“Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta”

Madhya-līlā

Chapter 15

The Feast at Sārvabhauma’s House

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the Anubhāṣya, 2026)

1 While taking His meal at Sārvabhauma’s house, Gaura accepted Amogha, who had reviled Him, and so made plain that He is subject to His devotees.[1]

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura![2]

3 Glory to the listeners of the Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta, for whom it is the treasure of life!

4 In this way Mahāprabhu stayed in Nīlācala with His devotees, joyfully dancing and singing.

5 In that first year He went to see Jagannātha; He danced and sang, fell prostrate, bowed down and offered prayers.

6 When the upala-bhoga began, He would come out of the temple, meet Haridāsa, and return to His own dwelling.[3]

7 Sitting at home, the Lord would chant the holy name, and Advaita would come and worship Him.

8 Advaita offered Him fragrant water to wash His feet and to sip, and smeared fragrant sandalwood paste over all His limbs.

9 He put a garland around the Lord's neck and placed tulasī buds on His head; then He bowed at His feet and offered prayers with joined palms.

10 Taking whatever flowers and tulasī were left on the worship plate, the Lord worshipped the Ācārya with them.

11 He recited the mantra "Whoever You are, that You are — obeisance to You," and, making funny sounds with His mouth, set the Ācārya laughing.[4]

12 So They paid obeisance to one another, and again and again the Ācārya invited the Lord to a meal.

13 The story of the Ācārya's invitations is wonderful, and Vṛndāvana dāsa has described it in detail.[5]

14 To tell it again would be repetition, so I have not described it. The other devotees also invited the Lord.

15 Day after day there was a festival in one devotee's home after another, and all the devotees ate there with the Lord.

16 For four months all the devotees stayed with Mahāprabhu and watched Jagannātha's various festivals with great joy.

17 On the day of Kṛṣṇa's birth festival, at Nanda's great celebration, the Lord and all His devotees dressed as cowherds.[6]

18 Carrying a yoke of yogurt and milk on His shoulder, the Lord came to the festival grounds calling out, "Hari! Hari!"

19 Kānāi Khuṭiyā was dressed as Nanda, and Jagannātha Māhāti had become Yaśodā, the Queen of Vraja.

20 King Pratāparudra himself was there, with Kāśī Miśra, Sārvabhauma and Tulasī, the temple paḍichā.

21 With them all the Lord danced joyfully, and everyone was drenched in yogurt, milk and turmeric water.

22 Advaita said, “I am telling You the truth — don’t be angry. I will know You are a cowherd only if You can twirl a staff.”

23 Then the Lord took a staff and began to twirl it, tossing it into the air again and again and catching it.

24 He twirled the staff over His head, in front, behind, on both sides and even between His feet, and the people laughed to see it.[7]

25 He whirled the staff like a circle of fire traced by a firebrand, and all who saw it were struck with wonder.[8]

26 Nityānanda twirled a staff in the same way. Who can understand the hidden cowherd mood of these two?[9]

27 At Pratāparudra’s order, Tulasī the paḍichā came, bringing a cloth that had been offered to Jagannātha.

28 The Lord tied the costly cloth around His head, and He had the Ācārya and His other companions wear it as well.

29 Kānāi Khuṭiyā and Jagannātha, in their ecstasy, gave away all the wealth they had at home.

30 Seeing this, Mahāprabhu was very pleased and bowed down to the two of them as to His mother and father.

31 In deep ecstasy the Lord returned home. Such were the pastimes of Gaurāṅgasundara.

32 On Vijayā-daśamī, the day of the conquest of Laṅkā, the Lord made the devotees into an army of monkeys.[10]

33 Absorbed in the mood of Hanumān, the Lord took a tree branch, climbed the ramparts of Laṅkā and tore Laṅkā down.

34 In a fit of anger the Lord cried, "Where is that wretch Rāvaṇa? The sinner has carried off the Mother of the world! I will kill him and all his kin!"[11]

35 Seeing the Lord's ecstasy, the people were amazed, and all of them shouted "Jaya! Jaya!" again and again.

36 In the same way they all saw the Rāsa-yātrā, Dīpāvalī and the festival of Utthāna-dvādaśī.

37 One day Mahāprabhu took Nityānanda aside, and the two brothers sat together in seclusion and took counsel.

38 What the two decided no one knew; only later could the devotees guess it from what followed.

39 Then Mahāprabhu called all the devotees and bade them farewell, telling them to go back to Gauḍa.

40 He said to them all, “Come every year: see the Guṇḍicā festival, meet with Me, and then go home.”[12]

41 With respect He gave this order to the Ācārya: “Give devotion to Kṛṣṇa to everyone, down to the caṇḍālas.”

42 To Nityānanda He gave this order: “Go to Gauḍa and reveal loving devotion freely, without restraint.[13]

43 I am sending Rāmadāsa, Gadādhara and a few others along to help You.[14]

44 From time to time I will come to You, and, staying unseen, I will watch You dance.”[15]

45 The Lord embraced Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita and, with His arm around his neck, spoke sweet words to him:

46 “Every day I will dance in the kīrtana at your house. You will see it, but no one else will.

47 Give this cloth and all this prasāda to My mother. Fall down before her and beg her to forgive My offence.

48 I gave up serving her and took sannyāsa. That is not dharma: I am destroying My own dharma.[16]

49 I am subject to her love, and serving her is My dharma. In giving that up I have acted like a madman.

50 A mother does not hold her mad child at fault. Knowing this, My mother is not angry with Me.

51 What use is sannyāsa to Me? Love is My real wealth. When I took sannyāsa, My mind was deranged.

52 I stay in Nīlācala at her bidding, and from time to time I will come to see her feet.[17]

53 Every day I go and see her feet, but she takes it for a vision and does not believe it is real.[18]

54–55 One day she offered the śālagrāma many gifts: śāli rice, five or seven vegetable dishes, greens, ghaṇṭa of banana flowers, fried paṭolas with nim leaves, slices of lemon and ginger, yogurt, milk and sugar candy.

56 She took the prasāda on her lap and wept: ‘All these dishes are my Nimāi’s favourites.

57 Nimāi is not here — who will eat them?’ As she thought of Me, her eyes filled with tears.

58 I went at once and ate everything. Seeing the plate empty, she wiped away her tears.

59 ‘Who has eaten the rice and vegetables? Why is the plate empty? Could Bāla-gopāla have eaten all the rice?

60 Or was my mind deluded about it? Or did some animal come and eat it all?

61 Or did I forget to serve the food on the plate?’ Thinking this, she went and looked into the cooking pots.

62 She saw that all the pots were still full of rice and vegetables, and at the sight she was filled with doubt and wonder.

63 She called Īśāna, had the place cleaned and plastered again, and once more offered food to Gopāla.

64 Whenever she cooks something excellent like this, she weeps with longing to feed Me.

65 Her love draws Me there and makes Me eat. Within she feels happy, but outwardly she does not accept it.

66 This happened on this very Vijayā-daśamī. Ask her about it and convince her that it was real."

67 As He said this, the Lord was overwhelmed; but to send the devotees off He kept His composure.

68 To Rāghava Paṇḍita He spoke tender words: "Your steadfast love has brought Me under your control.

69 Hear, everyone, how he serves Kṛṣṇa. His service is supremely pure, the very best of all.

70 Leaving aside his other offerings, hear about the coconuts. In those parts a coconut sells for five gaṇḍās.[19]

71 In his garden hundreds of trees bear fruit by the hundreds of thousands, yet he still asks where the sweetest coconuts are to be had.

72 He pays four paṇas for every single fruit and takes pains to have them brought from ten krośas away.[20]

73 Every day he has five or seven fruits husked and keeps them immersed in water to make them very cool.

74 At the time of the offering he trims and prepares them again, cuts an opening in the top, and offers them to Kṛṣṇa.

75 Kṛṣṇa drinks the coconut water: sometimes He leaves the fruit empty, sometimes still full of water.

76 When the Paṇḍita sees a fruit emptied of its water, he is delighted. He breaks it open and fills a plate with the pulp.[21]

77 He offers the pulp and meditates outside, and Kṛṣṇa eats it and leaves the plate empty.

78 Sometimes, having eaten it, Kṛṣṇa fills the plate with pulp again. Then the Paṇḍita's faith grows, and he floats in an ocean of love.

79 One day a servant prepared ten coconuts and brought them to be offered.

80 It was not yet time to offer them; there was a delay, so the servant waited at the door with the plate of fruits in his hand.

81 He touched the wall above the door with his hand and then touched the fruits with the same hand. The Paṇḍita saw it.

82 The Paṇḍita said, "People are always coming and going through this door. The dust from their feet flies up and settles on the wall above it.

83 You put your hand on that wall and then touched the fruits. They are no longer fit for Kṛṣṇa — they have become impure."[22]

84 With these words he threw the fruits over the boundary wall. Such is his pure, loving service: it conquers the world.

85 Then he had other coconuts prepared and offered them with the utmost purity.

86 In the same way, whenever he hears of good bananas, mangoes, oranges or jackfruits in some distant village,

87 he pays a great price, takes pains to have them brought, prepares them with purity and offers them.

88 So too with the greens, roots and vegetables for his dishes, and with flat rice, huḍuma and all kinds of sweets;[23]

89 so too with cakes, sweet drinks and rice cooked in milk — all supremely pure and the very best.[24]

90 He offers kāśamdi, pickles and many other things, and the best of everything: scents, cloth and ornaments.

91 Such is the incomparable service he renders in love; it is a balm to the eyes of all who see it.”

92 With these words He embraced Rāghava, and in the same way He honoured all the devotees.

93 Respectfully He said to Śivānanda Sena, “Please look after Vāsudeva Datta.[25]

94 He is extremely generous: whatever comes to him on any day, he spends that same day and keeps nothing back.

95 He is a householder, and a householder needs to save; without savings he cannot support his family.

96 Let all the income and expenses of his household be in your hands. Be his sarakhela, his guardian, and manage his affairs.

97 Every year bring all My devotees to the Guṇḍicā festival, and take care of them all."[26]

98 To the residents of Kulīna-grāma He said respectfully, "Come every year to the festival, and bring silk ropes.

99 Guṇarāja Khān composed the Śrī Kṛṣṇa-vijaya, and in it there is a sentence of his that is full of love:[27]

100 'Kṛṣṇa, the son of Nanda, is the Lord of my life.' For this one sentence I have sold Myself into the hands of his descendants.[28]

101 What need I say of you? Even a dog of your village is dear to Me, to say nothing of anyone else there."[29]

102 Then Rāmānanda and Satyarāja Khān humbly put a question at the Lord's feet:[30]

103 "I am a worldly householder. What should my practice be? Please instruct me with Your own lips — I submit this at Your feet."

104 The Lord said, "Serve Kṛṣṇa, serve the Vaiṣṇavas, and always chant the name of Kṛṣṇa in saṅkīrtana."

105 Satyarāja said, "How am I to recognise a Vaiṣṇava? Tell me who is a Vaiṣṇava — what are his general marks?"

106 The Lord said, “Anyone from whose mouth I hear the name of Kṛṣṇa even once is worthy of worship — he is the best of all.[31]

107 A single name of Kṛṣṇa destroys all sins, and through the holy name the nine kinds of devotion become complete.[32]

108 The holy name does not wait upon the rules of initiation or puraścaryā. Merely by touching the tongue it delivers everyone, down to the caṇḍāla.[33]

109 As a mere by-product it ends worldly existence; and by attracting the heart it awakens love for Kṛṣṇa.

110 “This mantra, the name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, draws the liberated and the wise and uproots all sins. Down to the caṇḍāla, it is within easy reach of everyone who is not mute, and it holds the wealth of liberation in its power. It does not look in the least for initiation, pious rites or puraścaryā: merely by touching the tongue it bears fruit.” (Padyāvalī, 29)[34]

111 Therefore anyone on whose lips is even one name of Kṛṣṇa is a Vaiṣṇava; show him honour.”[35]

112 Of the devotees from Khaṇḍa, three were the chief: Mukunda dāsa, Śrī Raghunandana and Śrī Narahari.

113 The son of Śacī asked Mukunda dāsa, “Are you the father, and Śrī Raghunandana your son?

114 Or is Raghunandana the father, and you his son? Tell Me for certain, so that My doubt may go.”

115 Mukunda said, “Raghunandana is my father, and I am his son — that is my conviction.[36]

116 All of us have received devotion to Kṛṣṇa from Raghunandana. So Raghunandana is certainly my father.”

117 Hearing this, the Lord said joyfully, “You have spoken rightly: he from whom devotion to Kṛṣṇa comes is the guru.”

118 The Lord delights in telling the glories of His devotees; telling them, He becomes as if five-mouthed.

119 He said to the devotees, “Hear about Mukunda’s love: it is spotless and deep, like pure gold.

120 Outwardly he is a royal physician in the king’s service. Who could know the love within him?[37]

121 One day, on his high platform, the Muslim king was talking with him about medical treatment.[38]

122 Just then a servant brought a fan of peacock feathers and held it over the king’s head.

123 At the sight of the peacock feathers Mukunda was overwhelmed with love and fell from the high platform to the ground.

124 The king thought his royal physician had been killed. He came down himself and brought him back to his senses.

125 The king asked, “Where are you hurt?” Mukunda answered, “I am not badly hurt.”

126 The king asked, “Mukunda, why did you fall?” Mukunda said, “O king, I suffer from epilepsy.”

127 But the king was very shrewd and understood it all: he came to regard Mukunda as a great perfected soul.[39]

128 Raghunandana serves in Kṛṣṇa’s temple. At its door there is a pond, and above its bathing steps

129 stands a kadamba tree that blossoms all twelve months of the year; every day it gives two flowers to adorn Kṛṣṇa.[40]

130 Again He spoke sweet words to Mukunda: “Your duty is to earn wealth in keeping with dharma.[41]

131 Raghunandana’s duty is to serve Kṛṣṇa; his mind turns to nothing but serving Kṛṣṇa.

132 And let Narahari stay with My devotees. You three must always carry out these three duties.”

133 Showing His mercy to the two brothers, Sārvabhauma and Vidyāvācaspati, the Lord said:

134 “Kṛṣṇa is now manifest in the form of wood and in the form of water. Through seeing Him and through bathing in Him, He liberates living beings.

135 As the Dāru-brahma, Brahman in the form of wood, He is Śrī Puruṣottama Himself; and the Bhāgīrathī is the Jala-brahma, Brahman in the form of water.

136 Sārvabhauma, worship the Dāru-brahma. Vācaspati, serve the Jala-brahma.”[42]

137 The Lord embraced Murāri Gupta and spoke of his steadfast devotion: “Listen, devotees![43]

138 In the past I tried again and again to win him over: ‘Gupta, the son of the king of Vraja is supremely sweet.

139 Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself, the source of all His portions and the shelter of all. He is pure, spotless love, and every rasa is found in Him.

140 He is a mine filled with the jewels of every good quality. He is expert, clever and composed — the crown of all who relish rasa.

141 Kṛṣṇa’s nature is sweet, and His pastimes are sweet; cleverness and skill fill the rasa of His play.

142 Worship that Kṛṣṇa and take shelter of Him. Apart from Kṛṣṇa, no other worship can win the mind.’

143 Hearing such words from Me again and again, out of regard for Me his mind turned a little.[44]

144 He said to Me, ‘I am Your servant. I carry out Your orders; I am not independent.’

145 With these words he went home. That night, as he thought it over, the idea of giving up Raghunātha left him distraught.

146 ‘How can I give up the feet of Raghunātha? O Lord, let me die this very night!’

147 So he wept all night long; there was no peace in his mind, and he could not sleep.

148 In the morning he came and clasped My feet, and, weeping bitterly, made this plea to Me:

149 ‘I have sold my head at the feet of Raghunātha. I cannot take it back, and my heart is in anguish.[45]

150 I cannot give up the feet of Śrī Raghunātha, yet that means breaking Your order. What am I to do?

151 So, O merciful Lord, show me this mercy: let me die before You, and let my dilemma end.’

152 “Hearing this, I felt great joy at heart. Then I raised him up and embraced him.

153 “ ‘Excellent, excellent, Gupta! Your worship is firm indeed: even My words did not shake your mind.

154 “ ‘This is the love for the Lord’s feet that I want in a servant: even if the Lord tries to make him leave them, he cannot let go of those feet.

155 “ ‘It was to learn how steadfast you are that I urged you again and again.

156 “ ‘You are Hanumān himself, the servant of Śrī Rāma. Why would you ever give up His lotus feet?’

157 “This is that same Murāri Gupta, who is as dear to Me as My life. When I hear his humility, My heart breaks.”

158 Then the Lord embraced Vāsudeva and began to describe his qualities as if He had a thousand mouths.

159 Hearing his own qualities praised, Vāsudeva Datta felt ashamed. Clasping the Lord's feet, he made a petition:

160 "O Lord, You have descended to deliver the world. Please grant me one request.

161 "O merciful Lord, You are able to do anything. If You only wish it, it happens without effort.

162 "My heart breaks to see the suffering of living beings. O Lord, place the sins of all living beings on my head.

163 "Let me take the sins of the living beings and suffer in hell for them. O Lord, cure all living beings of the disease of material existence."

164 When Mahāprabhu heard this, His heart melted, and with tears, trembling and a faltering voice He began to speak:

165 "Such words are no wonder coming from you: you are Prahlāda himself. Kṛṣṇa's grace rests on you in full.

166 "Whatever His servant asks for, Kṛṣṇa makes true. He has no task other than fulfilling His servant's desire.

167 "You have desired the deliverance of all beings in the universe, so all will be delivered without suffering for their sins.

168 "Kṛṣṇa is not powerless; He holds all power. Why, then, would He make you suffer the fruits of sin?

169 “Anyone whose welfare you desire has become a Vaiṣṇava, and Kṛṣṇa removes all the sins of a Vaiṣṇava.

170 “I worship Govinda, the original Person. To each, from the tiny indragopa insect to Indra himself, He grants the fruits that match the bondage of his own karma; but the karma of those who have devotion He burns away.” (Brahma-saṁhitā, 5.54)[46]

171 “By your mere wish the universe will be liberated. To liberate everyone is no labour for Kṛṣṇa.

172 “As millions of fruits grow on a single uḍumbara tree, so millions of universes float on the waters of the Virajā.

173 “If one of its fruits falls and is lost, the tree does not even notice its loss.

174 “So too, if one universe is liberated, Kṛṣṇa does not take it as even a slight loss.

175 “Kṛṣṇa’s opulence is infinite — Vaikuṇṭha and His other abodes; and the moat around them is known as the Causal Ocean (Kāraṇābdhi).

176 “On it the infinite universes float together with māyā, like a pot full of mustard seeds floating in a moat.

177 “No one counts it a loss if one of those mustard seeds is lost; likewise, Kṛṣṇa loses nothing if one universe is lost.

178 “Even if māyā herself is destroyed along with all the universes, Kṛṣṇa does not consider it any loss.

179 “It is like the death of a she-goat for the owner of millions of wish-fulfilling cows. What can māyā mean to Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of the six opulences?

180 “Glory, glory to You, O unconquered one! Destroy the unborn māyā, who has taken up the qualities to bring about faults, for in Yourself You hold all excellences in full. O awakener of all the potencies of moving and unmoving beings, the Vedas describe You sometimes as acting through māyā and sometimes through Your own potency.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.87.14)[47]

181 In this way the Lord spoke of the qualities of all the devotees. Then He embraced them all and bade them farewell.

182 The devotees wept at parting from the Lord, and the Lord’s heart grew sad at parting from His devotees.

183 Gadādhara Paṇḍita, whom the Lord had settled at Yameśvara, remained near Him.[48]

184–185 With Purī Gosāñi (Paramānanda Purī), Jagadānanda, Svarūpa Dāmodara, Dāmodara Paṇḍita, Govinda and Kāśīśvara, the Lord stayed at Nīlācala, and every morning He went to see Jagannātha.

186 One day Sārvabhauma came to the Lord and, with folded hands, made a request.

187 “Now that all the Vaiṣṇavas have gone back to Gauḍa, there is an opportunity to invite You.

188 “Please take Your meals at my house for a whole month.” The Lord said, “That is not dharma; I cannot do it.”

189 Sārvabhauma said, “Then take Your meals with me for twenty days.” The Lord said, “That is not in keeping with a renunciant’s dharma.”

190 Sārvabhauma said again, “Then fifteen days.” The Lord said, “I shall take a meal with you for one day.”

191 Then Sārvabhauma clasped the Lord’s feet and entreated Him: “Take Your meals with me for ten days.”

192 Step by step the Lord brought it down to five days, and He accepted his invitation for five days.

193 Then Sārvabhauma made another request: “Ten sannyāsīs are with You.

194 “I have already told You that Purī Gosāñi will take his meals at my house for five days.

195 “Svarūpa Dāmodara is my friend: he will come sometimes with You and sometimes alone.

196 “The other eight sannyāsīs will take their meals with me for two days each, one person each day. In this way the month will be filled.

197 “If many sannyāsīs come at once, I will not be able to honour them properly and will commit an offence.

198 “Please come to my house alone, with only Your own shadow, and sometimes bring Svarūpa Dāmodara with You.”[49]

199 Receiving the Lord’s sign of consent, Sārvabhauma was delighted, and that same day he invited Mahāprabhu.

200 The Bhaṭṭācārya's wife, known as Ṣāṭhī's mother, was a great devotee of the Lord and loved Him like a mother.

201 When the Bhaṭṭācārya came home, he asked her to cook, and Ṣāṭhī's mother joyfully set about it.

202 His house was well stocked with every provision; whatever greens, fruits and other things were needed, he gathered and brought.

203 The Bhaṭṭācārya himself saw to all the finer points of the cooking, and Ṣāṭhī's mother, skilled as she was, knew the whole craft of it.

204 To the south of the kitchen were two rooms for offering food. In one of them food was offered to Nārāyaṇa in His form as the Śālagrāma.

205 The other room was for Mahāprabhu's meals; the Bhaṭṭa had newly built it in a secluded spot.

206 It had one door to the outside, for the Lord to enter, and one door from the kitchen, for serving the food.

207 On a whole leaf of the battiśā-āṭhiyā banana they heaped rice cooked from three mānas of grain.[50]

208 The rice was soaked with fragrant yellow ghee, which ran over the leaf on all sides.

209 All around it, row upon row, cups of keyā leaves and banana bark were set out, filled with various vegetable dishes.

210 There were ten kinds of greens, a bitter sukuta soup with nim, a peppery jhāla, chānā-baḍās, baḍās and buttermilk.

211 There was bottle gourd and pumpkin cooked in milk, vesara and lāphrā, banana flowers made into a ghaṇṭa and fried, and various kinds of śākrā.[51]

212 There were countless dishes of baḍīs made with ripe pumpkin, and phula-baḍīs, fruits and roots of many kinds.

213 There was eggplant fried with tender nim leaves, phula-baḍī, fried paṭola, and pumpkin and māna-kacu cut in rounds and fried.[52]

214 There was a soup of fried urad and mung dāl that put nectar to shame, a sweet-and-sour chutney, baḍāmla and other sour dishes — five or six of them.[53]

215 There were baḍās of mung and of urad, sweet banana baḍās, kṣīra-puli, coconut pulī and every kind of cake.

216 There were kāǰi-baḍās, flat rice in milk and milk laklakī. I cannot describe all the cakes that were made.[54]

217 Sweet rice soaked with ghee filled earthen pots, with cāp̃ā bananas, thickened milk and mangoes set in it.

218 There was rasālā, churned yogurt and countless sandeśas — every kind of food known in Gauḍa and Utkala.

219 The Bhaṭṭācārya had all this prepared with faith. On a white wooden seat he spread a fine cloth.[55]

220 On either side stood pitchers of cool, fragrant water, and he placed tulasī buds on the rice and vegetables.

221 He also had amṛta-guṭikā, cakes and sweet drinks brought, and he kept all of Jagannātha's prasāda apart.[56]

222 At that time Mahāprabhu, having finished His midday duties, came alone, knowing the Bhaṭṭācārya's heart.

223 The Bhaṭṭācārya then washed His feet, and the Lord went into the room to take His meal.

224 Seeing the rice and all the dishes, the Lord was astonished, and with a playful gesture He said to the Bhaṭṭācārya:

225 "All this rice and these dishes are extraordinary! How could they have been cooked within two praharas?

226 "Even if a hundred people cooked on a hundred stoves, they could not cook so much food so quickly.

227 "I take it that you have offered this food to Kṛṣṇa, since I see tulasī buds on top of it.

228 "You are fortunate, and your effort has borne fruit: you have offered such a feast to Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa.

229 "The fragrance and colour of the rice are most charming. Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa Themselves have eaten of it.

230 "How can I praise your great fortune enough? I too am fortunate, for I shall receive the remnants.

231 "Take away Kṛṣṇa's seat and keep it aside, and give Me prasāda on a separate plate."[57]

232 The Bhaṭṭācārya said, “O Lord, do not be astonished. By the potency of Him who will eat it, the feast was made ready.

233 “My wife did not have to labour at the cooking. He by whose potency the feast was made ready knows how it was done.

234 “Please sit on this very seat and take Your meal.” The Lord said, “This seat of Kṛṣṇa’s is to be worshipped.”

235 Bhaṭṭa said, “The food and the seat are equally prasāda. If You will eat the food, what offence can there be in sitting on the seat?”

236 The Lord said, “You are right; this is the command of scripture: the servant relishes all that Kṛṣṇa leaves.

237 “ ‘Adorned with the garlands, scents, clothes and ornaments You have used, and eating Your remnants, we, Your servants, shall surely conquer Your māyā.’ (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.6.46)[58]

238 “Still, no one can eat so much food.” Bhaṭṭa said, “I know how much You eat. Eat as much as befits You.

239 “At Nīlācala You eat fifty-two times, and the food of each offering comes in hundreds upon hundreds of loads.

240 “In Dvārakā You eat in the palaces of the sixteen thousand queens, in the homes of Your eighteen mothers and in the houses of the Yādavas.[59]

241 “In Vraja You eat twice a day, morning and evening, in the houses of all the cowherds — Your uncles on Your father’s and mother’s side, the husbands of Your aunts and others — and of all Your friends.[60]

242 “At the Govardhana sacrifice You ate heaps upon heaps of food. Compared with that, this food is not even one mouthful.

243 “You are the Lord Himself, and I am a tiny, wretched soul. Please accept this one mouthful of mādhukarī.”[61]

244 Hearing this, the Lord smiled and sat down to eat, and Bhaṭṭa joyfully served Him Jagannātha’s prasāda.

245 At that time Amogha, the Bhaṭṭācārya’s son-in-law and husband of his daughter Ṣāṭhī, happened to be there. He came of a noble (kulīna) family, but he was a blasphemer.

246 He wanted to watch the Lord eat but could not come in, for the Bhaṭṭācārya stood at the door, stick in hand.

247 But when the Bhaṭṭācārya’s attention turned to serving the prasāda, Amogha came in, saw the food and began to blaspheme:

248 “This food would satisfy ten or twelve people, and one sannyāsī eats so much all by himself!”

249 When the Bhaṭṭācārya heard this, he turned round and looked, and Amogha, seeing that he had been noticed, fled.

250 The Bhaṭṭācārya took up his stick and ran to beat him, but Amogha got away and he could not catch him.

251 Then the Bhaṭṭācārya came back, cursing and abusing him, and when Mahāprabhu heard all this reviling, He began to laugh.

252 Hearing of it, Ṣāṭhī’s mother beat her head and breast and cried again and again, “Let Ṣāṭhī become a widow!”

253 Seeing the grief of them both, the Lord consoled them, and to fulfil their wish He ate, well pleased.

254 When the Lord had rinsed His mouth, Bhaṭṭa gave Him mouth fresheners: tulasī buds, cloves and juicy, fragrant cardamom.[62]

255 He smeared fragrant sandalwood paste all over the Lord's body and, falling prostrate, spoke humbly:

256 "I brought You to my house only to have You blasphemed. O Lord, forgive me this offence."

257 The Lord said, "That was not blasphemy; he only spoke plainly. What offence is there in this, either on your part or on his?"

258 With these words Mahāprabhu went home, and the Bhaṭṭācārya went with Him to His residence.

259 Falling at the Lord's feet, he reproached himself bitterly. The Lord calmed him and sent him home.

260 Returning home, the Bhaṭṭācārya spoke to Ṣāṭhī's mother, blaming himself:

261 "To kill the man from whom I have heard blasphemy of Caitanya Gosāñi would be the atonement for that sin.[63]

262 "Or I could give up my own life. But neither is proper, for in body we are both brāhmaṇas.[64]

263 "I shall never look on that blasphemer's face again. I have renounced him, and I shall not speak his name.

264 “Tell Ṣāṭhī to leave him: he has fallen (patita). When a husband has fallen, it is proper to give him up.

265 “ ‘One should give up a fallen husband.’ ”[65]

266 That night Amogha fled and hid somewhere, and in the morning he was stricken with cholera.

267 Hearing that Amogha was dying, the Bhaṭṭācārya said, “Providence has come to my aid and done my work for me.

268 “An offence against the Lord bears fruit at once.” So saying, he recited two verses of scripture:

269 “What we would have had to do with great effort, with elephants, horses, chariots and foot soldiers, the Gandharvas have done.” (Mahābhārata, Vana-parva, 241.15)[66]

270 “Offence against great souls destroys a man’s life, fortune, fame and dharma, his higher worlds and blessings — all that is good for him.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.4.46)[67]

271 Gopīnātha Ācārya went to see the Lord, and the Lord asked him about the Bhaṭṭācārya.

272 The Ācārya said, “The two of them are fasting, and Amogha is dying of cholera.”

273 Hearing this, the merciful Lord came running. Placing His hand on Amogha’s chest, He said:[68]

274 “This heart of a brāhmaṇa is pure by nature; it is a fit place for Kṛṣṇa to sit.

275 “Why have you seated the caṇḍāla of envy here? You have made this supremely pure place impure.

276 “Through Sārvabhauma’s company your impurity has been destroyed, and when the taint is gone, a soul takes the name of Kṛṣṇa.

277 “Get up, Amogha! Take the name of Kṛṣṇa, and Bhagavān will soon show you His mercy.”

278 Hearing this, Amogha rose up crying, “Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!” and, mad with love, began to dance.

279 Trembling, tears, hair standing on end, stupor, perspiration and a faltering voice appeared in him, and seeing these waves of love, the Lord smiled.

280 Clasping the Lord’s feet, he humbly entreated Him: “O merciful Lord, forgive my offence.

281 “With this wretched mouth I blasphemed You!” Saying this, he began to slap his own cheeks.

282 He slapped himself until his cheeks were swollen. Then Gopīnātha Ācārya seized his hands and stopped him.

283 The Lord consoled him, touching his body: “Because you are related to Sārvabhauma, you are dear to Me.

284 “Even the servants, maids and dogs in Sārvabhauma’s house are dear to Me — to say nothing of others.

285 “There is no offence left in you. Take the name of Kṛṣṇa.” With these words the Lord went to Sārvabhauma’s house.

286 Seeing the Lord, Sārvabhauma clasped His feet. The Lord embraced him and sat down.

287 The Lord said, “Amogha is a child. What fault is there in him? Why are you fasting, and why are you angry?

288 “Get up, bathe and go to see Jagannātha’s face. Then come back quickly and eat; that will make Me happy.

289 “I shall sit here until you have brought prasāda and honoured it.”

290 Clasping the Lord’s feet, Bhaṭṭa said, “Amogha would have died. Why did You bring him back to life?”

291 The Lord said, “Amogha is a child; he is your son. A father does not hold his child’s faults against him, for he is the child’s protector.

292 “He has become a Vaiṣṇava now, and his offence is gone; so show him your favour.”

293 Bhaṭṭa said, “Go, O Lord, to see Jagannātha. I shall bathe and be back here at once.”

294 The Lord said, “Gopīnātha, stay right here. When he has honoured the prasāda, bring Me word.”

295 With these words the Lord went to see Jagannātha, and Bhaṭṭa bathed, took darśana and ate.

296 That same Amogha became the Lord's exclusive devotee. He would dance in love and chant the name of Kṛṣṇa, deeply at peace.[69]

297 Such are the wonderful pastimes of the son of Śacī: whoever sees or hears of them is struck with wonder.

298 Thus the Lord enjoyed the pastime of eating at Bhaṭṭa's house, and in it He revealed many wonderful deeds.

299 This is the story of the Lord's meal in Sārvabhauma's house, in which Sārvabhauma's love became known,

300 and the love of Ṣāṭhī's mother, and the grace of the Lord, by which He forgave an offence because of the offender's relation to His devotee.[70]

301 Whoever hears this pastime with faith will soon attain the feet of Śrī Caitanya.

302 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.[71]

Notes

1. Anubhāṣya: Amogha was the husband of Ṣaṣṭhī, Sārvabhauma's daughter; "accepted" — counted him among His servants. Heading in the edition: "Gaurasundara makes His own Amogha, who had reviled Him." ↩
2. The same verse as Madhya 10.2 (= Ādi 4.2); translation as there. ↩
3. Anubhāṣya: the upala-bhoga is offered at midday in the bhoga-vardhana hall. Before leaving the temple, the Lord would stand behind the Garuḍa pillar, fall prostrate and offer prayers; on the way back He met Haridāsa Ṭhākura at Siddha-bakula and returned to His dwelling, the house of Kāśī Miśra. ↩
4. Anubhāṣya: some give the mantra in a fuller form: "O Rādhā, O Kṛṣṇa, O Rāma, O Viṣṇu, O Sītā, O Rāma, O Śiva, O Śiva! Whoever You are, that You are — I always bow to You; whoever You are, that You are — obeisance to You.” ↩

5. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: see the Śrī Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya-khaṇḍa, chapter 9. ↩
6. Anubhāṣya: the day of Kṛṣṇa’s birth festival here is the day after Janmāṣṭamī, the day of the Nandotsava. ↩
7. Anubhāṣya: pāda-sandhye — in the space between the feet. ↩
8. Anubhāṣya: a burning brand whirled very fast looks like an unbroken circle of fire; so fast did the Lord whirl the staff that it seemed to be everywhere at once. ↩
9. Heading in the edition: “Nitāi too whirls a staff and shows Himself a cowherd.” ↩
10. Heading in the edition: “On Vijayā-daśamī the Lord dresses the devotees as an army of monkeys and Himself plays Hanumān.” ↩
11. Anubhāṣya: the Mother of the world is Sītā-devī. ↩
12. Heading in the edition: “The Lord sends off all the devotees of Gauḍa, telling them to come to Him every year for the Guṇḍicā festival.” ↩
13. Anubhāṣya: the prākṛta-sahajiyās claim that Mahāprabhu sent Nityānanda to Gauḍa to continue a family line; such an idea springs only from offence at His feet. Śrī Nityānanda is non-different from the Lord, the original source of all viṣṇu-tattva, and no authoritative book records any such order. ↩
14. Heading in the edition: “Nitāi’s companions in preaching — Abhirāma and Gadādhara dāsa.” Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Gadādhara is Gadādhara dāsa of Eṇḍiyādaha. ↩
15. The edition reads তোমার নিকটে (locative: “near You”); the Bengali text and transliteration are corrected accordingly (scan, p. 582). ↩
16. Anubhāṣya: by taking sannyāsa the Lord failed in the dharma of serving His mother. ↩
17. Heading in the edition: “The Lord promises that even now He will come to Māyāpura from time to time to see Śacī.” ↩
18. Heading in the edition: “The Lord has always visited Śacī, but by the power of His māyā Śacī doubts it.” ↩
19. Money was counted in cowrie shells: a gaṇḍā is four cowries, so five gaṇḍās are twenty. Heading in the edition: “The wonderful variety of Rāghava’s coconut offerings.” ↩
20. A paṇa is twenty gaṇḍās, or eighty cowries: four paṇas are 320 cowries, sixteen times the usual price (verse 70). A krośa is about two miles. ↩

21. The edition reads śata-pātra (literally “a hundred vessels”, or a vessel of that name); the commentaries do not explain the word, and it is rendered neutrally as “a plate”. ↩
22. Anubhāṣya: Rāghava Paṇḍita was neither a man of karma afflicted with the worldly “disease of cleanliness” nor a novice devotee who “considers the earth worshipable” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.84.13). He was an eternally perfect servant of Kṛṣṇa, absorbed in transcendental service. Those whose devotion is mixed with karma do not prove their pure devotion by imitating his outward conduct and arguing about worldly purity and impurity (see Antya 4.174, 176; Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.28.4). ↩
23. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: huḍuma is a particular grain; its puffed form (khai) is especially common in Utkala. ↩
24. Anubhāṣya: kṣīra-odana is pāyasa, rice cooked in milk. ↩
25. Heading in the edition: “Śivānanda is told to look after Vāsudeva Datta, who saves nothing.” Anubhāṣya: Śivānanda Sena and Vāsudeva Datta Ṭhākura were living at that time in Kumārahaṭṭa (Hālisahara) and Kāñcaḍāpāḍā. ↩
26. Heading in the edition: “The Lord tells him to bring all the devotees to Purī every year, settling the tolls at the checkpoints.” ↩
27. Anubhāṣya (after Bhaktivinoda Ṭhākura’s introduction to the Śrī Kṛṣṇa-vijaya): Guṇarāja Khān was the title given by the king of Gauḍa to Mālādhara Vasu, thirteenth in descent from Daśaratha Vasu; he began the book, a rendering of the Tenth and Eleventh Cantos of the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, in Śaka 1395 and finished it in Śaka 1402. His second son, Lakṣmīnātha Vasu, bore the title Satyarāja Khān, and Lakṣmīnātha’s son was Rāmānanda Vasu (verse 102). Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: many consider the Śrī Kṛṣṇa-vijaya the first Bengali poem. ↩
28. Anubhāṣya: the full line of the poem reads: “With undivided feeling, with joined palms, glorify Hari: ‘Kṛṣṇa, the son of Nanda, is the Lord of my life!’” ↩
29. The second line is almost the same as Ādi 10.82. ↩
30. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Rāmānanda Vasu and his father Satyarāja Khān were Vaiṣṇava householders of the Vasu family of kāyasthas. ↩
31. Anubhāṣya: these are the marks of a kaniṣṭha (novice) Vaiṣṇava. One who believes that every perfection is attained by the name of Kṛṣṇa alone is a Vaiṣṇava, though his faith is still soft and he does not chant the name constantly. “The best of all” — the best in all of Devī-dhāma: even a novice devotee who worships Viṣṇu stands above the pious karmī and the jñānī, for he believes that Viṣṇu is the eternal Reality. ↩

32. Anubhāṣya: for one who avoids offences against the name and takes shelter of the name of Kṛṣṇa alone, all sins and all worldly desires are destroyed; the nine kinds of devotion (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 7.5.23) reach completeness only through service to the name: “in Kali-yuga the other kinds of bhakti too are performed together with kīrtana” (Bhakti-sandarbha 173). ↩
33. Anubhāṣya: initiation awakens divine knowledge and destroys sin; puraścaryā is the fivefold worship (worship three times a day, japa, tarpaṇa, homa and feeding brāhmaṇas) that brings a mantra to perfection. Śrī Nāma, the mahā-mantra, needs none of this: merely uttering it brings every fruit. “Touching the tongue” means a tongue inclined to service: on a tongue that seeks worldly pleasure the name of Kṛṣṇa never appears. Heading in the edition: “Śrī Nāma — the Lord Kṛṣṇa Himself — does not depend on other acts.” ↩
34. Heading in the edition: a verse of Śrīdhara Svāmī quoted in the Padyāvalī (29). Anubhāṣya: kṛta-cetasām — of the liberated; sumanasām (another reading, sumahatām) — of the wise, who have passed beyond the three guṇas; aṁhasām — of both piety and sin, the acts born of absorption in the world; amūka-loka-sulabha — within reach of everyone who is not mute. ↩
35. Anubhāṣya: Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī (Upadeśāmṛta 5) says that one on whose lips is the name of Kṛṣṇa should be honoured in the mind. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: a Vaiṣṇava householder need only serve a Vaiṣṇava devoted to the name of Kṛṣṇa alone. One initiated into a Viṣṇu-mantra who does not know the truth may be tainted by Māyāvāda — he is “almost a Vaiṣṇava”; but one who has uttered the name of Kṛṣṇa even once without offence, even as a novice, is “a pure Vaiṣṇava”. ↩
36. Heading in the edition: “Mukunda, who seeks no honour himself and honours others, knows Raghunandana to be a devotee of Kṛṣṇa and so sees in him not a son but a guru.” ↩
37. Anubhāṣya (on 121): in people’s eyes Mukunda served as a royal physician, but in truth he was a mahā-bhāgavata, a paramahaṁsa in the guise of a Vaiṣṇava householder, and ordinary people did not know it. ↩
38. Anubhāṣya: ucca-ṭuṅgi — a small house built on a height. ↩
39. Anubhāṣya: mahā-vidagdha — especially versed in the science of government; mahā-siddha — an extraordinary liberated soul. Heading in the edition: “Though Mukunda dissembles and hides himself, the king regards him as a ‘great soul’.” ↩
40. Anubhāṣya: avataṁsa — an ornament for the ears or the head. ↩

41. Anubhāṣya: Mahāprabhu knew Mukunda to be a very dear, intimate devotee. Dividing the service among the two brothers and the son, He gave Mukunda dharma and earning a living, Raghunandana the service of the Deity, and Narahari life among the devotees. ↩
42. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Sārvabhauma worships Jagannāthadeva, the Dāru-brahma (Brahman in the form of wood), while Vidyā-vācaspati, living in Vidyānagara within Navadvīpa-dhāma, serves the Gaṅgā, the Jala-brahma (Brahman in the form of water). ↩
43. Anubhāṣya: for the like devotion to Śrī Rāma of Śrī Anupama (Vallabha), the father of Śrī Jīva, see Antya 4.30–45. ↩
44. Heading in the edition: “Under the Lord’s influence Murāri’s mind changed for a moment.” ↩
45. Anubhāṣya quotes the verse: “The Lord of Śrī and the Lord of Jānakī are one and the same Supreme Soul; there is no difference between Them. Still, my all in all is lotus-eyed Rāma.” ↩
46. Heading in the edition: “Obeisance to Govinda, the giver of all fruits (Brahma-saṁhitā 5.54).” Anubhāṣya: the indragopa is a small red insect; for His devotees Govinda destroys both prārabdha and aprārabdha karma — all the fruits still to be tasted. ↩
47. Anubhāṣya: on Janaloka, at the brahma-satra sacrifice, Sanandana, one of the four Kumāras, recounts to the sages this prayer of the personified śrutis; the repeated jaya is a reverent insistence (“show Your supremacy!”); the Anubhāṣya takes aga-jagad-okasām with ajām: the māyā that holds sway over moving and unmoving beings. ↩
48. Anubhāṣya: Yameśvara-ṭoṭā is a garden on the sands south-west of the Śrī Mandira; there Mahāprabhu gave Gadādhara Paṇḍita a place to live. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the reading “at Jaleśvara” does not seem right; in Yameśvara-ṭoṭā stands the temple of Śrī Ṭoṭā-Gopīnātha, where Gadādhara Paṇḍita lived, serving Gopīnātha and Mahāprabhu. ↩
49. The edition reads ānibe (“will bring”); the earlier text had āsibena (“will come”). ↩
50. As in Madhya 3.43, the battiśā-āṭhiyā is a banana tree that bears a bunch of thirty-two clusters; āṅgaṭiyā — a whole, untorn leaf; the māna is a measure of grain. Anubhāṣya: with this fine description of the feast the author shows his own matchless skill in cooking and serving; compare Madhya 3.44–55. ↩
51. Anubhāṣya: dugdha-tumbī — bottle gourd (lāu) cooked in milk; vesara — vegetables with ground mustard, so called in Utkala; śākrā — a sweet vegetable dish. ↩

52. Anubhāṣya: kuṣmāṇḍa māna-cākī — pumpkin and māna-kacu (giant taro) cut into small rounds and fried. ↩
53. Anubhāṣya: madhurāmla — a chutney, a sweet-and-sour dish; baḍāmla — a sour dish with dumplings (baḍā) of dāl; the soup is of fried kalāi (urad) and fried mung. ↩
54. Anubhāṣya: dugdha-laklakī — cuṣī-puli. ↩
55. Anubhāṣya: a piece of fine cloth was spread on a white wooden board (piṁḍi), and so a seat was made. ↩
56. Anubhāṣya: the food cooked at his home, not yet offered, he did not mix with Jagannātha's prasāda; he took care to keep them apart. ↩
57. The edition reads pātra (the earlier text had pātre). ↩
58. Anubhāṣya: Uddhava, Kṛṣṇa's dearest servant, offered this prayer when calamities had begun in Dvārakā and he learned that Kṛṣṇa wished to close His manifest pastimes — before the conversation known as the Uddhava-gītā. ↩
59. Anubhāṣya: the eighteen mothers are Devakī, Rohiṇī and others. ↩
60. Anubhāṣya names them from the Śrī Kṛṣṇa-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā: Kṛṣṇa's elder paternal uncles Upananda and Abhinanda, the younger ones Sannanda and Nandana, His maternal uncles Yaśodhara, Yaśodeva, Sudeva and others, and the husbands of His paternal aunts, Mahānīla and Sunīla; and it lists His friends — those "like younger brothers", the "dear friends" (priya-sakhās) and the "intimate friends" (priya-narma-sakhās). ↩
61. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: mādhukarī — a mouthful of food obtained in the manner of the bee (madhukara-vṛtti). ↩
62. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: elāci rasa-vāsa — cardamom, juicy and fragrant. ↩
63. Anubhāṣya cites scripture (Hari-bhakti-vilāsa, Bhakti-sandarbha) on the fruits of blaspheming Vaiṣṇavas: the blasphemer loses his merit and falls into hell; one who hears blasphemy of Bhagavān or His devotee and does not go away also falls (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.74.40); as Satī says (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 4.4.17), one who is powerless should cover his ears and leave, while one who is able should silence the blasphemer's evil tongue, even at the cost of his own life. Sārvabhauma reasons in the same way (261–263). ↩
64. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Amogha is a brāhmaṇa and cannot be killed; Sārvabhauma too is a brāhmaṇa, so he may not take his own life; one course remains — never to see the blasphemer's face. ↩
65. Heading in the edition: "Words of the smṛti." Anubhāṣya cites Yājñavalkya, quoted by Śrīdhara Svāmī on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 7.11.28: a husband defiled by a great sin is to be waited for until he is purified. ↩

66. Anubhāṣya: when Duryodhana and the Kauravas came to the forest to inspect their cattle stations, the Gandharva king Citrasena took them captive; Duryodhana's ministers begged the Pāṇḍavas for help, and Bhīmasena, remembering Duryodhana's past misdeeds, spoke these words. ↩
67. Anubhāṣya: Śukadeva spoke this to Parīkṣit when Kaṁsa ordered the Dānavas to persecute the sages and saints; mahad-atikrama — disrespect to Viṣṇu and the Vaiṣṇavas in body, mind or word, that is, vaiṣṇava-aparādha (compare Antya 3.146, 163). ↩
68. Heading in the edition: "The Lord hurries to the Bhaṭṭa's house and gives Amogha good counsel." ↩
69. Anubhāṣya quotes the Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta: "I worship Amogha Paṇḍita, whom Śrī Gaura made His own: his whole being is full of prema, his voice falters with it, and his body thrills." ↩
70. Anubhāṣya: the fruit of his blasphemy was a mortal illness, and Amogha could no longer make amends; but for the sake of Sārvabhauma and his wife, vessels of His mercy, the Lord forgave the offender, saved his life and gave him devotion to Kṛṣṇa; had He not forgiven Amogha, the punishment would indirectly have fallen on the Bhaṭṭa, his guardian; so the Lord showed His majesty, depth and generosity. ↩
71. The verse = Madhya 7.155 (the closing refrain); the translation is the same as there. ↩