“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Antya-līlā

Chapter 13

How Jagadānanda Went to Vṛndāvana

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

1 I take shelter of Gaura, whose mind and body, though wasted by the pain born of separation from Kṛṣṇa, blossomed again through His ecstatic emotions.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura![1]

3 In this way, in the company of Jagadānanda, Mahāprabhu tasted the waves of love in many ways.

4 His mind and body were wasted by the sorrow of separation from Kṛṣṇa, yet at times, absorbed in ecstatic emotion, the Lord would blossom again.

5 He lay on dried banana bark, and His body was very thin. His bones pressed against the bark, and His whole body ached.[2]

6 Seeing this, all the devotees were deeply grieved. Jagadānanda could not bear it, and he devised a remedy.

7 He brought fine cloth, dyed it with red ochre and stuffed it with the cotton of the silk-cotton (śimula) tree.

8 He put a mattress and a pillow into Govinda's hands and told him, "Have the Lord lie down on these."

9 Jagadānanda said to Svarūpa Gosāñi, "Today please go yourself and have the Lord lie down on them."

10 At bedtime Svarūpa stayed close by. But when the Lord saw the mattress and pillow, He became angry.

11 He asked Govinda, "Who had this made?" But when He heard Jagadānanda's name, His heart shrank back in apprehension.

12 He had Govinda put the mattress away and lay down on the banana bark.

13 Svarūpa said, "It is Your will—what can I say? But if You reject the bed, the Paṇḍita will be deeply hurt."

14 The Lord said, "Then bring a bedstead too and set it up! Jagadānanda wants Me to enjoy worldly pleasures.[3]

15 I am a sannyāsī, and My place is on the ground. A bedstead, a mattress and a pillow would bring Me utter disgrace."[4]

16 Svarūpa Gosāñi came and told the Paṇḍita, and when Jagadānanda heard it, he was deeply grieved.

17 Then Svarūpa Gosāñi devised a way. He brought a great quantity of dry banana leaves.

18 Tearing them again and again with his nails, he shredded them very fine and filled the Lord's outer cloths (bahirvāsa) with them.

19 In this way he made two pieces of bedding (oḍana-pāḍana), and only after much persuasion did the Lord accept them.[5]

20 The Lord lay on them, and seeing this, everyone was happy. But Jagadānanda remained deeply unhappy through and through.[6]

21 Jagadānanda had long wished to go to Vṛndāvana, but the Lord would not give him permission, and so he could not set out.

22 Without showing his inner sorrow outwardly, he asked the Lord for permission to go to Mathurā.[7]

23 The Lord said, “You will go to Mathurā angry with Me. Laying the blame on Me, you will become a beggar.”[8]

24 Clasping the Lord’s feet, Jagadānanda said, “For a long time I have wished to go to Vṛndāvana.

25 Without Your permission I could not go. Now please give me permission; I will surely go.”

26 Out of love, the Lord would not agree to his going, but Jagadānanda begged Him for permission again and again.

27 The Paṇḍita appealed to Svarūpa Gosāñi: “For a long time my heart has been set on going to Vṛndāvana.

28 Without the Lord’s permission I cannot go there, and now He will not give me permission. He says, ‘You would go in anger.’

29 My heart is drawn there of its own accord. Please obtain the Lord’s permission for me—I humbly beg you.”

30 Then Svarūpa Gosāñi submitted at the Lord's feet: "Jagadānanda greatly desires to go to Vṛndāvana.

31 He has asked You for permission again and again. Please let him go: let him see Mathurā once and come back.

32 Just as he goes to Gauḍa to see Mother Śacī, so let him go once, see Vṛndāvana and return."

33 At Svarūpa Gosāñi's word the Lord gave His permission. He called Jagadānanda and instructed him:

34 "As far as Vārāṇasī you may travel the road freely. Beyond that, go carefully, in the company of kṣatriyas and others.

35 If they find a Gauḍīya alone, highwaymen (bāṭapāḍa) waylay him and bind him; they plunder everything, keep him bound and do not let him go on.[9]

36 When you reach Mathurā, stay with Sanātana, and honour the feet of all the lords of Mathurā.[10]

37 Show them devotion, but from afar, and do not stay in their company: you could never accept their ways and conduct.[11]

38 Visit the forests with Sanātana, and do not leave his side for a moment.

39 Come back quickly; do not stay there long. Do not climb Govardhana to see Gopāla.[12]

40 Tell Sanātana, 'I too am coming,' and let him prepare a place for Me in Vṛndāvana."[13]

41 Saying this, the Lord embraced Jagadānanda, who bowed at His feet and set out.

42 He took leave of all the devotees, and travelling on and on by the forest path, he came to Vārāṇasī.

43 There he met both Tapana Miśra and Candraśekhara, and they heard from him all the news of the Lord.

44 Coming to Mathurā, he met Sanātana, and in each other's company both were joyful at heart.

45 Sanātana showed him the twelve forests, and after seeing Mahāvana the two stayed in Gokula.

46 They lived together in Sanātana's cave, and the Paṇḍita would go to a temple to cook.[14]

47 Sanātana would go begging in Mahāvana—sometimes at a temple, sometimes at the homes of brāhmaṇas.

48 Sanātana looked after all the Paṇḍita's needs: he would beg food and drink in Mahāvana and bring them to him.

49 One day the Paṇḍita invited Sanātana, and after finishing his daily duties he began to cook.

50 A great sannyāsī named Mukunda Sarasvatī had given Sanātana an outer cloth (bahirvāsa).

51 With that cloth tied around his head, Sanātana came and sat at the door of Jagadānanda's lodging.[15]

52 Seeing the red cloth, the Paṇḍita took it for Mahāprabhu's gift (prasāda) and was overwhelmed with love. He asked him:

53 "Where did you get this red cloth?" "Mukunda Sarasvatī gave it," Sanātana replied.

54 When he heard this, anger arose in the Paṇḍita's mind, and with the rice pot in his hand he came forward to strike him.

55 Sanātana, understanding him, was abashed. The Paṇḍita set the pot back on the stove and began to speak:[16]

56 "You are one of Mahāprabhu's chief associates. No one else is as dear to Him as you.

57 Yet you wear another sannyāsī's cloth on your head! Who could tolerate such a thing?"

58 Sanātana said, "O saintly Paṇḍita, great soul! No one is as dear to Caitanya as you.

59 Such steadfast faith in Caitanya befits you. If you had not shown it, how would I ever learn it?[17]

60 I tied the cloth on my head in order to see this, and now I have seen that unprecedented love with my own eyes.

61 It is not fitting for a Vaiṣṇava to wear red cloth. I shall give it to some stranger—what use is it to me?"[18]

62 When he had finished cooking, Jagadānanda offered the food to Caitanya, and then the two sat down and honoured the prasāda.

63 After taking prasāda they embraced, and both wept in separation from Caitanya.

64 In this way he stayed in Vṛndāvana for two months, but the sorrow of separation from Caitanya was more than he could bear.

65 He gave Sanātana Mahāprabhu's message: "I too am coming. Prepare a place for Me to stay."

66 Then Jagadānanda Paṇḍita asked leave to go, and Sanātana gave him some gifts for the Lord.

67 He sent sand from the site of the rāsa dance, a stone from Govardhana, dried ripe pīlu fruits and a garland of guñjā seeds.

68 Jagadānanda Paṇḍita set out with all these things, and Sanātana was distraught as he bade him farewell.

69 Sanātana thought of a place for the Lord and found a temple (maṭha) on the Dvādaśāditya mound.[19]

70 The Gosāñi repaired that place and kept it ready, and in front of the temple he built a thatched shed.

71 Jagadānanda went quickly back to Nīlācala, and the Lord, together with the devotees, was overjoyed.

72 He bowed to the Lord's feet and met everyone, and Mahāprabhu embraced him tightly.

73 In Sanātana's name the Paṇḍita offered obeisance to the Lord, and he presented all the gifts—dust from the site of the rāsa dance and the rest.

74 The Lord kept all the gifts but distributed the pīlu fruits, and everyone ate them with delight, calling them “the fruit of Vṛndāvana.”

75 Those who knew the fruit began to suck the stones, but the Gauḍīyās who did not know it chewed the pīlu and swallowed it.

76 Their mouths were stung with pungency, and their tongues burned. Such was the pastime of eating the pīlu of Vṛndāvana.

77 Everyone rejoiced at Jagadānanda’s return. Thus the Lord enjoyed His pastimes at Nīlācala.

78 One day, as the Lord was going to Yameśvara-ṭoṭā, a devadāsī of the temple began to sing.

79 Taking up the Gurjarī rāgiṇī, she was singing a song from the Gīta-govinda in a very sweet voice, and it captivated the mind of the whole world.

80 Hearing the song from afar, the Lord was lost in ecstatic love and could not tell who was singing, a woman or a man.[20]

81 In His ecstasy the Lord ran to meet the singer. On the way He went straight into a hedge of sij shrubs and forced His way through it.[21]

82 Thorns pierced His body, but He knew nothing of it! In great haste Govinda ran after Him.

83 The Lord was running on, and the woman was only a little way off, when Govinda caught Him in his arms, crying, “It is a woman singing!”

84 Hearing the word “woman,” the Lord came back to external consciousness and returned the way He had come.[22]

85 The Lord said, “Govinda, today you have saved My life. Had I touched a woman, it would have been My death.[23]

86 I shall never be able to repay this debt to you.” Govinda replied, “It is Jagannātha who protects. What am I? I am nothing.”

87 The Lord said, “Govinda, stay with Me. Wherever I go, be watchful and protect Me.”

88 Saying this, the Lord turned back and went to His residence. Hearing of it, Svarūpa and the others were greatly alarmed at heart.

89 Meanwhile Raghunātha Bhaṭṭācārya, the son of Tapana Miśra, left all his affairs and set out to see the Lord.[24]

90 He travelled from Kāśī by the road through Gauḍa, and a servant went with him, carrying his bag.[25]

91 On the way he was met by Rāmadāsa Viśvāsa, a kāyastha of the Viśvāsa-khānā and a trusted officer of the king.[26]

92 He was learned in all the scriptures and taught the Kāvya-prakāśa; he was a great Vaiṣṇava and a worshipper of Raghunātha (Rāma).[27]

93 Night and day, through all eight praharas, he chanted the name of Rāma. Giving up everything, he had set out to see Jagannātha.

94 Meeting Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa on the way, he carried the Bhaṭṭa’s bag on his head as they went.

95 He rendered various services and massaged his feet, and this made Raghunātha uneasy at heart.

96 “You are a great man, a paṇḍita, a mahā-bhāgavata. Do not serve me; just walk happily with me.”

97 Rāmadāsa said, “I am a lowly śūdra! To serve a brāhmaṇa is my own dharma.

98 Do not feel uneasy: I am your servant. When I serve you, my heart is filled with joy.”

99 Saying this, he carried the bag and served him, and night and day he chanted the tāraka-mantra of Raghunātha (Rāma), the mantra that delivers.

100 In this way Raghunātha came to Nīlācala; he went to the Lord’s feet and met Him with eager joy.

101 The Bhaṭṭa fell flat at His feet in obeisance, and the Lord embraced him, calling him by name: “Raghunātha!”[28]

102 He conveyed the obeisances of Miśra and Śekhara, and Mahāprabhu asked for news of them all.

103 “It is good that you have come. Go and see the lotus-eyed Lord (Jagannātha), and today you will take prasāda here with Me.”

104 Through Govinda the Lord arranged lodging for him and introduced him to Svarūpa and the other devotees.

105 In this way he stayed with the Lord for eight months, and day by day the Lord’s mercy and his joy increased.[29]

106 From time to time he would invite Mahāprabhu and cook rice and various vegetable dishes at his home.

107 Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa was highly expert in cooking; whatever he cooked became like nectar.

108 With great satisfaction the Lord would eat, and the Bhaṭṭa would take the remnants left on His plate.

109 When Rāmadāsa first met the Lord, Mahāprabhu did not show him much mercy.[30]

110 At heart he desired liberation, and he was proud of his learning. The Lord knows every heart: He is Bhagavān, who knows all.[31]

111 Rāmadāsa then settled at Nīlācala and taught the Kāvya-prakāśa to the Paṭṭanāyaka family.[32]

112 When he had stayed eight months, the Lord bade the Bhaṭṭa farewell and forbade him, saying, “Do not marry.[33]

113 Go and serve your aged mother and father, and study the Bhāgavata under a Vaiṣṇava.[34]

114 Come to Nīlācala once more.” Saying this, the Lord took the garland from His own neck and placed it on him.

115 The Lord embraced him and sent him on his way, and the Bhaṭṭa, overflowing with love, began to weep.

116 Asking leave of Svarūpa and the other devotees, and having received the Lord’s permission, the Bhaṭṭa came to Vārāṇasī.

117 For four years he served his father and mother at home, and he studied the Bhāgavata under a Vaiṣṇava paṇḍita.

118 When his father and mother departed this world at Kāśī, he became detached, left house and home and came to the Lord again.

119 As before, he stayed with the Lord for eight months, and when the eight months had passed, the Lord again gave him His order:

120 “Raghunātha, by My order go to Vṛndāvana. Go there and stay with Rūpa and Sanātana.

121 Read the Bhāgavata and always take the name of Kṛṣṇa. Very soon Kṛṣṇa, Bhagavān, will bestow His mercy on you.”

122 Saying this, the Lord embraced him, and by His mercy Raghunātha became intoxicated with love for Kṛṣṇa.

123 At a festival the Lord had received Jagannātha’s tulasī-mālā, fourteen cubits long, and a plain roll of betel (chuṭā-pāna-viḍā).[35]

124 The Lord gave him that mālā and the plain betel, and he kept the mālā, regarding it as his worshipful Deity (iṣṭa-deva).[36]

125 Taking the Lord’s permission, he went to Vṛndāvana, and on arriving there he took shelter of Rūpa and Sanātana.

126 In Rūpa Gosvāmī’s assembly he would recite the Bhāgavata, and as he read, his mind would lose its hold, overwhelmed with love.[37]

127 By the Lord’s mercy tears flowed, he trembled and his voice faltered; a mist veiled his eyes, and he could read no further.[38]

128 His voice was as sweet as the cuckoo's and rich in rāgas: in reading a single verse he would move through three or four of them.

129 When he read or heard of Kṛṣṇa's beauty and sweetness, he was overwhelmed with love and knew nothing else.

130 He surrendered himself at the feet of Govinda: Govinda's lotus feet were the treasure of his life.

131 Through his own disciple he had a temple built for Govinda, and he gave the Deity a flute, makara-shaped earrings and other ornaments.[39]

132 He would not listen to worldly talk, nor speak it with his tongue. All the eight praharas of his day passed in talks of Kṛṣṇa, worship and the like.

133 He would not let the blameworthy deeds of a Vaiṣṇava reach his ears. "Everyone serves Kṛṣṇa"—this alone he knew.[40]

134 At the time of remembrance (smaraṇa) he would tie the mālā given by Mahāprabhu together with Jagannātha's prasāda, the kaḍāra, and wear it around his neck.[41]

135 By Mahāprabhu's mercy his love for Kṛṣṇa flowed unrestrained. In this, as I have told, lies the fruit of Caitanya's mercy.

136–137 I have described Jagadānanda's journey to Vṛndāvana and, in the course of it, how the Lord heard the devadāsī's song, and how Mahāprabhu bestowed on Raghunātha the great fruit of His mercy. Thus in one chapter I have told all three stories.[42]

138 To whoever hears all these narrations with faith, Gaurahari gives the wealth of love for Kṛṣṇa.

139 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. The same verse as Ādi 4.2 (= Ādi 1.18, 17.2, Antya 2.2, 4.2, 6.2); translation as there. ↩
2. Heading in the edition: the Lord's severe renunciation. ↩
3. Heading in the edition: considering Himself a renounced ascetic (yati), the Lord reproaches him with feigned anger. ↩
4. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: mastaka-muṇḍana, literally "a shaven head," is an expression for disgrace. ↩
5. Anubhāṣya: oḍana-pāḍana means ota-prota, "warp and woof"; according to some, a pillow and a mattress. ↩
6. Heading in the edition: everyone is pleased; only Jagadānanda is grieved. ↩
7. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition (p. 1003) reads duḥkha bāhye, "his sorrow outwardly"; another reading is krodha-duḥkha, "anger and sorrow." ↩
8. Heading in the edition: the Lord consoles him with sweet words. ↩
9. Anubhāṣya: the people of Gauḍa, being slight of build, look weak; finding them alone, highwaymen keep them bound, take everything and do not let them go. According to some, the robbers, seeing that the Bengalis are clever, force them into highway robbery and never let them go. ↩
10. Mathurāra svāmī-saba, "the lords of Mathurā." Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the Caubes, the residents of Mathurā. Heading in the edition: instructions on how to behave in Mathurā, and a warning about keeping company with devotees on the path of rāga, who are free from awareness of the Lord's majesty. ↩
11. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: in their pure parental love for Kṛṣṇa they behave in ways contrary to the views of the smārtas, and you, devoted to the mood of majesty, might come to disrespect them; but their bhakti is rāgātmikā, and there must be no disrespect for the residents of Vraja, so honour them with devotion from afar. ↩
12. Heading in the edition: the prohibition against climbing Govardhana, who is non-different from Kṛṣṇa. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: if one lives in Vraja for long, one begins to see faults in its residents and one's faith weakens; those not yet on the path of rāga should visit Vraja and soon return. Govardhana is Bhagavān Himself, so one must not climb it; it is better to have darśana of Gopāla when He goes elsewhere. ↩

13. Anubhāṣya: no authoritative book says that the Lord went to Vṛndāvana again; but since in verse 70 Sanātana repairs the place chosen for Mahāprabhu, one may infer that He may later have gone there again. ↩
14. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya (on 46–47): Sanātana then lived on pieces of flatbread received as mādhukarī alms, while Jagadānanda could not do without rice day after day and so went to cook at a temple: the temples of Vraja did not cook rice and dal as prasāda. ↩
15. Heading in the edition: wearing on his head the cloth given by a sannyāsī, Sanātana comes to the Paṇḍita's lodging. ↩
16. Anubhāṣya: jāni, "making him understand," or "knowing that the Paṇḍita was full of love for Gaura." ↩
17. Heading in the edition (on 58): the humility of Sanātana Gosvāmī, who seeks no honour and honours others, and his praise of the Paṇḍita's steadfast love for Gaura. ↩
18. Heading in the edition: a paramahaṁsa on the path of rāga is forbidden to wear saffron cloth. Anubhāṣya: Vaiṣṇavas are paramahaṁsas and akiñcanas, possessing nothing but Kṛṣṇa, and need not put on the saffron dress of sannyāsīs to show their status; moreover, Śrī Gaurahari Himself accepted the dress of an ekadaṇḍī sannyāsī, and His servants, mindful of the difference between the Lord and His servant, do not think it fitting to resemble Him in dress; while Vaiṣṇavas who accept sannyāsa under the shelter of a guru who is a Vaiṣṇava paramahaṁsa often wear the saffron dress of the fourth āśrama out of humility, thinking themselves unworthy to be called paramahaṁsas. ↩
19. Anubhāṣya: maṭha, a temple. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Dvādaśāditya-ṭilā is a high mound on which stands the old, ruined temple of Śrī Madana-mohana; in Kṛṣṇa's pastimes the twelve Ādityas rose there. ↩
20. Heading in the edition: hearing a song about Kṛṣṇa, the Lord, in half-external consciousness and overwhelmed by love, sees in her singing a transcendental service to Kṛṣṇa and runs towards her. ↩
21. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition (p. 1006) reads laya, "He takes (the way through the hedge)"; another reading is haya. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: in Utkala a flower garden is called phul-bāḍī; sij shrubs grow there—manasā-sij and thorny sij—and so a hedge of them is called sijera bāḍī; bāḍī here means "a hedge." ↩

22. Heading in the edition: the Lord, filled with the mood of the āśraya (the abode of love), is the ācārya, the teacher of the world; the doctrine of "Gaura-nāgara" is refuted here; the Lord turns back. ↩
23. Heading in the edition: to touch a woman or keep company with her is death for an ācārya and a preacher, and so it must be avoided in every way; by thanking Govinda, the Lord teaches this lesson. ↩
24. Heading in the edition: the story of Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa Gosvāmī, who from his youth kept the great vow of a lifelong celibate (naiṣṭhika-brahmacārī). ↩
25. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition (p. 1007) reads vahiyā, "carrying"; another reading is sājāñā, "having packed." ↩
26. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the accounts office of the ruler of Gauḍa was called the Viśvāsa-khānā; kāyasthas worked there because the king trusted them. ↩
27. Anubhāṣya: the Kāvya-prakāśa is a famous treatise on poetics by Mammaṭa Bhaṭṭa. Heading in the edition: Rāmadāsa belonged to the Rāmānandī sampradāya (he was a Rāmāyat). Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: one who at heart desires liberation is not counted among pure Vaiṣṇavas; as a worshipper of Rāma, Rāmadāsa was "almost a Vaiṣṇava," but in those days few could distinguish the degrees of pure Vaiṣṇavas, and so he was known in the world as "a great Vaiṣṇava." ↩
28. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition (p. 1007) reads bali', "saying"; another reading is jāni, "knowing (him)." ↩
29. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition (p. 1007) reads kṛpā, "mercy"; another reading is kṛpāya, "by the mercy." Heading in the edition: eight months with the Lord; Raghunātha receives His loving mercy. ↩
30. Heading in the edition: although Rāmadāsa met the Lord, the Lord, the Indweller (antaryāmī), remains indifferent to him. ↩
31. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the desire for liberation and pride of learning—these two faults kept Rāmadāsa from becoming a pure Vaiṣṇava. ↩
32. Anubhāṣya: the Paṭṭanāyaka family—the descendants of Bhavānanda. ↩
33. Anubhāṣya: Mahāprabhu saw that Raghunātha, before entering family life, was already devoted to Kṛṣṇa, and so He forbade him to take a wife—an excess (atyāhāra)—and to enter the world of māyā, the abode of enjoyment; worldly people ruled by their wives often turn away from the service of Kṛṣṇa, and there is little hope of their attaining devotion to Hari. ↩
34. Anubhāṣya: through Raghunātha the Lord teaches that one should serve a father and mother who are Vaiṣṇavas wholly devoted to Gaura, and serve them only in a way that helps one's own service to Hari; He does not tell anyone to serve parents averse to Hari, guru and Vaiṣṇavas. The Bhāgavata is to be studied only under a bhāgavata free from anarthas: under a non-Vaiṣṇava grammarian it becomes a worldly poem. ↩

35. Heading in the edition: the Lord gives a tulasī-mālā for japa, and more. Anubhāṣya: chuṭā-pāna-viḍā—betel (tāmbūla) by itself, without spices or other additions. ↩
36. Heading in the edition: every day Raghunātha serves this mālā. ↩
37. Anubhāṣya: āulāya—the mind loses its support, grows weak, agitated and unsteady, as if mad. Heading in the edition: Raghunātha, the best of the followers of Rūpa (rūpānuga), reads the Bhāgavata before Śrī Rūpa Prabhu. ↩
38. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition (p. 1009) reads netra rodha kare bāṣpa, “tears veil the eyes”; another reading is netra kaṇṭha rodhe bāṣpa, “tears choke the eyes and throat.” Heading in the edition: the eight sāttvika-bhāvas (spiritual transformations) appear in Raghunātha. ↩
39. Heading in the edition: through his own disciple he builds the temple of Govinda and makes ornaments for the Deity. ↩
40. Anubhāṣya: “the blameworthy deeds of a Vaiṣṇava” are those that ruin one’s Vaiṣṇava nature: aversion to the service of Kṛṣṇa and association with women. Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa did not try, as a devotee of the middle stage would, to correct anyone’s faults: he knew that everyone serves Kṛṣṇa (cf. Ādi 6.83). ↩
41. Anubhāṣya: mananera kāle, “at the time of remembrance (smaraṇa).” Kaḍāra: according to the Anubhāṣya on Antya 11.66, sandal paste, the prasāda of Jagannātha (cf. Madhya 16.95). ↩
42. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition (p. 1010) reads kṛpā-mahā-phala, “the great fruit of mercy”; another reading is kṛpā-prema-phala, “love, the fruit of mercy.” ↩