“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Madhya-līlā

Chapter 6

The Deliverance of Sārvabhauma

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the Anubhāṣya, 2026)

1 I bow down to Gauracandra, the Lord of all, who turned Sārvabhauma, his heart hardened by false arguments, into a great abode of devotion.[1]

2 Glory, glory to Gauracandra! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura![2]

3 Absorbed in ecstasy, the Lord went to the temple of Jagannātha, and when He saw Jagannātha, He grew restless with love.

4 He ran forward to embrace Jagannātha, but, overwhelmed with love, He fell down in the temple.

5 By providence Sārvabhauma saw Him there, and he stopped the temple superintendent (paḍichā) from striking Him.[3]

6 Seeing the Lord’s beauty and the transformations of love in His body, Sārvabhauma was amazed beyond measure.

7 For a long time the Lord did not regain consciousness, and the time came to offer food to Jagannātha. Then Sārvabhauma considered what to do.

8 With the help of his disciples and the temple superintendents he had Him carried to his house and laid Him down in a pure place.[4]

9 There was no breath and no movement of the abdomen; seeing this, the Bhaṭṭācārya grew anxious.

10 He brought a fine wisp of cotton and held it before the Lord's nostrils, and when he saw the cotton stir slightly, he grew calmer.

11 Sitting there, the Bhaṭṭācārya reflected: "This is a sāttvika transformation of great love for Kṛṣṇa.

12 This swoon, called pralaya, is sūddīpta sāttvika, ecstasy at its most blazing, and such blazing ecstasy (sūddīpta bhāva) is found only in eternally perfect devotees.[5]

13 This transformation belongs to one who has adhirūḍha-mahābhāva. That I should see it in a human body is astonishing indeed!"[6]

14 While the Bhaṭṭācārya sat there thinking this, Nityānanda and the others arrived at the Lion Gate.

15 There they heard people saying to one another, "A sannyāsī came here and saw Jagannātha.[7]

16 He fell unconscious and showed no sign of life, and Sārvabhauma took Him to his own house."

17 Hearing this, they all understood that it was Mahāprabhu's doing. Just then Gopīnātha Ācārya came there.

18 He was a resident of Nadīyā and the son-in-law of Viśārada. A devotee of Mahāprabhu, he knew the truth about the Lord.[8]

19 He had known Mukunda before, and he was surprised to see him there.

20 On seeing him, Mukunda bowed down, and Gopīnātha embraced him and asked for news of the Lord.

21 Mukunda said, “The Lord has come here, and we have all come with Mahāprabhu.”

22 The Ācārya bowed down to Nityānanda Gosāñi and, meeting them all, asked again and again for news of the Lord.

23 Mukunda said, “After taking sannyāsa, Mahāprabhu came to Nīlācala and brought us all with Him.

24 He left us and went on ahead for darśana, and we have followed in search of Him.

25 From what we heard people saying among themselves, we have gathered that the Lord is in Sārvabhauma’s house.

26 At the sight of Jagannātha the Lord fell unconscious in love, and Sārvabhauma took Him to his own house.

27 Just as I was wishing to meet you, by providence I saw you at that very moment.

28 Come, let us all go to Sārvabhauma’s house. After seeing the Lord, we shall have darśana of Jagannātha.”[9]

29 Hearing this, Gopīnātha joyfully took them all to Sārvabhauma’s house.

30 When he came to Sārvabhauma's house and saw the Lord, the Ācārya felt both sorrow and joy.

31 The Ācārya informed Sārvabhauma and brought them all inside, and the master of the house bowed down to Nityānanda Gosāñi.

32 He greeted each of them as was fitting, and all rejoiced at the sight of the Lord.

33 Sārvabhauma sent them all for darśana and gave them his own son, Candaneśvara, to go with them.

34 Seeing Jagannātha, everyone was filled with joy, and Nityānanda Prabhu was overcome with ecstasy.

35 Together they held Him and steadied Him, and a servant of Jagannātha brought them His garland and prasāda.

36 Receiving the prasāda, they all rejoiced, and they came back to Mahāprabhu.

37 They all chanted the holy name loudly together, and in the third prahara of the day, after noon, the Lord regained consciousness.

38 With a roar He rose up, crying, "Hari! Hari!", and Sārvabhauma joyfully took the dust of His feet.

39 Sārvabhauma said, "Quickly finish Your midday duties. Today I shall offer You mahā-prasāda as alms."

40 The Lord bathed in the sea and quickly returned. He washed His feet and sat down on His seat.

41 Sārvabhauma had a great quantity of prasāda brought, and Mahāprabhu happily took His meal.

42 Rice and excellent vegetable dishes were served on golden plates, and the Lord ate together with His devotees.

43 Sārvabhauma served them himself. The Lord said, “Give Me the lāphrā, the plain mixed vegetables,[10]

44 and give the cakes and sweet drinks to all of them.” With folded hands the Bhaṭṭācārya said to them all:

45 “Today you must all relish the mahā-prasāda, just as Jagannātha has eaten it.”

46 Saying this, he fed them all the cakes and sweet drinks, and when they had eaten he gave them water to rinse their mouths.

47 Then, taking leave, he went with Gopīnātha Ācārya to eat, and after eating he came back to the Lord.

48 Saying, “Namo nārāyaṇāya”, he bowed down to the Lord, and Gosāñi replied, “Kṛṣṇe matir astu — may your mind be fixed on Kṛṣṇa!”[11]

49 Hearing this, Sārvabhauma reflected, and from His words he understood that He was a Vaiṣṇava sannyāsī.

50 Sārvabhauma said to Gopīnātha Ācārya, “I would like to know about Gosāñi’s life before He took sannyāsa.”[12]

51 Gopīnātha Ācārya said, “His home is in Navadvīpa. There lived a man named Jagannātha, whose title was Miśra Purandara.

52 This is his son, named Viśvambhara. He is also the grandson of Nīlāmbara Cakravartī, his daughter's son."

53 Sārvabhauma said, "Nīlāmbara Cakravartī is known as a fellow student of Viśārada.

54 Miśra Purandara, I know, was honoured by my father, Viśārada, and for his sake I revere them both."

55 Sārvabhauma was glad to find this connection with Nadīyā, and in his pleasure he began to speak to Gosāñi.

56 "You are worthy of honour by Your very nature, and on top of that You are a sannyāsī. Therefore I am Your own servant."[13]

57 Hearing this, Mahāprabhu remembered Śrī Viṣṇu and spoke some humble words to the Bhaṭṭācārya.[14]

58 "You are the teacher of the whole world and the benefactor of all people. You teach Vedānta, and you are a helper of sannyāsīs.

59 I am a young sannyāsī who does not know good from bad. I have taken shelter of you, and I regard you as My Guru.

60 I have come here for your company alone. Please take care of Me in every way.

61 Today I fell into great danger, and you rescued Me from it."[15]

62 The Bhaṭṭācārya said, "Do not go alone for darśana. Go with me or with my men."

63 The Lord said, “I shall not go inside the temple. I shall stand beside the Garuḍa pillar and take darśana from there.”

64 Sārvabhauma said to Gopīnātha Ācārya, “Take Gosāñi for darśana.

65 My maternal aunt’s house is a secluded place. Give Him lodging there and see to everything He needs.”

66 Gopīnātha took the Lord there and gave Him lodging, and he arranged everything for Him — a water pot and all the rest.

67 The next day Gopīnātha went to the Lord and took Him to see Jagannātha rise from His bed.

68 Then he came with Mukunda Datta to Sārvabhauma, and the Bhaṭṭācārya said to him:

69 “This sannyāsī is humble by nature and beautiful to see, and my affection for Him keeps growing.[16]

70 In which sampradāya has He taken sannyāsa? And what is His name? I would like to hear.”

71 Gopīnātha said, “His name is Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, and His guru is the greatly blessed Keśava Bhāratī.”

72 Sārvabhauma said, “His name is excellent, but the Bhāratī sampradāya is of middling rank.”[17]

73 Gopīnātha said, “He has no regard for externals, so He has no need of a higher sampradāya.”[18]

74 The Bhaṭṭācārya said, “He is in the full bloom of youth. How will He keep the vows of sannyāsa?

75 I shall teach Him Vedānta constantly and lead Him onto the path of renunciation and non-dualism.[19]

76 If He agrees, I shall give Him the sannyāsa cloth (yoga-paṭṭa) once again, perform the rites, and bring Him into a higher sampradāya.”[20]

77 Hearing this, Gopīnātha and Mukunda were both saddened, and Gopīnātha Ācārya began to speak.

78 “Bhaṭṭācārya, you do not know His greatness. In Him the signs of Godhood reach their utmost limit.

79 That is why He is renowned as the Supreme Lord. But what the wise perceive lies beyond the reach of the ignorant.”

80 The disciples said, “By what proof do you call Him the Lord?” The Ācārya said, “By the signs of the Lord as the wise define them.”[21]

81 A disciple said, “We establish the truth of the Lord by inference.” The Ācārya replied, “The Lord is not known by inference.[22]

82 Inference is no proof where the truth of the Lord is concerned; without His mercy no one can know Him.

83 Only one who has received even a particle of the Lord’s mercy can know the truth of the Lord.

84 “O Lord, only one who is favoured with even a trace of the grace of Your two lotus feet can know the truth of Your greatness as Bhagavān; no one else can know it, however long he may search." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.29)[23]

85–86 Although you are the teacher of the world, learned in the scriptures, and there is no scholar on earth equal to you, not a particle of the Lord's mercy has come to you. That is why you cannot know the truth of the Lord.[24]

87 It is not your fault; the scriptures themselves say that the truth of the Lord can never be known by scholarship and the like."[25]

88 Sārvabhauma said, "Ācārya, speak with care. What proof is there that the Lord's mercy is upon you?"[26]

89 The Ācārya said, "Knowledge of the Reality comes from the Reality Itself: Its truth is known only by Its mercy, and that is the proof.[27]

90 All the signs of the Lord are present in His body, and you yourself have seen His great absorption in love.

91 Even so, you do not know Him as the Lord, and you take all this for the Lord's māyā, mere worldly behaviour.[28]

92 A person turned away from God sees Him and yet does not see Him." Hearing this, Sārvabhauma smiled and said:

93 "We are only discussing this together in search of the truth; do not be angry. I speak from the standpoint of scripture, so take no offence.[29]

94 Caitanya Gosāñi is a great devotee, but in this age of Kali there is no avatāra of Viṣṇu.

95 That is why Viṣṇu is called Triyuga, ‘He who appears in three ages’. The scriptures teach that there is no avatāra in the Kali-yuga.”[30]

96 Hearing this, the Ācārya grew sad at heart and said, “You are learned in the scriptures, and you are proud of it.

97 The Bhāgavata and the Mahābhārata are the foremost of all scriptures, yet you pay no attention to the words of these two books.[31]

98 Both of them speak of a direct avatāra in the age of Kali, and yet you say that Viṣṇu does not appear in Kali.

99 It is because in the age of Kali Bhagavān does not appear as a līlā-avatāra that He is called Triyuga.[32]

100 But in every age Kṛṣṇa appears as the yuga-avatāra. Your heart is given over to logic, and so you have no discernment.

101 “Your son, who accepts a body in every age, has appeared in three colours — white, red and yellow; now He has become dark (kṛṣṇa).” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.8.13)[33]

102 “Thus, O king, people praise the Lord of the universe in the Dvāpara age. Now hear how they praise Him in the age of Kali as well, following the rules of various tantras.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.5.31)[34]

103 “With sacrifices in which congregational chanting predominates, the wise worship the Lord who ever sings of Kṛṣṇa and whose lustre is not dark. He is always surrounded by His intimate companions (aṅga), His devotees (upāṅga), His weapons and His associates (pārṣada).” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.5.32)[35]

104 “He is of golden colour, His limbs are like gold, His form is beautiful, and He wears armlets of sandal. He has taken sannyāsa, He is self-restrained and tranquil, and His highest refuge is steadfastness and peace.” (Mahābhārata, Dāna-dharma, 149; Viṣṇu-sahasra-nāma, 92 and 75)[36]

105 “But there is no use saying all this to you; it is like sowing seeds on barren ground.[37]

106 When His mercy comes upon you, then you too will speak these same conclusions.[38]

107 As for your disciples, who put forward false arguments and all kinds of doctrines — what fault is it of theirs? This is the gift of māyā.

108 “I bow down to the Infinite, the Lord of endless qualities, whose potencies become the ground of both agreement and dispute among those who argue, and bewilder them again and again about the self.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 6.4.31)[39]

109 “What the brāhmaṇas say is reasonable, for the elements are present in one another everywhere. And when people speak relying on My māyā, what is there they cannot assert?” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.22.4)

110 Then the Bhaṭṭācārya said, “Go to Gosāñi and invite Him in my name, together with His companions.

111 Bring Him prasāda and serve Him His meal first. Afterwards come back and teach me.”

112 The Ācārya was the husband of the Bhaṭṭācārya’s sister, and so he would instruct his brother-in-law with censure, praise and jest.

113 Mukunda was pleased with the Ācārya's conclusions, but the Bhaṭṭācārya's words filled him with sorrow and anger.

114 The Ācārya went to Gosāñi and invited Him in the Bhaṭṭācārya's name.

115 Together with Mukunda he told the Lord what the Bhaṭṭācārya had said, and, pained at heart, he spoke critically of the Bhaṭṭācārya.

116 Hearing this, Mahāprabhu said, "Do not speak like that. The Bhaṭṭācārya is kind to Me.

117 He wants to protect My vows of sannyāsa, and out of fatherly affection he shows Me compassion. What fault is there in that?"

118 The next day Mahāprabhu joyfully took darśana of Jagannātha together with the Bhaṭṭācārya.

119 From there they went together to the Bhaṭṭācārya's house, where he offered the Lord a seat and then sat down himself.[40]

120 Then he began to teach Vedānta, and with affection and reverence he said to the Lord:

121 "To hear Vedānta is the duty of a sannyāsī. You should hear Vedānta constantly."[41]

122 The Lord said, "You are kind to Me. Whatever you tell Me, that is My duty."

123 For seven days He listened in this way. He said nothing, good or bad, but only sat and listened.[42]

124 On the eighth day Sārvabhauma asked Him, “For seven days You have been hearing Vedānta.

125 Yet You say nothing, good or bad, but remain silent, and I cannot tell whether You understand or not.”

126 The Lord said, “I am a fool and have never studied. I listen only because you tell Me to.

127 I listen simply as a sannyāsī’s duty requires, but I cannot understand the meaning you give.”

128 The Bhaṭṭācārya said, “One who knows that he does not understand asks again in order to understand.

129 But You listen and listen and only keep silent. I cannot tell what is in Your heart.”

130 The Lord said, “The meaning of the sūtras is clear to Me, but when I hear your explanation, My mind is troubled.

131 A commentary (bhāṣya) should bring the meaning of a sūtra to light, but your commentary only covers it.

132 You do not explain the primary meaning of the sūtras; you cover it with meanings of your own imagining.[43]

133 Whatever is the primary meaning of the words of the Upaniṣads, that is the principal meaning, and Vyāsa’s sūtras state it all.

134 Abandoning the primary meaning, you invent secondary meanings. Giving up the direct sense of words (abhidhā), you read them indirectly (lakṣaṇā).[44]

135 Among all proofs the śruti is the chief, and what the śruti says in its primary meaning — that alone is proof.[45]

136 Conchshell and cow dung are the bone and the dung of living beings, yet by the word of the śruti these two are supremely pure.

137 The Vedas are self-evident, and what they say is truth. If they are read indirectly (lakṣaṇā), their self-evident authority is lost.[46]

138 The meaning of Vyāsa's sūtras is like the rays of the sun, and you cover it with the clouds of a commentary of your own invention.

139 The Vedas and Purāṇas describe Brahman, and that Brahman is the Great Reality (bṛhad-vastu), bearing all the signs of the Lord.

140 He is Svayaṁ Bhagavān, full of all opulences, yet you explain Him as formless.[47]

141 Those śrutis that call Him featureless (nirviśeṣa) reject what is material and establish what is beyond matter.

142 "Whatever śruti speaks of the featureless directly denotes Him who has features; and when such texts are carefully examined, the sense 'with features' almost always proves the stronger." (Hayaśīrṣa-pañcarātra, quoted in the Caitanya-candrodaya-nāṭaka, 6.21)[48]

143 The universe is born from Brahman and lives in Brahman, and into that same Brahman it dissolves again.[49]

144 Source, instrument and abode — these three cases (apādāna, karaṇa and adhikaraṇa) are the three signs that Bhagavān has features.[50]

145 When Bhagavān resolved to become many, He cast His glance upon the material energy.

146 At that time no material mind or eyes had yet come into being; therefore the eyes and mind of Brahman are not material.[51]

147 The word “Brahman” denotes the complete Svayaṁ Bhagavān, and Svayaṁ Bhagavān is Kṛṣṇa — such is the testimony of scripture.

148 The hidden meaning of the Vedas is not easily understood, and the words of the Purāṇas make that meaning certain.

149 “Oh, the fortune, oh, the fortune of Nanda, the cowherds and all the residents of Vraja, whose friend is the supreme bliss, the complete and eternal Brahman!” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.32)[52]

150 The śruti text “apāṇi-pāda” (“without hands and feet”) denies Him material hands and feet; yet it says again that He moves swiftly and accepts all things.

151 Therefore the śruti declares that Brahman has features; but the Māyāvādīs abandon the primary meaning and, by an indirect reading, hold Him to be featureless.[53]

152 His form is bliss itself, full of the six opulences — and such a Bhagavān you call formless!

153 Brahman has three natural potencies, yet you conclude that He has no potency at all.[54]

154 “The potency of Viṣṇu is declared to be superior; the potency called the knower of the field (kṣetrajña) is likewise superior; and the other, called ignorance and karma, is held to be a third potency." (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 6.7.61)[55]

155 "O king, the potency called the knower of the field can enter both spirit and matter; yet here, enveloped by that ignorance, it suffers without end all the miseries of worldly existence." (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 6.7.62)[56]

156 "Because it is covered by that ignorance, O king, the potency called the knower of the field exists in all beings in varying degrees." (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 6.7.63)[57]

157 "O Lord, You are the basis of all, and in You Hlādinī, Sandhinī and Samvit are one potency. But that which causes joy, pain and a mixture of the two is not in You, for You are beyond the guṇas." (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 1.12.69)[58]

158 The Lord's own nature is made of eternity, knowledge and bliss, and in these three aspects His spiritual potency takes three forms.

159 In the aspect of bliss She is Hlādinī, in the aspect of being Sandhinī, and in the aspect of consciousness Samvit, which we regard as knowledge of Kṛṣṇa.[59]

160 The spiritual potency is internal, the potency of the jīvas is marginal, and māyā is external — and all three render loving service.

161 The six kinds of opulence are the play of the Lord's spiritual potency. That you do not accept such a potency is the height of audacity.

162 The Lord is the master of māyā, and the jīva is subject to māyā — this is the difference between them. Yet you call such a jīva one with the Lord.

163 In the Gītā the jīva is accepted as a potency, yet you call such a jīva non-different from the Lord.[60]

164 “Earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, intelligence and false ego — these eight make up My separated nature.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 7.4)[61]

165 “This nature is inferior. But know, O mighty-armed, that I have another, superior nature, consisting of the jīvas, who take up this world for their own enjoyment.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 7.5)[62]

166 The Lord’s sacred form is made of eternity, knowledge and bliss, yet you call that form a transformation of the mode of goodness.

167 Whoever does not accept the Lord’s sacred form is godless (pāṣaṇḍī). He is not to be touched or even looked at, and Yama will punish him.[63]

168 The Buddhist, who does not accept the Vedas, is an unbeliever (nāstika); but an atheistic doctrine that takes shelter in the Vedas is worse than Buddhism.[64]

169 Vyāsa composed the sūtras for the deliverance of the jīvas, but whoever hears the Māyāvādī commentary on them is utterly ruined.

170 Vyāsa’s sūtras accept the doctrine of transformation (pariṇāma-vāda): by His inconceivable potency the Lord takes the form of the world.[65]

171 As the cintāmaṇi gem, itself unchanged, brings forth heaps of gold, so the Lord becomes the world and yet remains unchanged.[66]

172 Calling Vyāsa mistaken and finding fault with his sūtras, the Māyāvādī has set up the doctrine of illusion (vivarta-vāda) by his own invention.[67]

173 What is false is the jīva's sense of self in the body. The world is not false — it is only perishable.

174 The praṇava (Oṁ), which is the great statement (mahā-vākya), is the form of the Lord. From the praṇava come all the Vedas and the world.[68]

175 Tat tvam asi is only a partial statement, spoken of the jīva; yet the Māyāvādī, not accepting the praṇava, calls that the great statement."[69]

176 In this way the Lord pointed out hundreds of faults in that fanciful commentary, and the Bhaṭṭācārya raised countless objections.

177 He brought up much captious wrangling (vitaṇḍā), quibbling (chala), points of defeat (nigraha) and the like, but the Lord refuted them all and established His own view.[70]

178 "Bhagavān is the relationship (sambandha), bhakti is the means (abhidheya), and love is the goal (prayojana) — these three truths the Vedas declare.[71]

179 Whatever else anyone says is all fancy. To the self-evident words of the Veda I do not apply an indirect reading (lakṣaṇā).[72]

180 The Ācārya (Śaṅkara) is not at fault: it was the Lord's order. That is why he invented an atheistic scripture."[73]

181 "By scriptures of your own imagining turn people away from Me, and hide Me, so that this creation may go on increasing more and more." (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara-khaṇḍa, 62.31)[74]

182 “Māyāvāda is a false scripture; it is called Buddhism in disguise. It was I, O Devī, who set it forth in the age of Kali in the form of a brāhmaṇa.” (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara-khaṇḍa, 25.7)[75]

183 Hearing this, the Bhaṭṭācārya was utterly astonished. Not a word left his lips; he sat stunned.

184 The Lord said, “Do not be amazed, Bhaṭṭācārya. Devotion to Bhagavān is the highest goal of human life.

185 Even the ātmārāmas, who delight in the self, worship the Lord — so inconceivable are the qualities of Bhagavān.”

186 “Even sages who delight in the ātmā and are free from the knots of the heart render causeless devotion to Urukrama, for such are the qualities of Hari.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.7.10)[76]

187 Hearing this, the Bhaṭṭācārya said, “Listen, my dear sir (mahāśaya): I wish to hear the meaning of this verse.”

188 The Lord said, “First let Me hear what meaning you give it. Afterwards I shall explain it, as far as I know.”

189 At this the Bhaṭṭācārya explained the verse, raising various propositions in the manner of the science of logic.

190 He gave nine different meanings on the authority of scripture. Hearing them, the Lord smiled slightly and said:

191 “Bhaṭṭācārya, I know that you are Bṛhaspati himself. No one else has the power to explain scripture like this.

192 But you have explained it by the brilliance of your scholarship; beyond this, the verse has another intent."

193 At the Bhaṭṭācārya's request the Lord explained the verse, without touching even one of his nine meanings.

194 The verse "ātmārāmāś ca" has eleven words, and He established the meaning of each word separately.

195 Giving prominence to each word in turn and combining it with "ātmārāma", He brought out eighteen meanings according to the verse's intent.[77]

196 "Bhagavān, His potency and His qualities — the inconceivable power of these three cannot be described.

197 Eclipsing every other goal and means, these three steal the hearts of the perfected and of those who still practise."[78]

198 Sanaka and the other Kumāras, and Śukadeva, are proof of this. In this way the Lord explained many meanings.[79]

199 Hearing this, the Bhaṭṭācārya was struck with wonder. Knowing the Lord to be Kṛṣṇa, he began to reproach himself:

200 "He is Kṛṣṇa Himself, and I, not knowing it, have committed a great offence in my pride."

201 Reproaching himself, he took shelter of the Lord, and the Lord then resolved to show him mercy.

202 The Lord showed him His own form: He became four-armed.

203 First He showed him the four-armed form, and then His very own form — dark, with the flute at His lips.[80]

204 Seeing this, Sārvabhauma fell down flat in obeisance; then he rose and, with folded hands, offered prayers.

205 By the Lord's mercy all truths were revealed to him, and he described the glory of the holy name, of the gift of love and of much else.

206 Within a single daṇḍa (twenty-four minutes) he composed a hundred verses — verses such as even Bṛhaspati could not compose.[81]

207 Hearing them, the Lord joyfully embraced him, and the Bhaṭṭācārya, overwhelmed by love, lost consciousness.

208 Tears, stupor, thrill, sweat and violent trembling came over him. He danced, sang and wept, and fell down clasping the Lord's feet.

209 Seeing this, Gopīnātha Ācārya was delighted at heart, and the Lord's companions laughed to see the Bhaṭṭācārya dance.

210 Gopīnātha Ācārya said to Mahāprabhu, "It is that very Bhaṭṭācārya whom You have brought to such a state!"

211 The Lord said, "You are a devotee, and through association with you Jagannātha has shown him full mercy."

212 Then the Lord calmed the Bhaṭṭācārya, and once composed, he offered many prayers.

213 "That You have delivered the world is a small deed; that You have delivered me — that is a wondrous power!

214 Logic had made me as hard and dull as a lump of iron, yet You have melted me — mighty is Your power!”

215 Having heard these prayers, Mahāprabhu returned to His lodging, and the Bhaṭṭācārya had a meal served to Him through Gopīnātha Ācārya.

216 The next day the Lord went to see Jagannātha and had darśana of Him as He rose from His bed.

217 The pūjārī brought Him a garland and prasāda, and receiving them, the Lord was delighted.

218 Tying the prasāda and garland in the end of His cloth, He hurried to the Bhaṭṭācārya’s house.

219 The Lord arrived at dawn, just as the Bhaṭṭācārya was waking.[82]

220 As he woke, the Bhaṭṭācārya called out clearly, “Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!”, and when the Lord heard the name of Kṛṣṇa, His joy grew.

221 Seeing the Lord outside, he hastened to Him and bowed at His feet.

222 He offered the Lord a seat, and the two sat down together. Untying the prasāda, the Lord placed it in his hand.

223 The Bhaṭṭācārya was overjoyed to receive the prasāda, though he had not yet bathed, said his morning prayers or even cleaned his teeth.

224 By Caitanya’s grace all the dullness of his mind was gone. Reciting these verses, he ate the prasāda:

225 “Even if it is dry, stale or brought from a distant land, it should be eaten as soon as it is received. Here there is no consideration of time.” (Padma Purāṇa)[83]

226 “For this there is no rule of place and no rule of time. The cultured should eat such food as soon as it is received — so Hari has said.” (Padma Purāṇa)[84]

227 Mahāprabhu’s heart filled with joy at the sight, and overwhelmed with love, He embraced him.

228 Holding each other, the two danced. Lord and servant touched each other, and the hearts of both blossomed.

229 Bathed in sweat, trembling and in tears, both floated in bliss. Filled with love, the Lord began to speak:

230 “Today I have conquered the three worlds without effort. Today I have ascended to Vaikuṇṭha.

231 Today all My desires are fulfilled, for Sārvabhauma has come to have faith in mahā-prasāda.

232 Today you have taken shelter of Kṛṣṇa without guile, and today Kṛṣṇa has shown you His mercy without reserve.

233 Today your bondage to the body and all that goes with it has been cut away; today you have cut the bonds of māyā.

234 Today your mind has become fit to attain Kṛṣṇa, for you have eaten prasāda, setting aside the Vedic rules.”

235 “Those to whom the unlimited Lord shows His mercy — who have taken shelter of His feet with all their being and without deceit — cross over the insurmountable divine māyā, and they no longer think of the body, food for dogs and jackals, as ‘I’ and ‘mine’.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.7.42)[85]

236 Having said this, Mahāprabhu returned to His own place, and from that time the Bhaṭṭācārya’s pride was broken.

237 He knew nothing but Caitanya’s feet, and he explained scripture as teaching nothing but bhakti.

238 Seeing his devotion as a Vaiṣṇava, Gopīnātha Ācārya danced, clapping his hands and calling, “Hari! Hari!”

239 The next day the Bhaṭṭācārya set out for darśana, but before seeing Jagannātha he went to the Lord.[86]

240 Falling flat in obeisance, he offered many prayers, and in humility he spoke of his former perverse thinking.

241 He wished to hear which is the best practice of bhakti, and the Lord taught him the chanting of the holy name (nāma-saṅkīrtana):[87]

242 “The name of Hari, the name of Hari, the name of Hari alone! In the age of Kali there is no other way, there is no other way, there is no other way.” (Bṛhan-nāradīya Purāṇa, 38.126)[88]

243 The Lord explained the meaning of this verse at length, and hearing it, the Bhaṭṭācārya was filled with wonder.

244 Gopīnātha Ācārya said, “Listen, Bhaṭṭācārya: what I told you before has now happened to you.”

245 Bowing to him, the Bhaṭṭācārya said, “It is through my connection with you that the Lord has shown me mercy.

246 You are a great devotee (mahā-bhāgavata), and I am blinded by logic; the Lord has shown me mercy through my connection with you.”

247 Pleased to hear his humble words, the Lord embraced him and said, “Go now and have darśana of the Lord.”[89]

248 Taking Jagadānanda and Dāmodara with him, the Bhaṭṭācārya saw Jagannātha and returned home.

249 He brought a great deal of the very best prasāda and sent it by his own brāhmaṇa, together with those two.

250 He wrote two verses of his own on a palm leaf and gave it into Jagadānanda’s hand, saying, “Give this to the Lord.”

251 The two came to the Lord with the prasāda and the letter, and Mukunda Datta, finding the letter in Jagadānanda’s hand, took it.[90]

252 He copied the two verses onto the outer wall; then Jagadānanda took the letter and gave it to the Lord.

253 The Lord read the verses, tore up the leaf and threw it away, but the devotees saw them on the wall and all learned them by heart.

254 “I take refuge in the one primeval Person, the ocean of mercy, who has assumed the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya to teach detachment, knowledge and devotion to Himself.” (Caitanya-candrodaya-nāṭaka, 6.74)[91]

255 “He appeared under the name Kṛṣṇa Caitanya to revive His own devotional yoga, which had been lost through time. May the bee of my mind sink deep, deep into His lotus feet.” (Caitanya-candrodaya-nāṭaka, 6.75)[92]

256 These two verses are a jewelled necklace on the devotees’ necks, and like the beat of a great drum (ḍhakkā) they proclaim Sārvabhauma’s glory.

257 Sārvabhauma became the Lord’s devotee, and he had no thought for anything but serving Mahāprabhu.

258 “Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, the son of Śacī, the abode of all virtues” — this was his meditation, this his japa; this was the name he chanted.

259 One day Sārvabhauma came before the Lord, offered obeisance and began to recite a verse.

260 He recited a verse from Brahmā’s prayers in the Bhāgavatam, but at the end of the verse he changed the reading of two syllables:

261 “Therefore one who lives earnestly awaiting Your mercy, enduring the fruits of his own deeds and offering You obeisance with heart, words and body, is an heir to the position of devotion.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.8)[93]

262 The Lord said, “The reading is ‘mukti-pade’. Why do you read ‘bhakti-pade’? What do you mean by it?”

263 The Bhaṭṭācārya said, “The fruit of liberation is not equal to bhakti. For those averse to devotion to Bhagavān it is only a punishment.[94]

264–265 Those who do not accept Kṛṣṇa's form as real, and those who blaspheme Him, fight against Him and the like — for both of these the punishment is liberation by merging in Brahman (brahma-sāyujya-mukti). But for one who practises bhakti, liberation is not the fruit.

266 Although liberation is of five kinds — sālokya, sāmīpya, sārūpya, sārṣṭi and sāyujya —

267 if the four beginning with sālokya become a door to service, a devotee may still sometimes accept them.[95]

268 But the devotee feels disgust and fear at the very word "sāyujya". He would rather wish for hell than accept sāyujya.

269 Sāyujya is of two kinds — merging in Brahman and merging in the Lord — and merging in the Lord is even more contemptible than merging in Brahman."[96]

270 "My devotees accept nothing but service to Me — not even when they are offered residence in My world, opulence equal to Mine, nearness to Me, a form like Mine, or even oneness with Me." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.29.13)[97]

271 The Lord said, "'Mukti-pade' has another meaning: the word 'mukti-pada' denotes the Lord Himself.

272 He at whose feet liberation lies is 'mukti-pada'; or else it means the shelter of mukti, the ninth subject of the Bhāgavatam.[98]

273 In both meanings it names Kṛṣṇa, so why change the reading?" Sārvabhauma said, "I cannot bring myself to say that reading.

274 Although this word does convey Your meaning, still, because of the fault of ambiguity (āśliṣya-doṣa), it cannot be said.[99]

275 Although the word ‘mukti’ has five senses, in its conventional usage (rūḍhi-vṛtti) it still conveys sāyujya.[100]

276 When I say the word ‘mukti’, my mind feels disgust and dread; when I say the word ‘bhakti’, it fills with delight.”

277 Hearing this, the Lord laughed, joyful at heart, and embraced the Bhaṭṭācārya firmly.

278 The Bhaṭṭācārya had once studied and taught Māyāvāda, yet by Caitanya’s grace such words now sprang from his lips.

279 Until a touchstone turns iron into gold by its touch, no one can recognise it as a touchstone.[101]

280 Seeing the Bhaṭṭācārya become a Vaiṣṇava, everyone knew the Lord to be the son of the king of Vraja Himself.

281 Kāśī Miśra and all the other residents of Nīlācala came and took shelter at the Lord’s feet.

282 All this I shall describe later; now I tell the story of the Lord’s journey to the south.

283 How Sārvabhauma served the Lord, and how splendidly he arranged His meals —

284–285 all this I shall describe in detail later. This is Mahāprabhu’s pastime of meeting with Sārvabhauma; whoever hears it with faith is freed from the snares of jñāna and karma.

286 Whoever hears Caitanya's pastimes with faith soon attains His feet.

287 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. Heading in the edition: "Obeisance to Gaura, who conquered Sārvabhauma". Anubhāṣya: sarva-bhūmā — He whose greatness surpasses all that is not Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Paramātmā Gauracandra; kutarka — false arguments, misconceptions about the nature of the jīva and its activity; bhakti-bhūmānam ācarat — He made him a vessel full of pure bhakti, that is, a servant of His feet. The verse plays on the words sārvabhauma ("lord of all the earth"), sarva-bhūmā and bhakti-bhūmā. ↩
2. The same verse as Madhya 4.2 (the refrain of Ādi 4.2 with gauracandra in the first line); translation as there. ↩
3. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the paḍichā is a temple officer, a kind of overseer; this paḍichā was a disciple of Sārvabhauma. Heading in the edition: "Sārvabhauma happens to see the Lord and saves Him from a blow". ↩
4. Anubhāṣya: Sārvabhauma then lived south of the temple, in Bālukhaṇḍa, on the bank of the Mārkaṇḍeya-saras pond; the house is now known as the Gaṅgāmātā Maṭha. ↩
5. Anubhāṣya (after the Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu and the Ujjvala-nīlamaṇi): the sāttvika symptoms may be "smouldering", "flaming", "burning" or "blazing" (uddīpta); sūddīpta is a special kind of the blazing, when all the sāttvika symptoms, multiplied many times over, reach the highest limit of prema. An eternally perfect (nitya-siddha) devotee is an eternal associate of the Lord. ↩
6. Anubhāṣya: adhirūḍha-mahābhāva is beyond the reach even of the queens of Dvārakā — only the gopīs of Vraja experience it; its highest stage, mādana, is found in Śrī Rādhikā alone. Heading in the edition: "Unworldly mahābhāva in the Lord's body". ↩
7. Heading in the edition: "Nityānanda and His companions come from Āṭhāranālā to Purī and hear from the people that the Lord is in the Bhaṭṭācārya's house". ↩

8. Anubhāṣya: Maheśvara Viśārada, a fellow student of Nīlāmbara Cakravartī, lived in Vidyānagara near Samudragaḍa; his sons were Madhusūdana Vācaspati and Vāsudeva Sārvabhauma, and his son-in-law was Gopīnātha Ācārya, the husband of Sārvabhauma's sister. ↩
9. Heading in the edition: "Love for the Lord is greater than for Jagannātha". ↩
10. Anubhāṣya: lāphrā-vyañjana is a vegetable dish in which various vegetables are stewed together and seasoned with cumin, pepper and mustard. ↩
11. Anubhāṣya: it is customary to greet sannyāsīs with the words oṁ namo nārāyaṇāya. The smṛti rule for sannyāsīs is to give neither blessings nor obeisances, but a Vaiṣṇava sannyāsī knows himself to be a servant of Kṛṣṇa and so gives everyone the compassionate blessing, "May your mind be fixed on Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet." ↩
12. Anubhāṣya: pūrvāśrama — the name by which He was known and the place where He lived as a householder, before taking sannyāsa. ↩
13. Anubhāṣya: by the excellence of Your nature You are worthy of my worship, and by Your outward āśrama, as a sannyāsī, of the worship of householders like us; so I am Your servant. ↩
14. Heading in the edition: "The humility of the Lord, who honours others (māna-dharma)". ↩
15. Anubhāṣya: on seeing Śrī Jagannātha I lost consciousness; you took care of Me and brought Me back from the inner state to the outer. ↩
16. Anubhāṣya: although Mahāprabhu had every right of a true sannyāsī, in humility He thought it proper to be known by the name of a brahmacārī, a disciple of a sannyāsī, and so showed the very pattern of natural humility. ↩
17. Anubhāṣya: of the ten names of sannyāsīs established by Śaṅkara, in the Śṛṅgerī Maṭha the title "Sarasvatī" is held the highest, "Bhāratī" middling and "Purī" the lowest. Sārvabhauma means that the name "Śrī Kṛṣṇa" is the best of names ("Caitanya" being His brahmacārī name), but He did not enter the highest, Sarasvatī, sampradāya. ↩
18. Anubhāṣya: one who is proud of his position seeks a high rank, but one who wishes to serve Hari humbly, owning nothing, does not disdain even the Bhāratī sampradāya. ↩
19. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: I shall lead Him onto the path of exclusive non-dualism (kevalādvaita), founded on knowledge, for which this world of māyā is worthless. ↩

20. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the yoga-paṭṭa is a special garment of sannyāsīs. Anubhāṣya: if He wishes to enter the higher Sarasvatī sampradāya, I shall arrange for a sannyāsī of that sampradāya to give Him the yoga-paṭṭa and the other articles of renunciation once again. ↩
21. Heading in the edition: “On the path of argument Bhagavān is not attained; on the path of śrauta (hearing) He is easily attained”. ↩
22. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the disciples reason after the Nyāya: as from smoke on a mountain one infers fire, so from the world, which must have a cause, one infers the Lord as the cause of the universe. ↩
23. The prayer of Brahmā. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: those who search for a long time, reasoning about the scriptures by inference, do not come to know this truth. ↩
24. Heading in the edition: “Though Gopīnātha honours others, seeing the Bhaṭṭācārya’s godlessness he shows him no deference”. ↩
25. The Anubhāṣya quotes Kaṭha Upaniṣad, 1.2.23: “This Self is not attained by exposition, nor by intellect, nor by much learning; He is attained by the one whom He Himself chooses, and to him He reveals His own form.” ↩
26. Heading in the edition: “Sārvabhauma’s false argument”. ↩
27. Anubhāṣya: the Reality (vastu) and its potency are one, so knowledge of the Reality comes from the Reality alone; the undivided Reality cannot be known by divided knowledge — only its mercy reveals it. ↩
28. So according to the Anubhāṣya: you have seen Bhagavān’s great absorption in love, yet you did not recognise the Lord in this unworldly Person full of love, and you regard even such a pastime of His as māyic, mere worldly behaviour. The Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya and the heading in the edition (“To see the evident signs of the Lord and still not believe in Him — this is the play of māyā”) also allow the reading: covered by the Lord’s māyā, you could not recognise Him as the Lord. ↩
29. Anubhāṣya: iṣṭa-goṣṭhī — a circle of people gathered for a desired end; Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: I reason as those do who seek the desired truth. ↩
30. The Anubhāṣya quotes Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 7.9.38: “You protect dharma according to the ages, but in Kali You come hidden, and so You are Triyuga”; Śrīdhara Svāmī: “In Kali You are hidden and do not act [as in the other ages]; therefore You are known as appearing in three ages.” ↩
31. Anubhāṣya: see the Anubhāṣya on Ādi 3.49 and the Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya on Ādi 3.51. ↩
32. Anubhāṣya: a līlā-avatāra is an avatāra whose pastimes are full of wonders, effortless, ever new and dependent on His will alone (Matsya, Kūrma, Rāma, Nṛsiṁha, Vāmana, Varāha and others; the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta counts twenty-five). ↩

33. The same verse as Ādi 3.36; translation as there. The words of Garga Muni to Nanda Mahārāja. Heading in the edition: “The avatāras of four colours in the four ages”. ↩
34. Anubhāṣya: the sage Karabhājana answers Nimi, the king of Videha; the tantras are the Pañcarātra and other Sātvata tantras. ↩
35. The same verse as Ādi 3.51; translation as there. ↩
36. The same verse as Ādi 3.49; translation as there. ↩
37. Heading in the edition: “Gopīnātha disregards the Bhaṭṭācārya and does not take him seriously”. ↩
38. Heading in the edition: “Knowledge of Bhagavān’s greatness comes only by Bhagavān’s mercy”. ↩
39. Anubhāṣya: this is the secret prayer Haṁsa-guhya, offered by Prajāpati Dakṣa to Śrī Hari; the potencies spoken of are the external ones, māyā and avidyā. ↩
40. Tāṁra mandire — “to his house”; heading in the edition: “After seeing Jagannātha together with Sārvabhauma, the Lord goes to his house”. ↩
41. Anubhāṣya: Vedānta here is Śaṅkara’s Śārīraka-bhāṣya on the Brahma-sūtra, which establishes a Brahman without attributes; to delight always in the sayings of Vedānta is the dharma of a sannyāsī. ↩
42. Heading in the edition: “For seven days the Lord hears Vedānta from Sārvabhauma’s lips and keeps silent, not accepting the Māyāvāda commentary”. ↩
43. Anubhāṣya: you do not explain the primary meaning of Vyāsa’s sūtras, which is obtained through the direct sense of words (abhidhā-vṛtti), but cover it and invent an imaginary meaning by lakṣaṇā. ↩
44. Heading in the edition (at 131): “In its direct sense the meaning of the Brahma-sūtra is simple; the indirect sense, resting on conjecture, covers it”. ↩
45. Anubhāṣya: see Śrī Jīva’s Tattva-sandarbha (10–11) and the commentaries on the sūtras śāstra-yonitvāt, tarkāpratiṣṭhānāt and śrutes tu śabda-mūlatvāt; Śrī Jīva (Sarva-saṁvādinī): the root proof is sound (śabda) alone — words free from error, inattention, the wish to deceive and the imperfection of the senses. ↩
46. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: to interpret the Vedic sayings by lakṣaṇā is to subject them to inference and so destroy their self-evidence. ↩

47. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: by its greatness Brahman bears the signs of the Lord, and when the Lord is seen in the fullness of all His opulences, that Brahman proves to be Bhagavān Himself. ↩
48. The reference follows the heading in the edition: “words of the Hayaśīrṣa-pañcarātra, quoted in the sixth act of the Caitanya-candrodaya-nāṭaka as its twenty-first verse”. Anubhāṣya: nirviśeṣa — Brahman without attributes, pure consciousness alone; saviśeṣa — possessing name, form, qualities and pastimes; abhidhatte — denotes in the direct sense (abhidhā-vṛtti). Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: both aspects of Bhagavān are eternal, but it is the one with features that is experienced in the world, and so it is the stronger. ↩
49. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: this is the sense of the śruti yato vā imāni bhūtāni jāyante (Taittirīya Upaniṣad, Bhṛgu-vallī, 1). Heading in the edition: “In every case-relation it is Śrī Bhagavān who is meant”. ↩
50. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the Supreme Brahman has three signs — He is the ablative, the instrumental and the locative case — and by these three eternal signs it is seen that Bhagavān eternally has features. Anubhāṣya: see Śrīdhara Svāmī’s commentary on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 6.4.30. ↩
51. Anubhāṣya: at the moment of that glance material eyes did not yet exist; so Brahman with features had an eternal spiritual mind with which He thought of creation and eternal spiritual eyes with which He looked upon prakṛti. ↩
52. Anubhāṣya: this is the prayer of Brahmā after Śrī Kṛṣṇa had crushed his pride; pūrṇam — undivided, sanātanam — eternally manifest. ↩
53. Anubhāṣya: the Māyāvādī abandons the direct sense (abhidhā-vṛtti) and through lakṣaṇā sets up the doctrine of featurelessness; yet even this “featurelessness” serves only to distinguish Brahman from material features. ↩
54. Anubhāṣya: the pure monists hold potency to be a passing state born of ignorance, but the three potencies abide in Brahman eternally. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: these three natural potencies are accepted in many statements of scripture that go back to the śruti “His supreme potency is heard to be manifold” (Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 6.8). ↩
55. The verse is Ādi 7.119; the translation follows it. ↩
56. Anubhāṣya: sarva-gā — able to enter both spirit and matter; kṣetra-jña-śakti — the potency called the jīva; yayā — by avidyā, the māyā that turns one away from Bhagavān; atra — here, in saṁsāra, the realm of Devī. The Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya takes sarva-gā as “all-knowing”. ↩
57. Anubhāṣya: because of avidyā the jīva potency is reckoned now higher, now lower. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: removed from the working of the spiritual potency, the jīva enters the wheel of karma and attains now a high, now a low position. ↩

58. The verse is Ādi 4.63; the translation follows it. Here the second quarter reads sarva-saṁśraye (“the shelter of all”), in Ādi 4.63 sarva-saṁsthitau (“the basis of all”); the sense is the same. ↩
59. Compare Ādi 4.62. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: this samvit is knowledge related to Kṛṣṇa. ↩
60. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: since the Gītā calls the jīva a potency, one must also accept the oneness of the jīva with the Lord, according to the Vedānta saying “the potency and the possessor of potency are not different”; this inconceivable oneness and difference (acintya-bhedābheda) is the secret of the truth of the Lord and the jīva. ↩
61. Anubhāṣya: bhinnā prakṛtiḥ — the potency called external; mind and intelligence are named separately because they are the chief among the elements. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: these eight are manifestations of the inferior (aparā) potency; the jīva is distinct from them. ↩
62. The verse is Ādi 7.118; the translation follows it. ↩
63. Anubhāṣya: the pāṣaṇḍī is one who takes the eternal form of Bhagavān, full of form, qualities and pastimes, to be a transformation of material goodness and therefore does not serve Him; devotees do not touch him or look at him. ↩
64. Heading in the edition: “The Māyāvādī follows the Vedas in word, but in truth he is a hidden Buddhist”. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: a secret enemy who comes in the guise of a friend is far more dangerous than an open one. ↩
65. Heading in the edition: “The Brahma-sūtra intends the doctrine of the transformation of potency (śakti-pariṇāma-vāda)”. Anubhāṣya: see Ādi 7.121–133. ↩
66. Anubhāṣya: by the power within it the gem produces something other than itself — gold — and remains a gem; so the Lord transforms His māyā-śakti into the changing world of the guṇas, while His own nature stays unchanged. ↩
67. Anubhāṣya: Śaṅkarācārya feared that if pariṇāma-vāda were accepted, the sūtra janmādy asya yataḥ would be called faulty and its author Vyāsa mistaken; so he put forward invented arguments and declared vivarta-vāda to be the truth. ↩
68. Anubhāṣya: the praṇava is the form of the Lord in His name (nāma-vigraha); it alone is the mahā-vākya. ↩
69. Anubhāṣya: this saying is addressed to the bewildered jīva, so that it may not identify itself with the body; the Māyāvādīs, instead of taking shelter of the name, oṁkāra, put forward tat tvam asi. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the saying explains the spiritual nature of the jīva, but it is not a mahā-vākya. ↩

70. Anubhāṣya: vitaṇḍā — arguing only to refute another's view without establishing one's own; chala — a refutation that ascribes to a word some invented object in place of its real sense; nigraha — the defeat of the opposing side. ↩
71. Compare Ādi 7.146. Heading in the edition: "The Lord establishes the true teaching of the Vedas". ↩
72. Some editions read veda-vākye karena lakṣaṇā ("he gives the self-evident words of the Veda an indirect reading"); the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition has veda-vākye nā kariye lakṣaṇā, and the translation follows it. ↩
73. Heading in the edition: "By the Lord's command Śaṅkara bewilders the asuras". The Anubhāṣya quotes the Lord's words from the Kūrma Purāṇa (Pūrva-bhāga, 16.115–117): to keep the world from sinners who reject the Vedas, Rudra, at Mādhava's bidding, composed bewildering scriptures. ↩
74. The reference follows the heading in the edition. Anubhāṣya: the Lord is speaking to Śiva; sva-āgamaiḥ kalpitaiḥ — by his own tantras and other books, fallen from the truth; sṛṣṭir uttarottarā — so that the inclination to saṁsāra may keep growing. ↩
75. Anubhāṣya: pracchannam — hypocritically occupied with discussing the Vedas, yet opposed to the path of śruti; brāhmaṇa-mūrtinā — in the body named Śaṅkara, born in the land of Malabar. ↩
76. Anubhāṣya: ātmārāmāḥ — those who delight in the ātmā, that is, in Bhagavān, whose nature is to play with Kṛṣṇa; nirgranthāḥ — free from the knot of desires born in the heart; ahaitukī — free from other desires, not covered by karma, jñāna and the like; itthaṁ-bhūta-guṇaḥ — Hari has the quality of attracting jīvas in every condition, liberated or not, and by His mercy frees those devoted to Māyāvāda from their doctrines. ↩
77. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: eleven meanings for the eleven words of the verse, and seven more when ātmārāma is joined to each of the seven chief words — munayaḥ, nirgranthāḥ, urukrama, ahaitukī, bhakti, guṇa and hari; eighteen in all. Anubhāṣya: see Madhya 24. ↩
78. Anubhāṣya: eclipsing all the relationships and means invented by jñānīs, karmīs and those with other desires, these three realities — Bhagavān of inconceivable power, His potency and His qualities — steal the minds of both sādhakas and siddhas. ↩
79. Anubhāṣya: so Kṛṣṇa attracted the liberated sages, Sanaka and the others, and Śukadeva; see Madhya 24.112–116, 17.139 and Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam,

3.15.43. ↩

80. Heading in the edition (for 202–203): “The Lord shows first the four-armed form, then the two-armed form”. ↩
81. Anubhāṣya: this is Śrīla Sārvabhauma Bhaṭṭācārya’s book Suśloka-śataka. ↩
82. Anubhāṣya: aruṇodaya is the period of four daṇḍas (about an hour and a half) before sunrise. ↩
83. The source follows the heading in the edition above verse 225. Anubhāṣya: śuṣkam — without juice, paryuṣitam — cooked several days before; Kṛṣṇa’s prasāda is to be honoured as soon as it is received. ↩
84. Anubhāṣya: śiṣṭaiḥ — by the Vaiṣṇavas; in honouring prasāda one takes no account of place, time or interruption. ↩
85. The last line follows the Anubhāṣya: eṣām — those who have surrendered have no thought of “I” and “mine” for the body, fit only to be eaten by animals. The Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya reads it otherwise: to those who think “I” and “mine” of the body Bhagavān does not show mercy. Anubhāṣya: these are Brahmā’s words to Nārada on the Lord’s māyā and the glory of the devotees; sarvātmanā — with one’s whole being, not with a part of it. ↩
86. Heading in the edition: “The Bhaṭṭācārya’s love for the Lord surpasses even his love for Jagannātha”. ↩
87. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Sārvabhauma asked which of the sixty-four limbs of sādhana-bhakti is the best, and Mahāprabhu answered, “Best of all is nāma-saṅkīrtana alone.” ↩
88. The verse is Ādi 7.76 and 17.21; the translation follows it. ↩
89. In some editions the order is karaha yāñā; the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition has yāñā karaha. ↩
90. Heading in the edition: “Even before the leaf reached the Lord, Mukunda kept a copy of the two verses”. ↩
91. Heading in the edition (for 254–255): “two verses composed by Sārvabhauma Bhaṭṭācārya and quoted in the Caitanya-candrodaya-nāṭaka, act 6, 74”. Anubhāṣya: vairāgya — detachment from all but Kṛṣṇa; vidyā — realisation of the Supreme Lord; nija-bhakti-yoga — service to His name, form, qualities and pastimes; He is the ocean of mercy because even to those attached to matter He gives the prema of Vraja, fit only for the most exalted liberated souls. ↩
92. Anubhāṣya: kālāt — by the law of time, because other desires, karma and jñāna prevailed; nijam — full of Kṛṣṇa’s name, form, qualities and pastimes. ↩

93. In the Bhāgavatam the last words read mukti-pade; here the verse is given as Sārvabhauma recited it, with bhakti-pade (verses 260, 262). ↩
94. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the highest fruit of bhakti is prema-bhakti alone; mukti is not its fruit; for one averse to bhakti, sāyujya-mukti is only a kind of punishment. ↩
95. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: these four are not so blameworthy, for they are like a door to service; yet the devotee of Kṛṣṇa does not accept even them, for birth after birth he desires only bhakti to Kṛṣṇa. ↩
96. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: brahma-sāyujya is the highest goal for the Māyāvādī Vedāntists, īśvara-sāyujya — kaivalya — that of Patañjali's teaching; the second is even more to be shunned, for there meditation on the Lord with features yields a fruit far removed from Him. ↩
97. The verse is Ādi 4.207 (there sārṣṭi; here the edition prints sāṣṭi); the translation follows it. ↩
98. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: He at whose feet mukti lies is Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the "tenth" subject; or else the ninth subject is mukti, and He who is its shelter is Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Anubhāṣya: see Ādi 2.91–92. ↩
99. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: āśliṣya-doṣa — the fault by which a word may be taken in two ways, so that its direct sense suffers somewhat. ↩
100. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: rūḍhi-vṛtti is the direct sense (mukhya-vṛtti). ↩
101. Heading in the edition: "They are known by their fruit". ↩