“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Ādi-līlā

Chapter 6

Determining the Truth of Śrī Advaita

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the Anubhāṣya, 2026)

1 I bow to Śrī Advaita Ācārya, whose deeds are wondrous. By His grace even an ignorant person may describe His true nature.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

3 In five verses I have set out the truth of Śrī Nityānanda; now in two I speak of the greatness of Advaita Ācārya.

4 Mahā-Viṣṇu is the maker of the world, who creates it through māyā; and this Lord Advaita Ācārya is His avatāra.[1]

5 He is called Advaita because He is non-different from Hari, and Ācārya because He teaches bhakti. I take shelter of Him, the Lord Advaita Ācārya, who has descended as a devotee.[2]

6 Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is the Lord Himself; His greatness lies beyond the reach of the jīva.

7 Mahā-Viṣṇu carries out the creation of the world and all that goes with it, and Advaita Ācārya is His direct avatāra.

8 That Puruṣa creates and maintains the world through māyā, and in play He brings forth endless universes.

9 By His will He manifests endless forms, and in one of them He enters each universe.

10 Advaita is a part (aṁśa) of that Puruṣa, and there is no difference between Them at all: He is a particular body of the Puruṣa, and the two are never apart.[3]

11 Taking pradhāna, the material basis of the world, Advaita assists the Puruṣa, and by His will He fashions millions of universes.[4]

12 Advaita is the good of the whole world and the abode of all auspicious qualities. His conduct is ever auspicious, and His name is Maṅgala, “the Auspicious”.[5]

13 Taking millions of parts, millions of potencies and millions of avatāras, the Puruṣa creates the whole world.

14 Māyā has two aspects, the efficient cause (nimitta) and the material cause (upādāna): as the efficient cause it is called māyā, and as the material cause, pradhāna.

15 In the same way the Lord, the Puruṣa, assumes two forms and creates the universe with these two causes, the efficient and the material.

16 The Puruṣa Himself is the efficient cause of the world, and in the form of Advaita, Nārāyaṇa becomes its material cause.

17 As the efficient cause He casts His glance upon māyā; as the material cause, Advaita creates the universe.

18 Although Sāṅkhya holds pradhāna to be the cause, the world can never come into being from inert matter.[6]

19 The Lord infuses His own creative power into pradhāna, and by that power the world is fashioned.

20 Advaita Ācārya creates millions of universes, and in each of them He dwells in one of His forms as its sustainer.[7]

21 Advaita is the principal limb (aṅga) of Śrī Nārāyaṇa; and in the Bhāgavatam the word ‘aṅga’ means ‘aṁśa’, a partial manifestation.[8]

22 “Are You not Nārāyaṇa? For You are the Self of all embodied beings, O Lord, and the witness of all the worlds. Nārāyaṇa is Your portion — so called because His abode is the waters born of Nara; and that too is true, not Your māyā.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.14)[9]

23 This verse says that the Lord’s aṅga, His aṁśa, is full of consciousness and bliss and has no connection with māyā.[10]

24 Why call Him ‘aṅga’ and not ‘aṁśa’? Because ‘aṅga’, a limb, is closer and more intimate than ‘aṁśa’, a part.

25 Advaita, the abode of all good qualities, is a part of Mahā-Viṣṇu. He is non-different from the Lord, and so the name Advaita, “Non-dual”, fits Him in full.[11]

26 As once He created the whole universe, so now, having descended, He has established bhakti.

27 He delivered the jīvas by giving them devotion to Kṛṣṇa, and He explained the Gītā and the Bhāgavatam in the light of bhakti.

28 He has no work but teaching bhakti; therefore His name became Advaita Ācārya.[12]

29 He is the guru of the Vaiṣṇavas, honoured by the whole world. Joined together, these two names became Advaita Ācārya.

30 Because He is the limb and the part of the Lotus-eyed Lord, He bears the beautiful name Kamalākṣa, “Lotus-eyed”.[13]

31 The Lord’s associates attain a form like His (sārūpya): like Nārāyaṇa, they are four-armed and clad in yellow.

32 Advaita Ācārya is the foremost part of the Lord; His truth, His name and His qualities are all wondrous.

33 It was His offering of tulasī leaves and His roar that brought Caitanya into the world together with His associates.[14]

34 Through Him the Lord spread the kīrtana, and through Him the Lord delivered the world.

35 The glory of Ācārya Gosāñi’s qualities is boundless. Where can the jīva, a mere worm, find its end?

36 Ācārya Gosāñi is the principal limb (aṅga) of Caitanya, and His other limb is Nityānanda Prabhu.[15]

37 The Lord’s lesser limbs (upāṅga) are Śrīvāsa and the other devotees; they are like His hands, face and eyes, and like His disc and other weapons.

38 With them Caitanya Prabhu performs His pastimes, and with them He spreads what He desires.

39 Knowing that He is a disciple of Mādhavendra Purī, the Lord regards Ācārya Gosāñi as His guru.[16]

40 In His worldly pastimes the Lord keeps the bounds of dharma: with praise and devotion He bows at the Ācārya's feet.

41 The Ācārya knows Caitanya Gosāñi as His Master, and He thinks of Himself as His servant.

42 In the happiness of that feeling He forgets Himself, and He teaches the jīvas, "Become servants of Kṛṣṇa!"[17]

43 Such is the ocean of bliss in feeling oneself Kṛṣṇa's servant that the happiness of Brahman, multiplied ten million times, is not equal to a single drop of it.[18]

44 "I and Nityānanda are servants of Caitanya. Nowhere is there bliss equal to the mood of a servant."

45 Lakṣmī, His dearest beloved, dwells upon His heart, yet she too humbly begs for the happiness of service.

46 In the mood of service His associates rejoice — Brahmā, Śiva, Nārada and others, Śuka, and Sanātana with his brothers.[19]

47 Nityānanda Avadhūta is the foremost of all; in His love of serving Caitanya He became mad.[20]

48–49 Śrīvāsa, Haridāsa, Rāmadāsa, Gadādhara, Murāri, Mukunda, Candraśekhara and Vakreśvara — all these are learned men of the highest greatness, and service to Caitanya makes every one of them mad.

50 So they sing, dance and laugh aloud, and they teach everyone: “Become servants of Caitanya!”

51 “Caitanya Gosāñi regards Me as His guru, yet I feel Myself His servant.”

52 This is one wondrous power of love for Kṛṣṇa: it gives elders, equals and juniors alike the mood of a servant.[21]

53 Hear the proof of this in the explanations of scripture, firmly confirmed by the experience of great souls.

54–55 What to speak of others? In Vraja Kṛṣṇa has no elder equal to Nanda Mahāśaya. In his pure parental love he has no thought that Kṛṣṇa is God; yet love makes even him feel something like a servant.[22]

56 He too begs at Kṛṣṇa’s feet for attachment and devotion; his own words are the proof of it.

57–58 “Listen, Uddhava: Kṛṣṇa is truly my son. But if it seems to you that He is God, still let all the workings of my mind rest in Him; let my thoughts be fixed on your God, Kṛṣṇa.”[23]

59 “May the workings of our minds take shelter at Kṛṣṇa’s lotus feet, may our words utter His names, and may our bodies be given to bowing down to Him and serving Him.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.66)[24]

60 “Wherever we may wander, driven by our karma and the Lord’s will, by our good deeds and gifts may we have love for Kṛṣṇa, the Lord.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.67)

61 All the host of Kṛṣṇa's friends in Vraja, led by Śrīdāmā, know nothing of His majesty: their love is pure friendship.[25]

62 They wrestle with Kṛṣṇa and climb on His shoulders, and yet, in the mood of servants, they tend His feet.[26]

63 "Some of them massaged the feet of that great soul, while others, their sins destroyed, fanned Him with fans." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.15.17)[27]

64–65 Even the beloved gopīs of Vraja, dearer to Kṛṣṇa than anyone else, whose foot-dust Uddhava prays for, think of themselves as His maidservants.

66 "O You who take away the distress of the people of Vraja! O Hero, whose smile destroys the pride of Your own! O friend, we are Your maid-servants: be kind to us, and show us women Your beautiful lotus face." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.31.6)[28]

67 "O gentle one! Alas, Nanda's son now lives in Mathurā. Does He remember His father's house, His kinsmen and the cowherd boys? Does He ever speak of us, His maidservants? When will He place on our heads His arm, fragrant as aguru?" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.21)[29]

68–69 Let alone them: Śrīmatī Rādhikā, who surpasses them all in every respect and by whose love Kṛṣṇa is bound at every moment — even She has become His maidservant and serves His feet.[30]

70 "O Master, O Beloved, O dearest one! Where are You, where are You, O mighty-armed? O friend, show Yourself to Me, Your wretched maidservant!" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.30.39)[31]

71 In Dvārakā all the queens, led by Rukmiṇī, also think of themselves as Kṛṣṇa's maidservants.

72 "Knowing that I was performing austerities in the hope of touching His feet, He came with His friend and took my hand. And so I am the sweeper of His house." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.83.11)[32]

73 "By austerity and by turning away from every attachment, we have become, in truth, maidservants in the house of Him who delights in Himself." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.83.39)[33]

74 What to speak of others? Consider Baladeva Mahāśaya, whose mood is full of pure friendship, parental love and the rest.[34]

75 Even He thinks of Himself as a servant. Is there anyone without the mood of a servant of Kṛṣṇa?

76 Śeṣa-Saṅkarṣaṇa, with His thousand mouths, assumes ten bodies and serves Kṛṣṇa.[35]

77 In the endless universes Rudra is a part of Sadāśiva; he is a guṇa-avatāra, the crown of all the gods.[36]

78 He longs for the service of Kṛṣṇa; Śiva says at every moment, "I am Kṛṣṇa's servant."

79 Mad with love for Kṛṣṇa, overwhelmed and naked, he sings of Kṛṣṇa's qualities and pastimes and dances without end.

80 Whatever the mood — of father, mother, elder or friend — by the very nature of love for Kṛṣṇa it brings forth the mood of service.[37]

81 Kṛṣṇa alone is served by all; He is the Lord of the world. All others are His servants and followers.

82 That Kṛṣṇa has descended as the Lord Caitanya; therefore all others are His servants.

83 Some accept Him and some do not, yet all are His servants. One who does not accept Him is destroyed by that very sin.[38]

84 "I am Caitanya's servant, Caitanya's servant! I am Caitanya's servant, the servant of His servants!"

85 Saying this, He danced and sang with deep roars, and a moment later the Ācārya sat down, grown calm.

86 The conception of oneself as a devotee has its root in Śrī Balarāma, and all His parts follow Him in that mood.[39]

87 One avatāra of His is Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa, who at every moment thinks of Himself as a devotee.

88 Another avatāra of His is the glorious Lakṣmaṇa, who served Śrī Rāma at every moment.

89 The avatāra of Saṅkarṣaṇa who lies in the Causal Ocean likewise bears the mood of a devotee in His heart.

90 A distinct manifestation of His is Advaita Ācārya, whose work at every moment is devotion to the Lord in body, mind and speech.

91 In words He says, "I am Caitanya's attendant," and in His mind He thinks at every moment, "I am His devotee."

92 With His body He serves, offering water and tulasī, and by spreading bhakti He has delivered the whole world.

93 Śeṣa-Saṅkarṣaṇa, who holds up the earth, expands Himself into many bodies to serve Kṛṣṇa.[40]

94 All these are avatāras of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, yet we always see Them conduct Themselves as devotees.

95 The scriptures call all of Them devotee-avatāras, and the position of a devotee-avatāra is above all others.[41]

96 Kṛṣṇa alone is the whole (aṁśī); the avatāras are His parts (aṁśa). And between the whole and the part we see the conduct of elder and younger.[42]

97 In the mood of the elder, the whole is conscious of being the Master; in the mood of the younger, the part thinks of Himself as a devotee.[43]

98 Greater than equality with Kṛṣṇa is the position of a devotee, for Kṛṣṇa's devotee is dearer to Him than His own self.[44]

99 Kṛṣṇa regards His devotee as greater than Himself, and many words of scripture prove it.

100 "Neither Brahmā, born of Me, nor Śaṅkara, nor Saṅkarṣaṇa, nor Śrī, nor even My own self is as dear to Me as you are." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.14.15)[45]

101 In equality with Kṛṣṇa there is no tasting of His sweetness; it is in the mood of a devotee that one relishes it.[46]

102 This is the conclusion of the scriptures and the experience of the wise; foolish people do not know the glory of this mood.

103–104 Accepting the mood of devotees, Balarāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Advaita, Nityānanda, Śeṣa and Saṅkarṣaṇa drink the nectar of Kṛṣṇa's sweetness; intoxicated with that happiness, They know nothing else.[47]

105 Let alone others: Śrī Kṛṣṇa Himself became thirsty to drink His own sweetness.

106 He strives to taste His own sweetness, but without the mood of a devotee it cannot be tasted.

107 So, accepting the mood of a devotee, He descended in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, full of every mood (bhāva).[48]

108 In the moods of various devotees He drinks His own sweetness. I have explained this conclusion before.[49]

109 All the avatāras have a claim to the mood of a devotee; there is no happiness greater than that of the devotee's mood.

110 The original devotee-avatāra is Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa, and among the devotee-avatāras Advaita too is counted.[50]

111 The glory of Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is boundless: it was by His roar that Caitanya descended.

112 By spreading saṅkīrtana He delivered the whole world; by Advaita's grace people obtained the treasure of prema.

113 Who can tell the endless glory of Advaita? I write only what I have heard from great souls.

114 Millions of times I bow at the Ācārya's feet. May He not count any offence of mine in this.

115 Your glory is as fathomless as millions of oceans; to speak of its measure is a great offence.

116 Glory, glory, glory to Śrī Advaita Ācārya! Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya and to the venerable Nityānanda!

117 In two verses I have set out the truth of Advaita. Now, O devotees, hear something of the Pañca-tattva.

118 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. The same verse as Ādi 1.12. The edition ascribes verses 6.4–6.5 to the diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara («শ্রীস্বরূপগোস্বামি-কড়চায় শ্লোক»; heading: "explanation of the twelfth and thirteenth of the first fourteen verses of the Ādi"). Anubhāṣya: Mahā-Viṣṇu, the maker of the world, is the shelter of the efficient cause (nimitta), and His avatāra, the Lord Advaita Ācārya, is the shelter of the material cause (upādāna). ↩
2. The same verse as Ādi 1.13. Anubhāṣya: He is Advaita because He is non-different from Hari, from the Viṣṇu-tattva; He is Ācārya because He instructs others in bhajana. ↩
3. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: one and the same māyā is called pradhāna as the material cause and māyā as the efficient cause. According to these two functions Mahā-Viṣṇu abides in two forms: in one, abiding in prakṛti, He is the efficient cause of the world — the form of Viṣṇu; in the other, abiding in pradhāna, He is Advaita in the form of Rudra. Therefore Advaita is in no way different from the Puruṣa; only Their bodies differ. ↩

4. The edition's heading: "The Deity who presides over pradhāna, the material cause of the world." ↩
5. Anubhāṣya: Śrī Advaita is Mahā-Viṣṇu, and He is the Ācārya; His life, turned towards service, brings good to all; He is no material being and no shelter of the material guṇas. There were people of demoniac nature, bewildered by māyā and devoid of bhakti, who could not understand Him as the non-dual Viṣṇu and, clinging to the doctrine of bare non-duality (kevalādvaita), only pretended to follow Him; by His māyā the Ācārya let them feed their pride — and even this punishment of the faithless is nothing but auspicious conduct. Some say that Śrī Advaita's other name was Maṅgala. ↩
6. Anubhāṣya (on 6.15) examines the Sāṅkhya doctrine at length and, following the Vedānta-sūtra (2.2.1–10) and Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa's Govinda-bhāṣya, shows that inert pradhāna can be neither the material nor the efficient cause of the world, for a varied creation is impossible without a conscious principle. It adds that the Kapila who founded the Sāṅkhya opposed to the Vedas is not Lord Kapila, the son of Kardama and avatāra of Vāsudeva, but another — a jīva of the line of Agni, bewildered by māyā. On 6.18–6.19 the Anubhāṣya refers to Ādi 5.58–5.66 and Madhya 20.259–261, 271, 276. ↩
7. The edition's heading: "The two forms of Advaita Prabhu." The form in which the Puruṣa enters each universe (6.9) is Garbhodakaśāyī Viṣṇu. ↩
8. The Anubhāṣya refers to Ādi 3.67 ("'aṅga' means 'aṁśa'"). ↩
9. The same verse as Ādi 2.30 and 3.68 (Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: "see Ādi 2.30", where the Anubhāṣya explains the three meanings of the name Nārāyaṇa). Here the author cites it for the word aṅgam, "part": Nārāyaṇa is Your aṅga, that is, Your aṁśa (6.21). ↩
10. The edition's heading: "Whether aṅga or aṁśa, beyond māyā." The Anubhāṣya refers to Ādi 3.69–3.70. ↩
11. The edition's heading: "The meaning of the name 'Advaita'." Pūrṇa nāma — "a full name", a name true in every respect. ↩
12. Anubhāṣya (on 6.26–6.28): although Advaita Prabhu is Viṣṇu-tattva, the One who is served, He has no work but the good of the souls — awakening in them the desire to serve. Had He shown His pastimes only as the One who is served, the pleasure-seeking people of the world would have imitated Him and become godless adherents of bare non-duality, or worshippers of themselves as God; seeing this, He displayed the pastime of a servant of Viṣṇu, and that is His being the Ācārya. As for the wicked who defile the holy place and dress of the

Ācārya and, instead of serving the Lord, dance the dance of sense-pleasure, the Ācārya utterly rejects them. ↩

13. The edition's heading: "The meaning of the name 'Kamalākṣa'." Avataṁsa — "a crown, an ornament": Kamalākṣa is the loveliest of names. ↩
14. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «তুলসীদলে» ("with tulasī leaves"; another reading: «তুলসীজলে», "with tulasī and water"). The edition's heading: "Advaita Prabhu calls Mahāprabhu down." On 6.33–6.34 the Anubhāṣya refers to Ādi 3.91 and 3.95–3.108, where Advaita worships Kṛṣṇa with tulasī leaves and Ganges water. ↩
15. The edition's heading: "One limb of Gaura is Advaita, the other is Nitāi." On 6.36–6.38 the Anubhāṣya refers to Ādi 3.71–3.74. ↩
16. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Advaita Prabhu is a disciple of Mādhavendra Purī, and His godbrother Īśvara Purī is Mahāprabhu's guru; that is why Mahāprabhu honours the Ācārya as a guru. In truth Śrī Caitanya is the Lord of all and Advaita is His servant. Anubhāṣya: Mādhavendra Purī is one of the gurus of the sampradāya of Śrī Madhvācārya, and his disciples are Īśvara Purī and Śrī Advaita; the line of succession is cited from the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā. ↩
17. Anubhāṣya: accepting the mood of a devotee, Mahā-Viṣṇu sets aside the sense of His own majesty and finds bliss in serving the Lord as His duty; in that bliss of service His sense of being the enjoyer recedes. By His own example He moves the souls to serve Kṛṣṇa at every moment. ↩
18. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the happiness of Brahman is the happiness of the notion of non-difference, "I am Brahman." The Anubhāṣya cites the Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu (1.1.38): "Even if the bliss of Brahman were multiplied a parārdha times, it would not equal an atom of the ocean of the happiness of bhakti." ↩
19. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «নারদাদি» ("Nārada and others"; another reading: «নারদার»). The edition's heading: "(2) The associates of Viṣṇu, and Brahmā, Śiva, the four Sanas, Nārada, Śuka and others too, are servants of Kṛṣṇa." ↩
20. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «হইল» (another reading: «হইলা»); the sense is the same. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: āgala — "the foremost". ↩
21. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: "elders" are those related to Kṛṣṇa in parental love, "equals" — the friends, "juniors" — those beneath them; love for Kṛṣṇa gives all three the mood of service. So the elders, equals and juniors of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya are all His servants. ↩
22. The edition's heading: "(5) Even in Nanda Mahārāja's parental love there is service to Kṛṣṇa." Guru here means "elder" (Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya on

6.52). ↩

23. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya on 6.58: “O Uddhava, even if you think that Kṛṣṇa is God, may my mind rest in that Kṛṣṇa.” Nanda prays for attachment to the Kṛṣṇa whom Uddhava calls God — this is the “semblance of service” (6.55) of which the author speaks. ↩
24. Anubhāṣya: Nanda and the other cowherds speak these words to Uddhava with deep love for Kṛṣṇa when, having met the people of Vraja, he is about to set out on his way back. ↩
25. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: friendship is of two kinds — with knowledge of Kṛṣṇa’s majesty, and “pure” (kevala), unmixed; Śrīdāmā and the other friends of Vraja have pure friendship: they do not know His majesty. ↩
26. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «তাঁরা» (another reading: «তারা»); the sense is the same. ↩
27. Anubhāṣya: so the cowherd boys played with Rāma and Kṛṣṇa in Tālavana, before Dhenukāsura was slain. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the other friends, in the mood of friendship, fanned Him with fans made of leaves. ↩
28. Anubhāṣya: this is the song of the gopīs as they searched for Kṛṣṇa when He had vanished during the rāsa dance. Vraja-janārti-han — “who destroys the pain of separation of those attached to Kṛṣṇa”; vīra — “of magnificent form”; bhaja — “be gracious to us”; yoṣitām goes with “show us women (the gopīs)”. The Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya reads it otherwise: “O supreme hero among women.” ↩
29. As in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «কিঙ্করীণাং» (another reading: «কিঙ্করিণাং»). Anubhāṣya: this is the citra-jalpa of Śrīmatī Rādhikā, addressed to the bee when Uddhava came to Vraja; ārya-putra is the son of Nanda; “kinsmen” — Parjanya, Upananda and others, “cowherds” — Subala, Arjuna, Śrīdāmā and others; “maidservants” — Lalitā, Viśākhā and Rādhā’s other friends. The Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya takes “gentle one” as Uddhava. ↩
30. The edition’s heading: “(8) Even Śrī Rādhā Herself is a maidservant of Kṛṣṇa.” ↩
31. Anubhāṣya: so Śrīmatī Rādhikā weeps when, during the rāsa dance, Kṛṣṇa had left the other gopīs and gone away with Her alone, and then, when She, proud of His love, said She could walk no further and asked Him to carry Her, He vanished. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: “O Master, O Beloved, O Dearest, O mighty-armed! I am Your most wretched maidservant — bring Me near You!” ↩
32. Anubhāṣya: these are the words of Kālindī, Kṛṣṇa’s queen, to Draupadī, when the women of the Yādavas and the Kauravas met at Samanta-pañcaka;

"His friend" is Arjuna. ↩

33. Anubhāṣya: in the same place Queen Lakṣmaṇā speaks to Draupadī: having renounced every attachment — to happiness, wealth, children, and even to liberation — we have become maidservants in the house of Kṛṣṇa, who delights in Himself. ↩
34. Anubhāṣya: although Baladeva is the elder brother and therefore worthy of worship, He knows Himself as the servant of His younger brother, Kṛṣṇa. The fourfold expansion of Mahā-Vaikuṇṭha is a manifestation of this self-luminous Baladeva, and even so exalted a position abides in service to Kṛṣṇa. As far as a being has turned away from Kṛṣṇa's service, so far has it invited misfortune. ↩
35. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the ten bodies are the umbrella, slippers, bed, pillow, garments, ornaments, resting place, dwelling, sacred thread and throne. ↩
36. Anubhāṣya (following the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta): the scriptures speak of Rudra in two ways. Śiva who is the Lord's own part (svāṁśa) is counted among the lords (īśvara-koṭi), while Rudra the destroyer is in some kalpas a particular jīva, like Brahmā. Hara, the abode of the Puruṣa, is in essence almost free of the guṇas and only appears changeable through his contact with tamas — as milk turns into curd by contact with a culture and yet is not other than milk (Brahma-saṁhitā 5.45). Sadāśiva, who dwells in Śivaloka within Vaikuṇṭha and is free from tamas, is a vilāsa of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. ↩
37. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: whatever the mood one has, the mood of service within every mood must be acknowledged. The edition's heading: "(13) Service to Kṛṣṇa runs through all four rasas — mādhurya, vātsalya, sakhya and dāsya." ↩
38. Anubhāṣya: service to Śrī Caitanya is the very nature (svarūpa-dharma) of the jīva, an atom of spirit. Forgetting it, the bound soul is drawn to material enjoyment; yet even then, lording it over things, it remains an unworthy servant of Caitanya. ↩
39. The edition's heading: "Baladeva and all His partial avatāras think of themselves as Kṛṣṇa's servants." ↩
40. Anubhāṣya: kāya-vyūha — the ten bodies (see 6.76). ↩
41. Anubhāṣya: when the Lord descends into the world to display His majesty, the image of the devotee-avatāra is the most precious and needful for the good of the souls and for awakening bhajana in them. Looking with worldly eyes at avatāras in whom majesty predominates, souls often come to grief: many fools call themselves "Vāsudeva" and the like and after death are born as jackals. Pride, intoxicating the bound soul with a longing for divine majesty, turns it into a Māyāvādī. ↩

42. The edition's heading: "The elder-and-younger conduct of the partial avatāras towards Kṛṣṇa, the whole." ↩
43. Anubhāṣya: a part is called aṁśa, and that of which it is a part, aṁśī; the whole is the Master (prabhu), the part is the devotee, and their relation is that of elder and younger: the elder is called the Master, the younger the devotee. The whole is Kṛṣṇa; the parts are Baladeva and the manifestations of Mahā-Viṣṇu of the same nature as He. Kṛṣṇa knows Himself as the Master, Baladeva and the others know themselves as devotees. The edition's heading: "The elder partial avatāra sees the younger whole as his Master, and the younger partial avatāra thinks of himself as the servant of the elder whole" — as Baladeva before Kṛṣṇa, and Lakṣmaṇa before Rāma. ↩
44. Anubhāṣya: the devotee's position — service to Kṛṣṇa — is higher than any claim to equality with Him, for Kṛṣṇa loves His servants more than He loves Himself. The best witness to this is the Bhāgavatam (9.4.68): "The saints are My heart, and I am the heart of the saints. They know no one but Me, and I know no one but them." ↩
45. Anubhāṣya: Kṛṣṇa speaks to Uddhava, the best of His devotees; ātmā — "I Myself, even My own form". ↩
46. Anubhāṣya (on 6.101–6.102): in the liberations of sārūpya and the rest, as in the position of Viṣṇu-tattva, equality with Kṛṣṇa keeps the sweetness of His service from being tasted as it is in the devotee's mood; the devotee claims no equality with Kṛṣṇa as an enjoyer, and therefore he fully realises His sweetness, as if savouring it. Ordinary people, out of folly and greed for mastery, are by nature unable to feel the summit of service; only the experienced, deeply immersed in the scriptures, understand this subtle truth. ↩
47. The edition's heading: "Nityānanda, Rāma and the other forms of Viṣṇu taste Kṛṣṇa's sweetness by accepting the devotee's mood." ↩
48. Anubhāṣya (on 6.107–6.108): to taste the five rasas — śānta, dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and mādhurya — Śrī Gaurahari accepted the moods of devotees, and so He is full of every bhāva; taking up the moods of devotees of different kinds, Gauracandra drinks His own sweetness. On 6.106: to know how His devotees taste His sweetness, He Himself became a devotee. ↩
49. Before — in Ādi 4: on 6.105–6.106 the Anubhāṣya refers to Ādi 4.137–4.158. ↩
50. Anubhāṣya: Advaita Prabhu, though He is Viṣṇu-tattva, displayed the pastime of a servant befitting an associate of Śrī Caitanya; that the Viṣṇu-tattva thinks of Himself as a servant is what makes Him a devotee-avatāra. Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa, who abides in Mahā-Vaikuṇṭha as the Lord of the fourfold expansion, is the original devotee-avatāra; from Him comes Mahā-Viṣṇu in the waters of the Causal Ocean, and Śrī Advaita Ācārya is the avatāra of that Mahā-Viṣṇu. All the manifestations of Saṅkarṣaṇa are engaged in the service of Kṛṣṇa, the original form, and therefore Advaita Prabhu is the servant of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa, a devotee-avatāra. ↩