda, rapt in prema, cannot stand steady; Abhirama hastens up and gives Him his shoulder, and Nityananda, gazing at Gaura's moon-face, laughs; the poet: whoever hopes to attain Gaura's feet bypassing Nitai is the one fool in all three worlds. Raga veloyara. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁵⁵

28.1. Wondrous is the Lord's prema — I give myself for it!

His heart overflowing, His movements wavering, His feet unsteady — He cannot restrain Himself.

28.2. Seeing [this] from afar, handsome Abhirama came up to Him with swift steps;

[Nitai], utterly beside Himself, not even in control of His cloth, laid His left hand on his shoulder.

28.3. Gazing at Gaura's moon-face, He laughs again and again — softly, softly, His lips shining; not even a little of the beauty of His matchless movements could Shesha or Sharada describe.

28.4. Whoever, bypassing Nitai, hopes to attain Gaura's pure lotus feet is the one fool in all three worlds: all his efforts are in vain, — says Narahari Dasa.⁵⁶

55. GPT1 — p. 438, no. 80 ("beloyāra"; scan, PDF p. 697); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 80. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-314). GCC — kirana 4, pada 10 ("beloyāra"); before it is a pada of Ghanashyama (GPT no. 79) on Nityananda intoxicated with His brother's bhava. Readings: 28.1 GCC "aparūpa prema balihārī" (without "pahumka"); 28.2 GCC "abaloki", "āola niyaṇe", "basana pari tāmīkara kandhe"; 28.3 GCC "gauracandra-mukhacanda", "śobhā śeṣa śārada baraṇa śakata nāhi thora" — "śeṣa" adopted after the GCC (GPT "śobhā śubha śāradabaraṇa"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

56. "Handsome Abhirama" (sughaṇa abhirāma) is Abhirama (Ramadasa) Thakura, a companion of Nityananda, one of the twelve gopals; Nityananda leans on him in other padas of the section as well (cf. 6.1 no. 2: "calling 'brother Abhirama!'"). It can also be taken as an epithet — "the handsome, charming [Nitai] came up [to Gaura] and laid His hand on His shoulder"; the first reading is more natural. Shesha is the thousand-headed serpent who sings the Lord's glories with all his mouths; Sharada is Sarasvati, the goddess of speech. 28.4 is the central thought of the tradition: Nityananda is the original spiritual master (CC Adi 5), and Gaura's mercy is attained only by His mercy; cf. Narottama Dasa's song "nitāi-pada-kamala" ("without Nitai one cannot attain Radha and Krishna").

29. Narahari — "bilase nitāicāmṇa rasabhūpa..." (GPT1 pp. 438–439, no. 81; GCC)

*Nityananda's form from head to foot: a body the colour of gold with kunkuma and dawn, softer than shirisha flowers, its fragrance filling the quarters; the smile, teeth, eyes, brows, tilaka, earrings, arms, chest, navel, slender waist, blue silk garments, crimson feet; the poet prays that the radiance of Nitai's toenails may dispel the darkness of his heart. Raga veloyara. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁵⁷

29.1. Nitaichand, king of rasa, shines!

His form, outdoing a heap of kunkuma with the dawn upon a golden mountain, enchants the world.

29.2. The radiance of His limbs is wondrous; He is far softer than a shirisha flower; the fragrance of His body, which shatters chaste maidens' fear for their rules, fills the ten directions.

29.3. Sweetness on His lips, a sweet gentle smile — His bright moon-face pours nectar; the gleam of His teeth humbles strings of pearls, His lips are lovely, His chin steals hearts.

29.4. Pure, large eyes like lotus petals glisten in joy, full of countless movements; His curved fine brows — Ananga's bow — put to shame serpents and rows of bees.

29.5. Tilaka on His forehead, earrings swaying in His ears, His nose like Garuda's beak, lovely; cheeks and proud neck finely sculpted, His mighty arms steal the pride of an elephant's trunk.

29.6. His chest, conqueror of the three worlds, broad and fine — hard as a gate: what can compare? His navel a lake, the line of hair its weed, the three folds — the Triveni: who can keep composure?

29.7. Who, keeping patience, created this beauty? His slender waist humbles the lion's pride; wondrous blue garments of the finest silk entice the minds and eyes of people.

29.8. His full shanks are soft and graceful, His mighty thighs and knees give joy; crimson feet, the lovely radiance of the toenails — may they dispel the darkness of this Narahari's heart!⁵⁸

57. GPT1 — pp. 438–439, no. 81 ("beloyāra"; scan, PDF pp. 697–698; the last pada of section 6.1); GPT2 — section 6.1, no. 81. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-315). GCC — kirana 4, pada 11 ("beloyāra"; right after no. 80); next (pada 12) is a pada on Advaita's joy (GPT 6.2 no. 5 — no. 1 of chapter 25). Readings: 29.1 GCC "aruṇamilita-kanakācala-kuṅkumapuñja gañji jaga-bañcana rūpa" ("upon a golden mountain" — after the GCC; GPT "kala-kāñcana", "pure gold"); 29.2 GCC "kulabatī-yubati-dharama-bhaya-bhañjana"; 29.8 GCC "e narahari hṛdayaka tama karu nāśa". Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS. B.

58. A description of the form "from head to foot" (cf. no. 22 of chapter 23) is a devotional contemplation of the Lord. Blue garments are Balarama's (Nilambara, "clad in blue"). "Shatters chaste maidens' fear for their rules" (29.2) is the same formula as in 16.7 and 17.4 (see note 32): the Lord's spiritual beauty, which frees from worldly bonds. Ananga is Kamadeva; the Triveni is the confluence of three rivers at Prayaga; the shirisha is a flower that is the very type of softness. "Enchants the world" — lit. "deceives the world" (jaga-bañcana): under the guise of an avadhuta Balarama Himself is hidden.

Chapter 25. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — IX: Advaita

Continuation of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 25: GPT section 6.2 "Advaita" (GPT1 pp. 439–449) — all fourteen padas signed Narahari (nos. 5–7, 9–11, 13, 15–18, 20, 21, 24): Advaita among Gaura's companions in the morning at Navadvipa, His form, His thundering calls and His dancing in the kirtana of Gaura's glories, a survey of His life, a praise, and His advent at Navagram. The signatures of the section were checked throughout, in the OCR and on the scan; the 12th wave of the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) at the relevant places, the Gaura-charita-chintamani (GCC, kirana 4) and the section on Advaita in the Gita-chandrodaya were read continuously. Not translated (outside the appendix): nos. 8, 12, 14, 19, 22, 23 — signed Ghanashyama; no. 4 — no signature (it ends "the Lord Sankarshana wanders behind them from door to door"); the other padas of the section are by other poets (Vrindavana Dasa, Lochana, Shyamadasa, Vaishnava Dasa, Kanu, Trilochana, Gokulananda, Balarama Dasa). The base text is GPT1 (doubtful places by the scan), collated with GPT2, the GCC (ed. 1947), the BR (eds. 1912 and 1960) and the Gita-chandrodaya; the PK, KGC and PS were checked. Advaita Acharya is Maha-Vishnu Himself and Sadashiva, non-different from Hari (CC Adi 6; the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika, 11, 76, also calls Him Sadashiva); as with Gaura and Nityananda, the pronouns referring to Him are capitalized. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced.

1. Narahari — "rajanī prabhāta prabhākara sama..." (GPT1 p. 440, section 6.2, no. 5; GCC)

Morning among the companions: seeing the rising of Gaura's moon-face, Advaita, shining like the sun, beats His armpits in jubilation, walks to and fro more intoxicated than the king of elephants; His smile is a rain of jasmine; tears flow from His eyes like strings of pearls. Raga beloyara. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.¹

- 1.1. The night has turned to dawn — and Advaita Mahashaya, like the sun, in supreme delight, ceaselessly beats His armpits, seeing the rising of Gaura's moon-face.
- 1.2. His portly body, which has conquered the quarters, is most beautiful, and on it shines fresh horripilation;
wondrously He walks to and fro, more intoxicated than the king of elephants.
- 1.3. He laughs softly — His rows of teeth gleam, white rays issue ceaselessly, as if wondrous jasmine flowers were raining down on every side, — and the connoisseurs of beauty are filled with longing and delight.
- 1.4. His eyes tremble, brimming with tears, and the tears flow beautifully, heeding no restraint, glittering like strings of pearls, — and Narahari sees the pearls put to shame by the Lord.²

1. GPT1 — p. 440, section 6.2 "Advaita", no. 5 ("beloyāra"; scan, PDF p. 699); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 5. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-316). GCC — kirana 4 ("the Lord among His devotees": in the morning, after waking, the companions gather round Gaura, and the poet describes each of them — Nityananda, padas 7–11, Advaita, padas 12–15, Gadadhara, 16–17, Narahari Sarakara, 18, Srivasa, 19, and others), pada 12 ("punaḥ beloyāra"; right after the pada on Nityananda's form — no. 29 of chapter 24). Readings: 1.1 "nirakhi" ("seeing") — from the GCC, the word has dropped out in the GPT (the line is short of the metre); 1.4 GCC "calata" ("flow"; GPT "carata"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS, Gita-chandrodaya. B. Note 57 of chapter 24 wrongly calls this pada no. 4 (corrected).

2. Beating the armpits (kakṣa-bāḍya) is a gesture of jubilation and challenge, as of a wrestler or a hero (cf. below, 9.3 and 11.2: He slaps His arms, and Kali trembles at Advaita's roar). "Portly body": in the lila Advaita is the elder, venerable in years (cf. "the old man", buṛā, in other poets of the same section); "which has conquered the quarters" — by its radiance and might. Advaita's tears and laughter are the ecstasy of love for Gaura, whom He Himself called into the world. The last words (pahumka parābhava jāni, lit. "knows the defeat by the Lord") may also be understood otherwise: "Narahari owns himself defeated by the Lord's beauty".

2. Narahari — "sītāpati atīśaya sukhe bhora..." (GPT1 p. 441, no. 6; GCC)

*Advaita, the Lord of Sita, is absorbed in happiness and reflects with a smile: Gaura's beauty has left Madana no trace of pride; the three worlds, having drunk this intoxicating nectar, have forgotten everything and made Shachi's son the essence of their life; the word "sorrow" has vanished; the sin of Kali with its retinue is cowed. Raga not specified ("yathārāga"). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*³

2.1. The Lord of Sita is absorbed in boundless happiness.

Smiling gently, He reflects in His mind: "Thus not a little of Madana's pride is left!"

2.2. How wondrous is this excellent golden complexion — an intoxicating nectar: drinking only a little of it, the three worlds became intoxicated, forgot everything and made Shachi's son the essence of their life.

2.3. The Moon with His fine companions, the abode of compassion, takes away the fierce burning and the darkness of people's hearts; the word "sorrow" has gone from hearing on earth, in homes and in all the worlds there is great bliss.

2.4. [Kali's] joy has ended, everything has turned the other way: now the sin of Kali with all its retinue is cowed.

Hari, Hari! Whom has it not stripped of power, — says Narahari, — Your might, O Lord!⁴

3. GPT1 — p. 441, no. 6 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 700); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 6. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-317). GCC — kirana 4, pada 13 ("yathārāga"). Readings: 2.1 "bicāra" ("reflects") — from the GCC (GPT1 and GPT2 misprint "bicā"); 2.3 GCC "bharala bhubanamadhi adhika ānanda" ("great bliss filled the worlds"; GPT "bhavana bhubana madhi"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS, Gita-chandrodaya. B.

4. Madana (Kamadeva) is the god of love; "Madana's pride" is put to shame by the spiritual beauty of Gaura — Krishna Himself, Madana-mohana, "the enchanter of Madana": this is praise of the Lord's all-attractive beauty, not of worldly attraction. "The Moon" is Gaura (Gaurachandra) with His companions. Kali is the personified age of quarrel; his "joy" is his power over people, which the advent of the Lord and of His name destroys.

3. Narahari — "acyuta-janaka janāśraya jagamadhi..." (GPT1 p. 441, no. 7; GCC)

*The Father of Achyuta, stirred by longings, with a pauper's greed takes Gaura, still in His night attire, through His eyes into His heart, worships Him with the flowers of His bhavas, dances unnoticed crying "Jaya!" and repeats: "I have won!"; Narahari, Haridasa and the others watch Him in unspeakable happiness. Raga not specified. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁵

3.1. The Father of Achyuta, shelter of people, renowned in the world, generous, remover of the sorrow of the lowly, forms so many longings in His mind — now He loses composure, now again restrains Himself.

3.2. With the unbounded greed of a pauper, without hesitation, the King of the twice-born — still in His night attire —

He took in by the path of the eyes and with great care seated on the throne of His heart.

3.3. He worships Him, offering kadamba flowers — His bhavas, and offers body and mind to Him in nirmanchana; crying "Jaya, jaya!", unnoticed, He dances gently — and steals away people's hearts.

3.4. Again and again He says: "I have won, I have won!" — and blossoms, absorbed by Himself in the rasa of beholding.

Seeing this matchless play, Narahari, Haridasa and the others — who can measure their happiness?⁶

5. GPT1 — p. 441, no. 7 ("yathārāga"; scan, PDF p. 700); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 7 (catalogue: NG-210). GCC — kirana 4, pada 14 ("yathārāga"); next (pada 15) comes Ghanashyama's pada on Advaita's form (GPT no. 8). Readings: 3.2 "raṅka sama" ("like a pauper") and "rajanīka beśa" ("night attire"; cf. in the same kirana, pada 16: the Lord in the morning "in His night dress") — from the GCC; the GPT "bakṣa sama", "rajanī kareṇa" make no sense; 3.4 GCC "ko kahu ora" ("who can tell"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS, Gita-chandrodaya. B.

6. Achyuta is Achyutananda, Advaita's son, "the beloved of Krishna-Chaitanya" (Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika, 87); the name also means "the Infallible" (Krishna). The King of the twice-born (dvijarāja) is both the moon and the king of brahmanas: Gaura. Nirmanchana is the rite of circular offering (as in arati), a sign of self-surrender. "I have won!": Advaita triumphs — His worship has been fulfilled, the Lord whom He called has appeared (cf. in the same GPT section Lochana's pada no. 30: "jītilum̐ jītilum̐... jība nistārite habe gaura abatāra"). In the last line the name "Narahari" is both the poet's signature and, probably, the name of one of the onlookers: in the same kirana of the GCC, the pada after those on Advaita and Gadadhara (pada 18) praises Narahari Sarakara among the Lord's companions; Haridasa is Haridasa Thakura.

4. Narahari — "śrī-advaitacandra bhūpa mora..." (GPT1 p. 442, no. 9; BR; GCd)

*Advaita's form in love for Gaura: tears from His reddened eyes, a radiance shaming hosts of suns, a gait surpassing the elephant's, a smile; His roar robs the lion of its pride — Kali trembles, the wicked flee; the ocean of compassion overflows and the fallen float in the rasa of bhakti. Raga kamoda or belavali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR and the Gita-chandrodaya; Vrajabuli.*⁷

4.1. Sri Advaitachandra is my sovereign!

His heart overflows with love for Gaura, tears stream ceaselessly from His reddened eyes.

4.2. His graceful limbs, thrilling with horripilation, shine with an excellent light that puts to shame hosts of suns;

His gait, the delight of the heart, surpasses the elephant's; He laughs — and His teeth gleam like pearls.

4.3. Robbing the lion of its pride, He roars again and again — Kali trembles, the wicked flee far away; by His mighty power the threefold miseries are subdued, and the hearts of the people are filled with supreme gladness.

4.4. The ocean of compassion has overflowed in all directions — the base and the fallen float in the rasa of bhakti.

What will foolish Narahari understand of this play? He has revealed to the world the new deeds and qualities of Gaura.⁸

7. GPT1 — p. 442, no. 9 ("kāmoda vā belābali"; scan, PDF p. 701); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 9. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-318). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 977; ed. 1960, vv. 3767–3770, "belābali"): Nityananda, preaching in Gauda, stays at Saptagrama with Uddharana Datta and is about to go to Shantipura, to Advaita's house; Ishana, telling Srinivasa of this, describes Advaita's glory ("Advaita Acharya lives in Shantipura... He who brought Shri Krishna-Chaitanya into the world", vv. 3753–3754) and quotes one after another padas on Advaita: Narahari (vv. 3755–3760, "śrīgaura-abhinna tanu advaita āmāra" — not in the GPT), Lochana (GPT no. 2), "Advaitachandra with His companions ever floats on the waves of the ocean of love for Gora" (v. 3766) — and this pada; then come nos. 11, 12, 14 (Ghanashyama), 15, 16, 17, 18, 19 (Ghanashyama), 20 (nos. 6, 8–12 of this chapter). Gita-chandrodaya — the section "atha śrī-advaitacandrasya", pada 2 (there also nos. 14, 2, 11, 12, 17, 21). The Navadvipa-parikrama is the same as the BR. Readings: 4.1 BR and GCd "pahu mora" ("my Lord"); 4.2 BR and GCd "kuñjaradamana gamana" ("a gait shaming the elephant"; GPT "kuñjaragamana damana"); 4.4 BR and GCd "umari calu cahu diśa" ("overflowing, flowed in all directions"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

8. Advaita's roar (huṅkāra) is the thundering calls with which, worshipping with Ganga water and tulasi leaves, He called the Lord down (CC Adi 3); here it is a jubilant roar from which Kali flees. "The threefold miseries" — those caused by one's own body and mind, by other beings and by nature. "He has revealed Gaura's deeds to the world": Advaita was the first to proclaim and glorify Gaura as the Lord.

5. Narahari — "śrī-advaita guṇamaṇi sakala rasera khani..." (GPT1 p. 442, no. 10; BR)

*Advaita's life in one pada: birth from Nabha at Navagram, removal to Shantipura, pilgrimage after His parents' passing, marriage to Sita and the austerities by which He brought Krishna and Haladhara; kirtana in Nadia, service to the Lord as sannyasi in His own house, journeys to Nilachala. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*⁹

- 5.1. Sri Advaita, the jewel of virtues, the mine of all rasas, took birth from Nabha's womb;
He was born at Navagram, in Vanga, played there joyfully, and after some time came to Shantipura.
- 5.2. When His father and mother passed from sight, He went on pilgrimage to the holy places, and returning, settled in Shantipura; becoming the husband of Sri Sita, day after day He performed so many austerities — and brought [into the world] Krishna and Haladhara.
- 5.3. Seeing the pastimes in Nadia, He ever refreshed His eyes and danced in kirtana in many ways; receiving Gorachand, the crown of sannyasis, in His own house, He served Him joyfully.
- 5.4. When the Lord stayed at Nilachala, He went there and back and intoxicated everyone with Gora's glories.

Narahari Dasa says: Sri Advaita is merciful — the three worlds proclaim this fame.¹⁰

9. GPT1 — p. 442, no. 10 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF p. 701); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 10 (catalogue: NG-211). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 996–997; ed. 1960, vv. 4024–4027, "kāmoda"): right after the pada surveying Nityananda's life (6.1 no. 65, no. 15 of chapter 24) Ishana tells Srinivasa: "Sri Advaita with His companions is ceaselessly absorbed in singing Gaura's deeds, now in Shantipura, now in Nadia; who does not sing the glory of Nabha's Son?" (vv. 4022–4023). Readings: 5.1 "bilasiyā" — from the BR (GPT "bilāsiyā"); 5.4 BR "prabhu-sthiti" ("the Lord's stay"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya. B.

10. Navagram is Advaita's birthplace in Vanga (East Bengal), near Shrihatta (Sylhet); His father is Kuvera Pandita (Kuvera Mishra), His mother Nabha (in the Advaita-prakasha, Labha; BR 12, vv. 1751–1758). Sri Sita is Advaita's wife, according to the Gaura-ganoddesh-dipika (86) Yogamaya. "Austerities" (tapa) are His worship and His prayers for the Lord's descent (CC Adi 3); "Krishna and Haladhara" are Gaura and Nityananda. The Lord after sannyasa in Advaita's house at Shantipura — CC Madhya 3; Advaita's yearly journeys to Puri with the Bengali devotees — CC Madhya 11 ff.

6. Narahari — "śāntipurapati parama sundara..." (GPT1 p. 442, no. 11; BR; GCd)

*The Lord of Shantipura in the intoxication of bhava: He roars, subduing Kali's arrogance, trembles at the name "Gaurahari" and falls into the arms of His companions, rolls in the dust, streams pour from His lotus eyes like the rains of Shravana; seeing the wretched, He spreads mercy through the world. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR and the Gita-chandrodaya; Vrajabuli.*¹¹

- 6.1. The Lord of Shantipura, most beautiful, — whose deeds are an excellent lila, — is constantly intoxicated with the weight of bhava, His body thrilling all over.
- 6.2. Subduing the mighty arrogance of Kali, again and again He roars terribly, beside Himself; crying "Gaurahari! Hari!", He trembles and falls into the arms of His companions.
- 6.3. Again and again He rolls on the ground, incomparable, His body grey with dust; from His lotus eyes streams pour down like the rain-clouds of Shravana.
- 6.4. Seeing the lowly and the sorrowful, He shows mercy and spreads it through the world.
Narahari Dasa offers himself to the Lord: how supremely generous He is!¹²

11. GPT1 — p. 442, no. 11 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF p. 701); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 11. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-319). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 977; ed. 1960, vv. 3771–3774, "punaḥ — kāmoda"; right after no. 9, see note 7); Gita-chandrodaya — the section on Advaita, pada 4. Readings: 6.1 GCd "carita barāṇi na yāta" ("His deeds cannot be described"); 6.3 "kañjalocana" ("lotus eyes") — from the BR and GCd (GPT misprint "kuñja locana"); GCd "aparūpa dhūlidhūsarita deha". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

12. Shravana (śāṇana) is the month of the rainy season (July–August). "Gaurahari" is the Lord's name: Advaita, Himself non-different from Hari, repeats Gaura's name in ecstasy. "Offers himself" (balihāri) — lit. "sacrifices himself", an exclamation of admiration and devotion.

7. Narahari — "jaya deba deba maheśvara rūpa..." (GPT1 p. 443, no. 13; GPT only)

*Praise of Advaita, the form of Maheshvara, the king of the rasa of lila: by His call Gauranga was manifested, for His sake Gaura's lila unfolded; He was born as Kuvera's son on the bright seventh day of the month of Magha. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: not established — found in no witness (it stands among padas that are in the BR; the GPT2 index wrongly assigns it to Ghanashyama).*¹³

7.1. Glory to Him who is the form of Maheshvara, the God of gods, — to Advaita Acharya, the king of the rasa of lila!

7.2. By His thundering calls Gauranga was manifested, for His sake Gaura's lila unfolded.

7.3. In the auspicious month of Magha, on the bright seventh lunar day,
He was born — as Kuvera's son.

7.4. The son of Nabha, the Lord Sri Advaita, — may the mind of Narahari Dasa remain at His feet!¹⁴

13. GPT1 — p. 443, no. 13 ("dhānaśī"; scan, PDF p. 702); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 13 (catalogue: NG-212). In the GPT2 index of first lines "jaya debadeba maheśvara rūpa" stands under Ghanashyama's name, but in the text of both editions the signature is "dāsa narahari". Readings: 7.3 GPT2 "kubera rase" (a letter has dropped out: GPT1 "aurase", "as the son"). Not in the BR (eds. 1912, 1913, 1960), GCC, Gita-chandrodaya, Navadvipa-parikrama, PK, KGC, PS. C.

14. "Maheshvara, the God of gods" is Sadashiva: Advaita is Maha-Vishnu Himself (CC Adi 6), and the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (11, 76) calls Him Sadashiva. The Sadashiva of Gaudiya theology is not the demigod Shiva who governs the mode of ignorance, but an eternal form of the Lord, non-different from Vishnu; that is why Advaita is called "non-dual" — non-different from Hari. Kuvera is Kuvera Pandita, Advaita's father, according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (81) Kubera, the friend of Mahadeva; Nabha is Advaita's mother. The bright seventh lunar day of the month of Magha is the day of Advaita's advent (Advaita-saptami); likewise in Ghanashyama (GPT no. 23) and in no. 14.

8. Narahari — "ki bhābe bibhora mora advaita gosāñi re..." (GPT1 p. 443, no. 15; BR)

*Advaita is lost in bhava: tears, a sweet smile, the constant call "Gora! Gora!"; a body more tender than the shirisha flower, His shikha fluttering in the wind, a garland of malati on His neck; stretching out His long arms, He embraces the fallen and gives everyone the treasure of prema, rare even for Brahma. Raga gurjari. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁵

8.1. In what bhava is my Advaita Gosani lost! Tears flow from His eyes; on His moon-face is a sweet, sweet smile, and again and again He calls: "Gora! Gora!"

8.2. His matchless body is more tender than the shirisha flower, and abundant horripilation shines on it; what is the elephant's gait before such beauty! By His movements He enchants the hearts of the world.

8.3. On His head the beautiful shikha flutters in the wind, a garland of malati sways on His neck; stretching out His arms, which reach to His knees, He seizes the fallen and embraces them.

8.4. The treasure of prema and bhakti, rare even for Brahma, He Himself offers to everyone in so many ways; and Narahari, having found so merciful a Lord, did not serve Him — and sank in the well of worldly existence.¹⁶

15. GPT1 — p. 443, no. 15 ("gujjarī"; scan, PDF p. 702); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 15 (catalogue: NG-213). BR 12 (ed. 1912, pp. 978–979; ed. 1960, vv. 3782–3785, "punaḥ gurjarī"; after Ghanashyama's pada no. 14); next Ishana says: "Sita's Lord, Advaita Gosani, is absorbed in dancing and kirtana — now in His own house, now in the houses of His companions, now on the bank of the Ganga" (vv. 3786–3789) — and quotes no. 16. Readings: 8.3 BR "patita dhariyā"; 8.4 BR "pahu pāyā re nā bhaji majinu bhabakūpe" ("not serving, I sank"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya. B.

16. The shikha is the lock of hair on the crown, the sign of a Vaishnava brahmana. "Rare even for Brahma": the prema given away by Gaura and His companions surpasses all that the demigods attain. The poet's self-abasement in the signature ("did not serve... sank") is the usual ending of a pada: a humble Vaishnava considers himself deprived of what is given to all.

9. Narahari — "nācaye advaita premarāśi..." (GPT1 pp. 443–444, no. 16; BR)

*Advaita dances, singing of Gora: He begs the Creator for thousands of mouths, slaps His arms like a wrestler — Kali trembles and knows not where to flee; the companions sing of Gorachand's deeds, khol and karatalas resound, even the noble wives weep; the world is full of His fame. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*¹⁷

- 9.1. Advaita dances — prema itself; proud of Gora's glories, He knows neither day nor night.
- 9.2. What happiness it is to say "Gora! Gora!" —
He begs the Creator for hundreds of thousands of mouths.
- 9.3. Crying "Gora!", He slaps His arms like a wrestler — Kali trembles with fear, and there is no way for him to flee.
- 9.4. What bhava is in His heart at the name of Gora!
His body, thrilling with horripilation, sways again and again.
- 9.5. His companions — His army — intoxicated with this rasa, sing in many ways of Gorachand's deeds.
- 9.6. How the khol and the karatalas resound!
Even the wives of noble families weep, hearing that sound.
- 9.7. The world is filled with His fame;
the wretched, the fallen, the base float in prema.
- 9.8. What happiness is there in Narahari's life?
He has turned away from the feet of so merciful a Lord.¹⁸

17. GPT1 — pp. 443–444, no. 16 ("dhānaśī"; scan, PDF pp. 702–703); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 16 (catalogue: NG-214). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 979; ed. 1960, vv. 3790–3797, "gīte — yathā dhānaśī"; see note 15). Readings: 9.2 BR "bihire" ("of the Creator"; GPT "vihare"); 9.5 "senā" ("army") — from the BR (the GPT splits it "se nā"); 9.8 "jībane" — from the BR (GPT "jībana"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya. B.

18. "Slaps His arms" (mālasāṭa) is a wrestler's challenge before a bout: singing of Gaura, Advaita as it were challenges Kali to battle. "Even the noble wives weep": their hearts melt at the kirtana; these are tears of devotion, not of worldly feeling.

10. Narahari — "dekha mora advaita guṇanidhi..." (GPT1 p. 444, no. 17; BR; GCd)

*Advaita's form, as if fashioned of nectar: its radiance surpasses gold, ketaki and kunkuma; His moon-face gleams as He calls "Gora, Gora!"; He dances with raised arms, embraces the fallen and gives away the priceless treasure. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR and the Gita-chandrodaya.*¹⁹

10.1. Behold: my Advaita is a treasury of virtues!

I do not know with what love the Creator fashioned this body of nectar.

10.2. The radiance of His lovely form surpasses gold, ketaki and kunkuma; overflowing with love for Gora, He is wondrously adorned with a wealth of horripilation.

10.3. His matchless moon-face gleams as again and again He cries: "Gora, Gora, Gora!"; streams flow ceaselessly from both His eyes, He dances with both arms raised.

10.4. Seizing the fallen and the base, He embraces them and Himself offers the priceless jewel; is there anyone in the world so merciful, apart from Narahari's Lord?²⁰

19. GPT1 — p. 444, no. 17 ("kāmoda"; scan, PDF p. 703); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 17 (catalogue: NG-215). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 980; ed. 1960, vv. 3798–3801, "punaḥ — kāmoda"; right after no. 16); Gita-chandrodaya — the section on Advaita, pada 6. Readings: 10.1 BR "e deha gaṭhala bidhi", GCd "guṇera nidhi", "e deha gaṭhala bidhi"; 10.4 BR and GCd "amūlya ratana". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

20. "The Creator fashioned the body of nectar" is a poetic formula of admiration for beauty: Advaita's body, like the Lord's, is eternal and spiritual, not created by Brahma. Ketaki is the golden pandanus flower; kunkuma is saffron. "Narahari's Lord" (narahari-paḥum̐) is the Lord whom the poet serves (cf. note 44 of chapter 17): here, Advaita.

11. Narahari — "dekha advaita guṇera maṇi..." (GPT1 p. 444, no. 18; BR)

*Advaita gives away the treasure of bhakti and makes the world rich: He dances with the name of Gora, slapping His armpits; streams of bliss from His eyes, His body gleaming like gold; around Him the companions singing to khol and karatalas; the wretched are maddened with prema. Raga ashavari. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.*²¹

11.1. Behold: Advaita is the jewel of virtues!

Distributing the treasure of bhakti, He makes the world rich.

11.2. In what bhava His heart thrills!

Crying "Gora, Gora!", He dances with raised arms and again and again slaps His armpits.

11.3. From both His eyes — streams of bliss;

His lovely body, covered with horripilation, gleams like gold.

11.4. From His mouth pours a mass of nectar; with what new grace He looks on all sides, smiling sweetly, sweetly!

11.5. Around the Lord the companions are arrayed; with sweet voices they sing slowly, khol and karatalas resound.

11.6. Who, hearing this, can keep his composure?

All the lowly and the wretched are maddened [with prema], and Narahari is lost in bewilderment.²²

21. GPT1 — p. 444, no. 18 ("āśābarī"; scan, PDF p. 703); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 18 (catalogue: NG-216). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 980; ed. 1960, vv. 3802–3807, "punaḥ — āśābarī"; right after no. 17). Readings: 11.1 BR "jagat karaye dhanī"; 11.3 BR "subalita" ("shapely"); 11.6 BR "narahari paṛu phāṁḍe" ("Narahari is caught in the snare" [of prema]). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya. B.

22. The pada is built of short refrain lines and long lines (a couplet is one unit). "Maddened" — the madness of prema, not worldly derangement. "Lost in bewilderment" (paṛu dhāṁḍe) is a humble ending: the poet cannot fathom this play (in the BR, "caught in the snare", i.e. captivated by it).

12. Narahari — "advaita guṇamaṇi abanī karu dhanī..." (GPT1 p. 445, no. 20; BR)

Advaita with His dear companions dances in the kirtana of Gora's glories: a radiance stealing Madana's pride, a body more tender than the shirisha, tilaka, a garland of malati, the sacred thread; He whirls with raised arms, loudly cries "Gaurahari!" — and the fallen poet, seeing His merciful glance, weeps. Raga tori (todi). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR.²³

12.1. Advaita, the jewel of virtues, lavishly distributing the wealth of bhakti, makes the earth rich; with Him are His dear companions; immersed in bliss, He dances in the kirtana of Gora's glories.

12.2. With what new grace! — stealing Madana's pride, a matchless radiance gleams;
His tender body is softer than the shirisha flower, and on it is a wealth of horripilation.

12.3. Tilaka shines on His forehead, a garland of malati on His neck, the sacred thread sways, enticing the eyes;
raising His matchless arms, He whirls, swaying, — how lovely are the movements of His feet!

12.4. Again and again He loudly cries "Gaurahari!" — as if nectar flowed from His moon-face; who can stay composed before His merciful glance? Fallen Narahari, beholding Him, weeps.²⁴

23. GPT1 — p. 445, no. 20 ("tori"; scan, PDF p. 704); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 20. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-320; the signature-sweep script took "gaurahari" in 12.4 for the signature — the signature here is "narahari" in the same line). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 981; ed. 1960, vv. 3812–3815, "punaḥ — toṭī"; after Ghanashyama's pada no. 19); next comes the account of Nityananda's coming to Advaita: "Advaita Acharya, the merciful, plays in bhava with His dear companions in His own house... He dances with raised arms, crying 'Nitai, Nitai!' — and at that moment Nityananda-Haladhara came from Saptagrama to Advaita's house" (vv. 3816–3821). Readings: 12.1 BR "kiritane"; 12.4 "janu" ("as if") — from the BR (GPT "jāni"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya. B.

24. The sacred thread (yajñasūtra): Advaita is a brahmana; the malati garland and tilaka are the marks of a Vaishnava. Madana is the god of love: his "pride" is put to shame by spiritual beauty (cf. note 4).

13. Narahari — "sītānātha mora advaitacāṁḍa..." (GPT1 p. 445, no. 21; BR; GCd)

Praise of Advaita: by His call Gora was manifested; He is an ocean of compassion, the friend of the fallen, a second Creator in the three worlds, the giver of sankirtana; whoever would float in the rasa of the Vraja lila, let him worship the Father of Achyuta. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR and the Gita-chandrodaya.²⁵

13.1. My Advaitachandra, the Lord of Sita, — full of prema, a great enchanting snare!

13.2. By His roar Gora was manifested; with Nityananda He is absorbed in bliss.

13.3. Matchless are His virtues, He is an ocean of compassion, the friend of fallen and lowly people.

13.4. In the three worlds He is a second Creator, the giver of the rare wealth of sankirtana.

13.5. Whoever would float in the rasa of the Vraja lila, let him worship the Father of Achyuta.

13.6. Whoever does not worship Narahari's Lord — he is the most unfortunate in the world.²⁶

25. GPT1 — p. 445, no. 21 ("dhānaśī"; scan, PDF p. 704); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 21. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-321). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 984; ed. 1960, vv. 3853–3858, "gīte — yathā dhānaśī"); Nityananda, after staying with Advaita, comes to Navadvipa to Shachi, and then "from Shantipura came Advaita Gosani and is always in bliss with Nityananda" (v. 3852); after the pada — "Nityananda and Advaita play in the joy of sankirtana together with Srivasa, Murari and others" (v. 3859). Gita-chandrodaya — the section on Advaita, pada 7 (the last; "suhai"; some lines have dropped out in the OCR). Readings: 13.3 BR "janera bandhu"; GCd 13.2 "yāra huṅkāre". Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC. B.

26. "Enchanting snare" (mohana phāṁḍa): Advaita captivates hearts with prema. "A second Creator": Advaita as Maha-Vishnu is the original cause of creation (CC Adi 6), as Brahma is its executor. "The Father of Achyuta" is Advaita, the Father of Achyutananda (cf. note 6); but "Achyuta" is also a name of Krishna: service to Advaita leads into the rasa of the Vraja lila. "Narahari's Lord" is the Lord whom the poet serves (cf. note 20).

14. Narahari — "māgha saptamī śuklapakṣa..." (GPT1 p. 446, no. 24; BR)

*The advent of Advaita: on the bright seventh day of the month of Magha the beautiful Lord Advaita appeared and drove away Kali's arrogance; people run to Kuvera's house and hail the child; bards, singers, musicians and dancers celebrate. Raga bhupali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR; Vrajabuli.*²⁷

14.1. In the month of Magha, in the bright fortnight, on the seventh day, at a most auspicious moment, the beautiful Lord Advaita appeared and drove away Kali's arrogance.

14.2. All the people ran and entered Kuvera's house; gazing at the child with great thrill, they cry: "Jaya, jaya!"

14.3. The bards loudly proclaim His fame, skilled singers sing, intoxicated with joy; skilful musicians play their instruments in many ways.

14.4. The dancers dance, sounding the rhythm: "thaita taka taka thona".

Narahari Dasa: who can describe the festivity of the Lord's advent?²⁸

27. GPT1 — p. 446, no. 24 ("bhūpālī"; scan, PDF p. 705); GPT2 — section 6.2, no. 24. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-322). BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 829; ed. 1960, vv. 1763–1766, "punaḥ — bhūpālī"); Ishana, showing Srinivasa the places of Navadvipa, tells how the Lord sent Rama Pandita to Shantipura for Advaita, and from there turns to Advaita's family: His father is Kuvera Pandita (a quotation from the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika on Kubera, v. 1755), His mother Nabha; in their old age Advaitachandra was born to them at Navagram (vv. 1751–1758); then comes Ghanashyama's pada on the advent (GPT no. 23, vv. 1759–1762) and this one; after it — "at Advaita's birth all loudly sang the names of Krishna and Govinda", His childhood, the move to Shantipura, His marriage (v. 1767 ff.). Readings: 14.1 BR "prakaṭi" ("appearing"); 14.2 BR "biloki" ("seeing"); 14.4 BR "janama-bilāsa". The Navadvipa-parikrama is the same as the BR. Not in the PK, KGC, PS, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya. B.

28. Advaita's advent took place at Navagram (Shrihatta), in the house of Kuvera Pandita and Nabha (cf. notes 10, 14); according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (81–85) Kubera received from Sadashiva the boon: "in another birth I shall become your son". The Lord's appearance is not subject to the laws of karma: it is a descent, not the birth of a conditioned soul (cf. Bhagavad-gīta 4.6–9). "Thaita taka taka thona" are rhythm syllables (bol) of the dance.

Chapter 26. Appendix. Padas signed "Narahari" from the Gaura-pada-tarangini — X: companions and followers

Continuation and conclusion of the appendix (the introductory note on the two Naraharis, on the arguments for attribution and on the marks in the headings is in ch. 17). Chapter 26: GPT section 6.3 "Companions" (GPT1 pp. 451–489) — all eighteen padas signed Narahari (nos. 2, 4, 7, 8, 42–44, 49, 55, 58, 61, 62, 68, 69, 71, 72, 77, 83), and also one pada on the sannyasa found in the continuous check of signatures in sections 3.x, 4.x and 5.3–7 (GPT1 5.3, no. 7). The first padas of the section are about Gaura's companions (Gadadhara Pandita, Srivasa, Gadadhara Dasa, the circle of companions); then come padas about the followers of later generations: Shyamananda, the poet Jnanadasa, Srinivasa Acharya, Narottama, Ramachandra and Govinda Kaviraja and their disciples. Such padas are marked in the heading "late layer: on the followers": they are not Gaura-lila in the narrow sense but praises of the acharyas of the tradition through whom Gaura's mercy reached the following generations. The signatures of the section were checked throughout, in the OCR and on the scan; the 14th and 15th waves of the Bhakti-ratnakara (BR) and its conclusion, and the Gaura-charita-chintamani (GCC, kiranas 1 and 4), were read continuously at the relevant places. Not translated (outside the appendix): nos. 15, 41, 48, 54, 63, 82 — signed Ghanashyama; no. 13 — signed Papiya Shekhara (about Narahari Sarakara; the catalogue had counted it as Narahari's); no. 70 — signed Vallabha; no. 6 — no signature; the other padas of the section are by other poets. Pages 462–463 of GPT1 (no. 27, end, to no. 30) are missing from the scan: these padas were checked in GPT2 — signed Madho and Radhavallabha. The base text is GPT1 (by the scan), collated with GPT2, the BR (eds. 1912, 1960 and 2006) and the GCC (ed. 1947); the PK, KGC, PS, Gita-chandrodaya and Narottama-vilasa were checked. Pronouns referring to Gaura, Nityananda and Advaita are capitalized, those referring to the companions and followers are not. The notes of the GPT editors are not reproduced. At the end — a concluding note to the whole appendix.

1. Narahari — "dhanya dhanya bali mena..." (GPT1 pp. 452–453, section 6.3, no. 2)

*The birth of Gadadhara Pandita: on the new-moon day of the month of Vaishakha, in the house of Madhava Mishra in Nadia, Gadadhara, Gauranga's beloved, was born; Madhava and Ratnavati are beside themselves with joy, the people of Nadia praise their fortune, the brahmanas' wives bless the infant, placing rice and durva grass on his head; the poet asks to sing Gadai's qualities birth after birth. Raga pahida. Attribution: not established — GPT only; plain Bengali tripadi; the GPT2 index does not assign it to Sarakara.*¹

- 1.1. "Glory, glory!" all say: in all four yugas there was nothing like it — the fortune of Kali knows no limit:
in beautiful Nadia, in the house of Madhava Mishra — what wondrous rejoicing!
- 1.2. On the new-moon day of Vaishakha, at an auspicious moment, Gadadhara, Gauranga's beloved, was born.
Sri Madhava and Ratnavati, seeing their son's face, are beside themselves with joy.
- 1.3. What beauty Gadadhara has — a delight to the eyes of all, as if the abode of every joy!
The colour of his skin shines, surpassing pure gold; his whole body is beautiful, incomparable.
- 1.4. All the people of Nadia, forgetting grief and sorrow, say to one another with delight:
"How fortunate Madhava is — as if he had gained a jewel! We do not know for what merits!"
- 1.5. The wives of the brahmanas come, floating in an ocean of bliss, praise mother Ratnavati, and, gazing on the golden son, place rice and durva grass on his head and joyfully bless him.

1.6. By Gadadhara's power all kinds of auspicious rites are performed; the bards hasten one after another [with praises].

Narahari says: "O that birth after birth I might sing Gadaichand's qualities just so!"²

1. GPT1 — pp. 452–453, section 6.3 "Companions" (parikara), no. 2 ("pahida"; scan, PDF pp. 711–712); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 2 (NG-217). Not found in the BR, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya, PK, KGC or PS. The reading in 1.1 "bali mena" (so in GPT1 and GPT2) is unclear; understood as "[all] say". C.

2. Gadadhara Pandita — son of Madhava Mishra and Ratnavati of Navadvipa, inseparable companion of Mahaprabhu; according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (147–153) he is Sri Radha Herself, "the Lakshmi of Gaura's love". "The new moon of Vaishakha" (kuhu — the new moon) is the day of his appearance, as also in the Prema-vilasa (bilasa 22). The appearance of the Lord's eternal companion is not a birth under karma: he descends together with the Lord. Rice and durva grass on the head — a Bengali rite of blessing a newborn. Gadai, Gadaichand — affectionate names of Gadadhara.

2. Narahari — "gadādhara parama sughara rasadhāma..." (GPT1 p. 453, no. 4; GCC)

*Gadadhara among the companions in the morning: his fair body captivates Kama; the smile of his lotus face is nectar; his speech eclipses the mantra that enchants the world; remembering his former pastimes he loses his composure; the poet smiles, seeing the hidden become manifest. Raga not specified ("yatharaga"). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*³

2.1. Gadadhara is supreme elegance, an abode of rasa:

to his beautiful fair body, captivating in its lustre, how many Kamadevas offer themselves in expiation!

2.2. That lotus face, which has conquered a whole forest of lotuses; his gentle smile — like lovely flower-nectar;

again and again, filling the cups of his eyes, he drinks — and in his heart there is great delight.

2.3. His soft, sweet speech, ever new, eclipses the mantra that enchants the world; hearing it, greedy ears — coveted even by the Vedas — forget the hearing of Vedas and tantras.

2.4. Remembering in his heart his former pastimes, he loses steadiness, is bereft of motion and floats in boundless happiness.

Away with gold! — so peerless is his prema; Narahari, seeing the hidden become manifest, smiles.⁴

3. GPT1 — p. 453, no. 4 ("yatharaga"; scan, PDF p. 712); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 4 (NG-218). GCC — kirana 4 ("The Lord in the circle of devotees": in the morning the companions gather around Gaura, and the poet describes each of them), pada 17 ("yatharaga"; before it, pada 16 — also on Gadadhara, signed Narahari, not in the GPT; after it — Ghanashyama's pada on Narahari Sarakara = GPT no. 15). The variants are insignificant (in the OCR of the GCC the lines of 2.3 are distorted). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

4. "How many Kamadevas offer themselves" (niramañchana — a rite of waving something around a beloved and giving it away in expiation) — an image of beauty before which the god of love fades. "Former pastimes" — the lila of Vraja: according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (147–153) Gadadhara Pandita is Sri Radha; in Gaura-lila he hides this bhava, but in ecstasy it shows through — this is "the hidden become manifest". "Away with gold" — neither the gold of his skin nor anything else compares with his prema. The subject in 2.2 (who "drinks") is not named: Gadadhara drinks Gaura's beauty with his eyes (so in the context of the GCC), or the onlookers drink the nectar of his smile.

3. Narahari — "ājuka sukha kachu barāṇe na jāta..." (GPT1 p. 454, no. 7; GCC)

*Srivasas among the companions: seeing the Lord's play, he smiles softly; from love his body sways, his hairs stand on end as if he wore a jacket of kadamba flowers; he trembles like a creeper in the wind, repeats "Friend of the lowly!", sings, dances, weeps. Raga not specified ("yatharaga"). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁵

3.1. Today's happiness cannot be described in words:

Srivasā — knower of rasa, wise and elegant — seeing the Lord's play, smiles very softly.

3.2. His stately body sways with love; graceful is his bearing, incomparable his wondrous beauty; his thickly risen hairs shine as if he had put on a most beautiful jacket of kadamba flowers.

3.3. He trembles like a creeper in the wind and cannot master himself, helpless in the flood of rasa; ceaselessly he repeats: "Friend of the lowly!" — his heart melts, and steadiness has left him.

3.4. He sings the beautiful qualities [of the Lord], lightly dances, streams of tears flow from his eyes.

Narahari says: one cannot fathom how many stirrings of bhava arise in his heart.⁶

5. GPT1 — p. 454, no. 7 ("yatharaga"; scan, PDF p. 713); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 7. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-323). GCC — kirana 4, pada 19 ("yatharaga"). Variants: 3.3 "dīnabandhu" by the GCC and the GPT1 scan (GPT1 OCR — "bīṇa bandhu"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

6. Srivasa Pandita — in his house the Lord held the nightly sankirtana; according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (90) he is Narada Muni. "A jacket of kadamba flowers" — the thrill of the hairs (pulaka), like the knobbly kadamba flower. "Friend of the lowly" (dīnabandhu) — an address to the Lord.

4. Narahari — "sundara sughara gadādhara dāsa..." (GPT1 p. 454, no. 8; GCC)

*Gadadhara Dasa beside Gaura — like a moon beside the moon; his tender body eclipses the champaka flower; his eyes are languid; former bhavas arise ceaselessly in his heart, and however much he hides them, he cannot. Raga not specified ("yatharaga"). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*⁷

4.1. Beautiful, elegant is Gadadhara Dasa:

beside Gaura, the jewel of qualities, he shines as if beside the moon another moon had risen.

4.2. His most tender body is full of love, his sweet charm robs the champaka flower of its pride; his bearing shatters composure, the movement of his brows enchants, his lotus feet cannot take a step.

4.3. Both his eyes are languid and lovelier than lovely, tremulous, barely blinking; his clear cheeks gleam, on his red lips — a charming smile.

4.4. Unfathomable: in his heart former bhavas ceaselessly arise — in every way;
however he tries to hide them — they cannot be hidden; Narahari, looking at him, laughs, intoxicated with happiness.⁸

7. GPT1 — p. 454, no. 8 ("yatharaga"; scan, PDF p. 713); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 8 (NG-219; the signature in GPT1 is "narahari", distorted in the OCR — "nabrahari"). GCC — kirana 4, pada 20 ("yatharaga"). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

8. Gadadhara Dasa — a companion of Gaura and Nityananda (later lived in Ariadaha, cf. chapter 24, no. 22); according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (154–155) — Chandrakanti, a manifestation of Radha's radiance, and in him also Purnananda, the beloved of Balarama. "Former bhavas" — his eternal service in Vraja. "Like a moon beside the moon" — both are fair: Gauranga and His companion.

5. Narahari — "o mora parāṇa-bandhu śyāmānanda..." (GPT1 p. 469, no. 42; BR)

*Late layer: on the followers. The life of Shyamananda: he left home and came to Ambika to Hridaya Chaitanya, who accepted him as a disciple and entrusted him to Nitai and Chaitanya; receiving at his departure the garland of permission, he came alone to Vrindavana, at Radha-kunda received the mercy of Raghunatha Dasa, from Jiva Gosvami fatherly love; he studied the books and, at the Gosvamis' command, returned through Gauda and Ambika to Utkala, and there intoxicated even the godless with Gaura's name. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (15th wave, "the song of Shyamananda's life").*⁹

- 5.1. O my dear friend Shyamananda, ocean of happiness, ever intoxicated with the qualities of Gora!
Leaving his home far behind, he came joyfully to Ambikapur, to the house of his master.
- 5.2. Seeing Hridaya Chaitanya, he weeps unrestrainedly and falls, rolling on the ground; taking his feet on his head, surrendering himself, he stands with his whole heart fixed on him.
- 5.3. Seeing Shyamananda's nature, the Thakura grew fond of him, kept him near and made him a disciple;
showing him great mercy and teaching him the way of bhakti, he entrusted him to Nitai and Chaitanya.
- 5.4. After some days Shyamananda grew restless with longing — to be sent to Vraja;
the Lords Nitai and Chaitanya blessed Shyamananda: at the time of departure he was given the garland of permission.
- 5.5. Shyamananda goes on his way, drowned in tears, remembering his master's qualities; alone, after some days, having visited many holy places, he entered Vrindavana.
- 5.6. Seeing Sri Vrindaranya, he counted himself blessed and could not contain his bliss; bathed in tears, he rolls on the ground, his whole body thrilling.
- 5.7. Going to Mount Govardhana, he did what was in his heart; coming to the bank of Sri Radha-kunda, he was overwhelmed with prema — seeing this, Sri Dasa Gosani, a treasury of virtues, showed him mercy.
- 5.8. He went to Sri Jiva and told who he was; Jiva showed him mercy with fatherly love.
Whatever he had longed for was as if fulfilled — by the mercy of Hridaya Chaitanya.
- 5.9. He wandered through the twelve forests, studied the books, became most skilled in service;
by way of Sri Gauda and Ambika he went and settled in Utkala — at the command of the Gosvamis.
- 5.10. The godless and the asuras he intoxicated with Gora's qualities — to whom did he not give bhakti!
The fallen float in bliss — who did not gain deliverance by a particle of Shyamananda's mercy?
- 5.11. Who will understand his true nature? Ever intoxicated with sankirtana, he is famed on earth for his greatness;
with his companions he sports joyfully — in Utkala happiness knows no bounds.
- 5.12. Whoever sees him even once cannot keep his composure — how enchanting is his form!
Narahari says: "Will the master of Rasikananda ever appear before these eyes?"¹⁰

9. GPT1 — p. 469, no. 42 ("kamoda"; scan, PDF p. 726); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 42 (NG-221). BR 15 (ed. 1912, pp. 1059–1060; ed. 1960, 15.93–104, "the song of the life of Srila Shyamananda Prabhu — in song, kamoda"): after the account of Rasikananda and Ghanashyama's pada about him (GPT no. 48) — "who is not charmed by Shyamananda's qualities? All sing of his life in various ways" (15.92), then this pada and the next (GPT no. 43). Variants: 5.2 BR "eka bhite rahe dāmṛāyā" ("stands to one side"; GPT "ekacite" — "single-mindedly"); 5.6 BR "ānande dharite nāre thehā"; the rest orthographic. Not in the GCC, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

10. Shyamananda (in his youth Duhkhi Krishnadasa) — a disciple of Hridaya Chaitanya (himself a disciple of Gauridasa Pandita) of Ambika-Kalna; together with Srinivasa and Narottama he studied under Jiva Gosvami and returned to Gauda with the Gosvamis' books; he preached in Utkala (Orissa). In Ambika are the Gaura-Nitai Deities of Gauridasa Pandita: the "garland of permission" (ājñāmālā) is a garland from the Deity as a sign of leave; hence in 5.4 it is "the Lords Nitai and Chaitanya", not only the teacher, who release Shyamananda (cf. the Prema-vilasa, vilasa 12). "Sri Dasa Gosani" — Raghunatha Dasa Gosvami at Radha-kunda. "The twelve forests" — the forests of Vraja. "The master of Rasikananda" — Shyamananda, guru of Rasikananda (Murari), his chief disciple in Utkala. The poet's wish to "see" Shyamananda is a prayer for darshan in the heart (the poet lived later).

6. Narahari — "jaya śrīla duḥkhī kṛṣṇadāsa..." (GPT1 p. 470, no. 43; BR)

*Late layer: on the followers. Praise of Duhkhi Krishnadasa: his mind is a bee at the lotus feet of Hridaya Chaitanya; in Vrindavana, in a grove, he found Radha's anklet and became known as Shyamananda; he flooded Utkala, where there was not a particle of bhakti, with Gaura's prema; the poet praises his mercy. Raga suhai. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (15th wave, right after the preceding one).*¹¹

6.1. Glory to Srila Duhkhi Krishnadasa! Who has the power to tell his qualities?

His mind-bee is ever at the lotus feet of Hridaya Chaitanya.

6.2. In Vrindavana, in a new grove, he found the anklet of Rai;

there he became known as Shyamananda — who will understand his life?

6.3. In Utkala, where people utterly darkened in mind had not a trace of bhakti, he flooded everyone with the rasa of Gaura's prema and made the land blessed.

6.4. My Shyamananda, "the Sorrowful" — sorrowing at the great sorrow [of others], the master of Rasikananda —

how can I tell his mercy? He never abandons lowly Narahari.¹²

11. GPT1 — p. 470, no. 43 ("suhai"; scan, PDF p. 727); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 43. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-324). BR 15 (ed. 1912, p. 1060; ed. 1960, 15.105–108, "again — suhai"). Variants: 6.1 BR "śrīduḥkhiṇī kṛṣṇadāsa" (so in the OCR of the 1960 ed.; GPT "duḥkhi"). Not in the GCC, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

12. According to tradition, Duhkhi Krishnadasa, sweeping a grove in Vrindavana, found Sri Radha's anklet (nupura) and received Her mercy; from then on he was called Shyamananda, and the tilaka of his line is in the form of a foot (Prema-vilasa, vilasa 12; event "Radha's nupura..."). "Duhkhi" ("sorrowful") is his former name; the poet plays on it: Shyamananda grieves at the suffering of fallen souls. Rai — Sri Radha.

7. Narahari — "śrī-bīrabhūmete dhāma..." (GPT1 p. 470, no. 44)

*Late layer: on the followers. Praise of the poet Jnanadasa: born in the village of Kandra in Birbhum, renounced from childhood, he received initiation from Jahnava; in Kandra to this day a three-day festival is held in his honour at the full moon; his names are "Madana-mangala" and "Manohara"; he went to the festival at Kheturi with Baba Aul; he is the sun among poets, equal to Chandidasa. Raga kamoda. Attribution: not established — GPT only; plain Bengali tripadi; the pada speaks of events after the passing of Narahari Sarakara and of a festival held "to this day", i.e. it was written much later (not Sarakara; possibly not Chakravarti either).*¹³

7.1. His abode is in Sri Birbhum, the village of Kandra-Mandra: there Jnanadasa was born.

Renounced from his youth, devoted [to God] from childhood, he received initiation from Jahnava.

7.2. To this day in the village of Kandra, in the name of the poet Jnanadasa, a great fair is held at the full moon; three days of festival — all the mahantas come, and there are their games and merriment.

7.3. His name is "Madana-mangala", peerless in beauty and virtue, and another title — "Manohara"; when Jnanadasa went to the great festival at Kheturi, Baba Aul was his companion.

7.4. He is like the sun in the race of poets, a poet equal to Chandidasa; Jnanadasa is known to the whole world.

His padas are the essence of nectar, like a stream of amrita — so sings Narahari Dasa.¹⁴

13. GPT1 — p. 470, no. 44 ("kamoda"; scan, PDF p. 727); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 44. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-325). Not found in the BR, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya, Narottama-vilasa, PK, KGC or PS. The BR (14.180) calls Kandra the village "of Sri Mangala Jnanadasa" (śrīmaṅgala jñānadāsera ālaya) — the same title "Mangala" as in the pada. C.

14. Jnanadasa — one of the greatest Vaishnava poets of the 16th century, a disciple of Jahnava Devi (Nityananda's consort); a participant in the great festival at Kheturi (the Prema-vilasa, vilasa 19, names him among those who came there from Nityananda's branch). Chandidasa — a poet of the age before Chaitanya, whose songs Mahaprabhu loved to hear (CC Madhya 2). Who "Baba Aul" is cannot be determined from the pada itself. The pada is a praise of a poet, not Gaura-lila; included as a pada on the followers (coordinator's decision).

8. Narahari — "jaya jaya harirāma ācāryabarya..." (GPT1 pp. 471–472, no. 49; BR, GCC)

Late layer: on the followers. Praise of Harirama Acharya, disciple of Ramachandra Kaviraja: his life is wondrous and steals hearts; the fame of his victory over the Lord's opponents has spread through the world; he is ever intoxicated with Gaura's prema, greedy for the rasa of sankirtana, skilled in serving the Vaishnavas; his exposition of the Bhagavata pours nectar; his life is the Deity Sri Krishna Raya. Raga purabi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (15th wave) and in the GCC (kirana 1).¹⁵

8.1. Glory, glory to Harirama, best of acharyas, whose wondrous life steals hearts!

His virtues are pure, he crushes the pride of calamities, his form is sweet and increases joy.

8.2. The fame of his victories over the invincible asuras, turned away from the Lord's feet, has spread through the world; he is wise and firm, he steals the firmness [of others], his mind is full of compassion, he is boundlessly generous.

8.3. Ever intoxicated with the weight of Gaura's prema, he walks more mightily than an intoxicated king of elephants; he is greedy for the rasa of sankirtana, skilled in serving the Vaishnavas — who can describe his happiness?

8.4. His expositions of the Srimad-Bhagavata and other books pour an incomparable stream of nectar; Sri Sri Krishna Raya is his very life. How can Narahari describe his boundless greatness?¹⁶

15. GPT1 — pp. 471–472, no. 49 ("purabi"; scan, PDF pp. 728–729); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 49 (NG-222). BR 15 (ed. 1912, p. 1061; ed. 1960, 15.117–120; "in song, pauravi"): "Srinivasa Acharya's dearest disciple is Ramachandra Kaviraja; Ramachandra's disciple is Harirama Acharya, whose deeds are wondrous; distributing Sri Krishna Chaitanya's prema-bhakti he destroys the stain of souls... poets sing his life" (15.113–116), then the pada; after it — the pada on Ramakrishna Acharya (GPT no. 72). GCC — kirana 1 (in a row of vandana-padas to the companions and followers), pada 23 (between the padas on Ramachandra Kaviraja — GPT no. 69 — and on Ramakrishna — no. 72). Variants: 8.1 BR "śrīharirāma ācāryabarya" (with "śrī"), "madhura murati"; 8.3 BR the same; in the OCR of the GCC the lines are distorted. Not in the PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

16. Harirama Acharya and his brother Ramakrishna — brahmana scholars converted by Ramachandra Kaviraja and Narottama at the river Padmavati (Prema-vilasa, vilasa 14): Harirama became Ramachandra's disciple, Ramakrishna Narottama's. "The asuras turned away from the Lord's feet" — the opponents of bhakti, defeated in debate. "Steals the firmness" (dhīra-dhṛti-hāraka) — with his prema he robs even the steady of their composure. Sri Krishna Raya — the Deity he served.

9. Narahari — "jaya jaya śrīnibāsa ācārya..." (GPT1 pp. 473–474, no. 55; BR)

Late layer: on the followers. Praise of Srinivasa Acharya: the life of the people of the world, refuge of the fallen, his body like a champaka flower, beloved companion of Gaurachandra; Narottama is his life; he tastes the nectar of the pastimes of the Divine Couple; Ramachandra Kaviraja is the servant of his feet; he planted on earth a new wish-fulfilling tree of bhakti. Raga belabali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (14th wave, Srinivasa at Budhari).¹⁷

9.1. Glory, glory to Srinivasa Acharya, life of all the people of the world, supreme knower of rasa, abode of virtues!

Refuge of the wretched, the helpless and the fallen, friend of the lowly, ornament of noble deeds.

9.2. He is beautifully adorned with the wondrous ornaments of bhavas, his body like a champaka flower, golden-red;

the peerless beloved companion of Gaurachandra — seeing him, the heart cannot keep its composure.

9.3. Famed in the world, a cloud raining the rasa of prema — blissful Narottama, his master and life; ceaselessly drinking the nectar of the Divine Couple's pastimes, he rejoices in intoxication — what more can a poet compose?

9.4. Ah, ah! — the servant of his feet is merciful Ramachandra Kaviraja.

What can I say? — this new wish-fulfilling tree of bhakti he planted on earth for Narahari's sake.¹⁸

17. GPT1 — pp. 473–474, no. 55 ("belabali"; scan, PDF pp. 730–731); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 55. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-326). BR 14 (ed. 1912, pp. ≈1037–1038; ed. 1960, 14.78–81, "again — belabali"): Srinivasa with his disciples comes to the village of Budhari, Narottama comes there from Kheturi; "all, seeing the Acharya's beauty, lose their composure — who does not sing of his form and virtues?" (14.73), then Ghanashyama's pada (GPT no. 54), this pada and the pada on Narottama (GPT no. 61); afterwards — the festival at Boraquli. Variants: 9.1 BR "jaya śrīnibāsa ācārya jagata-jana-jībana" (one "jaya"); 9.2 BR "campaka śoṇa kusumasama deha"; 9.4 BR "ki kahaba — ki e naba bhakatikalpataru" — same sense. Not in the GCC, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

18. Srinivasa Acharya — a disciple of Gopala Bhatta Gosvami who, together with Narottama and Shyamananda, brought the Gosvamis' books from Vrindavana to Gauda; the tradition sees in him a manifestation of Sri Chaitanya's prema (so also in the next pada, 10.1). "The pastimes of the Divine Couple" (yugala keli) — the lila of Radha and Krishna. "For Narahari's sake" — that is, for the poet and fallen souls like him: a humble ending. Here Narottama is called Srinivasa's "master and life" — an image of their inseparable friendship ("one life in two bodies", 12.4).

10. Narahari — "o mora jībana prāṇa..." (GPT1 pp. 474–475, no. 58; BR)

Late layer: on the followers. The life of Srinivasa Acharya: learned from his youth and devoted to Chaitanya's feet; Sri Chaitanya with Nitai in a dream bids him go to Vrindavana — through him the books of Rupa and Sanatana will be distributed; in Mathura he learns of the passing of Rupa and Sanatana and faints; they appear to him in a dream and bid him surrender to Gopala Bhatta; Jiva receives him, Gopala Bhatta initiates him; he meets Narottama, goes round Vraja with him and, receiving Govinda's garland of command, distributes the Gosvamis' books in Gauda. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (14th wave, "the song of Srinivasa Acharya's life").¹⁹

10.1. O my life and soul, supremely merciful — Acharya Thakura Srinivasa!

His body surpasses gold; he is known to the world as the manifestation of Sri Chaitanya's prema.

10.2. All who are dear to Chaitanya love him ceaselessly — how can I tell his virtues?

Skilled in learning from his early years, he always meditated on Chaitanya's feet.

10.3. One day, at the end of the night, Sri Chaitanya, full of love, taking Nitaichand with Him, came to Srinivasa and in a dream, smiling, spoke, looking into his face:

10.4. "Go quickly to Vrindavana: there Rupa and Sanatana have written wonderful books — through you I shall distribute them." Saying this, again and again He entrusted him to Nityananda.

10.5. Then the dream broke — Srinivasa could not contain himself and was filled with longing; having wandered in the ecstasy of love through Nilachala and Gauda, he set out for Vrindavana.

10.6. With great hopes, rejoicing, in a few days he reached the city of Mathura; there, hearing of the disappearance of Sri Rupa and Sri Sanatana, he fainted.

10.7. Coming to, he weeps and, rolling on the ground, says: "Alas, alas, my masters Rupa and Sanatana! Why have you deprived me? I do not understand this play! Why have you kept me alive?"

- 10.8. Knowing his grief-stricken mind, Rupa and Sanatana in the ecstasy of love came to him in a dream, took Srinivasa on their laps, wiped away his tears and said in the sweetest words:
- 10.9. "Go quickly to Vrindavana and surrender at the feet of Sri Gopala Bhatta; do not think of any sorrow — you will attain the highest happiness; thus we two will appear to you."
- 10.10. Saying this, Rupa and Sanatana vanished; Srinivasa, rising at dawn, entered Vrindavana — streams of prema from both eyes — gazing at the beauty of Vrindavana.
- 10.11. Sri Jiva, having found Sri Srinivasa, in bliss introduced him to the Gosvamis; by Sri Rupa's command in a dream, Sri Gopala Bhatta with great love made Srinivasa his disciple.
- 10.12. Who can tell how much Sri Jiva Gosvami loved him! He made him learned in the shastras; and Srinivasa, joyful at heart, after some days met dear Narottama.
- 10.13. Taking Narottama with him, he joyfully went round Vraja and, receiving Govinda's garland of command, distributed the Gosvamis' books, settling in Sri Gauda-mandala.
- 10.14. Drinking the nectar of Gaura's prema, ever intoxicated with sankirtana, he is famed in the world.
Lowly Narahari says: "He saves [the fallen] by his own goodness — there is no one so merciful."²⁰

19. GPT1 — pp. 474–475, no. 58 ("kamoda"; scan, PDF pp. 731–732); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 58. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-327). BR 14 (ed. 1912, pp. ≈1048–1049; ed. 1960, 14.195–208, "the song of the life of Sri Srinivasa Acharya — in song, kamoda"); after the festival at Boraquli, Srinivasa with his disciples at Yajigrama spends his days in discussing the shastras and in sankirtana; "who does not sing of the Acharya's life?" (14.194), then this pada and Govindadasa's pada (GPT no. 57). Variants: 10.4 in the OCR of BR-1960 the stanza is longer ("parama karuṇābān", "śrīnibāse kole laiṣā" — probably an OCR fault: these words come from 10.1 and 10.8); 10.12 BR "śrībāsa ānandamane ... kichu dine haila milana"; the rest orthographic. Not in the GCC, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

20. The pada retells the beginning of Srinivasa's life just as the prose account of the BR and the Prema-vilasa do (the appearance of Rupa and Sanatana in a dream — vilasa 6): the dream in which Mahaprabhu entrusts Srinivasa to Nityananda and sends him to Vrindavana; the news of Rupa's and Sanatana's passing in Mathura; their appearance in a dream; initiation from Gopala Bhatta; study under Jiva; the meeting with Narottama; the garland from the Deity Govinda as the command to take the books to Gauda. "Srinivasa" in 10.12 is called "śrībāsa" — a shortening of the name for the metre (not Srivasa Pandita). A dream in which the Lord and His associates appear is not a play of imagination but their mercy (svapna-darshana).

11. Narahari — "jaya jaya śrīnarottama parama udāra..." (GPT1 p. 476, no. 61; BR)

*Late layer: on the followers. The form of Narottama: he delights the world, shines like a golden lotus, as if ceaselessly pouring nectar; his body thrills, a smile is on his face, his eyes are full of compassion, his speech enchants; tilaka, tulasi-mala, blue garments; his cool, tender feet shine in the poet's heart. Raga belabali. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (14th wave, Budhari).*²¹

- 11.1. Glory, glory to Sri Narottama, boundlessly generous!
He delights the people of the world, shines like a golden lotus — as if ceaselessly pouring nectar.
- 11.2. An abundant thrill of the hairs gleams, on his peerless face — an unfailing gentle smile;
his eyes quiver, tinged with the rasa of compassion; the play of his speech steals ear and mind.
- 11.3. A peerless tilaka on a most charming brow, his neck shines with a necklace of tulasi; his arms are beautifully formed, his hands tender shoots, his broad chest — there is no comparison for it.
- 11.4. A slender waist, new blue garments, full strong thighs as if sculpted;
his tender feet, both most cool, shine in Narahari's heart.²²

21. GPT1 — p. 476, no. 61 ("belabali"; scan, PDF p. 733); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 61. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-328). BR 14 (ed. 1912, p. ≈1038; ed. 1960, 14.83–86, "in song, belabali"); at Budhari "the beauty of Sri Narottama intoxicates all; who does not sing of his form and virtues?" (14.82), then this pada; after it — "the circle of Vaishnavas is beautiful, the radiance of all is like the sun" and the departure for Boraquli (14.87–89). Variants: 11.4 BR "pīna prabara uru gaṛhala sāra" (GPT "suṭhāra"); the rest orthographic. Not in the GCC, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

22. Narottama Dasa Thakura (Thakura Mahashaya) — son of Raja Krishnananda Datta of Kheturi, a disciple of Lokanatha Gosvami, author of the Prema-bhakti-candrika and the Prarthana, a great kirtaniya. The description of the form "from head to foot" (nakha-shikha) is a usual genre of songs about saints; here it is contemplation of a Vaishnava's form, not worldly admiration. "Shine in the heart" — the poet meditates on Narottama's feet as his refuge.

12. Narahari — "o mora karuṇāmaya, śrīṭhākura mahāśaya..." (GPT1 pp. 476–477, no. 62; BR)

Late layer: on the followers. The life of Narottama: young, he left royal pleasures and went to Vraja, received initiation from Lokanatha, became friends with Srinivasa — "one life in two bodies"; returning to Gauda, he visited Navadvipa and Nilachala; at Kheturi he serves six Deities; in his sankirtana the fortunate saw Gaurachandra dancing with Advaita, Nityananda and the companions; the poet longs to roll in the dust in tears with Narottama's name. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (14th wave, "the song of Narottama's life").²³

- 12.1. O my merciful Sri Thakura Mahashaya, Narottama — embodiment of prema!
How tender his body — like a shirisha flower; its radiance surpasses gold.
- 12.2. Even in his youth no pleasures pleased him: hearing of Gora's qualities he always wept;
abandoning royal enjoyments, filled with ardent longing, he went to Vraja.
- 12.3. Entering Vrindavana, with great joy in his heart, he surrendered to Lokanatha; Lokanatha in his mercy accepted him as his own and gave him initiation into the mantra of Radha and Krishna.
- 12.4. Seeing Narottama's endeavours, all in Vrindavana rejoiced and loved him as their own life; what was in his heart with Srinivasa Acharya — who knows? One life — only the bodies are different.
- 12.5. Beholding Sri Radha-Vinoda, he always delighted his eyes, devoted to the service of his master Lokanatha; in studying the books on bhakti his joy grew, and all his desires were fulfilled.
- 12.6. With his master's permission he came from Sri Vraja-mandala to Sri Gauda-mandala; by the power of his master's mercy he visited the homes of devotees in Navadvipa and Nilachala.
- 12.7. How sweet is his way: living in the village of Kheturi, he serves Gaura and Sri Radha-Ramana, the one named Sri Vallavikanta, Radha-Kanta — the abode of rasa, Radha-Krishna and Sri Vraja-Mohana.
- 12.8. These six Deities seem to sport there visibly — who, seeing their beauty, would not lose himself?
With dear Ramachandra, Narottama in great joy floats on the waves of the rasa of prema.
- 12.9. Who can tell all the virtues of Narottama, whose sankirtana rained down prema?
The fortunate saw Sri Advaita, Nityananda and Gaurachandra with the companions dancing in it.
- 12.10. Exceedingly dear to Gaura's companions, great-minded Narottama — the fame of his service to the Vaishnavas resounds;
how wondrously merciful he is — to whom does he not give pure bhakti, the chintamani gem!
- 12.11. The godless and the asuras he intoxicated with Gora's qualities, he himself overwhelmed in the ecstasy of love;

his deeds are not of this world — will there be another such? Where does his fame not resound!

12.12. Worthless Narahari says: "Will such a day come when I sell myself at Narottama's feet and, again and again raising both arms, crying 'Master Narottama!', roll weeping in the dust?"²⁴

23. GPT1 — pp. 476–477, no. 62 ("kamoda"; scan, PDF pp. 733–734); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 62. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-329). BR 14 (ed. 1912, pp. ≈1050–1051; ed. 1960, 14.215–226, "the song of the life of Sri Thakura Mahashaya — in song, kamoda"): after the songs on Srinivasa's life — "Thakura Mahashaya, dear to the Acharya — who does not sing of his life full of prema?" (14.214); after the pada — Ghanashyama's pada (GPT no. 63) and the end of the wave. Variants: 12.2 BR "ati lālasita haiyā"; 12.10 BR "baiṣṇabasebane yā'ra dhvani"; the rest orthographic. Not in the GCC, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

24. The pada retells Narottama's life as the Prema-vilasa and the BR do: leaving home for Vrindavana, secret service to Lokanatha and initiation, friendship with Srinivasa, the return, the pilgrimage to Navadvipa and Puri, the six Deities of Kheturi (Gauranga, Vallavikanta, Vraja-Mohana, Radha-Kanta, Radha-Ramana and Sri Krishna — in the poet "Radha-Krishna"), the great festival at Kheturi, where Mahaprabhu with His associates appeared in the kirtana (Prema-vilasa, vilasa 19). Sri Radha-Vinoda (12.5) — Lokanatha Gosvami's Deity in Vrindavana. The Lord's appearance in Narottama's kirtana is not an imagined vision: the Lord eternally abides in the sankirtana of His pure devotees.

13. Narahari — "rāmacandra kabirāja..." (GPT1 p. 479, no. 68)

*Late layer: on the followers. Govinda Kaviraja: younger brother of Ramachandra Kaviraja, son of Chiranjiva Sena, disciple of Srinivasa, a poet; the brothers were born in Teliya-Budhari in a family of great Shaktas but, leaving the faith of their fathers, became Vaishnavas: during Govinda's grave illness Katyayani bade him from the sky to worship Govinda's feet; his maternal grandfather was the poet Damodara of Shrikhanda; from him Govinda inherited his poetic gift. Raga mangala. Attribution: not established — GPT only; plain Bengali tripadi; about events after the passing of Narahari Sarakara (not Sarakara).*²⁵

13.1. Ramachandra Kaviraja is famed on earth; his younger brother is Sri Govinda, son of Chiranjiva Sena, known by the name "Kaviraja", disciple of Srinivasa, a moon among poets.

13.2. In the village of Teliya-Budhari, at an auspicious moment, the two brothers were born in a family of great Shaktas;
later, leaving the faith of their fathers because of a grave illness, both became Vaishnavas.

13.3. A voice resounded from the sky — Katyayani said: "Govinda, worship the feet of Govinda!
In calamity there is no one but Madhusudana: make the dust of His feet your essence."

13.4. Damodara of Shrikhanda, the best in the race of poets, is Govinda's maternal grandfather; again and again even the preceptor of the gods is compared with him, and people ceaselessly sing his fame.

13.5. Evidently from his maternal grandfather Govinda Kaviraja duly obtained his poetic fame.
Lowly Narahari says: therefore the assembly of pandits, crying "Blessed, blessed!", sings his virtues.²⁶

25. GPT1 — p. 479, no. 68 ("mangala"; scan, PDF p. 736); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 68 (NG-223: the catalogue, from the OCR of GPT2, gave as the first line a fragment "...ṭabaṣjara hā phoche bhāi" — line 13.2; the first line is "rāmacandra kabirāja bikhyāta dharaṇī mājha"). Not found in the BR, GCC, Gita-chandrodaya, Narottama-vilasa, PK, KGC or PS. In GPT1 an editor's note with quotations from other books stands under the pada (not reproduced). C.

26. Govinda Kaviraja (Govindadasa) — one of the greatest pada-poets, younger brother of Ramachandra Kaviraja; both were disciples of Srinivasa Acharya (Prema-vilasa, vilasa 14: the Goddess bids Govinda remember Govinda). Fidelity to the author: the pada calls the brothers' family "a family of great Shaktas" and their conversion "leaving the faith of their fathers"; yet their father Chiranjiva Sena of Khanda was an associate of Mahaprabhu — the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (209) calls Chiranjiva and Sulochana of Khanda exalted by association with Narahari, with Gauranga as their only refuge. What the author means the pada does not explain; the translation renders the text as it stands. Katyayani (Durga) here is a maidservant of the Lord who directs to Him (cf. Brahma-samhita 5.44: Durga is the energy carrying out the Lord's will); bhakti is not worship of her but surrender to Govinda's feet, which she herself enjoins. "The preceptor of the gods" (suraguru) — Brihaspati: Damodara is compared with him in learning and poetry.

14. Narahari — "jaya jaya rāmacandra kabirāja..." (GPT1 pp. 479–480, no. 69; GCC)

Late layer: on the followers. Praise of Ramachandra Kaviraja and of Srinivasa Acharya's circle: Ramachandra is always absorbed in the Name, immersed in serving Srinivasa's feet, inseparable from Narottama; then the poet praises other disciples and associates of the Acharya — Govinda Kaviraja, Karnapura, Nrisimha, Bhagavan, Gokula, Vallavikanta, Gopiramana, Shyamadasa Chakravarti, Ramacharana, Vyasa, Govinda, Shridasa, Gokula Chakravarti, Rupa Ghataka, Radhavallabha Mandala and King Vira Hambira — and asks to be kept at their feet as a servant. Raga pathamanjari. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC (kirana 1); Vrajabuli.²⁷

14.1. Glory, glory to Ramachandra Kaviraja!

Beautiful is his way, ceaselessly devoted to the Name, immersed in an ocean of great bliss.

14.2. He is absorbed in serving the dust of the lotus feet of Sri Sri Srinivasa, best of acharyas; ceaselessly he drinks the nectar of his virtues and life — peerless is his prema, there is not the least comparison for it.

14.3. He reads the Srimad-Bhagavata and other books full of rasa — the depth of his realization cannot be fathomed; unfailing is his friendship with Srila Narottama, known to all, and wondrous are all his deeds.

14.4. Sri Govinda, king of poets, ocean of mercy, steady, great-souled, [who sang] the life of Gaura, whose work — the beautiful preaching of pure prema — purifies the world;

14.5. Karnapura, filled with the rasa of prema, a knower of rasa, day and night filled with joy alone; graceful Nrisimha, in might like a lion, ceaselessly intoxicated with intense bhava;

14.6. Sri Bhagavan, adorned with an abundance of bhava, crest-jewel of the expert, deep in character; Gokula, a jewel of virtues, losing his composure every time in the kirtana of Gaurachandra's qualities;

14.7. Sri Vallavikanta, ocean of compassion, preacher of bhakti, boundlessly generous; Gopiramana, fond of dance and song, worthy of honour, boundless in his might;

14.8. the merciful Chakravarti named Sri Shyamadasa, who illumines the brahmana race — who will understand his nectarean life? His great fame is known to the three worlds;

14.9. Ramacharana, stealer of hearts, best of the wise, a pandita, an ocean of mercy, steady, from whose two eyes, as soon as he hears the names of Gaura and Nitai, streams of tears pour down;

14.10. Srimad Vyasa, famed, most refined, again and again repeating Hari's sweetest name — he weeps every moment, his body trembles and thrills, and he rolls on the ground without respite;

14.11. Sri Govinda, greedy for Gaura's virtues, floating in the ocean of prema; Sri Sri Dasa, the life of the knowers of rasa, spreading the pure fame of the Friend of the lowly;

14.12. Gokula Chakravarti, ocean of virtues — how can I tell his greatness, manifest to the whole world?

Srimad Rupa Ghataka, "the arranger of meetings", whose mind is ever in the pastimes of the Divine Couple;

14.13. Sri Radhavallabha Mandala, adorning the earth, embodiment of the bliss of virtues, whose whole wealth is Gaura with His companions, great-souled, a king of the rasa of bhakti;

14.14. King Vira Hambira, best of heroes, who dispels sorrow and fulfils desires —
Narahari, broken-hearted, cries aloud: "Keep me near your feet as a servant!"²⁸

27. GPT1 — pp. 479–480, no. 69 ("pathamanjari"; scan, PDF pp. 736–737); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 69. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-330). GCC — kirana 1, pada 22 ("raga pathamanjari"): in the row of vandana-padas with which the poet at the beginning of the book praises Gaura's companions and the followers (padas 13–26; before it — Ghanashyama's pada on Srinivasa and others, after it — padas on Harirama, Ramakrishna and Ganganarayana = GPT nos. 49, 72, 71). The variants in the OCR of the GCC are insignificant ("anubhaba nahu marma", "śrīgobinda kabīndra kṛpānidhi mahāmana gauracaritra" — without "dhīra"). Not in the BR (as a separate pada), PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

28. All those named are disciples and associates of Srinivasa Acharya: Govinda Kaviraja — Ramachandra's brother (no. 13); Karnapura, Nrisimha, Bhagavan — also "kavirajas" of his circle; Govinda (14.11) — probably Govinda Chakravarti of Boraquli, "Bhavuka Chakravarti" (cf. no. 9 and the event of the festival at Boraquli); Vira Hambira — the king of Vana-Vishnupura converted by Srinivasa after the theft of the Gosvamis' books. Some identifications are uncertain: the pada gives only names. "Rupa Ghataka" is a pun: ghaṭaka is a surname (the caste of matchmakers) and "arranger of meetings", i.e. one who in his mind serves the meetings of Radha and Krishna. "The depth of his realization cannot be fathomed" (14.3, anubhaba naha marma) — possibly also "he grasps not the letter only but the essence" (the reading is ambiguous).

15. Narahari — "jaya jaya śrīgaṅgānārāyaṇa cakrabartī..." (GPT1 p. 481, no. 71; BR, GCC)

*Late layer: on the followers. Praise of Ganganarayana Chakravarti, a disciple of Narottama: steady and deep, beautiful in form, greedy for sankirtana, skilled in dance, immersed in prema; he worships Narottama's feet, drinks the nectar of the Chaitanya-charitamrita; his life is the Deity Sri Govinda; the poet cannot describe his wondrous ways. Raga belabali or gauri. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (15th wave) and in the GCC (kirana 1).*²⁹

15.1. Glory, glory to Sri Ganganarayana Chakravarti, most steady and deep!

His lovely colour steals composure, his body is incomparably tender and beautiful.

15.2. Ceaselessly greedy for the rasa of sankirtana, devoted to graceful dance, enraptured with prema; devoted to the worship of Srila Narottama's lotus feet, he illumines the world.

15.3. His mind is immersed in drinking the nectar of the deeds of Sri Chaitanyachandra, he is ever generous;
the enchanting Deity of Sri Govinda is his life, wealth and the support of his soul.

15.4. Supremely merciful, friend of the lowly, of great might, he destroys the darkness of suffering;
I have no power to describe his wondrous ways, known to all — he is the joy of Narahari Dasa.³⁰

29. GPT1 — p. 481, no. 71 ("belabali or gauri"; scan, PDF p. 738); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 71. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-331). BR 15 (ed. 1912, p. ≈1062; ed. 1960, 15.131–134, "in song, gauri"): "Narottama's branch: Sri Thakura Narottama, the purifier of the fallen; his disciple — Chakravarti Ganganarayana; very learned, refuting the doctrines of the godless, he manifests bhakti... poets sing his life" (15.128–130); after the pada — the end of the 15th wave. GCC — kirana 1, pada 25 ("raga dhanashi"). Variants: 15.3 BR "śrīcaitanyacandracaritāmṛtapāṇe magana mana, satata udāra"; 15.4 BR "baraṇi nā śakati kīrti ati adabhuta, bidita dāsa narahari-sukhakārī" ("his fame" instead of "his ways"). Not in the PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

30. Ganganarayana Chakravarti — a kulina brahmana who became a disciple of Narottama (Prema-vilasa, vilasa 17); together with Ramakrishna Acharya he, according to the BR, refuted the doctrines of the opponents of bhakti. "The nectar of the deeds of Sri Chaitanyachandra" (caitanyacandra-caritāmṛta) is here probably also the Chaitanya-charitamrita of Krishnadasa Kaviraja itself, which Narottama's circle spread. Sri Govinda — the Deity whom Ganganarayana served.

16. Narahari — "jaya jaya rāmakṛṣṇa ācārya..." (GPT1 p. 481, no. 72; BR, GCC)

*Late layer: on the followers. Praise of Ramakrishna Acharya, a disciple of Narottama: wise, generous, ever in bhava, greedy for kirtana; an ornament of the brahmana race, crushing the pride of the evil-tongued; the chief servant of the Deity Sri Manmohana Raya; Narottama's feet are his whole wealth. Raga gauri. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (15th wave) and in the GCC (kirana 1).*³¹

- 16.1. Glory, glory to Ramakrishna Acharya, the wise Mahashaya, giver of happiness, generous!
Ceaselessly absorbed in bhava, greedy for kirtana — his preaching is supremely graceful.
- 16.2. Blissful, delighting the hearts of the knowers of rasa, dispelling the darkness of suffering; an ornament of the brahmana race, adorned with virtues, he crushes the pride of the evil-tongued.
- 16.3. He is ever appointed chief in the service of the beautiful Deity of Sri Manmohana Raya; wondrous is his attachment: rejoicing day and night, he drinks the nectar of Gaurachandra's deeds.
- 16.4. The feet of supremely merciful Narottama are his whole wealth, he knows nothing else; who will understand his way? Narahari sings his beautiful fame and counts himself fortunate.³²

31. GPT1 — p. 481, no. 72 ("gauri"; scan, PDF p. 738); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 72 (NG-225; signature "narahari mānata dhanya" — Narahari; the next pada, no. 73, is by Manohara Dasa). BR 15 (ed. 1912, pp. ≈1061–1062; ed. 1960, 15.124–127, "in song, gauri"): "Sri Narottama's disciple — Ramakrishna Acharya, a great pandita... a refuter of godless doctrines, known everywhere" (15.121–123; lost in the OCR of the 1960 ed., the text — from the 1912 ed.), then the pada, then — on Ganganarayana (GPT no. 71). GCC — kirana 1, pada 24 ("raga kamoda"). Variants: 16.2 BR "paṇḍitabara durmukha-madahārī" ("best of panditas"; GPT "baṇa durmmukha-madahārī"); the rest orthographic. Not in the PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

32. Ramakrishna Acharya — Harirama's brother (no. 8), a brahmana pandita who became a disciple of Narottama (Prema-vilasa, vilasa 14). Shri Manmohana Raya — the Deity he served. "The evil-tongued" (durmukha) — the revilers of bhakti, defeated by him in debate.

17. Narahari — "ki kahaba parikara parama udāra..." (GPT1 p. 483, no. 77; GCC)

*The companions around Gaura in the morning: they ceaselessly drink the nectar of His face, lose their composure, are adorned with bhavas — thrill, trembling, tears, a choked voice; one whirls, one repeats the Name, one laughs and dances; the poet longs to see this. Raga not specified ("yatharaga"). Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the GCC; Vrajabuli.*³³

- 17.1. How can I describe the companions, boundlessly generous!
Gaura's peerless face is a mine of nectar, and they ceaselessly drink that nectar.
- 17.2. However they try to keep their composure — they are ever unsteady, helplessly intoxicated with rasa; adorned with abundant, wondrous ornaments of bhava, they are beautiful in every way.
- 17.3. One's body thrills, there are no words — from his lovely throat comes only a choked sound; another is shaken through his whole being by trembling, from a third one's eyes pour streams of tears.
- 17.4. One whirls about, making gestures with his arms, another again and again utters the sweet Name;
one laughs softly and dances again and again — when will Narahari, seeing this, find his life fulfilled?³⁴

33. GPT1 — p. 483, no. 77 ("yatharaga"; scan, PDF p. 740); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 77 (NG-226). GCC — kirana 4, pada 21 ("yatharaga"), the last of the padas on the companions around Gaura in the morning; after it — a couplet with the same signature: "thus all the companions gaze at the moon of Gaura's face, their hearts in great joy, and they form various wishes" (pada 22) — and the colophon of the kirana ("The Lord in the circle of devotees"). Variants: 17.1 GCC "piyata"; 17.3 "kāṃpāota janama" (so in GPT1; understood as "the whole being"; the word is distorted in the OCR of the GCC). Not in the BR, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

34. The sattvika-bhavas are listed — ecstatic manifestations of prema: thrill (pulaka), choked voice (svara-bhanga), trembling (kampa), tears (ashru). "Find his life fulfilled" (saphala hoyaba) — the poet considers life fulfilled if he beholds this lila (in contemplation).

18. Narahari — "ei abhilāṣa mane..." (GPT1 pp. 484–485, no. 83; BR)

The poet's prayer about Gaura's companions: intoxicated with His virtues, to wander day and night, to sing of Nitai with a thousand mouths, to honour Advaita, to dance crying the names of Gadadhara, Narahari, Svarupa, Srivasa and others, to serve the feet of the Lord's parents and of His companions, to glorify the Gosvamis of Vrindavana, to become "a dog at the door" of the kirtanīyas — and to wear the names of all the companions on his neck as a necklace. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the concluding chapter of the BR (eds. 1960 and 2006), right before the author's word about himself; among the companions it also names Narahari (Sarakara).³⁵

- 18.1. This is the desire of my heart: intoxicated with the virtues of Gaurangachand, to wander day and night, [remembering] His company with Lakshmi and Vishnupriya and His pastimes in Nadia — as if floating in that ocean of happiness.
- 18.2. With a hundred thousand mouths again and again to sing the virtues of Nitaichand with Vasudha and Jahnava; ceaselessly to bow my head to Sitanatha with Sita — and with His fame to flood the world.
- 18.3. Gadadhara, Narahari, Svarupa — with jubilant cries ever to dance, slapping my armpits; crying "Srinivasa! Vanamali! Dasa Gadadhara!" — so that my heart would overflow with bliss.
- 18.4. Haridasa, Vakreshvara, Ramananda, Damodara, Gauridasa, Sri Raghunandana, Murari, Mukunda, Rama — with their names ceaselessly to perform kirtana.
- 18.5. Shachi and Mishra Jagannatha — the Lord's mother and father, Padmavati, Hadai Pandita — known to the world for their virtues: at their feet, birth after birth, may my mind abide.
- 18.6. Sri Madhava and Ratnavati, Malati, Madhavi, loving Damayanti Devi, Sri Achyutananda — the root of bliss, merciful Virachandra — may I serve their lotus feet.
- 18.7. Sri Vallabha, Sanatana, Sadashiva, Sudarshana, Nandana, Vijaya, Kashishvara, Vishvarupa — repeating their names, may I wander rejoicing, so that the godless, seeing me, take fright.
- 18.8. Dear Sanatana and Rupa, the two Bhattas — wells of rasa, Raghunatha and deep Sri Jiva — repeating these names, may this sinful body of mine become grey with dust.
- 18.9. Subuddhi with Raghava, Bhugarbha, Sri Lokanatha, who wander in Vraja in the joy of prema — may I have attachment to these names, may the evil mind go far away, may a thrill pervade my whole body.
- 18.10. Govinda, Madhava, Hari, Shuklambara Brahmachari, Vasu Ghosha, whose life is Gaura — by their grace may I wander with a lion's roar, not counting the non-devotees even as a straw.
- 18.11. The kirtanīya Shashthivara, Haridasa — the best of brahmanas, Shridhara Thakura, the seller of banana leaves,
Kamsari, Vallabha and Dhananjaya — may I become their dancing dog.
- 18.12. Kavichandra, Vidyanidhi, Sri Madhu Pandita and all the others dear to Gaura — Narahari Dasa sings: of these jewel-names I will make a necklace and put it on my neck.³⁶

35. GPT1 — pp. 484–485, no. 83 ("kamoda"; scan, PDF pp. 741–742); GPT2 — section 6.3, no. 83. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-332). BR — the concluding chapter (a brief table of contents of the fifteen waves; ed. 1960 — 35–46, "in song, kamoda"; ed. 2006 — the same place): having listed the contents of the book, the author asks the readers not to fault him and "to know him as their servant" — then this pada, then the word about himself: "I am ashamed to introduce myself... my father is the brahmana Jagannatha, a disciple of the famous Vishvanatha Chakravarti"; it is also said there that the author has two names — Ghanashyama Dasa and Narahari Dasa. The 1912 and 1913 editions lack this chapter. Variants: 18.4 BR "nirantara kariye krāṇḍana" ("I ceaselessly weep"; GPT "kīrtana"); 18.6 BR "mālinī" (Malini; GPT "mālātī"); 18.3 BR "nāci sadā kām̐khatāli diyā" — the same. Not in the GCC, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B. This is the strongest argument for attribution in the whole section: the pada is part of the author's conclusion of the BR, and "Narahari" in 18.3 is a companion of the Lord (Sarakara), whom the poet invokes like the others.

36. The pada is a prarthana-vandana, a list of Gaura's companions: Gadadhara Pandita, Narahari Sarakara, Svarupa Damodara, Srivasa (Srinivasa Pandita), Vanamali, Gadadhara Dasa (18.3); Haridasa Thakura, Vakreshvara, Ramananda Raya, Damodara Pandita, Gauridasa Pandita, Raghunandana, Murari Gupta, Mukunda Datta, Rama Pandita (18.4); the Lord's parents Shachi and Jagannatha Mishra, Nityananda's parents Padmavati and Hadai Pandita (18.5); Gadadhara's parents Madhava Mishra and Ratnavati, Malini (Srivasa's wife; in the GPT "Malati"), Madhavi, Damayanti, Advaita's son Achyutananda, Nityananda's son Virachandra (18.6); the Lord's fathers-in-law Vallabha and Sanatana Mishra, Sadashiva, Sudarshana, Nandana Acharya, Vijaya, Kashishvara, the Lord's brother Vishvarupa (18.7); the six Gosvamis (18.8); Subuddhi Mishra, Raghava, Bhugarbha, Lokanatha (18.9); the brothers Govinda and Madhava Ghosha and Vasu Ghosha (who is called "Hari" is unclear), Shuklambara Brahmachari (18.10); Shashthivara, Haridasa the brahmana, Kholavecha Shridhara, Kamsari, Vallabha, Dhananjaya (18.11); Kavichandra, Pundarika Vidyanidhi, Madhu Pandita (18.12). "Not counting the non-devotees even as a straw" (abhakte kariyā tṛṇajñāna) — not to fear the opponents of bhakti, not to despise living beings; "a dancing dog" — an image of utmost humility: a devoted servant dancing at his master's word.

19. Narahari — "gorācāṁḍa chāri yābe naidā..." (GPT1 pp. 367–368, section 5.3, no. 7; BR)

Before the sannyasa: Gorachand will leave Nadia — and the Jahnavi grew still, the murtis of Shambhu, Bhagavati and Ganapati faded, the trees do not blossom, the bees do not hum, the cuckoos have fallen silent, the peacocks do not dance, the birds weep, the cows and deer find no rest: the land of Nadia cannot contain its grief. Raga ashabari or deshpal. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the BR (12th wave); found in the continuous check of signatures (supplement).³⁷

- 19.1. Gorachand will leave Nadia — therefore the stream of the Jahnavi is left without waves; the murtis of Shambhu, Bhagavati, Ganapati — all there were — seem to have faded.
- 19.2. The trees and creepers do not put forth leaves, the flowers do not open — without fragrance; the bee and his mate do not alight on them, do not drink the nectar, do not hum — downcast.
- 19.3. The flocks of cuckoos have fallen silent, the peacock does not dance with the peahen; the shari, the shuka and other birds weep — they cannot fly, they flutter about the forest.
- 19.4. The cows do not run lowing, the deer and other beasts find no rest.

Narahari says: beauty has gone, and the land of Nadia cannot contain its grief.³⁸

37. GPT1 — pp. 367–368, section 5.3 ("Sannyasa"), no. 7 ("ashabari or deshpal"; scan, PDF pp. 626–627); GPT2 — section 5.3, no. 7. The catalogue did not know it (new row NG-333): the continuous check of signatures in sections 3.x, 4.x and 5.3–7 found it to be the only unrecorded Narahari pada outside the nagari section. BR 12 (ed. 1912, p. 958; ed. 1960, vv. 3526–3529, "in song, deshpal"); the Lord consoles Shachi (a quotation from the Chaitanya-bhagavata, Madhya-khanda: "twice more, at the beginning of sankirtana, I shall become your son", vv. 3519–3520) and Vishnupriya; all are absorbed in sankirtana; "the Lord will take sannyasa — and all that was beautiful in Nadia faded" (v. 3525), then the pada. Variants: 19.1 BR "taraṅga rahita jāhnabī-dhārā"; 19.4 BR "bhaṇe narahari, śobhā dūre, dukha sambarite nāre nadīyā-khiti" — the same. The Navadvipa-parikrama is the same as the BR. Not in the GCC, PK, KGC, PS or Gita-chandrodaya. B.

38. The nature of Nadia shares the separation from the Lord, as Vrindavana shares the separation from Krishna. The murtis of Shiva (Shambhu), Durga (Bhagavati) and Ganesha "fade" not because they are worshipped on a par with the Lord, but because the demigods too are His servants and grieve at His departure. Shari and shuka — a pair of parrots (female and male), constant images of forest poetry.

Concluding note to the appendix

The appendix "Padas signed 'Narahari' from the Gaura-pada-tarangini" (chapters 17–26) is complete: 241 padas have been translated — all the padas signed Narahari known only from the GPT (with their witnesses — the Bhakti-ratnakara, the Gaura-charita-chintamani, the Gita-chandrodaya), except the padas in nagari-bhava (they will form a separate section with an introductory note). Attribution as marked in the headings: "probably Sarakara" — 4 (mangalacharana and Gaura's form: plain Bengali, not in the BR, assigned to Sarakara by the GPT2 index; authority C); "probably Chakravarti" — 221 (almost all found in the Bhakti-ratnakara or in the Gaura-charita-chintamani of Narahari Chakravarti, and one stands in the author's conclusion of the BR; authority B); "not established" — 16 (GPT only; among them several late padas, written apparently after both Naraharis; authority C); no pada of the appendix has authority D (doubtful authenticity). The result of the continuous check: the great majority of the "Narahari" padas known only from the GPT belong to Narahari Chakravarti (Ghanashyama Dasa), an 18th-century author who wove his songs into his accounts of the holy places and of the Lord's associates; the legacy of Narahari Sarakara, Mahaprabhu's companion, is above all the padas preserved in the Padakalpataru (the main part, chapters 1–6). Left outside the appendix: the padas in nagari-bhava (a separate section), the padas signed Ghanashyama, prayers to the guru and praises of poets without Gaura-lila, padas in which Narahari is only mentioned while the signature is another's, and one pada on Advaita known only from the BR (12th wave, vv. 3755–3760).

Part III. Nagari Padas

Chapter 27. Nagari Padas — I: Vasu Ghosha (padas from the Padakalpataru)

Introductory Note to the Section of Nagari Padas

"Nagari" (nāgarī) means a townswoman, a woman of Nadia; "nagara" (nāgara) is a townsman, a gallant, and in the language of Vaishnava poetry the beloved, the hero of the play of love (Krishna is so called: "Shyama-nagara," "rasika-nagara"). Nagari-bhava is the name given to the mood of padas in which the women of Nadia, having seen the young Gaura in the street, at the bathing ghat on the Ganga, in kirtana, tell their friends of His beauty, lose their peace, forget home, modesty and family, pine through the nights, see Him in dreams, and after His sannyasa lament the separation. In these songs Gaura is "Gauranga-nagara," "the nagara of Nadia." The imagery is taken from the padas on Radha and Krishna — purvaraga, anuraga, longing in expectation, disappointed waiting, telling a friend of the meeting; that is why in the Padakalpataru* (PK) such padas stand as gaura-chandrikas (preludes) to the corresponding sections on Radha — marked "the words of the nagaris" (nāgarī ukti) — or are gathered into a separate pallava, "Gauranga's form: the words of the nagaris and others."*

Who sang in this mood. Tradition regards Narahari Sarakara of Shrikhanda and Vasu Ghosha as the first singers of nagari-bhava (Majumdar remarks that Vasu calls Gaura "nagara" following Narahari); poets of the Shrikhanda school wrote in the same spirit, among them Narahari's disciple Lochana Dasa; later such padas multiply — Nayananda, Yadunandana, and many songs signed "Narahari" in the Gaura-pada-tarangini* (GPT), mostly by Narahari Chakravarti (18th century). Majumdar counts about twenty padas of Vasu Ghosha in PK as nagari-bhava; padas known only from GPT he considers unreliable (among them are even reworkings of padas on Krishna, ascribed to Vasu to give nagari-bhava an air of antiquity).*

The position of the tradition. The Gaudiya Vaishnava tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura in the spirit of the nagaris. - Vrindavana Dasa in the Chaitanya-bhagavata* (Adi-khanda), telling of the young Nimai, says that the Lord, who joked and played pranks with everyone, in this incarnation did not look at any woman even from the corner of His eye and would not even hear the word "woman"; therefore the wise, though every praise befits Him, do not glorify Him as "Gauranga-nagara," but sing of Him according to His nature.* - Krishnadasa Kaviraja in the Chaitanya-charitamrita* (Adi 1.5–6; Adi 4) reveals the secret of this incarnation: Gaura is Krishna Himself, who has taken the bhava and the luster of Radha in order to taste the greatness of Her love, the sweetness of Himself that She tastes, and Her happiness. He came to taste Radha's love — as Radha, in the mood of a devotee — and not to enjoy the love of women as a hero.* - Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati counts "gaura-nagari" among the apasampradayas — currents that have departed from the teaching of Mahāprabhu: worshipping Gaura as a nagara-lover transfers to His lila in Navadvipa what belongs to Krishna's Vraja-lila and distorts its meaning.

Gaura's attractiveness for all who saw Him is a quality of Bhagavan (so Krishna too is Madana-mohana, "the enchanter of the god of love himself"); the biographers also write that the Lord's beauty robbed the people of Nadia of their peace. But the Lord Himself in Navadvipa was a brahmana teacher, strict in conduct, then a devotee in Radha's bhava and a sannyasi; His lilas are not worldly love.

Rules of the section. (1) The nagari padas are translated for the completeness of the corpus of padas on Gaura and as a historical document — a witness to how He was sung of in the 16th–18th centuries; they are no basis for worshipping Gaura as a nagara. (2) The translation is faithful to the author: the text is neither softened nor heightened; where the original speaks of a glance and of beauty, it is so translated; where it speaks openly of attraction, it is translated exactly, with a note. (3) The heading of each pada is marked "nagari-bhava"; the notes give a brief reference to this note instead of the full caveat. (4) Pronouns referring to Gaura are capitalized; the nagaris' words about themselves are in lower case.

Chapter 27 contains the padas of Vasu Ghosha known from PK (the earliest and most reliable layer of nagari padas; Majumdar includes them in his list of Vasu's padas), in the order of the lila: Gaura's form through the eyes of the townswomen, first love and longing, a night of vain waiting, dreams and tales told to friends, the lament after the sannyasa. The text follows PK, checked against the scans, with the manuscript variants from PK's apparatus and the Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT1 — 1st ed., 1903; GPT2 — 2nd ed., 1934); the Bengali original, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book.

1. Vasu Ghosha — "sajanī ai dekha śacīra nandana..." (PK 2151)

*Nagari-bhava. Gaura's form: "Friend, look — there is Shachi's son!" Birds, beasts and trees weep hearing of His virtues, noble wives cannot hold their hearts steady; giving to all the name unattainable even for Brahma, Gaura has delivered the world. In PK it stands in the pallava "Gaura's form." According to Majumdar, a pada of nagari-bhava. Raga varadi.*¹

1.1. (Refrain) Friend, look — there is Shachi's son:
whoever sees Him has no peace in his heart.

1.2. A treasury of boundless virtues, His glory without end; in the three worlds there is none who could set a limit to His beauty.

1.3. Birds, beasts, trees and creepers weep hearing of His virtues; by His beauty and virtues noble wives cannot hold their hearts steady.²

1.4. The name unattainable even for Brahma He has given to everyone — says Vasudeva — so Gaura has carried [all across the ocean of births].³

1. Signature: "Vasudeva." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 249 (printed p. 238), 4th shakha, 18th pallava, section "atha śrīgauracandrasya rūpa-baṇṇanam" (description of Gaura's form), no. 43 (mark " ৪৩ ঙঙঙঙ "); raga varadi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2258. GPT1 — p. 117, no. 20 (raga varadi); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 20 (catalogue: VG-183). Majumdar counts PK 2149–2155 among Vasu's nagari padas. Here the nagari motif is only "noble wives" (1.3); the rest is praise of Gaura, the giver of the name. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

2. "Noble wives" (kulabātī) are married women of worthy families who guard the honour of the family; "cannot hold their hearts steady" (buka nāhi bāndhe, lit. "cannot bind the breast") — lose their peace. A common formula for describing beauty, as in the padas on Krishna; cf. chapter 23, note 7.

3. Hari's name, unattainable even for Brahma, Gaura gives to all without distinction — the main theme of the padas on Him as the yuga-avatara (cf. chapter 9, no. 1). MS "gha" in 1.2: "i" for "e" ("these [three worlds]"), "rūpera" for "rūpe" (same sense).

2. Vasu Ghosha — "sakhi he oi dekha gorā-kalebare..." (PK 2152)

*Nagari-bhava. Gaura's form from head to foot: a face more beautiful than many moons, arms like an elephant's trunk, a glance quicker than a wagtail, a sandal tilaka, garlands to the knees, a neck like a conch, a broad chest with necklaces, reddish feet, jewel-like nails; "the Creator fashioned this form to be the ruin of young women." Raga kamoda.*⁴

2.1. Friend, look — there is Gaura's form:
His face more beautiful than many moons, His lips lovely.

2.2. His rounded arms surpass the trunk of the best of elephants;
the glance of Gaura's eyes surpasses the wagtail.⁵

- 2.3. On His lovely forehead is a tilaka of sandal, wondrous garlands, ever fresh, hang down to His knees.
- 2.4. His neck is like a conch; on His broad and mighty chest, anointed with sandal, are many jewelled necklaces.
- 2.5. His thighs are lovelier than plantain stems, His feet are reddish;
His jewel-like nails outshine the full moon and a mirror.
- 2.6. Says Vasu Ghosha: where has Gora come from?

The Creator fashioned this form to be the ruin of young women.⁶

4. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 250 (printed p. 239), 18th pallava, no. 44 (mark " 88 ১১৫১ "); raga kamoda; MS P-R-Sa no. 2259. GPT1 — p. 117, no. 21 (raga kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 21 (catalogue: VG-009). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

5. The wagtail (khañjana) is an image of lively, quick eyes. MS "ka": "ai," P-R-Sa: "ai" (the same "there," 2.1).

6. Lit. "where was Gora not?" — an exclamation of wonder: such a form had never been anywhere. "The ruin of young women" is a formula of the poetics of beauty (as in the padas on Krishna, "the enchanter of the god of love himself"), not a description of the Lord's deeds; cf. chapter 23, note 7. MSS "ka," "kha": "shines" (śobhe) for "adorns" (sāje, 2.3; so also GPT1); "kha": "body" (aṅga, 2.4).

3. Vasu Ghosha — "dekha dekha sakhi gorā bara dvijamaṇiyā..." (PK 2153)

Nagari-bhava. "Look, friend — Gora, the jewel of brahmanas!" With great patience the Creator made this peerless form: arms to the knees, a hue brighter than gold — is it ketaki, a golden lotus, champaka or a gem? His speech pours nectar; millions of moons offer themselves for His face; who, having seen Him, could walk away? Raga Kanada.⁷

- 3.1. (Refrain) Look, look, friend — Gora, the finest jewel of the twice-born!

With what patience
the Creator made this peerless form!⁸

- 3.2. His two lovely arms reach to the knees, the hue [of His body] outshines gold.
Is it ketaki, a golden lotus,
or champaka, or a gem?

- 3.3. Is its hue that of gorochana or kunkuma? — no, the radiant body surpasses them.
With sweet words He pours down nectar, and the mind of the three worlds is enchanted.⁹

- 3.4. Millions of moons offer themselves for His face and melt, falling at the moons of His nails.¹⁰ Says Vasu Ghosha: who, having seen Gauranga's face, could walk away?

7. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 250 (printed p. 239), 18th pallava, no. 45 (mark " 8৫ ১১৫৩ "); raga Kanada; MS P-R-Sa no. 2260 (the word "finest," bara, is absent from it). GPT1 — p. 122, no. 32 (raga kalyani); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 32 (catalogue: VG-127; row VG-126 has the same PK number). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

8. "Jewel of the twice-born" (dvijamaṇi) — the best of brahmanas. The words "kemane dhairaja dhariyā" can also be taken as "how can one keep one's composure?"; following the structure of the sentence ("the Creator made... how, summoning patience") we translate it as wonder at the Creator's painstaking work.

9. Ketaki and champaka are golden flowers; gorochana is a yellow pigment, kunkuma is saffron: all these are customary comparisons for Gaura's golden body.

10. "Offer themselves" (nichani) — a rite in which something precious is waved around the beloved to ward off misfortune and then given away (glossary): the moons are but a ransom for His face; "the moons of His nails" are His toenails, shining like moons.

4. Vasu Ghosha — "o nā ke bala go sajani..." (PK 2154)

*Nagari-bhava. "Tell me, friend, who is this?" — a face lovelier than moons, a hue of gold and gem; the moon and the red lotus hide in shame before His nails, palms and feet; at the beauty of His brows Madana throws away his bow; a sidelong glance mixed with a smile strikes everyone; "beware — He has lit up the whole world." Raga (illegible in PK; in GPT1 varadi).*¹¹

4.1. (Refrain) Tell me, friend, who is this?

His lovely face is lovelier than many moons,
His hue is like gold and gem.

4.2. The roundness of His arms surpasses an elephant's trunk, reaching to His knees — how lovely they are!

The moon and the red lotus, seeing His nails, palms and feet, have hidden themselves in shame.¹²

4.3. The two arches of His brows are so lovely that Madana throws away his bow;

He casts a sidelong glance, mixing it with a smile — and strikes everyone.¹³

4.4. At His waist is a cloth the colour of dawn, on His neck sways a garland of forest flowers.

Says Vasu Ghosha: beware —
He has lit up the whole world!

11. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 250 (printed p. 239), 18th pallava, no. 46 (mark " 8७ २५८8 "); MS P-R-Sa no. 2261; the name of the raga is damaged in the scan. GPT1 — p. 122, no. 33 (raga varadi); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 33 (catalogue: VG-010). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

12. Nails are compared to the moon, palms and feet to the red lotus (kokanada); here the compared is so beautiful that the objects of comparison hide in shame. MSS "ka," "gha," "cha," P-R-Sa: "of the best elephant" (karibara); "kha": "the trunk of the best elephant" (karibara-kara); "kha": "roundness" in the form subalani.

13. Madana (Kamadeva) throws away his bow because Gaura's brows are a bow lovelier than his own; "strikes" (hānaye) continues the same image: the glance is an arrow. Cf. note 6.

5. Vasu Ghosha — "dekhaha nāgara nadiyāra..." (PK 2155)

*Nagari-bhava. "Behold the nagara of Nadia!" — His gait is sweeter than the step of a royal elephant; bee-like devotees fly to the fragrance of His lotus feet, and the whole world, drunk with honey, loses the directions; full of rasa, He smiles slightly, and at the arrow from the corner of His eye millions of Kamadevas swoon; the world is full of cries of "Glory to Gora!" Raga kamoda.*¹⁴

5.1. (Refrain) Behold the nagara of Nadia!¹⁵

His gait in sweetness has surpassed the step of the best of elephants — wondrous Gora, king of the twice-born.

5.2. His feet are like lotuses, and the devotees, like bees, fly from all sides to their fragrance;

drunk with honey, the whole circle of the earth cannot tell the directions apart.

5.3. Brimming with rasa, with enchanting lips,

He smiles slightly and glances again and again;

a sign from the corner of His eye, an arrow from the corner of His eyes — and millions of Kamadevas fall senseless.

- 5.4. His ornaments are many gems, His cloth outshines the dawn, ankle bells jingle on His reddish feet.
The world is full of cries: "Glory to Gora, the jewel of the twice-born!" — so sings of His virtues Vasudeva Ghosha.¹⁶

14. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 251 (printed p. 240), 18th pallava, no. 47 (mark " 89 २१६६ "); raga kamoda; MS P-R-Sa no. 2262. GPT1 — p. 122, no. 34 (raga kamoda; "nadīyāya" — "in Nadia"); GPT2 — sec. 3.1, no. 34 (catalogue: VG-011). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

15. "Nagara" (nāgara) — a townsman, a gallant, in poetry the beloved hero; a word by which Krishna is glorified. Why the tradition does not so call Gaura — see the introductory note. Here, apart from the name "nagara," the pada is a praise of the Lord's form; the "bee-like devotees" at His feet and the Kamadevas losing consciousness are images of His divine attractiveness.

16. P-R-Sa: "slow" (sumanthara) for "sweet" (sumādhuri, 5.1). MS "ka" and GPT1: "the world's cry of victory" (jagata bijaya) for "the world is full of cries" (jaga bhari jaya, 5.4).

6. Vasu Ghosha — "āre mora rasamaya gaurakiśora..." (PK 2211)

*Nagari-bhava. Praise of the young Gaura, full of rasa: in the three worlds there is no such nagara; noble wives are enchanted by His beauty, trees thrill, stones melt, birds and beasts weep, the townswomen lose their peace; He stirs the minds of gods and sages — Gora, the saviour of the fallen. In PK it stands in the pallava "Gaurachandra — another way." Raga varadi.*¹⁷

- 6.1. O my young Gaura, full of rasa!
In all three worlds there is no such nagara.
- 6.2. Chaste wives of noble families, seeing His beauty, are enchanted; hearing of His virtues, trees and creepers thrill with joy.
- 6.3. Stones and trees melt, birds and beasts weep;
the townswomen cannot keep their hearts at rest.
- 6.4. He stirs the minds of gods, siddhas and sages.
Says Vasu Ghosha: Gora is the saviour of the fallen.¹⁸

17. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 272 (printed p. 261), 20th pallava, no. 28 (mark " २८ २२२२ "); raga varadi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2319. The neighbouring pada of the same pallava is Vasu's PK 2210 (chapter 8, no. 2). GPT1 — p. 44, no. 58 (raga varadi); GPT2 — sec. 1.3 (catalogue: VG-132). Majumdar (1961 ed.) cites this pada as an example of Vasu calling Gaura "nagara" following Narahari Sarakara. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

18. The pada joins nagari motifs (6.1, 6.3) with praise of the Lord before whom stones melt and gods and sages tremble — Bhagavan, who saves the fallen.

7. Vasu Ghosha — "madanamohana gaurāṅga-badana..." (PK 2149)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman tells her friend: having seen Gauranga's face, which enchants Madana himself, she has lost herself; this is the former dark Kanu become golden — otherwise how could He have stolen her heart? The young wives of Nadia drown in love, in every house there is weeping; she will cast the rites of her family into the waters of the Suradhuni and serve Gora. Raga tūdi.*¹⁹

- 7.1. Gauranga's face enchants Madana himself:
having seen this form, what has not befallen me!
His body is the colour of gold — [yet once] this was dark Kanu;
otherwise would He have stolen [so] my heart?²⁰

7.2. To one whose life is rasa, what is family?

Such is [He] — in the town of Nadia!

What a bitter, cruel lot: the young chaste wives have drowned, in every house there is the weeping of love.²¹

7.3. [My] lotus eyes are redder than the fresh dawn, streams [of tears] run down my breast.

Ah, I am dying, dying, friend — to you I open my heart:

I will not live without seeing Gora.

7.4. The arrow of love in my heart has wounded all my body, my soul accepts no consolation.

I will go to the bank of the Suradhuni and cast my family's rites into its waters —

I will serve Gora, the jewel of virtues.²²

7.5. All that I heard before is just so:

[He who was] dark-bodied has now become Gora.

The word of Vasudeva Ghosha: know — He is the rasika-nagara;

otherwise would He be the stealer of the gopis' hearts?²³

19. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 249 (printed p. 238), 18th pallava, no. 41 (mark " ৪৯ ২৯৪৯ "); raga tudi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2256. GPT1 — p. 160, no. 8 (raga tudi); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 8 (catalogue: VG-013). A witness is the Bhakti-ratnakara, 12th wave (1913 ed., p. 910, scan PDF p. 918): in the cycle of the words of the women of Nadia that Narahari Chakravarti cites while describing the places of Navadvipa (chapter 29, note 1), with Vasudeva Ghosha's signature, raga deshapala, beginning with the words "rūpa heri..."; in 7.2 it reads "rahibe" (as MSS "kha," "cha"). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

20. Gaura is Krishna (Kanu) Himself, who has taken Radha's golden luster (CC Adi 1.5); the townswoman recognizes in Him the "stealer of hearts" of Vraja. This affirmation of the identity of Gaura and Krishna is the main theological content of the pada (cf. 7.5).

21. The sense of 7.2: before such a Gaura the bonds of family are powerless. MS "ka": "will say" (kahibe), "kha," "cha": "will remain" (rahibe) for "will do" (karibe). P-R-Sa: "down face and breast" (mukha buka, 7.3; so also GPT1); "that" (se) for the particle "go" (7.3).

22. "I will cast my family's rites into the waters" — I will abandon the duty and honour of my family: a nagari motif (introductory note). The words of love and service (bhajiba) are spoken by a townswoman; the translation does not soften them, nor does it add worldly shades.

23. "The stealer of the gopis' hearts" is a name of Krishna; Vasu again bears witness: the golden Gaura is the same Krishna. "Rasika-nagara" — the connoisseur and enjoyer of rasa; in Krishna-lila this is Krishna with the gopis. The tradition does not accept the application of this name to Gaura (introductory note).

8. Vasu Ghosha — "ki kahaba aparūpa gaura kiśora..." (PK 2150)

*Nagari-bhava. "What can I say of the wondrous young Gaura?" — with a sign from the corner of His eye He has stolen her life; His sidelong glance is a calamity: the ruin of the townswomen has risen in the town; she who sees Him cannot forget, the noble wife leaves her home; love for Gora is a pain of the heart. Raga suhini.*²⁴

8.1. What can I say of the wondrous young Gaura?

With a sign from the corner of His eye He has stolen my life.

8.2. His sidelong glance is a real calamity:

the ruin of the townswomen has risen in the town.

8.3. Whatever woman sees Him cannot forget Him;

the noble wife leaves her family and does not stay at home.

8.4. Says Vasudeva Ghosha: listen to my words — love for Gora is a pain deep in the heart.

24. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 249 (printed p. 238), 18th pallava, no. 42 (mark " ৪২ ২১৫০ "); raga suhini; MS P-R-Sa no. 2257. GPT1 — p. 160, no. 9 (raga suhini); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 9 (catalogue: VG-014). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section; "the ruin of the townswomen" is a formula of the power of beauty (cf. note 6).

9. Vasu Ghosha — "āra eka dina gaurāṅgasundara..." (PK 2169)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman tells: on another day she saw the beautiful Gauranga bathing at the ghat — a face lovelier than millions of moons, lotus eyes, brows a bow, glances the arrows of Kama; drops of water on His curls like a string of pearls in a cloud, on His body like pearls on gold; He wrung out His curls and put on a red cloth — "I cannot stay at home." In PK it is Vasu's first pada in the pallava "Gauranga's form: the words of the nagaris and others." Raga varadi.*²⁵

9.1. On another day I saw the beautiful Gauranga —

He was bathing at the ghat.
His face lovelier than millions of moons — seeing it, the heart breaks.

9.2. His body tender and radiant like tested gold,

His eyes pure lotuses;
the glances are arrows, the arches of the brows a bow:
so the archer Kama strikes.²⁶

9.3. His curling locks, and on them drops of water:

like a string of pearls in a cloud;
the drops on His body are like pearls on gold;
seeing this, Kama swoons.

9.4. He wipes His whole body, wrings out His curls, puts on a red cloth.

Says Vasu Ghosha: so it seems to me —
I cannot stay at home.²⁷

25. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 257–258 (printed pp. 246–247), 19th pallava, section "atha śrīgaurāṅgasya rūpa-baṇṇanam nāgarīgaṇādyuktiḥ" (description of Gauranga's form: the words of the nagaris and others), no. 2 (mark " ২ ২১৬৯ "); raga varadi; MSS P-R-Sa no. 2276 and P-R no. 61. GPT1 — p. 160, no. 10 (raga varadi); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 10 (catalogue: VG-015). The beginning of 9.2 is illegible in the PK scan — restored from GPT1 ("aṅga dhala dhala"). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

26. The Lord bathed in the Ganga daily — the Chaitanya-bhagavata too tells of His baths at the ghats of Navadvipa; here it is only an occasion to describe His beauty. Kamadeva is "the archer" with flower arrows (cf. note 13).

27. MSS "ka," "kha," "gha," "cha," P-R-Sa and GPT1: "she cannot stay at home" (nāribe). In MS P-R 9.3 differs: "a cloud flows over it (the cloud of hair)" (bahe jaladhara), "as if" (yena), "pearls on all His limbs" (sakala aṅge mukutāra phala).

10. Vasu Ghosha — "eka dina ghāṭe jale giyāchilāma..." (PK 2171)

*Nagari-bhava. "One day I went to the ghat for water — and what beauty of Gora I saw!" A body like tested gold, the Lord absorbed in the rasa of prema; a lovely face, signs from the corners of the eyes, a sandal tilaka — like the moon among the stars; smiling, He speaks half-words; who, seeing such a nagara, can keep composure? Raga dhanashi.*²⁸

10.1. One day I went to the ghat for water — what beauty of Gora I saw!

His pure body like tested gold;
the Lord was absorbed in the rasa of prema.

- 10.2. A lovely face, enchanting Madana, the radiance of signs from the corners of His eyes;
fair cheeks, a sandal tilaka — like the moon surrounded by stars.²⁹
- 10.3. Smiling slightly with sweet lips,
He speaks half-words;
with His smile gems and the finest pearls seem to fall — seeing this, every living being forgets itself.
- 10.4. Says Vasu Ghosha: who, seeing such a nagara, can keep composure?
Remarkable is that young woman who, having seen this form, can still stay at home!³⁰

28. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 258 (printed p. 247), 19th pallava, no. 4 (mark " 8 ১১৭১ "); raga dhanashi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2279. Between PK 2169 and 2171 stands PK 2170, a pada of Nayananda (chapter 28). GPT1 — pp. 160–161, no. 11 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 11 (catalogue: VG-016). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

29. GPT1: "on the fair forehead" (sucāru kapāle) for "fair cheeks" (sucāru kapola). "The Lord was absorbed in the rasa of prema" (10.1) — Gaura in the mood of a devotee: the townswoman sees Him intoxicated with love of God.

30. "Remarkable" (dhanya, lit. "blessed") — with bitter irony: it is impossible, having seen Him, to stay at home.

11. Vasu Ghosha — "yakhana dekhilum³ gorācāmde..." (PK 2172)

Nagari-bhava. "As soon as I saw Gorachand — I fell into the snare of love": she gave Him body and soul, bade farewell to fear for her family; without Gora she cannot live, Gauranga has become the treasure of her life. Raga pathamanjari.³¹

- 11.1. As soon as I saw Gorachand — at once I fell into the snare of love.
- 11.2. Body and soul I gave to Him, to fear for my family I bade farewell for ever.³²
- 11.3. Without Gora I cannot live:
Gauranga has become the treasure of my life.
- 11.4. My heart cannot hold its composure;
Vasudeva Ghosha knows this rasa.³³

31. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 258 (printed p. 247), 19th pallava, no. 5 (mark " ৫ ১১৭২ "); raga pathamanjari; MSS P-R-Sa no. 2280 and P-R no. 14/24. GPT1 — p. 161, no. 12 (raga pathamanjari); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 12 (catalogue: VG-017). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

32. Lit. "to fear for my family I gave tilanjali" — the libation of water with sesame offered for the dead: a sign of final farewell. "I gave body and soul" — the words of a townswoman (a nagari motif; introductory note). MS P-R: "to propriety" (śīle) for "to fear for my family" (kula-bhaye).

33. MS P-R: "Gora is my very own" (gorā mora nija) for "Gauranga has become" (11.3); "without Gora I cannot live" (jībana nā rahe gorā bine) for "cannot hold... composure" (11.4).

12. Vasu Ghosha — "gorā-rūpa dekhībāre mane kari sādha..." (PK 2173)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman longs to see Gora: love for Gaura is a great calamity; she knows neither day nor night, she remembers Him ceaselessly; what spell has Gora cast with the arrows of His eyes? Her eyes shed tears without end. The raga is the same as for the preceding pada (pathamanjari).³⁴

- 12.1. I long in my heart to see Gora's form;
love for Gaura is a great calamity.

- 12.2. Whether it is night or day, I know nothing;
ceaselessly I remember Gora, the jewel of virtues.
- 12.3. Repeating "Gora, Gora," what has become of my heart?
What spell has Gora cast with the arrows of His eyes?
- 12.4. My eyes pour without ceasing and accept no consolation;
"a great calamity is love," sings Vasu Ghosha.

34. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 258–259 (printed pp. 247–248), 19th pallava, no. 6 (mark " ു ു൬൬ "); "the same raga" (tathā rāga); MS P-R-Sa no. 2281 (it reads "form" (rūpakhāni) for "the jewel of virtues," 12.2). GPT1 — p. 161, no. 13 ("yathārāga"); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 13 (catalogue: VG-128 = VG-018). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

13. Vasu Ghosha — "gr̥ha-kāja kari tāhe thira nahe mana..." (PK 2175)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman cannot do her housework — her heart is restless: "Come, let us go and see Gora's moonlike face!" She has bidden farewell to her family and her hopes, given up food and pastimes; without Gora she cannot live. The same raga.*³⁵

- 13.1. I do my housework — but my heart is restless:
come, let us go and see Gora's moonlike face!
- 13.2. To my family I bade farewell for ever, abandoning all hopes, I gave up all pleasures — food and pastimes.
- 13.3. Day and night my heart finds no rest.
Says Vasu: without Gora I cannot live.

35. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 259 (printed p. 248), 19th pallava, no. 8 (mark " ു ു൬൬ "); "the same raga"; MS P-R-Sa no. 2283. Before it stands PK 2174 by Lochana Dasa ("āra śunecha ālo sai gorā-bhābera kathā"; chapter 28). GPT1 — p. 161, no. 14 (raga shri) — with an extra opening couplet: "āhā mari mari sai āhā mari mari, kikṣaṇe dekhilum gorā pāśarite nāri" ("Ah, I am dying, dying, friend! In what moment did I see Gora — I cannot forget"); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 14. In the catalogue the pada was listed twice: VG-019 (from GPT) and VG-129 (from PK). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

14. Vasu Ghosha — "cala dekhi giyā gorā ati manohare..." (PK 2176, nagari recension)

*Nagari-bhava. The same pada as PK 973 (chapter 9, no. 2), in PK's second recension — in the pallava of the nagaris' words: "Come, let us go and see Gora!" — Gaura's form in Nadia; the ending differs: "I will go and give my youth for Him." The same raga.*³⁶

- 14.1. Come, let us go and see Gora, beautiful beyond words:
wondrous is Gora's form in the town of Nadia!
- 14.2. His body, tender and radiant, outshines tested gold;
who, seeing the waves of His eyes, can keep his composure?
- 14.3. His arms reach to His knees like golden pillars, a red cloth is at His waist, broad are His hips.
- 14.4. A garland of malati sways on His neck down to His feet.
Says Vasu: I will go and give my youth for Him.³⁷

36. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 259–260 (printed pp. 248–249), 19th pallava, no. 9 (mark " ു ു൬൬ "); "the same raga"; MS P-R-Sa no. 2284. GPT1 — p. 161, no. 15 (raga shri); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 15 (catalogue: VG-096). Lines 14.1–14.3 are identical with PK 973 and are translated as in chapter 9 (no. 2, notes 6–8). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

37. "I will give... my youth" (diba giyā yaubana nichani) — the rite of nichani (note 10): the speaker gives for Him the dearest thing she has; in the recension of PK 973 — "I will give my life." The signature is put into the mouth of a townswoman (as in other padas of the section).

15. Vasu Ghosha — "niramala gorā tanu kaṣila kāñcana janu..." (PK 28)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's first love: seeing Gora's body, pure as tested gold, she lost herself; the serpent of His brow has bitten her heart; the arrows of His reddish eyes have left her without support — she is as if drowning in the bottomless Ganga; "if you know a spell or a remedy, help me: for Gora's sake my life is leaving me." In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to Radha's purvaraga, "the words of a nagari." Raga kamoda.*³⁸

15.1. Gora's pure body is like tested gold;

gazing at it, I lost myself.

The serpent of His brow has bitten my heart — everything within me trembles.

15.2. (Refrain) Friend, ever since I saw Gora, in my distress I cannot tell the directions apart, my heart is seized by the longing of Madana.³⁹

15.3. With sidelong glances of His reddening eyes

He rains down flower arrows with delight.

How shall I live on? — I have found no support:
I have drowned in the bottomless Ganga.⁴⁰

15.4. If you know a spell or a mighty remedy, find a means for me.

Says Vasudeva Ghosha: listen, listen, friend — for Gora's sake my life is leaving me.⁴¹

38. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 34 (printed p. 23), section "atha śrīrādhāyāḥ pūrvarāgaḥ | taducita śrīgauracandra | nāgarī ukti" (Radha's purvaraga; the gaura-chandrika befitting it — the words of a nagari), no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐ "); raga kamoda; MS P-R-Sa no. 258. GPT1 — p. 163, no. 20 (raga kamoda); GPT2 — sec. 3.2 (catalogue: VG-023, "no. 27" — the number is apparently garbled by the OCR). The earliest nagari pada of PK by number: Satishchandra Raya opens the whole cycle of purvaraga with it. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

39. "My heart is seized by the longing of Madana" (madana-lālase mana bhorā) — the original names the attraction openly (Madana is the god of love); we translate it exactly. This is the language of Radha's purvaraga, to which the pada serves as a prelude; in Krishna-lila the "Madana" of such padas is Krishna Himself, Madana-mohana, and their love is not worldly. The tradition does not accept the application of this language to Gaura (introductory note). P-R-Sa: "the intoxication of Madana" (madanamadārase); the word "friend" is absent; "I found" (pāyalum) for "I cannot tell" (pāiye).

40. "I have drowned in the bottomless Ganga" — an image of complete loss of self. MS "ka": "purified" (kaṣita) for "tested" (15.1); "ka"—"cha": "I fell into oblivion" (paṇi gelum). P-R-Sa: "with reddish eyes" (aruṇa nayāne); "He has aimed a cruel arrow" (baṇai biṣama śara sādhi) for "rains down flower arrows"; "I will not hold my composure" (dhairaja nā bāndhaba) for "I have found no support"; "into the bottomless Ganga" (gaṇḡā agādhi).

41. P-R-Sa: "do you" (so tuhum karaha) for "find for me"; "beauty" (sundari) for "friend" (so also MS "kha"); "without Gora my body perishes" (gorā binu mora tanu yāya).

16. Vasu Ghosha — "nirabadhi mora mane gorā-rūpa lāgiyāche..." (PK 777)

*Nagari-bhava. Gora's form does not leave the townswoman's heart: not seeing His face, her breast is breaking; she fears neither husband nor elders and is ready to part with life for Gora's sake; she has abandoned all joys and her family — nothing but Gora pleases her. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "anuraga: love for the form." Raga suhai.*⁴²

- 16.1. Ceaselessly Gora's form stays in my heart — tell me, friend, what shall I do?
Not seeing Gora's face, my breast is breaking,
my soul longs to leave my body.
- 16.2. Tell me, friend, what am I to do?
My heart does not fear my husband or my elders:
for Gora's sake I will give up my life.⁴³
- 16.3. I have abandoned all joys, bidden my family farewell for ever;
nothing but Gora pleases me.
My eyes pour without end — listen, dear friend of my heart — what can Vasu Ghosha say to this?

42. Signature: "Vasu Ghoshā." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 120 (printed p. 107), 10th pallava, section "ātha anurāgaḥ... ādau rūpānurāgo yathā | tatra śrīmahāprabhuḥ" (anuraga; first, love for the form; here — on Mahāprabhu), no. 1 (mark " 𑂣 𑂔𑂔𑂔 "); raga suhai; MSS P-R-Sa no. 1267 and P-R no. 14/1 (in P-R the raga is tūdi). GPT1 — p. 162, no. 17 (raga suhai); GPT2 — sec. 3.2 (catalogue: VG-095). In GPT1 the same pada stands once more — sect. 3.2, no. 84 (pp. 188–189), with the signature "locana dāsa ki baliba tāya" — Lochana's (found in chapter 34; the signature is erroneous). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

43. "My husband and my elders" (gr̥hapati gurujana) — the speaker is married; readiness to disregard husband and elders is the parakiya motif of the padas on the gopis, transferred to the townswomen of Nadia; precisely this transfer the tradition rejects (introductory note). P-R: "does not hold" (nāhi laye) for "does not fear." MS P-R: "what shall I do, what will become of me" (16.1); "ka," "kha," "gha," "cha," P-R-Sa: "form" (rūpa) for "face" (mukha, 16.1); P-R-Sa: "pour without ceasing" (nijhure jhuraye), "of my heart" (marama) for "dear... of my heart" (16.3).

17. Vasu Ghosha — "gorā-rūpa lāgila nayane..." (PK 899)

*Nagari-bhava. Gora's form is imprinted on her eyes — night and day, awake and in dreams; wherever she looks she sees Him, she wants to turn her gaze away and cannot; He is deep in her heart, and her heart cannot be restrained: "Gora is the enchanter of women." In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "anuraga — another way." Raga shri.*⁴⁴

- 17.1. Gora's form is imprinted on my eyes — whether by night or by day, on my bed or in dreams.
- 17.2. Wherever I turn my eyes — there I see [Him];
I wish to look away — my eyes will not turn.
- 17.3. In what moment did I see Gora — what has not befallen me!
Ceaselessly Gora's form is deep in my heart.
- 17.4. I want to restrain my heart — it cannot be restrained.
Says Vasu Ghosha: Gora is the enchanter of women.⁴⁵

44. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 171 (printed p. 158), section "atha anurāgaḥ prakāraṇtaraṃ yathā | tatra śṛīgauracandraḥ" (anuraga — another way; here — on Gaurachandra), no. 101 (mark " འུ་ སུ་ གོ་ ཤ་ "); raga shri; MSS P-R-Sa nos. 1390 and 1398, P-R no. 14/7. The pada stands in PK a second time — PK 916 (vol. 2, PDF p. 178; with a reference there to 899). GPT1 — p. 162, no. 18 (raga shri); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 18 (catalogue: VG-021). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

45. "The enchanter of women" (raṃāṇī-mohana) — in a townswoman's mouth, praise of His beauty; cf. Madana-mohana, "the enchanter of the god of love." MS P-R: "my gaze falls" (paṛaye diṭhi) for "I turn my eyes" (17.2); P-R-Sa: "the heart wishes" (kare mana), P-R: "there is a wish" (kare sādha) for "I wish" (17.2); "ka": "in the eyes" (nayane), P-R: "has entered" (paśila) for "is deep in my heart" (17.3).

18. Vasu Ghosha — "gorā-anurāge mora parāna kātare..." (PK 747)

*Nagari-bhava. "My soul languishes with love for Gora": her eyes are full of tears, repeating "Gora, Gora" she is as if ill; she remembers Him ceaselessly, she does not know where to go; love for Gauranga is no easy thing: "the dharma of the family will not stand." In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "anuraga with reproaches." Raga suhai.*⁴⁶

- 18.1. With love for Gora my soul languishes;
ceaselessly, brimming over, my eyes shed tears.
- 18.2. Repeating "Gora, Gora," what malady has seized me?
Ceaselessly I remember Gora, the treasury of virtues.
- 18.3. What shall I do, where shall I go from this love for Gora?
At every moment love for Gora awakens in my heart.
- 18.4. Love for Gauranga is no easy thing:
says Vasu — the dharma of the family will not stand.⁴⁷

46. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 107 (printed p. 94), 8th pallava, section "atha ākṣepānurāgaḥ | śrīgauracandraḥ" (anuraga with reproaches; gaura-chandrika), no. 1 (mark " ५ १४९ "); raga suhai; MS P-R-Sa no. 1236. GPT1 — p. 386, no. 12 (raga suhai) — in the section "the lament of Shachi and Vishnupriya" after the sannyasa; GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 12 (catalogue: VG-071). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

47. "The dharma of the family" (kulera dharama) — the duty and honour of the family; words of a townswoman, not of Vishnupriya, though GPT places the pada among the laments after the sannyasa. GPT1: "my soul is breaking" (parāṇa bidare, 18.1). P-R-Sa: "weep" (jhure) for "shed" (18.1); MS "ka": "every moment" (anukṣaṇa, 18.3).

19. Vasu Ghosha — "e hena sundara beśa kene banāilum..." (PK 360)

*Nagari-bhava. A night of vain waiting: "Why did I adorn myself so? Gora's form I never saw"; the night passes in vain, the Creator has mocked her; whose body will she now anoint with perfumes and sandal, to whom will she offer camphor and betel? In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section on the utkanthita (the heroine pining in expectation). Raga mallar.*⁴⁸

- 19.1. Why did I adorn myself so beautifully?
Gora's peerless form I never saw.
- 19.2. The night passes in vain — what has become of me?
Now I know for certain: the Creator has mocked me.⁴⁹
- 19.3. Perfumes, aguru, sandal — without Gora, whose body shall I anoint with them?
- 19.4. Camphor, betel, areca — into whose mouth shall I give them?
Says Vasu Ghosha: the night departs in great sorrow.⁵⁰

48. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 243 (printed p. 232), section "athotkanṭhitā | tatra śrīgauracandraḥ" (utkanthita; gaura-chandrika), no. 9 (mark " ६ ७७० "); raga mallar; MS P-R-Sa no. 479. GPT1 — p. 303, no. 11 (raga mallar) — in section 4.5 (the bhavas of the night); GPT2 — sec. 4.5, no. 11 (catalogue: VG-180; row VG-088 has the same PK number). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

49. "The Creator has mocked me" (bidhi biṛambila) — has deceived, thwarted my design. The Creator (bidhi) is Brahma, the arbiter of fate; not the Lord. MS "gha": "did not obtain" (nā pāilum), "cha": (nā pālum) for "never saw" (19.1); P-R-Sa: "today" (āji) for "me" (19.2).

50. Camphor, betel and areca are the refreshment offered to a dear guest; the waiting and preparations are the image of the utkanthita from the padas on Radha, transferred to a townswoman. MS "gha": "agaura" for "agora" (aguru, 19.3); "ka"—"ga": "Gaura" (gaura) for "Gora" (19.3); P-R-Sa: "guvaka" (the same nut, 19.4).

20. Vasu Ghosha — "āju rajani hāma kaiche bañcaba re..." (PK 365)

Nagari-bhava. Disappointed waiting: "How shall I pass this night? The king of dancers has turned away from me"; the hope of new love has not been fulfilled, half a moment drags on like ages; for

*Gaura's sake she cast aside respect for her elders — and the Creator has deprived her of this love; the fruit of prema He has scattered over the whole world, and she is left without hope. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section on the vipralabdha (the heroine disappointed in her waiting). Raga kedara.*⁵¹

20.1. How shall I pass this night? —

The king of dancers has turned away from me.
In new love my hope has not been fulfilled,
all my efforts have come to nothing.

20.2. (Refrain) Friend, why did I adorn myself?

Half a moment drags on like ages;
pining [for Him] I have wasted to the ribs.⁵²

20.3. Respect for my elders I cast far away for the sake of the rasa of love for Gaura.

The rare love the Creator has denied me — he has set fire to my fate.⁵³

20.4. The jewel-fruit of prema He has scattered over the whole world — and I am left by it without hope;

deceived by new love, I have gone astray:
Vasu Ghosha's hope has not been fulfilled.⁵⁴

51. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 247 (printed p. 236), section "atha bipralabdha | tatra śrīgauracandraḥ" (vipralabdha; gaura-chandrika), no. 14 (mark " ३४ ३५६ "); raga kedara; MSS P-R-Sa no. 493 and P-R no. 18/1. GPT1 — p. 303, no. 12 (raga kedara); GPT2 — sec. 4.5, no. 12 (catalogue: VG-181; row VG-089 has the same PK number). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

52. The formula of separation — "half a moment is like many yugas": a moment without Him drags on endlessly (not the reverse). "I have wasted to the ribs" (lit. "my ribs have come to an end") — I have wasted away with longing. MS P-R: "looking at the road, I have wasted to the ribs" (patha heri pāmṇara śeṣa).

53. "Respect for my elders I cast away" — a nagari motif (cf. note 43). The Creator (bidhi) is the arbiter of fate, not the Lord. MS P-R: "he has put fire into my honeyed mouth" (deola madhu mukhe āgi); "ka"—"ga," "cha," P-R-Sa: "durlabhi," P-R: "dulaha" (the same "rare").

54. "The fruit of prema He has scattered over the whole world" — Gaura gives love of God to all; the townswoman complains that she, who awaited Him otherwise, received nothing. In her own words — "the king of dancers has turned away from me" (20.1) — what Vrindavana Dasa says is unwittingly recorded: the Lord did not turn His gaze to women (introductory note). MS P-R: "over the world" (jagate) for "over the whole world," "fell" (paṇala) for "am left"; P-R-Sa: "by new love" (anurāge); "ka"—"ga," "cha," P-R: "tulala" — a slip. ## 21. Vasu Ghosha — "ājuka premaka nāhika ora..." (PK 723) *Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's dream: "Today's love has no limit — in a dream I lay in Gaura's embrace"; gazing at the Lord's face she lost herself, tears flowed and washed down the collyrium, her tilaka grew wet, her adornment was effaced. In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section "telling of the meeting — another way." Raga vibhasa.*⁵⁵

21.1. Today's love has no limit:

in a dream I lay in Gaura's embrace.⁵⁶

21.2. Gazing at the Lord's face, I lost myself;

tears rolled and rolled from my eyes.

21.3. On my high breast — collyrium [with tears], the necklace shines bright;

my tilaka is wet, on my cloth is a golden radiance.⁵⁷

21.4. The adornment of my body is effaced, little remains.

Says Vasudeva Ghosha: love brims over.⁵⁸

55. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 2, PDF pp. 96–97 (printed pp. 83–84), section "atha rasodgāraḥ prakāraṇtaraṃ yathā | śrīmahāprabhuḥ" (rasodgara — telling a friend of the meeting — another way; here — on Mahāprabhu), no. 60 (mark " ३० ३१३ "); raga vibhasa; MS P-R-Sa no. 1197. GPT1 — p. 296, no. 13 (raga vibhasa); GPT2 — sec. 4.4, no.

13 (catalogue: VG-039; row VG-093 has the same PK number). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

56. The pada describes a meeting in a dream (svapanahi) — this is sambhoga-nagari: a townswoman in Gaura's embrace. The translation adds nothing beyond the original, but does not soften it either. Majumdar holds that padas on sambhoga with Gaura known only from GPT were ascribed to Vasu later; this pada, however, stands in PK with his signature. The tradition rejects such a portrayal of Gaura (introductory note). MSS "ka," "kha," "cha," P-R-Sa: "lay" (śutala) — the same.

57. The tears have washed the collyrium (kājara) from her eyes down onto her breast. "A golden radiance" (ruci gora) — we take it as the reflection of the golden Gaura; GPT1: "ruci mora" — "my attire (its lustre)."

58. "Brims over" (āgora) — overflowing, measureless. MSS "ka," "kha," "gha," P-R-Sa: "much" (bahu) for "remains" (rahu); P-R-Sa: "dark" (ghora) for "little" (thora); "in love" (preme).

22. Vasu Ghosha — "ki kahaba re sakhi rajanika bāta..." (PK 724)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman tells her friend of the night: she was sleeping beside her elders; at midnight, under the full moon and the gentle Malaya breeze, love for Gaura overwhelmed her, and weeping she cried out: "Gaura, Gaura!"; the elders woke and heard Gaura's name — then she raised the cry: "Thief, thief!" Raga dhanashi.*⁵⁹

22.1. What shall I say, friend, of last night!

I was sleeping beside my elders.

22.2. At midnight, when the moon was full, very gently the breeze from Malaya was blowing.

22.3. Love for Gaura filled my body;

my life in distress could find no support.

22.4. Weeping "Gaura, Gaura!" I rose — the elders woke: "Who is it again?"

22.5. Gaura's name they all heard with their own ears;

then the elders began to suspect.

22.6. I raised the cry: "Thief, thief!" — says Vasudeva Ghosha: such is the play!⁶⁰

59. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 97 (printed p. 84), the same section as PK 723, no. 61 (mark " ୧୫ ୧୫୪ "); raga dhanashi; MS P-R-Sa no. 1198. GPT1 — p. 204, no. 114 (raga dhanashi); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 114. Catalogue correction: row VG-094 counted PK 724 as "Krishna-lila" and excluded it from translation; in fact the pada is about Gaura (the name "Gaura" in 22.3–22.5) and stands in GPT among the nagari padas. It is not in Majumdar's list (he gives the neighbouring PK 723). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

60. A play on words: "gaura" — "caura" ("thief"): to hide whose name she was calling, the townswoman turns "Gaura" into "thief." In PK this pada is preceded by a pada of Jnanadasa on Radha (PK 722), where Radha likewise covers an involuntary "Kanu, Kanu" with the word "Bhanu, Bhanu" (the sun): Vasu transfers a motif of Krishna-lila to the nagaris. MS P-R-Sa: "canda," "manda" (22.2); "ka," "kha," "cha," P-R-Sa: "śunala" (22.5); "kha," "gha": "I rose" (uṭhalum), P-R-Sa: "rose" (uṭhala) for "I raised the cry" (22.6).

23. Vasu Ghosha — "ki kahaba re sakhi ājuka bhāba..." (PK 249)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman tells her friend: she was alone, adorning herself and dressing her hair before the mirror — and at that moment Gora, the king of dancers, appeared; her composure and her modesty gave way; at the sight of Him her body thrilled, and He took her in His embrace. In PK it follows Radhamohana's gaura-chandrika to the section "telling of the meeting — another way," under the heading "the words of the nagaris of Navadvipa befitting this rasa." Raga vibhasa.*⁶¹

23.1. What shall I say, friend, of today!

Without any effort a great fortune has come to me.

- 23.2. I was alone, adorning myself;
looking in the mirror, I was dressing my hair.
- 23.3. At that moment Gora, the king of dancers, appeared:
the composure and modesty of a noble wife gave way.
- 23.4. At the sight [of Him] my body thrilled all over — says Vasudeva Ghosha: He took [me] in His embrace.⁶²

61. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." PK: vol. 1, PDF pp. 178–179 (printed pp. 167–168), section "atha punaśca rasodgāraprakārāntaramāha" — after the gaura-chandrika of Radhamohana Dasa (PK 248) — the subsection "tadrasocita-nabadvīpa-nāgarīṇām ukṭiḥ" (the words of the nagaris of Navadvīpa befitting this rasa), no. 2 (mark " २ २४३ "); raga vibhasa; MS P-R no. 1364. GPT1 — p. 203, no. 111 (raga vibhasa); GPT2 — sec. 3.2, no. 111 (catalogue: VG-026). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

62. The last line describes an embrace — sambhoga-nagari (cf. note 56); we translate it exactly. An important variant: in MS P-R the couplet is different — "At the sight my body was filled with thrills; says Vasudeva: Gora is young and fresh" (daraśe pūrala tanu pulakita mora, bāsudeba kahe gorā naola kiśora), without the embrace. MS P-R: "today with effort He gave me fortune" (23.1), "I" (āmi), "there I dressed" (tahi bāndhala, 23.2), "fled" (bhāgala, 23.3); "ka," "kha": "dressed" (bāndhala).

24. Vasu Ghosha — "hari hari gorā kothā gela..." (PK 1636)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's lament after Gaura has gone: where has Gora gone? what cruel Creator sent this grief? Her heart is wounded; she cannot weep aloud, like a thief's wife; she is a daughter of a noble family and does not leave the house, and even in dreams she cannot see Him; to whom can she tell of His beauty and His pastimes? "Why does not a thunderbolt fall on my head?" In PK it stands in the section "the lament of the devotees, and also of the nagaris of Navadvīpa, in separation from Gaurachandra." Raga suhai.*⁶³

- 24.1. (Refrain) Hari, Hari! Where has Gora gone?
What pitiless Creator has sent such grief?
- 24.2. My heart is wounded, my ribs are crumbling;
since life is leaving — what then is left of love?
- 24.3. I cannot weep aloud — I am like a thief's wife;
every moment I remember Gora's face.⁶⁴
- 24.4. I am a daughter of a noble family, I do not leave the house; even in dreams I cannot see Him — what shall I do?
- 24.5. To whom shall I tell of that sweet beauty and those pastimes?
Without Gora, my Lord, I will enter the fire.⁶⁵
- 24.6. That life holds on without Gora — this is a great shame.
Says Vasu: why does not a thunderbolt fall on my head?

63. Signature: "Vasu." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 37–38 (printed pp. 26–27), 4th shakha, section "atha śrīgauracandra-birahēṇa bhaktaṅgaṇasya tathā nabadvīpa-nāgarīṇām bilāpo yathā" (the lament of the devotees, and also of the nagaris of Navadvīpa, in separation from Gaurachandra), no. 3 (mark " ३ २७७७ "); raga suhai (P-R: sindhura); MSS P-R-Sa no. 859 and P-R no. 40/111. GPT1 — p. 388, no. 19 (raga suhai) — in the section "the lament of Shachi and Vishnupriya"; GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 19 (catalogue: VG-076, where this pada is separated from "gela gaura nā gela baliyā," GPT 5.4 no. 18 — GPT only). Separation after the sannyasa. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

64. A proverb: a thief's wife dare not mourn her husband aloud — her grief is secret. So the townswoman cannot weep openly for Gaura. MSS "ka," "kha," P-R: "she cannot" (nāre) for "I cannot"; P-R: "form" (gorā-barāṇa) for "face" (24.3); for "crumbling" P-R has khase ("falling away").

65. "I will enter the fire" — a formula of despair in separation, as in the padas on Radha. MS P-R lacks couplets 24.4–24.5; "kha": "bine" (24.6); "ka": "ei," "kha," "gha," P-R-Sa, P-R: "iha" for "eha" (24.6); P-R: "fell" (paṛila, 24.6).

25. Vasu Ghosha — "kaha sakhi jibana-upāya..." (PK 1669)

*Nagari-bhava. A lament after Gaura has gone: "Tell me, friend, how shall I live? Gora, the king of dancers, has left [me]"; her body has wasted away, how many days can she live in separation? where can she go to see His face? what has the Creator written on her forehead? to whom can she tell this grief? In PK it is the gaura-chandrika to the section on Radha's lament in external consciousness; in GPT it stands among the laments of Shachi and Vishnupriya. Raga suhai.*⁶⁶

25.1. Tell me, friend, how shall I live?

Gora, the king of dancers, has left [me].

25.2. Pining [for Him], my body has wasted away;
how many days shall I live in separation?

25.3. Gauranga's pure face — where shall I go to see it?

25.4. What has the Creator written on my forehead?
I will cut it open and see what is there on my brow!⁶⁷

25.5. My heart is wounded with love — to whom shall I tell this grief?

25.6. Says Vasu Ghosha at the last:
without Gora life cannot be kept.⁶⁸

66. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." PK: vol. 3, PDF pp. 54–55 (printed pp. 43–44), section "atha kebalam bāhya-daśāyām bilāpo yathā | tatra śrīgauracandraḥ" (lament in external consciousness; gaura-chandrika), no. 8 (mark " ୪ ୨୭୭୫ "); raga suhai (P-R: pahida and gandhara — the pada stands in it twice); MSS P-R-Sa no. 892 and P-R nos. 40/15, 43/12. GPT1 — p. 388, no. 20; GPT2 — sec. 5.4, no. 20 (catalogue: VG-117). The pada does not name the speaker; GPT assigns it to Vishnupriya's lament, PK to the words of the townswomen (according to Majumdar, nagari-bhava). Separation after the sannyasa. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section.

67. According to popular belief, the Creator (bidhi) writes a person's fate on his forehead. The Creator is Brahma, not the Lord.

68. Lit. "says Vasu Ghosha the end (nidāna)": the last word, the verdict. GPT1: "kahe bāsu ghoṣa nidāna." MS P-R: "said Vasu Ghosha" (bāsu ghoṣe kahila), "I will give up [life]" (tejiba) for "cannot be kept" (25.6); "ka," "cha," P-R-Sa: "jibana" (25.1); P-R: "goes" (yāya, 25.1), "shedding tears" (jhuri jhuri) for "pining," "became" (haila, 25.2), "in this grief I will pass" (e duḥkhe bañciba, 25.2), and instead of 25.3: "Shall I see again that pure moonlike face?" (puna ki pāiba daraśana, niramala o cāmṇda-badana).

Note to Chapter 27

Vasu Ghosha in PK — 25 nagari padas (including PK 724, which the catalogue mistakenly regarded as Krishna-lila, and PK 2176 — the nagari recension of PK 973). Of Majumdar's list, PK 2219 (a pada of Lochana Dasa signed "e dāsa locana gāya") and PK 2228 (already translated, chapter 4, no. 16) are not included. Vasu's nagari padas known only from GPT (VG-020, 022, 024, 025, 027–030, 032, 040, 168, 169, 182 and others), as well as the nagari padas of other poets in the same pallavas of PK (Nayanananda — PK 2170, 2177; Lochana Dasa — PK 2174; Govinda Dasa — PK 2168 and others), are in chapter 28.

Chapter 28. Nagari Padas — II: Vasu Ghosha (padas from GPT), Nayananda, Yadu, Murari, Balarama Dasa, Chandrashekhara, Lochana Dasa

On what nagari-bhava is, the position of the tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) and the rules of translation, see the introductory note to the section of nagari padas in chapter 27.

1. Vasu Ghosha — "ki herinu ogo sai bidagadha-rāja..." (KGC 5.1; GPT1 p. 162, no. 16)

Nagari-bhava (only in the address to a friend). "What have I seen, friend — the king of those versed in rasa!" Gaura is the wish-fulfilling tree of the devotees in the midst of Navadvipa: its branches are love, its leaves anuraga, its flowers longing, its fruit pure prema, from which rasa flows without end; the devotees, like birds and bees, taste it, the tree's shade nourishes all — only the poet is deprived through his own fault. In KGC it is the gaura-chandrika to the 5th kshanada. Raga suhai-deshag.¹

- 1.1. What have I seen, friend! — the king of those versed in rasa, the wish-fulfilling tree of the devotees in the midst of Navadvipa.²
- 1.2. Its branches are love, its leaves are anuraga, its flowers are longing, to enchant the world.
- 1.3. At all times the pure fruit of prema ripens on it; from a single fruit ever-fresh rasa flows without end.³
- 1.4. The devotees — chatakas, cuckoos, parrots, bees, swans — ceaselessly delight in it, praising its rasa.
- 1.5. The unmoving and the moving, gods and men, are nourished by its shade — only Vasudeva is deprived through the fault of his own deeds.⁴

1. Signature: "Vasudeva." KGC (Vishvanatha Chakravarti, late 17th c.; ed. 1925) — 5th kshanada ("krishna-panchami"), no. 1, "śrīgauracandrasya" (gaura-chandrika), raga suhai-deshag, p. 34 (scan PDF p. 66). GPT1 — p. 162, no. 16 (raga suhai or desharaga; scan PDF p. 421); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 16 (catalogue: VG-020). The pada is not in PK. The catalogue listed it as "GPT only"; the KGC witness was found in preparing this chapter (attribution to Vasu by KGC and GPT, A). In GPT the pada stands in the section of nagari padas (3.2), but the nagari motif in it is only the address "friend": in substance it praises Gaura in the image of the wish-fulfilling tree. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

2. "The king of those versed in rasa" (bidagadha-rāja): a vidagdha is a connoisseur, finely sensitive to rasa; so Krishna is called. "Wish-fulfilling tree" (kalpataru) — an image known from CC (Adi 9: the Lord is both the gardener and the tree of prema itself, giving its fruits to all). GPT1 notes a variant of the first line: "What shall I say, friend, of a wondrous thing!"

3. "Ever-fresh rasa" (nava rasa) can also be understood as "ninefold rasa" (all rasas in one fruit). "Longing" (ārati) is eager yearning, not the arati rite.

4. Self-abasement in the signature is a usual device of Vaishnava poets (cf. "Vasudeva is deprived" in Vasu's padas — chapter 27). Instead of this couplet GPT1 gives a variant: "the bee-devotees seek the wish-fulfilling tree [of His feet]; says Vasu: wondrous is this on earth"; instead of 1.4b — "many bhavas arose, but the hope was not fulfilled." KGC: "its shade nourishes" (poṣe), GPT: "enter its shade" (paise).

2. Vasu Ghosha — "āju mui ki dekhilum̐ gorā naṭarāya..." (GPT1 p. 164, no. 23; GCd, no. 12)

Nagari-bhava. "What have I seen today — Gora, the king of dancers!" The Creator made Him, putting in so much rasa; His body surpasses gold, His face a hundred moons, His eyes steal the hearts of women; on the bank of the Suradhuni Gorachand shines. Raga dhanashi.⁵

2.1. What have I seen today — Gora, the king of dancers!

Gora's boundless glory cannot be told.

2.2. How did the Creator fashion Him, putting in so much rasa!

Gora's body ripples with radiance, surpassing gold.

2.3. His lotus face is lovelier than hundreds of moons;

the pair of His eyes steals the hearts of women.⁶

2.4. Says Vasudeva Ghosha, lost in rapture:

on the bank of the Suradhuni Gorachand shines.

5. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." GPT1 — p. 164, no. 23 (raga dhanashi; scan PDF p. 423); GPT2 — sect. 3.2 (in the same series, after VG-025). The catalogue had no row for it (new row: VG-184). Witness: the Gita-chandrodaya of Narahari Chakravarti (GCd; ed. 1948, p. 72, gaura-chandrikas to Radha's purvaraga, no. 12, raga suhai) — with the same signature; there it stands among Vasu's nagari padas known from PK (PK 2169, 28, 2172, 899, 777 — chapter 27, nos. 9, 15, 11, 17, 16). The pada is not in PK or KGC; attribution to Vasu by GPT and GCd (B). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

6. "Steal the hearts of women" is a formula of the poetics of beauty, as in the padas on Krishna (cf. chapter 27, note 6). GCd: "how many moons," "ripples" (dharadhara), in 2.4 — "Gora has lit up the bank of the Suradhuni."

3. Vasu Ghosha — "āju mui ki pekhalum⁷ gaurāṅga sundara..." (GPT1 p. 164, no. 24)

*Nagari-bhava. "What have I seen today — the beautiful Gauranga: in the three worlds there is no such nagara!" Noble wives are enchanted by His form, trees thrill hearing of His virtues, stones melt, beasts and birds weep, the townswomen cannot hold their hearts steady, gods, siddhas and sages are in turmoil: Gora is Madana-mohana. Raga dhanashi.*⁷

3.1. What have I seen today — the beautiful Gauranga!

In these three worlds there is no such nagara.⁸

3.2. All the noble wives are enchanted, seeing His form; trees and creepers thrill, hearing of His virtues.

3.3. Stones melt and flow, beasts and birds weep;

all the women of the town cannot hold their hearts steady.

3.4. The gods, siddhas and sages are in turmoil of heart.

Says Vasudeva: Gora is Madana-mohana.⁹

7. Signature: "Vasudeva." GPT1 — p. 164, no. 24 (raga dhanashi; scan PDF p. 423); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 24 (catalogue: VG-182). The pada is not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). It is close to Vasu's PK 2151 (chapter 27, no. 1: "birds, beasts and trees weep hearing of His virtues; noble wives cannot hold their hearts steady"), but it is a different text. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

8. "Nagara" (nāgara) — townsman, gallant, in poetry the beloved (introductory note); so a townswoman speaks of the young Gaura.

9. Madana-mohana — "the enchanter of the god of love himself," a name of Krishna: the Lord's beauty conquers even Kamadeva. "Cannot hold their hearts steady" (lit. "bind the breast") is a general formula of beauty (chapter 27, note 2). GPT1: "nagarī" — a misprint for "nāgarī" (GPT2).

4. Vasu Ghosha — "sajani lo gorārūpa janu kāmčā sonā..." (GPT1 pp. 162–163, no. 19)

Nagari-bhava. "Friend, Gora's form is like pure gold: seeing it, a woman cannot stay at home." His form has fixed itself in her eyes, wherever she looks there is Gora; He seems familiar, yet she cannot make out who He is. The poet answers: "Townswoman, that is the stealer of the gopis' hearts!" Raga

suhai.¹⁰

- 4.1. Friend, Gora's form is like pure gold:
seeing it, a woman cannot stay at home.
- 4.2. Curved brows, slanting eyes — by His glance you know Him; give your heart to that form, friend, and no family honour remains.¹¹
- 4.3. The form has fixed itself in my eyes — I cannot forget it:
wherever I look, I see only that Gora.
- 4.4. He seems familiar, so familiar, yet I cannot make out who He is.
Says Vasu: townswoman, that is the stealer of the gopis' hearts!¹²

10. Signature: "Vasu." GPT1 — pp. 162–163, no. 19 (raga suhai; scan PDF pp. 421–422); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 19 (catalogue: VG-022). The pada is not in PK, KGC, PS or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). The language is late and colloquial ("legeche," "cinate," "śudhui"), which, like the absence of early witnesses, tells against Vasu's authorship (cf. Majumdar's argument on the unreliability of GPT — introductory note to the section). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

11. "No family honour remains" is a nagari motif (a woman ready to disregard her family's honour for Gaura), transferred from the padas on Radha and Krishna; translated as in the original (introductory note, rule 2).

12. The poet's answer reveals what the townswoman cannot grasp: Gora is Krishna Himself, "the stealer of the gopis' hearts," and that is why He seems familiar to her. This is a tenet of gaura-tattva (Gaura is Krishna who has taken Radha's bhava and luster; CC Adi 1.5); it does not make Gaura the hero of a love play in Navadvipa (introductory note). GPT2: "e" ("this") instead of "ai".

5. Vasu Ghosha — "nirabadhi gorārūpa dekhi..." (GPT1 p. 164, no. 25)

*Nagari-bhava. "Ceaselessly I see Gora's form — streams flow from my eyes": night and day the townswoman knows nothing, the jewel of brahmanas has entered her inmost heart; not seeing Gorachand's face, she cannot hold on to life. Raga dhanashi.*¹³

- 5.1. Ceaselessly I see Gora's form — from both my eyes it streams like a waterfall.
- 5.2. What shall I say? Where is my remedy?
My life will not stay in me.
- 5.3. Night and day I know nothing:
the jewel of brahmanas has entered my inmost heart.¹⁴
- 5.4. Not seeing Gorachand's face — says Vasu — the breast breaks.

13. Signature: "Vasu." GPT1 — p. 164, no. 25 (raga dhanashi; scan PDF p. 423); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, in the same series (the number is unclear in the OCR). The catalogue had no row for it (new row: VG-185). The pada is not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

14. "The jewel of brahmanas" (dvijamaṇi) — the young Gaura, best of brahmanas (cf. chapter 27, note 8).

6. Vasu Ghosha — "dekhiyā āyalum̐ gorācām̐de..." (GPT1 p. 164, no. 26)

*Nagari-bhava. "I have seen Gorachand — and since then my soul weeps": not seeing His moon-face, the townswoman finds no rest, household work falls from her hands; Gauranga's glory has no limit. Raga dhanashi.*¹⁵

- 6.1. I came back having seen Gorachand — and since then my soul weeps.
- 6.2. My heart is restless, finds no peace, when I do not see that moon-face.

6.3. My mind will not stay on household work when I do not see Gaura's deeds.

6.4. Matchless is Gauranga's glory:
Vasudeva finds no limit to it.¹⁶

15. Signature: "Vasudeva." GPT1 — p. 164, no. 26 (raga dhanashi; scan PDF p. 423); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, in the same series. The catalogue had no row for it (new row: VG-186). The pada is not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

16. The last couplet passes from the townswoman's words to the poet's praise: Gaura's glory has no limit (cf. chapter 27, no. 1: "in the three worlds there is none who could set a limit to His beauty").

7. Vasu Ghosha — "so bahuballabha gorā jagatera manacorā..." (GPT1 pp. 163–164, no. 22)

*Nagari-bhava. "Gora is beloved of many, He steals the hearts of all the world — why then should I want Him to be mine alone? Yet whose heart can bear the sharing!" The townswoman gives family, honour, life and youth for the treasure that is Gora; without Him she will enter the waters of the Suradhuni. Raga vibhasa.*¹⁷

7.1. He is Gora, beloved of many, the stealer of all the world's hearts — why then do I want Him to be mine alone?
But say, whose heart could give such a treasure to another?
The sharing is unbearable to see.¹⁸

7.2. (Refrain) Friend, I will tell you my heart's secret:
not seeing Gauranga's face, I feel my breast breaking — who has stolen the stealer of hearts?

7.3. Take my family, take my honour, take my virtue, take my life, take my life and my youth — give me the treasure, Gora, for whom I ceaselessly long:
He is my whole wealth.

7.4. Or else I will enter the waters of the Suradhuni and give up my life:
Gora is the life of my life.
Says Vasudeva Ghosha: that treasure is not given away — every moment, every instant I am bereft of it.¹⁹

17. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." GPT1 — pp. 163–164, no. 22 (raga vibhasa; scan PDF pp. 422–423); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 22 (catalogue: VG-025). The pada is not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

18. "Beloved of many" (bahuballabha) is an epithet of Krishna, the beloved of all the gopis; the jealousy of a heroine who will not share her beloved is a motif of the padas on Radha, transferred to a townswoman of Nadia. That Gaura belongs to all (He gave prema to the whole world) is true; but Gaura's love for the world is mercy, not the love play of a nagara (introductory note). GPT2: "You, beloved of many, Gora" (to).

19. The signature line is ambiguous: "that treasure is not given away" — the poet confirms that Gora cannot be yielded; "every moment I am bereft" (hai hārā) we take as unceasing separation (cf. chapter 27, note 52); it can also be read "I lose myself." "I will enter the waters of the Suradhuni," "take my family, honour..." are nagari formulas, translated as in the original.

8. Vasu Ghosha — "daṇḍe daṇḍe tile tile gorācāmda nā dekhile..." (GPT1 p. 296, no. 14)

Nagari-bhava. "If I do not see Gorachand every moment, I live as one dead": the townswoman wants to keep His golden form always in her heart; not seeing Him for an instant, she loses her composure; she will set her family's honour adrift on the Suradhuni, burn her shame and gaze her fill at Gauranga.

*Raga suhai.*²⁰

8.1. If every moment, every instant I do not see Gorachand,
I live as though dead at heart.
Ceaselessly I long to keep His golden-lustred form within my heart.

8.2. I do not see Him for a moment — my ribs give way,
I cannot keep my composure.
With the brush of anuraga my heart is painted within and without —
I do not know how much I owe Him.²¹

8.3. I will go to the waters of the Suradhuni and set my family adrift,
I will set fire to my shame;
I will place Gauranga before me and gaze my fill — Vasu wants no other work.²²

20. Signature: "Vasu." GPT1 — p. 296, no. 14 (raga suhai; scan PDF p. 555), in the section of gaura-chandrikas to purvaraga and anuraga (4.4); GPT2 — sect. 4.4, no. 14 (catalogue: VG-040). Not in PK, KGC or GCd. According to the catalogue, in the late collection Padamrita-madhuri (vol. 1, pp. 469–470; an edition under copyright, its text is not used) the same pada bears the signature of Murari Gupta and has an extra couplet: the attribution is disputed (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

21. The line is obscure: "anurāgera tuli diye antara bāhira hiye, nā jāni tāra kata dhāra dhāri" — lit. "with the brush of anuraga — the inside and outside of the heart; I do not know how much debt I hold to Him." We understand: love has coloured the whole heart, and the townswoman does not know how to repay this gift. The translation is conjectural.

22. "Set my family adrift," "set fire to my shame" are formulas of renouncing family honour for love (from the padas on Radha); translated as in the original (introductory note, rule 2).

9. Vasu Ghosha — "āpana jāni banāyalum[†] beśa..." (GPT1 p. 305, no. 18)

Nagari-bhava (vasaka-sajja — "she who has prepared for the meeting"). The townswoman, regarding Gaura as her own, adorns herself for His coming: she binds her hair, puts on a sandal tilaka, a pearl necklace, draws designs in musk on her breast; love for Gaura cannot be told. *Raga dhanashi.*²³

9.1. Regarding Him as my own, I dressed myself:
carefully I bound my hair in a loose knot.

9.2. I put a sandal tilaka on my forehead,
I put a pearl necklace round my neck.

9.3. I drew designs in musk on my breast,
I adorned myself all over, limb by limb.²⁴

9.4. Love for Gaura cannot be told:
Vasudeva Ghosha finds no end to this rasa.²⁵

23. Signature: "Vasudeva Ghosha." GPT1 — p. 305, no. 18 (raga dhanashi; scan PDF p. 564), in the section of gaura-chandrikas to abhisara, rasodgara and utkanthita (4.5), next to a pada on vasaka-sajja (no. 19); GPT2 — sect. 4.5, no. 18 (catalogue: VG-168). Not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

24. The adornment of the vasaka-sajja (the heroine who adorns herself for her beloved's coming) is a canon of the padas on Radha; designs in musk on the breast (kuca) are part of that canon. Translated exactly, with nothing added. The Vrajabuli forms "deyala," "caṇhāyala," "kayala" can also be 3rd person ("He put..."); but the pada is framed by "I dressed myself... I adorned myself" (banāyalum[†]), and it speaks of the heroine's own adornment.

25. Lit. "Gaura's love (leha) cannot be told"; we understand it as the townswoman's love for Gaura. Gaura Himself, according to CC, is in the bhava of Radha, tasting Her love; the tradition does not accept depicting Him as the beloved of the townswomen (introductory note).

10. Vasu Ghosha — "niśi-parabhāte basi āṅgināte..." (GPT1 p. 163, no. 21)

*Nagari-bhava (khandita — "the deceived"). At daybreak the townswoman sits in the courtyard with a cheerless face: "Friend, who has done this? Gora, the Creator's finest work — another has got Him!" She had prepared the bed, did not sleep all night, went out of the door a hundred times; when Gauranga comes she will ask: in whose house did He spend the night? Raga vibhasa-dashakushi.*²⁶

10.1. At daybreak I sit in the courtyard with a cheerless face:
such conduct from Gaurangachand I never knew.

10.2. (Refrain) Friend, who has done this?
Gora, the treasury of virtues, the utmost of the Creator's work — she has got Him.²⁷

10.3. Sprinkling musk and sandal, stringing flower garlands,
I spread the bed on a splendid couch: here Shachi's boy will lie.

10.4. Ah, friend, the whole night I sat awake till dawn; three times an instant, a hundred times a danda I went out of the house.

10.5. Says Vasu Ghosha: when Gauranga comes I will ask Him at once:
"You did not come here — where did You spend the night, in whose house were You?"²⁸

26. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." GPT1 — p. 163, no. 21 (raga vibhasa-dashakushi; scan PDF p. 422); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 21 (catalogue: VG-024). The pada is not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

27. "The utmost of the Creator's work" (bidhira abadhi) — the most perfect thing the Creator could make (a poetic formula; Gaura is not created — He is the Lord Himself). "She has got Him" — another woman: the khandita heroine suspects a rival.

28. The pada is wholly transferred from the canon of padas on Radha as khandita: Krishna has spent the night with another gopi and comes at dawn bearing the marks of the meeting. Such a plot is inapplicable to Gaura: Vrindavana Dasa says plainly that in Navadvipa the Lord did not look at women (CB, Adi-khanda; introductory note) — which is why the townswoman waits for Him all night in vain. Translated faithfully to the author, but this is a poetic fiction of the late layer of GPT, not a lila; the tradition does not accept such a depiction of Gaura (introductory note). Cf. the night of vain waiting in Vasu's padas from PK (chapter 27, nos. 19, 20).

11. Vasu Ghosha — "kena māna karinu lo sai..." (GPT1 p. 313, no. 20)

*Nagari-bhava (mana — offended pride and repentance). "Why did I take offence, friend? Where has Gora gone?" The townswoman herself pushed Gaurahari away, and now reproaches her friends for not holding Him back: home and body are empty, Gaura has turned away. The poet consoles her: the hope will be fulfilled. Raga suhai.*²⁹

11.1. Why did I take offence, friend?
Where has Gora, the treasury of virtues, gone?

11.2. If I have abandoned my beloved, why then does my life not leave me?

11.3. I did abandon Gaurahari — but why did you not hold Him back?

11.4. Now home and body are both empty:
Gaura has turned away.

11.5. Why now these vain sighs?
Says Vasu: the hope will be fulfilled.³⁰

29. Signature: "Vasu." GPT1 — p. 313, no. 20 (raga suhai; scan PDF p. 572), in the section of gaura-chandrikas to khandita and mana (4.6); GPT2 — sect. 4.6, no. 20 (catalogue: VG-169; the first line according to the scan is "kena māna karinu," not "karisa"). Not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

30. The motif of the kalahantarita — the heroine who in offended pride (mana) has pushed her beloved away and at once repents — is taken from the padas on Radha and Krishna. "Beloved" (bam̐dhuyā) is a word of the same padas. "Gaura has turned away" (baimukha) — as in Vasu's padas from PK (chapter 27, no. 20: "the king of dancers has turned away from me"), here what is unwittingly reflected is that the Lord did not respond to such feelings (introductory note).

12. Vasu Ghosha — "śayana-mandire hāma śutiyā āchilā..." (GPT1 p. 203, no. 113)

*Nagari-bhava (a dream). "I was lying in my bedchamber, and tonight in a dream I saw Gauranga": since then her soul burns, Gora's form stands before her day and night, her garment is soaked with tears, her body has lost its strength. Raga bhupala.*³¹

12.1. I was lying in my bedchamber — and tonight in a dream I saw Gauranga.

12.2. Since then my soul burns — listen, friend:

Gora's form comes to my mind day and night.

12.3. I keep crying "Gora, Gora" — what has become of my heart!

My garment is soaked with my tears.

12.4. My body is languid and limp, it will not hold up;

recalling this feeling for Gora, Vasu Ghosha sings.³²

31. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." GPT1 — p. 203, no. 113 (raga bhupala; scan PDF p. 462), among the padas on the townswomen's dreams (nos. 111–115: Vasu's PK 249 and PK 724 — chapter 27, nos. 23, 22; VG-027, VG-029 — nos. 13, 14 of this chapter); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 113 (catalogue: VG-028). Not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

32. "Feeling for Gora" (gorā-bhāba) can also be read as "Gora's bhava," i.e. the feeling He awakens. The verb forms "āchilā," "dekhilā" are Old Bengali first-person forms ("I was lying," "I saw").

13. Vasu Ghosha (according to Majumdar, not Vasu) — "niśi śeṣe chinu ghumera ghore..." (GPT1 p. 203, no. 112)

*Nagari-bhava (a dream; sambhoga). The townswoman relates: at the end of the night, deep in sleep, "Gaura the nagara" embraced and kissed her; sleep broke, the nagara went away, and coming to her senses she left the bedchamber in shame. According to Majumdar, a reworking of a well-known pada on Krishna, ascribed to Vasu. Raga vibhasa.*³³

13.1. At the end of the night I was deep in sleep —

Gaura the nagara embraced me.

13.2. He kissed me on the cheek, with His lips He drank the nectar of my lips.³⁴

13.3. Sleep broke, the nagara went away;

I had been senseless — and I came to my senses.

13.4. Out of shame I left the bedchamber.

Says Vasu: your love is a deceit.³⁵

33. Signature: "Vasu." GPT1 — p. 203, no. 112 (raga vibhasa; scan PDF p. 462); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 112 (p. 131; catalogue: VG-027). Not in PK, KGC or GCd. Majumdar explicitly names this pada (from GPT2, p. 131) as a reworking of a well-known pada of Krishna-lila, ascribed to Vasu to lend "antiquity" to sambhoga-nagari-bhava; because of such padas he considers GPT unreliable for Vasu Ghosha and Narahari Sarakara. Hence the authority is D (a forgery according to Majumdar). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

34. Sambhoga (a love meeting) with Gaura, and in such words, is what even Majumdar considers incompatible with the genuine padas of the contemporaries (in Narahari Sarakara, by his criteria, "there is no sambhoga"), and the tradition rejects it as a distortion (Vrindavana Dasa: in Navadvipa the Lord did not look at women; Bhaktisiddhanta: "gaura-nagari" is an apasampradaya; introductory note). Translated exactly, with nothing added, for the completeness of the corpus; this is not a lila of the Lord but a late reworking of a pada on Krishna.

35. "Your love is a deceit" (tuyā kapaṭa leha): a reproach, apparently, to the "nagara" who left at dawn (in the original pada — to Krishna); it can also be taken as the poet's words to the heroine.

14. Vasu Ghosha — "ājuka prema kahane nāhi yāya..." (GPT1 p. 204, no. 115)

*Nagari-bhava (telling of a meeting). "Today's love cannot be told": the townswoman lay on the bed she had spread — and heard the jingling of anklets: Gauranga, the king of dancers, had come; she hid under her veil, and the skilful nagara searched for her with His eyes; Gora found great joy. Raga dhanashi.*³⁶

14.1. Today's love cannot be told:

I lay down, having spread the bed.

14.2. Runu-jhunu, runu-jhunu — the anklets jingle on His feet:

I saw Gauranga, the finest king of dancers.

14.3. I hid under the end of my sari, covering myself with the veil; the skilful nagara looks about on all sides.

14.4. Great joy did Gora, the king of dancers, find.

Says Vasudeva: the rasa cannot be told.³⁷

36. Signature: "Vasudeva." GPT1 — p. 204, no. 115 (raga dhanashi; scan PDF p. 463), among the padas on the townswomen's dreams and meetings (nos. 111–115); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 115 (catalogue: VG-029). Not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

37. The pada is a telling of a meeting (rasodgara), like Vasu's PK 249 (chapter 27, no. 23, note 61): the plot is taken from the padas on Radha and Krishna. Majumdar considers the padas of sambhoga with Gaura known only from GPT to be later ascriptions; the tradition rejects such a depiction of Gaura (introductory note; cf. note 34). Translated exactly, with nothing added. The Lord's "joy" (sukha) is in truth the joy of prema and kirtana, not worldly love.

15. Vasu Ghosha — "gela gaura nā gela baliyā..." (GPT1 p. 388, no. 18)

*Nagari-bhava (by its place in the section; the speaker is probably Vishnupriya — then this is a lament of separation, not nagari-bhava). Lament after the sannayasa. "Gaura has gone without saying He was going — He has cast me, unfortunate, adrift on a shoreless sea": cruel Fate did not let the tree grow, it broke the sprout; to whom has it given Gauranga? Who will bear the burden of youth — in the fire of separation there is nothing left but to burn. The speaker is not named: in GPT the pada stands among Vishnupriya's laments. Raga karuna.*³⁸

15.1. (Refrain) Gaura has gone without saying, "I am going" —

He has cast me, an unfortunate woman, adrift on a shoreless sea.

15.2. Alas, cruel Fate, pitiless, heartless!

You did not let the tree grow — you broke the sprout.³⁹

15.3. Alas, cruel Fate, what enmity you have wrought!

To whom have you given my Gauranga, my very life?

15.4. Who now will bear the burden of my youth?

Burning in the fire of separation, I shall be reduced to ashes.

15.5. Says Vasu Ghosha: to whom else shall I tell my grief?

Without Gorachand I will keep my life no longer.

38. Signature: "Vasu Ghosha." GPT1 — p. 388, no. 18 (raga karuna; scan PDF p. 647), in the section of the laments of Shachi and Vishnupriya (5.4), before Vasu's PK 1636 and PK 1669 (chapter 27, nos. 24, 25); GPT2 — sect. 5.4, no. 18. Not in PK, KGC or GCd; attribution to Vasu by GPT only (C). In the catalogue its first line stood in row VG-076 together with PK 1636 (they are different padas; see chapter 27, note 63); now it has a separate row, VG-187. The speaker is not named:

39. "Did not let the tree grow, broke the sprout" — an image of love (or of married life) cut off at its very beginning. Fate (bidhi) is the arbiter of destiny, the Creator, not the Lord (cf. chapter 27, note 53). The Lord's going into sannyasa is His will and lila (CB, CC), not the cruelty of fate: only the grief of those left behind speaks so.

- 17.3. Sandal on every limb, a fresh forest garland on His neck;
how many flower-arrows fly — in swarms of bees!⁴⁶
- 17.4. Absorbed in bhava, His thrill knows no end;
from eyes reddened with anuraga tears flow.
- 17.5. My soul is tossed this way and that, I cannot hold my heart:
I so long to run up and touch Him.⁴⁷
- 17.6. The noble wives of Nadia have lost both family and shame — but before everyone they dare not even sigh.
- 17.7. Says Nayananda: there is a way — go to the bank of the Suradhuni: there you will see Gora Raya.

44. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 260 (printed p. 249), 19th pallava, no. 10 (mark " ୧୦ ୧୨୨୨ "); raga "tathā rāga" (= shri, as for PK 2174); MS P-R-Sa no. 2285. GPT1 — p. 165, no. 28 (raga shri); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 28 (catalogue: NN-010). Signature in PK — A. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

45. "Golden" (pīta, lit. "yellow"): Gaura's golden form; so also GPT1. The red cord (ḍora) is the dancer's waist-string.

46. Bees flying to the garland are Kamadeva's "flower-arrows" (phulaśara): an image of beauty piercing hearts.

47. The longing "to run up and touch" is a nagari motif; translated as in the original. Gaura Himself is here in kirtana, in the ecstasy of prema (thrill, tears, 17.4); the townswomen are only onlookers (cf. Nayananda's PK 2179 — chapter 10, no. 16).

18. Nayananda (signature in GPT only) — "dekha jība aparūpa gaurāṅgacāndera mukha..." (PK 291; GPT1 p. 166, no. 31)

*Nagari-bhava (only in the GPT recension). Gaura's form. "Look, O souls — the wondrous face of Gaurangachand: how many streams flow from His eyes!" Hearing of His virtues, stone turns to water, the parrot weeps in its cage, and a noble wife who loves Hari's name weeps over Him in solitude. According to GPT, Gaura has conquered the world by the rasa of love, even yavanas and chandalas were delivered — only the poet's doubt has not gone. Raga malar.*⁴⁸

- 18.1. Look, O souls — the wondrous face of Gaurangachand:
how many streams flow from His eyes!
Kunda and karavira strung row upon row —
a charming garland swings on His neck.⁴⁹
- 18.2. Hearing of Gauranga's virtues, stone turns to water, the parrot weeps in its cage;
the noble wife of a worthy family, loving Hari's name, sits in solitude and weeps over His virtues.
- 18.3. By the rasa of love for Gauranga He has conquered the world — even yavanas and chandalas were delivered;
the wretched Nayananda's doubt of mind has not gone —
a heavy spear remains in his heart.⁵⁰

48. PK: vol. 1, PDF p. 202 (printed p. 191), 3rd pallava, section "kebala rūpānurāga" (rupanuraga — gaura-chandrikas), no. 4 (mark " ୪ ୧୧୧ "), right after PK 290 (= Nayananda's PK 787, no. 19); raga malar; in PK only 18.1–18.2, without signature. GPT1 — p. 166, no. 31 (raga malar; scan PDF p. 425) — with a third couplet and the signature "pāmara nayanānanda"; GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 31 (catalogue: NN-013, "GPT only"; the PK number was found in preparing this chapter). Text 18.1–18.2 follows PK, 18.3 GPT1. Attribution to Nayananda by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

49. PK: "look, O souls" (dekha jība) — an address to all; GPT1: "look, friend" (dekha sai) — a townswoman's words. In the PK recension there is no nagari motif at all, apart from the noble wife weeping over Gauranga (18.2) — and she loves Hari's name. GPT1: "a garland that enchants the sages" (munimanoharā).

50. "Yavanas and chandalas" — Muslims and outcastes: Gaura delivers all without distinction (cf. chapter 9, no. 1). "Doubt of mind" and "a spear in the heart" are the poet's self-abasement (cf. note 4).

19. Nayananda — "gaurāṅga-lābaṇya rūpe ki kahiba eka mukhe..." (PK 787 = PK 290)

Nagari-bhava. "How can one mouth tell of Gauranga's lovely form!" His smile and glance leave her no life; the Creator fashioned Him in the mould of beauty, and her heart is in turmoil. The heroine laments: the Creator made her a daughter of a family, she is not free; family, shame and fear are gone, she burns in the fire of her heart, but can tell no one. The poet: "Listen, charming one — you are caught in the snare of love for Gauranga." Raga dhanashi.⁵¹

19.1. How can one mouth tell of Gauranga's lovely form — and besides, the freshness of a flower!
The smile of the moon-face — I feel, friend, I shall not live — and besides, the radiant glance!⁵²

19.2. (Refrain) In the mould of beauty the Creator fashioned Him!
My heart feels strange, everything unsettles me,
the little doll of my soul weeps.⁵³

19.3. What shall I say to the Creator? He made me a daughter of a family, and besides I am not free.
Gone are family, shame and fear; life will not stay —
I burn and perish in the fire of my heart.

19.4. To whom shall I tell it? Once told, love is broken; my heart cannot keep its composure.
The word of Nayananda: listen, listen, charming one — you are caught in the snare of love for Gauranga.⁵⁴

51. Signature: "Nayananda." PK 787: vol. 2, PDF p. 124 (printed p. 111), 3rd shakha, 10th pallava, section "rūpānurāga" (rupanuraga), "punashcha prakarantaram" — a gaura-chandrika of another kind, no. 11 (mark " ১১ ৭৮৭ "); raga dhanashi; MS P-R-Sa no. 1277. The same pada is PK 290 (vol. 1, PDF pp. 201–202, printed pp. 190–191, 3rd pallava, "kebala rūpānurāga"; a duplicate with minor variants). GPT1 — p. 166, no. 30 (raga dhanashi-dharatala); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 30 (catalogue: NN-012). Signature in PK — A. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

52. "The freshness of a flower" (phulera kām̐cani) — the meaning of "kām̐cani" is uncertain (from kām̐cā, "fresh, young"?); MSS "ka"—"cha" and GPT1: "kulera kām̐cani" (? "...of the family"). PK 290 and GPT1: "loving glance" (piriti-cāhani) instead of "radiant."

53. "The little doll of my soul" (parāṇa-putali) — the inmost soul, the "pupil" of life. PK 290 and GPT1: "Friend, in what shapes has the Creator fashioned Him!"

54. "Charming one" (binodinī) is usually a name of Radha; here the poet addresses the heroine (her name is not given; pronouns in lower case). MS "kha" and GPT1: "lady" (ṭhākuraṇī). In PK the pada stands as a gaura-chandrika to Radha's rupanuraga: its frame — a love that cannot be revealed, "a daughter of a family," "not free" — is taken from the padas on Radha. MS P-R-Sa: "life will not go out" (bāhirābāra), "in the fire of love" (prema anale).

20. Nayananda — "kariba ki muṇi kariba ki..." (PK 694)

Nagari-bhava (a dream). "What shall I do? Secretly I am caught in love for Gauranga": in a dream Gorachand's face appeared to her — long curling hair, eyes full of rasa; she, the daughter of a worthy family and the daughter-in-law of a worthy family, a faithful wife, was lying in her husband's arms — and the waters of love for Gora swept all away. The poet: how will you now restrain your heart? In PK, a gaura-chandrika to the section "telling of a meeting in a dream." Raga vibhasa.⁵⁵

- 20.1. (Refrain) What shall I do, what shall I do?
Secretly I am caught in love for Gauranga.
- 20.2. Long, long curling hair, two eyes full of rasa;
I see a body as if anointed with beauty, virtue and love.
- 20.3. Suddenly it came and seized my breast:
in a dream I saw Gorachand's face.⁵⁶
- 20.4. In my father's family I am the daughter of the house, in my father-in-law's family I am the daughter-in-law of the house.
- 20.5. I, a faithful wife, was lying in my husband's arms — and the waters of love for Gora swept all away.⁵⁷
- 20.6. Says Nayananda: I have understood this — how will you now restrain your heart?

55. Signature: "Nayananda." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 77 (printed p. 64), 3rd shakha, section "atha svapnarasodgārah| śrīgauracandraḥ" (gaura-chandrika to the telling of a meeting in a dream), no. 31 (mark " ৩১ ৬৯৪ "); raga vibhasa; MSS P-R-Sa no. 1169 and P-R no. 10/39. GPT1 — pp. 165–166, no. 29 (raga vibhasa); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 29 (catalogue: NN-011). Signature in PK — A (MS P-R has no signature). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

56. The subject is not named: "it came and seized my breast" we take as the sudden shock of the dream (in Bengali "buka dharā" — "the heart is gripped"); it can also be read "[He] came and embraced me." MS P-R puts this couplet before the signature; MS P-R: instead of 20.1b — "I have fallen into the bhava of Gaurangachand."

57. The sharpest nagari motif in Nayananda's padas: a married woman, "a faithful wife," gives herself in a dream to love for Gaura. This is a transfer of the plot of the padas on Radha (the parakiya-rasa of Vraja) to a townswoman of Nadia; translated exactly, with nothing added. The tradition rejects such a depiction of Gaura (introductory note). MS P-R: "swept away by tears" (nayanera jale).

21. Yadu — "kaha nā upāya sakhi kaha nā upāya..." (PK 703)

Nagari-bhava. "Do tell me, friend, what to do: Gora Raya ceaselessly rises in my heart!" Love for Gorachand cannot be forgotten, yet Fate has made her a noble wife; His sweet speech is a stream of nectar, His form steals the hearts of faithful wives; the poet: "I have sold myself to love for Gora for this whole life." In PK, a gaura-chandrika to the section "anuraga in the telling of a meeting." Raga suhai.⁵⁸

- 21.1. Do tell me, friend, what to do, tell me what to do:
ceaselessly Gora Raya rises in my heart.
- 21.2. Love for Gorachand cannot be forgotten — what can I do? Fate has made me a noble wife.
- 21.3. What sweet speech — a stream of nectar!
What an enchanting form — it steals the hearts of faithful wives!⁵⁹
- 21.4. Says Yadu: what can I say of all Gora's virtues?
I have sold myself to love for Gora for this whole life.⁶⁰

58. Signature: "Yadu." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 82 (printed p. 69), 3rd shakha, 6th pallava, section "rasodgārānūrāgaḥ| prakārāntaraṃ| tatra gauracandraḥ" (anuraga in the telling of a meeting — of another kind; here a gaura-chandrika), no. 40 (mark " ৪০ ৭০৩ "); raga suhai; MS P-R-Sa no. 1176. Not found in GPT, KGC or BR (catalogue: YD-020; found in the full collation of PK, chapter 16, and deferred to the nagari padas). The signature "yadu": Yadunatha Dasa (Kavichandra) or Yadunandana — not established (as with the "Yadu" padas PK 2209, 2182 — chapter 16, note 1); C. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

59. "Noble wife" (kulabati), "faithful wives" (sati) — a nagari motif (cf. chapter 27, note 2): Gaura's beauty is such that even the chaste lose their peace — a formula as in the padas on Krishna. MS P-R-Sa: "sweet form" (madhura) instead of "enchanting."

60. In the signature the poet speaks of himself: "I have sold myself to love for Gora" — no longer as a townswoman, but as a devotee who has given himself to Gaura. MS "kha": "what can I say" (ki kahiba) instead of "what can I do" (21.2).

22. Yadu — "gorācāṁḍe dekhiyā ki hailum..." (PK 859; GPT1 p. 169, no. 38)

*Nagari-bhava (reproaching the elders). "What has become of me since I saw Gorachand! I am caught in the snare of secret love": at home she cannot bear the torment from the elders, her mother-in-law always scolds her because, remembering Gora's form, she goes mad; she cannot stay at home. The poet: "Leave Gora — He will not leave you." In PK, a gaura-chandrika to the section "reproaches to the elders." Raga varadi.*⁶¹

22.1. What has become of me since I saw Gorachand!

I have been caught in the snare of secret love.

22.2. At home I cannot bear the torment from the elders:

the Creator made me a weak woman, and a family woman besides.

22.3. When Gora's form comes to mind, I go mad;

seeing it, my mother-in-law always scolds me.

22.4. I could not stay at home — what am I to do?

Says Yadu: leave Gora Raya — He will not leave you.⁶²

61. Signature: "Yadu." PK: vol. 2, PDF p. 153 (printed p. 140), 3rd shakha, section "gurugaṇādīn prati ākṣepo yathā śrīgauracandraḥ" (reproaches to the elders; gaura-chandrika), no. 61 (mark " ୬୯୩ "); raga varadi; MS P-R-Sa no. 1349. GPT1 — p. 169, no. 38 (raga varadi); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 38. Catalogue correction: row YD-014 listed the pada as "GPT only"; it is PK 859 (found in preparing this chapter). The signature "Yadu" — who exactly is not established (cf. note 58); C. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

62. "Leave — He will not leave" (chāṛile nā chāre): even if she tries to forget Gora, He will not go out of her heart. MS P-R-Sa: "cannot be left" (chāṛite) — "Gora Raya cannot be left"; GPT1: "I shall go mad" (haibe pāgalī). MSS "gha," P-R-Sa: "dei" instead of "pāre" ("heaps abuse" — the same sense). The mother-in-law and the elders are figures of the padas on Radha (Jatila, Kutila); here in the domestic life of Nadia.

23. Murari Gupta (signature in GPT only) — "sakhi he kena gorā niṭhurāi mohe..." (GPT1 p. 172, no. 48)

*Nagari-bhava. "Friend, why is Gora cruel to me? To the world He showed mercy, giving the shade of His feet — but me, unfortunate, He has passed over." The woman who gave her life to love for Gaura finds no peace: had she known before, she would not have loved; what joy is there in love if He does not look back? The poet answers: love for Gauranga burns; give up family honour, take shelter at His feet — then you will attain Shachi's son. Raga suhai.*⁶³

23.1. (Refrain) Friend, why is Gora cruel to me?

To the world He showed mercy, giving the shade of His feet — but me, unfortunate, He has passed over: tell me, why?⁶⁴

23.2. I gave my life to love for Gaura — my soul is restless,

I cannot stay calmly at home.

Had I known before, I would not have loved,

I would not have offered my life to another of my own accord.

23.3. He for whom I weep — if He does not turn to look, what joy is there in such love?

The chataka begs the cloud for water — and if a thunderbolt is hurled at it, will its breast not burst?⁶⁵

23.4. Says Murari Gupta: love is no easy thing, least of all the burning of love for Gauranga.
 Give up all family honour, take shelter at His feet — then you will attain Shachi's son.⁶⁶

63. Signature: "Murari Gupta." GPT1 — p. 172, no. 48 (raga suhai; scan PDF p. 431), right after PK 751 with the same signature (GPT1 no. 47 — Radha's anuraga, without Gaura; catalogue: MU-002); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 48 (catalogue: MU-010). Not in PK, KGC or BR. Majumdar considers most Bengali padas signed "Murari" doubtful (cf. chapter 13, nos. 11, 12); attribution by GPT only (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

64. "Tell me, why?" — we read "kahe" as "kāhe" ("why?", Vrajabuli); reading "kahe" ("says"), the sense is the same: the heroine complains to her friend. "The shade of His feet" — shelter, the Lord's mercy to all.

65. The chataka is a bird which, as the belief goes, drinks only rain water and waits for it from the cloud; if the cloud hurls lightning instead of rain — an image of unrequited love from the padas on Radha. GPT1: "bāra" — a misprint for "yāra."

66. The poet's counsel turns the nagari's complaint into an instruction on shelter: "give up family honour, take shelter at His feet" — the path of surrender to Gaura (sharanagati), not of a love play. Some other padas of the section end in the same way (cf. no. 21, note 60).

24. Dasa Murari — "eka dina mane ānanda bāṛhala..." (PK 2334)

*Nagari-bhava (the townswomen see Gaura and Nitai in the street). One day Nitai and Gaura, joyful and laughing, go alone to the bazaar; the townswomen on their way to fetch water meet Them and cannot take their eyes off Gora: "It seems a dancer has come from Gokula — let us go and see Him dance in the bazaar, let the water-fetching go hang!" Arm in arm the women fill both banks of the Jahnavi. Raga dhanashi.*⁶⁷

24.1. One day, with joy in Their hearts, Nitai and Gaura Raya go laughing to the bazaar — no one is with Them.

24.2. At that very time all the townswomen were going for water;
 they met on the way — the beauty is beyond description — their eyes fell on Gora.

24.3. One says: "It seems a dancer has come here from Gokula!
 Let us go and see — He will dance in the bazaar; let the water-fetching go hang!"⁶⁸

24.4. Arm in arm, all the women filled both banks of the Jahnavi; gazing at Gora, they forgot themselves — says Dasa Murari.

67. Signature: "dāsa murāri" (Dasa Murari). PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 316 (printed p. 305), 4th shakha, 23rd pallava, section "śrīcāitanya-nityānandera rūpa-guṇa-baṇana" (the form and virtues of Chaitanya and Nityananda), no. 3 (mark " ৩ ১৩৩৪ "); raga dhanashi; MS P-R-Sa no. 2408. GPT1 — p. 47, no. 71; GPT2 — sect. 1.3, no. 71 (catalogue: MU-005; in chapter 6 deferred to the nagari padas). According to Majumdar, the signature "dāsa murāri" is not Murari Gupta; the author is not established (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

68. "A dancer from Gokula" — the townswomen, without knowing it, recognize Krishna in Gaura (cf. no. 4, note 12). Here the nagari motif is mild: the women only crowd to see Gaura and Nitai; there is no love speech. MS P-R-Sa: "is coming" (āsiche); GPT1: "their eyes filled [with tears]" (bharila nayāne) instead of "they forgot themselves" (24.4).

25. Balarama Dasa — "gaura-baraṇa maṇi-ābharaṇa nāṭuyā-mohana beśa..." (PK 2109)

*Nagari-bhava. Gaura's form — golden, in jewels, in the enchanting attire of a dancer: gazing at Him, the world forgot itself. "I am dying, friend, seeing Gaura's figure: did not the Creator fashion, to slay young women, a Kama above Kama?" The townswomen lose their composure and, disregarding their husbands, weep; the poet offers himself for the beauty of the nails of Gora's feet. In PK it opens the pallava "Gaura's form." Raga mangala.*⁶⁹

25.1. Golden colour, jewelled ornaments, the enchanting attire of a dancer:
 gazing and gazing, the world forgot itself, the whole land swayed.

25.2. (Refrain) I am dying, dying, friend, seeing Gaura's figure!

Did not the Creator fashion, to slay young women, a Kama above Kama?⁷⁰

25.3. Champaka, nageshvara, jasmine row upon row — the charming adornment of His hair; seeing that form, young women are crazed: their composure and modesty are stolen.

25.4. Seeing that form, the townswomen of Nadia, disregarding their husbands, weep.

Says Balarama: I have offered myself for the beauty of the nails of Gora's feet.⁷¹

69. Signature: "Balarama." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 233 (printed p. 222), 4th shakha, 18th pallava, section "atha śrīgauracandrasya rūpādibārṇanam" (the form of Gaurachandra etc.), no. 1 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga mangala; MS P-R-Sa no. 2217. GPT1 — p. 160, no. 7 (raga dhanashri; section 3.2 — the first in the series of nagari padas, before Vasu's PK 2149); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 7 (catalogue: BD-017; PK 2109 was found in chapter 11 and deferred to the nagari padas). Under the signature "Balarama Dasa" PK has many padas of the later Balarama Dasa (Majumdar; cf. chapter 11) — attribution to the contemporary is not established (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

70. "A Kama above Kama" (kāmera upare kāma) — beauty surpassing the god of love himself (cf. Madana-mohana, note 9); "to slay young women" is a formula of the poetics of beauty (chapter 27, note 6). MS P-R-Sa: "did not the Creator sculpt..." (garhila ko).

71. "Disregarding their husbands, they weep" is one of the sharpest nagari motifs (from the padas on the gopis who leave their husbands for Krishna, Bhag. 10.29); translated as in the original; the tradition does not accept such a depiction of Gaura (introductory note). The poet, however, speaks of himself as a devotee: he has "offered himself" (nichani — the nichhani rite, chapter 27, note 10) for the nails of His feet. MS "kha": "the moons of the nails" (cānde). MS "ka" and GPT1: "lovely jasmine" (mallikā sundara); MSS "gha," "cha," P-R-Sa: "the whole land moved" (calila).

26. Chandrashekhara — "gaura-baraṇa heriyā bijurī..." (PK 2148)

*Nagari-bhava (only at the end). Gaura's form. Seeing His golden colour, the lightning hid in the sky; all the beauty of the three worlds is defeated: the lion fled, ashamed before His waist, the elephant gave Him its gait, the doe the play of their eyes, the yaks went off into the forest, put to shame by His hair. Gaura in the midst of Nadia is a storm for the pride of young women. Raga tori.*⁷²

26.1. Seeing His golden colour, the lightning took up its abode in the sky;

all the expanse of beauty in the three worlds has lost and been defeated.⁷³

26.2. (Refrain) Look, look — the form that enchants Madana!

Abandoning its pride before the beauty of His waist, the king of the hills — the lion — has fled.

26.3. Hearing of His gait, the best of elephants surrendered its gait to His feet and went away;

the doe, frightened, gave Him the play of their eyes.

26.4. Before the beauty of His hair the yaks gave up their pride, went into the forest and lie there, ashamed and offended.

26.5. To make young women give up their pride — Gaura is in the midst of the town of Nadia.

Says Chandrashekhara: a thunderbolt has struck the modesty of young women.⁷⁴

72. Signature: "Chandrashekhara." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 248 (printed p. 237), 18th pallava, no. 40 (mark " ॐ ॐ ॐ "); raga "tathā rāga" (= tori, as for PK 2147); MS P-R-Sa no. 2255. GPT1 — p. 117, no. 19 (raga suhai; section 3.1, "form"); GPT2 — sect. 3.1 (catalogue: ChSh-002; in chapter 6 deferred to the nagari padas; the GPT number was found in preparing this chapter). Chandrashekhara Acharya, the Lord's maternal uncle, is the author of PK 2148 only by tradition (S. Ray; cf. PK 1854 — chapter 1); the attribution is not confirmed (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

73. The whole poem is a chain of traditional comparisons: lightning (the colour of the body), lion (slender waist), elephant (gait), doe (eyes), yak (the yak's tail, the chamara — the hair); all are "defeated" and "flee." MS "ka": "radiance" (bibhāta) instead of "expanse" (bitati).

74. The nagari motif is only in the last couplet: Gaura's beauty crushes the pride and modesty of young women (a general formula, chapter 23, note 7). MS P-R-Sa and GPT1: "tejite gauraba" — a play on "gaura" / "gauraba" ("pride"): "to make young women give up their pride — [their] pride..."; MS "ka": "having given up" (tejiyā).

27. Lochana Dasa — "āra śunyācha ālo sai gorā-bhābera kathā..." (PK 2174)

*Nagari-bhava. "Have you heard, friend, what comes of love for Gora?" A young wife sat down to grind turmeric — and remembered turmeric-coloured Gorachand: what cooking now! tears wet her breast and flooded the grinding-stone, the paste was ruined. The poet: such an avatara as Gora has never been and never will be. Raga shri.*⁷⁵

27.1. Have you heard, friend, what comes of love for Gora?

In a corner of the house a young wife weeps, beside herself.⁷⁶

27.2. The fair one sat diligently to grind turmeric — and turmeric-coloured Gorachand came to her mind.

27.3. What cooking now, what serving, what grinding of turmeric!

Tears wet her breast and flooded the grinding-stone.

27.4. The feeling for Gauranga welled up — she cannot restrain it:

the paste was soaked with tears, all went to ruin.

27.5. Says Lochana: hey, friend, what more can I say?

Such an avatara as Gora has never been and never will be.⁷⁷

75. Signature: "Lochana." PK: vol. 3, PDF p. 259 (printed p. 248), 19th pallava ("Gauranga's form — the words of the nagaris"), no. 7 (mark " १ ३९४ "), between Vasu's padas PK 2173 and 2175 (chapter 27, nos. 12, 13); raga shri; MS P-R-Sa no. 2282. GPT1 — p. 179, no. 66 (raga shri; with an extra couplet after 27.2: "her whole soul has died — the form draws mind and life to itself; the heart is restless, friend, the soul finds no place"); GPT2 — sect. 3.2 (catalogue: new row LD-001). Lochana Dasa (c. 1520 — ?), author of the Chaitanya-mangala, disciple of Narahari Sarakara, is a singer of nagari-bhava (introductory note); the pada is not part of the Chaitanya-mangala (not found in our translation). Signature in PK — a recognized author (B). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

76. "What comes of love for Gora" (gorā-bhābera kathā) — lit. "the tale of Gora-bhava." "The fair one" (gorī) is the young wife; the consonance gori — Gora — "turmeric-coloured" (haladi-barāṇa) is the play of the whole poem. MS P-R-Sa: "beside herself in heart" (hṛdaya ākula); MS "ka": "Gora" (gorā) instead of "gori."

77. "Such an avatara has never been and never will be" is Lochana's praise of Gaura as the highest incarnation; GPT1: "such an avatara." Tears, confusion, inability to attend to work are signs of bhava (cf. CC on tears of prema), not of worldly passion; the nagari motif here is only the domestic life of a young wife. MS P-R-Sa: "with tears" (lorete) instead of "lohete" (the same); MS "gha": "flooded" (bhāsala).

28. Lochana Dasa — "nadīyā-nāgarī sārī sārī sārī..." (PK 2178)

*Nagari-bhava (the townswomen at the kirtana). The townswomen of Nadia walk in rows to the ghat of the Ganga — as if a host of moons had come down from the sky onto the road — to see Shachi's son dance with His associates; one's garment slips, another's braid comes loose; like painted figures they stand and gaze at Gaura; one, in bhava, falls into her friend's arms, another has tears, thrill, a swoon. The poet: shame is struck down, Gora, the king of dancers, dances. Raga natika.*⁷⁸

28.1. The townswomen of Nadia walked in rows, rows, rows to the ghat of the Ganga — such a radiance of beauty, as if a host of moons had left the sky and come down onto the road.

28.2. The son of Shachi dances together with His associates; to see Him, they came eagerly to the bank of the Suradhuni.

28.3. One's garment slips — she does not set it right; another's braid comes loose;

like painted dolls they all stand together and gaze at Gaura, the jewel of virtues.⁷⁹

28.4. Seeing the sweetness of that form, all the townswomen are lost in rapture; stirred by the fragrance of His body, they long to fly to Him.

28.5. One, overwhelmed by feeling, falls into another's arms, streams flow from her eyes; on another's body the thrill is plain, another is as if in a swoon.⁸⁰

Destroying steadfastness, dharma and all the rest, Gora, the king of dancers, dances.⁸¹

79. The slipping garment and the loosened braid are images of self-forgetfulness (so in Bhag. 10.29 the gopis run to Krishna at the sound of the flute, without finishing their dress); here they are the townswomen who have seen Gaura's kirtana. Translated as in the original.

81. "Destroying steadfastness, dharma" — as the sound of Krishna's flute made the gopis leave the dharma of family (Bhag. 10.29); Vaishnavas understand this as the superiority of prema over worldly dharma, not as worldly passion. The tradition does not accept the image of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note); Gaura Himself is here in kirtana with His associates, not in a love play.

Chapter 28 completes the nagari padas of Vasu Ghosha: after the 25 padas from PK (chapter 27), here are 15 padas known from GPT (two of them also have other witnesses: KGC — no. 1, the *Gita-chandrodaya — no. 2; three are new to the catalogue: nos. 2, 5, 6). Majumdar considers GPT unreliable for Vasu; one of these padas (no. 13) he explicitly calls a reworking of a pada on Krishna. Then come the nagari padas of other poets from the same pallavas of PK ("Gauranga's form — the words of the nagaris," gaura-chandrikas to purvaraga, anuraga, the dream, the reproaches to the elders): Nayananda (5), Yadu (2), Murari (2), Balarama Dasa, Chandrashekhara, Lochana Dasa (2). The padas of Yadunandana from the Bhakti-ratnakara (12th wave, pp. 904–910: the words of the "anuragavatis" — women of Nadia in love with Gaura — in Narahari Chakravarti's narrative) are assigned to chapter 29, together with Narahari Chakravarti's padas from the same cycle and from section 3.2 of GPT. The pada GPT1 4.4 no. 12 "...ḍākātera pirīti..." (signed Vasu) is PK 2531, Radha's words without Gaura (excluded already in chapter 9); Lochana's pada PK 2219 is about the sannyasa, not nagari-bhava; the pada KR-003 (PK 2018) is not nagari (translated in chapter 11).*

Chapter 29. Nagari Padas — III: the cycle of the Bhakti-ratnakara (Yadunandana, Narahari Chakravarti) and the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 39–45, 86–93)

On what nagari-bhava is, the position of the tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) and the rules of translation, see the introductory note to the section of nagari padas in chapter 27; on the two poets named Narahari (Narahari Sarakara and Narahari Chakravarti) and on the attribution labels ("probably Sarakara", "probably Chakravarti", "not established"), see the introductory note to the "Narahari" appendix in chapter 17.

1. Yadunandana — "gaurāṅga carita āju ki pekhalum³ māi..." (BR 12, pp. 904–905; GPT1 p. 167, no. 34)

*Nagari-bhava. A woman of Nadia tells what she saw on the road: crying "Radha, Radha!", Gauranga weeps, embracing Gadai, rolls on the ground, streams flow from His eyes; she herself loses all composure; Dasa Gadadhara smiles softly. Raga dhanashi.*¹

1.1. What have I seen today, mother — what Gauranga does!
Crying "Radha, Radha!" He weeps, embracing Gadai.²

1.2. Unable to hold His heart, He rolls on the earth — how much dust has clung to that golden body!

1.3. I look at that face — and do not know what my heart is doing;
how many streams, like the Suradhuni, pour from His eyes!³

1.4. I am dying, dying! Why did I go along that road!
There is no steadiness in my mind, my heart is bursting.

1.5. Seeing this, Dasa Gadadhara smiles softly, softly.
Yadunandana says: he floats in that rasa.⁴

1. Signature: "Yadunandana." BR, 12th wave: ed. 1913 (Murshidabad), pp. 904–905 (scan PDF pp. 912–913); ed. 1960, vv. 2803–2807. Narahari Chakravarti, describing the places of Navadvipa, says that the Lord lingered by this tree and then went along the bank of the Ganga, "and here women full of anuraga (anurāgabatī) joyfully and softly spoke with one another" — and gives their words in songs, "the first in a song of Sri Yadunandana Chakravarti, disciple of Sri Dasa Gadadhara Thakura" (so in BR). Eleven more songs follow in BR (nos. 2–7 of this chapter; Narahari's padas "nadiyāra mājhāre nācaye gorācāmḍa" and "sai kibā aparūpa rūpa", translated in chapter 17; Yadunandana's pada "dekha dekha gorācānde" — chapter 11, no. 12; Vasu's PK 2149 — chapter 27, no. 7; Devakinandana's pada "nadiyāra mājhāre onā rūpa" — the poet is outside the corpus). GPT1 — p. 167, no. 34 (dhanashi; scan PDF p. 426); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 34 (catalogue: YN-002). Yadunandana Chakravarti was a disciple of Gadadhara Dasa, a poet of the late 16th century; his padas in BR are B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

2. "Mother" (māi) is an exclamation common in the speech of women in Vrajabuli ("ah, mother!"), here addressed to a friend. Gauranga, in the bhava of Krishna, calls Radha and embraces Gadadhara Pandita: according to the Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika (147–153), Gadadhara is Radha Herself; cf. chapter 11 (nos. 12–14) and Yadunandana's padas on Gaura and Gadadhara. The woman's words that she is "dying" express wonder and compassion at the sight of the Lord's ecstasy; there is no desire in the text.

3. "Streams like the Suradhuni" (suradhunī-dhārā) — the Lord's tears, abundant as the current of the Ganga.

4. Dasa Gadadhara (Gadadhara Dasa), a companion of the Lord, was Yadunandana's teacher; he "smiles", understanding what is happening to the Lord. "He floats in that rasa" may refer either to Gadadhara Dasa or to the poet himself; GPT: a "lahu lahu" (light, soft) smile.

2. Yadunandana — "dāsa gadādhara badana heri..." (BR 12, p. 905)

*Nagari-bhava. The second of Yadunandana's two "gitas" at the beginning of the cycle: Gaura, looking at the face of Dasa Gadadhara, signals to him with the corner of His eye, thrills, smiles; the woman saw Him on the bank of the Ganga — He steals the eyes of all young women. Raga kamoda.*⁵

2.1. Looking into the face of Dasa Gadadhara,
He speaks with the corner of His eye, giving a sign.⁶

2.2. Who knows why His body thrills; in His smile nectar seems to rain.

2.3. On the bank of the Suranadi I saw Gora — the thief of the eyes of all young women.

2.4. From the natural curve of His brows — little friend, while I live, what shame is left?⁷

2.5. The curve of His neck cannot be told:
the bird of the eye stays there, its wings outspread.

2.6. The beauty of His arms reaching to the knees — seeing it, the hearts of young women crave.

2.7. At the soles of His reddish lotus feet may Yadu's mind abide as a bee.⁸

5. Signature: "Yadu" ("yadu mana rahu..."). BR 12: ed. 1913, p. 905 ("punaḥ | kaścīt kāmodaḥ", scan PDF p. 913); ed. 1960, vv. 2808–2814. The pada is not in GPT1 or GPT2; in the catalogue — YN-005 (the second gita). Majumdar mentions both of Yadunandana's "gitas" at the beginning of the cycle as songs of a disciple of Gadadhara Dasa. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

6. The subject of 2.1 is not named in the original; in the sense of the cycle it is Gaura exchanging glances with Dasa Gadadhara (on Gaura and Gadadhara Dasa in radha-bhava — chapter 11, no. 15). "Suranadi" (suranadī, "river of the gods") — the Ganga; so in the original.

7. "Little friend" (āṇuli) is a playful, affectionate address to a friend (cf. 7.5 below); the exact meaning of the word is not established. The line can also be read: "in my heart, little friend, what shame is left?" — i.e., modesty is lost at the sight of Gaura. The nagari motif is rendered as in the original.

8. The image of the mind as a bee at the lotus feet is a common prayer formula of the signature (cf. "Narahari's mind is a bee" in the padas of the appendix).

3. Narahari — "taruṇī-parāṇa-corā gorārūpa..." (BR 12, pp. 905–906; GPT1 p. 171, no. 46)

*Nagari-bhava. Gora's form steals the life of young women; blessed are those who drink it even once from the corner of the eye; Gaura, looking at Pandita Gadai, calls him "Radhika!", holds Dasa Gadadhara by the hand, thrills and smiles — the depth of this rasa cannot be reached; He walks the roads of Nadia, swaying like a nagara. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada stands in the cycle of BR 12, in Vrajabuli.*⁹

3.1. Gora's form, which steals the life of young women — its sweetness is a stream of nectar; blessed, blessed, blessed are they who drink it even once from the corner of the eye!

3.2. (Refrain) Friend, to whom shall I tell this?
Gazing intently at Pandita Gadai, He calls him: "Radhika!"¹⁰

3.3. Placing His hand in the hand of Dasa Gadadhara, He thrills with joy, His body bristling;
He smiles softly, softly — in what rasa does He float? I cannot reach the bottom.

3.4. With a nagara's airs He goes along the roads of Nadia, swaying;
His pose enchants Narahari's mind — Madana swoons at it.¹¹

9. Signature: "Narahari." BR 12: ed. 1913, pp. 905–906 ("punaḥ kācit dhānaśī", scan PDF pp. 913–914); ed. 1960, vv. 2815–2818. GPT1 — p. 171, no. 46 (dhanashi; scan PDF p. 430); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 46 (catalogue: NG-079). The pada stands third in the cycle of the speeches of the "anuragavatis", between two padas of Yadunandana, and, like all of Narahari Chakravarti's songs in BR, was written by him for this narrative (B). GPT1 readings: "mādhurī amiñā dhārā", "kichui nā pāi thā", "helite dultite". Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

10. Gaura calls Gadadhara Pandita "Radhika": Gadadhara is Sri Radha in Gaura-lila (GGD 147–153); the Lord, in the bhava of Krishna, recognizes His beloved in him. This is the Lord's own confidential mood, which the townswoman sees but does not understand ("to whom shall I tell?").

11. "A nagara's airs" (nāgarāli-thāṭa) — a word from the language of the padas about Krishna ("nagara" — lover, gallant). The translation is faithful to the author; the tradition does not accept the image of Gaura as nagara (introductory note, chapter 27): here it is the townswoman's view, while the Lord Himself is absorbed in Krishna's bhava for Radha (3.2–3.3). "Narahari's mind" — genitive of possession: the Lord's pose enchants the poet's mind.

4. Yadunandana — "sajani sai śuna gorā-aparūpa gāthā..." (BR 12, p. 906; GPT1 p. 169, no. 37)

*Nagari-bhava. "Friend, listen to the wondrous song of Gora": the tale of the secret play with the young wives of Vraja has flooded the world; the fragrance of His body maddens the gods of love, the garland on His chest makes noble wives swoon; everything in Him is like the Moon of Gokula, only the colour is golden; now He calls "Radha!", now laughs, now weeps aloud. Raga karnatika.*¹²

4.1. (Refrain) Friend, listen to the wondrous song of Gora:
of the secret play with the young wives of Vraja — that tale has flooded the world.¹³

4.2. From the fragrance of His body how many Manmathas, maddened, fly to Him in the guise of bees;
the garland of rangana flowers plays upon His chest — and the noble wives swoon.

4.3. I see the golden colour — and all else, friend, is the same:
the speech, the gait, the radiance of the body;
the form of the Moon of Gokula, the plain snare of the brows —
a thorn to noble wives in both their families.¹⁴

4.4. What woman, seeing the aim of His eyes and the sweetness of the smile on His moon-face, will keep her composure — and only then go home — not driven mad by Manmatha?

4.5. Now He calls "Radha!" and sits with His eyes closed, now laughs, overwhelmed by bhava, now weeps aloud, His whole body bristling — this is what Yadunandana loves.¹⁵

12. Signature: "Yadunandana." BR 12: ed. 1913, p. 906 ("punaḥ kācit karṇāṭikā", scan PDF p. 914); ed. 1960, vv. 2819–2823. GPT1 — p. 169, no. 37 (karnatika; scan PDF p. 428); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 37 (catalogue: YN-003). Readings: GPT1 "āra saba sei śākhī", BR 1913 "sei sakhi" (noting the reading "sei sāthi"); BR 1960 "gorārūpa-gāthā". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

13. A tripadi; the refrain has three lines. The song is about Gora, while "the secret play with the wives of Vraja" is Krishna's lila: the townswoman (and the poet) recognizes in Gaura Krishna of Vraja Himself; cf. 4.3 "the form of the Moon of Gokula" and the endings of nos. 5–7 ("is He not the Moon of Gokula?").

14. "Plain" (paratek, from pratyakṣa) — "evident", "in sight"; BR 1913 "payatek" is a misprint. "A thorn in both families" (dui kule kāmṭā) — the ruin of one's good name in the father's and the husband's family; so the padas about Krishna speak of the gopis. The image is as in the original; Manmatha, the "god of love", is Kamadeva.

15. Weeping, laughter, closed eyes, bristling hair (pulaka) are the Lord's sattvika-bhavas in the bhava of Krishna longing for Radha (cf. no. 1). The stanza turns from the townswomen to Gaura Himself: it is this bhava of His that the poet loves.

5. Yadunandana — "sai go nadīyā-jāhnabī-kūle..." (BR 12, p. 908; GPT1 p. 168, no. 36)

*Nagari-bhava (praise of His form). "Friend, on the bank of the Jahnavi in Nadia — what creator fashioned that body from golden shirisha flowers?" His face a lotus, His lips bandhuli, His nose a kimshuka bud, His arms golden creepers; Gauranga cries "Hari!" and weeps on the lap of Dasa Gadadhara; is He not the Moon of Gokula? Raga mallarika.*¹⁶

- 5.1. (Refrain) Friend, on the bank of the Jahnavi in Nadia — what creator, how, fashioned that body from golden shirisha flowers?
- 5.2. Who, seeing, would not believe?
His face a lotus, His lips bandhuli, His teeth — are they kunda?¹⁷
- 5.3. To whom shall I tell it?
His lovely nose a kimshuka bud, His eyes red utpala lotuses.
- 5.4. I cannot say it in words:
His arms golden creepers, upon them lotuses, His nails blossoming jasmines.
- 5.5. His eyes — an ocean of bliss;
His soles — red land-lotuses, His nails put pearls to shame.
- 5.6. He bears the fragrance of love — the people of the three worlds, seeing it, are intoxicated and do not return home.
- 5.7. "Hari, Hari, Hari!" He cries;
I do not know why Gauranga weeps on the lap of Dasa Gadadhara.
- 5.8. Why such bewilderment?
Yadunandana says: don't you know? — is He not the Moon of Gokula?¹⁸

16. Signature: "Yadunandana." BR 12: ed. 1913, p. 908 ("kācicca mallārikā", scan PDF p. 916); ed. 1960, vv. 2843–2850. GPT1 — p. 168, no. 36 (mallarika; scan PDF p. 427; first line "soi lo nadīyā-jāhnabīkūle"); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 36 (catalogue: YN-006; Majumdar knew line 5.7). B. The nagari motif is only in the address to a friend and in line 5.6; in substance this is praise of the Lord's beauty. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

17. Each stanza is a short opening line and a long line of comparisons (tripadi). Bandhuli — a red flower; kunda — white jasmine; kimshuka — the red palasha flower; utpala — a lotus; shirisha — a delicate fragrant flower. GPT1 "daśana kunaki tāya" is probably a corruption of "kunda ki".

18. "The Moon of Gokula" (gokulacanda) is Krishna: the friend's bewilderment as to why Gaura weeps is resolved by the poet: this is Krishna Himself, and He weeps in the bhava of Radha (on the lap of Dasa Gadadhara; cf. chapter 11, no. 15). Cf. the endings of nos. 6 and 7.

6. Yadu — "dekha gorā-raṅga sai dekha gorā-raṅga..." (BR 12, pp. 908–909; GPT1 p. 138, no. 79)

*Nagari-bhava (praise of His form). "Look, friend, at Gora's play!" Through the town of Nadia walks a golden Ananga: His beauty surpasses a mirror of gold and gems, His face is the full moon, His brows a bow, His eyes arrows; the young women lose their heads, and He does not even look back; "He is that very Beauty of Gokula." Raga kamoda.*¹⁹

- 6.1. (Refrain) Look at Gora's play, friend, look at Gora's play:
through the town of Nadia walks a golden Ananga.
- 6.2. His loveliness surpasses a mirror of gold and gems;
His reddish feet have lit up the earth.

6.3. His face has taken the splendour of the full moon;
the sky is bright with that radiance — for joy one cannot find the way.²⁰

6.4. His brows a bow, His eyes arrows, His aim sidelong:
His whole make is like the Madana of Vraja.

6.5. Arms to the knees, a broad chest — who, seeing Him, does not feel the joy of a touch?²¹

6.6. His gait is lovelier than that of an intoxicated king of elephants;
the young women are lost — and He does not even turn to look.

6.7. Yadu says: He is that very Beauty of Gokula; you know and do not know — that is why you are afraid.²²

19. Signature: "Yadu" ("yadu kahe"). BR 12: ed. 1913, pp. 908–909 ("kaścicca kāmadaḥ", scan PDF pp. 916–917); ed. 1960, vv. 2851–2857. GPT1 — p. 138, no. 79 (sect. 3.1 "form", kamoda; scan PDF p. 397); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 79 (catalogue: YN-011). In BR the pada stands in Yadunandana's cycle and is his (B). Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

20. "Ananga" ("the bodiless one") is the god of love; "a golden Ananga" is Gaura, beautiful as Kamadeva. 6.3b ("diśā nārī sukha", so in BR 1913, 1960 and GPT1) is understood as "diśā nā ri (pāri) — sukhe", "for joy one cannot find the way"; "the joy of the women of all quarters" is also possible. The reading is obscure.

21. "The joy of a touch" (paraśana-sukha) — from a mere glance: a delight as if one had touched Him. Rendered as in the original; this is an image of the fullness of darshana, not of worldly desire.

22. "The Beauty of Gokula" (gokulasundara) is Krishna. The friend "knows and does not know": she sees something extraordinary but does not understand that before her is Krishna Himself — and fears for herself; the poet reveals the secret to her.

7. Yadunandana — "gaurabaraṇa sonā chaṭaka cāmḍera jonā..." (BR 12, p. 910; GPT1 p. 168, no. 35)

*Nagari-bhava (only in the address "little friend" and in the words "destroying the composure of young women"). Golden Gaura, stirred by bhava, weeps in streams, His whole body bristling, cries "Hari!", embraces Gadai and weeps: "What more, what more?..." — "is He not the Beloved of Gokula?" Raga ashavari.*²³

7.1. Gaura's colour is gold, His radiance moonlight; red as the young dawn, He stands motionless — His mind stirred by bhava.²⁴

7.2. From His reddish eyes flow streams, like the streams of the Suradhuni; dense bristling covers His body — the burden of His feeling is heavier than the earth.

7.3. On His face a slight smile that destroys the composure of young women; again and again, choking, He cries "Hari!" — and floods the world with weeping.

7.4. Embracing Gadai, He speaks sweetly, sweetly;
"What more, what more?" He says and weeps; I do not know in what rasa He is lost.

7.5. Whoever knows, knows it in the heart; my mind is immersed in that rasa.
Yadunandana says: little friend, is He not the Beloved of Gokula?²⁵

23. Signature: "Yadunandana." BR 12: ed. 1913, p. 910 ("kāścicca āśābarī", scan PDF p. 918); ed. 1960, vv. 2870–2874. GPT1 — p. 168, no. 35 (ashavari; scan PDF p. 427; the number is garbled in the recognized text); GPT2 — sect. 3.2 (catalogue: YN-012). GPT1 readings: "taruṇī dhairaja nāśi", "nā jāni ki rase bhule". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

24. "Stands motionless" (caraṇe thira, lit. "firm on the feet") — the Lord stands still in bhava; it can also be read as "His feet are the young dawn". "Heavier than the earth" (mahī jini bhāra bharā) — the fullness of feeling. The stanzas are tripadi.

25. "The Beloved of Gokula" (gokula-piyā) is Krishna, the Beloved of Radha and the gopis; Gaura, embracing Gadadhara (Radha) and asking "what more?", experiences the love of Radha and Krishna. "Little friend" (ājuli) — see note 7.

8. Narahari — "belā abasāne nanadinī sane..." (GPT1 p. 169, no. 39)

Nagari-bhava. At dusk a young wife went with her sister-in-law to fetch water, saw Gaurangachand and came back having broken her pot; her body trembles, her feet will not walk, in the ocean of His beauty there is no bottom; the poet: whoever has the sweetness of Gauranga awakened in the heart, his family honour and good conduct sink in anuraga for Gorachand. Raga kamoda. Attribution: probably Sarakara — simple Bengali, brief; not in BR, GCC, the *Gita-chandrodaya or PK; the GPT2 index assigns the page to Sarakara; the preface of GPT2 quotes the pada as an example of Narahari Sarakara's nagari padas.*²⁶

- 8.1. At the end of the day I went with my sister-in-law to fetch water;
I saw the form of Gaurangachand — and came back having broken my pot.²⁷
- 8.2. My body trembles, fever comes over me, my feet will not walk; in the ocean of Gaurangachand's beauty I swim — and find no bottom.
- 8.3. His long, long eyes are fearful flower-arrows;
how can a woman keep her composure? — Madana himself trembles with fear.
- 8.4. Narahari says: whoever has the sweetness of Gauranga awakened in the heart — his family honour and good conduct have all sunk in anuraga for Gorachand.²⁸

26. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — p. 169, no. 39 (kamoda; scan PDF p. 428); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 39 (catalogue: NG-075). GPT only: there are no witnesses (BR, GCC, GCd, PK, KGC, PS checked). By the features that Majumdar takes as marks of Sarakara (simple Bengali without Vrajabuli, no piling up of comparisons, correct metre, brevity) the pada is closer to Sarakara; but he considers padas known only from GPT unreliable — C. The preface of GPT2 quotes the pada with an extra couplet (He stands by the river, lighting up both banks — cf. 12.4 below). Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

27. The broken pot is a common motif of padas on purvaraga: so the gopis, seeing Krishna, drop their pots by the Yamuna. Cf. nos. 12 and 20 below.

28. "Family honour and good conduct sink" (kulaśīla majīla) is a formula of the supremacy of prema over worldly ties, known from the padas about the gopis; so Vaishnavas understand it (cf. Bhag. 10.29: the gopis leave their homes on hearing the flute). The translation is faithful to the author; the tradition does not accept worship of Gaura in the mood of the nagaris (introductory note, chapter 27).

9. Narahari — "śayane gaura svapane gaura..." (GPT1 pp. 169–170, no. 40)

Nagari-bhava (only in the address to a friend). Gaura is in sleep and in dream, in life and in death; He is the pupil of the eyes and the necklace on the neck; the poet wishes to keep Him in the heart and, in solitude, to gaze at Him; refrain: "Friend, speak to me of Gaura!" — His name is the abode of nectar. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Sarakara — simple Bengali; no witnesses; the GPT2 index — Sarakara; the preface of GPT2 quotes it as Sarakara's.²⁹

- 9.1. In sleep — Gaura, in dream — Gaura, Gaura is the pupil of my eyes; in life — Gaura, in death — Gaura, Gaura is the necklace on my neck.
- 9.2. Keeping Gauranga in my heart, I will sit in solitude and to my heart's content hold that moon before me, eye to eye.
- 9.3. (Refrain) Friend, speak to me of Gaura!
Gora's name is the abode of nectar, the giver of love embodied.³⁰
- 9.4. He in whose heart the word "Gaura" ever sounds, the treasure "Gaura" ever lives — says Narahari — at his feet he begs for shelter always.

29. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — pp. 169–170, no. 40 (dhanashi; scan PDF pp. 428–429; first line "śayane gaura"); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 40 ("emane gaura" — probably a misreading of the recognized text; catalogue: NG-233, formerly NS-004 — the link with PK 103 is mistaken; PK 103 is the neighbouring no. 41, translated in chapter 3, no. 2). GPT only — C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

30. "The giver of love embodied" (pīriti-mūratī-dātā) can also be read as "Gora's name is love itself and the giver (of prema)". The ending (9.4) is not a nagari motif but an ordinary Vaishnava prayer for shelter at the feet of a devotee in whose heart the name of Gaura lives.

10. Narahari — "marama kahiba sajani kāya..." (GPT1 p. 170, no. 42)

Nagari-bhava. "To whom shall I reveal the secret of my heart, friend?" Wherever one looks there is Gauranga: He has entered the lake of the heart, everything has become Gauranga; awake and asleep, at meals and on the way — only He; in the sky — He; Gauranga's feet are bound to the poet's heart. Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Sarakara — simple Bengali; no witnesses; the GPT2 index — Sarakara.³¹

10.1. (Refrain) To whom shall I reveal my heart's secret, friend, to whom reveal my heart's secret?

Rising, sitting, looking about — I see Gauranga Raya.

10.2. Into the lake of my heart Gauranga has entered — everything has become Gauranga; how much can I see with these two eyes? — if only I had a hundred thousand eyes!

10.3. Awake — Gauranga, asleep — Gauranga, always I see Gauranga; at meals — Gauranga, on the way — Gauranga: what has become of me, friend?

10.4. I look at the sky — and there is Gauranga, always I see Gauranga;
Narahari says: Gauranga's feet are bound to the heart.³²

31. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — p. 170, no. 42 (dhanashi; scan PDF p. 429); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 42 (catalogue: NG-076). GPT only — C. Cf. no. 9: the same motif, "Gaura everywhere". Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

32. "Seeing the beloved everywhere" is a sign of the highest prema (so the gopis see Krishna everywhere; cf. CC Madhya 8, the conversation with Ramananda Raya: the maha-bhagavata sees his Lord in everything moving and unmoving). The ending is the poet's prayer.

11. Narahari — "majilum³ gaura-pīrite..." (GPT1 p. 170, no. 43)

Nagari-bhava. "I have drowned in love for Gaura, friend": His incomparable form has dissolved into the whole world — the atasi and champaka flowers have stolen His colour, the lotus His eyes, the palasha His ears, the sesame flower His nose, the aparajita buds His brows, the kunda His teeth, the plantain His thighs, the lotus on its stalk His arms; "I know my Gaurahari in all the world." Raga dhanashi. Attribution: not established — no witnesses; simple Bengali, but with a chain of comparisons that Majumdar does not find in Sarakara.³³

11.1. I have drowned in love for Gaura, friend, drowned in love for Gaura:
seeing Gaura's form, incomparable in the world — it has dissolved into the world.

11.2. The atasi and champaka flowers, the red flowers have stolen Gauranga's form;
the lotus — His eyes, the palasha — His ears, the sesame flower — the curve of His nose.³⁴

11.3. The buds of the aparajita have stolen my Gauranga's brows;
the kunda buds steal the row of His teeth, the plantain tree His thighs.

11.4. The lotus on its stalk has stolen those arms, the lotus pond His chest;
Narahari says: I know my Gaurahari in all the world.

33. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — p. 170, no. 43 (dhanashi; scan PDF p. 429); GPT2 — sect. 3.2 (the number is not recognized in the GPT2 OCR). The catalogue of stage 1 did not have this line (new line: NG-334). GPT only — C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

34. The image of "the beloved's features stolen by flowers" is traditional: the woman in love sees the beloved's features in nature. Atasi is the blue flax flower (Krishna's colour), champaka the golden one (Gaura's colour); both colours stand in one row; "śoṇa" — red (or: "the champaka that glows red"). The nose — "nāsākūpa" (lit. "the nostrils").

12. Narahari — "ke āche emana manera bedana..." (GPT1 p. 171, no. 44)

Nagari-bhava. "To whom shall I reveal my heart's pain, friend? — I will tell you": at dusk she went with her sister-in-law to fetch water, saw Gauranga and broke her pot — shame is all she gained; the sister-in-law is a black serpent, evil-tongued; the tears cannot be held back; Gaura shines on the bank of the Suradhuni like the autumn moon, lighting up both banks — but the sister-in-law did not let her gaze her fill. Raga pahida. Attribution: probably Sarakara — simple Bengali; no witnesses; the GPT2 index — Sarakara; the ending is the same as in no. 8.³⁵

12.1. Who is there to whom I could reveal my heart's pain, friend?

If I do not speak, my breast will burst and I will die; that is why I tell you.

12.2. At dusk I went with my sister-in-law to draw water; seeing Gauranga, I broke my pot — shame is all I gained.

12.3. With me was my sister-in-law — a black serpent, wicked, crooked;

I cannot hold back my tears, my face has faded.³⁶

12.4. Gaura's body shines like the light of the autumn moon;

He stands on the bank of the Suradhuni, lighting up both banks.³⁷

12.5. A broad chest, and on it a garland of sandal flowers;

I could not gaze my fill — my sister-in-law was death to me.

12.6. Narahari says: whoever has the sweetness of Gauranga awakened in the heart — his family honour and good conduct are all swept away by anuraga for Gauranga.

35. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — p. 171, no. 44 (pahida; scan PDF p. 430); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 44 (catalogue: NG-077). GPT only — C. The pada is an expanded version of no. 8 (the same story and almost the same ending). Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

36. The sister-in-law (nanadī), the mother-in-law, the husband are the "gurujanas", the elders who guard a young wife: the usual figures of padas on purvaraga (with Radha — Jatila and Kutila). "Black serpent" is the heroine's own abuse; so in the original.

37. "Lighting up both banks" (dukūla kariyā ālo): dukūla means both "both banks" and "both families" (the father's and the husband's); a pun is possible.

13. Narahari Dasa — "ki herilāma gorārūpa nā yāya pāsarā..." (GPT1 p. 171, no. 45)

Nagari-bhava. Gora's form cannot be forgotten: He has clung to the eyes like collyrium; if she dives into the water, she sees Gora in the water; the three worlds have become Gorachand; Gora's form is an ocean of nectar, and the young woman's mind drowns in it, not knowing how to swim. Raga shri (bara dashakushi). Attribution: probably Sarakara — simple Bengali, brief; no witnesses; the GPT2 index — Sarakara; GPT1 notes that in some collections the pada is signed by Vasudeva Ghosha.³⁸

13.1. What have I seen — Gora's form! — it cannot be forgotten:

Gora has clung to my eyes like collyrium.

13.2. If I dive into the water — in the water I see Gora;

the three worlds have become Gorachand — so it has come to be.

13.3. That is why I say: Gora's form is an ocean of nectar;

a young woman's mind drowns in it — she does not know how to swim.

13.4. Narahari Dasa speaks in fresh anuraga:

golden Gorachand awakens in the heart.³⁹

38. Signature: "Narahari Dasa" (narahari dāsa). GPT1 — p. 171, no. 45 (shri — bara dashakushi; scan PDF p. 430); GPT1 below the line: "in some collections this pada has the signature of Vasudeva Ghosha"; GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 45 (catalogue: NG-078). The pada is not in PK under either name. GPT only — C. GPT1 readings: "pasarā", "añjala" (for "añjana", as in GPT2), "amiñā". Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

39. "Fresh anuraga" (naba anurāga) — fresh, ever-growing attachment; so the first love of the gopis is called. The ending again speaks of the poet's heart.

14. Narahari Dasa — "pīriti-mūratī śacīra dulāla..." (GPT1 p. 189, no. 86; GCC 7.2)

*Nagari-bhava. Shachi's son is love embodied, His fame fills the world; there is no one who, having once seen Him, would not forget himself; and the love of the townswomen of Nadia for Gauranga is such that no one telling or hearing of it keeps composure: Gora is their japa, tapas and meditation, without Him even for half a moment all is empty; His happiness is their happiness. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in the *Gaura-charita-chintamani (kirana 7, pada 2).⁴⁰

- 14.1. Shachi's son is love embodied; His fame fills the world;
there is no one who would not forget himself, having once seen the sweetness of that form.
- 14.2. Wholly wondrous is His art of rasa — I cannot understand what virtues are in Him; without loving Gaurahari no one in the world lives.
- 14.3. And such is the love of these townswomen of Nadia for Gauranga — who, telling of it or hearing, would keep composure?
- 14.4. Gora is their japa, tapas, meditation and contemplation; they know nothing else;
not seeing Gorachand even for half a moment, they count all as empty.
- 14.5. Gora is the treasure of their life, their life and their caste; Gora is the pupil of their eyes; in sleep and in dream, saying "Gora, Gora", they have become as if mad.
- 14.6. Composure, dharma, shame, fear for their family — all they have given up for Him;
in Gora's happiness their happiness ever grows, sings Narahari Dasa.⁴¹

40. Signature: "Dasa Narahari" (dāsa narahari). GPT1 — p. 189, no. 86 ("yathārāga"; scan PDF p. 448); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 86 (catalogue: NG-080). Witness — Narahari Chakravarti's Gaura-charita-chintamani (GCC; ed. 1947, p. 67): kirana 7 — "in the morning, the conversations among themselves of the nagaris of Navadvipa, filled with that love", pada 2 (after an opening pada on the joy in Shachi's house at dawn). Kirana 7 of GCC is wholly a "description of the nagaris of Navadvipa"; its padas form the greater part of section 3.2 of GPT (nos. 86–99, 124 and on; kiranans 8–11 — the dreams, wishes and conversations of the townswomen) — a late (18th-century) poetic elaboration of the nagari motif by Narahari Chakravarti (B). Majumdar says plainly that the long padas of GPT, uneven in metre, signed Narahari cannot be Sarakara's; the collation confirms it: they are padas of GCC. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

41. "Their happiness lies in Gora's happiness" (gorā-sukhe sukha) is the mark of the gopis' love, which seeks only Krishna's happiness and not its own (CC Adi 4: in the gopis' love there is not a trace of desire for their own enjoyment). Giving up "shame and family" is the same formula of the supremacy of prema over worldly dharma (cf. note 28). The translation is faithful to the author; the tradition does not accept worship of Gaura in the mood of the nagaris (introductory note, chapter 27).

15. Narahari — "mari mari hena nadīyā-nāgarīgaṇera..." (GPT1 pp. 189–190, no. 87; GCC 7.3)

*Nagari-bhava. The townswomen of Nadia spent the night in longing: some did not sleep, singing of Gorachand's deeds, others saw Him in a dream; at dawn they come out of their houses on the pretext of work; skilled in stratagems, they do whatever pleases the elders and, with their leave, go where they wish; they gather in a secluded place — the poet admires them. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 3.*⁴²

- 15.1. Ah, ah! — I take upon myself all the misfortunes of such townswomen of Nadia:
this night they all spent in great longing.⁴³
- 15.2. Some stayed awake all night, singing of Gorachand's deeds; others, sleeping sweetly, found the Moon Gaura in a dream.

- 15.3. Leaving their beds again, they rose at the end of the night and came out of this house and that, as if on some errand.
- 15.4. The ways of these clever townswomen I cannot understand at all:
whatever work pleases the elders, that they do with care.
- 15.5. With the elders' leave they come and go — what more is there to say!
As their custom is day after day, so their happiness has no bounds.
- 15.6. Unseen, in a secluded place, sit the young women who captivate the world;
one by one they all gather there — and Narahari admires them.

42. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — pp. 189–190, no. 87 (scan PDF pp. 448–449); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 87 (catalogue: NG-081). GCC — kirana 7, pada 3 (ed. 1947, pp. 67–68). GCC readings: "keha keha gorācāndera caritra gāiyā", "niśi parabhāta-kāle". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

43. "I take upon myself their misfortunes" (bālāi laiṃyā) is a Bengali formula of admiring tenderness (lit. "taking their ills upon oneself"); the poet blesses the townswomen.

16. Narahari — "ki kaba yubātī-janera yerūpa pīriti paraspare..." (GPT1 p. 190, no. 88; GCC 7.4)

*Nagari-bhava. The love of the young townswomen for one another is such that their bodies are different but their heart is one: one, laughing, puts her arm round another's neck, another teases; "leave your pretence, tell us about yesterday — what stood in whose way, who saw Gaura the jewel and how, how did you spend this night?" Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 4.*⁴⁴

- 16.1. What shall I say of the love of these young women for one another?
Their bodies are different, their heart is one — who has the power to understand this tenderness?
- 16.2. One, full of rasa, laughing and laughing, puts her arm round another's neck; that one teases this one in a thousand ways.
- 16.3. Another says: "Leave your pretence, tell us — let us hear about yesterday:
what stood in whose way, who saw Gaura the jewel, and how?"
- 16.4. Another says: "Ah, tell me how you spent this night!"
Narahari says: it would be good to tell all these stories at length.

44. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — p. 190, no. 88 (scan PDF p. 449); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 88 (catalogue: NG-082). GCC — kirana 7, pada 4 (p. 68); GCC: "kare parihāsa" (GPT1 "upahāsa"), "keha kahe ogo". The pada introduces the townswomen's stories that follow (nos. 17–21). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

17. Narahari — "ki puchaha sakhi kālīkāra kathā..." (GPT1 pp. 190–191, no. 89; GCC 7.5)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: in the evening she was sitting beside her mother-in-law and sister-in-law when she heard that Gaura was passing along their lane; she did not know what to do, tears flowed; the mother-in-law kindly asked what was wrong — "I feel unwell" — and let her go and lie down; on the pretext of sleep she went out of the gate and gazed her fill at His face. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 5.*⁴⁵

- 17.1. "Why do you ask, friend, about yesterday? — it makes me laugh to tell it;
casting off shame, I will tell how I saw the Moon of Nadia.
- 17.2. At the end of the day my mother-in-law, my sister-in-law and several other women —
I was sitting beside them, showing how well-behaved I am.

- 17.3. Just then the Lord of my life came along our lane; hearing it, I started, looked all around — my mind was thrown into confusion.⁴⁶
- 17.4. I fell into a terrible fix, nothing came to my mind;
my soul was restless — what to do? — my eyes kept shedding tears.
- 17.5. Seeing me downcast, my mother-in-law says sweetly:
'Why are you like this, child? I don't know what pain you have.'
- 17.6. At these words I told her: 'I feel somehow unwell'; hearing this, she gave me leave: 'Go and lie down in the house.'
- 17.7. As if to lie down, I went out at once and stood outside the gate, and, seeing once the sweetness of that face, refreshed my eyes and heart.
- 17.8. No one could notice — my body was filled with joy."

Narahari says: the stratagems of those full of rasa — who can understand them?⁴⁷

45. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — pp. 190–191, no. 89 (scan PDF pp. 449–450); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 89 (catalogue: NG-083). GCC — kirana 7, pada 5 ("kācidāha" — "a certain one says", pp. 68–69). GCC readings: "dekhinu nadyāra śaśī" (GPT1 "dekhila"), "athira ati", "rasika janāra cāturi" (so also GPT1). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

46. "The Lord of my life" (parāṇa-pati) is the heroine's word for Gaura, as the gopis in the padas speak of Krishna; the translation is faithful to the author. The Lord Himself in this and the following padas only passes along the lane or stands with His companions at the ghat — He takes no part in the townswomen's stratagems (cf. nos. 18, 20, 21).

47. The heroine's ruse — deceiving her mother-in-law for the darshana of Gaura — and the poet's praise of "the stratagems of those full of rasa" are rendered as in the original: this is a poetic convention of the padas on purvaraga (so the gopis deceive their elders for Krishna's sake). The tradition does not accept worship of Gaura in the mood of the nagaris (introductory note, chapter 27), and the Chaitanya-bhagavata says plainly that the Lord in Navadvipa did not look at women.

18. Narahari — "kālikāra kathā ki kaba sajani..." (GPT1 p. 191, no. 90; GCC 7.6)

Nagari-bhava. Another townswoman's story: yesterday she was sitting alone and heard that Gaura was passing; she hurried — and He with His companions flashed by like lightning; she returned home in fear of the elders; someone told her mother-in-law, who came running in anger; the young wife swore she had not seen Him and touched her feet — and the mother-in-law believed her. Raga "yatharaga".

Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 6.⁴⁸

- 18.1. "What shall I say of yesterday, friend? — my soul weeps as I tell it:
I saw and yet did not see the Moon of Nadia, the life of my life.
- 18.2. Listen to how it was: I was sitting alone, in complete solitude;
suddenly I hear from people's lips: Gaura is coming.
- 18.3. I hurried — and saw Him with His dear companions; flashing like lightning, He went on His way.
- 18.4. I was overcome, casting off shame and looking once at that face;
in fear of the elders I hurried home, more dead than alive.
- 18.5. I do not know who told my mother-in-law about it; hearing it, she came running at me in anger, her face distorted.
- 18.6. How many harsh words she said! — I trembled with fear;
I said, 'I did not see Him', swore an oath and touched her feet.
- 18.7. Telling many untruths, I came out good — she believed me."
- Narahari says: do not count this a fault — to think so is not right.⁴⁹

48. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — p. 191, no. 90 (scan PDF p. 450; the number is garbled in the recognized text); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 90 (catalogue: NG-084). GCC — kirana 7, pada 6 (p. 69). GCC readings: "turite yāyā dekhinu se nija priya parikara sāthe" (GPT1 without "priya"), "chumṇu uhāra pā". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

49. 18.7b (narahari kahe ithe doṣa ihā nā māna, e nahe bhāla) can be read in two ways: "do not count this a fault — to count it so is not good" (the poet excuses the ruse for the sake of darshana) or "you do not count this a fault — but it is not good" (a gentle reproach). It is translated by the first reading, more likely in the context of GCC, where the poet constantly praises the townswomen's "stratagems" (cf. 17.8, 20.16). The lie and the oath are a poetic convention of the padas on purvaraga (cf. note 47).

19. Narahari — "nilaji haiyā bali ye sajani..." (GPT1 p. 191, no. 91; GCC 7.7)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: her husband's aunt came to visit for the first time in a long while; she joyfully sat beside her, but then heard that Gaura was passing; she wanted to go out of the door — but the aunt, suspecting nothing, held her back by the end of her sari, adjuring her "by my head", and asked about household matters; her kindness seemed like poison; the young wife did not know how to break away. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 7.⁵⁰

19.1. "Casting off shame, I'll tell you, friend — listen to my story:
the pitiless Creator yesterday gave me cruel pain.

19.2. For the first time in many days my husband's aunt came to my house; with joy in my heart I sat beside her, leaving everything.⁵¹

19.3. And just then I hear: the nagara Gaura is passing;
I was all eagerness to go out of the door.

19.4. As soon as I think of getting up — ah! — she looks at me again, catches the end of my sari and kindly sits me down, adjuring me by her head.

19.5. Understanding nothing of this, with a heart free of all guile, she asks in every way, with care, about household matters.

19.6. My soul is restless — I listen to her and do not hear; what is asked, what I answer — good or bad, I do not remember.

19.7. She is affectionate with me, as is proper, and to me it is like poison; out of awkwardness I do not show it, but inside I am burning.

19.8. Seeing a terrible fix, I thought — let my body leave me!"
Narahari says: don't you know any stratagems — how to fool the aunt?⁵²

50. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — pp. 191–192, no. 91 (scan PDF pp. 450–451); GPT2 — sect. 3.2 (the number is not recognized in the GPT2 OCR). The catalogue of stage 1 did not have this line (new line: NG-335). GCC — kirana 7, pada 7 (pp. 69–70); GCC readings: "nilaji haiyā baliye sajani śunaha āmāra kathā", "mo'pāne cāya", "māthāra śapatha diyā". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

51. "The husband's aunt" (māsaisa, māsaśāsa) — the mother-in-law's sister, come on a visit. The plot is an obstacle to darshana: the same convention as in nos. 17–18 (the elders prevent the heroine from seeing the beloved).

52. The ending is a playful remark by the poet: "don't you know stratagems to get round your aunt?" Cf. 17.8 and notes 47, 49.

20. Narahari — "śuna go sajani suradhunī-ghāṭa haite..." (GPT1 pp. 192–193, no. 92; GCC 7.8)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: returning alone from the ghat of the Suradhuni, she met the Moon of Nadia on the road; at the sight of His face she forgot composure and shame — the pot fell and broke; someone told her sister-in-law, who came running in fury; the young wife wept so that the sister-in-law's anger passed, and invented a story: the sister-in-law's friends abuse her at every corner, and she herself, unable to bear it, broke the pot in anger; the sister-in-law, pleased, comforted her. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 8.⁵³

- 20.1. "Listen, friend: I was coming alone from the ghat of the Suradhuni — and on the road I met the Moon of Nadia.
- 20.2. What wondrous sweetness! His gait is lovelier than an elephant's;
I do not know who made this image of love embodied, and how.
- 20.3. To what shall I compare Him? I long to take Gora in His new attire and either hide Him in my heart or make Him the pupil of my eyes.
- 20.4. As I looked at that face, composure, dharma and shame went far away;
the pot fell from my hip to the ground and broke into a hundred pieces.⁵⁴
- 20.5. What could I do? — having given my life and youth gladly to the Beloved of my soul, in fear of the elders I came home and sat with grief in my heart.
- 20.6. I do not know who told my sister-in-law that the pot was broken; in terrible anger, like a forest fire, she came rushing.
- 20.7. No trick would work, seeing her fearsome look —
I clutched my head with both hands and wept till my eyes were swollen.
- 20.8. Seeing my immoderate weeping, she let go of her anger; calming down, she asks again and again — I gave no answer.
- 20.9. After a little while, having thought it over, she took my hand and says softly, softly: 'Why don't you open your heart to me?'
- 20.10. With difficulty, in a faltering voice, I told her, weeping, with grief in my heart: 'Why do you ask in vain?'⁵⁵
- 20.11. Those whom you hold dear as life do terrible things:
at the ghat, in the field, on the road they slander you — I was ashamed to hear it.
- 20.12. I thought of tying the pot to my neck and throwing myself into the Ganga, but could not — lest an ill name should spread about the family.
- 20.13. What could I do? I cannot quarrel with them;
all the ill they say of you — I heard it and was bewildered.
- 20.14. Whom could I call as a witness? No one was with me there; in anger at them I broke the pot on the road.'
- 20.15. Hearing this, she was overjoyed, caressed me, comforted me in every way and wiped my face with her own hand.
- 20.16. So yesterday I boldly escaped a terrible fix."
Narahari says: I take upon myself all the ills of your cleverness!⁵⁶

53. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — pp. 192–193, no. 92 (scan PDF pp. 451–452); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 92 (catalogue: NG-085). GCC — kirana 7, pada 8 (pp. 70–71); GCC readings: "dhīre dhīre kahe kisera lāgiyā nā kaha marama more", "śuniyā pāiye lāja", "paśiye gaṅgāra jale", "mukha mochāla āpana kare". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

54. "Broke into a hundred pieces" — the motif of the broken pot (cf. nos. 8, 12 and note 27). "Composure, dharma and shame went away" — see note 28.

55. After 20.10 GPT1 (p. 192, at the bottom) has an extra half-line "ki karili taila phelāli, balaye śāśuṛī" ("What have you done — you've spilt the oil!" says the mother-in-law"), which is not in GCC and does not fit the story (it is the sister-in-law who speaks); probably an insertion or a printer's error. It is not included in the translation.

56. "I take upon myself all the ills" (bālāi laiṃ mari) is a formula of admiration (cf. note 43): the poet delights in the heroine's resourcefulness. The invented story about the sister-in-law's friends is the same convention of "stratagems" (note 47).

21. Narahari — "ki kaba sajani nanadera kathā..." (GPT1 pp. 193–194, no. 93; GCC 7.9)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: her sister-in-law, who thought herself the only faithful wife in Nadia and would not let her speak to anyone, yesterday went for water herself and on the road to the ghat saw Gora with His companions — and lost all composure: the pot fell, her hair came loose, her clothes slipped; coming to herself, she in embarrassment begged her brother's wife to keep the secret and promised to help her in everything; "I did not spread it — a noble person guards another's shame." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 9.⁵⁷

- 21.1. "What shall I say of my sister-in-law, friend? — it is laughable to tell:
she is a faithful wife, and all the women of Nadia, by her reckoning, are unfaithful.
- 21.2. And worse: she will not let me say a word to anyone, she is forever scolding — I dare not go anywhere alone for fear.
- 21.3. With grief in my heart, day and night, I was dying, hearing her abuse;
I prayed to the Creator: let her pride be destroyed.
- 21.4. I do not know for what merit the merciful Creator heard my plea:
what I had in mind soon came true.
- 21.5. Listen to how it was: yesterday she went off, taking her pot;
and I followed behind her, with her leave.
- 21.6. On the road by which we both go to the ghat of the Suradhuni, on that very road Gora stands with His dear companions.
- 21.7. Seeing the sweetness of that form, my sister-in-law could not keep her composure:
she began to shake all over, trembling under Madana's onslaught.⁵⁸
- 21.8. The pot fell from her hip to the ground, her hair came loose, her clothes slip from her body of themselves — and there is not a trace of memory.
- 21.9. With difficulty she regained her composure, greatly embarrassed, took me by both hands and says softly, softly, looking into my face:
- 21.10. 'Know for certain: you, my virtuous brother's wife, are dearer to me than life;
all I have said to you — do not hold it against me; I am in your power.
- 21.11. Whatever you do — tell me without embarrassment;
I will help you, even at the cost of my life,' she swears.
- 21.12. 'Only tell no one about this, keep it secret;
I have fallen into this rasa — what can I say? — Gaurahari has driven me mad!'
- 21.13. Thus she said much — hearing it, my joy knew no bounds, and remembering what had gone before, much bitterness rose in me.
- 21.14. I thought: what is the use of spreading all this?"
Narahari says: one whose conduct is noble guards another's shame.⁵⁹

57. Signature: "Narahari." GPT1 — pp. 193–194, no. 93 (scan PDF pp. 452–453); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 93 (catalogue: NG-086; "nadera" for "nanadera"). GCC — kirana 7, pada 9 (pp. 71–72); GCC readings: "teṃha patibratā" (so also GPT1), "haila biṣama tharahari tanu" (GPT1 "narahari tanu" — a printer's error: a signature is out of place here), "prāṇadhana diyā sahāya kariba balaye śapatha khā'yā". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

58. "Madana's onslaught" (madana-bhare) — attraction, of which the original speaks directly; translated precisely. 21.7–21.8 are signs of being overwhelmed (trembling, the falling pot, loosened hair, slipping clothes, oblivion), usual in the padas about the gopis at the sight of Krishna (cf. Bhag. 10.29 and note 79 of chapter 28). The tradition does not accept the image of Gaura as nagara (introductory note, chapter 27); the Lord Himself here only stands with His companions by the road.

59. The ending is a moral maxim of the poet: a noble person does not divulge another's disgrace. The translation is faithful to the author.

Summary of chapter 29

*The chapter opens the nagari padas signed "Narahari" from section 3.2 of GPT. Before translating, section 3.2 of GPT1 (pp. 157–237, 180 padas) was read through on the scan: 95 padas bear Narahari's signature, of which 32 were not in the catalogue (new lines NG-334...365); the witness of almost all the long padas of this series is Narahari Chakravarti's *Gaura-charita-chintamani, kiranas 7–11 ("the nagaris of Navadvipa"), which confirms Majumdar's argument: the long padas of GPT with this signature are not Sarakara's. Translated: the cycle of the Bhakti-ratnakara (12th wave) — the speeches of the "anuragavatis", the women of Nadia, by the tree on the bank of the Ganga (nos. 1–7: five padas of Yadunandana, a pada of Yadu and a pada of Narahari Chakravarti; in them the townswomen see Gaura in the bhava of Krishna calling Radha and recognize in Him "the Moon of Gokula"); the short padas of GPT1 3.2 nos. 39–45 in simple Bengali, which the GPT2 index assigns to Sarakara (nos. 8–13; "probably Sarakara" — C, no. 43 — "not established"); the beginning of the 7th kirana of GCC — the townswomen's morning conversations and their stories of how, deceiving their elders, they saw Gaura (nos. 14–21; "probably Chakravarti" — B). The padas of other poets of the section (nos. 49–60, Govinda Dasa, Jnanadasa) were not translated; Lochana Dasa's padas (nos. 61–85, 116) are translated in chapters 28 and 34.

Chapter 30. Nagari Padas — IV: the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 94–110, 120–123)

On what nagari-bhava is, the position of the tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) and the rules of translation, see the introductory note to the section of nagari padas in chapter 27; on the two poets named Narahari (Narahari Sarakara and Narahari Chakravarti) and on the attribution labels ("probably Sarakara", "probably Chakravarti", "not established"), see the introductory note to the "Narahari" appendix in chapter 17.

1. Narahari — "śuna śuna ago parāṇa soi..." (GPT1 p. 194, no. 94; GCC 7.10)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman complains to her friend about her household: whenever she sighs and murmurs "Gora", her mother-in-law burns with anger, her sister-in-law is like poison, the neighbours taunt her day and night, she lives like a bird in a cage; but yesterday the Creator took pity — at the close of day Gaura passed along their street, and she secretly saw Him from the window: His face, brows, eyes, garland, gait; and the pain of her heart only doubled. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 10.¹

- 1.1. Listen, listen, friend of my heart: I know you feel my pain — so to you I will tell it.
- 1.2. The ways of our house are unheard of in the land: as I tell them, my heart weeps.
- 1.3. If only I sigh, murmuring "Gora", the old woman hears and burns with anger.
- 1.4. My sister-in-law is like deadly poison: through her "virtues" my life is burnt away.
- 1.5. The neighbours are nothing but thorns to a good name: day and night they prick me with taunts.
- 1.6. Whom, friend, shall I call to witness this? I stay at home like a bird in a cage.
- 1.7. What more shall I tell of all this? There is no end to my sorrow.
- 1.8. But yesterday the Creator was kind to me — he put the moon of the sky into my hand.
- 1.9. At the close of day Gaura Raya was walking along our street.
- 1.10. Hurrying to the window, unseen, I saw Him.
- 1.11. How sweet is that moon of a face — a snare for the hearts of young women!
- 1.12. The curve of His brows is so graceful — who has the composure to bear it?
- 1.13. His eyes, outdoing wagtails, dance — I understood: from them no one escapes.
- 1.14. A garland of flowers sways at His throat — seeing it, many a Kamadeva swoons.²
- 1.15. What more shall I say of that wondrous beauty? His gait enchants the world.
- 1.16. For only a moment could I see Him there — and the pain of my heart grew twofold.
- 1.17. Narahari says: sorrow will not remain — all will come to pass as your heart desires.³

1. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 194, no. 94 (scan PDF p. 453); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 94 (catalogue: NG-336). GCC — kirana 7, pada 10 (ed. 1947, p. 73; scan PDF p. 78). Nos. 94–99 of this chapter continue the 7th kirana of GCC — the townswomen of Navadvipa telling their friends in the morning (beginning — chapter 29, nos. 14–21): GCC 7.10–7.12 = nos. 94–96, 7.14–7.16 = nos. 97–99; GCC 7.13 (how a townswoman remembered Gaura while cooking) was not taken into GPT. GCC pp. 73–80 were checked against the scan (PDF pp. 78–85; re-OCR'd with tesseract); pp. 81–88 (GCC 7.17–7.28) are missing from the only available scan (see n. 18). GCC readings: "parāṇa sai" (so also GPT2), "deya e khomṭā", "bhuruyuga bara bhaṅgima chānde". Metre — short payar (a couplet to a line). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

2. "Many a Kamadeva swoons" (mūrache kateka kāma) — the usual praise in the padas of the Lord's beauty, surpassing that of the god of love (cf. Krishna's name Madana-mohana, "He who enchants Madana himself").

3. The poet's consolation is a convention of the purvaraga padas; in the GCC padas the fulfilment of the wish is a darshan of Gaura seen from afar (cf. nos. 2–3 and 5).

2. Narahari — "ki baliba ago gharera kathā..." (GPT1 pp. 195–196, no. 95; GCC 7.11)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: yesterday morning her mother-in-law went out, leaving her with her sister-in-law; the latter picked a quarrel and went off in a huff to the neighbours; alone at the window, the townswoman saw Gaura passing and threw Him a withered kumuda bud; Gora, taking it, said to the flower: "Do not grieve — the moon will rise"; at His glance she lost all strength; to her mother-in-law, on her return, she complained of her sister-in-law and explained her agitation by fatigue and fear — and the mother-in-law comforted her and scolded the sister-in-law. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 11.⁴

- 2.1. "What shall I say, friend, of what goes on in our house? If you hear it, it will pain you too.
- 2.2. Yesterday, as soon as night gave way to a bright morning, I secretly saw the Moon Gaura.
- 2.3. Perish shame now — what can it do to me? Something of it I will tell you.
- 2.4. Leaving me with my sister-in-law, my mother-in-law went off to the other end of the village.
- 2.5. And here my sister-in-law picked a quarrel and said many bad things to me,
- 2.6. and, to have her own way, she dropped everything and went off in a huff to someone else's house.
- 2.7. I stayed at home alone; I went and sat by the window.
- 2.8. Thinking of Gaura's beauty and virtues, I kept my eyes on the road.
- 2.9. And at that very moment Gauranga, the dear friend, appeared in our street.
- 2.10. Gazing unseen at that moonlike face, I forgot a little of the sorrow of my heart.
- 2.11. At once I threw a withered kumuda bud through the window.
- 2.12. Seeing it, Gora — and He is very quick-witted — took it in His hand and says, speaking to the kumuda:
- 2.13. 'Do not grieve: the moon will rise, and the heat of the sun will go far away.'⁵
- 2.14. Having said this, smiling, He glanced just once from the corner of His eye towards me.
- 2.15. At once my body lost all strength, as if a deadly snake had bitten me.
- 2.16. Try as I might, I could not keep my composure: I longed to go and touch Him.⁶
- 2.17. I tremble all over, my body sweats; I rise to walk — my feet will not move.
- 2.18. What shall I say? Trying to calm my heart, I remained in great agitation.
- 2.19. Just then my mother-in-law came home and asks me: 'Why are you like this?'
- 2.20. Very piteously I told her: 'My sister-in-law will not let me live in the house.
- 2.21. When you yourself are at home, she says nothing, but her heart burns like fire.
- 2.22. You left the house to go there — and here she picked a quarrel with me.
- 2.23. There is no end to the telling of it; and there was no fault of mine in it at all.
- 2.24. If you have any doubt in your mind, ask the neighbours here.
- 2.25. What shall I say! Leaving me alone, my sister-in-law went off to someone else's house —
- 2.26. judge from this how much sense she has. And why I am like this — listen:
- 2.27. besides being afraid all alone, I was also thinking of the housework;

- 2.28. whatever I did, I grew very tired, and that is why my head was spinning.'
- 2.29. Hearing my faltering words, my mother-in-law tenderly laid her hand on my head,
- 2.30. fanned me with the end of her own cloth, took my hands and comforted me at length.
- 2.31. Calling my sister-in-law, she scolded her — and hearing that, I was delighted."
- 2.32. Narahari says: you are truly fortunate — who else knows such tricks?⁷

4. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 195–196, no. 95 (scan PDF pp. 454–455); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 95 (catalogue: NG-087). GCC — kirana 7, pada 11 (pp. 73–75; scan PDF pp. 78–80). GCC readings: "henai samaye gaurāṅga ekā" (GPT1 "gaurāṅgasakhā"; the GCC reading, "Gauranga alone", rhymes better with dekhā), "nija kara dila āmāri māthe". Short payar. On 2.13 GPT1 has an editor's footnote with an interpretation (not reproduced). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

5. The kumuda is the white night-lily: it opens at moonrise and closes under the sun; in poetry it is an image of the loving woman pining for her moon-beloved. The withered bud thrown from the window is the townswoman's mute sign ("I wither without my moon"); Gora answers the flower, not her: "the moon will rise, and the heat of the sun will go." The moon (śaśī, cāṁḍa) is a constant name of Gaura in the GCC padas ("the Moon of Nadia"), so the answer is both consolation and a promise of darshan; translated literally, without interpretation.

6. The longing "to go and touch" and the signs of agitation (loss of strength, trembling, sweat) are stated plainly in the original; translated exactly. These are formulas of purvaraga shared with the padas on the gopis; the Lord merely passes along the street and answers the flower. The tradition does not accept worship of Gaura in the nagari mood (introductory note, chapter 27).

7. The deception of the mother-in-law (the complaint against the sister-in-law, "fatigue" instead of the true cause) and the poet's praise of the "tricks" are rendered as in the original — a poetic convention of the purvaraga padas (cf. n. 47 of chapter 29).

3. Narahari — "śuna go sajani balie tore..." (GPT1 p. 196, no. 96; GCC 7.12)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: putting on a new sari, she went alone to her brother's house and on the way met Gora; at His glance she lost her composure and barely made it home; her mother-in-law, seeing tears in her eyes, asked what had happened — "I went out of the gate and saw a terrible snake"; the frightened mother-in-law splashed water on her face. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 12.⁸

- 3.1. "Listen, friend, I will tell you: I do not know what has come over me.
- 3.2. Hastily putting on a new sari, I set out alone for my brother's house.
- 3.3. On the way I met Gora — what shall I say? There is no measure to His beauty.
- 3.4. He glanced just once towards me — and I do not know what He did with the corner of His eye:
- 3.5. composure, dharma, modesty — all there was perished at that very moment.
- 3.6. My heart became I know not how — I reason with it and cannot calm it.
- 3.7. In agitation I walk — my feet will not move; my whole body trembles and trembles.
- 3.8. Again and again my clothes slip from my body — and He, seeing all this, smiles.⁹
- 3.9. What could I do? For fear of the elders I somehow made my way home.
- 3.10. And there again my body languishes without the sight of that beautiful Gaura.
- 3.11. Just at that moment my mother-in-law came, sat down beside me and asks:
- 3.12. "Why are you like this today? Your eyes are brimming with tears.
- 3.13. You speak so piteously — I do not know what pain has come to you.'
- 3.14. Hearing this, I told her: 'I had gone out of the gate,
- 3.15. and there I saw a terrible snake — my heart shook, all my courage was gone.

3.16. Then it slid away into the ditch — I was saved by the power of your feet.'

3.17. Hearing this, she grew very alarmed and herself splashed water on my eyes and face."¹⁰

3.18. Narahari says: you fear nothing — you certainly know how to fool your mother-in-law!

8. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 196, no. 96 (scan PDF p. 455); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 96 (catalogue: NG-088). GCC — kirana 7, pada 12 (p. 75; scan PDF p. 80). GCC has two extra couplets: after 3.15 — "se punaḥ mo pāne āila dhāiyā | palāinu mui byākula haiyā ||" ("It rushed at me — I fled in alarm"), after 3.17 — "nija kara dhari āmāra śire | māne śibe kata manera ḍare ||" ("Laying her hand on my head, she in fear vowed many offerings to Shiva"); the translation follows GPT1. Short payar. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

9. The slipping clothes are a sign of agitation, as in the padas on the gopis (cf. n. 58 of chapter 29); the original states it plainly, translated exactly. The Lord's smile is the same as in no. 2 (2.14): He merely passes along the road. The tradition does not accept the image of Gaura as nagara (introductory note, chapter 27).

10. "A terrible snake" is an ambiguous answer: in no. 2 (2.15) Gaura's glance stung the townswoman "as if a deadly snake had bitten" her. The deception of the mother-in-law and the poet's praise (3.18) are a poetic convention of the purvaraga padas (cf. n. 47 of chapter 29).

4. Narahari — "nanadī bicāra kariyā garabe..." (GPT1 pp. 196–197, no. 97; GCC 7.14)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: her sister-in-law, having planned mischief, dressed up and went for water, leaving her alone at home; on the road she met Gaura with His companions and, forgetting all her schemes, followed Him with the pot on her hip; the mother-in-law caught her so and snatched away the pot — while the daughter-in-law meanwhile saw Gaura on her own road; the mother-in-law praised her, and the sister-in-law was put to shame. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 14 (second half).*¹¹

4.1. "Having thought it all out, my sister-in-law proudly put on a new sari and went to fetch water, leaving me alone at home.

4.2. Gleeful, she hurried along her road — and along that very road, with His companions, comes Gaura Raya.

4.3. Seeing the sweetness of that form, my sister-in-law quite lost her head:
all the schemes she had in mind she clean forgot.

4.4. Along that road came my mother-in-law — and, looking, sees her close by:
with the pot on her hip she is wandering after Gaurangachand.¹²

4.5. 'Very good, very good!' she said in great anger, and snatched away the pot;
what could my sister-in-law say, and to whom? — she wished the earth would swallow her.

4.6. And I meanwhile, meeting beautiful Gauranga, my life, on my own road, eased the pain of my heart gazing at that moonlike face.

4.7. A little later my mother-in-law came and praised me at length; and what shall I say of my sister-in-law's shame — she is at home as if she were not there."

4.8. Narahari says: one who is a fool sees nothing:
tying her own fault in the end of her sari, she seeks to blame another.

11. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 196–197, no. 97 (scan PDF pp. 455–456); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 97 (catalogue: NG-089). GCC — kirana 7, pada 14 (pp. 77–79; scan PDF pp. 82–84). In GCC the pada is twice as long: GPT begins it from the middle (GCC "erūpa bicāra kariyā garabe" — "having thus thought it out..."; GPT "nanadī bicāra kariyā"). In the omitted first half (13 couplets, pp. 77–78) the townswoman tells how her sister-in-law and her friends plotted to disgrace her: she told the mother-in-law that the bride would bring shame on the house with "a brahmana's son" (a hint at Gaura); the mother-in-law replied that she would believe it only when she saw it with her own eyes; then the sister-in-law resolved to leave the bride alone, on her way to fetch water to send a young man she knew to the house, and then to call the neighbours and expose her. The translation follows GPT1; the omitted part is not translated (the text is that of GPT), only retold here.

GCC readings in the second half: "prāṇa-gaurāṅgasundare", "praśamsā karaye more". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

12. The strict sister-in-law who forgets her schemes at the sight of Gaura is a recurrent motif of GCC (cf. chapter 29, no. 21); even the townswomen's adversaries lose their composure on seeing Gaura. The Lord here merely walks along the road with His companions.

5. Narahari — "ki baliba sakhi kakhana saphala..." (GPT1 p. 197, no. 98; GCC 7.15)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: her wish has never come true — the Creator has always put obstacles in the way; but yesterday, hearing that Gaura was coming, she went up to the upper gallery and saw Him; the fragrance of His body reached her; Gora turned towards her — and just then her mother-in-law called her; she went away, but the mother-in-law let her go for water. Raga "yatharaga".

Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 15.¹³

5.1. "What shall I say, friend? Never has the wish of my heart come true:

to make me suffer, the pitiless Creator has put many obstacles in the way.

5.2. But yesterday, truly, along our road came the Beloved of my life;

hearing of it from people, I took courage, went up and stood on the upper gallery.¹⁴

5.3. Seeing the sweetness of that form, both my eyes were drowned in it;

I thought: if only I could become a bird and fly to Him!

5.4. The fragrance of His graceful body came and entered my nostrils;

I lost all calm — what shall I say? There was no end to my joy.

5.5. Gora turned and looked towards me — and at that very moment the old woman keeps calling and calling me; my heart shook — I came away, leaving that joy.

5.6. She gave me leave to go for water — I floated on waters of joy."

Narahari says: such a mother-in-law is found only by great good fortune.

13. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 197, no. 98 (scan PDF p. 456); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 98 (catalogue: NG-337). GCC — kirana 7, pada 15 (pp. 79–80; scan PDF pp. 84–85); GCC readings: "loka mukhe śuni sāhase upara-dālāne dāṁṇānu giyā", "bhāgyete mile". In letting her daughter-in-law go for water (to the Ganga), the mother-in-law unknowingly lets her see Gaura again — hence the poet's playful praise. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

14. "The Beloved of my life" (parāṇa-piyā) — the heroine's word for Gaura, as in the padas on the gopis for Krishna (cf. n. 46 of chapter 29); the translation is faithful to the author.

6. Narahari — "sajani, kata nā kahiba āmāra dukhera kāhinī kathā..." (GPT1 p. 197, no. 99; GCC 7.16)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: her mother-in-law, hearing that Gaura was coming, hurried home, bolted the door and sat in the courtyard on guard; the daughter-in-law pressed her eyes to a tiny window and saw Gaura among His companions; with a look she let Him know how it was with her; when the mother-in-law unbolted the door, the daughter-in-law was already sitting by the hearth. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 16.¹⁵

6.1. "Friend, however much I tell, there is no end to my tale of woe;

but yesterday the merciful Creator relieved my pain a little.

6.2. Leaving me at the cooking, my mother-in-law had gone out of the house;

hearing that Gaura was coming, she came back to me at once.

6.3. Glancing at me once more, she bolted the door of the house, sat down in the middle of the courtyard and kept watching warily on every side.

- 6.4. And here my heart is in turmoil — I see no way out; there was a tiny window — to it I pressed both my eyes.
- 6.5. Among His companions — the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa; who can fathom His ways?
Glancing about quite unobtrusively, He walks with the gait of an elephant.
- 6.6. Beholding but once the sweetness of that form, meeting His eyes with mine,
I, as if catching His sign, let Him know what state I was in.
- 6.7. Coming level with me, the Jewel of the clever smiled a little and spoke; and I sat down again at the cooking — and then my one-eyed mother-in-law unbolted the door.¹⁶
- 6.8. Squinting sideways, she looked at me with her left eye and was reassured."
Narahari says: if that calamity of an eye were gone too, all would be well!¹⁷

15. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 197, no. 99 (scan PDF p. 456); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 99 (catalogue: NG-090). GCC — kirana 7, pada 16 (p. 80; scan PDF p. 85) — the last pada of GCC before the lacuna in the scan (pp. 81–88 are missing; the next surviving one is GCC 7.29 = GPT1 no. 124). GCC readings: "āmāke randhane rākhiyā", "alapa gabākṣa āchila tāhāte saṁpinu yugala āmkhi", "calaye kuñjara-gati". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

16. "Crown of connoisseurs of rasa" (rasikaśekhara), "Jewel of the clever" (caturamaṇi), "the gait of an elephant" are epithets of Krishna transferred by the poet to Gaura; what He said the pada does not tell. As in the other GCC padas, the Lord merely passes along the street among His companions; all the rest takes place in the townswoman's heart.

17. The poet's joke at the one-eyed (kāṇī) mother-in-law — literally "let that calamity of an eye be gone too, and it will be well"; translated without softening.

7. Narahari — "ekadina āmi śāśuṛī nanadī basiyāchi āṅgināya..." (GPT1 p. 198, no. 100)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's comic story: once she, her mother-in-law and her sister-in-law were sitting in the courtyard when Gauranga passed by; the sister-in-law, gazing at Him, so forgot herself that her clothes fell from her; the daughter-in-law went to dress her — and forgot herself the same way; the mother-in-law came to rebuke them — and the same befell her; coming to their senses, the mother-in-law told her daughter-in-law to tell no one. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only; not in the surviving pages of GCC (it may have stood on the lost pp. 81–88).¹⁸

- 7.1. "One day we — I, my mother-in-law and my sister-in-law — were sitting in the courtyard; through the back gate I looked out and saw: Gauranga Raya is passing.
- 7.2. As befits a modest woman, I drew my veil and stayed seated;
but my sister-in-law, first of all, intoxicated by Madana, stood up, smiling and smiling.
- 7.3. Gazing and gazing through the window, she began to look at Gora; seeing that her clothes had come loose, my mother-in-law shouted at her.
- 7.4. Overpowered, gazing at Gora's form, my sister-in-law did not hear that shout; and as she gazed, her clothes fell from her — she was left quite naked.¹⁹
- 7.5. Seeing this, I, laughing and laughing, went to dress her — dress her, indeed! — looking at Gaura's form, I too was left naked.
- 7.6. To rebuke the two of us, my mother-in-law came over in anger — what a deed of the Creator! — looking at Gauranga, the old woman too became naked.
- 7.7. Naked, the three of us gazed at Gora; and as we gazed, He — the star of our eyes — went away, leaving us sightless.
- 7.8. Then all three of us came to our senses and bit our tongues; my mother-in-law said: 'Daughter-in-law, tell no one of today's disgrace.'"

7.9. Narahari says: who will say what? — the plight of all three is the same:

keep quiet and carefully cover the cut-off ear with your hair.²⁰

18. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 198, no. 100 (scan PDF pp. 456–457); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 100 (catalogue: NG-338). No witnesses. GPT1 nos. 86–99 and 124–180 stand in the same order as the padas of Narahari Chakravarti's Gaura-charita-chintamani (GCC 7.2–7.16 and 7.29 onwards), so nos. 100–110 and 120–123, absent from the OCR text of GCC, were checked against the scan of GCC (ed. 1947; IA gaurcharitra-chintamani, the only available copy): the scan (a 200-page PDF) lacks printed pp. 81–88 — after p. 80 (PDF 85; end of GCC 7.16 = no. 99) comes p. 89 at once (PDF 86; beginning of GCC 7.29 = no. 124), and PDF pp. 94–98 repeat pp. 89–93. The lost pages held GCC 7.17–7.28 — 12 padas; in GPT this place holds 15 padas signed Narahari (nos. 100–110, 120–123; between them — padas of Vasu, Lochana, Jnanadasa and no. 119 = GCC, kirana 2). Eight pages of GCC hold about 95 couplets of the long metre, and the 15 GPT padas about 113; so most of them probably come from GCC, but all 15 cannot have stood there, and which ones did cannot be established from the available sources. BR, Gita-chandrodaya, PK, KGC, PS, Narottama-vilasa — none of these padas. Hence nos. 100–110 and 120–123 are labelled "not established" (C), with a note on their probable origin in GCC. In tone — a rather coarse joke — this pada stands out among the GCC padas. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

19. 7.2–7.6: "intoxicated by Madana" (madane mātīyā) and the nakedness of the three women are as in the original; translated exactly, without additions. It is a hyperbole of self-forgetfulness (in the Bhagavata the gopis running to Krishna put their clothes and ornaments on wrongly — Bhag. 10.29), carried here to the point of a joke; the Lord merely passes by the house. The Chaitanya-bhagavata says plainly that in Navadvipa the Lord did not look at women, and the Gaudiya tradition does not accept worship of Gaura in the nagari mood (introductory note, chapter 27); such padas are a monument of late poetry, not an image of the Lord.

20. "To cover the cut-off ear with one's hair" (cula diyā kāṭā kāṇa ḍhākā) — a proverb: to hide one's disgrace.

8. Narahari — "ki kaba sajani āṅgināra mājhe..." (GPT1 p. 199, no. 101)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: hearing that Gora was approaching their house, she hastily finished the housework so as to go and look — but her mother-in-law, guessing, shouted at her, and she could not take a single step. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).²¹

8.1. "What shall I say, friend? We were sitting in the middle of the courtyard — and we heard: Gora, Shachi's son, is coming near our house.

8.2. To go there, I hastily finished the housework;
I was so impatient that no shame was left in me.

8.3. Guessing it, my mother-in-law shouted at me — my body trembled with fear; it was as if a thunderbolt crashed on my head — I could not take a step.

8.4. So I remained, stricken with grief — no word would leave my lips."
Narahari says: while there is a mother-in-law, the pain of the heart will not go.

21. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 199, no. 101 (scan PDF p. 458); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 101 (catalogue: NG-339). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (pp. 81–88), but this cannot be established (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

9. Narahari — "śuna śuna sai kālīkāra kathā ki āra baliba tore..." (GPT1 p. 199, no. 102)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: yesterday her mother-in-law was instructing her in the dharma of a noble wife — when a wondrous sound of kirtana arose; hearing the mridangas, the mother-in-law became as if mad, dropped her work and called her daughter-in-law to come along; to her excuses she replied: "Look but once on that moonlike face — and your life will not be in vain." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).²²

9.1. "Listen, listen, friend, about yesterday — what more shall I tell you?
My mother-in-law set about teaching me the dharma of a noble, faithful wife.

- 9.2. And at that very moment a wondrous sound of kirtana arose — hearing the voice of the mridanga, my mother-in-law became as if mad.
- 9.3. Dropping her own work, hurrying there, unable to keep still on the way, she says to me impatiently: 'Come with me!'
- 9.4. But I told her: 'All the housework is lying here undone; and besides, I am a wife of a noble family — how can I go there?'
- 9.5. Hearing this, she says: 'Doing the housework, you die every day; look but once on that moonlike face — and make your birth fruitful.'
- 9.6. Hearing this, I joyfully hurried there and gazed to my eyes' content."
Narahari says: I take upon myself all the ills of your mother-in-law!²³

22. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 199, no. 102 (scan PDF p. 458); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 102 (catalogue: NG-340). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

23. The strict mother-in-law whom the sound of Gaura's kirtana makes "mad" is an image of the power of sankirtana, which even the elders of Nadia could not resist (cf. Chaitanya-bhagavata, Madhya-khanda: the whole town gathers for the Lord's kirtana). Her words "make your birth fruitful" are a call to the darshan of the Lord; the poet's praise is a formula of fond admiration (bālāi laiṃ, cf. n. 43 of chapter 29).

10. Narahari — "śuna śuna sai dibā abasāne..." (GPT1 pp. 199–200, no. 103)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: at the close of day, hearing that Gaura was coming, she joyfully went out of the gate — and, as ill luck would have it, ran into her father-in-law there; he heaped abuse on her and in anger threatened to leave Nadia; at these words her heart sank. The poet's consolation: who can leave Nadia? Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).²⁴

- 10.1. "Listen, listen, friend: at the close of day, full of joy, hearing that Gaura was coming, I went out and stood by the gate.
- 10.2. The Creator mocked me: there I ran into my father-in-law;
how many harsh words he said to me, friend — there is no counting them.
- 10.3. In great anger he says: 'I will leave Nadia and live elsewhere — this very day!'
Hearing this, my heart stood still — all my hopes were gone.
- 10.4. So I remained, stricken with grief — who could console me?"
Narahari says: why worry? Who is able to leave Nadia?²⁵

24. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 199–200, no. 103 (scan PDF pp. 458–459); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 103 (catalogue: NG-341). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

25. The poet's consolation means: no one will leave Nadia, where Gaura is (cf. no. 13: the father-in-law, on seeing Gaura, himself dances with arms upraised). Translated literally.

11. Narahari — "śuna śuna ago mane chila āśā..." (GPT1 p. 200, no. 104)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: she had hoped to live in happiness, but the Creator settled her in a thicket of thorns: her father-in-law coaches her kind mother-in-law — "Nimai's mridanga will soon sound to drive Nadia mad, and the young wives will run, heeding no one; go quickly and bolt the door from outside"; how is she to see Him now? Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).²⁶

- 11.1. "Listen, listen, friend: I had a hope — to live in great happiness, but the Creator has settled me in a forest of thorns — I am forever dying of this sorrow.

- 11.2. My father-in-law — a 'lord of virtues' — gives me much pain; my mother-in-law is very kind, but he teaches her harsh words.
- 11.3. Sitting in private, he says to her softly: 'You stay at home, and I will go there, settle the matter and come back quickly.
- 11.4. Soon Nimai's mridanga will sound to drive Nadia mad — the young wives will run there, no one will heed anyone.
- 11.5. So go quickly and bolt the door of the house from outside.'
Much of this kind he says, and we hear it — and we are ashamed.
- 11.6. How then am I to see Him? The house has become unbearable."
Narahari says: one who is clever — would that frighten her?²⁷

26. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 200, no. 104 (scan PDF p. 459); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 104 (catalogue: NG-091). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

27. The father-in-law calls the Lord by His household name — "Nimai" (nimāi); his fear of the kirtana that "drives Nadia mad" is an admission of the power of sankirtana (cf. nos. 9 and 13). The poet's consolation is the same convention of the purvaraga padas as the praise of the townswomen's tricks (n. 7).

12. Narahari — "dukhera kāhinī ki kaba sajani..." (GPT1 pp. 200–201, no. 105)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: she burns in the taunts of the neighbours; her friend knows about her mother-in-law and sister-in-law, while her father-in-law — a hunchbacked old man who can hardly walk — prays to Shiva with offerings that the young wives may not leave the house; and when Gaura begins kirtana, the old man, hearing the mridangas, looks about in alarm, abuses everyone and sets a guard at the gate. The poet: who will forbid going by the back gate? Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).*²⁸

- 12.1. "What shall I tell of my woes, friend? I can bear it no longer:
I burn in the fire of the neighbours' taunts.
- 12.2. How my mother-in-law and sister-in-law treat me — do you not know, friend?
Of my father-in-law's 'virtues' it is not fit to speak — and yet I will tell you.
- 12.3. He sits at home — he has no strength even to walk, quite bent double — and, gathering all sorts of things, he performs puja to Shiva in every manner.
- 12.4. With his cloth wound round his neck and both palms joined, he begs a boon:
'May the young wives keep still and not leave the house for a moment!'²⁹
- 12.5. Thus, with many prayers, he gets his way;
and I, standing behind the screen, hear it all — and am deeply ashamed.
- 12.6. And listen further: whenever the Jewel of virtues begins kirtana, the old man, hearing the voice of the mridanga, is all alarm;
- 12.7. with eyes wide open he looks on every side — it is frightful to see — and, twisting his face, speaks harsh words to everyone.
- 12.8. Guessing our intentions, he sets a guard at the gate."
Narahari says: but who forbids going by the back gate?

28. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 200–201, no. 105 (scan PDF pp. 459–460); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 105 (catalogue: NG-092). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

29. A cloth wound round the neck and joined palms are a gesture of abject supplication. The old man prays to Shiva for a worldly end — that his daughters-in-law stay at home; the poet sets his prayer against Gaura's kirtana (12.6), but does not disparage the worship of Shiva.

13. Narahari — "śuna go sajani śvaśurera kichu caritra..." (GPT1 p. 201, no. 106)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: her father-in-law instructed her at length and made her swear to guard the family's honour; but no sooner had she sworn than the sound of the mridanga reached her — and she ran to where Gauranga was. The father-in-law chased her in a rage with a club — but, glancing angrily at Gaurangachand, he could not take his eyes away, was caught in the net of prema, threw down the club and, raising his arms with cries of "Hari, Hari!", broke into dance; afterwards he praised his daughter-in-law and himself begged her pardon. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).³⁰

13.1. "Listen, friend, I will tell you something of my father-in-law's ways:

in private he instructed me at length, and then he says to me earnestly:

13.2. 'One thing troubles me greatly; and you are the daughter of good people:

touch my feet and swear that you will guard the honour of both families — otherwise what will become of us?'³¹

13.3. Hearing this, I swore many oaths and dispelled his doubts — and just then the nectar of the mridanga's sound entered my ears.

13.4. At once I ran off to where Gauranga Raya disports Himself; learning of this deed of mine, my father-in-law became like fire.

13.5. He came running after me, seizing a fearsome club — what could I do? — looking at my father-in-law, my heart stood still.

13.6. But with angry eyes he glanced just once at Gaurangachand — and could not turn his eyes away: at once he fell into the net of prema.

13.7. In supreme joy he flung away the club from his hand and, raising both arms and crying 'Hari, Hari!', he danced beside himself.

13.8. Having seen many such wonders, I went back home; after a while he too came and praised me at length.

13.9. Taking my hand, he anxiously began to confess his fault;

seeing him so distressed, I bowed to his feet — and that made him glad."

13.10. Narahari says: now at last all awkwardness is gone; by your grace the old man's hard heart has become good.³²

30. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 201, no. 106 (scan PDF p. 460); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 106 (catalogue: NG-093). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

31. 13.2: "one thing troubles me greatly" (eka mora bahu bhrama; so GPT1 and GPT2) — the sense of the opening words is unclear; "both families" (dudiga) — the father's family and the husband's.

32. 13.6–13.7: the father-in-law who rushes at his daughter-in-law with a club and, at the sight of Gaura, breaks into dance crying "Hari!" is an image of the transforming power of the Lord's darshan and of sankirtana; cf. the conversion of the opponents of kirtana in the Chaitanya-bhagavata (Madhya-khanda). "By your grace" (tuyā kṛpābale) — in the signatures of these padas the poet addresses the heroine; the words can also be taken as addressed to Gaura.

14. Narahari — "rajanī dibasa kakhana svapane..." (GPT1 pp. 201–202, no. 107)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's complaint: all her friends' hopes have been fulfilled, but she is "a wife in the corner": her mother-in-law abuses her whenever she steps over the threshold, and to the ghat of the Suradhuni she is accompanied by her watchful sister-in-law, so that she dares not even lift her veil. The poet advises her to outwit the wily one. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).³³

- 14.1. "Neither by day nor by night, nor even in dreams, do I know a trace of happiness;
my heart is worn out with longing, my body wasted away.
- 14.2. You will say: everyone's hopes have been fulfilled — why not yours?
What shall I say? Through the fault of my karma I have become a wife who sits in the corner.
- 14.3. If I step outside the house, my mother-in-law heaps abuse on me:
'Faithful? Unfaithful! No thought for your husband!' — I am a speck of grit in her eye.
- 14.4. And if some day I go to the ghat of the Suradhuni to bathe — trusting no one else, my relentless sister-in-law goes along with me.
- 14.5. If on some pretext I wish to see Someone just once, at her fierceness my body trembles — I dare not lift my thick veil.
- 14.6. She is very cunning, and to play tricks before her is frightening; my heart is ill at ease — so, having bathed, I come straight home."
- 14.7. Narahari says: you, little friend, are a simpleton — why fear your sister-in-law?
To rob a thief you must throw dust in his eyes.³⁴

33. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 201–202, no. 107 (scan PDF pp. 460–461); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 107 (catalogue: NG-094). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

34. "Someone" (kāhāke) — a bashful withholding of Gaura's name. "Little friend" (ājuli) — here, from the sense, "simpleton" (cf. n. 7 of chapter 29: the exact meaning of the word is not established). "To rob a thief you must throw dust in his eyes" — a proverb (lit. "doing highway robbery upon a thief, one must throw dust in his eyes"). The advice to outwit the elders is a poetic convention (n. 7).

15. Narahari — "ki kaba sajani manera bedana kalañke pūṛila deśa..." (GPT1 p. 202, no. 108)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's complaint: the whole neighbourhood is full of gossip about her, though she is in no way to blame — she has only heard Gauranga's name from people, has never seen Him, and He does not know her; the neighbours sing of her "disgrace", for in youth every woman is to blame. The poet does not believe her: there is no smoke without fire. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).*³⁵

- 15.1. "What shall I say, friend, of the pain of my heart? The whole neighbourhood is full of talk about me, though I am in no way to blame — not a trace of fault.
- 15.2. 'Gauranga, Gauranga' — I hear from people's lips, but what He is like I do not know;
I am a wife of a noble family, I sit in a corner of the house — who does not know me?
- 15.3. What beautiful Gauranga is like I have never seen, even from the corner of my eye;
I swear to you, I tell you truly: He does not even know me.
- 15.4. Dying of shame, I stay at home — I never go to other people's houses; and still these neighbours of ours sing on and on of my disgrace.
- 15.5. Hearing and hearing empty slander, I burn twice over — what can I say, and to whom? In youth one is just there to take the blame."
- 15.6. Narahari says: say what you will — the ear does not believe it:
if there were nothing, would anyone speak of another for no reason?³⁶

35. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 202, no. 108 (scan PDF p. 461); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 108 (catalogue: NG-095). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). The last couplet is repeated in no. 123 (no. 21). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

36. The townswoman's denial and the poet's disbelief are a game: in the padas of this series the very gossip about the "disgrace" of loving Gaura is a sign of that love (cf. no. 16: "the whole world has gone mad with love of Him — why should I be the one to blame?"). Translated as in the original.

16. Narahari Dasa — "ramaṇīramaṇa bhubanamohana gaurāṅga-ratana sai..." (GPT1 pp. 202–203, no. 109)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman asks her friend: the whole world — children, old people, young men and women — has gone mad with love of Gauranga, all float in joy seeing His dance and hearing the kirtana — why is she alone defamed? Better to drown herself than to live in Nadia; the poet: in life and in death Gora will not forsake her. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).*³⁷

16.1. "The Delight of women, the Enchanter of the world, Gauranga is a jewel, friend:
the whole world has gone mad with love of Him — why should I be the one to blame?"³⁸

16.2. Children, old people, young men and young women weep at the sight of Gauranga — why then am I alone disgraced? — words fail my lips.

16.3. That Gaurachandra is the joy of the world: everyone floats in joy; but from my joyless eyes tears stream — through the fault of my karma, no doubt.

16.4. Whoever sees His dancing, whoever hears His kirtana — becomes intoxicated; whom does it harm if I too, seeing and hearing, lose my senses?

16.5. I will live in Nadia no more — I will throw myself into the water and drown!"
In life and in death Gora will not forsake you, says Narahari Dasa.³⁹

37. Signature — "Dasa Narahari" (dāsa narahari). GPT1 — pp. 202–203, no. 109 (misprinted "169"; scan PDF pp. 461–462); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 109 (catalogue: NG-096). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

38. "The Delight of women" (ramaṇīramaṇa) — an epithet of Krishna transferred to Gaura (cf. n. 16); translated faithfully to the author. The pada itself speaks of the whole world's love for Gaura — children, old people, young men (16.2) — and of His kirtana (16.4): the townswoman is not alone in her love.

39. "I will throw myself into the water and drown" is the usual formula of a loving woman's despair in the padas, not an intention; the poet's answer reverses it: Gora will not forsake the one who loves Him, either in life or in death.

17. Narahari — "bidhātāra mane nā jāni ki āche..." (GPT1 p. 203, no. 110)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's complaint: yesterday she went to see Gorachand, and her husband, learning of it, heaped abuse on her; her brother-in-law, unable to bear her distress, himself rebuked his brother. How then is the wish of her heart to be fulfilled? The poet: do not grieve — folly will be destroyed. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).*⁴⁰

17.1. "I do not know what the Creator had in mind when he gave me a human birth:
what shall I say? — in a fierce wildfire of sorrow my heart is ever burning.

17.2. Yesterday I went there to see Gorachand, the treasure of my life; hearing of it, my senseless husband heaped hundreds of abuses on me.

17.3. My husband's younger brother was near — he cannot bear to see me unhappy; hearing the reproach and the abuse, he at once rebuked his brother soundly.

17.4. Tell me, tell me, friend: how then will the wish of my heart be fulfilled?"
Narahari says: grieve no more — folly will be destroyed.⁴¹

40. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 203, no. 110 (scan PDF p. 462); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 110 (catalogue: NG-097). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

41. "The treasure of my life" (prāṇadhana) — the townswoman's word for Gaura (cf. n. 14). "Folly will be destroyed" (kumati haibe nāśa) — from the sense of the pada, the folly of the husband who abuses his wife for taking darshan of Gaura: the poet promises not a meeting in defiance of the husband but a change in the husband himself (cf. GCC 7.29 = GPT1 no. 124: "my husband is very good" — the husband himself praises Nimai and does not forbid the wives to see Him). On the motif "disregarding their husbands" see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

18. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo parāṇa sajani kahie tomāra prati..." (GPT1 pp. 205–206, no. 120)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: in her house she is loved — and yesterday she went with her husband's aunt to the house of Ai (Shachi); Ai was very affectionate to her, but she did not see Gaurangachand, and her pain doubled; on the way back, envying Shachi's neighbours, she suddenly saw Gora with His companions on her own road, lifted her veil a little — and lost her composure; the aunt too could not stand firm. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).⁴²

- 18.1. "Listen, listen, friend of my heart, to what I tell you:
my father-in-law and mother-in-law — I know not for what virtues — love me very much;
- 18.2. my sister-in-law holds me dear as life and never scolds me — so yesterday I went with my husband's aunt to the house of Ai.⁴³
- 18.3. Ai was very affectionate to me — what need to tell it all!
But I did not see Gaurangachand — and the pain of my heart doubled.
- 18.4. After staying a little while, I took my leave and set off, sad at heart, and I saw that the young wives who live in that quarter are in great happiness.
- 18.5. I thought: if only we all lived in this quarter, then the hope that was in my heart would easily come true.
- 18.6. With quick steps I head for home, friend — and on the very road by which we go Gora stands with His dear companions.
- 18.7. My husband's aunt beside me — I was in a fix: no word would leave my lips; lifting my veil a little, I saw that moonlike face.
- 18.8. My clothes slip from my body, my whole body trembles;
somehow, slowly, slowly, I began to move my feet.
- 18.9. Turning back and back I gazed — my heart grew utterly bewildered; it resolved for certain: neither shame, nor fear for the family, nor dharma will remain.⁴⁴
- 18.10. On that road my husband's aunt stopped too: seeing Him, she could not stand firm."
Narahari says: seeing that form, who would not lose herself?

42. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 205–206, no. 120 (scan PDF pp. 464–465); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 120 (catalogue: NG-099). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18): in its structure (a visit with the husband's aunt to another quarter, a meeting with Gora on the way back) the pada is close to GCC 7.30 = GPT1 no. 125 (with the aunt — to the house of Murari Gupta). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

43. "My husband's aunt" (pisesa, pisi-śāśurī — the father-in-law's sister). "Ai" (āi, "mother") — Shachi-devi: the townswoman had gone to the house of the Lord's mother.

44. 18.8–18.9: the slipping clothes, the trembling, the resolve to cast off "shame, fear for the family and dharma" are stated plainly in the original (cf. n. 9, and n. 41 of chapter 29: the formula of the supremacy of prema over worldly dharma); the Lord merely stands with His companions on the road. The tradition does not accept worship of Gaura in the nagari mood (introductory note, chapter 27).

19. Narahari — "ki baliba ogo nanada āmāra, kebala biṣera phala..." (GPT1 pp. 206–207, no. 121)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's story: her sister-in-law is a veritable poison fruit, and no trick can be played before her; but she trusts the friends and lets her brother's wife go to them at any time — and on this pretext she went yesterday to see Gaurangachand; there follows a description of His form from head to foot. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).⁴⁵

- 19.1. "What shall I say, friend? My sister-in-law is a veritable poison fruit:
she is very cunning — before her we cannot play any trick.
- 19.2. But she trusts you very much — the pretence cannot be seen through:
morning, evening, night — she does not forbid me to come here.
- 19.3. On this pretext I went yesterday to see Gaurangachand:
is there a young woman who, seeing Him, could keep her composure?
- 19.4. How the weight of curling locks sways upon His back!
How lovely on His brow are the curls and the tilaka — to what shall I compare them?
- 19.5. How the brows curve, what a glance, what a signal of the eyes!
How wondrous the smile on His lips — His speech flows in a stream of nectar!
- 19.6. How the earrings sway in His ears, how beautiful His cheeks!
What a pearl in His nose, what a radiance of the lovely chin!
- 19.7. What a curve of the arms, what a garland of flowers at His throat!
How slender the waist, and the thighs like inverted plantain stems!
- 19.8. How the radiance of the nails of His lovely feet steals away the heart!"
Narahari says: having seen that form, how did you ever get home?⁴⁶

45. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 206–207, no. 121 (scan PDF pp. 465–466); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 121 (catalogue: NG-100). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

46. 19.4–19.8 — a description of the Lord's form "from head to foot" (rupa-varnana) in the usual images of the padas on Krishna and Gaura (curling locks down the back — Gaura before sannyasa; a slender waist, thighs like "inverted plantain stems", the radiance of the nails) — this is contemplation of the Lord's beauty, not a worldly description. "A pearl in His nose" (nāsāra mukutā) — so in the original.

20. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo parāṇa sajani nibedi tomāra āge..." (GPT1 p. 207, no. 122)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman's complaint: her sister-in-law is hard-hearted and knows nothing of another's pain; whenever she hears that Gauranga has come to someone's house, she, on some pretext and unbeknown to the old woman, runs there herself — but forbids her brother's wife. The poet: such is the way of sisters-in-law. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).⁴⁷

- 20.1. "Listen, listen, friend of my heart, to what I confide to you:
day and night I am dying with longing — my own home feels like a stranger's.
- 20.2. My sister-in-law is hard — what shall I say of her? It is bitter even to tell:
of another's pain she knows nothing at all — she knows only her own pleasure.
- 20.3. If she hears from anyone that Gauranga has come to someone's house, she thinks up so many tricks — and the old woman of the house does not see through them —
- 20.4. and off she runs there, — but me, and this is the unfair part, she forbids!" Narahari says: what is wrong in that? She is showing what a sister-in-law is.

47. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 207, no. 122 (scan PDF p. 466); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 122 (catalogue: NG-101). No witnesses; probably from the lost pages of GCC (n. 18). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

21. Narahari — "sajani to sabe dekhe sukha pāi..." (GPT1 p. 207, no. 123)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman whose friends question her about yesterday laughs and denies it: such talk does not become her. The poet does not believe her. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: not established — GPT only (see n. 18).*⁴⁸

21.1. "Friend, seeing you all I am glad — that is why I come here;
and you ask me about yesterday — it is simply laughable!

21.2. Tell me, tell me: how would such talk befit me?
Knowing me, you say such things — it pains me."

21.3. Narahari says: say what you will — the ear does not believe it:
if there were nothing, would anyone speak of another for no reason?

48. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 207, no. 123 (scan PDF p. 466); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 123 (catalogue: NG-342). No witnesses. A short pada (3 couplets); the signature (21.3) repeats word for word the signature of no. 108 (no. 15, 15.6) — perhaps the answer of another townswoman in the same conversation, or a fragment. In tone it continues no. 15 (denial and the poet's disbelief; see n. 36). C. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

Summary of chapter 30

*The chapter continues the padas signed "Narahari" from section 3.2 of GPT — the townswomen of Nadia telling their friends in the morning how, despite the strictness of their mothers-in-law, sisters-in-law, fathers-in-law and husbands, they saw Gaura. Nos. 94–99 (nos. 1–6) were found in Narahari Chakravarti's *Gaura-charita-chintamani (kirana 7, padas 10–12, 14–16; "probably Chakravarti" — B; no. 97 in GPT is only the second half of the GCC pada 7.14). Nos. 100–110 and 120–123 (nos. 7–21) stand in GPT in the place of GCC 7.17–7.28, but those pages (pp. 81–88) are lost in the only available scan of GCC, and there are no other witnesses: they are labelled "not established" (C), with a note on their probable origin in GCC (n. 18). In several padas the strict elders — a mother-in-law, a father-in-law, the husband's aunt — themselves lose their composure on hearing the kirtana or seeing Gaura and become His devotees (nos. 9, 13, 18); the direct motifs of attraction and of deceiving the elders are rendered exactly, with notes on the position of the tradition (introductory note, chapter 27).

Chapter 31. Nagari Padas — V: the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 119, 124–145): the townswomen's dreams

On what nagari-bhava is, the position of the tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) and the rules of translation, see the introductory note to the section of nagari padas in chapter 27; on the two poets named Narahari (Narahari Sarakara and Narahari Chakravarti) and on the attribution labels ("probably Sarakara", "probably Chakravarti", "not established"), see the introductory note to the "Narahari" appendix in chapter 17.

1. Narahari — "ghumaka-ghore bhora śacīnandana..." (GPT1 p. 205, no. 119; GCC 2.13)

Gaura asleep. At the end of the night Shachi's son, deep in sleep, as if immersed in a sleep of long ago in the kunja, softly says: "Wake, crown-jewel of women, beautiful one! Without the song of your words My hearing has no joy; open your eyes, give Me a smile; rise — I Myself will adorn you." This is not a townswoman's speech: GPT placed the pada in the section of nagari padas, but in GCC it stands in the account of the last part of the Lord's night. Raga lalita. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 2, pada 13.¹

- 1.1. Shachi's son, held by deep sleep — who can fathom His play of prema? — as if immersed in a sleep of long ago in the kunja, speaks thus, sweetly and softly:
- 1.2. "Wake, wake, crown-jewel of women, beautiful one — how long will you sleep at the end of the night? Without drinking the song of the nectar of your words, My restless hearing is bereft of the least joy.
- 1.3. Leave your closed eyelids: with the tremulous corners of your eyes, with a graceful movement, do Me honour. My heart is bound — I say it without fear: smile and give Me joy.
- 1.4. Understand My wish — rise and sit up: with My own hands I will adorn you." So speaks Narahari's Lord — and says it again, lost to Himself.²

1. Signature — "Narahari" (narahari pahum̐ — "Narahari's Lord", i.e. the poet's Lord). GPT1 — p. 205, no. 119 (raga lalita; scan PDF p. 464); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 119 (catalogue: NG-098). GCC — kirana 2, pada 13 (ed. 1947, p. 30; scan PDF p. 35), "lalita-rāga". The second kirana of GCC describes the last part of the Lord's night: the bedchamber, the bees flying into the house, the birds that wake Him at dawn; in the next pada (GCC 2.14, not taken into GPT) these words spoken in sleep are heard by Gadadhara Pandita, who wakes and then keeps watch by Gaura's bed (2.15–2.16). Thus in the author Gaura in sleep speaks the words of Krishna waking Radha in the kunja at the end of the night (cf. the padas on the waking of Radha and Krishna, nishanta-lila): this is a remembrance of Vraja, not nagari-bhava; on Gadadhara as the embodiment of Radha's bhava in Gaura-lila — GGD. The pada is in Vrajabuli (tachu, mohe, tohe, majhu). B. The pada stands in the GPT section of nagari padas — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

2. 1.2: "the song of the nectar of your words" (bacanāmṛta-saṅgīta) — so GPT1 and GPT2; GCC has "the nectar of your sigh" (sītkr̥ta, "sitkara" — a sigh from descriptions of a lovers' meeting), a more explicit reading; the GPT text is translated. 1.3: "do Me honour" — after the GCC reading "kari kara sammāna" (GPT: "kari mana māna", sense unclear); "My heart is bound" — GPT "mana mana bandha" (probably a misprint for GCC "mama mana bandhaka" — "My heart is in pledge [to you]"); "give Me joy" (GPT "rabhasa") — GCC "give Me the jewel of a smile" (hāsi ratana). 1.4: "says it again, lost to Himself" (GPT "bahuri nigadata kakhana biśāri"; GCC "bahu binigadata kathana bisāri" — "speaks much, forgetting what He says") — the sense of the last words is conjectural.

2. Narahari — "mora pati ati sujana sajani..." (GPT1 pp. 207–208, no. 124; GCC 7.29)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman tells her friend: yesterday her husband, alone with his father, said that Nimai Pandita has the power of God, has mastered His senses, is righteous, merciful to wicked people and full of the joy of kirtana; therefore the young wives should not be forbidden to see Him — His darshan destroys all that is inauspicious; as in Vraja Krishna was not recognised by the brahmanas but by their wives, so it is here. Hearing this she rejoiced, and when Gaura passed along the street with Gadadhara, Nityananda and His companions, she went out and gazed on Him to her heart's content: the other women were held back by their mothers-in-law, but no one held her back. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 29.³

- 2.1. "My husband, friend, is a very good man: listen to what he is like. Yesterday, sitting alone with his father, he said to him:
- 2.2. 'In the town of Nadia is Nimai Pandita: in Him is the power of God. Who created such a wonder I do not know; there is no end to His virtues.
- 2.3. One so master of His senses and so righteous I have never seen with my own eyes. To wicked people He is boundlessly merciful; He floats in the joy of kirtana.
- 2.4. Therefore I say: never, not even by oversight, forbid your daughters-in-law [to go to Him]. I know for certain: by His darshan all that is inauspicious perishes.
- 2.5. Fortunate are all our young wives — what more can I say? I cannot even express it. Therefore blessed is this birth as a woman — I take upon myself all its ills.
- 2.6. But we, drunk with false pride, live day and night like the blind: such a Wonder in the midst of Nadia — and we cannot recognise Him.
- 2.7. In Vraja the brahmanas did not know the Lord of Vraja — the brahmanas' wives attained Him. So it is here, there is no doubt of it — I have understood, having reflected.⁴
- 2.8. So father and son talked long in many ways; hidden nearby, I listened and listened — and my heart rejoiced.
- 2.9. I thought: if only I could see Gorachand right now — with the corners of my eyes I would tell Him all this.
- 2.10. Just then, from the direction of our quarter, joyful cries rose again and again; knowing that Gaura was coming, I hurried out and stood by the road.
- 2.11. From afar I gazed my fill — what wondrous beauty! The radiance of His body, outshining gold, blazes in every direction.
- 2.12. On His left is Gadadhara, on His right Nityananda, bliss itself; all around are His other companions: all gaze at that moon of a face.
- 2.13. With His own companions the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa comes, overflowing with rasa; who, seeing that lovely glance, can keep hold of her heart?
- 2.14. Smiling, as if in conversation, the Moon of Nadia showers streams of nectar; the grace of His form has captivated the world — like the snare of Madana.
- 2.15. Knowing that the Lord of their life was coming, the young women of our quarter came running; their harsh mothers-in-law and sisters-in-law held them back with many words.⁵
- 2.16. But no one held me back — I fulfilled my heart's desire." Narahari says: she whose husband is so gracious — what obstacles has she?

3. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 207–208, no. 124 (scan PDF pp. 466–467); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 124 (catalogue: NG-102). GCC — kirana 7, pada 29 (ed. 1947, pp. 89–90; scan PDF pp. 86–87; the pada begins with the first line of p. 89 — directly after the lost pp. 81–88, see n. 18 of chapter 30). GPT nos. 124–126 are the last padas of the 7th kirana of GCC

(7.29–7.31). GCC readings: "seirūpa hethā", "hema jiniyā" (2.11; GPT1 and GPT2 "hena", a misprint; translated after GCC), "āise dhāyā ... nibāre aneka kaiyā" (2.15), "pāinu manera sādā" (2.16). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

4. The husband's speech is praise of the Lord from the lips of a householder of Nadia: Nimai Pandita has "the power of God" (īśvara-śakti), has mastered the senses (jitendriya), is merciful to the wicked — cf. in CB (Madhya) the deliverance of Jagai and Madhai and the words that the Lord's kirtana purifies even sinners. 2.7 — the story of the wives of the sacrificing brahmanas (Bhag. 10.23): the brahmana priests did not recognise Krishna and refused Him food, while their wives left everything, came to Him and received His mercy. So in this pada the rightness of the women who long to see Gaura is affirmed by a husband in conversation with his father.

5. "The Lord of their life" (prāṇanātha) — the townswoman's word for Gaura, as in the padas of the gopis about Krishna (cf. n. 14 of chapter 30); translated faithfully to the author. The townswoman herself in this pada only gazes at Gaura from afar, standing by the road.

3. Narahari — "śuna śuna sai bidhi arasika..." (GPT1 pp. 208–209, no. 125; GCC 7.30)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman laments that the Creator has not settled any of Gaura's companions in her street — then He would come there too; yesterday she went with her husband's aunt to the house of Murari Gupta, where the young wives were preparing sandal paste and garlands for Gauranga's coming, but the aunt took her away; on the road, looking back, she saw Gaura with His companions — lips, smile, brows, sandal on His brow, necklace, gait; then her husband's elder brother appeared with his students, but he too was looking at Gaura, and she, covering her face, slipped away. The poet teases her about her shame. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 7, pada 30.⁶

- 3.1. "Listen, listen, friend: the Creator has no taste for rasa — I have understood how he goes about his work; otherwise why would he give me such pain day and night?
- 3.2. Had he settled one of Gaura's companions here, then the Moon of Nadia would come to our street too and dispel our grief.
- 3.3. That is why I tell you: yesterday, leaving all the housework, I went with my husband's aunt to that quarter — to the house of Murari Gupta.⁷
- 3.4. There the young wives were rejoicing — their happiness had no bounds: for the Beloved of their life they were grinding sandal paste and stringing garlands of flowers.
- 3.5. From them I heard that Gauranga would come there; but the aunt, her business done, set off home — and I could not stay.
- 3.6. Lost in thought, having gone some way, I looked back at the road: the young crown prince of Nadia, finely dressed, was coming with His companions.
- 3.7. What wondrous beauty of the lips! The teeth — a gleam of pearls; the smile showers streams of nectar; the face — the splendour of the autumn moon.
- 3.8. And the curve of His brows, the glances of His curving eyes — in so many ways! The sandal on His brow is so lovely — at one look all young women are drowned.
- 3.9. At His throat sways a necklace of gold and gems, lighting up the world; His gait is so enchanting — who in the world, seeing it, would not forget himself?
- 3.10. In the ocean of that beauty I bathed in joy, standing by my husband's aunt; turning round, I saw: behind us, with his students, came my husband's elder brother.
- 3.11. By good luck he did not see me — he was looking at Gaura; covering my face with my veil, lowering my eyes, I carefully hurried away."

3.12. Narahari says: your shame before your husband's elder brother — do I not know it? Were I to tell it all, you could not stay in this land.⁸

6. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 208–209, no. 125 (scan PDF pp. 467–468); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 125 (catalogue: NG-103). GCC — kirana 7, pada 30 (ed. 1947, pp. 90–91; scan PDF pp. 87–88). It is followed in GCC by a short concluding stanza (7.31, metre "surata-surati": the townswomen, recalling the past day, each tell their own) and the colophon of the 7th kirana: "the morning doings... the description of the doings of the nagaris of Navadvipa"; stanza 7.31 was not taken into GPT. GCC readings: "prāṇapriyā" (3.4), "gaurāṅga āsibe hethā", "rahite nā pālum tathā" (3.5), "daśana tāraka-chaṭā" — "the teeth — a gleam of stars" (3.7), "majaye yubātī jāti" (3.8), "dekhilum" (3.10). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

7. Murari Gupta — a physician from Shrihatta, the Lord's companion from childhood, author of a Sanskrit life of Him (Murari's "Kadacha"; our translation); his house in Navadvipa is one of the places of the Lord's kirtanas (CB, Madhya).

8. "The husband's elder brother" (bhāsura) — before him a young wife by custom covers her face and does not show herself. He himself, walking with his students (paṇyā), was also "looking at Gora". The last line is the poet's joke: the whole street would know at whom she was gazing; translated as in the original.

4. Narahari — "śuna śuna sai nīśira kāhinī..." (GPT1 pp. 209–210, no. 126; GCC 8.2)

Nagari-bhava; a dream. A townswoman tells her friend about the night: in the evening, thinking of Gaura, she went with her mother-in-law to the house of Srivasa Pandita, where Gora sat among His companions and talked smilingly with Gadadhara; for fear of her mother-in-law she could not stay and returned home, lay down without supper and fell asleep only late at night; in her dream she came again to Srivasa's house, anointed Gora with sandal paste, put garlands on Him — and on some pretext He embraced her. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 2.⁹

4.1. "Listen, listen, friend: what happened at night I will carefully tell you. At dusk, my work done, I was sitting at home.

4.2. Thinking and thinking of Gora's beauty and virtues — I do not know what came over me — I went with my mother-in-law to the house of Srivasa Pandita Thakura.

4.3. There, among His peerless companions, Gora is seated — the thief of the precious composure of young women, well-born and chaste.

4.4. His golden body shines, anointed with lovely sandal paste — as if Mount Sumeru had been smeared with the ground-up autumn moon.

4.5. A garland of malati sways at His throat — like a snare enchanting the world; hundreds upon hundreds of Madanas swoon at the sight of the shape of His face.

4.6. Smiling, He holds sweet converse with Gadadhara; showering nectar in streams, He soothes the ache of the ears.

4.7. Ah, ah! At the sight of such beauty, what becomes of the heart! What shall I say — not for one moment could I gaze my fill of Him with both my eyes.

4.8. Wretched me, what could I do? The Creator made woman dependent. For fear of my mother-in-law I could not stay and came home, dying at heart.

4.9. In grief I lay down; when my sister-in-law asked, I told her: 'I am not hungry, do not wake me — I feel somehow unwell.'

4.10. She, a simple soul, went away, and I lay there distraught; my body was restless, friend — sleep came only deep in the night.

4.11. In my dream I went to the house of Srivasa Thakura and saw Him; with all the longing of my heart I anointed Gora's body with fragrant sandal paste.

4.12. Carefully I put on His neck garland after fresh garland of many flowers; and the life of Narahari, the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa, on some pretext embraced [me]."¹⁰

9. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 209–210, no. 126 (scan PDF pp. 468–469); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 126 (catalogue: NG-343). GCC — kirana 8, pada 2 (ed. 1947, p. 92; scan PDF p. 89), "kācidāha — yathā[rāga]" ("one of them said"). The 8th kirana of GCC (colophon: "...the description of the tales of dreams") continues the nagaris' "morning": it opens with pada 8.1 (raga vibhasa, not taken into GPT) — at dawn the friends gather, laughing, and each without shame tells her dream; GPT nos. 126–144 are these tales. GCC readings: "basiyā āchilum", "gorā rūpa-guṇa", "śarada śaśī" (4.4), "bhubana-mohana-phānda", "badana-chānda" (4.5), "mākhālum gaura gāya" (4.11). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

10. The townswoman's dream (4.11–4.12): the embrace (āliṅgana) is a direct motif of sambhoga; translated exactly, adding nothing. The dream is her imagination: the Lord in His lila did not touch women and in Navadvipa did not look at them (CB, Adi; introductory note, chapter 27), and the Gaudiya tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara ("gaura-nagari" is counted by Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati among the apasampradayas). Majumdar regards the long GPT padas signed Narahari as late, not Sarakara's; these padas indeed belong to Narahari Chakravarti (18th c.). The signature merges with the townswoman's speech: "the life of Narahari" (narahari-prāṇa) is an epithet of Gaura (cf. "Narahari's Lord"). Srivasa's house is the place of the Lord's night kirtanas (CB, Madhya; there the doors were barred and outsiders not admitted) — here only the backdrop of the tale.

5. Narahari — "śuna śuna ohe parāṇa sajani..." (GPT1 pp. 210–211, no. 127; GCC 8.3)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. A townswoman tells her dream: adorned, she sat in a kunja, pining; suddenly at the entrance there appeared a youth, a kishora the colour of a rain-cloud — with a peacock feather on His crown, a flute at His lips, a pearl necklace; He came near, jested, beckoned her with His glance; and as she watched, the Dark One became Gora; He sat beside her, she turned away in feigned anger, He begged forgiveness — and the dream ends with their meeting. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 3.*¹¹

5.1. "Listen, listen, friend of my heart, to you I will tell it: a dream such as tonight's I have never seen.

5.2. I was sitting in a kunja bower, adorned in every way; thinking and thinking, my body had wasted away, there was not a trace of joy in it.

5.3. With restless eyes I looked in every direction — I do not know what had come over me; and suddenly I saw: someone had come to the outer door.

5.4. What wondrous youth — a kishora, as if rasa itself in bodily form! What shall I say of the majesty of that nagara? His body is the colour of a rain-cloud.

5.5. His palms and soles outshine the dawn, His nails are a cluster of moons; the curls and the tilaka on His brow are lovely — like a snare enchanting the world.

5.6. His crown is gracefully tilted, a peerless peacock feather flutters; to the fragrance of its fine flowers bees come swarming — there is no counting them.

5.7. Holding the flute to His lower lip, He plays it again and again: who in the world, hearing it, can keep composure?

5.8. On His neck — a double string of pearls, like the streams of the Suradhuni; as He walks, the belt of bells on His hips tinkles, and lovely anklets on His feet.

5.9. With a graceful play of His brows He came up to me — and in how many ways He jested: who could understand it?

5.10. Smiling, looking at me, He signals with the corners of His eyes; with a trick He lifts away my veil — what is He doing! — He draws my very life to Himself.

- 5.11. And another wonder: as I watched, that Dark One became Gora. With what shall I compare Him — the thief of the life of so many chaste young wives?
- 5.12. Slowly, slowly He came near and sat beside me; with sweet, sweet words He soothes me, longing to touch.
- 5.13. In feigned anger I turned my face away — yet my joy had no bounds; 'Forgive My offence,' He said, and again caught the end of my sari.
- 5.14. At the touch of His body I grew helpless and was lost in Him." The Lord of Narahari's life, the great Connoisseur of rasa, did what was in His heart.¹²

11. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 210–211, no. 127 (scan PDF pp. 469–470); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 127 (catalogue: NG-104; the catalogue line "aruṇa jiniyā..." is from the middle of the pada). GCC — kirana 8, pada 3 (ed. 1947, pp. 93–94; scan PDF pp. 90–91), "anyā ca — yathārāga" ("and another"). GCC readings: "dekhiye nāi" (5.1), "nakhara-nicaya cānda" (5.5), "uṛaye mayūra pākhā" (5.6; GPT1 and GPT2 "ubhaye", probably a misprint; translated after GCC), "muralī" (5.7), "kaṭi taṭe", "sundara nūpura" (5.8), "majila uhāra sane" (5.14). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

12. The townswoman's dream (5.12–5.14): the longing to touch, the touch, and "was lost in Him" (majilum'uhāra sane) are a direct motif of sambhoga; translated exactly, adding nothing and softening nothing. The dream is her imagination: the Lord in His lila did not touch women and in Navadvipa did not look at them (CB, Adi; introductory note, chapter 27); the Gaudiya tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara ("gaura-nagari" is counted by Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati among the apasampradayas); according to Majumdar such GPT padas signed Narahari are late (here — Narahari Chakravarti, 18th c.). The Dark One becoming Gora in the dream (5.11) is a poetic image of the identity of Gaura and Krishna (CC Adi 1.5; cf. the Lord's revealing of Shyamasundara to Ramananda Raya — CC Madhya 8). "The Lord of Narahari's life" (narahari-prāṇapati) — a signature merged with the speech: Gaura is the Lord of the poet's life.

6. Narahari — "ājuka rajanī sukhamaya svapana..." (GPT1 pp. 211–212, no. 128; GCC 8.4)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. A townswoman tells her friends a dream about themselves: adorned, they sat together and sang of Gaura for a watch of the night, then sent a messenger to Gauranga; hearing of Him, they ran to the kunja; He seated them, jested, wounded them with His glance, embraced them. The poet: why be ashamed to tell of yourself? Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 4.*¹³

- 6.1. "Tonight I saw a blissful dream, friends: you are the most fortunate in the world; listen, I will tell it.
- 6.2. Each adorned in her own way, eager, you sat together in a secluded place; singing and singing songs of Gora's virtues, you passed a watch of the night.
- 6.3. Choosing the moment, you sent a messenger to where Govinda was; she went very quickly and told Gauranga everything.¹⁴
- 6.4. Just as quickly she came back to you, herself agitated; hearing from her lips the news of the Beloved of your life, you all ran.
- 6.5. From afar, seeing the sweetness of Gora's form, you were enchanted; entering the kunja bower, you came up to the Lord of your life.
- 6.6. With great tenderness He seated you, taking each by the hand; smiling, how many jests He and you exchanged with one another!
- 6.7. Most clever Gora shot a fearful arrow from the corners of His eyes; by it you were overcome and could not keep the pride of youth.
- 6.8. The serpents of all your brows bit Him again and again — and the composure the Moon of Nadia had seemed at once to leave Him.

6.9. Opening both arms, He embraces — peerless is His love; in great joy I made a sign — and, understanding it, He grew still more intoxicated.

6.10. The desire that was in your hearts the King of connoisseurs of rasa fulfilled." Narahari says: why are you ashamed to tell of yourself?¹⁵

13. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 211–212, no. 128 (scan PDF pp. 470–471); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 128 (catalogue: NG-105). GCC — kirana 8, pada 4 (ed. 1947, p. 94; scan PDF p. 91), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "sukhamaya saba svapana" (6.1), "gorā-guṇagaṇa ... gomāilā" (6.2), "karilā paraspāre" — "jested with one another" (6.6; adopted in the main text: GPT1 and GPT2 "paraśa pare" — "touching", a misprint, as in 22.7), "tā yena takhani gela" (6.8; GPT1 and GPT2 "mena"), "tomādera mane ye chila tā yena karila rasikarāja" (6.10; the OCR is uncertain). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

14. "To where Govinda was" (govinda āchena yathā): the messenger speaks with Gauranga — Govinda here is apparently Krishna's name given to Gaura (cf. "the Moon of Gokula", chapter 29); another understanding is also possible — the house of Govinda (Ghosha or another companion) where the Lord was. The messenger (dūti) is an image from the padas on Radha and Krishna.

15. The dream (6.6–6.10): touches, embrace, the "composure leaving" the Moon of Nadia are direct motifs of sambhoga and attraction; translated exactly, adding nothing and softening nothing. The dream is the townswoman's imagination, not the Lord's lila: the Lord did not touch women (CB, Adi); the tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (n. 10 and the introductory note, chapter 27). 6.9: "I made a sign — and, understanding it, He grew still more intoxicated" (subahu haraṣe thārinu bujhiyā adhika mātila seha) — the sense of the line is unclear ("seha" may mean "he" or "that love"). The poet's signature (6.10) is a joke: under the guise of a dream about her friends the teller is telling her own.

7. Narahari — "śuna śuna sai svapane dekhinu nikuñjakānane gorā..." (GPT1 p. 212, no. 129; GCC 8.5)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. A friend tells the heroine her dream: Gora in a kunja grove was gazing at her path and weeping; learning from the friend that she would come, He begged her to hasten; the heroine, adorned, came, and the King of connoisseurs of rasa embraced her; then on some pretext she became manini — and He entreats her to relent; at this the teller woke. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 5.*¹⁶

7.1. "Listen, listen, friend: in a dream I saw Gora in a kunja grove — gazing at your path, in anguish He was shedding tears.

7.2. Hearing from me that you were coming, how He pleaded with me! Seeing His state, I came in haste and told you.

7.3. Hearing it, you joyfully adorned yourself and met Him in the kunja; welcoming you from afar, the King of connoisseurs of rasa took your hand and drew you into His embrace.

7.4. How much merry jesting there was! — and on some pretext you became manini. Narahari's Lord entreats you — and I woke in distress."¹⁷

16. Signature — "Narahari" (narahari pahum — "Narahari's Lord"). GPT1 — p. 212, no. 129 (scan PDF p. 471); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 129 (catalogue: NG-344). GCC — kirana 8, pada 5 (ed. 1947, p. 95; scan PDF p. 92), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "locana lorā" (7.1), "bheṭilā nikuñjamājha" (7.3), "mānini hailā tumi" (7.4). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

17. The pada is built on the pattern of the padas on Radha and Krishna: the friend as messenger, the Beloved waiting in tears in the kunja, the meeting and the heroine's mana (manini — "full of mana", the lover's pique). Gaura here — in a townswoman's dream — plays the part of Krishna; in His own lila He wept not for the women of Nadia but for Krishna, in the bhava of Radha (CC Adi 4). The embrace (kore karila, 7.3) is a direct motif of sambhoga; translated exactly. The dream is the townswoman's imagination; the Lord did not touch women (CB, Adi); the tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (n. 10 and the introductory note, chapter 27).

8. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo tomāre balie niśira svapanakathā..." (GPT1 pp. 212–213, no. 130; GCC 8.6)

Nagari-bhava; a dream. In her dream a townswoman went to Srivasa's house, where the companions were singing to mridangas and karatalas and Gaura was dancing among them; suddenly bhava seized Him — trembling, streams of tears; He fell and rolled on the ground like a golden lotus; forgetting shame, she sobbed aloud and woke; the household ran to ask why she was weeping; falling asleep again, she saw that Gora had come to her courtyard — she seated Him on a couch, fanned Him with the end of her sari, offered betel. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 6.¹⁸

- 8.1. "Listen, listen, friend, I will tell you the night's dream: I went to the house of Srivasa Pandita Thakura, where Gauranga was.
- 8.2. How lovely is Srivasa's courtyard — I saw it, and my eyes were soothed; with joy in my heart I stood in a secluded spot, keeping composure and dharma.
- 8.3. There the companions, happy at heart, with mridangas and karatalas, quite mad with joy, sing sweet, nectarean melodies.
- 8.4. In the midst of that circle Shachi's son shines — what wondrous attire! His curling, glossy hair is adorned with lovely flowers of every kind.
- 8.5. At His ears graceful earrings sway, the glow of His cheeks is peerless; on His brow are drops of fine sandal paste, like the splendour of the autumn moon.
- 8.6. On His broad chest sway many necklaces, light as down; new ornaments shine on Him — with what shall I compare Him?
- 8.7. Swaying His arms, the Most Clever One dances, stepping gracefully; "Hari, Hari!" He cries; hearing it, no one keeps composure.
- 8.8. I do not know what bhava rose in Him: His body trembles again and again; from both eyes streams flow without cease — like the current of a river.
- 8.9. Heaving a deep sigh, in agitation He fell to the ground — He rolls like a golden lotus; no one can hold Him.
- 8.10. Seeing this, my heart trembled; I gave shame its last libation of water; "What has happened, what has happened?" I cried, and sobbed aloud, beside myself.¹⁹
- 8.11. Then my sleep broke; waking, I sat up in bed; "What is it, what is it?" — everyone came running to ask why I wept.
- 8.12. What could I tell anyone? With grief in my heart I fell asleep again, like a chataki bird; and again I dreamed: Gora had come to my courtyard.
- 8.13. "Come in, come in, friend!" I said, and quickly seated Him on the couch; seeing He was tired, I carefully fanned Him with the end of my sari.
- 8.14. Preparing fresh betel, I offered it to that moon-like face; and with the Lord of Narahari's life I sat, happy at heart."²⁰

18. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 212–213, no. 130 (scan PDF pp. 471–472); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 130 (catalogue: NG-345). GCC — kirana 8, pada 6 (ed. 1947, pp. 95–96; scan PDF pp. 92–93), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "gelāma gaura yathā" (8.1), "dāmṛāinu" (8.2), "nānā jāti" (8.4), "śarada śaśīra ghaṭā" (8.5), "hainu" (8.10), "ghumāinu cātākī-pārā" (8.12), "tāmbūla hāsiyā dilāma" (8.14), "laiyā śutinu manera sukhe" (8.14; see n. 20). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

19. 8.7–8.10 describe the Lord's ecstasy in kirtana at Srivasa's house (trembling, tears, falling to the ground — sattvika-bhavas; cf. CB, Madhya, on the kirtanas in Srivasa's courtyard; CC Adi 17). "I gave shame its last libation of water" (lāje tilāñjali dinu; tilāñjali — the offering of water with sesame to the dead) — a saying: I abandoned shame for good. "Like a chataki bird" (8.12) — the chataka, by poetic tradition, drinks only rain-water from the clouds and ever waits for it: an image of longing.

20. 8.12–8.14 — the second dream: serving Gaura in her own house (couch, fan, betel). The GPT ending is "I sat" (basinu); GCC has "I lay down" (śutinu): the motif of sambhoga is more direct; the GPT text is translated, the GCC reading is noted here. The dream is the townswoman's imagination; the Lord did not touch women (CB, Adi); the tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (n. 10 and the introductory note, chapter 27).

9. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo rajani-svapana..." (GPT1 pp. 213–214, no. 131; GCC 8.7)

Nagari-bhava; a dream. First the townswoman dreams that the whole world has gone mad with the virtues of Gaurangachand, and even the wicked and the slanderers have become His followers; falling asleep again, she sees: as Shyama held the rasa on the bank of the Yamuna, so Gora on the bank of the Suradhuni has made an abode of rasa; the women of Nadia, casting off shame, go there in crowds; her husband bolts the door, but her husband's brother's wife slyly opens it; she runs, sees Gaura Raya in a circle of young women amid music and song, dances — and He, laughing, presses her to His breast. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 7.²¹

- 9.1. "Listen, listen, friend, I will tell the night's dream that is in my heart: the people of the whole world went mad with the virtues of Gaurangachand.
- 9.2. All who were — the foolish, the crooked, the deceitful, the slanderers — giving up their perverse nature, became followers of Gaura.
- 9.3. Seeing this and much else, once I woke, friend; and when I fell asleep again, I saw another wonder — I will tell you all of it.
- 9.4. As Shyama on the bank of the Yamuna held the rasa and other pastimes, so Gora on the bank of the Suradhuni made an abode of rasa.²²
- 9.5. Casting off shame and fear for their families, all the nagaris of Nadia, mounted on the chariot of desire, go crowd after crowd, passing by hundreds of thorns.
- 9.6. Leaving the housework, I was in great eagerness to go there; suddenly my husband came and quickly bolted the door of the house.
- 9.7. I was in a fix — whom could I tell what? — and lost all strength; I thought: I shall not live if I do not see the Beloved again.
- 9.8. At that moment my clever sister-in-law, my husband's brother's wife, on some pretext unbolted the door; carefully, carefully, softly, softly I stepped outside.
- 9.9. Blossoming with joy, I ran, looking back at no one — as a young bird escapes from an iron cage.
- 9.10. Arriving quickly, I gazed my fill on Gaura Raya: in the midst of a circle of young women He shines — with what shall I compare Him?
- 9.11. On every side all kinds of instruments sound — there is no end of joy; women sing sweet melodies, showering streams of nectar.
- 9.12. Drunk with the honey of that lotus face, I danced again in joy; Narahari's Lord, seeing this, laughed and pressed me to His breast."²³

21. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 213–214, no. 131 (scan PDF pp. 472–473); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 131 (catalogue: NG-106; the catalogue line is from the middle of the pada). GCC — kirana 8, pada 7 (ed. 1947, pp. 96–97; scan PDF pp. 93/101–102), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "kahi ye āchaye mane" (9.1), "lāja kula bhaya guru teyāgiyā" — "casting off shame, family, fear of the elders" (9.5), "grha kāja tyaji mu baṛa cañcala" (9.6), "catura āmāra yā" (9.8), "nā pālaṭi dekhi" (9.9), "yubati-maṇḍali" (9.10), "cāridige", "sura nārīgaṇa" (9.11). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

22. 9.2 — in the first dream — is what the biographies also tell: the Lord's mercy turned slanderers and sinners (CB, Madhya: Jagai and Madhai; CC Adi 17). 9.4–9.12 — in the second dream — Gora's "rasa" on the bank of the Ganga on the pattern of Krishna's rasa-lila (Bhag. 10.29–33); this is precisely the "gaura-nagari" notion that the Gaudiya tradition expressly rejects: Vrindavana Dasa says that the Lord in Navadvipa did not look at women (CB, Adi), His night pastimes in Navadvipa are sankirtana with the devotees behind the barred doors of Srivasa's house (CB, Madhya), and the rasa-lila belongs to Vrindavana and Krishna; Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati counts gaura-nagari among the apasampradayas (introductory note, chapter 27). The pada is translated faithfully to the author as a record of late poetry, without softening.

23. "My husband's brother's wife" (jā). Deceiving the husband and fleeing the house (9.6–9.9) is a motif of the padas on the gopis running to the call of the flute (Bhag. 10.29); pressing to the breast (9.12) is a direct motif of sambhoga; translated exactly. The dream is the townswoman's imagination; the Lord did not touch women (CB, Adi). "Women sing sweet melodies" (madhura sura-nārīgaṇa) may also be understood as "celestial women" (suranārī); GCC separates "sura" ("melody").

10. Narahari — "rajanī-svapana śuna go sajani..." (GPT1 p. 214, no. 132; GCC 8.8)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. A townswoman, casting off shame, tells: in her dream Gora quietly entered her chamber, looking around, sat at the head of her bed, touched her lips, jested, embraced her, weeping with joy — as if He had found a treasure He could not let go of even for a moment. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 8.*²⁴

10.1. "Listen to the night's dream, friend — I tell it, casting off shame: softly, softly Gora enters my chamber, warily looking all around.

10.2. Smiling, He sat, moving close to the head of my bed; with His own hand He touched my lips — and floats in an ocean of joy.

10.3. Intoxicated, jesting, He speaks the sweetest words in every way; twining His arms, holding [me] to His heart, He bathes [me] with the tears of His eyes.

10.4. In His own heart He deems He has found a treasure — it is hard for Him to let it go even for a moment." The Beloved of Narahari's life is love itself embodied; what more shall I say?²⁵

24. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 214, no. 132 (scan PDF p. 473); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 132 (catalogue: NG-107). GCC — kirana 8, pada 8 (ed. 1947, p. 97; scan PDF p. 102), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "caudige cāyā" (10.1), "śīthāna-pāṣe" (10.2), "pīrītera mūrati" (10.4). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

25. The whole dream (10.1–10.4) is a direct motif of sambhoga: Gora enters the townswoman's chamber, touches her lips, embraces her; translated exactly, adding nothing and softening nothing. This is the townswoman's imagination, not the Lord's lila: the Lord did not touch women and in Navadvipa did not look at them (CB, Adi); the Gaudiya tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara (Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati; introductory note, chapter 27); according to Majumdar such GPT padas signed Narahari are late (here — Narahari Chakravarti). Gaura's tears (10.3) in His own lila are tears of prema for Krishna (CC Adi 4).

11. Narahari — "śuna śuna niśi-svapana sai..." (GPT1 p. 214, no. 133; GCC 8.9)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream, on the pattern of the khandita padas. In a dream at dawn the finely dressed Gaura came to the townswoman; she asked why He had come and told Him to go where He had spent the night — the traces of a sleepless night cannot be hidden; He swore hundreds of oaths, pleaded with her — and then the dream broke. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 9.*²⁶

11.1. "Listen, listen, friend, to the night's dream — I tell it to you, leaving shame aside.

11.2. At dawn, in fine attire, Gaura came to me.

11.3. Looking at that moon-like face, I said: 'Why have You come running?

11.4. Where You happily spent the night — go there quickly and meet there.

11.5. What is hidden does not stay hidden — it is all plain: with her You stayed awake, passing the night.'

11.6. Hearing this, He swears hundreds of oaths — and, longing to touch, pleads with me.

11.7. Then the dream broke." Narahari knows what became of her.²⁷

26. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 214, no. 133 (scan PDF p. 473); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 133 (catalogue: NG-346). GCC — kirana 8, pada 9 (ed. 1947, p. 98; scan PDF p. 103), "anyā ca — yathārāga". Metre — short payar (a couplet to a line). Readings: 11.3 "balinu" — "I said" (so GPT2 and GCC; GPT1 "calinu" — "I went", probably a misprint; translated after GPT2 and GCC); GCC: "prabhāta-samaye" (11.2), "se candrabadana-pānete cāyā" (11.3), "henakāle" (11.7). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

27. The pada repeats the scheme of the khandita padas — the heroine to whom the Beloved comes at dawn bearing the traces of a night spent with another (in the Krishna padas — with Chandravali); the reproach, the oaths and the longing to touch come from there. Transferring this image to Gaura is a convention of the nagari padas, not the Lord's lila (n. 25; introductory note, chapter 27). "Narahari knows what became of her" — the poet's signature; translated as in the original.

12. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo sajani rajanī-svapana..." (GPT1 pp. 214–215, no. 134; GCC 8.10)

Nagari-bhava; a dream. In a dream the Moon of Nadia came to a townswoman's house; her harsh sister-in-law at the door accused her of a liaison with a strange man and threatened to tell her brother in the morning; the townswoman feared not for herself — let them revile her — but that wicked people would slander the Beloved and He would never again come to their street; she wept, repeating His name, and woke. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 10.²⁸

12.1. "Listen, listen, friend, I will tell you the night's dream: with great effort the Moon of Nadia came and met me in the house.

12.2. Just then my harsh sister-in-law, standing at the door, says: 'You are dallying with a strange man and are not afraid!

12.3. Very well: in the morning my brother will come — I will tell him everything; and I will take my own honour and go — I will not stay in this sinful house.'

12.4. Hearing this, I thought in fear: when the night is over — I do not know what my husband will do when he comes home.

12.5. Let everyone revile me as much as they like — that does not pain me; but what if wicked people should slander the Beloved of my life!

12.6. If the Creator makes this known, then it will be dreadful: for the rest of my life I shall never again see the Moon of Nadia.

12.7. He will never come to our street, will never think of me; wretched as I am, I know it for certain — otherwise why should things be so?

12.8. Saying this, I sobbed in distress, repeating His name again and again. Narahari knows: I saved my life by waking up quickly."²⁹

28. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 214–215, no. 134 (scan PDF pp. 473–474); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 134 (catalogue: NG-347; in GPT2 no. 134 is printed after no. 135). GCC — kirana 8, pada 10 (ed. 1947, p. 98; scan PDF p. 103), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "āsiyā sām̐hāila ghare" — "entered the house" (12.1), "para puruṣera sane bilasaha, ithe nā bāsaha bhaya" (12.2), "bhaya pāyā pohāile niśi" (12.4), "prāṇe bām̐cāinu turite cetana pāyā" (12.8). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

29. The sister-in-law's accusation ("you are dallying with a strange man", para-puruṣera sane bilasaha) is rendered exactly. The heart of the pada is 12.5–12.6: the townswoman is ready to bear any abuse, so long as rumour does not touch Gaura and she is not deprived of His darshan. This is a dream, not an event (n. 10; introductory note, chapter 27). The signature merges with the townswoman's speech ("Narahari knows: I saved..."); "waking up" — lit. "regaining consciousness" (cetana pāiyā).

13. Narahari — "sajani rajanī-svapana śunaha..." (GPT1 pp. 215–216, no. 135; GCC 8.11)

Nagari-bhava; a comic dream. To guard the townswoman, her sister-in-law slept on her bed; at night the Moon of Nadia came and by mistake sat on the sister-in-law's couch and touched her chin; she woke crying "Thief!", chased Him, caught Him and brought Him back with abuse, but Gora looked at her — and conquered her; then, not finding the townswoman, He left dejected; and the sister-in-law, with downcast face, confessed that she had "fallen into the hands of a terrible thief" and begged her to keep silent. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 11.³⁰

- 13.1. "Friend, listen to the night's dream — what a laugh! To guard me, my sister-in-law lay down where my bed is.
- 13.2. The Moon of Nadia came, entered, trembling with joy — and, taking her for me, sat on my sister-in-law's couch.
- 13.3. Softly, softly, in delight, He touched her chin with His tendril-like hand; my sister-in-law awoke, started up in alarm, looking all around.
- 13.4. She says to me: 'Wake up, wake up, quick — a thief has got into the house!' Hearing this, Gora fled in fear and stood some way off.
- 13.5. The harsh sister-in-law ran after Him with threats; going a little way, she caught up — and the Beloved of my life could not escape.
- 13.6. Drunk with the pride of youth, she seized Him firmly by both hands — and, abusing Him in every way, stopping again and again, she leads Him into the house.
- 13.7. Youthful Gora, full of rasa, looked at my sister-in-law — bound her in the noose of His arms, conquered her, and did what was in His heart.³¹
- 13.8. Not finding me, the Jewel of virtues went away dejected; and my sister-in-law, all limp, came to me again.
- 13.9. Looking at her, I asked: 'What is this — why are you so glad at heart?' She, with downcast face, says: 'I fell into the hands of a terrible thief.'
- 13.10. Keep it secret, or in the morning the smoke of scandal will rise." Narahari is the witness: as I began to console her, sleep left my eyes.³²

30. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 215–216, no. 135 (scan PDF pp. 474–475); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 135 (catalogue: NG-348). GCC — kirana 8, pada 11 (ed. 1947, p. 99; scan PDF p. 104), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "prabeśila adhika madana-bhare" — "entered, overflowing with Madana" (13.2; GPT "athira ānanda bhare", "trembling with joy"; the GPT text is translated), "basilena nanadinīra pālāṅka-pare" (13.2), "kara-pallave cibuka paraśe haraṣa haiyā" (13.3), "kata dūre yāi pāila, palāite nārila parāṇapiyā" (13.5), "yaubana-garabe" (13.6), "temha adhomukhe" (13.9), "parabhāte haibe kalaṅka-dhūma" (13.10). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

31. 13.7 is a direct motif of sambhoga (bound her in the noose of His arms, "conquered", "did what was in His heart" — kaila ye āchila mane); translated exactly, adding nothing. The pada is a farce: the strict sister-in-law who guards the young wife is herself "conquered" by Gaura; this is the motif running through GCC (the strict elders, on seeing Gaura, lose their severity; cf. nn. 12, 23 of chapter 30) carried to a coarse joke. Such a depiction of the Lord is precisely what the Gaudiya tradition rejects: the Lord did not touch women and in Navadvipa did not look at them (CB, Adi); the worship of Gaura as a nagara is an apasampradaya (Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati; introductory note, chapter 27). This is a townswoman's dream told for laughter (13.1: "what a laugh!").

32. "The smoke of scandal" (kalaṅka-dhūma) — evil rumour. The signature is "Narahari the witness" (narahari sāthī): the poet brings himself into the dream as a witness; the last words (āśvāsīte bhāṅgila āmkhira ghuma — "as [I] began to console her, sleep left the eyes") are understood thus: the teller herself consoles her sister-in-law and at once wakes up (cf. the ending of 12.8: "I saved my life by waking up quickly"); the subject is not named in the original, and the reading "as he began to console her" is also possible.

14. Narahari — "svapanera kathā śuna go sajani..." (GPT1 pp. 216–217, no. 136; GCC 8.12)

Nagari-bhava; a comic dream. In a dream the Beloved entered the townswoman's house wrapped in a blanket, so that her sister-in-law would not recognise Him; she seated Him on a couch and threw off His blanket — and His face shone like the moon from behind the clouds; her mother-in-law asked what the light in the house was, and the townswoman answered that it was Chandra, the moon god, who had appeared, pleased with her vow, and asked the mother-in-law to name a boon; she wished everyone wealth, long life and well-being; returning, the townswoman wiped her Beloved's body with the end of her sari, He embraced her — and then she woke. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 12.³³

- 14.1. "Listen to the dream, friend: yesterday the Connoisseur of rasa, the Beloved of my life, entered the house unseen, wrapped in a blanket.
- 14.2. Seeing this, I laughed softly and asked: 'Why have You dressed up like this?' The Beloved says: 'In case your sister-in-law should recognise Me later [tomorrow].'³⁴
- 14.3. Much like this He said; hearing it, I covered my face with the end of my cloth, took the Lord of my life by His lovely hand and joyfully seated Him on the couch.
- 14.4. What sweetness His face had at that moment — what can I say of what was in my heart? As if a mass of golden lotuses had blossomed in the waters of the Kalindi.
- 14.5. Seeing this, I took heart and threw off that blanket from Him — as if the autumn moon had come out from behind thick clouds.
- 14.6. At that very moment my mother-in-law asks: 'What is that light in the house?' Hearing this, my whole body trembled — my soul simply flew away.
- 14.7. Hurrying out, I stood at the door, looking with fear in my heart, and, taking courage, began to speak cunningly with her:
- 14.8. 'You know my vow to Chandra — I keep it with care; so by his grace he has appeared today, pleased with my worship.
- 14.9. He wishes to give a boon — but what boon to ask I do not know; whatever you say, that I will take; only do not come in here yourself.'
- 14.10. Hearing this, softly, softly, delighted, she says with great earnestness: 'Ask for wealth, long life, prosperity and well-being for all — all of this.'
- 14.11. Hearing this, I quickly went into the house in great joy; sitting by my Beloved, I wiped His body with the end of my sari.
- 14.12. The Lord of Narahari's life with great tenderness took me in His embrace; then my sleep broke — and in separation I was drowned in tears."³⁵

33. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 216–217, no. 136 (scan PDF pp. 475–476); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 136 (catalogue: NG-108). GCC — kirana 8, pada 12 (ed. 1947, pp. 99–100; scan PDF pp. 104–105), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "parāṇa rasika rāya" (14.1), "kanaka-kamala-rāśi" (14.4), "khasāyā phelinu mena" (14.5; "mena" — so also GPT1, = "yena"), "temho dekhā dila" (14.8), "ethā nā āsiha tumi" (14.9), "āyubṛddhi śubha sabāra eteka leha cāyā" (14.10), "bhāsinu āmkhira jale" (14.12). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

34. Bengali kālī means both "yesterday" and "tomorrow": in 14.1 — "yesterday" (the night being told of), in 14.2 — "tomorrow", "later". The blanket (kambala) under which Gaura hides the radiance of His body, and the "light in the house" (14.6), play on the image of Gaura as the moon: the townswoman passes Him off as Chandra, the moon god — and this is true in a poetic sense: He is "the Moon of Nadia". The deceiving of the mother-in-law is rendered as in the original (cf. n. 7 of chapter 30).

35. The embrace (14.12) is a motif of sambhoga, translated exactly; the dream breaks off, and the townswoman is left in separation. The dream is her imagination; the Lord did not touch women (CB, Adi); the tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (n. 10 and the introductory note, chapter 27).

15. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo baliye tomāre svapane nadyāra śaśī..." (GPT1 p. 217, no. 137; GCC 8.13)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. In a dream the Moon of Nadia sat beside the townswoman and asked her to adorn Him with her own hands; she oiled and decked His hair with flowers, drew sandal on His brow, put on earrings, a pearl in His nose, bracelets, necklaces, a belt of bells and anklets — and then woke before she had gazed her fill. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 13.*³⁶

- 15.1. "Listen, listen, friend, I will tell you: in a dream the Moon of Nadia, smiling, came and sat beside me — like a mass of golden lotuses.
- 15.2. He says to me: 'Today adorn Me with your own hands.' Hearing those clever words — what joy I felt, how can I tell?
- 15.3. The merriment grew: His hair — the young women of Nadia are mad for it — I anointed with many fragrant oils, dressed in many styles and decked with flowers.
- 15.4. On His brow I drew lovely drops of sandal, like bright moons; at His ears I fixed earrings — they flash like the sun; with what can I compare them?
- 15.5. Wiping the smiling lotus of His face, I saw His brows — like a row of bees; looking into His eyes, drunk with joy, I set a pearl in His nose.
- 15.6. His lovely arms, outdoing an elephant's trunk, steal away composure and dharma; on them I put many ornaments and lovingly bracelets on His wrists.
- 15.7. On His broad chest I arranged necklaces — peerless is the beauty of His waist; on His hips I put a belt of bells — His knees shine.
- 15.8. On the feet of Narahari's Beloved I carefully put anklets; then my sleep broke — and I could not gaze my fill of Him."³⁷

36. Signature — "Narahari" (narahari priya — "Narahari's Beloved"). GPT1 — p. 217, no. 137 (scan PDF p. 476); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 137 (catalogue: NG-109). GCC — kirana 8, pada 13 (ed. 1947, pp. 100–101; scan PDF pp. 105–106), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "naba yubati bhule ye cule" (15.3), "bāmka chānde bāndhinu" — "tied it aslant" (15.3), "candanabindu" (15.4), "bhṛṅga-pāmū" (15.5), "gaja-śuṇḍa" (15.6), "henakāle nimḍa bhāṅgila" (15.8). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

37. The heroine adorning the Beloved with her own hands (beśa racanā) is a motif of the padas on Radha adorning Krishna; the nose-pearl (gajamuktā), the belt of bells and the anklets are Krishna's ornaments in the padas. In Gaura-lila the Lord was adorned and anointed by His companions (cf. Gaura's abhisheka and adornment at Srivasa's — CB, Madhya; chapter 14); here the service is transferred into a townswoman's dream. There is no motif of sambhoga in the pada.

16. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo parāṇa-sai..." (GPT1 pp. 217–218, no. 138; GCC 8.14)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. A townswoman tells her friends without shame: in her dream Gora embraced and kissed her; she teased Him about the traces of kajal, kumkum and sindur on His face, but then her harsh sister-in-law sat down at the door — the Beloved hid, and she woke; falling asleep again, she saw Him adorning her — putting sindur in her parting, braiding her hair, putting on a bodice and a nose ornament — and laying her on His breast. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 14.*³⁸

- 16.1. (Refrain) "Listen, listen, dear friends: before all of you, casting off shame, I will tell the night's dream.
- 16.2. Smiling, floating in joy, how tender that Playful One is with me! Opening both arms, in every way, He quickly takes me in His embrace.
- 16.3. He cannot be still — His body quivers, trembles like lightning; like a greedy bee, drunk with joy, He kisses the honeyed face.

- 16.4. That moon-like face was prettily adorned with kajal, kumkum and sindur; seeing this, I teased Him — hearing it, my Friend was abashed.³⁹
- 16.5. Lovingly, smiling a little, I wiped that moon-like face again; and just then my harsh sister-in-law came and sat down at my door.
- 16.6. My soul flew away — what could I do? The Friend of my life hid in fear; then my sleep broke — waking, I feel my heart pounding.
- 16.7. When I fell asleep again, that young Nagara is adorning me: He puts sindur in my parting and with what care He braids my hair!
- 16.8. When He began to put a bodice on my breast, I said: 'Why are You putting a bodice on me?' The Beloved, laughing, says: 'And the man's attire — do you not remember it?'
- 16.9. What more shall I say? Eagerly setting an ornament in my nose, He at once lays me on His broad chest.
- 16.10. In every way He tells tales of rasa — as if pouring nectar." Narahari's Lord is love embodied, the Enchanter of young women.⁴⁰

38. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 217–218, no. 138 (scan PDF pp. 476–477); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 138 (catalogue: NG-110). GCC — kirana 8, pada 14 (ed. 1947, pp. 101–102; scan PDF pp. 106–107), "anyā ca — yathārāga". The first stanza is a refrain (dhru; so GPT1). GCC readings: "nilajā haiyā" (16.1), "cumbaye madane māti" — "drunk with Madana" (16.3; GPT "ānande māti", "drunk with joy"; the GPT text is translated), "kājara kuṅkuma sindūre", "tā heri karinu parihāsa" (16.4; see n. 39), "mochāiye" (16.5), "uroje kāmācali dite mo kahinu kāmāculi parāha kene" (16.8). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

39. 16.4 is translated after GCC "kājara kuṅkuma sindūre sucāru sāja" (kajal, kumkum, sindur on the Beloved's face — traces of the embrace, a motif of the Krishna padas); GPT1 and GPT2 "kātare kusuma sindure" ("in agitation — with flowers and sindur") is apparently a corruption.

40. The embrace, the kiss (cumbaya), "lays me on His chest" are direct motifs of sambhoga; translated exactly, adding nothing. The dream is the townswoman's imagination: the Lord did not touch women and in Navadvīpa did not look at them (CB, Adī); the Gaudiya tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvatī; introductory note, chapter 27). 16.7–16.9 is the reverse motif: the Beloved adorns the heroine (cf. no. 15); the answer "And the man's attire..." (16.8) is not fully clear — probably a joke about an earlier change of dress (in the padas on Radha and Krishna — the exchange of attire). "The Enchanter of young women" (yubātīmohana mena; "mena" = "yena", so also GCC).

17. Narahari — "ki kaba svapane kata parihāsa kare go..." (GPT1 p. 218, no. 139; GCC 8.15)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. A townswoman tells how in her dream Gora jested with her, embraced her, trembling, and spoke of rasa; the poet: "How shameless is Narahari's Beloved — the thief of the dharma and vows of young wives!" Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravartī — GCC, kirana 8, pada 15.*⁴¹

- 17.1. "What shall I say! In the dream how He jests, my Gora, the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa! And what eyes He has — fearful are the curving glances that steal the treasure of life and youth.
- 17.2. Smiling sweetly, sweetly, floating in joy, He puts His face to my face and takes me in His embrace; His body thrills in the waves of Madana — how many words of rasa He brings up!
- 17.3. Lovingly swinging the ornament in my nose, He is — I know not by what rasa — enraptured." How shameless is the Beloved of Narahari's life — the thief of the dharma and vows of young wives!⁴²

41. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 218, no. 139 (scan PDF p. 477); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 139 (catalogue: NG-111). GCC — kirana 8, pada 15 (ed. 1947, p. 102; scan PDF p. 107), "anyā ca — yathārāga". Metre — a long line with the address "go" in the middle. In GCC the pada is a line longer: in place of GPT's last line there are two lines with more explicit details of the dream and the signature "narahari-prāṇa-priya nilaja emana go, yubātī-barata kare bhaṅga" ("so shameless is the Beloved of Narahari's life — He breaks the vows of young wives"); GPT omits them and they are not translated here. GCC readings: "nayana" (17.1), "mukhe mukha diyā" (17.2). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

42. The embrace, "puts His face to my face", "His body thrills in the waves of Madana" (madana-taraṅge) are direct motifs of sambhoga and attraction; translated exactly, adding nothing and softening nothing. "Shameless... thief of the dharma and vows of young wives" is reproach-as-praise, usual in the padas on Krishna (cf. "the stealer of clothes", "the breaker of dharma"); transferring it to Gaura is a convention of the nagari padas which the tradition rejects: the Lord did not touch women (CB, Adi; n. 10 and the introductory note, chapter 27).

18. Narahari — "svapane bandhuyā mora pālāṅke basila go..." (GPT1 p. 218, no. 140; GCC 8.16)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. In a dream the Beloved sat on her couch, called her dearer than life, embraced her, offered her betel, touched her lips; the poet: Narahari's Beloved is the only one who enchants young women. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 16.*⁴³

18.1. "In the dream my Friend sat on the couch, and once I glanced at Him from the corner of my eye; Gora, love embodied, with such tenderness deems Himself in my power.

18.2. With His moon-like lips He tells me again and again: 'You are dearer to Me than life'; saying this, He embraces me and floats in joy, while I die of shame.

18.3. Preparing betel, He puts it into my mouth and gazes, beside Himself with joy; then with His tendril-like hand He touches my lips — and offers His life for them.

18.4. Smiling sweetly, sweetly, He showers nectar — what art of a connoisseur of rasa!" The Beloved of Narahari's life, the darling of the heart, is the One who enchants young women.⁴⁴

43. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 218, no. 140 (scan PDF p. 477); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 140 (catalogue: NG-112). GCC — kirana 8, pada 16 (ed. 1947, pp. 102–103; scan PDF pp. 107–108), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "ām̐khi-koṇe" (18.1), "madane bibhora hayā cāya" — "gazes, drunk with Madana" (18.3; GPT "haraṣe bibhora", "beside Himself with joy"; the GPT text is translated), "bariṣe" (18.4), "narahari-prāṇa-priyā ... eka janā" (18.4). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

44. The embrace and the touching of the lips are direct motifs of sambhoga; translated exactly. "Offers His life for them" (parāṇa nichiyā deya tāya) — the rite of nichani: giving oneself in exchange "for" the beloved (cf. the glossary). "The darling of the heart" (hiyāra putali, lit. "the doll of the heart") — an endearment. The dream is the townswoman's imagination; the Lord did not touch women (CB, Adi); the tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (n. 10 and the introductory note, chapter 27).

19. Narahari — "śūnaye svapana āmā pāṇe cāñā cāñā go..." (GPT1 pp. 218–219, no. 141; GCC 8.17)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. In a dream Gora, gazing at the townswoman, sat down beside her, lifted away her veil, touched her chin, gazed at her face, embraced her; the poet: where did Narahari's Beloved learn so many plays of rasa? Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 17.*⁴⁵

19.1. "Listen to the dream: gazing and gazing at me, Gora, the thief of the life of young women, plays His pair of eyes that outdo the wagtails — enraptured by I know not what rasa.

19.2. Smiling, He came, sat beside me and with His own hand lifts away my veil; 'Ah, ah!' He says, touching my chin, and gazes at my face again and again.

19.3. What love! — in His mind there is one thing: to wear me at His neck like a necklace; when body touches body, how the play increases — young Madana is His companion.

19.4. How much art there is in His laying lips to lips — what shall I say? I have never heard of such a thing." Where did the Beloved of Narahari's life learn it — He knows so much of rasa?⁴⁶

45. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 218–219, no. 141 (scan PDF pp. 477–478); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 141 (catalogue: NG-113; there wrongly "no. 111"). GCC — kirana 8, pada 17 (ed. 1947, p. 103; scan PDF p. 108), "kācicca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "cāyā cāyā go yubatī-parāṇa-corā gorā", "jiniyā khañjana yuga nayana nācāya go" (19.1), "badana nehāre bāre bāre" (19.2), "galāya paraye kari hāra", "nabīna madana sāthī tāra" (19.3), "kothāya śikhila go eta vā raseṛa kathā jāne" (19.4). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

46. The touches, the embrace ("to wear me at His neck like a necklace"), the kiss (adhare adhara) are direct motifs of sambhoga; translated exactly, adding nothing and softening nothing. The dream is the townswoman's imagination; the Lord did not touch women and in Navadvīpa did not look at them (CB, Adī); the Gaudiya tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvatī; introductory note, chapter 27); according to Majumdar such GPT padas are late (here — Narahari Chakravartī).

20. Narahari — "ogo sai raseṛa bhramara mora gorā..." (GPT1 p. 219, no. 142; GCC 8.18)

*Nagari-bhava; a dream. "My Gora is a bee of rasa, the stealer of the honey of the lotus faces of young women": in the dream He sat beside her, spoke nectarean words, touched her chin, laid His lips to hers, embraced her. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravartī — GCC, kirana 8, pada 18.*⁴⁷

20.1. (Refrain) Friend, my Gora is a bee of rasa: who knows the secret heart of young women? — He is the stealer of the honey of their lotus faces.

20.2. "In the dream He came, sat beside me and, smiling, talks with me; I know not what nectar of rasa He pours — and the ache of ears and heart is gone.

20.3. With what tenderness He touches my chin — what grace in His wiles! Laying lips to lips, He does not turn His eyes away and covers my face with His palm.

20.4. He holds heart to heart — what more shall I say? — and His golden body trembles again and again." What does the Friend of Narahari's life know! — His love is an ocean of joy.⁴⁸

47. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 219, no. 142 (scan PDF p. 478); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 142 (catalogue: NG-114). GCC — kirana 8, pada 18 (ed. 1947, p. 103; scan PDF p. 108), "anyā ca — yathārāga". The first stanza is a refrain (dhru). GCC readings: "naba naba yubātīra go, badana-kamala-madhucorā" (20.1), "śrabaṇa-mana-byathā" (20.2), "uroja jhāṁpaye karatale" (20.3; GPT "vadana", "the face"; GCC is more explicit; the GPT text is translated), "narahari-parāṇabamdhuyā kibā jāne go, sukhera pāthāra tāra lehā" (20.4). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

48. "A bee of rasa" (raseṛa bhramara) is an image of Krishna in the padas (Madhukara); transferring it to Gaura is a convention of the nagari padas. The kiss and the embrace (20.3–20.4) are direct motifs of sambhoga; translated exactly. The dream is the townswoman's imagination; the Lord did not touch women (CB, Adī); the tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (n. 10 and the introductory note, chapter 27).

21. Narahari — "svapanera kathā kahite kahite uṭhila premera ḍheu..." (GPT1 pp. 219–220, no. 143; GCC 8.19)

*Nagari-bhava. As the townswomen told their dreams, a wave of prema rose: one laments that the Creator made her a woman for sorrow — she can never gaze her fill on Gorachand; another is ready to rid herself by cunning of the fear of the elders; a third — to leave home for Gaurasundara; one complains of the wicked tongues of Nadia, another wishes her name to be linked by rumour with Shachi's son; one calls them to go to Him at once; and the last one's left eye twitches — a good omen, says the poet. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravartī — GCC, kirana 8, pada 19.*⁴⁹

21.1. As they told their dreams, a wave of prema rose: their love is so peerless that none of them can keep composure.

21.2. One says: "Oh, the Creator made me a woman to suffer sorrow: never can I gaze my fill on such a Gorachand!"

21.3. Another says: "Oh, born a woman, one cannot fulfil the heart's desire; with all kinds of cunning I will rid myself of this fear of the elders."

- 21.4. A third says: "Let these elders perish — what have I to fear? For the treasure of my life, Gaurasundara, I will surely leave my home."⁵⁰
- 21.5. One says: "Oh, the people of Nadia are very wicked: I have never even seen the Lord of my life, and still they say so many evil things."
- 21.6. Another says: "Oh, there will be talk throughout the town of Nadia; heedless of it, I will keep the Beloved in my heart and soothe my pain."
- 21.7. Yet another says: "Oh, day and night there is one desire in my heart: let my name surely be slandered together with Sri Shachinandana!"
- 21.8. One says: "Oh, say what you will — I can bear it no longer: without Him my soul is restless; tell me, what shall I do?"
- 21.9. Another says: "Oh, let us throw fire on the brow of this family shame — come, come quickly, let us go and meet the Lord of our life right now!"
- 21.10. Yet another says: "Look, what is happening to me? — my left eye is twitching!" Narahari says: why worry? — all these are witnesses of good fortune.⁵¹

49. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 219–220, no. 143 (scan PDF pp. 478–479); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 143 (catalogue: NG-349). GCC — kirana 8, pada 19 (ed. 1947, pp. 103–104; scan PDF pp. 108–109), "yathārāga". GCC readings: "nārī haile nā pūre manera āśa" (21.3), "keha bale ogo maruka e gurujanere kisera ḍara" (21.4), "tāhā nā māniye ... ghucāba bethā" (21.6), "śrīśacīnandana-sane" (21.7), "e kula-lājera kapāle āguni diyā", "miliba ekhana giyā" (21.9), "bhāba ki lāgiye" (21.10). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

50. The resolve to leave home and disregard the elders (21.3–21.4, 21.9) is a motif of the gopis leaving husbands and homes for Krishna (Bhag. 10.29); the original speaks plainly — translated exactly. The Gaudiya tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura in the mood of the nagaris (introductory note, chapter 27).

51. 21.7: "let my name be slandered together with Shachinandana" (mora paribāda hauka... śrīśacīnandana sane) — as in the padas of the gopis, for whom the rumour of their love for Krishna is an ornament (kalanka-bhushana). 21.9: "throw fire on the brow" (kapāle āguni diyā) — a curse: "damn it". 21.10: the twitching of a woman's left eye is a good omen (for a man — the right); the poet's reply: "why worry (bhāba ki lāgiyā)? — all these are witnesses of good fortune" (the sense is conjectural).

22. Narahari — "rajanīprabhāte aneka maṅgala..." (GPT1 p. 220, no. 144; GCC 8.20)

*Nagari-bhava. At dawn the townswomen, seeing many good omens, forgot a little the pain of their hearts; each tells whom she worships in order to attain Gauranga: one — Ganga-devi, another — Gauri, a third — the Sun, a fourth vows to honour Old Shiva if today she sees the Beloved without hindrance. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 8, pada 20.*⁵²

- 22.1. At the dawn of the night the young women, seeing many good omens, forgot a little the pain of their hearts, and joy grew in their minds.
- 22.2. One says: "Oh, I have understood: today the Creator has been gracious; whatever desire anyone has — all will be fulfilled."
- 22.3. Another says: "Oh, every day I worship this Jahnavi: by her boon I will surely attain the Lord of my life — know it."
- 22.4. A third says: "Oh, with great care I worship Gauri every day: so I will end my sorrow, meeting Gauranga, the Lord of my life."
- 22.5. Yet another says: "Oh, I worship the Sun in many ways: by his grace and boon I will soothe my heart — do not worry."
- 22.6. One says: "If today I see the Beloved of my life without hindrance — then I will worship Old Shiva with care, offering many gifts."⁵³

22.7. Another says: "I feel I shall meet Him right now." Thus, in the rapture of prema, they talk with one another.

22.8. All their hearts are trembling — if only they could see Sri Gaurasundara. Narahari says: ah, ah! — I take upon myself all the ills of such prema.

52. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 220, no. 144 (scan PDF p. 479); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 144 (catalogue: NG-115). GCC — kirana 8, pada 20 (ed. 1947, pp. 104–105; scan PDF pp. 109–110), "yathārāga". It is followed in GCC by the short pada 8.21 (in tripadi metre: the nagaris know only Gora, He is their life and wealth; the poet prays that the doings of the nagaris may always appear in his heart; not taken into GPT) and the colophon of the 8th kirana: "...the description of the tales of dreams". GCC readings: "sabāra" (22.2), "jāhnabī", "tāra bare" (22.3), "temha dukha dūra kariba miliyā" (22.4), "tāmra kṛpābale" (22.5), "dekhiye" (22.6), "kahaye paraspare" (22.7; GPT1 "paraśa pare" — a misprint; translated after GCC). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

53. Jahnavi — the Ganga; Gauri — Parvati; Bhanu — the Sun (Surya); "Old Shiva" (buṛā śiba, Vura-Shiva) — a revered murti of Shiva in Navadvipa. The girls and wives of Nadia worship the demigods, praying to meet Gaura — as the gopis of Vraja worshipped Katyayani, praying for Krishna as their husband (Bhag. 10.22): the aim of their vows is the Lord; translated as in the original.

23. Narahari — "rajanī prabhāte āju naba naba nāgarī yata..." (GPT1 pp. 220–221, no. 145; GCC 9.1)

Nagari-bhava. At dawn the young nagaris, longing to see Gaura, devise stratagems — one plans tricks, another laughingly rejects them, a third considers her mother-in-law's temper; and she, pleased by an astrologer's good words, had slept with the door unbarred and, waking at daybreak, came to the young wives: "What are you doing here, children?" — "We are learning the tale of Lakshmi for the Lakshmi-puja," answers one; and the mother-in-law praises them. The poet: there is nothing in the world but the desire for wealth. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 1.⁵⁴

23.1. At daybreak today all the young nagaris, in the hope of seeing Gaura, dear to their life, devise so many stratagems!

23.2. All of them are most clever, versed in rasa, floating in an ocean of rasa: one plans all kinds of tricks, another laughingly rejects them.

23.3. A third, setting aside many fears, considers her mother-in-law's temper; and she, meanwhile, is greatly pleased by an astrologer's good words.

23.4. In her contentment the old woman had slept with the door of the house unbarred; starting up again and again, she jumped up: "The night is over!"

23.5. Waking, she sees: in the east the dawn has risen; hastily leaving her bed, she came to her daughters-in-law.

23.6. Sweetly she asks: "Children, what are you sitting here doing?" One says: "Oh, for the Lakshmi-puja we are learning the tale of Lakshmi."

23.7. Hearing this, saying "good, good", she praised them many times. Narahari says: in the world there is nothing but the desire for wealth.⁵⁵

54. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 220–221, no. 145 (scan PDF pp. 479–480); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 145 (catalogue: NG-116). GCC — kirana 9, pada 1 (ed. 1947, pp. 105–106; scan PDF pp. 110–111), without a raga mark; the 9th kirana opens with the heading "Again in the morning — of the goings of the nagaris of Navadvipa, their desires, darshan and the rest". GCC readings: "prāṇapriya gaura daraśana āse" (23.1), "keha vā khaṇḍaye hāsi" (23.2), "śubha daibajña bacane haiyāche adhika pṛita" (23.3), "rajanī pohāila balī" (23.4), "nāhika kāra" — "who has it not?" (23.7). The next GPT pada (no. 146 = GCC 9.2) — the mother-in-law's account of that very astrologer, who told her to send the young wives to Shachi-devi — opens chapter 32. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

55. The Lakshmi-puja (worship of the goddess of prosperity) and "the tale of Lakshmi" (lakṣmīra kathā, "Lakshmi-katha" — a ritual story read by women at the puja) are the pretext with which the young wives reassure their mother-in-law; the deceiving of the elders is rendered as in the original (cf. n. 7 of chapter 30). The signature is the poet's smile: the mother-in-law, hearing of Lakshmi, that is, of wealth, is at once content; GCC has "who in the world has no desire for wealth?".

Summary of chapter 31

The chapter continues the padas signed "Narahari" from section 3.2 of GPT. All 23 padas were found in Narahari Chakravarti's "Gaura-charita-chintamani" and checked against its scan ("probably Chakravarti" — B): no. 119 (no. 1) = GCC 2.13 — Gaura in sleep speaks the words of Krishna waking Radha (not nagari-bhava; GPT placed it in the section of nagari padas); nos. 124–125 (nos. 2–3) = GCC 7.29–7.30 — the end of the townswomen's morning tales (the husband praising Nimai Pandita; the house of Murari Gupta); nos. 126–144 (nos. 4–22) = GCC 8.2–8.20 — the 8th kirana, "the tales of dreams": at dawn the townswomen tell their friends their dreams of Gaura and then speak of their love and of good omens; no. 145 (no. 23) = GCC 9.1 — the beginning of the 9th kirana. Dreams with a direct motif of sambhoga (embrace, kiss, "He did what was in His heart") are translated exactly, without additions and without softening, each with a note: the dream is the townswoman's imagination, the Lord in His lila did not touch women and in Navadvipa did not look at them (CB, Adi), the Gaudiya tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27). Where GCC is more explicit than GPT ("drunk with Madana", "lay down" instead of "sat", the extra lines in no. 17), the GPT text is translated and the GCC reading noted.

Chapter 32. Nagari Padas — VI: the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 146–168): the townswomen's daydreams and the talk of the heavenly women

On what nagari-bhava is, the position of the tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) and the rules of translation, see the introductory note to the section of nagari padas in chapter 27; on the two poets named Narahari (Narahari Sarakara and Narahari Chakravarti) and on the attribution labels ("probably Sarakara", "probably Chakravarti", "not established"), see the introductory note to the "Narahari" appendix in chapter 17.

1. Narahari — "śuna śuna badhū eta dine bidhi..." (GPT1 pp. 221–222, no. 146; GCC 9.2)

Nagari-bhava (a mother-in-law's speech). An elderly woman tells her daughters-in-law: yesterday an astrologer came to their house who knows what is in everyone's mind; when she asked how good fortune might come, he told her to honour Shachi-devi, Nimaichand's mother: the dust of her feet removes the threefold miseries, whoever sees her face at dawn knows no sorrow, and whoever reviles her is destroyed by the goddess Ugrachanda; so every morning she should send her daughters-in-law to her house. The mother-in-law hurries the young wives off to Shachi — and they, covering their faces, make a show of pleading their household work. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 2.¹

- 1.1. "Listen, listen, daughters-in-law: at last the Creator has become gracious to me! Yesterday, at the time of the day-watch, an astrologer came to our house.
- 1.2. What shall I say of his virtues — such a one, truly, I have never seen here: whatever anyone asks, he tells it all — he knows what is in a person's mind.
- 1.3. 'How will good fortune come?' I said, and clasped his feet. Seeing my anxiety, he says: 'Do not worry at all, mother.
- 1.4. In your village lives Shachi-devi — do you not know her greatness? She is supremely honoured in the world; her deeds are known to all.
- 1.5. Very easily had is the dust of her feet: whoever places it on his head will have wealth and kin — but what is great in that! — at once it removes the threefold miseries.
- 1.6. Whoever rises at dawn and sees her face floats in happiness birth after birth and never knows sorrow.
- 1.7. Whoever reviles Mother Shachi burns to death in the fire of sorrow; know for certain: the goddess Ugrachanda destroys him.
- 1.8. Therefore, instructing your daughters-in-law and giving up all guile of heart, send them with care at daybreak to the house of Sri Shachi-devi.
- 1.9. She will be gracious and bless them — and the heart's wish will be fulfilled: prosperity will grow, there will always be much happiness, misfortunes will be destroyed.
- 1.10. Know for sure: Nimaichand's mother grieves at others' grief.' Saying much like this, the worthy astrologer went on to another house.²
- 1.11. Hearing all this I was very glad: I felt in my heart as if all ill fortune had gone.

- 1.12. So go quickly: she is my own — she calls me 'elder sister', treats me fondly, and never regards anyone as a stranger.
- 1.13. When you get there, bow to her and speak humble words: by her grace all happiness will come — this I know for certain.
- 1.14. She will say to you all: 'Stay here this morning,' — then come back early on some pretext: for I myself shall be going there."
- 1.15. Hearing the mother-in-law's most eager words, [the young wives] are overjoyed; and, to be coaxed a little more, one says very softly, covering her face with her cloth:
- 1.16. "How can we go in the morning, leaving the household work?" Narahari says: "You will come back and do it; now there must be no delay."³

1. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 221–222, no. 146 (scan PDF pp. 480–481); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 146 (catalogue: NG-117). GCC — kirana 9, pada 2 (ed. 1947, pp. 106–107; scan PDF pp. 111–112), "bṛddhāha — yathārāga" ("the old woman said"). The ninth kirana of GCC ("Again in the morning — the outings of the nagaris of Navadvīpa, their wishes, their darshan and so on"; it opens with GCC 9.1, no. 23 of chapter 31) tells how the mothers-in-law themselves send their daughters-in-law to Shachi-devi; GPT omits GCC 9.3–9.5 — the mother-in-law coaxes the young wives again, they dress, bow to her and set out (9.3), the joyful procession of the young women (9.4, Vrajabuli, raga lalita) and the first of their "wishes" — to bow to Shachi and steal a glance at Gauranga (9.5). Before 9.5 the author has a Sanskrit rubric, "their wishes (manoratha) he relates in order": the following padas (nos. 2–12 of this chapter) are these wishes. GCC readings: "parama ānanda" (1.11), "yāha śīghra kari" (1.12), "āsiyā karibe" (1.16). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

2. The astrologer's speech is a praise of Shachi-devi, the Lord's mother: so the Vaishnava biographies too honour her (CB, Adi and Madhya — Shachi as the mother of the Lord, worthy of the whole world's reverence). The "threefold miseries" (tritāpa) — those caused by one's own body and mind, by other beings and by the forces of nature. Ugrachanda (ugraçaṇḍā) is a fierce form of Durga (Chandi); the threat to those who revile Shachi is the village astrologer's word, rendered as in the original. The promise "will have wealth and kin — but what is great in that" (1.5) the poet puts in the astrologer's mouth so that the mother-in-law, mindful of prosperity, will gladly let the young wives go (cf. the end of no. 23 of chapter 31: "there is nothing in the world but the craving for wealth").

3. 1.15–1.16: the young wives, longing to see Gaura, make a show of pleading their household work "to be coaxed" — the poet's smile; rendered as in the original. The last line can be understood either as the mother-in-law's answer or as the poet's own word ("Narahari says..."); it is left as in the original.

2. Narahari — "sakhīsaha sukhe śrīśacīdebīra..." (GPT1 p. 222, no. 147; GCC 9.6)

Nagari-bhava; a daydream. On the way to Shachi's house a townswoman dreams: she will stand with her friend in Shachi-devi's courtyard and steal a glance at Gaura; He will answer with a sly look — and she will have neither composure nor dharma left, she will tremble at Madana's arrow and strain to embrace Gaurangachand, but her friend will hold her back by the end of her sari; the others will laugh, she will be abashed and turn away, covering her face — and Gaura will smile. Raga "yatharaga".

Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 6.⁴

- 2.1. "Gladly, with my friend, I shall go and stand in the courtyard of Sri Shachi-devi; unnoticed, I shall glance at Him once — and cool my eyes and heart.
- 2.2. He in turn will look at me — with the sly signal of His eyes; I shall have neither composure nor dharma left — I shall tremble at Madana's arrow.
- 2.3. My body will be wet with sweat, my hair will keep coming loose; my cloth will slip again and again — not a trace of shame will remain.
- 2.4. I shall be all too eager to embrace Gaurangachand — my friend will hold me back by the end of my sari; I shall heed her word.
- 2.5. Seeing me so, the others will laugh a good deal among themselves; understanding all that, I shall grow calm at heart, a little abashed.

2.6. Turning away, I shall stand again, covering my face with my cloth; the Lord of Narahari's life, seeing this, will smile with joy of heart."⁵

4. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 222, no. 147 (scan PDF p. 481); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 147 (catalogue: NG-118). GCC — kirana 9, pada 6 (ed. 1947, p. 109; scan PDF p. 114), "kācicca — yathārāga" ("and another [said]"). This is the second of the "wishes" (manoratha) of the townswomen on their way to Shachi's house (note 1): all the padas nos. 2–12 are in the future tense ("I shall stand", "I shall glance", "He will say"), i.e. not an account of what happened but what each one pictures to herself on the way. GCC reading: "kāṃṣība madana-bhare" — "I shall tremble under Madana's weight" (2.2). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

5. 2.2–2.4: "I shall tremble at Madana's arrow", "neither composure nor dharma left", the slipping cloth, the urge to embrace Gaurangachand — a direct motif of attraction; rendered exactly, adding nothing and softening nothing. It is the townswoman's daydream, her imagination: in the pada itself she is held back, and Gaura only smiles. According to the biographies, in Navadvipa the Lord did not look at women or touch them (CB, Adi); the Gaudiya tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27; Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati counts "gaura-nagari" among the apasampradayas). The padas of this cycle belong to Narahari Chakravarti (18th c.); Majumdar regards the long GPT padas signed Narahari as late, not Sarakara's.

3. Narahari — "saiyera samīpe dāmṛāiba punaḥ..." (GPT1 pp. 222–223, no. 148; GCC 9.7)

*Nagari-bhava; a daydream (feigned mana). A townswoman dreams: at her friend's sign she will stand beside her, turned away from Gaura; unable to see her face, He will be troubled and with the corner of His eye will ask her friend: "Why such anger? Forgive — one's own are not blamed; tell her to lift her veil just once." The friend will entreat her, she in feigned anger will go and stand far off; Gauranga will be bathed in tears, the friend will clasp her feet — and then, smiling, she will lift her veil and glance sidelong, giving Him supreme joy. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 7.*⁶

3.1. "At my friend's sign I shall stand beside her again; I shall not look at Gaura the nagara — I shall stay turned away.

3.2. Unable to see my face, He will be much troubled; glancing unnoticed at my friend, He will say to her with the corner of His eye:

3.3. 'I do not understand at all: why such cruel anger? Forgive — no one holds it against one's own.

3.4. Tell her to lift her veil just once, adjuring her by Me: let My eyes and heart be cooled by beholding the sweetness of that face.'

3.5. Understanding this, my friend will entreat me: 'Take the cloth from your face and stand there — let Gaurahari see.'

3.6. Hearing this, I shall pretend not to hear; then she will lift it with her own hand — but I shall stop her and in great anger go and stand far off.

3.7. Seeing this, Gauranga Raya will be bathed in tears; seeing that, my friend, distressed, will clasp my feet.

3.8. Then, smiling, I shall lift my veil and glance sidelong — I shall give the Lord of Narahari's life, the Friend, supreme joy."⁷

6. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 222–223, no. 148 (scan PDF pp. 481–482); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 148 (catalogue: NG-119). GCC — kirana 9, pada 7 (ed. 1947, pp. 109–110; scan PDF pp. 114–115). GCC readings: "keha nā laoye doṣa" (3.3), "juṛāuka nayāna hiyā" (3.4), "terachha nayāne raba" — "I shall remain [standing], glancing sidelong" (3.8). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

7. Feigned anger (mana) and entreaty through a friend are motifs of the padas on Radha's mana, transferred to a townswoman's daydream; Gauranga's tears (3.7) and His plea (3.3–3.4) are what she imagines; rendered as in the original. "Friend" (bandhuyā) and "the Lord of Narahari's life" are the townswoman's words and the poet's signature about Gaura (cf. note 5 of chapter 31).

4. Narahari — "gaura nāgara rasera sāgara..." (GPT1 p. 223, no. 149; GCC 9.8)

*Nagari-bhava; a daydream. A townswoman dreams: looking at Gaura the nagara, the ocean of rasa, she will smile and talk with her friend about rasa; seeing her wondrous grace, He will float in joy; she will signal to Him with a curved glance, bite her lip and draw her veil, and with the aim of her brows steal away His composure; the King of connoisseurs of rasa will long to embrace her — and Narahari will restrain Him, reminding Him of what people would say. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 8.*⁸

- 4.1. "Looking at Gaura the nagara, the ocean of rasa, with a faint smile I shall tell my friend tales of rasa.
- 4.2. Seeing my wondrous grace, He will float in joy; smiling ever so slightly, I shall signal to Him with a curved glance.
- 4.3. Understanding that, I shall bite my lip and draw my veil; unnoticed, by the aim of my brows, I shall steal away the Friend's composure.
- 4.4. The King of connoisseurs of rasa will long to embrace me — and Narahari will carefully restrain Him, reminding Him of what people would say."⁹

8. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 223, no. 149 (scan PDF p. 482); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 149 (catalogue: NG-120). GCC — kirana 9, pada 8 (ed. 1947, p. 110; scan PDF p. 115). GCC readings: "alakhita bhuru-sandhāne" (4.3), "bujhāyā" (4.4). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

9. 4.4: Gaura longing for the townswoman's embrace is again her imagination (cf. note 5); rendered exactly. The poet places himself in the heroine's daydream as the Lord's companion who restrains Him by "shame before people" (lokera lāja). According to the biographies, the Lord in Navadvipa was strict and did not look at women (CB, Adi; cf. nos. 19–20 of this chapter, where Narahari's own heroines say the same).

5. Narahari — "saiyera nikaṭe dāmṛāba ghuṇaṭe..." (GPT1 p. 223, no. 150; GCC 9.12)

*Nagari-bhava; a daydream. A townswoman dreams: she will stand beside her friend with half her face veiled and steal glances; when the Friend looks at her with a half-smile, she will look away; out of shyness He will lower His eyes — and then from the corner of her eye she will look at the moon of His face; He will not be able to meet her eyes, and she will keep gazing. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 12.*¹⁰

- 5.1. "I shall stand near my friend, half my face covered by my veil; glancing little by little, unnoticed, I shall fulfil my heart's desire.
- 5.2. When the Friend looks at me with a half-smile, I shall understand, at once turn my eyes away and keep looking elsewhere.
- 5.3. The Beloved of my life, out of shyness, will charmingly lower His eyes; seeing that, I shall again look from the corner of my eye at the moon of His face.
- 5.4. The Restless One will not be able to meet my eyes — and I, seeing that, shall keep gazing." Narahari's Lord will float in joy as eyes meet eyes.

10. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 223, no. 150 (scan PDF p. 482); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 150 (catalogue: NG-350). GCC — kirana 9, pada 12 (ed. 1947, pp. 112–113; scan PDF pp. 117–118), "anyā ca — yathārāga" ("and another"). In GCC this pada comes after GCC 9.11 (= no. 153, no. 8 of this chapter); the compiler of GPT moved it. "The Restless One" (cañcala, 5.4) refers to Gaura. The last line (signature) is the poet's word; it can also be read as continuing the townswoman's daydream ("...will float in joy, His eyes meeting [mine]"). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

6. Narahari — "āi more bahu yatana karibe..." (GPT1 p. 224, no. 151; GCC 9.9)

Nagari-bhava; a daydream. A townswoman dreams: Ai (Shachi) will be kind to her, but she will not stay by Ai — she will stand behind her friend and gaze her fill at Gaura while remaining unseen; He will grow anxious and ask her friend with a sign of the eyes: "Where is your companion?"; the friend will draw her forward and lift her veil; the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa will say with the corner of His eye: "Where did you learn these tricks? How shall I live without seeing you?" — and Narahari will make peace between them. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 9.¹¹

- 6.1. "Ai will be very kind to me — but I shall not stay by Ai: quite unnoticed, I shall stand behind my friend.
- 6.2. Supremely joyful, I shall still the hunger of many days: I shall give the chakora birds of my eyes the nectar of that moon of a face to drink.
- 6.3. I shall look my fill, but He will not be able to see me; growing anxious, He will say to my friend by a sign of the eyes:
- 6.4. 'You have come alone — where has your companion stayed? Not seeing you two together, I am pained at heart.'
- 6.5. Understanding this, my friend will take me by the hand and draw me in front of her; feigning anger, smiling slightly, I shall not go forward.
- 6.6. Even so my friend will hold me in front of her and with her own hand lift my veil, teasing me no end.
- 6.7. By a sign of the eyes she will say to the Friend: 'Look at Your own,' — and the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa, looking at me, will say with the corner of His eye:
- 6.8. 'Well, well! Where did you learn these tricks? Tell Me now: how shall I live without seeing you?'
- 6.9. He will convey much like this; understanding, I shall own my fault — and yet the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa, Gora, will still be cross with me.
- 6.10. Then Narahari will make it up: he will bring [me], show the necklace on the neck — and [He], smiling slightly, will say: 'Never do so again.'¹²

11. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 224, no. 151 (scan PDF p. 483); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 151 (catalogue: NG-351). GCC — kirana 9, pada 9 (ed. 1947, pp. 110–111; scan PDF pp. 115–116). In GCC the second line of couplet 6.6 is omitted: in its place the edition has a row of asterisks (a mark of omission); otherwise there are minor differences ("parama ānanda haiyā", 6.2; "antare pāiye byathā", 6.4; "bandhu prati", 6.7). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

12. Ai ("mother") is Shachi-devi (cf. note 1); the townswoman dreams of being received kindly by Shachi. The silent conversation of the eyes (6.3–6.8) is what she imagines (cf. note 5). 6.9–6.10 are understood conjecturally: who is "cross" and whose necklace Narahari will "show" (perhaps as a token of reconciliation) is not clear from the text; GCC has "will make it up, yielding, will show the necklace on the neck" (mānāba māniyā dekhābe). The verb forms in -ba (niba, kariba) are used here by the poet for the third person as well (the friend, Gora), for the sake of rhyme.

7. Narahari — "gaurāṅgacāṁḍera pāne nirakhite..." (GPT1 pp. 224–225, no. 152; GCC 9.10)

Nagari-bhava; a daydream. A townswoman dreams: gazing at Gaurangachand she will fall into a daze, be overcome, and her earring will roll on the ground; she will hastily cover herself with her sari-end — and the jingle of her bangles will delight Him; with a glance He will ask: "Remove the cloth — let Me see your hair"; her friend will tell her to turn away, and then herself throw the cloth off her head; Gora, enraptured, will gaze without blinking, while she, abashed, will pull up her veil, scold her friend as "shameless" and step aside — to Gauranga's delight. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 10.¹³

- 7.1. "Gazing at Gaurangachand, I shall fall into a deep daze: I shall be overcome, an earring will slip and roll on the ground.
- 7.2. I shall quickly cover myself with my sari-end — with that my hand will move: hearing the jingle of the bangles on my wrist, He will be delighted.
- 7.3. With the corner of a sidelong glance Gauranga, the allure of the world, will convey: 'Remove the cloth for a moment — let Me see how beautiful your hair is.'
- 7.4. Understanding this, I shall smile slightly and cover my face with my veil; seeing me shy, He will be delighted and again convey something to my friend.
- 7.5. My clever friend will say to me: 'Stand turned away — otherwise, looking at Gauranga, you will lose all calm.'
- 7.6. At these words I shall forget myself and stand with my back to Gora — and my friend with her own hand will quickly throw the cloth off my head.
- 7.7. At that moment Gora, rapt in rasa, quite overcome, will remember nothing — He will keep gazing with unblinking eyes.
- 7.8. I, much abashed, shall hastily pull the cloth up over my head and, with outward anger, scold my friend, calling her shameless.
- 7.9. I shall go and stand a little way off from my friend — and she, owning her fault, will draw me back and hold me, swearing by my head.
- 7.10. Seeing this play of mine, Gauranga, lover of play, will again float in merriment," — and in the depths of his heart Narahari, the Friend's companion, will laugh.¹⁴

13. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 224–225, no. 152 (scan PDF pp. 483–484); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 152 (catalogue: NG-121). GCC — kirana 9, pada 10 (ed. 1947, pp. 111–112; scan PDF pp. 116–117). Two places in GPT1 are corrected after GCC (noted in VAR): 7.2 "jhāṃpiba" ("I shall cover myself"; GPT1 "kāṃpila" — "trembled", a misprint) and 7.6 "pichu kariyā" ("turning my back"; GPT1 "kichu kariyā"). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

14. Gora, enraptured and oblivious at the sight of the townswoman's uncovered head (7.7), is her daydream, as in all the padas of this cycle (note 5); rendered exactly. A married woman's uncovered head before a strange man was by custom immodest; hence "shameless" (7.8) and the heroine's feigned indignation.

8. Narahari — "gaurāṅgacāṁdere nirakhi sakhīre..." (GPT1 p. 225, no. 153; GCC 9.11)

*Nagari-bhava; a daydream. A townswoman dreams: gazing at Gaurangachand and signalling to her friend, she will smile sweetly and talk with her; swaying her head, she will loosen her hair-knot, her nose-pendant and earrings will swing; the nagara will say with a glance that He cannot see the ornament on her back — and she, on some pretext, will lift the cloth and show it to Him; at once the Connoisseur of rasa will be overcome. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 11.*¹⁵

- 8.1. "Gazing at Gaurangachand, signalling to my friend with a sidelong glance, smiling sweetly, sweetly, I shall happily make sweet talk.
- 8.2. Rapt in rasa, swaying my head, I shall loosen my hair-knot; sweetly, sweetly will swing my nose-pendant and my champaka ear-ornaments.
- 8.3. The swinging of the jhapa on my back He will not be able to see — and the nagara, signalling with the corner of His eye, will say [so] with a slight smile.
- 8.4. On some pretext I shall lift the cloth with my left hand and show it to Him — at once the Connoisseur of rasa, the life of Narahari, will be overcome."¹⁶

15. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 225, no. 153 (scan PDF p. 484); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 153 (catalogue: NG-352). GCC — kirana 9, pada 11 (ed. 1947, p. 112; scan PDF p. 117). GCC readings: "piṭhera upare" (8.3), "kona chaletē" (8.4); 8.2 "kāṇera cāmṭā" follows GCC (in GPT1 the word is hard to read, GPT2 "ṭāpā"). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

16. Beśara — a nose-pendant; cāmṭā — earrings shaped like the champaka flower; jhāmṭā — an ornament braided into the hair and hanging down the back. Lifting the cloth to show it is a coquetry the townswoman pictures to herself (cf. note 5); rendered as in the original.

9. Narahari — "āiyera aṅgane yatane dāmṛāba..." (GPT1 pp. 225–226, no. 154; GCC 9.13)

*Nagari-bhava; a daydream. A townswoman dreams: in Ai's courtyard she will stand holding her friend's hand; Gora, the Jewel of virtues, will ask her by a sign of the eyes to uncover her face; abashed, she will turn away, but her clever friend, with feigned alarm, will lift the cloth from her face; the Connoisseur of rasa, covering His face, will smile — and Narahari Dasa, seeing that smile, will thrill. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 13.*¹⁷

9.1. "In Ai's courtyard I shall carefully stand, holding my friend's hand; Gora, the Jewel of virtues, looking at me, will say by a sign of the eyes:

9.2. 'Lift the cloth from your face just once — dispel My heart's grief.' Understanding this, I shall be abashed and at once turn my face away.

9.3. My friend is very clever: understanding [Him], she will stretch out her hand and, crying 'What's this, what's this?', with a show of alarm will lift the cloth from my face.

9.4. Seeing this, the Connoisseur of rasa, covering His face with His cloth, will smile" — and Narahari Dasa, seeing that smile, will thrill with gooseflesh.¹⁸

17. Signature — "Narahari Dasa" (dāsa narahari). GPT1 — pp. 225–226, no. 154 (scan PDF pp. 484–485); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 154 (catalogue: NG-122). GCC — kirana 9, pada 13 (ed. 1947, p. 113; scan PDF p. 118), without a raga rubric. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

18. In GCC this pada is more explicit: in 9.2 and 9.3 the cloth is not over the face but over the breast, and the last line is different — "[He] will be tormented by Madana; Narahari will calm Him"; the signature "Narahari Dasa" is only in GPT. The GPT text (the base text) is translated; the GCC readings are in VAR. In GPT too this is a townswoman's daydream (cf. note 5): the Lord Himself did not look at women in Navadvipa (CB, Adi), and the tradition does not accept such notions of Him (introductory note, chapter 27).

10. Narahari — "saiyera samīpe dāmṛāba nāgara..." (GPT1 p. 226, no. 155; GCC 9.14)

*Nagari-bhava; a daydream. A townswoman dreams: she will stand beside her friend, and the nagara will not look at her but only exchange smiling signs with her friend; understanding nothing, she will ask: "What are you laughing at?" — "The fault is yours: the nagara wants to see your dear face, and you are cross"; then she will speak by a sign and smile — and Gora will lose all composure. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 14.*¹⁹

10.1. "I shall stand beside my friend — and the nagara will not look at me: smiling and smiling, happily, He will exchange signs with my friend.

10.2. Understanding nothing, I shall take my friend's hand and ask: 'Seeing what fault of mine do you laugh with each other?'

10.3. Hearing this, my friend will say: 'The fault is yours: the nagara wants to see your dear face, and you are cross at that.'

10.4. Hearing this, I shall speak [to Him] by a sign and smile like nectar," — Narahari will not be able to calm Him: Gora will lose all composure.

19. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 226, no. 155 (scan PDF p. 485); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 155 (catalogue: NG-353). GCC — kirana 9, pada 14 (ed. 1947, p. 113; scan PDF p. 118). In GCC 10.3 is more explicit: "the nagara wants to embrace [you]" (ālīṅgana dite) instead of "wants to see your dear face"; the GPT text is translated (cf. note 18). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

11. Narahari — "gaurāṅgacāmḍera hāsimākhā mukha..." (GPT1 p. 226, no. 156; GCC 9.15)

*Nagari-bhava; a daydream (reproach). A townswoman dreams: seeing Gaurangachand's smiling face, she will put her cloth round her neck, join her palms and say to Him with a glance: "Why do You play false? Not once do You show Yourself on the road! The Creator made me a woman — hence the grief, or else I would be with You"; He will be abashed and swear with the corner of His eye: "I will surely come." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 15.*²⁰

- 11.1. "Seeing Gaurangachand's smile-anointed face, rapt in rasa, putting my cloth round my neck and joining my palms, I shall say by a sign of the eyes:
- 11.2. 'Well, well, Crown of connoisseurs of rasa, why do You play false? I do not know where You learned it — You can deceive so well!
- 11.3. What more is there to say — not once do You come and show Yourself on the road. The Creator made me a woman — hence the grief; otherwise I would stay with You.'
- 11.4. Hearing this, the Friend of Narahari's life will be abashed and, saying 'I will surely come', will swear with the corner of His eye."²¹

20. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 226, no. 156 (scan PDF p. 485); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 156 (catalogue: NG-354). GCC — kirana 9, pada 15 (ed. 1947, p. 114; scan PDF p. 119). GCC readings: "kara yuṛi" (11.1), "bhāla ohe", "śikhile" (11.2). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

21. A cloth put round the neck and joined palms are a sign of humble supplication. 11.3: "otherwise I would stay with You" — the townswoman envies the Lord's companions, who are always with Him (in kirtana, on His walks through Nadia; CB, Madhya) — something a woman cannot have. Gaura's promise "I will come" is her daydream (cf. note 5).

12. Narahari — "sakhīra samāje rahiya bāreka..." (GPT1 pp. 226–227, no. 157; GCC 9.16)

*Nagari-bhava; a daydream (reproach). A townswoman dreams: standing among her friends, with a sorrowful face she will say to the nagara with the corner of her eye: "You do not know the heart of love: You roam every street, I alone am left out; because of You the elders who loved me more than life regard me as poison, and those I laughed at laugh at me; if You were gracious to me I would count this disgrace as nothing; but You are pitiless — why this anger?" And He, joining His palms, will answer with a glance: "Perish My nature, I am full of faults — but I know one thing: you are dearer to Me than life." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 9, pada 16.*²²

- 12.1. "Staying among my friends, glancing once at that face, with a sorrowful face I shall say to the nagara with the corner of my eye:
- 12.2. 'Well, well, You: the heart of love You have never known! This quarter and that You can wander — only I am left out.
- 12.3. You, the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa, always stay lost in joy — while to me, unfortunate, what has not befallen me on Your account!
- 12.4. The elders who loved me more than life regard me as poison; those I used to laugh at now laugh when they see me.
- 12.5. If even so You knew me as Your own and were gracious to me, I would count all this disgrace as no more than a straw.

- 12.6. As it is, day and night there is a cruel burning — the body cannot bear it; and on top of that You are pitiless — how can life remain?
- 12.7. So dispel the doubt in my heart: why this anger? Is this Your nature — or have You found some fault in me?'
- 12.8. Understanding this, He, rapt in rasa, looking at me, will unnoticed join His palms and say with the corner of His eye:
- 12.9. 'Perish My nature, I am stained with every fault; but ever in My heart I know one thing: you are dearer to Me than life.'
- 12.10. Understanding this, I shall smile faintly and signal to my friend" — and the heart of Narahari's Beloved will be calmed, seeing [her] great joy.²³

22. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 226–227, no. 157 (scan PDF pp. 485–486); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 157 (catalogue: NG-123). GCC — kirana 9, pada 16 (ed. 1947, pp. 114–115; scan PDF pp. 119–120). 12.8 follows GCC and GPT2 "eteka bujhiyā" (GPT1 "eketa", a misprint). This is the last "wish" taken into GPT. In GCC the ninth kirana continues with padas that are not in GPT (9.17–9.23): the townswomen come to Shachi's house and bow to her (9.18 — a Vrajabuli pada signed "Ghanashyama", another name of Narahari Chakravarti); Shachi, the mother of the world, receives them as her own daughters-in-law and blesses them — "may your prosperity grow, may your husbands and all your family live long" (9.21); the kirana ends with the poet's prayer for devotion to the feet of the nagaris of Nadia (9.23). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

23. The townswoman's reproaches (12.2–12.7) are motifs of the padas on Radha in separation and after a quarrel (kalahantarita); Gaura's answer (12.9) is what she pictures to herself (cf. note 5); rendered exactly. 12.2: "You roam this quarter and that" — Nimai's walks through Nadia with His students and companions (CB, Adi and Madhya). 12.5: "as no more than a straw" — by sense (lit. "would count more than a blade of grass"; the grass-blade is the usual image of the worthless).

13. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo prāṇasama tumi..." (GPT1 p. 227, no. 158; GCC 10.10)

Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk). One says to her friend in her ear: "You judged rightly — the same came to my mind: today something is strange with Him, I have never seen Him so overcome in the rapture of rasa; who has stolen Gaurangachand's heart? He is indeed a nagara — one can tell by His doings, but I am ashamed to say it outright." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 10.²⁴

- 13.1. "Listen, listen, you who are dear to me as life — I tell you in your ear: what you have judged has come to my mind too.
- 13.2. Today something is strange — you see it yourself, shrewd one: I have never seen Him so overcome in the rapture of rasa.
- 13.3. And even if I saw it some day, still I could make nothing out. Tell me now: who has stolen Gaurangachand's heart?
- 13.4. Narahari's moon is indeed a nagara — I can tell by His doings; and yet for shame I cannot say it outright to anyone."²⁵

24. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 227, no. 158 (scan PDF p. 486); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 158 (catalogue: NG-124). GCC — kirana 10, pada 10 (ed. 1947, pp. 121–122; scan PDF pp. 126–127). Who is speaking. The tenth kirana of GCC is headed "Again in the morning — the various amusements of the heavenly women (debaramaṇī), eager for the rasa of His darshan": the wives of the gods look down from the sky on Nadia and on Gaura (10.1–10.2), praise the nagaris of Nadia and lament that they live not in Nadia but in the city of the gods (10.3–10.9); GCC 10.10–10.24 (GPT nos. 158–168, nos. 13–23 of this chapter) are their conversation and dispute about Gaura. In GPT these padas stand without the introduction and read as a conversation of townswomen; that the speakers are celestials can be seen in the GPT text itself: "you, connoisseurs of rasa in the city of the gods" (17.3), "in the city of the gods a false rumour has arisen" (20.1). Section 3.2 of GPT omits GCC 10.1–10.9 (of these, 10.7–10.9 stand in other sections of GPT — p. 494, no. 30 and sect. 3.1, nos. 129–130; see chapter 33), 10.11 (one woman's explicit guess as to where Gaura spent the night), 10.18, 10.20 and 10.23

(short links). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

25. Gaura "overcome in the rapture of rasa" in the morning is how the celestial women interpret His state (GCC 10.9 describes His morning appearance: tousled curls, garland); for Krishnadasa Kaviraja and Vrindavana Dasa the Lord's rapture is prema for Krishna in the bhava of Radha (CC, Adi 4; CB, Madhya), not a nagara's love. The heroines' guesses are rendered as in the original; their "He is indeed a nagara" is the very notion the tradition does not accept (introductory note, chapter 27).

14. Narahari — "ki baliba ogo anubhabi bhāla..." (GPT1 pp. 227–228, no. 159; GCC 10.12)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk). Another answers: "You judged rightly: I know all His play as a nagara, only I am shy to tell it — it is laughable to watch how He behaves: He thinks Himself the king of the clever, imagines that everything of His is secret — His descent, His gait, His dance, His love with the nagaris of Nadia — and covers the sun's rays with His hand. Before one who is cleverer than the clever no cleverness holds — whom then does He fear?" Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 12.*²⁶

14.1. "What shall I say? You judged rightly: all Gaurangachand's ways as a nagara I know.

14.2. Before you all I am shy to tell those tales — and yet, watching Gauranga's conduct, laughter rises within me.

14.3. He always thinks of Himself: 'I am the king of the clever: secret is My descent, and secret all My deeds;

14.4. secret the gait, secret the speech, secret the poses of the dance; in secret with the nagaris of Nadia — secret the play of love.

14.5. I play the nagara in secret — no one can perceive it,' — thinking much like this, He covers the sun's rays with His hand.

14.6. Before one who is cleverer than the clever, what cleverness remains? Not understanding this, Narahari's Lord — whom does He fear?"²⁷

26. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 227–228, no. 159 (scan PDF pp. 486–487); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 159 (catalogue: NG-125). GCC — kirana 10, pada 12 (ed. 1947, pp. 122–123; scan PDF pp. 127–128). Between GPT nos. 158 and 159 GCC has pada 10.11, not taken into GPT (note 24). 14.2 "before you all" follows GPT2 and GCC "pāśe" (GPT1 reads "pāche"). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

27. "Secret is My descent" (14.3) — in the tradition Gaura is indeed a "hidden" avatara: in the Kali age the Lord comes concealing His divinity (Bhag. 7.9.38: channah kalau; CC, Madhya 6), and conceals it in order to taste Radha's prema (CC, Adi 4). The heroine, however, transfers this "secret" to a love for the nagaris of Nadia; that is the notion of gaura-nagari, which the tradition does not accept (introductory note, chapter 27); rendered as in the original. "Covers the sun's rays with His hand" (14.5) is a proverb for the vain concealment of the obvious.

15. Narahari — "gaurāṅgacāmḍera eirūpa saba..." (GPT1 p. 228, no. 160; GCC 10.13)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk). A third defends secrecy: "Do not grieve: with Gaurangachand all is so; in the open there is sorrow, in secret greater joy; even people who get a little wealth hide it more carefully than life; love is the supreme jewel and must be hidden, and a connoisseur of rasa is ashamed if it becomes known; Narahari's Lord is the crown of the adroit, and so He sports in secret." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 13.*²⁸

15.1. "With Gaurangachand all is so — do not grieve at this: in what is open sorrow arises, in secret there is greater joy.

15.2. On getting even a little wealth, people hide it more carefully than life; if you say this is impossible — look at the people of the world.

15.3. Love is the supreme jewel: it must be kept hidden; if it becomes known, shame arises in the heart of a connoisseur of rasa.

15.4. Narahari's Lord is the crown of the adroit: does anyone know His like? Unceasingly He sports in secret, showing His adroitness."

28. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 228, no. 160 (scan PDF p. 487); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 160 (catalogue: NG-355). GCC — kirana 10, pada 13 (ed. 1947, p. 123; scan PDF p. 128), "anyā ca — yathārāga". The argument that love must be hidden is a commonplace of the poetics of rasa (cf. the answer in no. 16: "love never stays hidden"); on Gaura's "secret play" see note 27. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

16. Narahari — "ye bala se bala pīriti gupata..." (GPT1 p. 228, no. 161; GCC 10.14)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk). Yet another objects: "Love never stays hidden — its nature is to be seen; He behaves like the sun. Gora, Shachi's darling, is the thief of the composure of all the young wives of good family in Nadia: whoever wants to keep her dharma He enchants with a glance; night and day He sports with the young nagaris and pines for them." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 14.*²⁹

16.1. "Say what you will: to hide love is a heavy burden; love never stays hidden — its nature is to be seen.

16.2. He behaves like the sun — can I take that as secret? You think it secret, but I know it is open.

16.3. In the town of Nadia the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa, Gora, Shachi's darling, is the thief of the jewel of composure of all the young wives of good family.

16.4. In all the world, as far as I have seen, there is no such nagara anywhere; know for certain: no one remains safe from Him.

16.5. If some fair one, holding to her composure, wants to keep her dharma, — He, glancing with the sly corner of His eye, enchants her.

16.6. Night and day He sports without end with the young nagaris; Narahari's Lord, the beloved of the nagaris, pines for the nagaris."³⁰

29. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 228, no. 161 (scan PDF p. 487); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 161 (catalogue: NG-356). GCC — kirana 10, pada 14 (ed. 1947, pp. 123–124; scan PDF pp. 128–129), "anyā ca — yathārāga". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

30. 16.5–16.6: "He enchants her who wants to keep her dharma", "night and day He sports with the young nagaris" — this is the notion of gaura-nagari in its direct form; rendered exactly, without softening. The Gaudiya tradition rejects it: according to Vrindavana Dasa, in this avatara the Lord did not look at women and allowed no jesting with them (CB, Adi), and Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati counts "gaura-nagari" among the apasampradayas (introductory note, chapter 27). In Narahari Chakravarti's own work these words are at once answered by other heroines, who describe the Lord's strictness (nos. 19–20 of this chapter).

17. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo niścaya balie..." (GPT1 pp. 228–229, no. 162; GCC 10.15)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk). The next says: "We are quite simple: we cannot understand the play of a nagara that Gora performs in Nadia; we know Him only by His outward nobility, and what is within Him cannot be known; blessed are you, connoisseurs of rasa in the city of the gods — who but you could understand it? At last the darkness has lifted: Narahari's Lord has appeared in the world subject to young women." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 15.*³¹

17.1. "Listen, listen: I say for certain — we are quite simple: we cannot understand such play of a nagara as Gora performs in Nadia.

- 17.2. As we see His supreme nobility outwardly, so we know Him; what is within cannot be known.
- 17.3. Blessed indeed are you, the foremost connoisseurs of rasa in the city of the gods: who but you can understand these sports?
- 17.4. Be that as it may, at last the darkness of my mind seems to have gone: Narahari's Lord has appeared in the world subject to young women."³²

31. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 228–229, no. 162 (scan PDF pp. 487–488); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 162 (catalogue: NG-357). GCC — kirana 10, pada 15 (ed. 1947, p. 124; scan PDF p. 129). The GPT1 OCR of 17.1 is garbled; the text follows the GPT1 scan, GPT2 and GCC. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

32. The tone of the pada seems mocking: the speaker appears to agree with the "connoisseurs of rasa in the city of the gods" (17.3 — a direct indication that the disputants are celestials, note 24), but her "subject to young women" (yubātī-adhīna, 17.4) sounds like a challenge. "Subject to His devotees" is the Lord's word about Himself (Bhag. 9.4.63), and of the gopis — 10.32.22; the transfer of this to Gaura as a nagara the tradition does not accept (introductory note, chapter 27). Rendered as in the original.

18. Narahari — "gorācāmṛa nāgarāli yata..." (GPT1 p. 229, no. 163; GCC 10.16)

*A link (short payar). All speak in many ways of Gorachand's play as a nagara, as if nectar were flowing; hearing this, a woman of another group comes and boldly addresses them all. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 16.*³³

- 18.1. Of all Gorachand's play as a nagara they all speak — in so many ways.
- 18.2. As if a stream of nectar were raining down: I do not know what joy is in all their hearts.
- 18.3. Another — a woman of a new group — came there, hearing these words.
- 18.4. Narahari does not know her ways: she boldly speaks to them all.

33. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 229, no. 163 (scan PDF p. 488); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 163 (catalogue: NG-126). GCC — kirana 10, pada 16 (ed. 1947, p. 124; scan PDF p. 129). Short payar: a couplet is one line. The newcomer's speech is the next pada (no. 19). B. The pada stands in the GPT section of nagari padas — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

19. Narahari — "ki baliba ogo tomādera prati..." (GPT1 p. 229, no. 164; GCC 10.17)

*An answer: praise of the Lord's strictness (by content — not nagari-bhava). The newcomer says: "I am bewildered: why do you revile the Moon of Nadia? He is the lamp of Jagannatha Mishra's family, the conqueror of the digvijayi, the pandits of Nadia submit to Him, He is ever on the path of dharma; He does not listen to talk of women and never, even by mistake, looks at the faces of others' wives; if, while bathing in the Ganga, a woman's cloth touches Him, He at once performs expiation and still cannot regain His peace. To slander Him wilfully is an aparadha; Narahari is witness: never say such things." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 17.*³⁴

- 19.1. "What shall I say to you? I am quite bewildered: why do you so revile so good a person — the Moon of Nadia?
- 19.2. Who does not know the great scholar Jagannatha Mishra? The world extols Him as the lamp of his pure family.
- 19.3. He conquered the digvijayi, the pandits of Nadia submit to Him; He is ever devoted to the path of dharma and knows nothing but the Vedas and the like.
- 19.4. He never listens to talk of women — it pains Him to hear it; never, even by mistake, does He look at the faces of others' wives.

19.5. If ever, while He bathes in the Suradhuni, a woman's cloth touches His body, He at once performs the due expiation and still cannot regain His peace.

19.6. To slander Him falsely and wilfully would be an aparadha. Narahari is witness: I teach you all — never say this."³⁵

34. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 229, no. 164 (scan PDF p. 488); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 164 (catalogue: NG-358; first line "paṛinu dhande", as in GPT1). GCC — kirana 10, pada 17 (ed. 1947, pp. 124–125; scan PDF pp. 129–130). The pada stands in the GPT section of nagari padas, but by content it is an answer to the notion of gaura-nagari; in GCC it is the speech of a celestial woman "of a new group" (no. 18; note 24). B. The pada stands in the GPT section of nagari padas — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

35. Here Gaura is described just as in the biographies: His learning and the victory over the digvijayi (Keshava Kashmiri; CB, Adi; CC, Adi 16), His strictness towards women (CB, Adi: in this avatara the Lord did not look at women and allowed no jesting with them; cf. note 30). The detail of the expiation (prāyaścitta, parācita) after an accidental touch of a woman's cloth while bathing is the author's own; it is not in the biographies known to us. "Aparadha" is an offence — here, slander of the Lord. The signature "Narahari is witness": the poet himself testifies to the Lord's purity.

20. Narahari — "hera āisa ogo o saba sahite..." (GPT1 pp. 229–230, no. 165; GCC 10.19)

An answer: praise of the Lord's strictness (by content — not nagari-bhava). Another takes her friend by the hand: "Come here — why quarrel with them? In the city of the gods a false tale has arisen; do not be troubled. Only the guilty revile the faultless. Shachi's son out of modesty does not raise His face — far from looking at anyone; He does not touch even the shadow of other women — how could there be a touching of bodies? He does not go to the Ganga ghat where young women throng — He bathes at a secluded pond or at home, trembling for fear of disgrace. Let no one revile Narahari's Lord any more." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 19.³⁶ 20.1. "Come over here: why do you quarrel with those? In the city of the gods a false tale has arisen — do not be troubled by it.

20.2. All good conduct has gone far away, no one respects anyone; this is a grave thing: what comes of what, of that they know nothing.

20.3. To censure one who has faults is forbidden — all say this; and whoever censures the faultless is surely the guilty one in the world.

20.4. Shachi's son is the best of men — this is known throughout the world: far from ever looking at anyone, out of modesty He does not raise His face.

20.5. He who never touches even the shadow of other women with His foot — I cannot understand at all: how could a touching of bodies and the like be possible for Him?

20.6. Knowing that a throng of young women is at the ghat of the Suradhuni, He does not go there: He goes to a pond and bathes where He sees a secluded spot;

20.7. or else He performs His bath at home: His heart trembles for fear of disgrace. The great master of the senses, dear to all — who does not praise Him?

20.8. Alas, alas! How can one say such words of Him whose peerless fame, like an elixir, has filled the world?

20.9. Who will believe such words of Him? I feel ashamed at this. Does a good person know how to revile a good one? It is the work of wicked people.

20.10. Still I say, knowing you as neighbours: accept the essence of my words — let no one, even by mistake, revile Narahari's Lord any more."³⁷

36. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 229–230, no. 165 (scan PDF pp. 488–489); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 165 (catalogue: NG-127). GCC — kirana 10, pada 19 (ed. 1947, pp. 125–126; scan PDF pp. 130–131); it is preceded by the short pada 10.18 (not in GPT): another woman, fearless, takes her friend by the hand and speaks to her. GCC readings: "dekhibe thākuka" (20.4), "sujana jane ki sujane nindaye" (20.9). 20.7 "kriyā" follows GCC (GPT1 reads "krīṛā", "play" — probably a misprint). B. The pada stands in the GPT section of nagari padas — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

37. "In the city of the gods a false tale has arisen" (20.1) is a direct indication that the dispute is among celestial women (note 24). The description of the Lord (20.4–20.7) is the same as in the biographies: according to CB (Adi), in this avatara the Lord did not look at other men's wives; the detail of bathing in a secluded place is the author's own. The words "let no one revile the Lord", in the mouth of Narahari Chakravarti's heroine, coincide with the position of the tradition, which rejects gaura-nagari (introductory note, chapter 27).

21. Narahari — "bhāla bhāla ogo esaba kathāte..." (GPT1 pp. 230–231, no. 166; GCC 10.21)

*Nagari-bhava (a mocking answer). The disputants laugh: "We are not afraid: as virtuous as you are, so is your Gora — ah, He knows nothing, a muni among sages, He never goes into other people's houses! So many such virtues He has — and how many within He does not show; only young women's glances know them; but your eyes, like those of some birds, do not see the moon of the night: how should others know that Narahari's Lord is a snare that enchants women?" Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 21.*³⁸

21.1. "Well, well, dear: we are not afraid of such words. As virtuous as you are — so virtuous is your Gora!

21.2. Ah, ah! He knows nothing at all — I have never seen such a one! Utterly master of the senses, like the king of sages — His righteousness is renowned!

21.3. He does not listen to talk of women — this fame is known in the world; He never leaves His own house to go into anyone's house on any business!

21.4. So many such peerless virtues He has — how many of them will you tell? And as many as there are within — those He does not show outwardly.

21.5. So I say, listen: others have no power to know those virtues — they appear only in the flash of these young women's glances.

21.6. Your eyes, I see, like those of [some] birds, do not see the moon of the night: how should others know that Narahari's Lord is a snare that enchants women?"³⁹

38. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 230–231, no. 166 (scan PDF pp. 489–490); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 166 (catalogue: NG-359). GCC — kirana 10, pada 21 (ed. 1947, pp. 126–127; scan PDF pp. 131–132); it is preceded by the short pada 10.20 (not in GPT): "these merry ones, hearing the admonition, laughed to themselves and answered slyly". 21.3 "nā yāna" follows GCC (GPT1 "nā jāna"). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

39. The whole pada mocks the defender: the praise of the Lord's strictness (21.2–21.3) is repeated with derision; rendered as in the original, keeping the mocking tone. "Do not see the moon of the night" (21.6) apparently refers to birds that sleep at night: the defender supposedly does not know the "night" side of Gaura's life — and that is the very notion of gaura-nagari, which the tradition does not accept (introductory note, chapter 27; cf. notes 30, 35).

22. Narahari — "hera āisa prāṇa sajani ihāte..." (GPT1 p. 231, no. 167; GCC 10.22)

*Nagari-bhava (the dispute). The mocker's friend says to her: "Leave it — you hold these secret talks of rasa with her in vain: she is simple and does not walk this path; one who delights in the formless will not like form. Ask her instead: if He is so master of His senses, why does He take on the guise of a nagara in the midst of Nadia, why do women lose their shame at the fragrance of His body, why does He, seeing a man's face and mistaking it for a woman's, fall in a swoon, why does He dance in the assembly of the virtuous taking a woman's name and repeat 'woman' in His mind, why does He gather so many young women in His house? Let her answer." Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 22.*⁴⁰

- 22.1. "Come over here, dear friend: this brings no joy to the heart — in vain you hold these secret talks of rasa with her.
- 22.2. Who but a woman versed in rasa can understand the heart of a rasika? And she is very simple — she never walks this path.
- 22.3. However much you explain, she has no concern with it: one whose delight is in the formless — will form ever please her?
- 22.4. If ever she sincerely keeps your rare company, then she will understand what the play of the Moon of Nadia is.
- 22.5. Let all this be now; ask her just once: being so much master of His senses, how does He sport like this?
- 22.6. He who knows nothing [of this], in whom is no trace of pleasure — why does He take on the guise of a nagara in the midst of the town of Nadia?
- 22.7. Nowhere have I heard of this: is this the deed of a noble person? With the fragrance of His body He breaks the reserve and shame of the women-bees.
- 22.8. He who is so grave — are such deeds His, how do they please His mind? Seeing a man's face and mistaking it for a woman's face, He falls in a swoon.
- 22.9. This is very strange: one who has so much modesty — is such desire His? In the assembly of the virtuous He dances unceasingly, taking a woman's name.
- 22.10. He who never hears talk of women with His own ears — how is it that He constantly repeats "woman" in His mind?
- 22.11. He who in the world is righteous as no one else — for what reason does He gather so many young women in His own house?
- 22.12. Such are the ways of Narahari's Lord: tell her to answer this — how has such faith in such a one arisen in a generous heart?"⁴¹

40. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 231, no. 167 (scan PDF p. 490); in the GPT1 OCR line 22.7b is missing, but it is in the scan. GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 167 (catalogue: NG-360). GCC — kirana 10, pada 22 (ed. 1947, pp. 127–128; scan PDF pp. 132–133), "asyāḥ svapakṣāha — yathārāga" ("one of her own side said"). GCC readings: "dhare nāgarīṇī beśa" — "takes on the guise of a nagarini (a woman)" (22.6), "uhāra cite" — "in her heart" (22.12). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

41. The disputant's rhetorical questions reinterpret features of the Lord's lila known from the biographies in the spirit of gaura-nagari: dancing in kirtana "with a woman's name" (22.9) — cf. the episode when the Lord repeated "gopi, gopi" (CC, Adi 17); "the guise of a nagarini" in the GCC reading (22.6) — perhaps an allusion to the drama in Chandrashekhara's house, where the Lord appeared in a woman's form (CB, Madhya 18); "repeats 'woman' in His mind" (22.10) and the swoons (22.8) — His absorption in the bhava of the gopis and of Radha; "gathers young women in His house" (22.11) — the visits of the young wives to Shachi-devi (nos. 1–12). According to Krishnadasa Kaviraja, all this is Radha's prema for Krishna, which the Lord tastes (CC, Adi 4), not a nagara's love; the tradition does not accept the disputant's interpretation (introductory note, chapter 27). "One whose delight is in the formless" (22.3) is a gibe: the defender's strict view of the Lord is likened to worship of the impersonal (nirākāra). Rendered as in the original.

23. Narahari — "śuna śuna ogo sakala bujhinu..." (GPT1 pp. 231–233, no. 168; GCC 10.24)

Nagari-bhava (the end of the dispute). Yet another, skilled in speech, says: "She is not at fault — you dispute in vain. Do not be sad, good and fair one: you say Gora does not look at others' women — how can I believe it, when the nagara's play in Nadia is beyond counting and I have seen it myself? And if you ask how this is possible in this descent — no one gives up his nature: this son of Shachi is the son of Yashoda; for the gopis' sake He herded cows and lifted the hill, was subject to them, sought their touch, clasped a friend's feet to end a gopi's mana, carried [a gopi] on His shoulders, and their scolding was sweeter to Him than the hymns of the Vedas; how would He give up such a nature?" Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 24.⁴²

- 23.1. "Listen, listen: I have understood everything — she is not at fault; it is with you all that I am angry, for your disputing.
- 23.2. If someone says something without understanding — should one laugh at that? To explain in the way she can understand — that I would think wise.
- 23.3. She is of good conduct; ah, such a one you do not know how to bring round. Be silent now and listen to what I say.
- 23.4. Come over here, good and fair one, do not be sad: hearing your words, my heart is overjoyed.
- 23.5. You say that Gora does not look at others' women even from the corner of His eye — how can I believe all this?
- 23.6. If I could see even a little of what you praise — then, swearing an oath and saying 'certainly', I would come to believe.
- 23.7. In the town of Nadia the nagara's play is beyond counting; be it as it may with others' words — this I have seen myself.
- 23.8. If you say: how is this possible in this descent? — there is a well-known reason for it; all people speak of it.
- 23.9. Whatever nature one has, no one can ever abandon it: one acts according to one's nature, and no one's prohibition avails.
- 23.10. If you think such a nature of His is seen nowhere — to that I tell you, listen: the world is witness to it.
- 23.11. This son of Shachi is the son of Yashoda: do you not know that? Need I tell you of all the secret pastimes in Vrindavana?
- 23.12. For the gopis' sake — the herding of cows, the lifting of the hill and all else; how much shall I tell of the lilas with the gopis, whatever and wherever they were!
- 23.13. Utterly subject to them all, not seeing them for a moment He feels it an aeon; with so many pretexts He goes about constantly, hoping for the touch of their bodies!
- 23.14. If some [gopi] in mana, being offended, will not turn to look at Kanu, — to end her mana He clasps her friend's feet.
- 23.15. He carries [her] on His shoulders, deeming it His supreme good fortune; hearing their scolding words gives Him more joy than the hymns of the Vedas.
- 23.16. He who for the sake of young women does not mind grave disgrace in the world — tell me now: how would He give up such a nature?
- 23.17. Know this for certain, reflecting in your hearts: by His nature He does all this — you will understand of yourselves.
- 23.18. Narahari's Lord is the Crown of connoisseurs of rasa, who has no equal: who does not know these deeds? What further doubt is there?"⁴³

42. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 231–233, no. 168 (scan PDF pp. 490–492); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 168 (catalogue: NG-361). GCC — kirana 10, pada 24 (ed. 1947, pp. 128–129; scan PDF pp. 133–134); it is preceded by the short pada 10.23 (not in GPT): the mockers said much, the defender was abashed, and then another, skilled in speech, looked at her own group and spoke sweetly. 23.13 "adhīna" ("subject") follows GCC (GPT1 "adhika"). The next GPT pada (no. 169 = GCC 10.25, "brajapure rasabilāsa biśeṣa...") is in chapter 33. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

43. "This son of Shachi is the son of Yashoda" (23.11): that Gaura is Krishna Himself is the foundation of Gaudiya theology (CC, Adi 1–4; CB). But the heroine's conclusion — "a nature cannot be given up, so in Nadia too He plays the nagara" — the tradition does not accept: according to Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Krishna comes as Gaura in order to taste Radha's love — in her bhava and complexion, as a devotee, not as an enjoyer (CC, Adi 4); therefore Vrindavana Dasa and Krishnadasa Kaviraja do not portray Gaura as a nagara, and Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati regards gaura-nagari as a deviation (introductory note, chapter 27). Rendered as in the original. 23.12–23.15 are motifs of Vraja-lila: the lifting of Govardhana, the gopis' mana, the gopi who asked to be carried on His shoulders (Bhag. 10.30.37–38); "the beloved's scolding is sweeter than the hymns of the Vedas" — cf. Krishna's words in CC, Adi 4.26. "Kalpa" (kalapa, 23.13) — an aeon.

Summary of chapter 32

The chapter continues the padas signed "Narahari" from section 3.2 of GPT. All 23 padas have been found in Narahari Chakravarti's "Gaura-charita-chintamani" and checked against its scan ("probably Chakravarti" — B). No. 146 (no. 1) = GCC 9.2 — a mother-in-law, on an astrologer's word, sends her daughters-in-law to Shachi-devi. Nos. 147–157 (nos. 2–12) = GCC 9.6–9.16 — the "wishes" (manoratha) of the townswomen on the way to Shachi's house, all in the future tense: to steal a glance at Gaura, feigned mana, a silent conversation of the eyes, reproaches; in GCC no. 150 comes after no. 153 (9.12). Nos. 158–168 (nos. 13–23) = GCC 10.10–10.24 — according to GCC this is the conversation and dispute of heavenly women (debaramaṇī) looking down on Nadia from the sky: some speak of the "secret play of the nagara", others (nos. 19–20) answer with a description of the Lord's strictness — He does not look at women, does not listen to talk of them, bathes in a secluded place — and call slander of Him an aparadha; the dispute ends with mockery and the argument "Shachi's son is Yashoda's son, a nature cannot be given up" (nos. 21–23). Section 3.2 of GPT omits GCC 9.3–9.5, 9.17–9.23, 10.1–10.9, 10.11, 10.18, 10.20, 10.23 (some of them — 9.18–9.19, 9.21–9.22, 10.7–10.9 — stand in other sections of GPT, see the concluding note of chapter 33). Where GCC is more explicit than GPT (no. 9 — "the cloth over the breast" instead of "the cloth over the face"; no. 10 — "wants to embrace" instead of "wants to see your dear face"; no. 2 — "under Madana's weight"), the GPT text is translated and the GCC reading is noted in VAR and in a note. The motifs of attraction in the townswomen's daydreams and the talk of the "nagara" are rendered exactly, without softening, with notes on the position of the tradition (notes 5, 25, 27, 30, 41, 43).

Chapter 33. Nagari Padas — VII: the "Narahari" padas of GPT (sect. 3.2, nos. 169–180; sects. 2.4, 3.1, 5.1, 5.2): the quarrels of the heavenly women, the townswomen's words at the Lord's wedding; concluding note

On what nagari-bhava is, the position of the tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) and the rules of translation, see the introductory note to the section of nagari padas in chapter 27; on the two poets named Narahari (Narahari Sarakara and Narahari Chakravarti) and on the attribution labels ("probably Sarakara", "probably Chakravarti", "not established"), see the introductory note to the "Narahari" appendix in chapter 17.

1. Narahari — "brajapure rasabilāsa biśeṣa..." (GPT1 p. 233, no. 169; GCC 10.25)

Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk). The heavenly woman who closed the dispute (chapter 32, no. 23) tells her friend in confidence: who can tell the special plays of rasa in Vraja? Yet He is the very same, and with all the same dear companions He ever sports in Nadia, absorbed in singing of His own virtues; first giving His own the nectar of His beauty to drink, He made them as if mad, and the young noble wives, bidding farewell to family and shame, made Gora their very essence. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 25.¹

1.1. "The special plays of rasa in the city of Vraja — who can tell them all? Keep it secret; attend to what I tell you, counting you as my own.

1.2. This is He, and He is this: taking with Him all the same dear companions, He ever sports in the city of Nadia, absorbed in singing of His own virtues.

1.3. First giving His own the nectar of the wondrous sweetness of His form to drink, He made their minds and their steps as if mad — and they count nothing else.

1.4. Ever new noble wives, giving the last libation to family, to the family's disgrace and to shame, have all made their essence Gora, full of joy, the Beloved of their life — Narahari is witness to it."²

1. Signature — "Narahari" (narahari sāthī — "Narahari the witness", cf. chapter 31, 13.10). GPT1 — p. 233, no. 169 (scan PDF p. 492); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 169 (catalogue: NG-128). GCC — kirana 10, pada 25 (ed. 1947, p. 130; scan PDF p. 135), "yathārāga". Who speaks. The tenth kirana of GCC is the morning talk of the heavenly women (debaramaṇī) looking down on Nadia from the sky (chapter 32, note 24); padas 10.25–10.26 (nos. 1–2 of this chapter) close their talk: one tells another "in confidence", and the other asks to be taught how to come and live in Nadia. GCC readings: "gupate rākhiyā dio cita yāhā kahiye āpana jāniyā tore" ("keeping it secret, attend..."), "nija guṇagaṇe" ("absorbed in His own virtues"). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

2. "This is He, and He is this; with all the same companions" (1.2): that Gaura is Krishna Himself and that Krishna's companions came with Him to Navadvipa is the teaching of the tradition (CC, Adi 1 and 3–4; Kavi Karnapura's "Gaura-ganoddesha-dipika" names who among Gaura's companions was whom in Vraja). But the gopis in Gaura-lila are not townswomen of Nadia in love with Gaura: the Lord Himself came in Radha's bhava to taste Her love (CC, Adi 4), and therefore the Gaudiya tradition does not accept the speaker's conclusion — that "the young wives of Nadia made Gora, as a nagara, their essence" (introductory note, chapter 27). Rendered as in the original. "Absorbed in singing of His own virtues" — cf. CB, Madhya (the Lord in bhavavesha sings of Himself). "To give the last libation" (tilāñjali) — to abandon for good.

2. Narahari — "gaurāṅgacāmḍera sucāru carita..." (GPT1 p. 233, no. 170; GCC 10.26)

Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk). The listener, hearing of Gaurangachand's lovely deeds, is filled with joy and cannot hold back tears of love; joining her palms, she asks to be taught how she might once come to live in Nadia and be a companion of its young playful women, keep Narahari's

*Beloved in her heart and be rid of the cruel barrier. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 26.*³

- 2.1. Hearing and hearing of Gaurangachand's lovely deeds, the fair one was filled with joy; she cannot hold her composure — again and again both eyes fill with tears of love.
- 2.2. Joining her palms and bowing, she again speaks soft, sweet words: "Counting me as your own, at last you have, as it were, taken all the pain from my heart.
- 2.3. I pray: how might I once dwell in this city of Nadia? And how might I live as a companion of these ever new playful beauties?
- 2.4. Keeping the Beloved of Narahari's life within my heart, I shall be rid of the cruel barrier. Tell me, tell me: by what means will all these wishes be fulfilled?"

3. Signature — "Narahari" (narahari prāṇapiyā — "the Beloved of Narahari's life", glossary). GPT1 — p. 233, no. 170 (scan PDF p. 492); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 170 (catalogue: NG-362). GCC — kirana 10, pada 26 (ed. 1947, p. 130; scan PDF p. 135). 2.4 "be fulfilled" follows GPT2 and GCC "saphala" (GPT1 "sakala", a misprint); "barrier" — GPT1 and GCC "bādhā" (GPT2 "dhāṁdhā", "bewilderment"). The wish of heavenly beings to be born where the Lord reveals His lila is a commonplace of the hagiographies (CB, Adi: the gods long to be born in Navadvipa to share in the Lord's sankirtana); the "cruel barrier" is that one living in the city of the gods cannot come to Nadia. The closing pada of the kirana (GCC 10.27) is not in GPT: the fair one told her friend all she had asked, and the heavenly women, trembling and winking at one another, gave themselves to merry play, gazing at Narahari's Lord; the colophon: "the description of the play of the heavenly women filled with love for Him". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

3. Narahari — "surapura mājhe basati kariyā..." (GPT1 pp. 233–234, no. 171; GCC 11.4)

*An answer: defence of the chastity of the women of Nadia (the heavenly women's talk; by content not nagari-bhava). The opening of the eleventh kirana of GCC — "the love-quarrels of the heavenly women". A heavenly woman who has just arrived angrily rebukes her friends: living in the city of the gods, they have grown proud and slander the women of Nadia; what they describe happens only with the young wives of Vraja, while the wives of Nadia are faithful to their husbands, do not see another man's face even in a dream, revere their elders; whoever sings of others' disgrace is disgraced. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 4.*⁴

- 3.1. "Living in the city of the gods, why have you grown so proud? You feel no fear at heart in slandering the women of Nadia!
- 3.2. Alas, alas! Hearing such perverse words, how can I bear it? I do not know what wrong these women of Nadia have done to you all.
- 3.3. You judge others by your own ways and do not know the secret of others' hearts; you understand nothing — what comes of what; so I say: in vain do you bear a body.
- 3.4. What you describe is possible only with the young wives in the city of Vraja; but all the young wives of Nadia are the most faithful of the faithful — the whole world knows it.
- 3.5. They do not see another husband's face even in a dream, never walk an evil road; they know no tricks, no deceit, no guile — all of them always simple of heart.
- 3.6. Steadfast, skilful in their work, of lovely conduct — always on the highest path of dharma; mindful of the matchless shame of family and of fear, never, forgetting themselves, do they sit with a bad man.
- 3.7. They all love their elders as their life; their auspicious virtues cannot be counted. In my heart there is one thing: always to keep them with care in my eyes.

3.8. So I tell you: knowing that you are my neighbours, you will surely accept these words — I say nothing else. Whoever sings of another's disgrace is herself disgraced: this Narahari knows."⁵

4. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — pp. 233–234, no. 171 (scan PDF pp. 492–493); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 171 (catalogue: NG-129). GCC — kirana 11, pada 4 (ed. 1947, pp. 132–133; scan PDF pp. 137–138), "yathārāga". Who speaks. The eleventh kirana of GCC is headed "Again in the morning — the love-quarrels and so on of the heavenly women"; its opening is not in GPT: from the sky the heavenly women drink the nectar of Gaura's form as He plays in Shachi's courtyard and argue — some say that the nagaris of Nadia "have gone mad for the Beloved" and will bring disgrace on themselves, others answer that the wives of Vraja did the same (GCC 11.1); a short pada on the heavenly women's rapture (11.2); praise of the love of Nadia's young wives — and then "a heavenly woman arrived and, waving her hand, said angrily to all" (11.3). GCC readings: "nā jāniyā" (3.2), "temī bali" (3.3). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27); this pada answers it.

5. The defender sets Vraja against Nadia: a love that takes no account of husbands and of talk "is possible only with the young wives of Vraja" (3.4), while the women of Nadia are faithful wives. Gaudiya theology agrees: the parakiya-rasa of the gopis belongs to Vraja (CC, Adi 4), and in Navadvipa the Lord did not accept the worship of women as a nagara (CB, Adi). The pada is therefore by content not nagari-bhava (like nos. 19–20 of chapter 32); in the heavenly women's dispute, however, her words will be mocked (nos. 4–10). "Neighbours" (sahabāsi, 3.8) — those who live with her in the city of the gods.

4. Narahari — "bhāla bhāla ihā śikhāte habe nā..." (GPT1 p. 234, no. 172; GCC 11.6)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's quarrel). A mocker answers the defender: they need no teaching — as if they did not know: on earth only the wives of Nadia are faithful, and in the city of the gods only she; they themselves, forever singing of others' disgrace, will be disgraced, but will not make her a sharer; how can so clever a woman live among the unchaste? Let her go to Nadia with her dharma and her shame and live among the chaste. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 6.*⁶

4.1. "Well, well! No need to teach us this — as if I did not know it all! On earth only the wives of Nadia are faithful to their husbands, and in the city of the gods only you!

4.2. We, ever singing of others' disgrace, shall all be disgraced — do not you worry about that: we shall not make you a sharer in it.

4.3. Besides, how will you, the cleverest of women, live alone in the city of the gods? Living with the unchaste, you will easily become unchaste yourself.

4.4. So I say: go to this city of Nadia, taking your dharma, your shame and the rest. Narahari is glad of it: be always careful, living among the chaste."

6. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 234, no. 172 (scan PDF p. 493); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 172 (catalogue: NG-363). GCC — kirana 11, pada 6 (ed. 1947, p. 133; scan PDF p. 138); before it, the short pada 11.5 (not in GPT): hearing this, a heavenly woman versed in rasa laughed inwardly with her own group, exchanged signs with them and spoke. 4.1 — GPT1 "nā jāni e āmi", GCC "nā jāniye āmi" (GPT2 "jānie āmi", "I know"): the gibe — "as if I did not know"; 4.2 GCC "ihāra bhāgī kakhana nā karite yāba"; 4.4 GCC "tāhe bali". The tone of the pada is mocking — rendered as in the original. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

5. Narahari — "hera āisa ogo patibratā saha..." (GPT1 p. 234, no. 173; GCC 11.7)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's quarrel). Another calls her friend: why talk with a "faithful wife"? Joy is among equals; not all heavenly women are adroit — as the owl does not see the sun; the secret stories of Nadia's young wives she will not reveal for shame; but our Gora — beautiful, good — speaks to no one with raised face, is always careful on the path of dharma, knows nothing of such things — and such a Lord of Narahari they bewitched with signs from the corners of their eyes. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 7.*⁷

- 5.1. "Come here, friend: why say all this to a 'faithful wife'? Among equals joy arises; with unequals pain grows.
- 5.2. Being born heavenly women — are all of us then adroit? Never think so: as the owl does not see the sun — so, know, are many.
- 5.3. The young wives of Nadia — the young and the experienced — who equals them in the world? Their secret stories I cannot reveal for shame.
- 5.4. Look, look here: our Gora, the life of our life, beautiful and good, speaks to no one with raised face; wondrous is His way, He is wholly absorbed within.
- 5.5. Always careful on the path of dharma — what shall I say! — He knows nothing of all this. And such a Lord of Narahari they bewitched, signalling from the corners of their eyes."⁸

7. Signature — "Narahari" (naraharinātha — "Narahari's Lord"). GPT1 — p. 234, no. 173 (scan PDF p. 493); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 173 (catalogue: NG-130; the catalogue's "paratatratā" is an OCR error for "patibratā"). GCC — kirana 11, pada 7 (ed. 1947, p. 134; scan PDF p. 139), "anyā ca — yathārāga" ("and another"). 5.1 in GCC "ki lāgi kahicha" — "why are you saying all this to a faithful wife". "The owl does not see the sun" (5.2) — a proverb for blindness to the obvious. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

8. The Lord's portrait in 5.4–5.5 is the same as in the hagiographies: He speaks to no one with raised face and is "always careful on the path of dharma" (CB, Adi: in this incarnation the Lord did not look at women and allowed no jesting with them; cf. nos. 19–20 of chapter 32). The words "they bewitched Him" are the speaker's slander of the women of Nadia, rendered as in the original; the tradition's answer — introductory note (chapter 27).

6. Narahari — "ki baliba ogo nadiyāra naba..." (GPT1 p. 235, no. 174; GCC 11.8)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's quarrel). Another: the young wives of Nadia do not reveal their secrets, are always gracious outwardly, well-behaved before mother-in-law and sister-in-law, yet gain their ends so that no one notices, and secretly try to win the Moon of Nadia; she herself saw how they bewitched Him — and there was no one to restrain the women: Narahari was not with Gauranga. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 8.*⁹

- 6.1. "What shall I say, friend, of the ways of the young wives of Nadia! They do not reveal what is within, but outwardly they are always most gracious.
- 6.2. Before mother-in-law and sister-in-law they always behave well; whatever everyone praises, that they do with great care.
- 6.3. In many ways they gain their ends — no one can ever notice; to win the Moon of Nadia they go about most secretly.
- 6.4. With my own eyes I saw that day how, with so many graceful poses, they bewitched [Him]. Who would restrain the women? Narahari was not with Gauranga."

9. Signature — "Narahari", merged with the speech (6.4). GPT1 — p. 235, no. 174 (scan PDF p. 494); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 174 (catalogue: NG-131). GCC — kirana 11, pada 8 (ed. 1947, p. 134; scan PDF p. 139), "anyā ca — yathārāga". "Narahari was not with Gauranga": in GCC the poet usually accompanies the Lord and leads Him away from what is improper (GCC 11.11, 11.14 — see notes 18 and 19); here the speaker seems to explain why this time "there was no one to restrain the women". As in no. 5, the words about "bewitching" are the speaker's surmise; in the following padas (nos. 7–8) the mockers themselves describe how the Lord turns away and leaves. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

7. Narahari — "nadiyāte kata kata e kautuka..." (GPT1 p. 235, no. 175; GCC 11.9)

Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's quarrel). The next one confirms it mockingly: she knows well how "faithful" these young chaste ones are: the other day, standing under a young kadamba, she saw Gora walking alone in the late afternoon toward Murari Gupta's quarter; the "faithful wives" were coming along with a fearsome mother-in-law and sister-in-law — and yet, finding Gorachand on a near path, they contrived to stand in His way, signalled to Him and did not keep the end of the sari over the breast; and Narahari's Lord, lowering His face in shame, stepped aside. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 9.¹⁰

- 7.1. "How many such pranks there are in Nadia — how many will you tell! And how 'faithful to their husbands' all these young chaste ones are — that I know.
- 7.2. That day I saw with my own eyes, standing under a young kadamba: Gora was walking alone in the late afternoon toward Murari Gupta's quarter.
- 7.3. At that hour the 'faithful wives' were coming with a fearsome mother-in-law and sister-in-law — and still, finding Gorachand on a near path, they stood there on a pretext, swaying their bodies.
- 7.4. Signalling to Him again and again, luring Him, not keeping even half the end of the sari over the breast... And Narahari's Lord, lowering His face in shame, stepped aside and stood far off."¹¹

10. Signature — "Narahari" (naraharinātha). GPT1 — p. 235, no. 175 (scan PDF p. 494); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 175 (catalogue: NG-364). GCC — kirana 11, pada 9 (ed. 1947, pp. 134–135; scan PDF pp. 139–140), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "jāniye āmi" (7.1), "murārī-guptera" (7.2), "pāyā" (7.3), "lubhāiye" (7.4, "luring"; GPT1 "bhulāiyā", "beguiling"), "eka bhita hayā". Murari Gupta's quarter (pārā) — Murari's house in Navadvipa, which the Lord visited (CB, Madhya; cf. chapter 31, no. 3). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

11. 7.3–7.4 — an open motif of enticement; rendered exactly, without softening. The Lord's response, described by the mocker herself — He lowers His face in shame and moves away (7.4) — is the same as in the hagiographies: in Navadvipa the Lord did not look at women and avoided their company (CB, Adi). The speaker's words about "faithful wives" are mockery; the tradition accepts neither this slander nor the worship of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27).

8. Narahari — "ki kahiba ogo e sakala kathā..." (GPT1 p. 235, no. 176; GCC 11.10)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's quarrel). Another: it is shameful even to speak of it — the beautiful Moon of Nadia ever trembles before young women; once Gora walked alone with an elephant's gait, looking at no one — and the "faithful wives" stood on His path and shot unseen sharp arrows from the corners of their eyes; one, holding a pomegranate, said: "To whom shall I give this wondrous fruit?", another: "He whose body is like new gold will take it Himself, unasked"; Narahari's Lord, holding His composure, finished His errand in shame and quickly went home. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 10.*¹²

- 8.1. "What shall I say, friend: it is most shameful even to speak of these things. Before young women the good and beautiful Moon of Nadia ever trembles.
- 8.2. I do not know on what errand that day Gora went alone with an elephant's gait; He did not look at anyone even once — most gentle, wholly absorbed within.
- 8.3. On that road the 'faithful wives' stood looking at Gauranga — again and again they shot unseen sharp arrows from the restless corners of their eyes.
- 8.4. One, holding a fine pomegranate in her hand, says: "To whom shall I give this wondrous [fruit]?" Another says: 'He whose body is like new gold will take it Himself, unasked.'
- 8.5. Such words they spoke to one another; who, hearing them, would stay calm? Narahari's Lord, holding His composure, in shame quickly finished His errand and went home."¹³

12. Signature — "Narahari" (narahari pahum̐ — "Narahari's Lord"). GPT1 — p. 235, no. 176 (scan PDF p. 494); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 176 (catalogue: NG-132; the stage-1 catalogue's "no. 175" is an error, corrected at the collation of chapter 29). GCC — kirana 11, pada 10 (ed. 1947, p. 135; scan PDF p. 140), "anyā ca — yathārāga". In GCC, after 8.3 there is one more couplet, left out in GPT (more outspoken than GPT): one, swaying, touched Gora's body with her shadow and laughed softly; another, on a pretext, jingled her bracelets. GCC readings: "nadyāra śaśī" (8.1), "nirikhe" (8.2), "kāja sādhi" (8.5). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

13. "Pomegranate" (dārimba) is a stock figure of love poetry; the women's words (8.4) are double-edged — rendered literally, without explanation beyond the original. "Ever trembles before young women" (8.1), "did not look at anyone"

(8.2), "in shame quickly went home" (8.5) — again the Lord's strictness, as in the hagiographies (CB, Adi; notes 8 and 11). The mocker tells it to show the "nature" of the women of Nadia; rendered as in the original.

9. Narahari — "ki baliba iha sabāre nirakhi..." (GPT1 p. 236, no. 177; GCC 11.15)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's quarrel). The mocker goes on: the fame of the ways of Nadia's wives has filled the world — mothers-in-law, sisters-in-law, husbands always scold them and every day fervently pray to Old Shiva, fearing disgrace; they keep them at home, do not let them on the road, let them go to the Suradhuni only with a sister-in-law; the neighbour-women restrain them unceasingly, no one trusts them in anything; hearing such reproach, Narahari dies of shame every day. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 15.*¹⁴

- 9.1. "What shall I say! How much she said, looking at them — can one bear it? What the ways of the women of Nadia are — the whole world is full of it:
- 9.2. mother-in-law, sister-in-law, husband and the rest always scold them all; every day they pray with great fervour to Old Shiva — 'there will be disgrace!'
- 9.3. They always keep them carefully at home, do not let them go out on the road; and if one wants to bathe in the Suradhuni — the sister-in-law goes with her.
- 9.4. The neighbour-women restrain them unceasingly; no one trusts them in any matter. What more shall I say? Hearing that reproach, Narahari dies of shame every day."

14. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 236, no. 177 (scan PDF p. 495); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 177 (catalogue: NG-133). GCC — kirana 11, pada 15 (ed. 1947, p. 138; scan PDF p. 143), "anyā ca — yathārāga"; in GCC it stands after the story of the women's going to the ghat (11.14 = nos. 11–12 of this chapter), in GPT before it (GPT has rearranged the padas: no. 177 = 11.15, no. 178 = 11.17, nos. 179–180 = 11.14). "How much she said" (9.1) — about the defender (no. 3). 9.2: the subject of "pray" is not named in the original — the elders (or the women themselves) fervently worship Old Shiva (buṛāśiba, a revered murti of Shiva in Navadvipa; chapter 31, note 53), fearing that "there will be disgrace". 9.4 "Narahari dies of shame" — a self-abasing signature (glossary, chapter 28): the poet is ashamed to hear the women of Nadia reviled. GCC readings: "sahāre nirasi" (OCR unclear), "jagate bhari", "buṛā śibe", "śuni narahari". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

10. Narahari — "surapure kebā nā jāne nadiyā..." (GPT1 p. 236, no. 178; GCC 11.17)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's quarrel). The defender, frightened, has fallen silent (GCC 11.16); then a playful one, glancing at her own group, says: in the city of the gods everyone knows the ways of the nagaris of Nadia — why be vainly angry with her? What she said is secret; and taking her hand and praising her, she goes on gently: the ways of Nadia's young wives are past counting; no one looks at the bracelet on her own hand in a mirror — here is the jewel in Ai's house: if she came on the astrologer's word, why does she stare unblinking at Gora, playing with her brows, tremble, let her clothes and ornaments slip, break into gooseflesh and sweat? Narahari's Lord is the husband of them all. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 17.*¹⁵

- 10.1. "In the city of the gods who does not know what the ways of the nagaris of Nadia are? Why then are you so vainly angry with her?
- 10.2. What shall I say: what she said is most secret; no one knows it. Have patience, all of you, and listen with care to what I say."
- 10.3. So, glancing at her own group, she quickly took her hand, praised her in many words and speaks very softly, full of rasa:
- 10.4. "The ways of the young wives of Nadia — who can tell how many? Many days I have seen many pranks with my own eyes — and I tell no one.

- 10.5. Let that be; no one looks at the bracelet on her own hand in a mirror: look here — the jewel in Ai's house: why has she come running in the morning?
- 10.6. If you say: on the auspicious word of the astrologer she came to Ai on her own business — then why, playing with her brows, does she gaze unblinking at Gora?
- 10.7. And her body trembles again and again, her clothes and ornaments slip, the knot of her hair comes loose; she is all gooseflesh, sweat trickles, her champa-earrings sway again and again.
- 10.8. Who does such things — say, say? Why should anyone not believe it? Narahari's Lord is the husband of them all: have no doubt of this."¹⁶

15. Signature — "Narahari" (naraharipahumṅ). GPT1 — p. 236, no. 178 (scan PDF p. 495); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 178 (catalogue: NG-134). GCC — kirana 11, pada 17 (ed. 1947, p. 139; scan PDF p. 144), "yathārāga"; before it, the short pada 11.16 (not in GPT): the playful heavenly women said so much that the fair one took fright and could not utter a word; seeing this, a playful one, unable to contain her glee, glanced at her group and spoke slyly. 10.5 — GPT1 and GPT2 "āi bhabanera maṇi" ("the jewel in Ai's house"), GCC "āi-bhabane ramaṇī" ("the woman in Ai's house"); GPT rendered. "No one looks at the bracelet on her hand in a mirror" — a proverb: the obvious needs no proof. The astrologer who sends the daughters-in-law to Shachi — chapter 32, no. 1 (GCC 9.2). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

16. "Narahari's Lord is the husband of them all" (naraharipahumṅ pati sabākāra, 10.8): pati — "husband", "lord". In Vaishnava theology Krishna is the Lord and the sole enjoyer (CC, Adi 5), but on the heroine's lips the word means "the beloved husband of the nagaris of Nadia" — this is the gaura-nagari notion in its plain form, which the tradition does not accept: Gaura came in Radha's bhava as a devotee, not as the enjoyer (CC, Adi 4; introductory note, chapter 27). Rendered exactly. The signs the heroine lists (trembling, gooseflesh, sweat, 10.7) are the sattvika-bhavas, the marks of love in the poetics of rasa. The kirana closes with padas not in GPT: the fair one, hearing these words, let go of her doubts, and the one versed in rasa took her into her circle; all the heavenly women, gazing at Gaurahari playing in Shachi's courtyard among His devotees, cast off shame and began to sing of His deeds (GCC 11.18); the closing stanza is the poet's prayer: "Lord full of rasa, with Your companions keep me in Nadia" (11.19).

11. Narahari — "śuna śuna ei kālīkāra kathā..." (GPT1 pp. 236–237, no. 179; GCC 11.14, first part)

Nagari-bhava (a heavenly woman's story). One, "casting off shame", tells her friend what happened yesterday: many young women joyfully took counsel — one urges going at once with pitchers for water, for the Moon of Nadia will come to the ghat on the Suradhuni; others advise dressing up, adorning the hair with flowers, rubbing the face with kunkuma, lining the eyes, putting on necklaces like a snare, ringing anklets and a belled girdle — so that Gora may lose His composure. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 14 (first half).¹⁷

- 11.1. "Listen, listen: I shall tell you what happened yesterday, casting off shame. Many young women, with the greatest joy, eagerly took counsel.
- 11.2. One says: 'Oh, do not delay, take your pitcher — let us go for water: the Moon of Nadia will come to the ghat on the Suradhuni — it is time for Him to come.'
- 11.3. Another says: 'Why go like this? Dress yourselves in every way — so that by a spark of that radiance the young Kishora cannot keep His composure even by half a sesame seed.'
- 11.4. Another says: 'Braid your hair, adorn your heads with many flowers — so that by their fragrance even the One who has conquered the senses cannot turn His face away.'
- 11.5. Another says: 'Rub your faces with kunkuma, line your eyes brightly with kajal — so that Gauranga's eyes are enchanted, seeing the charming new graces.'
- 11.6. Another says: 'Put on necklaces of many jewels, like a lovely snare — so that in it the Moon of Nadia, beautiful Gora, may easily be caught.'

11.7. Another says: 'Bring and put on ringing anklets and a jewelled, belled girdle — so that the ears of Narahari's Lord are charmed, hearing the sweet sound.'¹⁸

17. Signature — "Narahari" (naraharinātha, 11.7). GPT1 — pp. 236–237, no. 179 (scan PDF pp. 495–496); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 179 (catalogue: NG-135; the catalogue line is from the middle of the pada). GCC — kirana 11, pada 14 (ed. 1947, pp. 137–138; scan PDF pp. 142–143), "anyā ca — yathārāga". GPT has split one pada of GCC into two (nos. 179 and 180, nos. 11–12 of this chapter); the last couplet of no. 179 in GCC reads "yena gaura-śrutiya mugadhaye madhura madhura śabada śuni" ("so that Gaura's ears are charmed..."); the poet's name ("naraharinātha") stands here only in GPT, and this "signature" is the compiler's work. GCC readings: "kahiye tomāre nilaji haiyā", "yugati yatana pāyā" (11.1), "ghāṭa āsiba" (11.2), "sājāha śire", "phirāite" (11.4), "ujara" (11.5). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

18. "The One who has conquered the senses" (jitendriya, 11.4) is Gaura Himself: even the speakers acknowledge the restraint they hope to shake. Before this pada GCC has three padas not taken into GPT (the most outspoken of the kirana): the jests and improper antics of women at the Ganga ghat in the Lord's presence — and Narahari, seeing the impropriety, hurries to finish the bath and leads Gauranga home (GCC 11.11); the Lord, abashed at their words, covers His face with the end of His cloth (11.12); hearing their gossip, the Lord in fear, returning home, performs expiation (prayashchitta, 11.13). The author of GCC himself thus always shows the Lord strict and untouched (cf. CB, Adi).

12. Narahari — "nānā kathā kahi āne āne sabe..." (GPT1 p. 237, no. 180; GCC 11.14, conclusion)

*Nagari-bhava (a heavenly woman's story, concluded). Dressed up, the women with pitchers on their hips come out of their houses and go to the Suradhuni, holding hands and talking of rasa; on the way they see Gaura — but He, a great pandita, walks with bowed head, keeping His composure; suspecting something amiss, He looked back once — and they showered Him with the arrows of their glances; the Jewel of virtues, abashed, thought of disgrace; the nagaris, keeping His form in their hearts, worshipped Him with love. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 11, pada 14 (second half; the last couplet differs in GPT).*¹⁹

- 12.1. Having said much to one another, all eagerly dressed themselves; each looks at her face in a mirror, hastily chewing betel.
- 12.2. Putting on bright clothes, all very lively, pitchers on their hips — from this house and that they came out, with what joy of heart!
- 12.3. Laughing and laughing, the girls of an age — all that throng of "faithful wives", full of rasa — go, lighting up the bank of the Suradhuni: what wondrous radiance of beauty!
- 12.4. In the rapture of rasa, holding hands, glancing with slight graces, telling tales of rasa in many ways — on the path they caught sight of Gaura.
- 12.5. But Gaura, the best of all, a great pandita, walked with bowed head, keeping His composure; suspecting something most improper, He looked back at them only once.
- 12.6. At that moment they all showered Him thickly with the arrows of glances from the corners of their eyes; and at once, abashed, the Jewel of virtues again thought with fear of disgrace.
- 12.7. All the nagaris, keeping Gauranga's form in their hearts, worshipped Him with love. Narahari says: in the city of Nadia the meeting of the nagaris and the nagara came to pass.²⁰

19. Signature — "Narahari" (only in GPT, see note 20). GPT1 — p. 237, no. 180 (scan PDF p. 496); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 180 (catalogue: NG-365). GCC — the second half of pada 11.14 (ed. 1947, p. 138; scan PDF p. 143), without a heading of its own; its first line in GCC is "eirūpa kata kahi āne āne sājilena sabe ulasa haiyā" ("Having said so much..."; in GPT "nānā kathā kahi..."). 12.3 "full of rasa" follows GCC "rasiyā" (GPT1 and GPT2 "basiyā", "sitting" — a misprint); 12.5 GPT1 "rahe" ("remains", "goes"). GCC readings: "cāyā", "pāyā", "īṣata" (12.4), "bhaye bhābaye" (12.6). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

20. The last couplet of GPT (12.7) is different in GCC: "What happened — what shall I say! Only Narahari was with Gauranga: that is why propriety and honour were kept; otherwise there would have been trouble on the road" (ye haila tādā ki kaba kebala narahari chila gaurāṅga-sāthe, tem̐ se sarama bharama rahila, nahile biṣama haita pathe). Here GPT — the only time in the section — does not soften GCC but heightens it: in place of the words that the companion preserved propriety stands the formula "the meeting of the nagaris and the nagara". GPT's text is translated, the GCC reading is in VAR. The "meeting" in the pada itself is only a glance on the road and the worship of the Lord's form in the heart; the Lord walks with bowed head and fears disgrace (12.5–12.6), as in the hagiographies (CB, Adi). The notion of Gaura as a nagara meeting with nagaris is not accepted by the tradition (introductory note, chapter 27).

13. Narahari — "niśi parabhāte nibhṛta nikete..." (GPT1 pp. 93–94, sect. 2.4, no. 2; BR)

Nagari-bhava (a dream). The marriage with Vishnupriya, the morning of the adhivasa day. At dawn, in a secluded house, young wives make merry; one, full of rasa, tells her friends a dream: the young Moon of Nadia, glancing at her sidelong, smilingly invited her to come in the morning for the water rite at His wedding, and then, taking her hand, embraced her again and again; the fragrance of His body is on her still; today is the adhivasa — quickly dress and go to meet Narahari's Lord. Raga todī. Attribution: probably Chakravartī — the pada is in BR (twelfth wave).²¹

- 13.1. At the close of night, in a secluded house, a throng of young wives makes merry; one says this and that to another: fragrance has filled [her] languid body.
- 13.2. Hearing it, she, full of rasa, says: "At the close of night, in a dream, that young Moon of Nadia, glancing at me sidelong — as if raining honey mixed with a smile —
- 13.3. says very softly: 'At My wedding come in the morning for the water rite.' Saying this, He takes my hand and embraces me again and again — what a jest in that!
- 13.4. All this is from the touch of that body's fragrance; I tell you, casting off shame. Today is the adhivasa — quickly dress and go to meet Narahari's Lord."²²

21. Signature — "Narahari" (naraharinātha). GPT1 — pp. 93–94, sect. 2.4 ("the second marriage"), no. 2 (todī; scan PDF pp. 352–353); GPT2 — sect. 2.4, no. 2 (catalogue: NG-046). BR — twelfth wave (ed. 1912, p. 799; ed. 1960, vv. 1403–1406), "punaśca — toṭī", in the series of wedding songs that Narahari Chakravartī gives when Ishana shows Srinivasa the house of Jagannatha Mishra (cf. chapter 21, note 29, and the opening of chapter 22); the preceding pada (GPT 2.4 no. 1 — chapter 21, no. 14) is the night before the adhivasa, when the women of Nadia wait for morning to go to Shachi for the water rite. The pada is not in GCC. BR readings: "iki ati" (13.1), "svapane se saba nadīyā-bidhu" (BR-1960; 13.2), "hāsi-miṣe" ("as if under cover of a smile"), "āliṅgaye" (13.3). The water rite (jala sāi) — a wedding rite of married women (chapter 21, note 3). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

22. The young wife's dream with an embrace (13.3) is the motif of sambhoga in a dream, as in the eighth kirana of GCC (chapter 31); rendered exactly. It is the heroine's imagining: in His lila the Lord did not touch women and in Navadvīpa did not look at them (CB, Adi), and His wedding with Vishnupriya — His eternal consort, the Lord's Bhu-shakti (chapter 21, note 30) — is told by Vrindavana Dasa without any nagari motif (CB, Adi 15). The Gaudiya tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura in the nagari mood (introductory note, chapter 27).

14. Narahari — "gaura baraja-kiśora bara..." (GPT1 p. 94, sect. 2.4, no. 3; BR)

Nagari-bhava (anuraga). The same morning: ever new women, full of anuraga for Gaura, the best of the youths of Vraja, tremble; they hastily dress, line their eyes, rub their faces with kunkuma, bow to their elders, who gladly let them go to Shachi's house; countless throngs hurry along the road. Vrajabulī. Raga todī. Attribution: probably Chakravartī — the pada is in BR (twelfth wave).²³

- 14.1. Gaura is the best of the youths of Vraja; with anuraga for Him come ever new women: their bodies thrill with gooseflesh, they are overwhelmed and cannot keep their composure.
- 14.2. Quickly dressing in fine attire, lining their lotus eyes with kajal, taking mirrors in hand and looking into them, they rubbed their lovely faces with kunkuma.
- 14.3. Judging it time to go, they bowed at the feet of their elders — and these gladly gave them leave to go to the house of Sri Shachi.

14.4. Again and again the rasa of touch pours down like rain; hastily leaving their houses — says Narahari — how many on the path! The throngs cannot be counted.²⁴

23. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 94, sect. 2.4, no. 3 (todi; scan PDF p. 353); GPT2 — sect. 2.4, no. 3 (catalogue: NG-047). BR — twelfth wave (ed. 1912, p. 800; ed. 1960, vv. 1407–1410), "punaśca — torī". The pada is not in GCC. 14.2 "ām̐ji" ("lining"; GPT1 "āji", without candrabindu); BR readings: "aṅgarāge" (BR-1960, 14.1 — "in unguents"; GPT and BR-1912 "anurāge"), "kuṅkumame" (14.2). The following padas of GPT (nos. 4–6 — the women's procession to Shachi, their bow, Shachi's blessing) were translated in chapter 21 (nos. 15–16; no. 4 bears the signature of Ghanashyama, outside the corpus). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

24. "The best of the youths of Vraja" (baraja-kiśora-bara, 14.1): that Gaura is Krishna Himself, the youth of Vraja, is the teaching of the tradition (CC, Adi 1–4); the women's anuraga for Him is rendered as the author has it. Here the elders themselves let the young wives go — to the wedding rite at Shachi's house (14.3); the motif of deceiving the elders (chapters 29–30) is absent. 14.4 "paraśa pararasa baraṣe ghana ghana" — the sense of the line is unclear (the same in all witnesses; perhaps "a thrill as if from a touch"); rendered literally.

15. Narahari — "naba nadīyā-nāgarī gori bhoṛi baya thori..." (GPT1 p. 95, sect. 2.4, no. 7; BR; GCC 9.22)

*Nagari-bhava. In Shachi's house the young nagaris of Nadia secretly gaze at the Beloved and tremble at Madana's arrow: one thinks she has become shameless, another cannot hold back a smile, a third speaks of love, half covered by her veil; others make signs, wipe their friends' faces, whisper aside; so all the noble chaste wives were immersed in the ocean of the rasa of prema for Gaura and gave the Lord of their life their life, their soul and their youth. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in BR (twelfth wave) and in GCC (kirana 9, pada 22).*²⁵

15.1. The young nagaris of Nadia — fair, enraptured, young in years — who else could understand their ways? Gazing quite unnoticed at the Beloved, their hearts tremble at Madana's arrow.

15.2. One, thinking to herself, says: "Today, it seems, I have become shameless before all." Another, signalling to a friend, cannot restrain herself — and at once smiles a little.

15.3. One, taking a friend's hand, softly pleads — great joy overflows her heart; another tells a friend of love, half covering herself with her veil.

15.4. One makes signs to a friend, hand in hand — how many words arise in the mind! Another, threatening in every way with the lovely corner of her eye, keeps her friend in her senses.

15.5. One, to show her own composure, carefully wipes a friend's face with the end of her sari; another, after a whisper in the ear, knowing it improper, stands hidden aside.

15.6. So all the noble chaste wives were immersed in the ocean of the rasa of prema for Gaura. What shall Narahari say: to the Lord of their life they gave their life, their soul and their youth.²⁶

25. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 95, sect. 2.4, no. 7 ("yathārāga"; scan PDF p. 354); GPT2 — sect. 2.4, no. 7 (catalogue: NG-050). BR — twelfth wave (ed. 1912, pp. 801–802; ed. 1960, vv. 1423–1428), "yathā — rāga", after Shachi's blessing (GPT 2.4 no. 6 = chapter 21, no. 16). GCC — kirana 9, pada 22 (ed. 1947, pp. 116–117; scan PDF pp. 121–122); there it is a morning at Shachi's house in the ninth kirana ("the wishes of the nagaris of Navadvipa"), after Shachi has blessed the townswomen (GCC 9.21); after it comes the closing pada of the kirana with the poet's prayer for devotion to the feet of the nagaris of Nadia (9.23; chapter 32, note 22). The series GPT 2.4 nos. 4–7 = GCC 9.18, 9.19, 9.21, 9.22 stands both in BR and in GCC: Chakravarti placed the same padas both in BR's wedding narrative and in the morning scenes of GCC. GCC readings: "gori bibhoṛi" (15.1), "madana-bāṇe", "umaṛe", "ogo" and others; "gaura-premarasārṇabe" (15.6). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

26. "Tremble at Madana's arrow" (15.1), "gave the Lord of their life their life, their soul and their youth" (15.6) — the nagari motif in its plain form; rendered exactly. According to Krishnadasa Kaviraja, prema is the desire for Krishna's happiness, not one's own (CC, Adi 4); in the hagiographies the women of Navadvipa honour Gaura and Shachi as devotees (CB, Adi), and the tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27). "Chaste wives" (kulabātī satī) — so the poet calls them here and in GCC.

16. Narahari — "āhā mari ki madhura rīti..." (GPT1 p. 101, sect. 2.4, no. 21; BR)

Nagari-bhava; wishes (manoratha). At the wedding: the nagaris of Nadia, gazing at Gorachand, lose their composure; one whispers: "What is family shame to me — day and night I shall be with Gora, I shall hold Him to my breast"; another: "Rapt in that rasa, I shall watch the wedding and, slipping on a pretext into the chamber (in BR: the bridal chamber), touch the golden body"; with such wishes, together with Narahari, they enter the house of Sanatana Mishra. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in BR (twelfth wave).²⁷

- 16.1. Ah, how sweet these ways! The nagaris of Nadia, gazing at Gorachand, cannot keep their composure. (Refrain)
- 16.2. One very softly, another swaying her body: "What is family shame to us? Day and night I shall play with Gora, I shall hold Him to my breast."
- 16.3. Another says: "Now, rapt in that rasa, I shall watch the wedding festivity; slipping on a pretext into the chamber of rasa, I shall touch the golden body."
- 16.4. So many such wishes — they cannot even be spoken! Together with Narahari they joyfully enter the house of Sanatana Mishra.²⁸

27. Signature — "Narahari". GPT1 — p. 101, sect. 2.4, no. 21 ("yathārāga"; scan PDF p. 360; the catalogue's "no. 20" was corrected in chapter 22); GPT2 — sect. 2.4, no. 21 (catalogue: NG-060). BR — twelfth wave (ed. 1912, pp. 810–811; ed. 1960, vv. 1507–1510), "punaḥ yathā — rāga", between the padas on the Lord's wedding form (GPT 2.4 no. 20 — chapter 22, no. 3) and on the procession to Sanatana Mishra's house (no. 22 — chapter 22, no. 4). The pada is not in GCC. BR readings: "keho dhīri dhīri, kahe bhaṅgi kari" (16.2: "one very softly says, swaying her body"), "rākhi' bukerā mājhe"; "sāmāyā bāsara-ghare" (16.3: "slipping into the bridal chamber" — more outspoken than GPT "rasera ghare"). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

28. The townswomen's wishes (16.2–16.3) — "to play with Gora day and night", "to touch the golden body" — are the nagari motif in its plain form; rendered exactly; where BR is more outspoken than GPT ("the bridal chamber"), GPT is translated. At the Lord's wedding with Vishnupriya, His eternal consort (chapter 21, note 30), Vrindavana Dasa describes the joy of the people of Nadia without the nagari motif (CB, Adi 15); the tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27). "Together with Narahari" (16.4) — the poet places himself among those in the procession.

17. Narahari — "dekha dekha ago bhubanamohana gaurāṅgarūpera chaṭā..." (GPT1 p. 155, sect. 3.1, no. 129; GCC 10.8)

Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk): praise of His form. One of the heavenly women calls her friends to look at the radiance of Gauranga's form: is it lightning that has left the cloud and flashed upon the earth? a heap of golden lotus buds, of ground gorochana? fresh kunkuma on the breasts of the young wives of Vraja, a champaka garland on the necks of the nagaris of Navadvipa? One longs to keep Him always in the heart; the eyes are never sated. Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 8.²⁹

- 17.1. "Look, look, friends: the radiance of the form of Gauranga, who enchants the world! Is it lightning that has left the cloud and flashed above the earth?"
- 17.2. Is it a heap of pure, lovely buds of the golden lotus? Is it a heap of finely ground, pure, beautiful gorochana?
- 17.3. Is it fresh kunkuma on the breasts of the young wives of Vraja? Is it a champaka garland on the necks of the nagaris of Navadvipa?
- 17.4. One longs to keep Him always deep within the heart; the eyes are never sated with gazing — Narahari is witness to it."³⁰ yathārāga" ("and a certain [heavenly woman]"): it is one of the morning speeches of the heavenly women that open the tenth kirana (chapter 32, note 24); after it come GCC 10.9 (no. 18 of this chapter) and 10.10 (GPT no. 158 — chapter 32, no. 13). GPT placed both padas at the end of section 3.1 ("Gaura's form"), before the section of nagari padas. GCC readings: "ogo" (17.1), "dhārādhara" ("cloud"; GPT1 "dharādhara" — "mountain" — rendered "cloud" by sense and after GCC: lightning leaves the cloud), "niramala sundara kanaka kamala-kalikā-rāśi" (17.2), "nabayubati-kucera" (17.3). B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

29. Signature — "Narahari" (ithe narahari sāthī — "Narahari is witness to it"). GPT1 — p. 155, sect. 3.1 ("form"), no. 129 (scan PDF p. 414); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 129 (catalogue: NG-248). A witness found (the catalogue had: "not in BR, GPT2 index — Sarakara; nagari, later"): GCC — kirana 10, pada 8 (ed. 1947, p. 121; scan PDF p. 126), "kācicca —

30. The comparisons for Gaura's golden colour (lightning, golden lotus, gorochana, kunkuma, champaka) are usual in the padas; kunkuma from the gopis' breasts is the paint left on Krishna's body after embraces — an image of Vraja-lila. Gaura is golden because He took Radha's colour (CC, Adi 4; CC, Adi 1.5); "to keep Him in the heart" is the wish of the speaking heavenly woman; the tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27).

18. Narahari — "dekha dekha ago gaurāṅgacāṁḍera bhubanamohana beśa..." (GPT1 p. 155, sect. 3.1, no. 130; GCC 10.9)

*Nagari-bhava (the heavenly women's talk): His morning form. Another calls them to look at the world-enchancing form of Gaurangachand: dishevelled curls wreathed with kunda buds; on His brow a tilaka of kunkuma and sandal — as if the moon had risen in a golden sky; the earrings flash; "He will steal dharma, modesty and honour"; a garland that enchants young women; "what play this is — I cannot understand". Raga "yatharaga". Attribution: probably Chakravarti — GCC, kirana 10, pada 9.*³¹

18.1. "Look, look, friends: the world-enchancing form of Gaurangachand! The lovely curling locks, wreathed with kunda buds, have come loose and fallen.

18.2. On the lovely brow a tilaka of kunkuma and drops of sandal shine — as if the moon had risen in the midst of a golden sky.

18.3. The earrings flash in His ears — to what shall they be compared? I feel: He will steal everything — dharma, modesty and honour.

18.4. On His neck a garland that enchants young women, matchless, falling in curves. I see Narahari's Lord — what a form! I cannot understand what play this is."³²

31. Signature — "Narahari" (narahari nātha). GPT1 — p. 155, sect. 3.1, no. 130 (scan PDF p. 414); GPT2 — sect. 3.1, no. 130. The pada was not in the catalogue (Narahari signature; new line NG-366). GCC — kirana 10, pada 9 (ed. 1947, p. 121; scan PDF p. 126), "kācicca — yathārāga". GCC readings: "ogo", "gaurāṅga-cāṁḍera" (18.1), "kunda-kali-beṣā", "tilaka-kunkuma candanabindu" (18.2), "dhairaja-dharama-sarama" (18.3: "composure, dharma, modesty"; GPT "dharama sarama bharama" — "dharma, modesty, honour"), "nā bujhi e kona raṅga" (18.4). "krama bhaṅga" (18.4) — "falling in curves", the meaning not quite clear. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

32. Gaura's morning appearance — dishevelled curls, falling flowers — is read by the heavenly women in the following padas of GCC (10.10 onward, chapter 32, nos. 13–23) as the traces of a nagara's night play; with Vrindavana Dasa the Lord spends the nights in kirtana in Srivasa's house (CB, Madhya), and His rapture is prema for Krishna in Radha's bhava (CC, Adi 4). "He will steal dharma, modesty and honour" (18.3) — the speaker's words about herself and her friends; rendered exactly; the tradition does not accept gaura-nagari (introductory note, chapter 27).

19. Narahari — "jhulata jhulata sundara rasamaya gorā..." (GPT1 pp. 324–325, sect. 5.1, no. 12; BR)

*Nagari-bhava (only at the end: a townswoman's speech); jhulana. Gora, full of rasa, swings on the swing on the bank of the Suradhuni, gazing at Gadadhara's face; His companions, smiling, push the swing and sing; a townswoman says: who, seeing it, could turn her eyes away; I swear — now all family shame will go: I shall go to the bank of the Suradhuni and look but once at Narahari's Lord. Raga mallar or beloyar. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in BR (twelfth wave).*³³

19.1. Swinging, swinging is beautiful Gora, full of rasa, rapt in wondrous play — o! Gazing and gazing at Gadadhara's face, He makes signs with His eyes in every way — o!

- 19.2. Matchless are all His companions — softly, softly they smile — o! They swing the finely made swing, floating in an unknown joy — o!
- 19.3. Some sing sweetly in a lovely tune — who, hearing it, can keep composure? — o! Seeing that beauty, who will turn away her eyes, saying in her mind, "I am lost, I am lost"? — o!
- 19.4. I swear it: now at last all family shame will go — I shall go to the bank of the Suradhuni and look but once at Narahari's Lord — o!³⁴

33. Signature — "Narahari" (naraharinātha). GPT1 — pp. 324–325, sect. 5.1 ("the festivals of the year": jhulana), no. 12 (mallar or belyar; scan PDF pp. 583–584); GPT2 — sect. 5.1, no. 12 (catalogue: NG-257). BR — twelfth wave (ed. 1912, pp. 939–940; ed. 1960, vv. 3271–3274; in the OCR of the 1960 edition only the last couplet survives), "punaḥ mallāra": in the rainy season the Lord swung on a swing in Nadia (vv. 3261–3262); GPT 5.1 nos. 10, 11 and 13 of the same series were translated in chapter 18 (nos. 12–14). The pada is not in GCC. Variants noted in GPT1 (the editor's footnotes, "pāṭhāntara"): "jhulaye" (19.1), "ati" for "ām̐khi", "gadādhara-mukundādi saṅgigaṇe" ("the companions — Gadadhara, Mukunda and others", 19.2), "sabahi dolā yatane jhulāyata" ("all carefully push the swing"), "heriyā" (19.3), "mainu guṇa". B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

34. 19.3 "manu manu mane guṇiyā" (GPT1, BR) — the sense is unclear; rendered after the GPT1 variant "mainu" ("I died"). Gaura's jhulana with Gadadhara recalls the jhulana of Radha and Krishna (notes to nos. 12–13 of chapter 18). The nagari motif is only in the last couplet: a townswoman swears to give up "family shame" to see the Lord; rendered exactly; the tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27).

20. Narahari — "nadīyāra śaśī raṅge rājapathe..." (GPT1 p. 356, sect. 5.2, no. 39; BR)

*Nagari-bhava; ashtakaliya (a walk through the town). The Moon of Nadia, at play, walks along the royal road, swaying, His heart thrilling; the young women, unnoticed, restless, long to cast at Him even half a glance; one says to her friend: Gora's form is a heap of nectar — lips bright with betel, a gentle smile, a garland of rangana, a glance that enchants the world, curls, a sandal tilaka, arms reaching to the knees, a broad chest — "I have drowned in the rasa of Narahari's Lord and bidden farewell to shame and family". Raga dhanashi. Attribution: probably Chakravarti — the pada is in BR (twelfth wave).*³⁵

- 20.1. The Moon of Nadia, at play, walks along the royal road, swaying, His heart thrilling; the young women, unnoticed, restless, long to cast at Him even half a glance.
- 20.2. One says: "Look, look, friend: Gora's form — is it not a heap of nectar? With the colour of betel His lips shine, and on them — what a gentle, sweet smile!
- 20.3. A garland of rangana flowers sways; with the play of His eyes He enchants the world; lovely are the curling locks, on His brow shines a sandal tilaka.
- 20.4. And how the arms reaching to the knees curve! Who would not lose herself at that broad chest? I have drowned in the rasa of Narahari's Lord — I have given the last libation to this shame and family."³⁶

35. Signature — "Narahari" (narahari-pahum̐). GPT1 — p. 356, sect. 5.2 ("ashtakaliya"), no. 39 (dhanashi; scan PDF p. 615); GPT2 — sect. 5.2, no. 39 (catalogue: NG-186). BR — twelfth wave (ed. 1912, pp. 870–871; ed. 1960, vv. 2380–2383), after the pada on the dandies of Nadia (GPT 5.2 no. 38 — chapter 23, no. 14); after it Ishana tells Srinivasa: "The Lord, walking through Nadia, revealed Himself to give joy to His devotees" (v. 2384). The pada is not in GCC. 20.1 GPT1 "dibā" (GPT2 and BR "diyā"); BR readings: "hili duli" (20.1), "keho kahe", "dekha sakhi" (20.2), "śohe" (20.3), "narahari pahu rase sumajinu" (20.4). Rangana (raṅgaṇa) — ixora, a shrub with red flowers. B. Nagari-bhava — see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

36. Arms reaching to the knees and a broad chest (20.4) are the marks of a great personage (mahapurusha), which the hagiographies name in the Lord's form (CC, Adi 3). The townswoman's words "I have drowned in the rasa of Narahari's Lord, bidden farewell to shame and family" are the nagari formula (cf. no. 1 of this chapter); rendered exactly; the tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27).

Summary of chapter 33

The chapter completes the padas signed "Narahari" in nagari-bhava. All 20 padas are "probably Chakravarti" (B). GPT1 3.2 nos. 169–180 (nos. 1–12) = GCC 10.25–10.26 and the eleventh kirana of the "Gaura-charita-chintamani" ("the love-quarrels of the heavenly women"): 11.4, 11.6–11.10, 11.15, 11.17 and 11.14 — GPT rearranged the padas (no. 177 = 11.15, no. 178 = 11.17) and split 11.14 into two (nos. 179–180). The speakers are heavenly women looking down on Nadia from the sky: one defends the chastity of the women of Nadia (no. 3 — by content not nagari-bhava), the others mock her, tell of the townswomen's "pranks" and call Narahari's Lord "the husband of them all" (no. 10) — yet they themselves describe the Lord as strict: He does not raise His face, turns away, hurries home in shame (nos. 5, 7, 8, 12). GPT padas outside section 3.2: 2.4 nos. 2, 3, 7, 21 (nos. 13–16) — the women of Nadia at the Lord's wedding with Vishnupriya (a dream with an embrace, setting out for Shachi's house, "Madana's arrow", wishes to touch His body; all in the twelfth wave of the "Bhakti-ratnakara", no. 7 also in GCC 9.22); 3.1 nos. 129–130 (nos. 17–18) — found in GCC (10.8–10.9, the heavenly women's words on Gaura's morning appearance; no. 130 was not in the catalogue — new line NG-366; for no. 129, NG-248, "Sarakara?, no witnesses" is replaced by B); 5.1 no. 12 (no. 19, jhulana) and 5.2 no. 39 (no. 20, a walk through the town) — in BR. Where GCC or BR is more outspoken than GPT (no. 8 — an extra couplet in GCC; no. 16 — BR's "bridal chamber"), GPT is translated; the only place where GPT is more outspoken than GCC is the last couplet of no. 12 ("the meeting of the nagaris and the nagara" instead of GCC's words that Narahari preserved propriety; note 20). The open motifs of attraction and sambhoga (nos. 7, 10, 13, 15, 16) are rendered exactly, with notes on the tradition's position.

Concluding note on the "Narahari" nagari padas (chapters 29–33)

1. How many. In the section of nagari padas, 102 padas signed "Narahari" from the "Gaura-pada-tarangini" have been translated: chapter 29 — 15 (Narahari Chakravarti's pada NG-079 from the cycle of the twelfth wave of the "Bhakti-ratnakara"; GPT1 3.2 nos. 39, 40, 42–45; nos. 86–93), chapter 30 — 21 (nos. 94–110, 120–123), chapter 31 — 23 (nos. 119, 124–145), chapter 32 — 23 (nos. 146–168), chapter 33 — 20 (nos. 169–180; 2.4 nos. 2, 3, 7, 21; 3.1 nos. 129–130; 5.1 no. 12; 5.2 no. 39). Of the 95 padas signed Narahari in section 3.2 of GPT, 94 are translated here — all except no. 41 (= PK 103 of Narahari Sarakara, translated in the main part, chapter 3); the other 8 are nagari padas from sections 2.4, 3.1, 5.1, 5.2. No. 119 (Gaura in sleep speaks Krishna's words) is by content not nagari-bhava, as are the rebuttals within the heavenly women's dispute (chapter 32, nos. 19–20; chapter 33, no. 3).

2. Attribution. "Probably Chakravarti" (B) — 81 padas: 75 are found in Narahari Chakravarti's "Gaura-charita-chintamani" (GCC, ed. 1947) — padas 2.13; 7.2–7.12, 7.14–7.16, 7.29–7.30; 8.2–8.20; 9.1–9.2, 9.6–9.16, 9.22; 10.8–10.10, 10.12–10.17, 10.19, 10.21–10.22, 10.24–10.26; 11.4, 11.6–11.10, 11.14 (two padas in GPT), 11.15, 11.17 — and 6 occur only in the "Bhakti-ratnakara" (NG-079; 2.4 nos. 2, 3, 21; 5.1 no. 12; 5.2 no. 39). "Not established" or "probably Sarakara" (C) — 21 padas: six short padas GPT1 3.2 nos. 39, 40, 42–45 in plain Bengali (the GPT2 index assigns them to Sarakara; there are no other witnesses; no. 43 — "not established") and fifteen padas nos. 100–110, 120–123, which stand in GPT in the place of the lost pages of the only available scan of GCC (pp. 81–88 = GCC 7.17–7.28; apparently also from GCC). Not one "Narahari" nagari pada of GPT is confirmed by PK or by other early collections as a song of Narahari Sarakara, the Lord's companion; almost all of them are Narahari Chakravarti's poetic elaboration of the nagari motif (first half of the 18th century). The collation confirms Majumdar's argument: the long padas of GPT with this signature do not belong to Sarakara.

3. The composition of GCC 7–11 in GPT. Kiranas 7–11 of the "Gaura-charita-chintamani" describe morning in Navadvipa: the townswomen of Nadia talk of Gaura and of how, deceiving their strict elders, they saw Him (kirana 7), tell their dreams (8), go to Shachi's house and dream of meeting Him (9); then the heavenly women look down on Nadia from the sky — praise its nagaris, argue about Gaura (10) and quarrel among themselves (11). These five kiranas have 121 padas (12 of them on the lost pages of the scan); the compiler of GPT took at least 78 and distributed them among his sections: — kirana 7: 7.1 — in sect. 2.2 (GPT1 p. 68, no. 19; chapter 19); 7.2–7.12, 7.14–7.16 = 3.2 nos. 86–99 (no. 97 is only the second half of 7.14); 7.29–7.30 = nos. 124–125; not taken: 7.13 and the closing 7.31; 7.17–7.28 are lost in the scan (in their place — nos. 100–110, 120–123); — kirana 8: 8.2–8.20 = nos. 126–144; not taken: the opening 8.1 and the closing 8.21; — kirana 9: 9.1–9.2 = nos. 145–146; 9.6–9.16 = nos. 147–157 (9.12 = no. 150 stands earlier in GPT); 9.18–9.19, 9.21–9.22 — in sect. 2.4 ("the second marriage", nos. 4–7: where they also stand in BR's wedding narrative); not taken: 9.3–9.5, 9.17, 9.20 and the closing prayer 9.23; — kirana 10: 10.7 — GPT1 p. 494, no. 30 (chapter 18, no. 28); 10.8–10.9 — in sect. 3.1, "form" (nos. 129–130); 10.10, 10.12–10.17, 10.19, 10.21–10.22, 10.24–10.26 = 3.2 nos. 158–170; not taken: the opening 10.1–10.6, 10.11, 10.18, 10.20, 10.23 and the closing 10.27; — kirana 11: 11.4, 11.6–11.10, 11.14, 11.15, 11.17 = nos. 171–180 (in a different order; 11.14 split into nos. 179–180); not taken: the opening 11.1–11.3, the links 11.5, 11.16, the padas 11.11–11.13 and the close 11.18–11.19. Besides these, GCC 2.13 (Gaura's words in sleep) stands in GPT 3.2 (no. 119).

4. Who speaks. In GCC the padas of kiranas 7–9 are the words of the townswomen of Nadia (and of a mother-in-law who sends her daughters-in-law to Shachi, 9.2); the padas of kiranas 10–11 are the words of heavenly women (debaramaṇī), who only watch Nadia from the sky and long to be born there. In GPT the openings, colophons and links of the kiranas are left out, and all the padas of section 3.2 read as the words of townswomen; but traces remain in the GPT text itself — "you, connoisseurs of rasa in the city of the gods", "in the city of the gods a rumour has arisen", "living in the city of the gods, why have you grown so proud", "how will you live alone in the city of the gods" (chapter 32, nos. 17, 20; chapter 33, nos. 3, 4, 10). Therefore 25 padas of GPT (3.2 nos. 158–180 and 3.1 nos. 129–130) are translated with the label "the heavenly women's talk".

5. Where GPT softens GCC. The compiler of GPT did not take the most outspoken padas (10.11 — one heavenly woman's guess at where Gaura spent the night; 11.11–11.13 — the antics of women at the ghat and on the road), left out single lines (8.15; the couplet in 11.10 about a shadow touching Gora's body) and replaced single words (8.6 "lay down" → "sat"; 8.11, 8.14, 8.16 — mentions of Madana, e.g. 8.14 "rapt with Madana" → "rapt with joy"; 8.18 — "breast"; 9.6 — "under Madana's weight"; 9.13 "the cloth over the breast" → "the cloth over the face"; 9.14 "wants to embrace" → "wants to see your dear face"). Throughout, GPT's text is translated and the GCC reading is noted in VAR and in the notes. The reverse case occurs once: the last couplet of no. 180 (chapter 33, no. 12), where in place of GCC's words that Narahari, being with Gauranga, preserved propriety stands the formula "in Nadia the meeting of the nagaris and the nagara came to pass"; the compiler's work is also the signature "Narahari" at the end of no. 179, where GCC has no poet's name.

6. Conclusion. The "Narahari" nagari padas of GPT are not songs of a contemporary of the Lord but a late (18th-century) poetic elaboration of the nagari motif, carried over from the "Gaura-charita-chintamani" and the "Bhakti-ratnakara" into an anthology of the early 20th century, abridged and without the author's frame. Within that frame Narahari Chakravarti himself never shows Gaura responding to the women's attraction: the Lord passes by without raising His face, turns away, hurries home, performs expiation, and His companion leads Him away (GCC 11.11–11.14; chapter 32, nos. 19–20; chapter 33, nos. 5, 7, 8, 12); the wishes and dreams are the heroines' imagining, and in kiranas 10–11 it is even a dispute of heavenly women about what they have not seen. Everything is translated faithfully to the author — without worldly vocabulary beyond the original and without softening — with notes on the tradition's position: Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja and Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati do not accept the worship of Gaura in the mood of "gaura-nagari"; Gaura is Krishna Himself in Radha's bhava and radiance, tasting Her love as a devotee, not as the enjoyer (introductory note, chapter 27). What remains of the section is the padas of Lochana Dasa from GPT 3.2 (nos. 61–85, 116; chapter 34) and the concluding note to the whole section of nagari padas.

Chapter 34. Nagari Padas — VIII: Lochana Dasa (22 padas from GPT, sect. 3.2, nos. 62–85, 116); concluding note to the section of nagari padas

On what nagari-bhava is, the position of the tradition (Vrindavana Dasa, Krishnadasa Kaviraja, Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati) and the rules of translation, see the introductory note to the section of nagari padas in chapter 27.

*Chapter 34 is the last of the section of nagari padas: the padas signed by Lochana Dasa in section 3.2 of the *Gaura-pada-tarangini (GPT). There are 26 of them: nos. 61–85 (GPT1 pp. 177–189, scan PDF pp. 436–448, in one continuous block) and no. 116 (p. 204, PDF p. 463). All have been checked against the scan of GPT1 (text and signatures), against GPT2 (same numbering, same text), the Padakalpataru (PK), the Padamrita-samudra, the Kshanada-gita-chintamani, Lochana's Chaitanya-mangala (our translation) and the anthologies of the early twentieth century. Four padas are not translated anew here: no. 61 "nadīyā-nāgarī sārī sārī sārī..." = PK 2178 and no. 66 "āra śunecha ālo sai..." = PK 2174 were translated in chapter 28 (nos. 28 and 27); no. 80 "ānanda nadīyāpure ṭalamala premabhare..." = PK 2088 is a passage of the Chaitanya-mangala itself (Madhya-khanda: the Lord in kirtana, raga sindhura, with the refrain "The town of Nadia rejoices..."; our translation — Chaitanya-mangala, Madhya-khanda, part 4, vv. 110–118; GPT gives vv. 110–114 and 118, without vv. 115–117), in content a praise of the Lord in kirtana, not nagari-bhava; no. 84 "nirabadhi gorārūpa mane jāgiyāche go..." = PK 777, signed by Vasu Ghosha (translated in chapter 27, no. 16): in GPT1 the same pada also stands as no. 17 with Vasu's signature, so Lochana's signature in no. 84 contradicts both PK and GPT itself. The remaining 22 padas are translated below (nos. 1–22).

*Lochana Dasa (c. 1520 — ?) is the author of the *Chaitanya-mangala, a disciple of Narahari Sarakara Thakura of Shrikhanda, a younger contemporary of the Lord's associates; he himself did not see the Lord. The nagari motif is present in the Chaitanya-mangala too (the women of Nadia, forgetting shame, hurry to look at Gaura — see our translation, Chaitanya-mangala, Adi-khanda, part 1, note 9; Chaitanya-mangala, Adi-khanda, part 10, notes 5–6); Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati, publishing the Chaitanya-mangala (1922), refuses in his preface to ascribe to it "the doctrine of gaura-nagari" (the translator's preface to our translation of the Chaitanya-mangala). The padas of this chapter are of two kinds: (1) padas in the literary language of the padas, in payar and tripadi metre (nos. 1–4, 15–17, 21); (2) padas in colloquial Bengali, in short rhymed feet, with colloquial forms ("dekhalāma", "halo", "ka're") and kirtana singers' insertions in brackets (nos. 5–14, 18–20, 22) — in the manner of the playful songs traditionally connected with Lochana's name (dhāmālī, "dhamali"). The padas of the second kind are known only from GPT (two of them — nos. 16, 17 — are also in the anthology Prachina-vaishnava-pada-vali, 1922, with Lochana's signature); their language was probably renewed in oral transmission. None of the 22 padas is in PK or in the Chaitanya-mangala; Lochana's signature does not compete with any other (except in no. 84, excluded above). The attribution rests only on the signature in GPT: Lochana is a recognized author, but these padas have no independent witnesses (PVP, 1922, is a late anthology), hence C ("attribution by GPT only"; cf. Lochana's padas from PK in chapter 28 — B). Where a pada builds on someone else's lines (no. 5 begins with two couplets of Jnanadasa's pada PK 748), this is noted.

The translation is faithful to the author, without worldly vocabulary beyond the original and without softening: where a townswoman speaks of attraction, embraces, a dream, it is translated exactly, with a note on the position of the tradition. The Bengali text, variants and word-for-word translation are in the full version of the book. At the end — the summary of the chapter and the concluding note to the whole section of nagari padas (chapters 27–34).

1. Lochana Dasa — "gaurāṅga-taraṅge nayana majila..." (GPT1 pp. 177–178, no. 62)

*Nagari-bhava. The townswoman's eyes have drowned in the waves of Gauranga: she is ready to take disgrace upon herself and leave home; all her household work betrays her — she knows nothing but Gora, in anyone she meets she sees Gauranga; lying with her husband, she imagines Gaurahari coming and taking her to Himself. Raga pahida.*¹

1.1. In the waves of Gauranga my eyes have drowned — what now shall I choose?

Lifting the basket of disgrace onto my head, I will stay at home no more.

1.2. (Refrain) Friend, what am I to do now?

Giving myself away for Gaurangachand, I will make an end of the house.²

1.3. All my household work — it is plain to everyone now: I know nothing but Gora; seeing another, mistaking him in my confusion, I say: "Gauranga!"

1.4. When I lie with my husband, Gauranga awakens in my heart:

Gaurahari, my life, comes in haste and throws my husband down on the ground;

1.5. He takes me, places me on His breast, presses face to face;

in ecstasy Gauranga pours out nectar — it flows down over every limb.³

1.6. Gauranga, the jewel, I will carefully enfold in my arms; bidding farewell to all, I have let everything float away, — says this servant Lochana.⁴

1. Signature: "e dāsa locana" ("this servant Lochana"). GPT1 — pp. 177–178, no. 62 (raga pahida; scan PDF pp. 436–437); GPT2 — sect. 3.2, no. 62 (same text). The pada is not in PK, the Padamrita-samudra, KGC or the Chaitanya-mangala; no other witnesses have been found. On Lochana Dasa see chapter 28, note 75, and the note at the beginning of this chapter: a disciple of Narahari Sarakara, a younger contemporary of the Lord's associates; attribution by GPT only — C. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

2. "Lifting the basket of disgrace onto my head" (kalaṅkera ḍāli mātḥāya dhariyā) — a saying: to take ill fame upon oneself openly. "Giving myself away for Gaurangachand" (nichani laiṇyā) — the nichhani rite (chapter 27, note 10). "I will make an end of the house" (gṛhe samādhāna di) — lit. "I will give the house its conclusion."

3. The scene in 1.4–1.5 is the speaker's imagination: "Gauranga awakens in my heart," and she goes on to picture what He would do. It is translated as in the original, without softening. This is precisely the notion of Gaura as the lover of the townswomen ("gaura-nagari") which the Gaudiya tradition rejects: according to the Chaitanya-bhagavata (Adi-khanda), the Lord in this incarnation did not look at any woman; Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati counts "gaura-nagari" among the apasampradayas (introductory note). According to Majumdar, nagari padas known only from GPT are an unreliable and late layer. "Pours out nectar" (sudhā uḡāraye) is an image of sweetness common in padas on Krishna.

4. "Bidding farewell to all" (tilāñjali diyā) — lit. "giving the farewell handful of water with sesame" (as to the dead): leaving for ever. "I have let float away" (bhāsānu) is in the past tense, while "I will enfold" (laiba) is in the future; so in the original.

2. Lochana Dasa — "śuna śuna sai āra kichu kai..." (GPT1 p. 178, no. 63)

*Nagari-bhava. "Listen, friend: Gauranga is not a man!" Ever since the townswoman saw the moon of His face, her eyes have drowned in the ocean of beauty; at the ghat and in the field she sees Gora, the colour of a golden filament; sitting among the elders, she remembers His face; giving herself away for Him, she will leave everything. Raga kamoda.*⁵

2.1. Listen, listen, friend, I will tell you more: Gauranga is not a man!

In all the world, to what can the son of Shachi be compared?⁶

2.2. Since I saw the moon of Gauranga's face, I cannot turn away [from it]:

in that ocean of beauty my eyes have drowned, the noose of love has tightened.

2.3. Whether I go to the ghat or the field — I see Gora all the time, the golden filament;
the honour of family, dharma and custom — all this He has made me leave.⁷

2.4. Sitting among the elders, I see Him with my eyes, His face comes to my mind;
I try to hold myself back — I cannot: He has thrown my soul into turmoil.

2.5. Giving myself away for Gaurangachand, I will leave everything.
On Lochana's mind night and day: "I will place Him in my heart."

5. Signature: "on Lochana's mind" (locanera mane). GPT1 — p. 178, no. 63 (raga kamoda; scan PDF p. 437); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 63 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

6. "Gauranga is not a man" — a praise that agrees with the teaching: Gaura is Bhagavan Himself (CC Adi 1–4); the townswoman says it out of amazement at His beauty.

7. "Golden filament" (kanaka-keśara) — the colour of Gora's body is compared to the golden filaments (keshara) of a flower. Leaving "the honour of family, dharma and custom" is a motif of the padas on the gopis (Bhag. 10.29) transferred to the townswomen of Nadia; it is this transfer that the tradition rejects (introductory note; cf. chapter 27, note 43).

3. Lochana Dasa — "hiyāra mājhāre gaurāṅga rākhiyā..." (GPT1 p. 178, no. 64)

*Nagari-bhava (only in the address to a friend). Having placed Gauranga in her heart, the townswoman will sit in solitude and look at the moon of His face; she has heard that He who was formerly in Gokula, in Nanda's house, has now appeared in Navadvipa, in Shachi's house. Raga kamoda.*⁸

3.1. Having placed Gauranga in my heart, I will sit in solitude; to my heart's content I will keep that moon of a face before my eyes.

3.2. I have heard: He who formerly [was] in Gokula, in the house of Nanda, —
He has come to Navadvipa and revealed Himself in the house of Shachi.⁹

3.3. The word of Lochana: listen, friend, what more shall I tell you?
I saw the face — and the mind forgot itself: I cannot forget Him.

8. Signature: "the word of Lochana" (locanera bāñī). GPT1 — p. 178, no. 64 (raga kamoda; scan PDF p. 437); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 64 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. The nagari motif is only in the address "friend": in substance this is a praise of Gaura and contemplation of Him in the heart. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

9. Gaura is the same Krishna, the son of Nanda, who has appeared in Shachi's house (CC Adi 1–4); in Lochana this thought runs through the whole Chaitanya-mangala.

4. Lochana Dasa — "gaurāṅgabadane harila cetane..." (GPT1 p. 178, no. 65)

*Nagari-bhava. Gauranga's face has stolen the townswoman's reason: she wants to forget — she cannot. Refrain: "Gora has entered the heart; the townswomen of Nadia have gone mad — I have understood it by myself." Seeing Gauranga's feet, a noble wife leaves her husband; whether it is righteous or not — it is shameful even to say. Raga kamoda.*¹⁰

4.1. Gauranga's face has stolen my reason — I see a great calamity has come;
I want to forget — I cannot forget; tell me, friend, what am I to do?

4.2. (Refrain) Gora has entered the heart.
The townswomen of Nadia have gone mad — I have understood it by myself.

4.3. As soon as I saw Gauranga's feet, He at once stole my mind;
a young noble faithful wife, whoever she may be, leaves her treasure — her husband.¹¹

4.4. I do not know whether by dharma or by karma — I am ashamed even to say;
Lochana Dasa is troubled in soul: now he too has understood what it is.

10. Signature: "Lochana Dasa." GPT1 — p. 178, no. 65 (raga kamoda; refrain marked "dhru"; scan PDF p. 437); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 65 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

11. "Leaves her treasure — her husband" (tyaje nija patidhana) is the parakiya motif of the padas on the gopis transferred to the noble wives of Nadia (see note 7); translated exactly. "Whether by dharma or by karma" (4.4) — i.e., one cannot tell whether it is righteous or sinful. In 4.4b the poet speaks of himself in the third person: he too has "understood by himself" the power of Gaura's form (cf. the refrain).

5. Lochana Dasa — "(gaurera) rūpa lāgi āṁkhi jhore..." (GPT1 pp. 179–180, no. 67)

Nagari-bhava. The townswoman's eyes weep for Gaura's form, each of her limbs for each of His; why did she go to the Suradhuni, why did she look at Gaura — He pierced her with the arrows of His eyes; her eyes want to go and look, her mind wants to become His maidservant; her mind slipped on the slippery ghat of the ocean of His beauty. She will cut open her breast and hide Him there together with her life. Raga "yatharaga".¹²

5.1. For the form (of Gaura) my eyes weep, my mind is enraptured by His virtues; for each [of His] limbs each of my limbs weeps.

5.2. For the touch of [His] breast my breast weeps; my heart cannot hold the darling doll of my soul.¹³

5.3. Why did I go to the Suradhuni (I went! I went!), why did I turn my eyes to the form of Gaura?

5.4. Why ever did I look at Gaura?
(Gaura) pierced me with the two arrows of His eyes.

5.5. My eyes say: "Let us go and look at that form"; my mind says: "I will become His maidservant."

5.6. He comes and goes by the path of the eyes;
He has cut through my ribs and made Himself a dwelling [there].¹⁴

5.7. At the slippery ghat of the ocean that is Gaura's form my mind went down, slipped and fell.

5.8. As if Gaura's form were not enough — it is steeped in love besides,
(and on top of that) a slight smile and a sidelong glance.

5.9. (Gaura has) as many forms as He has adornments;
oh! He! — He scorches me till my ribs are spent.¹⁵

5.10. For the form (of Gaura) my eyes weep;
His virtues intoxicate my mind.

5.11. Not for a moment can I forget (Gaura's form); in what an hour did I place (Gauranga's form) in my heart!

5.12. I will cut open this breast and hide [Him] there together with my very life; when I wish, I will take Him out and look at the moon of His face.¹⁶

5.13. At the sight of Gaura's form everyone's heart rejoices;
with joy in his heart says this Lochana Dasa.

12. Signature: "e locana dāsa." GPT1 — pp. 179–180, no. 67 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF pp. 438–439); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 67 (same text). The first two couplets (5.1–5.2) are the beginning of Jnanadasa's pada PK 748 "rūpa lāgi āṁkhi jhure guṇe mana bhora..." (PK vol. 2, 8th pallava, signature "jñāna"; also in the Padamrita-samudra), where Radha weeps for Shyama; here "(gaurera)" — "of Gaura" — is added, and the whole pada is turned to Gaura; from then on it is colloquial Bengali. Developing the opening lines of a well-known pada is a usual practice of kirtanias; the pada is a composite, and its attribution to Lochana rests only on the signature in GPT (C). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

13. The words in brackets — "(gaurera)", "(gaura)", "(gelāma! gelāma!!)", "(tāte ābāra)", "(gaurarūpa)", "(gaurāṅgarūpa)" — are insertions of the kirtana singers (akhar), as GPT prints them; they are translated in brackets. "The darling doll of my soul" (parāṇa putalī) — what is dearest; PK 748 has here "parāṇa pirīti lāgi," while "parāṇa-putalī mora" is the reading of MS P-R-Sa in the PK apparatus: GPT follows it.

14. "Made a dwelling" (karala khānā): khānā is "house, dwelling" (Pers. khana) or "pieces" ("cut to pieces"); both readings are possible.

15. "Scorches" (bhājite) — lit. "frying"; the sense of the line is unclear, the translation is conjectural.

16. The wish to keep the Lord's form in the heart for ever; "to cut open the breast" is a hyperbole of love poetry, known also from padas on Radha.

6. Lochana Dasa — "uṣaḥkāle sakhī mile jala bharite yāya..." (GPT1 pp. 180–181, no. 68)

Nagari-bhava. At dawn a young wife goes with her friends for water and meets Gora with His friends on the road; having filled her pitcher, she stands as if stunned and gazes: who is this — a god of rasa? Brows, eyes, nose, teeth, the colour of His body, arms, necklace, white cloth, ringing anklets; the nagara of beauty has risen — and the mind of "the nagari Lochana" is swept away. Raga "yatharaga".¹⁷

- 6.1. At dawn, together with her friends, she goes to fetch water; on the road — a meeting: Gora-raya with His friends.
- 6.2. Dying at heart, I filled the pitcher and lifted it onto my hip;
the young wife stands as if stunned, beside herself, and gazes.¹⁸
- 6.3. "Who is this — a god of rasa? there is no limit to His beauty;
what creator has gathered the treasure of rasa in one place?
- 6.4. The pair of brows — the teacher of Kama — shoots flower-arrows; with what ink, with what brush were they made?
- 6.5. The depths of the eyes are spotless petals of a blue lotus;
the two lids, reddish, glisten moist.
- 6.6. A sesame flower — how could it compare? such is the beauty of the nose; turned on a lathe, even — what a lustre of teeth!
- 6.7. Vermilion and orpiment were kneaded with fresh butter;
pure gold, the moon — laid on and burnished.
- 6.8. Dissolving lac-dye in milk, they moulded the hands;
they brought the moon, sifted it and sifted it — and skilfully set it there.¹⁹
- 6.9. On His neck a necklace — how it shines! and what a splendour of arms! — as if a golden elephant had come down from the sky to draw water.
- 6.10. Neatly girt, the white cloth adorns Him; graceful, conquering the world, the anklets ring on His feet.
- 6.11. The nagara of beauty, the ocean of rasa, has come and risen [like the sun];
by this the mind of the nagari Lochana has been swept away."²⁰

17. Signature: "the nagari Lochana." GPT1 — pp. 180–181, no. 68 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF pp. 439–440); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 68 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. The pada begins as a narrative in the third person ("goes") and passes into the first ("I filled"); so in the original. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

18. "The young wife" — GPT1 has "bam̐dhu" (usually "beloved, friend"); from the sense (stupor, bewilderment) it apparently stands here for badhū, "young wife": the speaker about herself. "Beside herself" (cauura hārā) — the meaning is conjectural. "Friends" (sakhā) — the Lord's associates.

19. 6.3–6.10 describe the form from the brows to the feet, as in padas on Krishna: the brows are "the teacher of Kama" (they teach him to shoot), the colour of the body is a mixture of vermillion, orpiment and butter burnished like pure gold; "the moon sifted and set" in the hands is apparently the nails (cf. "the moons of the nails"). "A god of rasa" (rasera de) is conjectural (de = deba).

20. "The nagari Lochana": the poet calls himself a townswoman — he sings in the bhava of a nagari, putting himself in the heroine's place. The tradition does not accept such worship of Gaura (introductory note). "The nagara of beauty" is an epithet of Gaura in nagari-bhava (ibid.).

7. Lochana Dasa — "śacīra gorā kāmera koṛā..." (GPT1 p. 181, no. 69)

Nagari-bhava. The townswoman saw Gora at the ghat: curly hair, a garland of malati round His forehead; it is distasteful even to compare pure gold with Him. She cannot explain it to her friend: she saw Him on the way to bathe and cannot take her eyes away; the secret has stayed in her heart; awake and asleep Gaura is in her heart. Raga "yatharaga".²¹

7.1. Shachi's Gora — the whip of Kama — I saw on the bank by the ghat:
curly hair, round the forehead a garland of fresh malati.

7.2. Pure gold — it is distasteful even to compare it with His beauty; (such) a thief of hearts, a charmer of minds, is not on earth.

7.3. What more are you saying, friend — how shall I explain (to you)?
(From the roof?) — going to bathe with my friends, I saw Gaura.

7.4. Seeing (that) form, I cannot turn my two eyes away;
how I long to see Him again!

7.5. What more are you saying, friend — you are well off;
but my heart's secret has stayed in my heart.

7.6. Awake or asleep, Gaura is always in my heart; says Lochana: whoever has seen, he knows it.

21. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 181, no. 69 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF p. 440); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 69 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. "The whip of Kama" (kāmera koṛā) is an unclear image: "whip," or, reading koṁṛā, "shoot"; in sense — the One stronger than Kama (cf. "Madana-mohana," introductory note). The insertion "(chāde)" in 7.3 — "on the roof" (?): the sense is unclear. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

8. Lochana Dasa — "eka nāgarī bale didi nāite yakhana yāi..." (GPT1 pp. 181–182, no. 70)

Nagari-bhava. A townswoman tells how, going to bathe, she put back her veil and saw Gaura; she ran home, but her eyes stayed with Him; her body trembles; the ghat shines with His body, young women crowd; with the rope of anuraga He pulls her soul. She playfully warns her friend: look — and you are lost; if you would keep the family honour, stay at home. Raga "yatharaga".²²

8.1. One nagari says: "Sister, when I went to bathe,
I put back my veil, raised my face — and saw Him.

8.2. Seeing the form, I started — and ran home;
but my two eyes stayed tied — gazing at Gaura.

8.3. My body trembles, all my limbs shake;
the pendant in the nose, flashing, leaps into my very heart.²³

8.4. The ghat is lit by the radiance of Gaura's body; to see His beauty, crowds of young women throng.

- 8.5. I went to look out of curiosity — who knew it would be like this?
With the rope of anuraga He pulls my soul.
- 8.6. My soul longs to fly away, I cannot stay at home;
not seeing Gaurachand, I do not know what is happening to my soul.
- 8.7. Look — and your eyes will stay tied: His form steals the heart;
the smiling face, the reddish eyes — here it is, the well of rasa!
- 8.8. Look — mind you, you will die gone mad, your family honour will not survive;
if you would keep family and good conduct — stay in a secluded place.
- 8.9. You will lose your family, you will go crazy, the wave of rasa will strike."
Says Lochana: only one who knows rasa can understand this.²⁴

22. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — pp. 181–182, no. 70 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF pp. 440–441); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 70 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. Lines 8.3 and 8.5b recur almost word for word in no. 13 (no. 75, 13.4b, 13.6) — lines common to these songs. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

23. "The pendant in the nose" (nāsāra nolaka) is apparently Gaura's ornament (cf. no. 13, 13.3, 13.6: "a pendant swings in the nose... at Gora's laughter"); in padas on Krishna — the pearl (veshara) in His nose. Translated as in the original.

24. 8.7–8.9 are a playful "warning" to the friend: so great is the power of the Lord's form. "Crazy" (bauri = bāurī). The motif of "losing the family" — see note 7.

9. Lochana Dasa — "gorārūpa rasera kūpa sahajei eta..." (GPT1 p. 182, no. 71)

Nagari-bhava. Gora's form is a well of rasa just by itself — and if He were to use His art, what then! Should He arrange His curls, a noble wife could not keep her family honour; should He glance sidelong, should He ask — who could withstand? Rati herself, leaving Kama, worships Gora's feet. The poet: "Now I have made Gora my all." Raga "yatharaga".²⁵

- 9.1. Gora's form — a well of rasa — is so much just by itself; and if He uses His art, the wiles of rasa, — what will it be then!
- 9.2. If He gracefully arranges His soft curling hair, then a faithful, noble wife cannot keep her family honour.
- 9.3. Whomever He glances at sidelong — will her pride remain?
and if He should ask — would the rasavati survive?²⁶
- 9.4. With a garland on His neck, swinging His arms, He passes by — Rati herself, Kama's wife, leaving her husband, worships Gora's feet.²⁷
- 9.5. Our Gora fills the breast: look — and the breast is full;
as if one held Him in one's arms — joy upon joy.
- 9.6. The stream of His smile, like nectar, cools the soul;
subject to rasa, He is (everything) all my wealth, the form of my longing.²⁸
- 9.7. Listen, friend dear to my heart, what more shall I say?
Says Lochana: now I have made Gora my all.

25. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 182, no. 71 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF p. 441); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 71 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. Couplets 9.1–9.4 recur almost word for word in no. 20 (no. 83, 20.4–20.6, 20.8) — lines common to these songs. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

26. 9.2–9.3 are all in the conditional ("if"): the townswoman pictures what would happen if Gora wished to charm. Translated exactly. According to CB (Adi-khanda), the Lord in Navadvipa did not look at women; the notion of Him as a nagara seeking the townswomen's love is rejected by the tradition (note 3; introductory note). "Rasavati" (rasabati) — "she who is full of rasa," the heroine.

27. Rati is the wife of Kama, the god of love: even she would leave her husband for Gora — a hyperbole of a beauty surpassing Kama himself (cf. Krishna's epithet "Madana-mohana," "the charmer of the god of love").

28. "(sarvvasva)" is the GPT compiler's gloss on saravasa ("all one's wealth"); translated in brackets. "Subject to rasa" (rasabaśa) — in GPT1 joined to "all my wealth"; it may also be understood of the speaker herself: "overcome by rasa."

10. Lochana Dasa — "gaura-ratana ka're yatana rākhaba hiyāra mājhe..." (GPT1 pp. 182–183, no. 72)

Nagari-bhava. The townswoman will carefully keep the jewel Gaura in her heart, put on ornaments of His colour, write "Gaura" on her body with gorochana, walk proudly along the road repeating "Gaura," tear up her family by the roots and give shame to the fire; Gaurachand has set the snares of rasa in every house. Raga "yatharaga".²⁹

- 10.1. The jewel Gaura I will carefully keep in my heart;
I will put on ornaments of Gaura's colour — whichever suits where.
- 10.2. With golden flowers in my jhapa I will tie my hair in a knot; saying "Gaura," I will walk along the road with pride.³⁰
- 10.3. With golden gorochana I will write "Gaura" on my body; saying "Gaura," I will lay my beauty and youth at [His] feet.
- 10.4. Tearing up my family by the roots, I will float it away on the waters of the Ganga; giving shame to the funeral fire, I will go about saying "Gaura."
- 10.5. Gaurachand has set the snares of rasa in every house:
the faithful wife, leaving her husband, longs to give [Him] her body.³¹
- 10.6. (You) say what you like — in the ocean of beauty everything has floated away.
Says Lochana with delight: sit and wait — you will see.

29. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — pp. 182–183, no. 72 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF pp. 441–442); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 72 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

30. A play on gaura — gaurava ("Gaura" — "pride"): "saying 'Gaura,' with pride" (cf. chapter 28, note 74). "Jhapa" (jhāmpā) is an ornament of the braids; "knot" (loṭana) — a loosely tied bun. Gorochana is a yellow pigment used for tilaka; "to write the name on the body" — as Vaishnavas write the names of the Lord with sandal paste.

31. "Longs to give [Him] her body" (deha dite sādha kare) is a direct motif of attraction, translated exactly. This is the very notion of "gaura-nagari" which the tradition rejects (note 3; introductory note). "Giving shame to the funeral fire" (10.4; lājera mukhe āguna diyā) — lit. "putting fire to the face of shame," as to the dead.

11. Lochana Dasa — "nayane nayana diye ki guṇa karila priye..." (GPT1 p. 183, no. 73)

Nagari-bhava (a dream). Refrain: "What spell has the Beloved cast with a single glance!" A townswoman tells in tears: she had long wished to drink the nectar of His lips and, pining, lay down at night; at midnight she dreamed that Gora was on her breast, embracing and kissing her; waking at dawn, she reproaches the creator and cannot stay at home. The poet: do not weep — go into your own house, hold Gorachand in your heart. Raga "yatharaga".³²

- 11.1. (Refrain) Eye to eye — what a spell the Beloved has cast!
(King of exorcists, crest-jewel of sorcerers!)
- 11.2. With tears in her eyes one nagari says:
"What do I know of Gaura's love? — my body melts with rasa.
- 11.3. For many days I had the wish to drink the nectar of [His] lips; with sorrow in my heart, brooding, I lay down at night.

- 11.4. When at midnight I was lost in sleep, then I see — as if Gora were upon my breast.³³
- 11.5. A fresh youth, His body like fresh butter; binding me with His creeper-arms, He says: 'Why should I let you go?'
- 11.6. Thus, my heart immersed, I was caught in a sweet torment:
His face bent down — the nectar of His lips fell into my mouth.
- 11.7. I tasted the nectar of His lips — and my thirsting soul grew cool;
after the play, in due time, the night came to an end.
- 11.8. 'Alas, alas, alas!' I cried and started up:
'Ah, creator, the treasure of rasa — why did you give it and take it away?'
- 11.9. My soul aches, my heart aches, half my head is throbbing — I cannot stay at home."
- 11.10. Says Lochana: "Why are you weeping? Go into your own house:
deep in your heart hold Gorachand, immersing your mind in Him."³⁴

32. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 183, no. 73 (raga "yatharaga"; refrain marked "dhru" in brackets; scan PDF p. 442); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 73 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. "Spell" (guṇa) — the sorcery of an exorcist (ojhā): Gaura's glance as a charm. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

33. 11.4–11.7 are a dream with a direct motif of sambhoga (embrace, kiss, "play"); translated exactly, without softening. The dream is the townswoman's imagination, not an event of the lila; the Lord in His lila did not touch women and in Navadvipa did not look at them (CB, Adi-khanda); the tradition does not accept "gaura-nagari" (Bhaktisiddhanta; introductory note); according to Majumdar, such padas of GPT are a late layer. GPT1 gives under the line a variant to 11.4b: "I look — on my breast is Gora, Shachi's darling."

34. "Go into your own house" (ḍhoka āpanāra ghara) — the poet answers the heroine: do not weep over the dream, but turn inward and hold Gora in your heart. The same ending in no. 13 (13.13), a similar one in no. 20 (20.10).

12. Lochana Dasa — "hemṁ go hemṁ go gorā kene nā yāya pāsārā..." (GPT1 pp. 183–184, no. 74)

*Nagari-bhava. The townswoman cannot forget Gora: the secret came out within a couple of days; in sleep He is on her heart, even in her husband's arms; going to bathe, she remembers Him and falls on the spot. The poet jokes: "Go and tell why your foot slipped!" Raga "yatharaga".*³⁵

- 12.1. Hey, hey! why can Gora not be forgotten?
Gora's form has swallowed my mind — I have become as if mad.
- 12.2. Gora has lodged in my eyes — what am I to do, friend?
The secret has come out — not even two or four days have passed.
- 12.3. In sleep and in dreams Gora is upon my heart; even lying in my own husband's arms — what more will you tell me?³⁶
- 12.4. If, taking a cup of oil, I go to bathe — Gora's form comes to mind, and I fall right there.
- 12.5. My body trembles, my limbs shake — I cannot say anything.³⁷
- 12.6. Night and day He wakes in my heart — what shall I say of it?
Says Lochana: "Go and tell why your foot has slipped!"

35. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — pp. 183–184, no. 74 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF pp. 442–443); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 74 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. "Mad" (bāula) — lit. "bawl," possessed, "beside oneself." On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

36. Gora is on her heart "even in her own husband's arms" — the parakiya motif transferred to the townswomen (notes 7, 11).

37. In GPT1 and GPT2 this is a single line (with the mark); its pair has apparently dropped out. "Your foot has slipped" (12.6) — the poet's joke: the heroine has "stumbled," losing her head over Gora.

13. Lochana Dasa — "eka nāgarī hese bale śunago marama sai..." (GPT1 pp. 184–185, no. 75)

*Nagari-bhava. One townswoman, laughing, tells her intimate friend: they have never seen such a "man of rasa" — the pendant swings, at His laughter one cannot be still; she went to look by chance — and He pulls her heart with the rope of anuraga; from under her veil she saw the dancer of rasa go dancing through the bazaar of Nadia. Another answers: I will go to another land — shut the doors of this one, go to the "inner village"; a jewel must be kept secret. The poet: go into your own house, hold Gorachand in your heart. Raga "yatharaga".*³⁸

- 13.1. One nagari, laughing, says: "Listen, my intimate friend:
you know what is hidden, you know rasa — that is why I tell you.
- 13.2. Besides you, to whom should I speak of rasa?
Such a man of rasa as our [Gora] we have never seen.
- 13.3. How it burns, how it flashes, the pearl — a pendant swings in the nose;
I cannot be still for the waves of Gora's laughter.
- 13.4. By chance I went to look — who knew it would be like this?
With the rope of anuraga He has seized my heart and pulls it.
- 13.5. The form, the radiance of beauty — He goes along the road;
at the sight of the grace of Gaura's form my whole body starts.
- 13.6. My body trembles, all my limbs shake;
the pendant in the nose, the radiance of beauty leap into my very heart.
- 13.7. Sidelong, from under my veil, I looked at Him:
the dancer of rasa goes dancing through the bazaar of Nadia.
- 13.8. You are deep, deep sunk in rasa, while we are beggars of rasa; you have gained in rasa the basket of rasa — young Gora!"³⁹
- 13.9. Another nagari says: "I will not stay in this land; putting the garland of rasa on my neck, I will go to another land.
- 13.10. Shut the doors of this land — and I gain that land:
there is nothing to do in the outer village — let us go to the inner village.
- 13.11. The jewel of a snake — if you take it out, you may lose the jewel; and if the snake loses its jewel, it does not live.
- 13.12. A jewel must be kept carefully, not brought out; if you bring out the treasure of your soul, you will have to stand guard."⁴⁰
- 13.13. Says Lochana: "Why are you brooding? Go into your own house:
deep in your heart hold Gorachand, immersing your mind in Him."

38. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — pp. 184–185, no. 75 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF pp. 443–444); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 75 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. Lines 13.4b and 13.6 occur almost word for word in no. 8 (8.5b, 8.3), the ending 13.13 in no. 11 (11.10). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

39. In 13.8 the townswoman apparently envies her friends who have seen Gora more closely: "you" are rich in rasa, "we" are its beggars; the sense of the couplet is conjectural. "The dancer of rasa" (rasera neṭo) is Gaura in kirtana.

40. 13.10–13.12 are images of hidden devotion: the "outer" and the "inner village," the snake's jewel (by popular belief a snake dies without its jewel), a treasure kept secret: love for Gaura is held in the heart, not displayed; the ending agrees with this (13.13; cf. no. 11, 11.10). Translated as in the original.

14. Lochana Dasa — "āmāra gaurāṅga nāce hemakiraṇiyā..." (GPT1 p. 185, no. 76)

Nagari-bhava (only in the frame). Gauranga dances, shining like gold — the juice of prema drips from the golden tree; His gestures, the curve of His waist, His smile; crowds of young women throng to see Him; the flood of prema flows, even Madana loses his head. Raga "yatharaga".⁴¹

- 14.1. My Gauranga dances, shining with golden rays; from the golden tree, drop by drop, the juice of prema falls.
- 14.2. Gestures, graceful poses, the curved waist, a smile steeped in sweetness; looking at the form, I feel I am about to lose caste and family.
- 14.3. The wondrous bearing of the dance, the radiance of Gora's body; to see His form, crowds of young women throng.
- 14.4. The mind is absorbed, the family drowned — the flood of prema flows; says Lochana: even Madana loses his head — what more is there to say?⁴²

41. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 185, no. 76 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF p. 444); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 76 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. In substance a praise of Gaura's dance in kirtana; the nagari motif is in the frame (caste and family, the crowd of young women). Line 14.3b coincides with 8.4b. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

42. "The flood of prema" is the Lord's kirtana that flooded Nadia (CB, Madhya-khanda); "even Madana loses his head" — cf. the epithet "Madana-mohana" (note 27).

15. Lochana Dasa — "kibā se lābaṇya rūpa bayase utthāna..." (GPT1 p. 185, no. 77)

Nagari-bhava. The townswoman describes Gauranga's form: the hair, the brows — Kama's bow, the eyes; whether she dives into water or closes her eyes, she still sees Him; she would spread her breast over all Nadia for Gauranga to dance and walk on; let them call her "disgraced by Gaura." At the end the poet looks on from outside: Gaurachand walks through Nadia, and the townswomen's eyes, like bees, drink the honey of His face. Raga "yatharaga".⁴³

- 15.1. What loveliness, what beauty, youth in its very rising!
When one looks at Gauranga, the eyes slip.
- 15.2. Each limb is matchless — to what shall I compare it?
I only gather together my heart's longing.
- 15.3. Seeing the loveliness of the hair, the soul cannot hold;
the brows are Kama's bow, the high nose — the arrow.
- 15.4. Whomever those moving, long eyes look at — who goes home without giving her family away for Him?
- 15.5. If I dive into the water, still I see Gora;
the three worlds are immersed [in Him] — Gora has become like the moon.⁴⁴
- 15.6. If in my heart's longing I close both eyes — still deep in my heart I see Gaura's form.
- 15.7. Surpassing an elephant's trunk — how the arms sway!
On the heaving chest the malati garland swings.
- 15.8. I think: I will spread this breast of mine over all Nadia and on it make Gauranga dance.
- 15.9. I think: let my heart cover all Nadia, and Gauranga walk upon it, stepping out.⁴⁵

15.10. Let them, let all the people call me "disgraced by Gaura"; shame on those wives of noble families who keep their family honour!

15.11. Through the town of Nadia Gaurachand goes, with moving eyes He looks to both sides.

15.12. The townswomen's eyes are like rows of bees:
they drink the honey of the lotus of Gaura's face, drunk and drunker.

15.13. Seeing their delight as they drink the lotus honey, this Lochana Dasa joyfully sings of Gaura's virtues.⁴⁶

43. Signature: "e locana dāsa." GPT1 — p. 185, no. 77 (raga "yatharaga"; payar metre, a couplet to a line; scan PDF p. 444); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 77 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

44. The moon, whose light floods all the three worlds and is reflected in any water — that is why the townswoman sees Gora even in the water; the interpretation is conjectural.

45. 15.8–15.9 — the wish that the Lord's feet should tread on one's heart: a mood of service known from the song of the gopis (Bhag. 10.31). "Disgraced by Gaura" (gaurakalaṅkinī, 15.10) is modelled on "disgraced by Krishna" (kṛṣṇakalaṅkinī), as Radha is called; on the transfer of the parakiya motif see note 7.

46. 15.11 "He looks to both sides" is the poet's image; according to CB (Adi-khanda) the Lord in Navadvipa did not look at women (note 3). The last three couplets are the poet's view from outside: he sees the townswomen's delight and sings of it, as he sings of Gaura's virtues.

16. Lochana Dasa — "ehena sundara gorā kothā vā āchila go..." (GPT1 p. 186, no. 78)

Nagari-bhava (only in the frame). Where was such a beautiful Gora before, who brought Him to Nadia? In bhava He has gone limp, His eyes are moist with prema; the creator made Him from the treasure of bliss. The dancer of Gokula, Kanu, was bent and crooked of heart — Radha's love straightened Him: He it is who now sports in Nadia. Raga "yatharaga".⁴⁷

16.1. Where was such a beautiful Gora before, o, who brought Him to the town of Nadia?
As soon as I looked at Gaura's form, He entered my heart, o;
my body trembles, filled with thrill.

16.2. In the rapture of bhava, friend, He has gone all limp, o,
His eyes glisten moist with prema;
I look and look — and it seems to me, o:
I would make Him the darling doll of my soul and keep Him.

16.3. Did the creator churn the treasure of bliss to make Him, o?
what a craftsman it was who shaped Him!
On the lathe of love he turned Him, o,
and turned (His) eyes with Kama's arrows.

16.4. The dancer of Gokula, Kanu, was bent, o, dark and crooked was He at heart;
Radha's love has made Him straight, o, —
He it is who now sports in Nadia.⁴⁸

16.5. The secret of my heart — to whom shall I tell it, o?
as if a thief had stolen my heart;
Lochana dies of thirst, seeing that form, o:
the creator has cheated me.

47. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 186, no. 78 (raga "yatharaga"; tripadi; scan PDF p. 445); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 78 (same text). The pada is also in the Padamrita-sindhu (Prachina-vaishnava-pada-avali), vol. 1 (collection of Chandranatha Bandyopadhyaya, publ. 1922; hereafter PVP), p. 114, with the same signature and with an extra stanza after 16.4 (see note 48); PVP is a late anthology, not an independent witness; attribution by GPT only — C. "O" (go) at the ends of the half-lines is a refrain exclamation. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

48. Stanza 16.4 is the heart of the pada: Gaura is the same Krishna, the "bent" (tribhanga) and "crooked" Kanu of Gokula, whom Radha's love has made "straight": He has taken Radha's bhava (CC Adi 4). PVP: "Kanu, Nanda's son, was bent in Gokula... by Rai's love He was tamed" (damana karila), followed by an extra stanza: "Thinking of Radha's form, Gora became a golden body; formerly this turned into a gift of prema; whose heart does not drown in His deeds — shame on him!" "The darling doll of my soul" (16.2) — what is dearest (note 13).

17. Lochana Dasa — "śārada-candrikā svarṇa dhik campakera barṇa..." (GPT1 p. 186, no. 79)

A praise of Gaura's form (in content not nagari-bhava: the nagari motif is only the address "friend"). Neither gold nor moonlight, nor champaka, nor precious stones, nor lightning compare with Gora: all these are forms of the world of prakṛiti, while He is the king of rasa beyond the world; He can be compared only with Himself. As a bird flies in the sky as far as its strength allows, so the poet sings of Him. Raga "yatharaga".⁴⁹

17.1. Autumn moonlight, gold — shame on the colour of the champaka, on the red shona flower, on gorochana!

Orpiment — what a trifle, a modification of clay — can it compare with Gora's form?

17.2. Shame on the moonstone — how should its colour be reckoned? — on the serpent's jewel and on lightning!

All these are forms of the world of prakṛiti; He is the king of rasa beyond prakṛiti: to what shall I compare Him?⁵⁰

17.3. All the descriptions you see are only uddipana by likeness: who can describe Gaura's form?

Do you not know: that very Gora, taking a body in earthly form, drives away steadfastness by His mere sight?

17.4. Listen, o dear friend: where in the world is a comparison? to what then shall I compare Him?

There is no comparison in the world; He who is comparable only to Himself — why mix nectar with poison?

17.5. Who can sing His virtues, who can find their end, who can describe His form?

The form cannot be described, who can tell the virtues? — thinking of this, the mind has gone mad.

17.6. As a bird in the sky learns nothing [of its end], flying as far as its strength allows, so of Gauranga's beauty [the end] cannot be known: as far as he is able, this Lochana sings.⁵¹

49. Signature: "e locana." GPT1 — p. 186, no. 79 (raga "yatharaga"; tripadi; scan PDF p. 445); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 79 (same text). The pada is also in PVP (vol. 1, pp. c. 122–123; see note 47), with Lochana's signature: the stanzas in a different order, with variants and with an extra opening stanza ("The colour of Gaurangachand surpasses the gold of the Jambu river — so the great describe it; since my birth I have nowhere seen the gold of the Jambu: in my heart is the vision of Gauranga"); PVP is a late anthology, not an independent witness; attribution by GPT only — C. In the GPT section of nagari padas the pada stands because of the address to a friend; on nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

50. "Forms of the world of prakṛiti" (prapañcarūpa): everything poets compare with belongs to the material world (prapancha); Gaura is "the king of rasa beyond prakṛiti" (aprapañcarasabhūpa): His form is not material. The thought agrees with the teaching: the Lord's body is eternity, knowledge and bliss (CC Adi 4 and elsewhere). Shona is a red flower; gorochana and orpiment are yellow pigments; "the serpent's jewel" is the gem in a snake's hood (cf. note 40).

51. "Uddipana" (uddīpana) — in the teaching on rasa, the "kindling" causes of feeling: the poets' comparisons only kindle feeling, they do not describe Him. "Taking a body in earthly form" (dharārūpe aṅgadharā) — the interpretation is conjectural. "As far as he is able" (anusāre) — as a bird flies in the boundless sky as far as its strength allows.

18. Lochana Dasa — "(hemñ go hemñ go) sai tore birala peye kai..." (GPT1 p. 187, no. 81)

*Nagari-bhava (a dream). Finding her friend alone, the townswoman tells her dream: Shachi's Gora, with a garland of malati and a thin sacred thread, came up smiling, put a garland on her neck, wiped her face with His cloth, took her hand — as her heart had wished; Gora's love is like gold, it cannot be forgotten. Raga "yatharaga".*⁵²

18.1. (Hey, hey!) Friend, finding you alone, I will tell you:
lying asleep, I saw Shachi's Gora in a dream.

18.2. A malati garland lights up His neck, a thin sacred thread on His shoulder; how many streams, like nectar, flow over the moon of His face!

18.3. Smiling, He comes near and puts a garland on my neck;
what He did, I am ashamed to tell: how many wives He knows!

18.4. With His own cloth He wipes my face and gazes again; taking my hand, He caresses me — just as my heart desired.⁵³

18.5. Gora's love is like gold: I cannot forget it.

Says Lochana: "Sit in solitude — come here, I die of grief."

52. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 187, no. 81 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF p. 446); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 81 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. "(Hey, hey!)" is an insertion in brackets (cf. no. 12, 12.1). The sacred thread — Gaura as a young brahmana, before the sannyasa. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

53. 18.3–18.4 are a dream with the motif of sambhoga (a garland on the neck — the sign of being chosen, "what He did, I am ashamed to tell," caresses); translated exactly. The dream is the townswoman's imagination; see note 33. 18.5b — the sense is conjectural: the poet apparently shares the heroine's longing.

19. Lochana Dasa — "hera āya go manera kathā birala peye kai..." (GPT1 p. 187, no. 82)

*Nagari-bhava. The townswoman calls her friend: in the late afternoon she went to see Shachi's son — a moon anointed with sandal, a sandal mark on the forehead, a snare for the heart; out of shame she held herself back, but, seeing His long eyes, she could not come away. Raga "yatharaga".*⁵⁴

19.1. Come here, friend — finding you alone, I will tell what is on my heart:
in the late afternoon I went to see the son of Shachi, friend.

19.2. A moon anointed with sandal, o friend! A moon anointed with sandal:
the sandal mark on His forehead — a snare to catch the heart.

19.3. Out of decorum and shame I at once held myself back;
but, seeing those long eyes, friend, — could I come away?

19.4. At the sight of Gaura's form the heart rejoices;
with joy in his heart says this Lochana Dasa.

54. Signature: "e locana dāsa." GPT1 — p. 187, no. 82 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF p. 446); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 82 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. "The son of Shachi" (śacīra rāya) — lit. "Shachi's Raya." The ending 19.4 nearly coincides with 5.13. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

20. Lochana Dasa — "mukha jhalamala badana-kamala dīghala āmñhi duñi..." (GPT1 p. 188, no. 83)

*Nagari-bhava. The townswoman describes Gaura: the radiant lotus face, the long eyes, the reddish soles; walking, swaying, He leans on His friends; once He glanced at her from the corner of His eye — and the doe of her heart was caught in the snare of His brows. Then come couplets shared with no. 9; others seek Him by austerity through many births, while she keeps Him in her heart. The poet: hold the nagara Gora captive in your heart. Raga "yatharaga".*⁵⁵

- 20.1. A radiant face, a lotus face, two long eyes;
seeing them, millions of wagtails are in shame and sorrow.
- 20.2. On His soles the dawn plays, lotuses shine on them;
walking, walking, swaying, swaying, He leans on His friends.⁵⁶
- 20.3. From the corner of His eye He once glanced at me — the doe of my heart was caught in the snare of His brows.
- 20.4. Gaura's form — a well of rasa — is so much just by itself;
if He uses His art, the wiles of rasa, — what will it be then!
- 20.5. If He gracefully arranges His soft curling hair,
then a faithful, noble wife cannot keep her family honour.
- 20.6. Whomever He calls with a sidelong glance — will her pride remain?
and if He should ask — would the rasavati survive?
- 20.7. If He smiles — what heaps of diamonds appear!
Eyes, mind, the treasure of the soul — who will take them back? come!
- 20.8. With a garland on His neck, swinging His arms, He passes by — Rati herself, Kama's wife, leaving her husband, worships Gora's feet.
- 20.9. [Others] practise harsh austerity and japa, wandering birth after birth;
but I, keeping [Him] in my heart, giving my life, gaze at Him to my fill.
- 20.10. Says Lochana: "Why are you brooding? Stay in your own house:
deep in your heart hold the nagara Gora captive."⁵⁷

55. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 188, no. 83 (raga "yatharaga"; scan PDF p. 447); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 83 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. 20.4–20.6, 20.8 = no. 9, 9.1–9.4 (in 20.6 "whom He calls," yāre ḍāke, instead of "whom He looks at," yāmre dekhe); on the motifs of these couplets see notes 26–27. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

56. Gaura, swaying in bhava, leans on His associates — as in the descriptions of His kirtana (CB, Madhya-khanda). "He glanced at me" (20.3) is how it seems to the heroine; according to CB (Adi-khanda) the Lord did not look at women (note 3). The wagtail (khañjana) is an image of restless eyes.

57. 20.9 contrasts austerity and love: others seek Him by harsh feats through many births, while she has found Him by keeping Him in her heart. 20.10 is the same turn inward as in nos. 11 and 13 (11.10, 13.13); "the nagara Gora" is an epithet of nagari-bhava (introductory note). 20.7b — the sense is conjectural.

21. Lochana Dasa — "nabadvīpanāgarī āgarī gorārase..." (GPT1 p. 189, no. 85)

*Nagari-bhava. A townswoman of Navadvīpa, foremost in the rasa of Gora, floats in tears of prema as she speaks of Gauranga; in her ears, eyes and mind — Gora; she writes His name on her body with gorochana and performs puja to Him in her mind: tears are the abhisheka, love the naivedya, words the betel, the radiance of her body the lamp, the jingling of her bangles the bell; her anuraga grows day by day. The poet: at last the thorn of knowledge is gone. Raga "yatharaga".*⁵⁸

- 21.1. A townswoman of Navadvīpa, foremost in the rasa of Gora, speaking of Gauranga, floats in tears of prema.

- 21.2. Overflowing with bhava, the loving one is beside herself with thrill:
in her ears, in her eyes, in her mind — Gora, Gora, Gora.
- 21.3. Gora's form and virtues she wears as ornaments in her ears;
day and night she knows nothing but Gora.
- 21.4. She thickly anoints her body with gorochana and carefully writes Gora's name on it.
- 21.5. Making a little figure of gorochana and turmeric, she worships it with the water of her eyes, offering the flower of her life.
- 21.6. From her loving eyes tears of prema stream — with them she performs the abhisheka of Gora's reddish feet.
- 21.7. Love is her naivedya, her words the betel;
she serves with the bhava fitting the hour.
- 21.8. With the radiance of her body as the lamp she performs arati;
the jingling of her bangles is the bell; her joy grows ever greater.
- 21.9. The fragrance of her body — incense and fragrant smoke — rises in anuraga;
having done the puja, she begs for the rasa of seeing and touching [Him].⁵⁹
- 21.10. Day by day her anuraga grew;
says Lochana: at last the thorn of knowledge is gone.⁶⁰

58. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 189, no. 85 (raga "yatharaga"; payar metre, a couplet to a line; scan PDF p. 448); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 85 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

59. 21.5–21.9 are a mental puja (manasa-puja): all the articles of worship come from the feelings and body of the loving one: tears are the water of the abhisheka, love the naivedya, words the betel, the radiance of the body the arati lamp, the jingling of bangles the bell, the fragrance of the body the incense. The little figure of gorochana and turmeric (putalī) is an image of Gaura made by herself; translated as in the original. The request "to see and to touch" (daraśa-paraśarasa) is a motif of nagari-bhava (introductory note).

60. "The thorn of knowledge" (jñānaśela) — knowledge (jnana) that obstructs love like a splinter; as anuraga grows it goes away — the thought of the superiority of bhakti over jnana (cf. CC Madhya 19 — pure bhakti, "not covered by knowledge and karma").

22. Lochana Dasa — "gorāpade sudhāhrade mana ḍubāye thāki..." (GPT1 p. 204, no. 116)

*A praise of Gaura (the nagari motif is only in the address "mother"). The poet keeps his mind immersed in Gora's feet as in a lake of nectar; refrain: "Such a Gora, rapt in rasa, I have never seen anywhere." In the midst of Nadia He has come in the guise of a devotee, covered with Radha's form; steady, calm, self-controlled — meditate on Gora in your heart. Raga suhai.*⁶¹

- 22.1. In Gora's feet, a lake of nectar, I keep my mind immersed; opening the doors, opening my eyes, I gaze at Gorachand.
- 22.2. (Refrain) Ah, mother!
Such a Gora, rapt in rasa, I have never seen anywhere.
- 22.3. In the midst of Nadia, in the guise of a devotee, He has come in the dress of rasa;
Gora, covered with Radha's form — how He enchants with rasa!⁶²
- 22.4. The radiance of His beauty is like ground lightning; His form enchants the world;
Gora's form is the king of the world: no one can forget it.

22.5. Steady, calm, self-controlled even in rasa — if you see Him even from the corner of your eye...

Says Lochana with joy: meditate on Gora in your heart.⁶³

61. Signature: "Lochana." GPT1 — p. 204, no. 116 (raga suhai; refrain marked "dhru"; scan PDF p. 463), among the padas of Vasu Ghosha (nos. 111–115) and before the padas of Jnanadasa (nos. 117–118); GPT2 — 3.2, no. 116 (same text). No other witnesses; attribution by GPT only — C. "Ah, mother!" (āi go māi) is an exclamation in women's speech (chapter 29, glossary). On nagari-bhava see the introductory note to the section (chapter 27).

62. "In the guise of a devotee" (bhakta sāje) and "covered with Radha's form" (rādhārūpe mākḥā) are an exact formula of the teaching: Gaura is Krishna, who has taken the form of a devotee and the bhava and radiance of Radha (CC Adi 1.5; Adi 4). "The dress of rasa" — His form as the one who tastes rasa.

63. "Steady, calm, self-controlled" (dhīra śānta dānta) — so the tradition too sees Gaura (CB, Adi-khanda, on the Lord's strictness). "Ground lightning" (bijurī bātā) — the interpretation is conjectural. "Opening the doors" (22.1) — cf. the "inner village" of no. 13 (13.10).

Summary of Chapter 34

*Chapter 34 completes the nagari padas of Lochana Dasa: of the 26 padas with his signature in section 3.2 of GPT, 22 are translated here (nos. 62–65, 67–79, 81–83, 85, 116; records pad-0735...0756); nos. 61 and 66 (= PK 2178, 2174) were translated in chapter 28; no. 80 (= PK 2088) is a passage of the *Chaitanya-mangala (Madhya-khanda, part 4, vv. 110–118), no. 84 (= PK 777) is a pada of Vasu Ghosha (chapter 27, no. 16; in GPT1 it stands twice — as no. 17 with Vasu's signature and as no. 84 with Lochana's). All 22 padas are known only from GPT (nos. 16, 17 also from PVP, 1922, with the same signature); all are C: attribution by GPT only (the signature of a recognized author, but without independent witnesses; PVP, 1922, is a late anthology); no. 5 begins with two couplets of Jnanadasa's pada PK 748. In content: the purvaraga and anuraga of the townswomen (nos. 1–2, 4–10, 12–13, 15, 19–21); an imagined meeting and dreams with the motif of sambhoga (no. 1 — a fancy beside her husband; nos. 11, 18 — dreams); praise of Gaura's form and dance, where the nagari motif is only in the frame or the address (nos. 3, 14, 16) or absent in content (nos. 17, 22). Separate notes on attraction and sambhoga — 3, 26, 31, 33, 53; on the motif of "leaving family and husband" — 7, 11, 36, 45; on the Lord's looking at women — 26, 46, 56. Many of Lochana's padas end with a turn inward — "go into your own house, hold Gora in your heart" (nos. 11, 13, 20; cf. nos. 3, 22), and in several the teaching is voiced directly: Gaura is the same Krishna, "straightened" by Radha's love (16.4); His form is beyond prakṛiti (17.2); He has come in the guise of a devotee, covered with Radha's form (22.3). Doubtful places: the meaning of a number of colloquial words (5.6, 5.9, 6.2, 6.3, 7.1, 7.3, 13.8, 15.5, 18.5, 20.7, 22.4) — translated conjecturally, with notes; line 12.5 has no pair (lost in GPT).

Concluding Note to the Section of Nagari Padas (Chapters 27–34)

1. How many and whose. The section contains 183 padas in eight chapters: Vasu Ghosha — 40 (chapter 27 — 25 padas from PK; chapter 28 — 15 padas known from GPT); Nayananda — 5; Yadunandana — 6 (the cycle of the 12th wave of the Bhakti-ratnakara, chapter 29; one signed "Yadu"); Yadu — 2; Murari — 2 (Murari Gupta by the GPT signature and Dasa Murari); Balarama Dasa — 1; Chandrashekhara — 1; Lochana Dasa — 24 (two padas from PK in chapter 28 and 22 from GPT in chapter 34); "Narahari" — 102 (chapters 29–33; nearly all by Narahari Chakravarti; their concluding note is at the end of chapter 33).

2. Attribution (scale — see the preface). A — 30: 26 padas of Vasu Ghosha (25 from PK and one confirmed by the *Kshanada-gita-chintamani) and 4 padas of Nayananda from PK. B — 90: "probably Chakravarti" — 81 (75 found in the Gaura-charita-chintamani, 6 only in the Bhakti-ratnakara), Yadunandana — 6, Lochana Dasa — 2 (padas from PK, chapter 28), Vasu — 1 (GPT and the Gita-chandrodaya). C — 62: Lochana Dasa — 22 (chapter 34: signature only in GPT, without independent witnesses — "attribution by GPT only"), "Narahari" — 21 (padas only from GPT; some stand in place of the lost pages of GCC), Vasu — 12 (GPT only), Nayananda — 1, Yadu — 2, Murari — 2, Balarama — 1, Chandrashekhara — 1. D — 1 (a pada signed Vasu, according to Majumdar a reworking of a pada on Krishna; chapter 28, no. 13). The earliest and most reliable layer is the padas of Vasu Ghosha and Nayananda from the Padakalpataru; the rest is a poetic development of the nagari motif: Lochana Dasa (a disciple of Narahari Sarakara), Yadunandana (a disciple of Gadadhara Dasa) and, most of all, Narahari Chakravarti (first half of the eighteenth century).*

3. Who speaks. In the great majority of padas the townswomen of Nadia speak — to a friend, to themselves, to the elders; in 25 "Narahari" padas (GPT 3.2 nos. 158–180 and 3.1 nos. 129–130 = GCC, kiranas 10–11) heavenly women speak, who only look at Nadia from the sky; in a few, the poet himself, putting himself in a townswoman's place ("the nagari Lochana," 34/6.11) or looking on from outside (34/15.11–15.13). Not nagari-bhava in content — 6 padas: Gaura's words in sleep in the words of Krishna (31/1), the heavenly women's replies praising the Lord's strictness (32/19–20, 33/3), Lochana's praise of Gaura's form (34/17, 22); in a number of other padas the nagari motif is only the address "friend" or the frame (28/1, 34/3, 14, 16 and others). Three padas are laments after the Lord's sannyasa (in 28/15 the speaker is probably Vishnupriya — then it is a lament of separation, not nagari-bhava), four are the women's words at His wedding.

4. What the corpus shows. The nagari padas speak of Gaura in the language of purvaraga and anuraga from the padas on Radha and the gopis: deceiving the elders, "leaving family and husband," dreams of a meeting. The later the layer, the more outspoken the motif: in Vasu Ghosha (PK) it is mostly admiration and longing; in the "Narahari" padas from GCC and in Lochana's colloquial padas — dreams with embraces and direct words of attraction. Yet even in them Gaura in the lila itself does not respond to attraction: He passes by, dances in kirtana, leans on His associates; the "meeting" happens only in the heroine's dream and fancy; in Narahari Chakravarti the Lord turns away and hurries off, and Lochana ends many padas with a call to "go into your own house" and keep Gora in the heart and voices the teaching directly (34/16.4, 17.2, 22.3).

5. The position of the tradition (briefly). The Gaudiya Vaishnava tradition does not accept the worship of Gaura in the mood of the nagaris. Vrindavana Dasa (*Chaitanya-bhagavata, Adi-khanda) testifies that the Lord in this incarnation did not look at any woman and that the wise do not glorify Him as "Gauranga-nagara"; Krishnadasa Kaviraja (Chaitanya-charitamrita, Adi 1.5–6; Adi 4) reveals that Gaura is Krishna Himself in the bhava and radiance of Radha, who came to taste Her love as a devotee, not as an enjoying hero; Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati counts "gaura-nagari" among the apasampradayas — and, publishing Lochana's Chaitanya-mangala, refuses to ascribe this doctrine to it. The nagari padas have been translated for the completeness of the corpus of padas on Gaura and as a historical document — faithfully to the author, without worldly vocabulary beyond the original and without softening, with notes on the position of the tradition; they are not a basis for worshipping Gaura as a nagara (introductory note, chapter 27).*