“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Ādi-līlā

Chapter 10

The Description of the Branches of the Main Trunk

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the Anubhāṣya, 2026)

1 Again and again I bow to the devotees who, like bees, drink the honey of Śrī Caitanya’s lotus feet. Even one as low as a dog, if he takes shelter of them in any way at all, comes to share in the fragrance of those feet.[1]

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra, and glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

3 This gardener, this tree, is beyond all telling. Now hear the names of its principal branches.

4 Caitanya Gosāñi’s associates are a vast host, and no one can determine who among them is greater and who is lesser.[2]

5 Many great souls have listed them all, yet none has been able to set them in order of seniority.

6 Therefore, bowing down to them all, I shall simply name them. Please do not count this as a fault in me.

7 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the immortal tree of love. I worship His dear devotees, who are the branches of that tree and give everyone the fruit of love for Kṛṣṇa.[3]

8 Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita and Śrī Rāma Paṇḍita — two brothers, two branches — are renowned throughout the world.[4]

9 Śrīpati and Śrīnidhi are their two brothers, and the four brothers had menservants, maidservants and a whole household.

10 All of them are counted among the offshoots of these two branches. In their house Mahāprabhu held saṅkīrtana constantly.[5]

11 With their whole family they served Śrī Caitanya, and apart from Gauracandra they knew no god or goddess.

12 Another great branch bears the name Ācāryaratna; his associates are its branches and offshoots.

13 Ācāryaratna's own name is Śrī Candraśekhara. In his house the Lord danced in the form of the Goddess, the Ādi-śakti.[6]

14 Puṇḍarīka Vidyānidhi is a great branch; the Lord Himself would weep as He spoke his name.[7]

15 Another great branch is Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosāñi. He is the very form of Lakṣmī, and none is his equal.[8]

16 His disciples and their disciples are the offshoots of this branch, and so it is with all the other branches and offshoots.

17 Vakreśvara Paṇḍita was a servant very dear to the Lord. In a single unbroken ecstasy he could dance for twenty-four praharas — three days and nights.

18 While he danced, Mahāprabhu Himself would sing, and once Vakreśvara clasped the Lord's feet and said:

19 "O moon-faced Lord, give me ten thousand Gandharvas! Let them sing while I dance — that would be my joy."

20 The Lord replied, "You are one of My wings. If I had another like you, I would fly up into the sky."

21 Paṇḍita Jagadānanda is the Lord's very life. He is renowned as a manifestation of Satyabhāmā.[9]

22 Out of love he longed to surround the Lord with care and comfort, but the Lord, guarding His renunciation and wary of what people would say, never accepted it.

23 So the two of them would fall into little quarrels. I shall tell the whole story of his love later on.

24 Rāghava Paṇḍita was one of the Lord's first followers, and his chief branch is Makaradhvaja Kara.[10]

25 His sister Damayantī, a dear maidservant of the Lord, prepared provisions for Him all year round.

26 Filling bags with all those provisions, Rāghava would carry them secretly to the Lord.

27 All year round the Lord accepted them, and they became famous as "Rāghava's bags."[11]

28 I shall describe those provisions in detail later. Hearing of them, the devotees shed streams of tears.

29 Paṇḍita Gaṅgādāsa was extremely dear to the Lord. Simply to remember him destroys all bondage.

30 Śrī Purandara Ācārya was an associate of Śrī Caitanya; Gaurāṅgasundara called him Father.[12]

31 Dāmodara Paṇḍita, another branch, was so fierce in his love that he even rebuked the Lord.

32 I shall tell the story of that rebuke in detail later. Pleased with it, the Lord sent him to Nadīyā.[13]

33 His younger brother, Śaṅkara Paṇḍita, is a branch known by the name "the Lord's footrest."

34 Sadāśiva Paṇḍita set all his hope on the Lord's feet, and at first Nityānanda lived in his house.

35 Pradyumna Brahmacārī was a worshipper of Śrī Nṛsiṁha, and the Lord gave him the name Nṛsiṁhānanda.

36 Nārāyaṇa Paṇḍita was a most generous soul who knew nothing but the feet of Śrī Caitanya.

37 Śrīmān Paṇḍita, a branch and the Lord's personal servant, held the torch whenever the Lord danced.

38 Śuklāmbara Brahmacārī was most fortunate: the Lord Himself would beg his rice, or snatch it from him, and eat it.[14]

39 Nandana Ācārya is a branch renowned throughout the world, for the two Lords hid in his house.

40 Śrī Mukunda Datta, another branch, was the Lord's fellow student; when he sang kīrtana, Caitanya Gosāñi danced.

41 Vāsudeva Datta was the Lord's great-souled servant; even with a thousand mouths one could not tell his virtues.

42 He wished to take upon himself the sins of every living being in the world and suffer in hell himself, if only they could be set free.[15]

43 Haridāsa Ṭhākura, another branch, lived a wondrous life: without fail he chanted three hundred thousand names every day.

44 His virtues are endless; I can give only a glimpse of them. It was he whom Advaita Ācārya fed from the plate of the memorial offering, the śrāddha-pātra.[16]

45 The waves of his virtues were like Prahlāda's: even when the Yavanas beat him, he did not so much as frown.

46 When he attained perfection, Caitanya Prabhu took his body in His arms and danced in great joy.

47 Vṛndāvana dāsa has described his pastimes; what remains I shall tell later.

48 All the people of Kulīna-grāma are his offshoots; Satyarāja and others received his mercy.[17]

49 Śrī Murāri Gupta is a branch, a storehouse of love; whenever the Lord heard his humble words, His heart would melt.[18]

50 He accepted no gifts and took no one's money, but supported his family by his own calling.[19]

51 All whom he treated with kindness were freed from both diseases — the disease of the body and the disease of worldly existence.

52 Śrīmān Sena was a foremost servant of the Lord and knew nothing but the feet of Śrī Caitanya.

53 Śrī Gadādhara dāsa is a branch above all others; he made even the Kazis utter the name of Hari.[20]

54 Śivānanda Sena was an intimate servant of the Lord; all who went to see the Lord went in his company.

55 Every year he took the Lord's devotees with him to Nīlācala, caring for them all along the way.[21]

56 The Lord shows His mercy to the devotees in three ways: by being with them in person (sākṣāt), by entering someone with His power (āveśa), and by appearing where He is not present in person (āvirbhāva).

57 In His direct presence all the devotees see Him alike; in the body of Nakula Brahmacārī there was the Lord's āveśa.[22]

58 His earlier name was Pradyumna Brahmacārī; afterwards the Lord gave him the name Nṛsiṁhānanda.

59 In him Śrī Caitanya manifested Himself (āvirbhāva). The Lord has many such wonderful, unearthly ways.

60 Śivānanda Sena tasted all these rasas; I shall describe this bliss in detail later.[23]

61 The offshoots of Śivānanda are his own people — his sons, his servants and others, all devoted to the service of Śrī Caitanya.

62 Caitanya dāsa, Rāmadāsa and Karṇapūra, the three sons of Śivānanda, were heroic devotees of the Lord.[24]

63 Śrī Vallabha Sena and Śrīkānta Sena, related to Śivānanda, were wholly devoted to the Lord.[25]

64 Govindānanda, dear to the Lord, was a great devotee, and Śrī Govinda Datta was the leading singer in the Lord's kīrtana.[26]

65 Śrī Vijaya dāsa was the Lord's copyist; he wrote out many books for Him.[27]

66 The Lord named him Ratnabāhu, "Jewel-armed." Akiñcana Kṛṣṇadāsa, too, was dear to the Lord.

67 Śrīdhara, who sold cups of banana bark, was a dear servant of the Lord, and the Lord was always joking with him.[28]

68 Every day the Lord took banana pith, banana flowers and fruit from him, and once He drank water from his broken iron pot.

69 Bhagavān Paṇḍita was a servant very dear to the Lord; once Kṛṣṇa had dwelt within his body.

70 Jagadīśa Paṇḍita and Hiraṇya Mahāśaya received the compassionate Lord's mercy when He was still a child.

71 In these two houses, on the day of Ekādaśī, the Lord begged for the food offered to Viṣṇu and ate it Himself.[29]

72 Puruṣottama and Sañjaya, two great souls, were the Lord's pupils in grammar.[30]

73 Vanamālī Paṇḍita is a branch renowned throughout the world; he saw a golden club and plough in the Lord's hands.

74 Buddhimanta Khān was very dear to Śrī Caitanya; obedient to Him all his life, he was among His chief servants.[31]

75 Garuḍa Paṇḍita constantly chanted the auspicious holy name, and by the power of the name even a snake's poison could not harm him.

76 Gopīnātha Siṁha was a servant of Śrī Caitanya, and the Lord would jokingly call him Akrūra.

77 Devānanda, the reciter of the Bhāgavata, is an offshoot of Vakreśvara's branch. By Vakreśvara's mercy he received from the Lord the devotional meaning of the Bhāgavata.[32]

78–79 Mukunda dāsa, Śrī Raghunandana, Narahari dāsa, Cirañjīva and Sulocana, all of Śrīkhaṇḍa, are great branches, abodes of Śrī Caitanya's mercy. Everywhere they give away the fruits and flowers of love.[33]

80 From Kulīna-grāma came Satyarāja, Rāmānanda, Yadunātha, Puruṣottama, Śaṅkara and Vidyānanda.[34]

81 Vāṇīnātha Vasu and all the other villagers were servants of Śrī Caitanya, and He was the treasure of their lives.

82 The Lord said, “Even a dog of Kulīna-grāma is dear to Me — what to speak of its people!

83 “The good fortune of the people of Kulīna-grāma is beyond words: even the Ḍoma who herds the pigs there sings of Kṛṣṇa.”

84 Anupama Vallabha, Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana are counted as the three branches on the western side of the tree.[35]

85 Among them Rūpa and Sanātana are the great branch, and Anupama, Jīva, Rājendra and others are its offshoots.[36]

86 By the gardener’s wish these branches grew so vast that they covered all the western lands.

87 They spread as far as the banks of the Sindhu and the Himālaya, over Vṛndāvana, Mathurā and every holy place.[37]

88 The fruits of love from these two branches flooded everything, and tasting them the people grew mad with love.

89 The people of the west were all foolish and of degraded conduct; there the two brothers taught the good conduct of bhakti.[38]

90 Guided by the scriptures they recovered the lost holy places, and in Vṛndāvana they spread the worship of the Deities.[39]

91 Raghunātha dāsa was a dear servant of Mahāprabhu; giving up everything, he made his home at the Lord's feet.[40]

92 The Lord placed him in the care of Svarūpa, with whom he rendered the Lord confidential service.[41]

93 For sixteen years he served the Lord intimately, and when Svarūpa departed from this world, he came to Vṛndāvana.[42]

94 He thought, "In Vṛndāvana I shall see the feet of the two brothers, and then at Govardhana I shall give up my body by throwing myself from the hill."

95 With this resolve he came to Vṛndāvana and bowed down at the feet of Rūpa and Sanātana.

96 But the two brothers would not let him die; they kept him close by as their own third brother.

97 From his lips the two brothers constantly heard all the pastimes of Mahāprabhu, both outer and inner.

98 He gave up food and water, to say nothing of anything else, taking only two or three palas of buttermilk.

99 Every day he offered a thousand prostrations, chanted a hundred thousand names and bowed down to two thousand Vaiṣṇavas.

100 Night and day he served Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa within his mind, and for one prahara he spoke of the life of Mahāprabhu.[43]

101 At dawn, noon and evening he bathed in Rādhā-kuṇḍa without fail, and he embraced the Vaiṣṇavas of Vraja.

102 He spent seven and a half praharas a day in the practice of bhakti and slept for four daṇḍas — on some days not even that.

103 His way of practice is wonderful to hear of. These two, Rūpa and Raghunātha, are my masters.[44]

104 How each of them met the Lord I shall describe in detail later.[45]

105 Śrī Gopāla Bhaṭṭa is a branch of the very highest order; he would converse about love with Rūpa and Sanātana.[46]

106 Śaṅkarāraṇya is one branch of the Ācārya's tree, and Mukunda, Kāśīnātha and Rudra are recorded as its offshoots.[47]

107 Śrīnātha Paṇḍita received the Lord's mercy; seeing his service to Kṛṣṇa, the three worlds were captivated.[48]

108 Jagannātha Ācārya was a dear servant of the Lord; at the Lord's command he made his home by the Gaṅgā.[49]

109 Other branches are Kṛṣṇadāsa Vaidya, Paṇḍita Śekhara, Kavicandra and the kīrtana singer Ṣaṣṭhīvara;

110 Śrīnātha Miśra, Śubhānanda, Śrīrāma, Īśāna, Śrīnidhi, Śrī Gopīkānta, Bhagavān Miśra;

111 Subuddhi Miśra, Hṛdayānanda, Kamala-nayana, Maheśa Paṇḍita, Śrīkara, Śrī Madhusūdana;

112 Puruṣottama, Śrī Gālīma, Jagannātha dāsa, Śrī Candraśekhara Vaidya, Dvija Haridāsa;[50]

113 Rāmadāsa, Kavidatta, Śrī Gopāla dāsa, Bhāgavatācārya, Ṭhākura Sāraṅga dāsa;[51]

114 Jagannātha Tīrtha, the brāhmaṇa Śrī Jānakīnātha, Gopāla Ācārya and the brāhmaṇa Vāṇīnātha.

115 Govinda, Mādhava and Vāsudeva were three brothers, and when they sang kīrtana, Caitanya and Nitāi danced.[52]

116 Rāmadāsa Abhirāma was a treasury of loving friendship. He lifted a log that it took sixteen men to carry and made a flute of it.[53]

117 At the Lord's command Nityānanda went to Gauḍa, and by the Lord's command three devotees went with Him:

118 Śrī Rāmadāsa, Mādhava and Vāsudeva Ghoṣa. Govinda stayed with the Lord, and was overjoyed to do so.[54]

119 Other branches are Bhāgavatācārya, Cirañjīva, Śrī Raghunandana, Śrī Mādhavācārya, Kamalākānta and Śrī Yadunandana.[55]

120 Jagāi and Mādhāi received the Lord's great mercy; these two brothers bear witness to His name "Deliverer of the Fallen."[56]

121 I have given a brief account of the devotees of Gauḍa; Śrī Caitanya's devotees are endless and cannot be counted.

122 All these devotees were also with the Lord in Nīlācala, and in both places they served Him in many ways.[57]

123 Now I shall speak briefly of the Lord's devotees who were with Him only in Nīlācala.

124–126 Of all the devotees who lived with the Lord in Nīlācala, two were foremost, the Lord's very heart: Paramānanda Purī and Svarūpa Dāmodara. With them were Gadādhara, Jagadānanda, Śaṅkara, Vakreśvara, Dāmodara Paṇḍita, Ṭhākura Haridāsa, Raghunātha Vaidya and Raghunātha dāsa.[58]

127 These and other great devotees, His companions from before, stayed in Nīlācala and served the Lord there.

128 And all the devotees who lived in Gauḍa came every year to Nīlācala to see the Lord.

129 Now I shall list the devotees who first met the Lord in Nīlācala.

130 One great branch is Sārvabhauma Bhaṭṭācārya, and another is his sister's husband, Śrī Gopīnātha Ācārya.[59]

131 Then come Kāśī Miśra, Pradyumna Miśra and Bhavānanda Rāya, whose company gave the Lord great joy.[60]

132 Embracing him, the Lord said, "You are Pāṇḍu, and your sons are the five Pāṇḍavas:

133 "Rāmānanda Rāya, Gopīnātha Paṭṭanāyaka, Kalānidhi, Sudhānidhi and Vāṇīnātha Nāyaka.

134 "These five sons of yours are dear to Me, and between Rāmānanda and Me there is a difference of body alone."

135–136 Other branches are King Pratāparudra, Kṛṣṇānanda of Orissa, Paramānanda Mahāpātra, Śivānanda of Orissa, Bhagavān Ācārya, Brahmānanda Bhāratī, Śrī Śikhi Māhiti and Murāri Māhiti.

137 Mādhavī Devī, the sister of Śikhi Māhiti, is counted among the maid-servants of Śrī Rādhā.[61]

138 Brahmacārī Kāśīśvara was a disciple of Īśvara Purī, and Śrī Govinda was his dear follower.[62]

139 At the time of his departure both received his order, came to Nīlācala and met the Lord.

140 Out of regard for their connection with His Guru, the Lord honoured them both, yet in obedience to the Guru's order He gave them His service.[63]

141 The Lord gave Govinda the service of His person, and when He went to see Jagannātha, Kāśīśvara walked ahead of Him.

142 Through the dense crowd the Lord passed untouched, for the mighty Kāśīśvara pushed the people aside and cleared the way.

143 Rāmāi and Nandāi, both servants of the Lord, served constantly alongside Govinda.[64]

144 Every day Rāmāi filled twenty-two jars of water, and Nandāi served as Govinda directed.

145 A pure Kulīna brāhmaṇa named Kṛṣṇadāsa went with the Lord on His journey to the south.[65]

146 Balabhadra Bhaṭṭācārya, a true devotee, served the Lord as His brahmacārī on the journey to Mathurā.

147 Baḍa Haridāsa and Choṭa Haridāsa, two kīrtana singers, stayed by Mahāprabhu's side.

148 There were also Rāmabhadra Ācārya, Siṁheśvara of Orissa, Tapana Ācārya, Raghu and Nīlāmbara;

149 Siṅgābhaṭṭa, Kāmābhaṭṭa, Dantura Śivānanda, and Kamalānanda, who had been a dear servant of the Lord in Gauḍa.

150 Acyutānanda, the son of Advaita Ācārya, stayed in Nīlācala in the shelter of the Lord's feet.

151 Nirloma Gaṅgādāsa and Viṣṇudāsa also lived with the Lord in Nīlācala.

152–153 In Vārāṇasī the Lord had three devotees: Candraśekhara the physician, Tapana Miśra and his son Raghunātha Bhaṭṭācārya. When the Lord came to Kāśī after seeing Vṛndāvana, 154 He stayed for two months in Candraśekhara's house and for two months took His meals in the house of Tapana Miśra.

155 As a boy Raghunātha served the Lord, cleaning up after His meals and massaging His feet.

156 When he grew up he went to the Lord in Nīlācala and stayed for eight months, on some days cooking for Him.

157 Then, at the Lord's command, he went to Vṛndāvana and stayed near Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī.

158 Rūpa Gosvāmī heard the Bhāgavatam from him, and by the Lord's mercy he was mad with love for Kṛṣṇa.[66]

159 Thus Śrī Caitanya's devotees are countless; I write of only a few, for they cannot be fully told.[67]

160 Millions upon millions of twigs grow on every branch; its disciples and their disciples are its smaller twigs.

161 All of them are laden with the flowers and fruits of love, and they have flooded the three worlds with the waters of love for Kṛṣṇa.

162 The power and glory of each branch are endless; even He who has a thousand mouths cannot find their limit.

163 I have told of Mahāprabhu's devotees only briefly; even the Thousand-mouthed One could not tell of them all.

164 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. Anubhāṣya: the "dog" is one absorbed in enjoyment and without faith in the Lord's devotees; to "share in the fragrance" of the feet is to receive devotion to Gaura. ↩
2. Heading in the edition: "Among Gaura's devotees there is no division into higher and lower." ↩
3. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the wish-fulfilling tree of love is Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Himself, and His dear devotees are its branches, which give the fruit of love for Kṛṣṇa. ↩
4. In the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition the branches are listed under numbered headings: (1 — a, b, c, d) Śrīvāsa, Śrī Rāma and their two brothers; (2) Candraśekhara;

(3) Puṇḍarīka Vidyānidhi, and so on; the offshoots of a branch are marked with letters (20a — Satyarāja, an offshoot of Haridāsa's branch). The ordinal numbers of the branches in the translation follow these headings. Anubhāṣya (after the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā): Śrīvāsa was Nārada Muni, and Śrī Rāma the sage Parvata, Nārada's friend; Śrīvāsa's wife Mālinī was Ambikā, Kṛṣṇa's nurse; Śrīvāsa's niece Nārāyaṇī was the mother of Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa. After Mahāprabhu took sannyāsa, Śrīvāsa left Navadvīpa and settled in Kumārahaṭṭa. ↩

5. Heading in the edition: "Their undivided devotion to Gaura." ↩
6. Anubhāṣya: in Candraśekhara's house a sacred drama was performed in which Mahāprabhu danced as the Goddess (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya 18); the place is now known as Vraja-pattana. Candraśekhara was with Mahāprabhu in Kāṭoyā at His sannyāsa and, returning to Navadvīpa, told everyone of it. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: according to some books, Candraśekhara was the husband of the sister of Mahāprabhu's mother. ↩
7. Anubhāṣya (after the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā): Puṇḍarīka Vidyānidhi was Vṛṣabhānu, the father of Śrī Rādhā; Mahāprabhu called him "Father" and gave him the name Premanidhi. A disciple of Śrī Mādhavendra Purī, he was the guru of Gadādhara Paṇḍita and the friend of Svarūpa Dāmodara; his home was in Cāṭigrām. ↩
8. Anubhāṣya (after the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā): Gadādhara Paṇḍita is Śrī Rādhā, the queen of Vṛndāvana; Svarūpa Dāmodara saw in him the Lakṣmī of Vraja. His branch is described at the end of Ādi 12. ↩
9. Anubhāṣya: in Navadvīpa he joined the Lord's kīrtanas at Śrīvāsa's house and in the home of Candraśekhara; after the Lord's sannyāsa, on the way to Orissa, he carried His staff and begged alms for Him. ↩
10. Anubhāṣya: Rāghava Paṇḍita's home was in Pāṇihāṭi on the bank of the Gaṅgā; his samādhi is there, and the Deity Śrī Madana-mohana is still served nearby. Makaradhvaja Kara also lived in Pāṇihāṭi. ↩
11. The bags are described in Antya 10. ↩
12. Anubhāṣya (from the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya 5): when the Lord came to Pāṇihāṭi, Purandara Ācārya hurried to Him; the Lord, calling him Father, embraced him in ecstatic love, and seeing the Lord, he wept uncontrollably. ↩
13. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the rebuke is described in Antya 3. Anubhāṣya: at the Lord's wish Dāmodara Paṇḍita went to Gauḍa to be with Mother Śacī, and for the Ratha-yātrā he would come to Purī again with the devotees (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya 9). ↩

14. Anubhāṣya: in Navadvīpa Mahāprabhu would joyfully snatch and eat the rice that Śuklāmbara had gathered by begging (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya 16 and 25). ↩
15. His prayer is described in Madhya 15.159–180 (Anubhāṣya). ↩
16. The śrāddha-pātra is offered to the most worthy brāhmaṇa; Advaita Ācārya offered it to Haridāsa, who was born in a Muslim family (Antya 3). ↩
17. Anubhāṣya: Satyarāja Khān was the son of Guṇarāja Khān of Kulīna-grāma and the father of Rāmānanda Vasu. Haridāsa Ṭhākura spent a cāturmāsya in Kulīna-grāma and blessed the whole Vasu family. Mahāprabhu asked Satyarāja to bring silk ropes for Jagannātha every year and explained to him who is a Vaiṣṇava, a better Vaiṣṇava and the best of Vaiṣṇavas (Madhya 15–16). ↩
18. Anubhāṣya: Murāri Gupta, the author of the Śrī Caitanya-carita, was born of a physician family of Śrīhaṭṭa and later lived in Navadvīpa; he was older than Mahāprabhu. In his house the Lord showed His form as Varāha, and to him He revealed Himself as Śrī Rāma. ↩
19. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: ātma-vṛtti — the calling proper to one's own class: Murāri Gupta was a physician (kavirāja). ↩
20. Anubhāṣya: Gadādhara dāsa lived at Eṛiyādaha on the Gaṅgā and was one of Nityānanda's chief helpers in preaching in Gauḍa. The local Kazi opposed the kīrtana; one night Gadādhara came to him singing and asked him to say the name of Hari. The Kazi replied, "I will say 'Hari' tomorrow," and Gadādhara, full of love, cried out, "Why tomorrow? You have just said 'Hari'!" He is the radiance of Śrī Rādhā and is counted among the associates of both Gaura and Nityānanda. ↩
21. Anubhāṣya: Śivānanda Sena lived in Kumārahaṭṭa (Hālisahar); every year he guided the devotees of Gauḍa to Nīlācala and bore all the costs of the journey (Madhya 16.19–26). ↩
22. Anubhāṣya: according to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (74) it is the other way round: the Lord's āvirbhāva was in Nakula Brahmacārī and His āveśa in Pradyumna Miśra. The Lord always manifests Himself (āvirbhāva) in four places: in Śacī's house, in Nityānanda's dancing, in Śrīvāsa's kīrtana and in Rāghava's house (Antya 2.34–35). ↩
23. Anubhāṣya: Śivānanda Sena experienced and tasted all three kinds of the Lord's mercy — sākṣāt, āveśa and āvirbhāva (Antya 2). ↩
24. Anubhāṣya: Caitanya dāsa, the eldest, wrote a commentary on the Kṛṣṇa-karṇāmṛta. Karṇapūra, also called Paramānanda dāsa or Purī dāsa, a disciple of Śrīnātha Paṇḍita, wrote the Ānanda-vṛndāvana-campū, the *Alaṅkāra-

kaustubha*, the drama Śrī Caitanya-candrodaya, the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā and other works. ↩

25. Anubhāṣya: Śrīvallabha and Śrīkānta were the sons of Śivānanda's sister. When on the way to Purī Nityānanda scolded Śivānanda and pushed him with His foot, Śrīkānta took offence, left the party and reached the Lord first; the all-knowing Lord consoled him and told Govinda to give him His remnants while he stayed in Nīlācala (Antya 12). At the Ratha-yātrā both brothers sang in Mukunda's party (Madhya 13). ↩
26. Anubhāṣya: in the kīrtanas of Navadvīpa Govinda Datta was the lead singer (mūla-gāyaka); his home was at Sukhacara near Khaḍadaha. ↩
27. Anubhāṣya: Vijaya dāsa, a scribe of Navadvīpa, was one of the nava-nidhi (nine treasures); in Śuklāmbara's house the Lord showed him special mercy (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya 25). ↩
28. Anubhāṣya: Śrīdhara was a poor brāhmaṇa of Navadvīpa who lived by his banana grove; the Lord bargained and quarrelled with him playfully over his goods, showed him mercy during the sāta-prahariyā manifestation, drank water from his old leaking iron pot at the time of the Kazi's subjugation, and on the night before His sannyāsa ate the gourd Śrīdhara had brought. According to Karṇapūra he is Kusumāsava, one of the twelve cowherd boys. ↩
29. Anubhāṣya: the story is told in the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi 4. According to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, in Kṛṣṇa's pastimes they were the wives of the sacrificing brāhmaṇas (yajña-patnīs), and now the Lord begged for their food and ate it on Ekādaśī. ↩
30. Anubhāṣya: from the Caitanya-bhāgavata one might take "Puruṣottama Sañjaya" for one person, the son of Mukunda Sañjaya, in whose house Nimāi taught His pupils; by calling Puruṣottama and Sañjaya two students and two great souls, Kavirāja Gosvāmī corrects that understanding. ↩
31. Anubhāṣya: Buddhimanta Khān, a wealthy devotee of Navadvīpa, bore all the expenses of the Lord's second marriage, to Viṣṇupriyā, the daughter of Sanātana Miśra, and gathered the clothes and ornaments for the drama in Candraśekhara's house. ↩
32. In the edition the heading is "(5a) the branch of Devānanda Paṇḍita," that is, an offshoot of Vakreśvara's branch (5). Anubhāṣya: Devānanda, who sought liberation, used to recite the Bhāgavata; once his students drove out Śrīvāsa, who was weeping at the reading, and Mahāprabhu sternly rebuked Devānanda for his disrespect to a Vaiṣṇava. Later Vakreśvara Paṇḍita stayed in his house and sang of Kṛṣṇa; by his mercy Devānanda came to understand the Lord's glory, and the Lord told him to explain the Bhāgavata in the light of bhakti

(Madhya 1: the mercy at Kuliyā). In Kṛṣṇa's pastimes he is Bhāguri Muni, the paṇḍita of Nanda's court. ↩

33. Anubhāṣya: Mukunda dāsa was the elder brother of Narahari Sarakāra Ṭhākura, and Raghunandana was Mukunda's son; Raghunandana's descendants still live in Śrīkhaṇḍa, four miles west of Kāṭoyā. Narahari's disciple was Locana dāsa Ṭhākura, the author of the Caitanya-maṅgala. The sons of Cirañjīva were Rāmacandra Kavirāja, a disciple of Śrīnivāsa Ācārya, and the poet Govinda dāsa Kavirāja. Mukunda's wonderful love for Kṛṣṇa is described in Madhya 15.113–131. ↩
34. In the edition they are offshoots of Haridāsa's branch (20a–20e), like all the people of Kulīna-grāma (10.48). Anubhāṣya: all of them belonged to the Vasu family, devotees of Kṛṣṇa skilled in enacting His pastimes and followers of Haridāsa Ṭhākura; in the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā Rāmānanda Vasu and Satyarāja are Kalakaṇṭhī and Sukaṇṭhī. ↩
35. Anubhāṣya: Anupama was the younger brother of Śrī Sanātana and Śrī Rūpa and the father of Śrī Jīva; his earlier name was Vallabha, and Mahāprabhu gave him the name Anupama. He worshipped Śrī Rāma and saw Mahāprabhu as Śrī Rāmacandra Himself. In Śaka 1436, on the way to Nīlācala, he left his body on the bank of the Gaṅgā. ↩
36. Anubhāṣya: Śrī Jīva, the son of Śrī Vallabha, studied all the scriptures in Kāśī under Madhusūdana Vācaspati and then took shelter of Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana in Vṛndāvana; after their departure he was the foremost ācārya of the Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇavas and sent Śrīnivāsa, Narottama and Śyāmānanda to Gauḍa with the books of the Gosvāmīs. ↩
37. Heading in the edition: "The deliverance of all Bhārata." ↩
38. Headings in the edition to 10.89–90: "(1) establishing the conduct of bhakti," "(2) recovering the lost holy places and (3) preaching the worship of the Deities." Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: through contact with the Muslims the people of the western regions had lost proper conduct; by the mercy of Rūpa and Sanātana they turned to righteous ways. ↩
39. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the lost holy places are Rādhā-kuṇḍa and others; the Deities are Śrī Madana-mohana, Śrī Govinda, Śrī Gopīnātha and others — seven in all. ↩
40. Anubhāṣya: Raghunātha dāsa was born about Śaka 1416 in the village of Kṛṣṇapura near Saptagrāma, in the house of Govardhana, the younger brother of Hiraṇya Majumadāra, in a Kāyastha family. According to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā he is Rasa-mañjarī (others say Rati-mañjarī or Bhānumatī). ↩

41. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: confidential service is that to which outsiders have no access — all that the Lord needs at the time of His bath, His meals, His rest and His kīrtana; in 10.93 it is called intimate service (antaraṅga-sevā). ↩
42. Heading in the edition: “After the departure of Śrī Gaura and Svarūpa — to Vṛndāvana.” ↩
43. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: service in the mind — meditation on the service of the eight periods of the day (aṣṭa-kālīya), together with chanting the holy name. ↩
44. Heading in the edition: “The author regards himself as the eternal servant of Rūpa and Raghunātha.” Anubhāṣya: Kṛṣṇadāsa Kavirāja Gosvāmī called Śrī Raghunātha dāsa and Śrī Rūpa “my master” (prabhu), and that is why at the end of every chapter he writes, “Hoping for the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Raghunātha…”; the opinion that Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa is meant here and was Kavirāja’s guru has no evidence. ↩
45. Raghunātha’s meeting with the Lord is told in Antya 6 (Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya). ↩
46. Anubhāṣya: Gopāla Bhaṭṭa, a brāhmaṇa from the south, was a friend of Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana; in his name Sanātana compiled the Hari-bhakti-vilāsa; he made the first draft of the Ṣaṭ-sandarbha, which Śrī Jīva later put in order, and he installed the Deity of Śrī Rādhā-ramaṇa. His disciples were Śrīnivāsa Ācārya and Gopīnātha Pūjārī. He forbade Kavirāja Gosvāmī to write about him in this book, and so only his name is given here. ↩
47. Anubhāṣya: Śaṅkarāraṇya is Viśvarūpa, the elder brother of Mahāprabhu (according to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, Saṅkarṣaṇa); he took sannyāsa and left this world in Śaka 1432 at Pāṇḍarapura (Madhya 9.299–300). Mukunda is Mukunda Sañjaya, in whose house Viśvambhara taught; Kāśīnātha is the brāhmaṇa who arranged the Lord’s marriage with Viṣṇupriyā; Rudra is Rudra Paṇḍita. ↩
48. Anubhāṣya: Śrīnātha Paṇḍita lived in Kāñcaḍāpāḍā and installed the Deity Śrī Kṛṣṇa-rāya there; he was the guru of Kavi Karṇapūra. ↩
49. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: on the bank of the Alakanandā within Navadvīpa he founded a village called Gaṅgā-vāsa. ↩
50. Anubhāṣya: Candraśekhara Vaidya, a scribe by profession, is the one in whose house the Lord stayed in Kāśī (10.152–154). ↩
51. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Bhāgavatācārya lived in Varāhanagara, where his hermitage is still called “Bhāgavatācārya’s seat”; Ṭhākura Sāraṅga dāsa was from Māmagāchi. The heading in the edition has “Śārṅga Ṭhākura.” Anubhāṣya: Bhāgavatācārya’s name was Raghunātha; the Lord gave him that title on hearing him recite the Bhāgavatam (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya 5). ↩

52. Anubhāṣya: the Ghoṣa brothers — Govinda, Mādhava and Vāsudeva — came of a Kāyastha family of northern Rāḍha; Mādhava Ghoṣa was a matchless kīrtana singer, very dear to Nityānanda. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Govinda installed the Deity of Gopīnātha at Agradvīpa. ↩
53. In the edition the heading is “(84) Ṭhākura Abhirāma.” Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Abhirāma lived at Khānākula-Kṛṣṇanagara. ↩
54. Heading in the edition to 10.117: “Abhirāma, Mādhava and Vāsu Ghoṣa preach the holy name in Gauḍa with Nitāi.” ↩
55. In the edition’s heading Bhāgavatācārya, Cirañjīva and Raghunandana are marked with their earlier numbers (75, 41, 39a) — they are the same persons named above; the new branches are (85) Mādhavācārya, (86) Kamalākānta and (87) Yadunandana. Anubhāṣya: Kamalākānta is Kamalākānta Viśvāsa of Advaita’s party; Yadunandana Ācārya belongs to Advaita’s branch (Antya 6.160–169). ↩
56. Anubhāṣya (after the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā): Jagāi and Mādhāi are Jaya and Vijaya, the gatekeepers of Vaikuṇṭha, born of their own will in Navadvīpa. Brāhmaṇas by birth, they lived as robbers and were steeped in every sin, but by the mercy of Mahāprabhu and Nityānanda they received the holy name and became great devotees. ↩
57. Heading in the edition: “Their service to Gaura both in Gauḍa and in Oḍra.” ↩
58. Heading in the edition: “The most eminent — (1) Śrī Paramānanda and (2) Śrī Svarūpa.” For the devotees of Nīlācala the numbering of the branches in the headings starts afresh. Anubhāṣya: Raghunātha Vaidya (Upādhyāya) came to Nityānanda at Pāṇihāṭi and in His company showed the mood of Revatī; later he lived in Purī by the sea (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya 5). ↩
59. Anubhāṣya: Sārvabhauma Bhaṭṭācārya, whose name was Vāsudeva, came from Vidyānagara and taught Vedānta in Nīlācala. At first he expounded Vedānta to Mahāprabhu according to Śaṅkara, but then learned its true meaning from Him and saw His six-armed form (Madhya 6); his Caitanya-śataka is full of devotion to Gaura. Gopīnātha Ācārya was a brāhmaṇa of Navadvīpa and a companion of the Lord. ↩
60. Anubhāṣya: Kāśī Miśra was the king’s priest, and in his house the Lord lived in Nīlācala. Pradyumna Miśra, an Oriyā and a great devotee, was sent by the Lord to hear Kṛṣṇa-kathā from Rāmānanda Rāya (Antya 5). Bhavānanda Rāya, the father of Rāmānanda Rāya, lived near Ālālanātha; before, he was King Pāṇḍu. ↩

61. Anubhāṣya: the Lord counted her among Rādhikā's associates (Antya 2.104–106); in the world, He said, there are three and a half worthy souls — Svarūpa Gosāñi, Rāmānanda Rāya and Śikhi Māhiti, and his sister is the "half." ↩
62. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Govinda and Kāśīśvara were disciples of Īśvara Purī; when he left this world, they came to Mahāprabhu in Nīlācala at his order. Anubhāṣya: in the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā they are Bhṛṅgāra and Bhaṅgura, servants in Vṛndāvana. For the Lord's service Govinda did not hesitate to step over His body, though for his own sake he would never have done so (Madhya 10). ↩
63. Heading in the edition: "Honouring the relation to the Guru, and by the rule 'the Guru's order is not to be questioned,' He accepted their service." ↩
64. Anubhāṣya: in the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā they are Payoda and Vārida, who looked after the water in Vraja; they served the Lord under Govinda's guidance. ↩
65. In the edition's heading he is "Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa, the brāhmaṇa"; he is described in Madhya 7 and 9. ↩
66. Anubhāṣya (after Antya 13): when sending him away, the Lord embraced him and gave him Jagannātha's long tulasī garland and betel. In Śrī Rūpa's assembly he recited the Bhāgavatam in a voice as sweet as the cuckoo's, singing each verse in three or four rāgas; through his disciple he had the temple of Govinda built. He neither heard nor spoke of worldly matters and spent all eight praharas of the day in talks of Kṛṣṇa and worship. According to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (185) he is Rāga-mañjarī, who dwells in a hut by Rādhā-kuṇḍa. ↩
67. Heading in the edition: "Branch by branch and offshoot by offshoot, the countless devotees of Gaura deliver the three worlds." ↩