Chapter 1

The Auspicious Invocation: Obeisance to the Guru and Others

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. The chapter opens with fourteen verses that establish the truth (tattva). In verses 15–17 the author offers the maṅgalācaraṇa, the auspicious invocation, glorifying Śrī Madana-mohana, Śrī Govinda and Śrī Gopīnātha. The first of the fourteen verses is a general obeisance to six truths, and the whole chapter is nothing but its detailed explanation. The word “guru” means both the dīkṣā-guru, who gives initiation, and the śikṣā-guru, who instructs. The disciple must regard them as a manifestation (prakāśa) of Kṛṣṇa. The Lord's devotees (īśa-bhaktas) are of two kinds: siddhas, who have reached perfection, and sādhakas, who are still on the path of practice (sādhana). The Lord (Īśa) is Kṛṣṇa in His original form, His svayaṁ-rūpa, together with His kāya-vyūhas, the expansions of His body. The avatāras are of three kinds: aṁśa-avatāras, guṇa-avatāras and śaktyāveśa-avatāras. In this connection the chapter examines the truth of Kṛṣṇa's prakāśa, and with it the truth of vilāsa. Kṛṣṇa has three kinds of potency (śakti): the Lakṣmīs in Vaikuṇṭha and other abodes, the queens in Dvārakā, and, best of all, the gopīs of Vraja. Kṛṣṇa and His kāya-vyūhas are īśa-tattva, the truth of the Lord. All the devotees are āvaraṇa-tattva, His surrounding retinue, and are therefore a special potency of His. A potency and its possessor are eternally one when they are seen as non-different, and eternally distinct when the potency is seen apart from its possessor. Thus His inconceivable potency establishes one undivided Truth. This conclusion agrees with Vedānta, and its name is acintya-bhedābheda-tattva, the truth of inconceivable oneness and difference. The last part of the chapter tells of the true nature (svarūpa) and greatness of Śrī Caitanya and Nityānanda.

Śrī Caitanya, Nityānanda, Advaita — the root of prema — Haridāsa, Svarūpa Gosvāmī, Śrī Vaṁśīvadanānanda, Sārvabhauma, Rāmānanda, the two brothers Rūpa and Sanātana; Śrī Jīva, Gopāla Bhaṭṭa, Raghunātha — Dāsa and Bhaṭṭa, Śivānanda, Kavi Karṇapūra, Narottama, Śrīnivāsa, Rāmacandra, Kṛṣṇadāsa, Baladeva, and Cakravartī, the foremost. I have bowed with care to the Lord and His devotees, and in the Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya, which gives the essence, I have explained the Caitanya-caritāmṛta at length. O devotees, weigh it well! The stories of Gaura are an ocean; Kṛṣṇadāsa sailed upon it and brought back a stream of nectar. Vaiṣṇavas drink the nectar of this poem, their hearts grow peaceful, and they long to drink it again and again. Everyone told me, poor and destitute as I am, to compose a commentary on it. I took the sādhus' command upon my head, composed this commentary with care, and placed it in the sādhus' hands.

*The auspicious invocation begins. General obeisance to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya as the Truth (tattva) —*

1 I worship the gurus, the devotees of the Lord, His avatāras, His manifestations and His potencies — and the Lord Himself, who is known as Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya.[1]

Special obeisance to the two worshipful Lords: Nitāi and Gaura rise together like the moon and the sun and show mercy to living beings —

2 I worship Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and Śrī Nityānanda, who are like a wonderful sun and moon. They have risen together on the eastern horizon of Gauḍa, dispelling the darkness and bestowing good on all.

The Truth this book establishes. The one nondual Supreme Truth, Gaura-Kṛṣṇa, is perceived in three different ways —

3 There is no Truth in the world higher than Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. That which the Upaniṣads call the non-dual Brahman is the effulgence of His body; the Puruṣa, the Supersoul who dwells within every heart, is His partial manifestation; and Bhagavān, full in all six opulences, is He Himself.

*The blessing, and the external reason for Gaura's descent — (Vidagdha-mādhava, Act 1, verse 2)*

4 “May the Lord Hari, the son of Śacī, illumined by a mass of lustre more beautiful than gold, ever shine in the inmost cave of your hearts. Out of His mercy He has descended in the age of Kali to bestow what had not been given for a very long time — the treasure of devotion to Himself, rich in the most exalted, radiant ujjvala-rasa.” (Vidagdha-mādhava, 1.2)

The root purpose of Gaura's descent; the truth about Gaura — (from the diary of Svarūpa Gosvāmī)

5 “Śrī Rādhā is the transformation of Kṛṣṇa’s love, His pleasure potency, hlādinī-śakti. Therefore, though Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are one in Self, from time without beginning They have appeared in the world in two different forms. Now these Two have become one and are manifest as Śrī Caitanya. I bow to Him, Kṛṣṇa Himself, adorned with the sentiment and the lustre of Śrī Rādhā.” (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)

The root purpose of Gaura's descent: three confidential reasons —

6 “What is the greatness of Śrī Rādhā’s love? What is My own wondrous sweetness, which She alone tastes through that love? And what is the happiness She feels in experiencing Me?” Longing to know this, the moon Hari, rich with Her sentiment, was born from the ocean of Śacī’s womb. (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)

The truth about Śrī Nityānanda, and obeisance to Him —

7 “Saṅkarṣaṇa, the Lord who lies in the Causal Ocean, the Lord who lies in the Garbha Ocean, the Lord who lies in the Ocean of Milk, and Śeṣa are His portions and the parts of His portions: may that Rāma who is called Nityānanda be my refuge.” (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)

The five forms of Śrī Nityānanda. (1) His form as Saṅkarṣaṇa in Vaikuṇṭha —

8 "I take refuge in Śrī Nityānanda Rāma, whose form called Saṅkarṣaṇa shines amid the fourfold expansion (catur-vyūha) in the all-pervading world of Vaikuṇṭha, full of every opulence and beyond māyā." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)

(2) The Supersoul, the cause of living beings and the world — Kāraṇodakaśāyī, the first Puruṣa —

9 "I take refuge in Śrī Nityānanda Rāma. A part of Him is the original Lord, the Puruṣa, the master of māyā, who lies in person in the midst of the Causal Ocean, His body the shelter of countless universes." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)

(3) The father of the lotus-born — Garbhodakaśāyī, the second Puruṣa —

10 "I take refuge in Śrī Nityānanda Rāma. A part of His part is the blessed Garbhodakaśāyī, whose navel-lotus, with all the worlds as its stem, is the birthplace of Brahmā, the creator of the worlds." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)

(4) Kṣīrodaśāyī, the third Puruṣa; (5) Śeṣa, who holds up the earth —

11 "I take refuge in Śrī Nityānanda Rāma. A part of a part of His part is Viṣṇu who lies on the Ocean of Milk, the Supersoul and maintainer of all beings; and Ananta, who upholds the earth, is a portion of that Viṣṇu." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)

The truth about Śrī Advaita, and obeisance to Him —

12 Mahā-Viṣṇu is the maker of the world, who creates it through māyā; and this Lord Advaita Ācārya is His avatāra.

13 He is called Advaita because He is non-different from Hari, and Ācārya because He teaches bhakti. I take shelter of Him, the Lord Advaita Ācārya, who has descended as a devotee.

*The intrinsic nature (svarūpa) of the Pañca-tattva, and obeisance to Them —*

14 "I bow to Kṛṣṇa, who is manifest as five truths — the Pañca-tattva: as a devotee in form and a devotee in essence, as the incarnation of a devotee, as the one called a devotee, and as the potency of devotion." (Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī)[2]

Anubhāṣya.

At the very beginning the author wrote fourteen verses as the maṅgalācaraṇa, the auspicious invocation. In them he pointed out the subject this book establishes, blessed the listeners and offered them his respects. The first seven chapters of the Ādi-līlā explain exactly this, step by step and in detail.

*Obeisance to his own cherished Deity, the Lord of sambandha (relationship with the Lord) —*

15 All glory to the merciful Śrī Śrī Rādhā and Madana-mohana! I am lame and dull of mind, and They are my only refuge; Their lotus feet are all I have.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I am lame and dull-witted. My only refuge is the supremely merciful Śrī Śrī Rādhā-Madana-mohana, and Their lotus feet are all my wealth. May They be glorified!

Anubhāṣya.

Verses composed by the author himself — paṅgoḥ (of one who cannot go elsewhere on his own feet, by his own strength) manda-mateḥ (of one whose small intelligence is absorbed in sense objects; of one who makes no effort in practices driven by other desires, karma, jñāna and the like; of one devoted exclusively [ekāntin]) mama gatī (my refuge: such are They for me. Gati is "that toward which one goes" [gamyate], that is, a shelter) mat-sarvasva-padāmbhojau (They whose lotus feet are all my wealth) suratau (merciful; or, boundlessly attached to each other) rādhā-madana-mohanau (the Deities who bear these names) jayatām (may They abide in all Their supremacy).

*Obeisance to his own cherished Deity, the Lord of abhidheya (the means) —*

16 I remember Śrī Śrī Rādhā and Śrī Govindadeva, seated on a throne in a beautiful temple of jewels beneath a wish-fulfilling tree in the radiant forest of Vṛndāvana, served by Their dearest companions.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Śrī Rādhā-Govinda sit on a throne in a jewelled temple, beneath the wish-fulfilling tree of Vṛndāvana, a land of radiant beauty. Their dear companions serve Them. I remember Them.

Anubhāṣya.

dīvyad-vṛndāraṇya-kalpa-drumādhaḥ (at the foot of the wish-fulfilling tree in the radiant forest of Vṛndāvana. "Radiant" means supremely beautiful and enchanting to the mind) śrīmad-ratnāgāra-siṁhāsana-sthau (seated on a jewelled throne within a jewelled chamber of wondrous beauty) preṣṭhālībhiḥ (by Their dearest companions, devoted to service: the intimate confidantes [priya-narma-sakhīs] led by Śrī Lalitā, who are surrounded by Śrī Rūpa-mañjarī and others) sevyamānau (Those whom they serve) śrī-śrī-rādhā-śrīla-govinda-devau smarāmi (I remember Śrī Śrī Rādhā and Śrīla Govindadeva).

*Obeisance to his own cherished Deity, the Lord of prayojana (the goal) —*

17 May the beautiful Śrī Gopīnātha, who begins the sweet rāsa dance, be our good fortune. Standing on the bank by Vaṁśīvaṭa, He draws the gopīs to Himself with the sounds of His flute.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrīmān Gopīnātha, who begins the rapturous rāsa dance, stands on the bank by Vaṁśīvaṭa and draws the gopīs with the sound of His flute. May He grant us what is auspicious.

Anubhāṣya.

śrīmān (He whose form is full of supreme beauty) rāsa-rasārambhī (He who begins the rapturous rāsa dance) veṇu-svanaiḥ (with the sounds of His flute) gopīḥ (the gopīs, the young cowherd women of Vraja) karṣan (drawing. He loosens in them every desire unrelated to Kṛṣṇa and, by the rope of prema that is His flute's sound, draws them out of their homes) vaṁśīvaṭa-taṭa-sthitaḥ

(standing at the foot of the Vaṁśīvaṭa tree) gopī-nāthaḥ (He who sports freely) naḥ (for us) śriye (for the wealth of prema) astu (may He be).

18 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra, and glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

The three Deities whom the Gauḍīyas long to worship —

19 These three Deities have made the Gauḍīya devotees Their own. I worship Their feet: these Three are my Lords.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

These three Deities — Śrī Madana-mohana, Śrī Govindadeva and Śrī Gopīnātha — are the presiding Lords of Vṛndāvana. They gave the Gauḍīya devotees the right to serve each of Them, and so made them Their own.

Anubhāṣya.

The Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇavas serve the eighteen-syllable mantra. The Kṛṣṇa named in it is Madana-mohana; its Govinda is Govinda; and its Gopījana-vallabha is Gopīnātha. To realize Kṛṣṇa as Madana-mohana is sambandha. To serve Govinda is abhidheya. To be drawn by Gopījana-vallabha is prayojana. Śrī Mahāprabhu taught these three truths: sambandha, abhidheya and prayojana. These three Deities are forms of Bhagavān that embody those three truths, and They are the presiding Lords of Śrī Vṛndāvana.

The word gauḍīya means “of the land of Gauḍa.” The part of Bhārata-varṣa south of the Himālayas and north of the Vindhyas is called Āryāvarta. It holds the five lands of Gauḍa: Sārasvata, Kānyakubja (Lakṣmaṇāvatī), Madhya-gauḍa, Maithila and Utkala. Many call Bengal Gauḍa, and the name “Gauḍa” belonged above all to the capital of Bengal. Devotees from Utkala are called “Oriya devotees,” and in the same way the people of Bengal are called “Gauḍīya.” The south, in turn, is known as Pañca-draviḍa, “the five Draviḍas.” All four ācāryas of the Vaiṣṇava sampradāyas were born in the land of Draviḍa. The Draviḍian Vaiṣṇavas took shelter of these ācāryas. So the word “Gauḍīya” may well have come into use from a wish to be distinguished from them. Śrī Rāmānujācārya was born at Mahābhūtapurī in southern Andhra; Śrī Madhvācārya in the village of Uḍupī in Paraśurāma-kṣetra, in the Mangalore district; Śrī Nimbāditya in the village of Muṅgerapattana in Dakṣiṇāpatha; and Śrī Viṣṇusvāmī in the land of Pāṇḍya. Śrī Mahāprabhu accepted the Śrī Mādhva-sampradāya. Yet the Vaiṣṇava ācāryas of the Tattvavāda branch, who hold to Madhva's teaching, are Draviḍians. Therefore the sampradāya that has taken shelter at Śrī Gaura's feet is called "Gauḍīya." Moreover, Śrī Ānandatīrtha Pūrṇaprajña Madhvācārya has another name: Śrī Gauḍa-pūrṇānanda. So Śrī Gaura's devotees may be called "Mādhva" as well as "Gauḍīya."

The author explains his own auspicious invocation —

20 At the beginning of the book I make the auspicious invocation — the remembrance of three: the Guru, the Vaiṣṇavas and Bhagavān.

21 Remembering these three, one overcomes all obstacles and easily attains one's heart's desire.

22 This invocation is of three kinds: indicating the subject, giving blessing and offering obeisance.

23 In the first two verses is the obeisance to the worshipful Lord, in two ways — general and specific.

24 In the third verse I indicate the subject, through which the Supreme Truth is made known.

25 In the fourth verse I bless the world, praying that the grace of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya may reach all.

26 In that verse I also tell the external reason for His descent; in the fifth and sixth verses I tell its root purpose.

27 In these six verses is the truth of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, and in the next five, the greatness of Śrī Nityānanda.

28 Then two verses tell the truth of Advaita, and one verse explains the Pañca-tattva.

29 In these fourteen verses I make the auspicious invocation, and within them I describe the whole subject.

30 Offering obeisance to all the Vaiṣṇavas who hear this, I shall now consider the meaning of all these verses.

31 O Vaiṣṇavas, hear with one-pointed mind how the scriptures establish the truth of Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa.[3]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
What the scriptures establish about Kṛṣṇa, who appeared as Caitanya.

The explanation of the fourteen verses above begins. Explanation of the first verse —

32 Kṛṣṇa, the two kinds of guru, the devotees, the avatāras, the manifestations and the potencies — in these six forms He enjoys His pastimes.

Anubhāṣya.
The word guru-dvaya (“two gurus”) means the dīkṣā-guru and the śikṣā-guru. Both are the one, undivided guru-tattva. The dīkṣā-guru and the śikṣā-guru differ in their līlās, but for the disciple both are the same truth and deserve the same honour.

33 I worship the feet of these six truths; first I make the invocation in general.

34 I worship the gurus, the devotees of the Lord, His avatāras, His manifestations and His potencies — and the Lord Himself, who is known as Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I worship the two gurus, distinguished as the dīkṣā-guru and the śikṣā-guru; the Lord's devotees, Śrīvāsa and others; the Lord's avatāras, Advaita Prabhu and others; the Lord's manifestations, Prabhu Śrī Nityānanda and others; and the Lord's potencies, Śrī Gadādhara and others. And I worship the Supreme Truth, the Lord Himself, named Mahāprabhu Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.

(grantha-kāraḥ (the author of the book, that is, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa)) gurūn (the host of gurus, that is, those who show the way, give the mantra and instruct: Śrī Nityānanda, Raghunātha, Rūpa and others) īśa-bhaktān (the servants of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa: Śrīvāsa and others) kṛṣṇa-caitanya-saṁjñakam īśam (Bhagavān, known as Kṛṣṇa Caitanya) īśāvatārakān (Śrī Advaitācārya and others) tat-prakāśān (His manifestations, that is, those of Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa: Śrī Nityānanda and others, my own gurus) tac-chaktīḥ (His potencies, that is, those of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa: Śrī Gadādhara, Dāmodara, Jagadānanda and others) (These six truths are non-different from Him and form His surrounding retinue, His āvaraṇa) vande ([I] worship).

*Gurus who differ in their līlās —*

35 First I offer obeisance at the feet of my mantra-guru and of all my instructing gurus.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Tāṅhāra (“his”): the singular is used because both kinds of guru are regarded as one truth. A variant reading has tāṅ-sabāra (“of them all”).

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Jīva Prabhu writes in the Bhakti-sandarbha (section 202): “The means to be followed (abhidheya) is selfless devotion, akiñcanā bhakti. Yet its cause is ‘association with My devotees,’ so that association is itself the means, and in devotion too one should see that very association. At first a person associates with particular devotees. That association gives rise to a corresponding faith, a taste for the narratives handed down in their line, and so on, and so he turns toward Bhagavān. Through that same association a taste (ruci) awakens in him for the particular manifestation of Bhagavān whom those devotees worship, and for their particular path of worship. Then, wishing to know these more fully, he takes one or many of them as his guru and hears from them. * * For those who long for devotion marked by love (prīti), the path led by taste is better than the path of reasoning, which guides those in whom taste has not yet awakened. On both paths the former śravaṇa-guru, the guru from whom one hears, becomes the śikṣā-guru and teaches the rules of worship. But the mantra-guru is only one, for accepting many will be forbidden later." (Section 206): "The śravaṇa-guru and the śikṣā-guru who teaches worship are usually the same person. One should also know that there may be many śikṣā-gurus." (Section 208): "Knowledge of the scriptures arises only from association with the śravaṇa-guru." (Section 207): "Mercy (anugraha) means initiation into the mantra." (Section 209): "Those who reject the guru's feet and try to turn toward Bhagavān grow weary in their various means. Therefore hundreds of calamities befall them, and they remain here in worldly existence (saṁsāra), like those adrift on the ocean without a helmsman." "He is attained through devotion to the guru, and the wise serve Him by remembrance. But even when He is met, living beings absorbed in pride cannot attain Him." (Section 210): "One should take shelter of the guru who guides one to the highest goal, even if one must give up a worldly guru and others to do so."

If selfless devotion is the means, then what one should see in it is association with Kṛṣṇa's devotees. At first the jīva associates with Kṛṣṇa's devotees, gains faith (śraddhā) and turns toward Kṛṣṇa. Through that association a taste awakens in him for the particular manifestation of Bhagavān he will serve, and for a particular path of worship. A jīva endowed with pious merit (sukṛti) then wishes to know more about Kṛṣṇa. He takes shelter of one or more gurus and hears from them. For those who seek devotion marked by love, the path of taste is commended, not the path of reasoning followed by those in whom taste has not awakened. On both paths the former śravaṇa-guru becomes the śikṣā-guru and teaches the corresponding rules of worship. The mantra-guru is one; accepting many is forbidden. The śravaṇa-guru and the guru who teaches worship are usually the same person, while śikṣā-gurus may be many. And knowledge of the scriptures comes only from association with the śravaṇa-guru. Initiation into the mantra is itself the mercy (anugraha). Those who disregard the guru's lotus feet and seek nearness to Bhagavān grow weary in their various means. So hundreds upon hundreds of calamities fall upon the living being who lacks devotion to the guru. He bears the name of a devotee, yet the calamities keep him only in worldly existence. Like a boat on the ocean without a helmsman, he finds no deliverance from it. Kṛṣṇa is attained only by serving the guru. Devotees serve Him by remembrance and other practices. Someone may think, "I already understand more — what more could another guru teach me?" Such pride is an offense, and because of it one cannot attain devotion to Kṛṣṇa. One should take shelter not of an unworthy pretender (guru-bruva) — a worldly, conventional or hereditary guru — but of the pāramārthika-guru, who guides one to the highest goal.

*The author's śikṣā-gurus —*

36 Śrī Rūpa, Sanātana, Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa, Śrī Jīva, Gopāla Bhaṭṭa and Raghunātha Dāsa —

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Rūpa, Śrī Sanātana and Śrī Jīva — see Ādi 10.85. Śrī Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa — see Ādi 10.153–158. Śrī Raghunātha Dāsa — see Ādi 10.91. Śrī Gopāla Bhaṭṭa — see Ādi 10.105.

37 these six are my instructing gurus; at the lotus feet of them all I offer millions of obeisances.

*The Lord's devotee (īśa-bhakta) —*

38 To all the devotees of the Lord, of whom Śrīvāsa is the chief, I offer thousands of obeisances at their lotus feet.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrīvāsa — see Ādi 10.8.

*The Lord's avatāra (īśāvatāra) —*

39 Advaita Ācārya is a partial avatāra of the Lord; at His lotus feet I offer millions of obeisances.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Advaita — see Ādi, Chapter 6.

*The Lord's manifestation (īśa-prakāśa) —*

40 Śrī Nityānanda Rāya is the Lord’s own direct manifestation (svarūpa-prakāśa). I worship His lotus feet: I am His servant.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Nityānanda — see Ādi, Chapter 5.

*The Lord's potency (īśa-śakti) —*

41 Gadādhara Paṇḍita and the others are the Lord's own potencies; at the feet of them all I offer thousands of obeisances.

*The Lord Himself (īśa-tattva) —*

42 Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is Bhagavān Himself; at His lotus feet I offer endless obeisances.

43 Having bowed to the Lord together with His entourage, I shall now consider how He Himself is these six.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Āvaraṇa, the surrounding retinue: the devotees who surround the Lord on every side are His āvaraṇa. I have bowed to Him together with this retinue. The six truths — the guru, the Lord's devotee, the Lord's avatāra, the Lord's manifestation, the Lord's potency, and the Lord Himself, Kṛṣṇa Caitanya — are His own svarūpa. Now I shall consider how this is so.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Gaurasundara receives endless obeisances, Śrī Advaita and the śikṣā-gurus millions, and the truths of potency and of the devotees thousands. This difference in the number of obeisances does not imply a worldly notion of difference born of māyā.

Kṛṣṇa Caitanyadeva displays Himself (vilāsa) in exactly these six forms of truth: the two gurus, the Lord's devotee, the Lord, the avatāra, the manifestation and the potency. By the principle of acintya-bhedābheda, this nondual Knowledge (advaya-jñāna) is called by the name "Kṛṣṇa Caitanya."

44 Although my Guru is a servant of Śrī Caitanya, I know him to be His manifestation.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

All jīvas are servants of Kṛṣṇa, so my guru too is in truth Kṛṣṇa's servant. Even so, I shall know my guru as Kṛṣṇa's manifestation (prakāśa). For the disciple, the guru is the very form of Kṛṣṇa's manifestation. But Nityānanda, who is Baladeva, is in truth prakāśa-tattva whose nature is vilāsa.

*The truth of the guru. (1) The dīkṣā-guru —*

45 On the evidence of scripture the guru is a form of Kṛṣṇa: in the form of the guru, Kṛṣṇa bestows His mercy on the devotees.

Anubhāṣya.

Everyone except Mahāprabhu Caitanyadeva is His servant. So in the guru no manifestation is possible other than service to Caitanya. He is a servant because he is the āśraya-vigraha, the form who shelters and holds love. The guru is a form in which service is manifest, and he appears in no other way than in service to the One who is served. The guru is the very form of a manifestation (prakāśa), and there is no room to regard him as the viṣaya-vigraha, the object of love. It is as the āśraya-vigraha that the scriptures call him a form of Kṛṣṇa.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.17.27)*

46 "Know the ācārya to be Me. Never show him disrespect, and do not envy him, thinking him an ordinary mortal, for the Guru embodies all the gods." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.17.27)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bhagavān said to Uddhava: "O Uddhava, know the guru to be My very self. Do not regard the guru with asūyā, that is, with disrespect, thinking him an ordinary man. The guru embodies all the gods."

Anubhāṣya.

Uddhava heard about svadharma, one's true duty, both for those who follow varṇāśrama and for others; its defining mark is devotion to Kṛṣṇa. He then asked Bhagavān how to practise this devotion. The Lord describes the nature of each varṇa. Speaking of the brahmacārī's life in the guru's house, He tells how one should behave toward the guru:

ācāryam (the guru) mām (as My dearest one) vijānīyāt (one should know) karhicit (ever) na avamanyeta (one should not reproach, even if there is a reason) guruḥ sarva-deva-mayaḥ ([for] the guru embodies all the gods) martya-buddhyā ([him] with an intellect bound by conditioned, material place, time and person) na asūyeta (one should not, growing envious through one's own material dullness, think him equal to oneself).

Ācārya: “The twice-born who performs the upanayana rite for a disciple and teaches him the Veda with its rituals and secret portions is called an ācārya.” (Manu-saṁhitā 2.140). “He who gathers the meaning of the scriptures, establishes others in right conduct and himself acts accordingly is called an ācārya.” (Vāyu Purāṇa).

Śrī Bhagavān Himself appears before the disciple in the form of the ācārya. In the conduct of the revered ācārya there is nothing but service to Hari. He is the āśraya-vigraha in person. If someone has turned away from serving Hari yet fancies himself an ācārya, no one will take his bad conduct for good. The ācārya's undivided worship is what shows him to be a manifestation of Bhagavān. Those devoted to their senses and unsatisfied in enjoyment envy even the ācārya's faultless conduct. The ācārya is a limb inseparable from Bhagavān, the One who is served. Therefore a jīva who harbours hostility toward him loses the mercy of Bhagavān and His associates and falls into misfortune.

The guru is in truth a servant of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. Yet the disciple looks with transcendental vision and will know him as a special manifestation of Śrī Gaurasundara. This does not mean that the guru in fact lacks the eternal relationship of a servant with Kṛṣṇa, the One he serves, or that he differs in no way from Vrajendranandana in the variety of līlā. The impersonalists (nirviśeṣa-vādīs) hold that transcendental realization contains no distinctions — neither internal ones, nor those among things of one kind, nor those among things of different kinds. But no Vaiṣṇava ācārya endowed with devotion follows their view or says that there is no difference whatever between the guru and Kṛṣṇa. He teaches acintya-bhedābheda-tattva. Śrī Raghunātha Dāsa Gosvāmī Prabhu says of the guru: “Remember the best of gurus as most dear to Mukunda.” Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī Prabhu wrote in the Bhakti-sandarbha (section 213): “Pure devotees see Śrī Guru and Śrī Śiva as non-different from Bhagavān only in the sense that they are supremely dear to Him.” Following him, Śrī Viśvanātha Cakravartī Ṭhākura said in his hymn to Śrī Gurudeva: “All the scriptures call him Hari Himself, and the virtuous regard him so; yet he is the Lord's dear servant. I worship the lotus feet of such a guru.” That is, all the scriptures say that for the disciple the guru is “Hari,” and the sādhus know the guru as such. But the guru, eternally the very form of a manifestation, has the right to the dear service of Kṛṣṇa Caitanyadeva. I, the guru's eternal servant, worship the lotus feet of such a guru. Every Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇava meditates on the guru, knowing Śrī Gurudeva, the āśraya-vigraha, as tadīya, “His own.” In all the ancient systems of worship and in the songs of pure devotion, Śrī Gurudeva is named a dear friend of Śrī Rādhā or a manifestation of Śrī Nityānanda's own form.

*(2) The truth of the śikṣā-guru; his two forms: (a) the caitya-guru (the guru within the heart), (b) the mahānta-guru —*

47 I know the instructing Guru to be Kṛṣṇa’s own form, in two aspects: the Indweller within, and the best of devotees.

Anubhāṣya.

He who teaches worship (bhajana) is the śikṣā-guru. One who is without worship and of bad conduct is neither a guru nor an ācārya. Teachers are of two kinds: the mahānta-guru, who delights in worship, and the caitya-guru, who grants the discernment favourable to worship. Instruction in worship differs according to the goal (sādhya) and the practice. Śrī Gurudeva, who gives Kṛṣṇa, enriches the disciple with knowledge of sambandha and awakens in him a realization of his own service. The disciple receives the mercy of this dīkṣā-guru and learns to serve Viṣṇu properly. This instruction is called abhidheya. The śikṣā-guru is the āśraya-vigraha who embodies abhidheya. So he is not different from the dīkṣā-guru, who gives knowledge of sambandha. Both are Śrī Gurudeva. To treat one of them as higher and the other as lower, outwardly or at heart, brings offense. As words, Kṛṣṇa's “rūpa” (form) and “svarūpa” do not differ. The dīkṣā-guru Śrī Sanātana gives the lotus feet of Madana-mohana. The jīva has forgotten Bhagavān and cannot wander in Vraja. Sanātana gives him the realization that Bhagavān's feet are all his wealth. The śikṣā-guru Śrī Rūpa gives the right to serve the feet of Śrī Govinda and His dearest ones.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.29.6)*

48 “O Lord! Even if the wise lived as long as Brahmā and remembered with ever-growing joy all that You have done for them, they could not repay their debt to You. For, dispelling all that is inauspicious in embodied souls, You come to them from without as the ācārya and from within as the Supersoul, and reveal to them the way to Yourself." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.29.6)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Lord! The wise are filled with bliss when they remember You, yet even with a lifespan like Brahmā's they could not repay You. For in Your boundless mercy You abide outside as the ācārya and within as the indwelling Lord (antaryāmī). You do this to destroy all that is inauspicious in embodied souls and to reveal to them their own path.

Anubhāṣya.

Uddhava had heard the scripture of yoga in detail and saw that the path of yoga is very difficult. He wishes to hear from Bhagavān briefly about bhakti-yoga, and he says to Him:

īśa (O Lord) tava kṛtam (the kindness You have done) smarantaḥ (thinking of it) ṛddha-mudaḥ (those whose supreme bliss has grown) kavayaḥ (the discerning) brahmāyuṣā api (even with a lifespan equal to Brahmā's, spent worshipping You) apacitim (repayment, that is, discharge of the debt) naiva upayanti (do not attain) yaḥ ([for] You) bahiḥ ācārya-vapuṣā (outwardly in the form of the ācārya, that is, as the mantra-guru or the śikṣā-guru) antaḥ caitya-vapuṣā (inwardly in the form of the indwelling Lord [antaryāmī]) tanubhṛtām (of embodied living beings) aśubham (what is inauspicious, that is, absorption in objects other than Kṛṣṇa) vidhunvan (dispelling) sva-gatim (their own path, that is, their true nature, marked by being the Lord's associate) vyanakti (You reveal).

*Śrī Bhagavān grants the perfection of love to the surrendered practitioner — (Bhagavad-gītā 10.10)*

49 "To those who are ever devoted to Me and worship Me with love, I give the understanding that brings them to Me." (Bhagavad-gītā, 10.10)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"To those who worship Me with love through eternal bhakti-yoga, I give the pure prema-yoga born of pure knowledge. Through it they reach My abode of supreme bliss."

Anubhāṣya.

There are wise devotees (paṇḍitas) who know that everything arises and acts from Bhagavān. They are fixed in unwavering bhakti-yoga and worship Him; their minds are turned to Kṛṣṇa, and Kṛṣṇa is their life. They share their feelings with one another and speak about Hari; so they please Kṛṣṇa and delight in Him. Of them Kṛṣṇa says to Arjuna:

teṣām satata-yuktānām (of those who always long to be joined with Me in service) prīti-pūrvakam (with love, with reverence) bhajatām (who serve: those who have given up other desires, karma and jñāna and are devoted to serving Hari) tam buddhi-yogam dadāmi (I give that buddhi-yoga, that is, I Myself awaken it in the movements of their hearts) yena te mām upayānti (by which they attain Me).

(The sense: this buddhi-yoga cannot be gained by oneself or from anyone else; I alone can give it, and only they, such devotees, can receive it.)

50 "Thus the Lord Himself instructed Brahmā and made him realise it."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Bhagavān Himself made Brahmā realize this by instructing him as follows.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.9.30–35)*

51 "Receive from Me, as I speak it, the supremely confidential knowledge of Myself, endowed with realisation, together with its secret and that secret's integral part." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.9.31)[4]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Out of mercy I am telling you My supreme secret knowledge, filled with realization (vijñāna), together with its mystery and its parts. Accept it.

Anubhāṣya.
Brahmā resolved to create and sank into deep thought. He heard a divine voice say "Tapa" (austerity), and he gave himself sincerely to austerity. Viṣṇu became pleased with him, and Brahmā beheld Vaikuṇṭha. There he was freed from pride and began to inquire about the truth, and Bhagavān spoke six verses. See the Gauḍīya-bhāṣya on the Bhāgavatam, pp. 577–629.

me (My, that is, Bhagavān's) jñānam parama-guhyam (knowledge that surpasses even knowledge of the impersonal Brahman and the like) vijñāna-samanvitam (joined with realization [vijñāna]. I give you not merely knowledge of My form, but knowledge joined with vijñāna, the realization of Kṛṣṇa and of all that belongs to Kṛṣṇa) sa-rahasyam (with its mystery. If there is anything secret in it, that comes too, namely prema-bhakti) tad-aṅgam ca (and with its limb: sādhana-bhakti-yoga, which consists of hearing and the rest and aids knowledge of sambandha) mayā gaditam (spoken by Me. You did not ask about these three, yet I speak of them out of mercy, and no one else has spoken of them) sat gṛhāṇa (accept).

52 "By My grace may you truly realise Me as I am — My being, My forms, My qualities and My deeds." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.9.32)

By My mercy, realize the full truth of what My own nature (svarūpa) is, and what My characteristics, form, qualities and līlās are.

Anubhāṣya.

yāvān (of what size and shape. That is, what My form is like, its limbs joined in a particular harmony of fullness, slenderness, length, height and the rest, and what My measure is in My own nature) aham yathā-bhāvaḥ (what My being is, what My characteristics are) aham yad-rūpa-guṇa-karmakaḥ (He who has these forms, qualities and deeds. The forms are the dark, the four-armed, the two-armed and the golden, the form of Kṛṣṇa, of Rāma, of Nṛsiṁha and others. The qualities are love for the devotees and others. The deeds are accepting Lakṣmī, lifting Govardhana and others) tathaiva (just so, in every respect) tattva-vijñānam (realization of their truth) mad-anugrahāt (by My mercy) te (to you) astu (may it be).

(As sādhana-bhakti and prema-bhakti grow in you, you will realize ever more of the sweetness of My form, qualities and līlās. So you will directly realize Me in the land of Vraja — Kṛṣṇa, supremely hard to attain, whose sweetness surpasses even My own form.) (This by itself refutes the view that the four verses point to the impersonal.)

53 "Before creation I alone existed; there was nothing else — neither effect, nor cause, nor That which is beyond them. After creation this whole world is not other than Me, and what remains after its dissolution is also I." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.9.33)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Before this world was created, I alone existed. Nothing existed apart from Me — neither sat nor asat, nor even the indescribable Brahman without attributes (nirviśeṣa). After creation I exist as all this, and when creation dissolves, I alone shall remain."

Anubhāṣya.

aham (the word aham ["I"] denotes the speaker, the one who has form, not the impersonal Brahman, for that cannot be its object. If knowledge of the self [ātmā] were meant, then, as in tat tvam asi ["you are that"], it would have been proper to say tvam eva asīḥ ["you alone were"]. I am that most enchanting divine form [śrī-vigraha] who now appears before you) eva agre (before creation, even at the time of the great dissolution) āsam (I was) anyat na (nothing else was. So say the Śrutis: "Vāsudeva alone was, neither Brahmā nor Śaṅkara," "Nārāyaṇa alone was, neither Brahmā nor Īśāna," and so on. Vaikuṇṭha, His associates and the rest are His inseparable part, so the same word aham includes them, just as the phrase "the king is setting out" includes his retinue.[11]) sad-asat-param (beyond sat and asat. Sat is the effect, asat the cause) yat (that, that is, Brahman) tat anyat na (is not other than Me. Or else: at that time, since there was no variety in the cosmos, I was in the form of pure, attributeless spirit, and in Vaikuṇṭha in the form of Bhagavān with attributes) paścāt (and after creation) aham (I alone am: in Vaikuṇṭha as Bhagavān and other forms, in the worlds as the indwelling Lord and other forms) yad etat (this universe) tat api aham eva asmi (that too is only I, for the universe is not other than Me and is Mine by nature) yo 'vaśiṣyeta so 'ham eva asmi ([and at dissolution] what remains is I).

(The sense: the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's eternal līlās is not limited by time and the like, and He is manifest at all times.)

54 "Whatever appears to exist apart from Me, the Reality, and does not appear in Me, know that to be My māyā, like a reflection and like darkness." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.9.34)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The previous verse established knowledge of the nature (svarūpa) of the Supreme Truth. But there is no realization (vijñāna) until that knowledge of the svarūpa-tattva is made firm by knowing the truth that is other than the svarūpa. The truth other than the svarūpa-tattva is called māyā. This verse sets out knowledge of the māyā-tattva in detail. The svarūpa-tattva is the artha, that is, the true reality. Whatever is perceived outside that truth, and whatever has no place in the perception of the svarūpa-tattva itself, should be known as a manifestation of māyā (māyā-vaibhava) belonging to the ātma-tattva. Since this is not easy to grasp, here are two particular examples. Think of the svarūpa-tattva as the sun. What is other than the sun is perceived in two forms: as ābhāsa, a reflection, and as tamas, darkness. The sun's reflection falls from water onto another place; this is called ābhāsa. The side where the sun's power is not seen is called tamas, that is, darkness. The spiritual world is the rays of Bhagavān's own form. The manifestation of māyā is an ābhāsa that rests on its likeness to that world; this is the example of ābhāsa. The darkness far removed from the spiritual truth (cit-tattva) is that same manifestation of māyā; this is the second example. The point is this: the ātma-tattva and the māyā-tattva stand in a twofold relation. First, whatever is manifest as a form other than the ātma-svarūpa is māyā. And the ignorance, the non-self far removed from the ātma-svarūpa, is also māyā.

Anubhāṣya.

artham (the highest reality) mām ṛte (without Me) yat pratīyeta (what is perceived. When I am perceived it is not perceived, so it is perceived only outside Me) yac ca ātmani na pratīyeta (and what is not perceived without resting on Me, that is, is not perceived by itself) tat (a thing with these marks) ātmanaḥ (of Me, the Supreme Lord) yathābhāsaḥ (like ābhāsa, a reflection. Ābhāsa is a particular reflection of a luminary, somehow cast onto a place beyond its own light. It is perceived only outside the luminary, yet without the luminary it cannot be perceived at all) yathā tamaḥ (like darkness. Here the word tamas means a play of colours close to darkness. It does not exist in the light that is its source, yet it cannot exist without resting on that light) māyām (so too this potency called māyā, which is twofold: jīva-māyā and guṇa-māyā) vidyāt (one should know).

55 “As the great elements enter all beings, great and small, and yet remain outside them, so I am within all that is created and yet beyond it.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.9.35)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The great elements enter beings large and small, yet they also remain independent, as if they had not entered. In the same way I, as the Supersoul (Paramātmā), the shelter of their existence, enter all beings in this world of elements, and yet I eternally abide apart in My form as Bhagavān. For the devotees I am the only object of love. The meaning is this. The great elements — earth, water, fire, air and ether — combine and manifest the gross world. They are present within it as its components, yet in their state as great elements they remain independent. In the same way the spiritual Supreme Lord creates the world through His material potency and His potency of the jīvas. With one portion of Himself He pervades the world, yet at the same time He eternally abides in His spiritual abode in the fullness of His spiritual form. And the jīvas, the tiniest particles of the rays of His spiritual form, taste pure love for Him on the path of pure love. This is the secret.

Anubhāṣya.

yathā mahānti bhūtāni (as the great elements, ether and the rest) uccāvaceṣu bhūteṣu (in higher and lower beings: gods, humans, animals and others) apraviṣṭāni (though situated outside) anupraviṣṭāni (appear to be within) tathā (so too [though I have not entered, for I abide in Vaikuṇṭha, beyond the worlds]) aham teṣu (I, in those renowned for the corresponding qualities) nateṣu (in those who bow down to Me) praviṣṭaḥ (have entered: I abide in the heart to show Myself to their inner sight).

In the same way, without entering, I also abide outside. I do this to give their eyes My beauty and their nostrils My fragrance; to converse with them and fill their ears with the nectar of My sweet voice; and by touch, embrace and the like to let their bodies feel the tenderness, sweetness and other graces of My body. These devotees are beyond the guṇas, and I cannot leave them, either within or without: My play with them is always full of attachment. This shows that the “mystery” is their prema-bhakti, which brings Me so under their control.

56 “This much must be inquired into by one who seeks the truth of the Self: That which exists everywhere and always, both directly and indirectly.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.9.36)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One who seeks knowledge of the ātma-tattva should examine this subject by anvaya-vyatireka, the direct and the indirect method, and search for the reality that is eternal everywhere and always. The point is this: the means by which the secret of love is attained is called sādhana-bhakti. The seeker of truth learns anvaya-vyatireka, that is, injunctions and prohibitions, at the feet of a true guru. Cultivating the truth constantly in this way, he will attain knowledge of the truth.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam contains the teaching of Mahāprabhu Śrī Caitanyadeva in full. The Bhāgavatam has 18,000 verses.

The root of everything in those eighteen thousand verses lies in these four. The verse aham eva briefly describes the truth of Bhagavān, His own form, His qualities and His līlās. The verse ṛte 'rtham examines the truths of māyā, of the jīva and of matter. Māyā-tattva appears separately from Bhagavān's svarūpa-tattva. Jīva-tattva, through its connection with this māyā-tattva, is liable to fall under the control of the māyā potency. Jaḍa-tattva, matter, is the field of the jīva's enjoyment. From these two verses one should fully grasp knowledge of sambandha. The verse yathā mahānti says that Bhagavān's eternal form abides separately, although the truth of Bhagavān is inconceivably one with the jīvas and matter and different from them. It also names the supreme goal (prayojana): the jīvas take shelter at His feet and gain the wealth of great love, mahā-prema. The verse etāvad eva names the only means to reach this supreme goal: sādhana-bhakti. Sādhana-bhakti includes injunctions that lead to the goal; as favourable, they are called anvaya. Actions that obstruct the goal and produce what is unfavourable are counted among the prohibitions and called vyatireka. The truth of practice is called abhidheya. Abhidheya is the instruction one receives through the direct meaning of the scriptures (abhidhā-vṛtti).

Anubhāṣya.

ātmanaḥ (of Me, Bhagavān) tattva-jijñāsunā (by one who wishes to realize what truly brings about his good) etāvad eva jijñāsyam (this alone should be learned at the feet of Śrī Guru).

(What is it?)

yat (that one reality which…) anvaya-vyatirekābhyām (through injunctions and prohibitions…) sarvadā sarvatra syāt (exists always and everywhere).

(If one asks which of heaven, liberation and prema is one's own good, the answer is: prema is established by its own anvaya and vyatireka, whereas heaven and liberation are not established by them.) (That is: of all that is to be learned, this alone should be learned. What is it?)

anvaya-vyatirekābhyām (through union and separation, that is, through sambhoga and vipralambha) yat syāt sarvatra (what exists everywhere: in Śrī Vṛndāvana and the other abodes beyond all the universes — in the servants, friends, elders and beloveds) sarvadā (eternally, even at the time of the great dissolution).

(This points to the relishing of the four rasas of servitude, friendship, parental love and amorous love: dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and śṛṅgāra.)

*(In the first verse of the Śrī Kṛṣṇa-karṇāmṛta) —*

57 “Glory to Cintāmaṇi and to Somagiri, my guru! Glory to my instructing guru, the Lord whose crown is a peacock feather! At the tips of His feet, like the tender shoots of a wish-fulfilling tree, Jayaśrī (Śrī Rādhā) tastes the joy of choosing Him as Her own.” (Kṛṣṇa-karṇāmṛta, 1)[5]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Glory to my guru named Somagiri, who is like a wish-fulfilling gem (cintāmaṇi)![10] Glory also to my śikṣā-guru, Bhagavān, who wears a peacock feather! Jayaśrī, that is, Śrīmatī Rādhikā, tastes the joy of svayaṁvara, the free choice of a husband: she is drawn by the beauty of His toenail tips, on feet that are like shoots of the wish-fulfilling tree.

Anubhāṣya.

The book Śrī Vallabha-digvijaya places the time of Śrī Bilvamaṅgala — a Draviḍian king of ascetics, a tridaṇḍī — in the eighth century of the Śaka era. Bilvamaṅgala is mentioned as the chief disciple of Rāja-Viṣṇusvāmī, who installed the Deity of Dvārakādhīśa. Bilvamaṅgala's disciples were Devamaṅgala and others. Bilvamaṅgala worshipped for seven hundred years in Vṛndāvana at Brahma-kuṇḍa. After his meeting with Vallabha Bhaṭṭa, the worship of his Deity was entrusted to Hari Brahmacārī. Bilvamaṅgala's name also appears in the list of the Dvārakā maṭha of Śaṅkara's sampradāya: “Citsukhācārya (Kali era 2715), Bilvamaṅgala.” Līlāśuka Śrī Bilvamaṅgala Ṭhākura longed to enter the transcendental līlās of Vṛndāvana. At the beginning of his song Śrī Kṛṣṇa-karṇāmṛta he glorifies three kinds of guru:

me (my) guruḥ (the śravaṇa-guru, who shows the way) cintāmaṇiḥ jayati (Cintāmaṇi — may this guru be glorified) somagiriḥ ([the mantra-guru] Somagiri [may he be glorified]) śikṣā-guruḥ śikhi-piñcha-mauliḥ ([the caitya] śikṣā-guru, He whose crown ornament is a peacock feather) bhagavān (Vṛndāvana-candra [may He be glorified]) yat-pāda-kalpa-taru-pallava-śekhareṣu (at the toenail tips on His feet, which are shoots of the wish-fulfilling tree) jaya-śrīḥ (She who is both Jayā and Śrī, that is, Mahālakṣmī, the Queen of Vṛndāvana) līlā-svayam-vara-rasam (the sweetness, the joy, of a svayaṁvara [free choice] enacted in play, with deep anurāga) labhate (attains).

*Kṛṣṇa's mercy in the form of the śikṣā-guru —*

58 The soul cannot see Kṛṣṇa directly; therefore He is the guru within as the Indweller, and becomes the instructing guru in the form of a great devotee.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The indwelling guru abides as the caitya, that is, within the mind. So one cannot see Him directly, face to face. That is why Kṛṣṇa becomes the śikṣā-guru in the form of the mahānta, the best of devotees.

Anubhāṣya.

The conditioned jīva cannot see Kṛṣṇa directly. Therefore Kṛṣṇa awakens in the jīva's heart the discernment that leads to devotion to Kṛṣṇa, and so becomes the caitya-śikṣā-guru. And appearing as a mahānta, He becomes the śikṣā-guru.

*The need for the company of sādhus; the dharma, marks and nature of the sādhu-guru — (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.26.26)*

59 "Therefore the wise should give up bad company and associate with the saintly, for the saints alone, by their words, cut through the attachments of his mind." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.26.26)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Therefore an intelligent person will give up bad company and associate with sādhus. With their good instructions the sādhus will cut all the bonds of his desires that are unfavourable to devotion.

Anubhāṣya.

Urvaśī left Purūravā and went away. Beside himself with grief, he lamented for a whole year; then he gained discernment and understood the fruits of bad company. Śrī Bhagavān tells this story to Uddhava:

tataḥ duḥsaṅgam (bad company: the company of women and of those who keep company with women) utsṛjya (leaving far behind) buddhimān (one who discerns sat from asat) satsu sajjeta (should associate wholeheartedly with Hari's detached servants) santaḥ ([for] the sādhus) asya (of one absorbed in sense objects) mano-vyāsaṅgam (the mind's perverse attachment) uktibhiḥ (by their good instructions) chindanti (destroy).

*The fruit of hearing hari-kathā in the company of sādhus: the awakening of faith, bhāva and prema — (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 3.25.25)*

60 (Lord Kapila to His mother Devahūti:) “In the company of the saints there are talks revealing My power, delightful to the heart and to the ear. By relishing them one quickly comes to faith in Me, the path of liberation, and after it to attraction (rati) and love (prema-bhakti).” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.25.25)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the company of sādhus, narratives that reveal My power are discussed, an elixir for the heart and ears. As a person listens to them, there soon awakens in him faith in Me, the path of liberation; then rati; and at last loving devotion (prema-bhakti).

Anubhāṣya.

Devahūti asked her son Kapiladeva what her highest good was, and Kapila replied:

satām (of Hari's servants) prasaṅgāt (through excellent association) mama vīrya-saṁvidaḥ (those in which My power is rightly understood) hṛt-karṇa-rasāyanāḥ (an elixir for the heart and ears: delightful to hearing and mind, giving happiness) kathāḥ bhavanti (narratives arise) taj-joṣaṇāt (by serving them) apavarga-vartmani (toward Hari, on the path to whom ignorance ceases) śraddhā ([first] faith) ratiḥ ([then] bhāva) bhaktiḥ ([then] prema) āśu (soon) anukramiṣyati (will come one after another).

(First comes faith, then the company of sādhus. Through that company one hears these narratives, and an inclination to serve arises — the activity of worship. Then, through excellent association, come narratives that remove the anarthas, the unwanted things in the heart. Next these same narratives produce steadiness (niṣṭhā) and so let one understand My greatness. Then they produce taste (ruci) and become an elixir for the heart and ears. By serving these narratives and relishing them with love, there will come one after another: faith in Bhagavān, which here means attachment (āsakti); rati, which is bhāva; and bhakti, which is prema.)

The truth about the Lord's devotees, and their kinds —

61 The devotee is the Lord’s own form, His abode: in the devotee’s heart Kṛṣṇa always rests.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Whoever is devoted to the Lord (Īśvara) in His form of eternal being, knowledge and bliss — that is, his heart — is the place where Kṛṣṇa dwells.

Anubhāṣya.
The one and only nondual reality is the Lord (Īśvara). This reality, the Lord, possesses all potencies. By nature the devotee is of the same kind as His potency, not of the same kind as the possessor of potency. The inclination to serve Kṛṣṇa lives in the devotee who worships Him. Therefore Kṛṣṇa abides in the devotee as His support.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 9.4.68)*

62 “The saints are My heart, and I am the heart of the saints. They know no one but Me, and I know no one but them.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 9.4.68)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The sādhus are My heart, and I am the heart of the sādhus. They know no one but Me, and I regard no one but them as My own.

Anubhāṣya.
The sage Durvāsā offended the feet of the great devotee Mahārāja Ambarīṣa, and Viṣṇu's disc rushed forth to kill Durvāsā. He sought help from all the gods. At last Bhagavān Viṣṇu advised the sage Durvāsā to beg forgiveness at Ambarīṣa's lotus feet. In truth, with this verse He revealed the supreme greatness of the saintly devotees:

sādhavaḥ (the sādhus) mahyam hṛdayam (are My heart, as dear as My life) sādhūnām tu aham hṛdayam (and I am the heart of the sādhus) te (they, the sādhus) mad-anyat (anything other than Me) na jānanti (do not know) aham (and I) tebhyaḥ (apart from them) manāg api (even slightly) anyat na ([know] nothing else).

(The devotees always think of Me alone with all their being. And I always meditate on the devotees, who are wholly devoted to serving Me and have taken shelter at My feet with all their being.)

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.13.10)*

63 "Devotees such as you are themselves holy places, my lord. By the Lord who dwells within your hearts, you make even the holy places holy." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.13.10)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Devotees (bhāgavatas) like you are themselves holy places. The holy places are stained by the sins of sinners, and such devotees purify them by the holiness of Bhagavān, who dwells within them.

Anubhāṣya.
Vidura Mahāśaya had wandered through many holy places and returned to Hastināpura. Mahārāja Yudhiṣṭhira greeted him with this verse:

prabho (O lord) bhavad-vidhāḥ (those like you) bhāgavatāḥ (devotees, sādhus) tīrtha-bhūtāḥ (are themselves holy places) svāntaḥ-sthena (by Him who dwells within them) gadābhṛtā (by Bhagavān Viṣṇu) tīrthāni (the holy places, which through contact with impure people have ceased to be holy) tīrthī-kurvanti (make into great holy places again).

(And your pilgrimage is the good fortune of the holy places themselves.)

64 These devotees are of two kinds: the Lord's eternal associates and those who practise devotion.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Devotees are of two kinds: Bhagavān's associates and practitioners (sādhakas). Bhagavān's associates are the circle of perfected servants (siddha-sevakas). Some of them are devoted to His majesty (aiśvarya) and dwell in the spiritual sky, Paravyoma. Others are devoted to His sweetness, mādhurya, and are absorbed in serving Kṛṣṇa in Śrī Vṛndāvana. The sādhakas are those who follow vaidhī or rāgānugā sādhana-bhakti in order to attain perfection in service.

The kinds of the Lord's avatāras —

65–66 The Lord’s avatāras are of three kinds: partial avatāras, guṇa-avatāras, and, third, empowered avatāras. The partial avatāras are the Puruṣas, Matsya and the others.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The aṁśa-avatāras are direct avatāras of Viṣṇu, masters of māyā. The guṇa-avatāras are avatāras of Bhagavān manifest in the three guṇas: sattva, rajas and tamas. The śaktyāveśa-avatāras are exalted jīvas whom a special potency of Kṛṣṇa enters.

67 Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva are counted as the three guṇa-avatāras; the Kumāras, Pṛthu and the sage Vyāsa are empowered avatāras.

Anubhāṣya.

Īśvarera, “of the Lord,” means of Kṛṣṇa in His original form (svayaṁ-rūpa). See the first part of the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, the section on the object of worship and on the avatāras, and also Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Madhya-līlā, Chapter 20.

*The Lord's manifestations differ by līlā —*

68 The Lord manifests Himself in two ways: one is prakāśa, the other vilāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhagavānera, “of Bhagavān”: of His original form (svayaṁ-rūpa). See Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Madhya-līlā, Chapter 20.

*The Lord's manifestation (īśa-prakāśa) —*

69–70 When one Person appears in many forms, alike in appearance and one in identity — as at the marriage of the queens or in the rāsa dance — this is called Kṛṣṇa's chief prakāśa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bhagavān manifests in two ways: as prakāśa and as vilāsa. Kṛṣṇa displayed many forms at once when He married the queens in Dvārakā and when He danced the rāsa in Vṛndāvana. Those forms did not differ in shape: one and the same form (vigraha) became many. This is Kṛṣṇa's principal prakāśa. But where the svarūpa takes another shape, one resembling itself, that manifestation is called vilāsa. Baladeva in Vṛndāvana, and Nārāyaṇa, Vāsudeva, Pradyumna, Saṅkarṣaṇa and others in Paravyoma, are vilāsa forms in which Bhagavān's own form appears.

Anubhāṣya.

"A prakāśa is not counted among the distinct forms, for He is not separate from Him." (Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, first part).

Anubhāṣya.

"As one body became many forms in the rāsa dance, so at His marriage to the queens He appeared in many forms. This is known in the scriptures as prābhava-vilāsa."[12] (Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Madhya 20.168).

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.69.2)*

71 "How wonderful! The one Kṛṣṇa, in one and the same body, married sixteen thousand princesses at once, each in her own palace." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.69.2)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

What is wonderful is this: the one Kṛṣṇa, each time in a single form, married sixteen thousand wives at once in separate palaces.

Anubhāṣya.

bata (oh!) etat citram (this is wonderful) ekaḥ (the one Kṛṣṇa) ekena vapuṣā (in a single body) yugapat pṛthag gṛheṣu (at once in separate palaces) dvy-aṣṭa-sāhasram (sixteen thousand) striyaḥ (queens) udāvahat (married).

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.33.3–5)*

72 "The festival of the rāsa dance began, adorned with circles of gopīs; Kṛṣṇa, the Master of yoga, stood between each two of them —" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.33.3)

73–74 "— having entered between them and embraced each by the neck, so that every girl thought Him beside her alone. At once the sky was crowded with hundreds of celestial cars of the gods and their wives, their hearts filled with intense eagerness. Then the drums sounded and showers of flowers fell." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.33.3–4)[6]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the master of mystic power (yogeśvara), by His inconceivable potency manifested a form of Himself between every two gopīs. Adorned by the circle of gopīs, He began the festival of the rāsa. When He had entered among them in this way, the gopīs felt that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was embracing them, His arm about their necks. At that moment the gods and their wives appeared in the sky, having come eagerly on hundreds of chariots. Then kettledrums sounded and a rain of flowers began to fall.

Anubhāṣya.

tāsām (of them, standing in a circle) dvayor dvayor madhye (between each two) praviṣṭena (by Him who entered in a separate form) yam (Śrī Kṛṣṇa, whom) sva-nikaṭam (as being close to herself [that is, "He has embraced me alone"]) manyeran (they thought) yogeśvareṇa (by that Kṛṣṇa) kaṇṭhe gṛhītānām (of those embraced at the neck from both sides) gopī-maṇḍala-maṇḍitaḥ (adorned by the circle of gopīs) rāsotsavaḥ sampravṛttaḥ (the festival of the rāsa began) tāvat (at that very moment) atyautsukya-bhṛtātmanām (of those whose minds were deeply stirred by longing to see) sa-dārāṇām (with their wives) divaukasām (of the gods) vimāna-śata-saṅkulam (full, filled, crowded with hundreds of aerial chariots) abhavat ([the sky] became) tataḥ dundubhayo nedur nipetuḥ puṣpa-vṛṣṭayaḥ (then kettledrums sounded and showers of flowers fell).

*(Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, first part, 1.21)*

75 "When one form appears at one time in many places, identical in every way, that is called prakāśa." (Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, 1.21)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
When one form manifests at the same time as many identical forms, this is called prakāśa.

Anubhāṣya.
ekadā (at one time) ekasya rūpasya (of one form) yā anekatra prakaṭatā (the manifestation in many places) sarvathā tat-svarūpaiva (identical with it in nature in every way, that is, one in shape, qualities, līlās and the rest) sa prakāśa itīryate (is called prakāśa).

*The Lord's vilāsa (īśa-vilāsa) —*

76 But when one and the same Person appears in many forms that differ in appearance, that is called vilāsa.

*(Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, in the description of the tad-ekātma-rūpa, 1.15)*

77 "When by His potency His own form appears for His pastimes in a different shape, almost equal to Him, it is called vilāsa." (Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, 1.15)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
When, in the play of His inconceivable potency, His own form appears in another shape, almost like Himself, it is called vilāsa.

Anubhāṣya.
tasya (of the original form) yat svarūpam anyākāram (a svarūpa different in shape, that is, with a different arrangement of the limbs) vilāsataḥ (through a particular līlā) prāyeṇa (less or greater in certain qualities) ātma-samam (like its own original form) śaktyā bhāti (appears by potency) sa vilāso nigadyate (is called vilāsa).

78 Examples are Baladeva, Nārāyaṇa in the spiritual sky, and Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and the others.

Anubhāṣya.
Baladeva is svayaṁ-prakāśa. Nārāyaṇa is prābhava-vilāsa.

*The Lord's potency (īśa-śakti) —*

79–80 The Lord’s potencies are of three kinds: the Lakṣmīs in Vaikuṇṭha, the queens in Dvārakā, and the gopīs in Vraja. The gopīs are the foremost of all, for with them the son of the king of Vraja is Bhagavān Himself.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The Lakṣmīs dwell in Vaikuṇṭha, the queens in the city, that is, in Dvārakā, and the gopīs in Vraja are the third kind of potency. Sabāte means “among all.” Yāte means “since”: since Vrajendranandana, the son of the king of Vraja, is Bhagavān Himself. His companions in Vraja are His very own potency (svarūpa-śakti).

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
From yadyapi āmāra guru (“although my guru,” verse 44) to sādhaka-gaṇa āra (“and the others are practitioners,” verse 64): the examination of two truths, the guru and the devotee. From īśvarera avatāra (“the Lord's avatāras,” verse 65) to pṛthu vyāsa muni (“Pṛthu and the sage Vyāsa,” verse 67): the examination of the Lord and His avatāras. From dui-rūpe haya (“is of two kinds,” verse 68) to pradyumnādi-saṅkarṣaṇa (“Pradyumna and the others, Saṅkarṣaṇa,” verse 78): the examination of His prakāśa and vilāsa. Then from īśvarera śakti haya (“the Lord's potencies are,” verse 79) to svayaṁ bhagavān (“Bhagavān Himself,” verse 80): the examination of His potencies.

81 The expansions of the body of Kṛṣṇa’s original form are equal to Him, and together with the devotees they form His entourage.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Svayaṁ-rūpa: the verses of the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta on tad-ekātma and related forms show that the two-armed Kṛṣṇa alone is the svayaṁ-rūpa. His kāya-vyūha is equal to Him; kāya-vyūha means the expansion of His own body. The devotees who stand beside this form are His āvaraṇa. When we consider the āvaraṇa together with the truth it surrounds, the six truths named above prove to be one. This conclusion is established only by considering acintya-bhedābheda-tattva.

82 Thus, beginning with the devotees, I have worshipped them all in order; worship of them all is the source of every good.

83 In the first verse is the general invocation; in the second I offer specific worship.

Explanation of the second of the opening fourteen verses —

84 I worship Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and Śrī Nityānanda, who are like a wonderful sun and moon. They have risen together on the eastern horizon of Gauḍa, dispelling the darkness and bestowing good on all.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I worship Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and Nityānanda. Like the sun and the moon, They have risen wondrously at the same time in the land of Gauḍa, which is like Udayācala, the mountain of sunrise. They bestow good fortune and dispel the darkness of the jīvas.

Anubhāṣya.
gauḍodaye (in the land of Gauḍa, which is the Udayācala, the mountain of sunrise) sahoditau (risen at the same time) puṣpavantau (the sun and the moon together; and therefore —) citrau (wondrous) śan-dau (bestowing good fortune) tamo-nudau (dispelling darkness) śrī-kṛṣṇa-caitanya-nityānandau (Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and Nityānanda) aham vande (I worship).

Gauḍodaye puṣpavantau* —*

85–86 Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma, who sported in Vraja long ago, Their radiance surpassing millions of suns and moons, have now, out of compassion for the world, risen on the eastern horizon in the land of Gauḍa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Nija-dhāma: radiance.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Pūrva-śaile, “on the eastern mountain”: on the Udayācala that is Gauḍa, on the eastern bank of the Gaṅgā.

87 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and Prabhu Nityānanda — by Their appearance the whole world is filled with joy.

An example of causeless mercy —

88–89 As the sun and moon remove all darkness and, revealing things, set the world about its duties, so these two Brothers dispelled the darkness of the soul's ignorance and gave it the gift of the Truth.

*The definition of kaitava (cheating) —*

90 I call this darkness of ignorance kaitava, deceit: it is the desire for religious merit, wealth, pleasure and the rest.[7]

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.1.2)*

91 "In this beautiful Bhāgavatam, composed by the great sage, is taught the supreme dharma of the saintly who are free from envy, from which all deceit has been cast out. Here is known the true Reality, which bestows good and uproots the threefold miseries. What need is there of other scriptures? As soon as the pious wish to hear it, the Lord is at once captured within their hearts." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.1.2)[8]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

This Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam was first composed by the great sage Śrī Nārāyaṇa in the form of four verses (catuḥ-ślokī). It sets forth the highest dharma for those free from envy, that is, kind to all beings. This dharma is free from cheating (kaitava), and that cheating includes dharma, artha, kāma and even mokṣa. It destroys the threefold miseries of the jīva, bestows good fortune and gives knowledge of the true reality. Those who wish to hear the Bhāgavatam can hold the Lord captive in their hearts at will. What need, then, is there for any scripture other than the Bhāgavatam?

Anubhāṣya.

mahā-muni-kṛte (composed by the great sage Śrī Nārāyaṇa) atra śrīmad-bhāgavate (in this beautiful Bhāgavata) projjhita-kaitavaḥ (that from which cheating has been entirely cast out: so pra- and ujjhita are understood. The cheating is hypocrisy made up of dharma, artha, kāma and mokṣa and marked by the pursuit of results. The mark of this dharma is service to Bhagavān alone) satām (of Hari's servants) nirmatsarāṇām (free from lust, anger, greed, delusion, pride and envy) paramaḥ (the highest, for its aim is to set aside the scriptures of karma and jñāna) dharmaḥ (dharma [is described]) atra (in the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam) tāpa-trayonmūlanam (uprooting the sins that bring suffering from one's own body and mind, from other beings and from the forces of nature) śivadam (bestowing good fortune) vāstavam (eternal, supreme, nondual) vastu vedyam (the reality to be known) atra (in the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam) śuśrūṣubhiḥ (by those who wish to hear) kṛtibhiḥ (by those endowed with pious merit) hṛdi tat-kṣaṇāt (in the heart at once) sadyaḥ (without any delay) īśvaraḥ avarudhyate (the Lord is held captive).

92 Among them the chief deceit is the desire for liberation, by which devotion to Kṛṣṇa disappears.

Śrīdhara Svāmī's comment on this verse —

93 "By the prefix pra even the intention of liberation is excluded."[9]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Among these, the chief cheating is the desire for liberation (mukti). That is why Svāmipāda pointed out that the prefix pra- means freedom even from the cheating that consists in aiming at liberation.

94 All good and bad deeds that obstruct devotion to Kṛṣṇa also belong to the soul's darkness of ignorance.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Caitanya and Nityānanda, the two brothers, are like the sun and the moon. Rising, They destroy the darkness in the hearts of the jīvas. The meaning of these verses is this. The jīva is by nature a spiritual truth. The jīva's own original nature (svadharma) is devotion to Kṛṣṇa and love for Kṛṣṇa. Pious action (puṇya), sinful action (pāpa) and the aim of liberation have entered the jīva in the guise of his own nature and filled him with the qualities of darkness (tamo-dharma). All teachings that establish karma and jñāna are kaitava, cheating, and therefore serve the qualities of darkness. Before Caitanya and Nityānanda rose, these qualities of darkness polluted the hearts of the jīvas. The two brothers rose, drove the darkness out of the cave of the jīvas' hearts and revealed the true reality (vastu-tattva).

The fruit of Nitāi and Gaura's mercy —

95 By Their grace this darkness is destroyed, and, destroying it, They reveal the Truth.

*What the true reality (tattva-vastu) is —*

96 The Truth is Kṛṣṇa, devotion to Kṛṣṇa in the form of pure love (prema), and the congregational chanting of the Holy Name, the embodiment of all bliss.

How They surpass the sun and the moon —

97 The sun and moon dispel the outer darkness and reveal outer things — pots, cloth and the like.

98 But the two Brothers wash away the darkness of the heart and bring one to meet the two bhāgavatas.

99 One bhāgavata is the great scripture Bhāgavatam; the other bhāgavata is the devotee, the vessel of the rasa of devotion.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“The two bhāgavatas” are the scripture Bhāgavatam and the devotee bhāgavata, the vessel of the rasa of devotion. The brothers let the jīvas meet these two face to face, gave them the rasa of devotion, and were conquered by the jīvas' love.

100 Through these two bhāgavatas They give the rasa of devotion, and the Lord, dwelling in the devotee’s heart, is held captive by his love.

Citrau* —*

101 One wonder is that the Two appeared at the same time; the other wonder is that They destroy the darkness in the cave of the heart.

102 This moon and sun, supremely kind, have risen in Gauḍa for the good fortune of the world.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Jagatera bhāgye, "for the good fortune of the world": the two brothers preached the dharma of love, and it will gradually spread throughout this world. This is the world's good fortune.

Gauḍe, "in Gauḍa": the kings of the Sena dynasty moved the throne of their empire to the region of Śrī Navadvīpa from the ancient city of Gauḍa in the Maldah district. That is why the region of Śrī Navadvīpa is called the land of Gauḍa. In this Gauḍa, on the eastern bank of the Gaṅgā, Mahāprabhu was born. Nityānanda Prabhu came there and joined Him, and together They rose.

Śan-dau* —*

103 I worship the feet of these two Lords, from whom come the destruction of obstacles and the fulfilment of desire.

104 In these two verses I have made the auspicious worship; now, all of you, hear the meaning of the third verse.

105 Fearing the abundance of what could be said and the swelling of the book, I do not describe it at length; I tell the essence in few words.

(A saying of the ancients in their own scriptures, established by immemorial usage) —

106 "Speech that is measured and essential is true eloquence."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Eloquence means speech of few words, full of substance.

Anubhāṣya.

mitam ca (free of idle talk, only to the point) sāram ca (pointing to the essence) vacaḥ hi vāgmitā (such speech is eloquence, the skill of speaking).

Śan-dau* —*

107 By hearing this, one's heart will be freed from ignorance and other faults; deep love for Kṛṣṇa will arise, and one will find true satisfaction.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Instead of kṛṣṇe gāḍha prema habe ("there will be deep love for Kṛṣṇa"), a variant reading has sarva-tattva jñāna haibe ("there will be knowledge of all truths").

Thus ends the first chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

Anubhāṣya.

The Mahābhārata (Udyoga-parva, Chapter 43, verse 16) names twelve kinds of faults, and the Viṣṇu Purāṇa eighteen. The difficulty of knowing the svarūpa: (1) ajñāna, ignorance — the notion "I am the material body"; (2) viparyāsa, inversion — the conceit of being an enjoyer of matter; (3) bheda, division — absorption in a second thing; (4) fear, and taking on a distorted form; (5) grief. These five are ignorance.

The subject the book describes — 108–109 The greatness of Śrī Caitanya, Nityānanda and Advaita, Their devotees, devotion, the Holy Name and the truth of the rasa of prema — I have written of each separately, after careful consideration. Whoever hears it will know the essence of all Truth.

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the first chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

110 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. According to the Anubhāṣya (on 1.34): the gurus are Śrī Nityānanda, Śrī Raghunātha, Śrī Rūpa and others; the devotees — Śrīvāsa and others; the avatāras — Śrī Advaita and others; the manifestations — Śrī Nityānanda and others; the potencies — Śrī Gadādhara, Svarūpa Dāmodara, Jagadānanda and others. “Known as Kṛṣṇa Caitanya” qualifies the Lord Himself (īśam). The verse is explained in 1.32–1.82. ↩
2. According to the Anubhāṣya (on Ādi 7.6): the devotee in form is Śrī Gaurāṅga, who tastes His own sweetness; the devotee in essence (in the form of His brother) is Śrī Nityānanda; the devotee-avatāra is Śrī Advaita; the devotee is Śrīvāsa and others; the potency is Gadādhara, Svarūpa Dāmodara, Rāmānanda and others. Ascribed in the edition to Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī. ↩
3. Bengali text as in the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition: «শাস্ত্র যে মত নিরূপণ». ↩
4. According to the Anubhāṣya: the knowledge is sambandha; the secret (rahasya) is prema-bhakti; its limb (aṅga) is sādhana-bhakti — hearing and the rest; all this the Lord speaks out of mercy, though Brahmā did not ask. ↩
5. According to the Anubhāṣya: Cintāmaṇi is the guru who showed the path (śravaṇa-guru), Somagiri the mantra-guru, and Kṛṣṇa the caitya-śikṣā-guru; jayaśrī is Vṛndāvaneśvarī; līlā-svayaṁvara-rasa — the joy of choosing Him out of deep love. ↩
6. The Bengali reading of 1.74 follows the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition, «অত্যৌৎসুক্যভৃতাত্মনাম্», which the Anubhāṣya glosses: “their minds greatly agitated by the eagerness to see”. ↩
7. The Gauḍīya Maṭha edition reads «…বাঞ্ছা আদি এই সব» (“and so on”). ↩
8. The verse says only «শ্রীমদ্ভাগবতে মহামুনিকৃতে» (śrīmad-bhāgavate mahā-muni-kṛte), “in the beautiful Bhāgavata composed by the great sage”; the sage is not named. ↩
9. Śrīdhara Svāmī’s comment on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.1.2 (heading in the edition). ↩
10. Our verse translation of 1.57 reads differently: it takes Cintāmaṇi and Somagiri as two different gurus, whereas for Bhaktivinoda cintāmaṇi is a simile for Somagiri. (The Anubhāṣya on this verse likewise distinguishes them: Cintāmaṇi showed the way, Somagiri was the initiating guru.) ↩
11. The edition has «রাজহসৌ প্রজাতীতিবৎ»: the «হ» is the avagraha (ঽ), as usual in this edition («রাজাঽসৌ», rājā ’sau), while «প্রজাতীতিবৎ» is a misprint for «প্রয়াতীতিবৎ» (prayātīti-vat): “as [one says] ‘the king is setting out’,” meaning his retinue as well; compare the same example in Śrīdhara Svāmī's commentary on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.9.32. ↩

12. The quotation in the Anubhāṣya is made up of lines from CC Madhya 20.168, in a different order and with the reading prābhava-vilāsa (the VCD translation of that verse has prābhava). ↩

Chapter 2

The Auspicious Invocation Indicating the Object: Determining the Truth of Caitanya

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. In this second chapter the author reveals that Śrī Caitanya and Śrī Kṛṣṇa are one truth (tattva), and he proves that Brahman is the radiance of His body and the Paramātmā, the Supersoul, His part (aṁśa). He then proves that Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the supreme shelter of the puruṣa-avatāras and of all living beings, and so establishes that Kṛṣṇa is the original Nārāyaṇa. He shows why one must know Kṛṣṇa's intrinsic nature (svarūpa) and His three potencies. Kṛṣṇa's svarūpa manifests in two ways, as prābhava and vaibhava; the avatāras are of two kinds, aṁśa-avatāras and śaktyāveśa-avatāras; and His original pastimes are of two kinds, marked by childhood (bālya) and boyhood (paugaṇḍa). Having shown this, the author establishes that Kṛṣṇa in His youthful form (kiśora) is Himself the source of all avatāras. He also shows that the spiritual potency (cit-śakti) manifests as Vaikuṇṭha and the other abodes, the potency of māyā as countless universes, and the potency of living beings (jīva-śakti) as countless living beings. He establishes that Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the cause of all causes and the beginning of all; He Himself has no beginning; He is the eternal form of being, consciousness and bliss, Kṛṣṇacandra Himself. And he concludes that every devotee must know the truth of his relationship with the Lord (sambandha-jñāna), that is, must know Kṛṣṇa's svarūpa, His three potencies and His vilāsas.

*Obeisance to Gaura through examining the conclusions (siddhānta) of devotion —*

1 I worship Śrī Caitanya Mahāprabhu, by whose mercy even an ignorant child can cross the ocean of philosophical conclusions, which teems with the crocodiles of various doctrines.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I worship Śrī Caitanya Prabhu. By His mercy even an ignorant person easily crosses the ocean of conclusions (siddhānta), full of crocodiles and other beasts — the doctrines of every kind.

Anubhāṣya.

bālaḥ api (even one who is ignorant, a child) yad-anugrahāt (by whose mercy, that is, by whose compassion) nānā-mata-grāha-vyāptam (full of doctrines that are like crocodiles and sharks. These doctrines were proclaimed by Aulūkya, Jina, Buddha, Jaimini, Patañjali, Gotama, Kaṇāda, Kapila, Śaṅkara and Dattātreya; they quarrel with one another and are full of worldly self-interest) siddhānta-sāgaram (the ocean of reasoning) taret (crosses. That is, he counts the mixed doctrines of these worldly people as straw and comes to know Kṛṣṇa's pure feet) śrī-caitanya-prabhum ([that] Śrī Caitanya Prabhu) vande ([I] worship).

*A prayer for Śrī Caitanya's mercy, for the sake of kīrtana about Kṛṣṇa —*

2 O Śrī Caitanya, ocean of mercy! May the celestial Gaṅgā of the nectar of Your shining pastimes flow over the desert of my tongue. She is adorned with the lotuses of the loud glorification of Kṛṣṇa, of singing and of dancing; she is the place of delight for the rows of true devotees, who are like swans, cakravāka birds and bees; and her sweet murmur gladdens the ear.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Caitanyadeva, ocean of mercy! The nectar of Your pastimes is a shining Bhāgīrathī, the Gaṅgā. May it flow unceasingly through the field of my tongue, which is like a desert courtyard. Its lotuses are loud kīrtana about Kṛṣṇa, singing, dancing and the like; in it sport the saintly devotees — swans, cakravāka birds and bees; and its current makes a soft, sweet murmur that delights everyone's ears.

Anubhāṣya.

śrī-caitanya dayā-nidhe (O Śrī Caitanya, treasury of mercy) kṛṣṇotkīrtana-gāna-nartana-kalā-pāthojani-bhrājitā (shining, that is, adorned, with lotuses [pāthojani]. These lotuses are the arts [kalā]: utkīrtana, the loud glorification of Kṛṣṇa's name, form, qualities, pastimes and so on, together with singing and dancing) sad-bhaktāvali-haṁsa-cakra-madhupa-śreṇī-vihārāspadam (the place of play, the field of vilāsa, for the hosts of true, that is, pure devotees. They abide in various moods [bhāvas] and are like different flocks of swans, cakravāka birds and bees. The sense is that in these pastimes the hosts of pure devotees find the highest joy) karṇānandi-kala-dhvaniḥ (she whose gentle sound delights the ear and becomes an elixir for the devotees' ears. This gentle sound is the soft, sweet murmur of the streams of Hari's pastimes; the servants of Hari, who are like swans, cakravākas and bees, make it) tava lasal-līlā-sudhā-svardhunī (such is Your shining [lasatī, radiant] heavenly river [svardhunī], the Mandākinī, the heavenly Gaṅgā, full of the nectar of Gaura's pastimes) me (my) jihvā-maru-prāṅgaṇe (in the desert courtyard of the tongue. It has no taste, because it has been deprived of relishing the rasa of Gaura's pastimes) vahatu ([may she] flow).

3 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

Explanation of the third of the fourteen opening verses. Pointing out the Truth

4 Now I shall explain in detail the meaning of the third verse. It is an auspicious invocation that points to the Supreme Truth (vastu-nirdeśa).[1]

5 “There is no Truth in the world higher than Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. That which the Upaniṣads call the non-dual Brahman is the effulgence of His body; the Puruṣa, the Supersoul who dwells within every heart, is His partial manifestation; and Bhagavān, full in all six opulences, is He Himself.”[2]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The One whom the Upaniṣads call the nondual Brahman is the radiance of my Lord's body. The One whom the scriptures of yoga call the Puruṣa who dwells within (antaryāmī), or Paramātmā, is a part (aṁśa) of my Lord. The One who is the shelter of Brahman and Paramātmā, the whole (aṁśī) of which they are parts, is called Bhagavān, full in the six opulences. My Lord is that Bhagavān Himself. Therefore in the world there is no Supreme Truth higher than Kṛṣṇa Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.

upaniṣadi (in the Upaniṣad, that is, in a special branch of the Vedas, the highest of all, called brahma-vidyā [the knowledge of Brahman]. [The word upaniṣad is formed from the root ṣad with the prefixes upa- and ni- and the suffix kvip; the root means “to destroy,” “to go” and “to wear down.” Here upa means “having approached,” that is, having received it through the guru's instruction, and ni means “with resolve.” Some have approached brahma-vidyā, have resolutely fixed themselves in it and have lost their thirst for objects, both those that are seen and those promised in the Vedas. For them it destroys the seed of worldly existence — loosens it, wears it down, annihilates it — and leads them to Brahman.]) yat advaitam (that which [is called] nondual, without a second), brahma (Brahman), tat api (that too) asya (His [Gaura-Kṛṣṇa's]) tanu-bhā (is the radiance [of His transcendental body]) yaḥ ātmā (He who is the Self [the Paramātmā, the Controller of all living beings and the rest]), antar-yāmī puruṣaḥ (the Puruṣa who dwells within), saḥ asya aṁśa-vibhavaḥ (is His partial manifestation [one of His opulences, a particular expression of His all-pervasiveness]) iha ([in this examination of the truth]) yaḥ ṣaḍ-aiśvaryaiḥ (He who in the six opulences, that is, in the six kinds of lordship — complete wealth, strength, fame, beauty, knowledge and renunciation —) pūrṇaḥ (is full [needs nothing, is perfect]), saḥ ayam (He, this Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya), svayam bhagavān (is Bhagavān Himself) iha ([in the world, in the examination of the truth, or in the Kali age]) caitanyāt kṛṣṇāt (than Kṛṣṇa Caitanya) param (other) para-tattvam (supreme truth [better shelter]) na (there is none).

(Brahman is the goal of the scriptures of knowledge (jñāna-śāstras), and Paramātmā the goal of the scriptures of yoga. In truth they are equal to Bhagavān. But the view differs with the qualification (adhikāra) of the one who sees, and so they are only two aspects of Bhagavān's form — His spiritual radiance and His part. They are not the whole, complete Reality, endowed with all qualities and potencies; only Bhagavān is that.)

With this verse one should compare the following verse from Śrī Jīva Prabhu's Tattva-sandarbha (8): “His being, purely spiritual, receives the name Brahman in some places of the Vedas. His part is the Puruṣa, who subdues māyā and through His own parts displays variety. His one form sports in the spiritual sky (paravyoma) under the name Nārāyaṇa. May that Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Bhagavān Himself, grant love of God (prema) here to those who take shelter of His feet.”

Some are deprived of beholding the being and bliss (sat and ānanda) of Bhagavān, who is full of sat, cit and ānanda. They rely only on the function of consciousness (saṁvit) and, pursuing the Truth endowed with spiritual pastimes, in the end see Brahman. Others are deprived of beholding Bhagavān's bliss (ānanda). They rely only on the functions of being and consciousness (sat and cit) and, pursuing the same Truth, in the end see Paramātmā. Thus Bhagavān is the form of being, consciousness and bliss and of divine pastimes. The spiritual radiance of His body is Brahman, devoid of spiritual vilāsa and free from māyā,[12] and the being that is a portion of His majesty (aiśvarya) is Paramātmā.

Examining the Truth —

6 Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān are the three anuvādas (that which is spoken of); the effulgence of the body, the partial manifestation and His own form are the three vidheyas (that which is stated about them).

7 First the anuvāda is stated, and afterwards the vidheya is set down. In this way I shall tell the meaning of the verse; hear now the explanation according to scripture.

Kṛṣṇa, and the truth about Caitanya —

8 Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself, the supreme truth among all forms of Viṣṇu (viṣṇu-tattva). He is fullness of knowledge, fullness of bliss and the highest greatness.

9 He whom the Bhāgavatam glorifies as the son of Nanda — that same Kṛṣṇa has descended as Śrī Caitanya Gosāñi.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

According to the science of poetics (alaṅkāra-śāstra), one first states what is already known (the anuvāda) and only then indicates what is said about it (the vidheya). In many places the Vedas and other scriptures speak of three subjects — Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān. These truths are therefore already known, and they must be taken as the anuvāda. But it is not yet known that Brahman is the radiance of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya's body, Paramātmā His part and Bhagavān His svarūpa. So one must first state these three anuvādas and then, after examining the meaning of the scriptures, establish the vidheya. The conclusion of the scriptures is this: among the viṣṇu-tattvas the Supreme Truth is Bhagavān Kṛṣṇacandra Himself. He whom the Bhāgavatam sings of as the son of Nanda has descended as Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. Therefore, when I discuss the truth, I shall speak of Kṛṣṇa and Caitanya as entirely non-different. And so the Supreme Truth appears in three ways — as Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān Himself — and I may rightly call all three special manifestations of Śrī Caitanya.

Examining Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān —

10 In His particular manifestations He bears three names: Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān Himself.

Anubhāṣya.

Prabhu Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī writes in the Bhagavat-sandarbha (3): “Thus, when [the Truth] displays all Its distinguishing features, It is Bhagavān: He is Its full appearance and therefore the form of the undivided Truth. Brahman, however, is an incomplete appearance of that same Truth, for in Brahman the form with distinguishing features is not manifest. ‘O sage! The sound bha carries two meanings, sambhartā and bhartā; the meanings of the sound ga are netā, gamayitā and sraṣṭā. Beings dwell in Him, the Self of beings, the Self of all, and He, the Imperishable, abides in all beings without exception — this is the meaning of the sound va. Knowledge, potency, strength, lordship, power and splendor in their fullness, without inferior qualities and the like — this is what the word Bhagavān denotes.’ Sambhartā is He who nourishes His devotees; bhartā, He who sustains and establishes; netā, He who leads to the fruit of devotion to Him, that is, to prema; gamayitā, He who brings to His own abode; sraṣṭā, He who gives rise to various qualities in His devotees. (4) He Himself is not a cause: He is wholly absorbed in the vilāsa of His own potency (svarūpa-śakti) alone and is therefore indifferent to the world. Yet through the Puruṣa, His part, also called the Paramātmā, who sets prakṛti and the jīvas in motion, He becomes the cause of the world's creation, maintenance and so on. Know this as the form of Bhagavān. <…> As the efficient cause, He makes the jīvas, particles of Himself, enter bodies and the rest and so brings them to life. Impelled by Him, all the elements — pradhāna and the others, indicated by bodies and so on — move, that is, set about their work. Know this as the form of the Paramātmā. The jīva is an ātmā, a self, and compared with him He is the supreme (parama); therefore the word Paramātmā denotes just Him, the jīva's companion. That same Truth is present as the accompanying presence (anvaya) in dream and the other states; outside them It likewise abides in the pure potency called the jīva; and the particle ca (‘and’) shows that It also abides beyond them, separately (vyatireka), remaining by Itself. Know this as the form of Brahman.”

Bhagavān is endowed with all potencies and reveals Himself in all His fullness; therefore He is the undivided Truth. In Brahman such a form with distinguishing features is not manifest; therefore Brahman is only a partial, incomplete appearance of Bhagavān. O sage! The first sound of the word Bhagavān, bha, has two meanings, sambhartā and bhartā; the sound ga means netā, gamayitā and sraṣṭā. Beings dwell in the universal Self, the Self of beings, and He, the imperishable Puruṣa, dwells in all beings without exception — this is the meaning of the sound va. Boundless knowledge, potency, strength, lordship, power and splendor, without inferior qualities — this is what the word Bhagavān denotes. Sambhartā means “He who nourishes His devotees”; bhartā, “He who sustains and establishes”; netā, “He who leads to the fruit of devotion to Him, that is, to prema”; gamayitā, “He who brings to His own abode”; sraṣṭā, “He who gives rise to various qualities in His devotees.” There is a Truth that is not Itself a cause: through Its own potency (svarūpa-śakti) It has a single vilāsa and is entirely indifferent to the world. And yet, through the Puruṣa, Its part, who sets prakṛti and the jīvas in motion, It becomes the cause of the world's birth, maintenance and so on. Know this as the truth of Bhagavān (bhagavat-tattva). There is One who, as the efficient cause, makes the jīvas, particles of Himself, enter the world and so brings the world to life. Impelled by Him, the elements — pradhāna and the others, indicated by bodies and so on — remain in place and each sets about its own work. Know Him as the Paramātmā. By his intrinsic nature the jīva is an ātmā, and the One higher than the jīva is parama; therefore the word Paramātmā reveals Him as the jīva's eternal companion. There is a Truth that is present as the accompanying presence (anvaya) in waking, dreaming and deep sleep. In samādhi It abides [as] the pure jīva-śakti, yet afterwards It also abides beyond it, separately (vyatireka), remaining by Itself. Know It as Brahman.

11 "The knowers of the Truth call the non-dual knowledge the Truth; it is named Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.2.11)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Those who know the truth call nondual knowledge the Truth. This nondual knowledge is first perceived as Brahman, then as Paramātmā, and thirdly as Bhagavān.

Anubhāṣya.

The sages headed by Śaunaka asked Sūta, the disciple of Śukadeva, six questions. This verse answers the second of them: "What is the essence of the scriptures?"

tattva-vidaḥ (those who know the truth) tat ([just] that) tattvam (the Truth), advayam jñānam (nondual knowledge [one, purely spiritual]), vadanti (they call) yat ([This nondual knowledge]) brahma iti ([in some places] Brahman), paramātmā iti ([in some places] Paramātmā), bhagavān iti ca ([and in some places] Bhagavān) śabdyate (is called).

The sense is this: nondual knowledge realized through the function of knowledge alone is Brahman; nondual knowledge realized through the functions of being and consciousness (sat and cit) is Paramātmā; and that same nondual knowledge realized through the functions of being, consciousness and bliss (sat, cit and ānanda) is Bhagavān.

Bhagavān's devotees know that the embodiment of nondual knowledge is Vrajendranandana, the son of the king of Vraja. In Kṛṣṇa's name, form, qualities and pastimes they see nothing second. If one separates Kṛṣṇa from His transcendental name, form, qualities and pastimes, a mundane conception of Viṣṇu's body arises; this is the very absence of nondual knowledge. Things other than Kṛṣṇa are not Viṣṇu, and nondual knowledge is not in them. Therefore everything other than Kṛṣṇa is separated from Kṛṣṇa, that is, from nondual knowledge, by māyā, or dual knowledge.[13] So it becomes liable to fall under māyā's control, and is therefore subject to māyā, or dual knowledge. In all of Kṛṣṇa's manifestations (prakāśas) and forms of vilāsa, however, there is no knowledge of anything second; therefore they are viṣṇu-tattva and the masters of māyā. The yogīs regard only one state as free from knowledge of a second: the unmixed union (yoga) of the pure soul with the Paramātmā, the embodiment of nondual knowledge. The jñānīs, for their part, regard as nondual knowledge, as Brahman, a featureless knowledge free from all distinctions — internal, homogeneous and heterogeneous (svagata, sajātīya and vijātīya). See the Gauḍīya-bhāṣya on the Bhāgavatam by the author of this commentary, pp. 88–89.

(1) Examining Brahman —

12 That which the Upaniṣads call the spotless Brahman is the pure radiance of the rays of His body.

Anubhāṣya.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad, second muṇḍaka, second khaṇḍa, mantras 9–11: "In the highest, golden sheath dwells Brahman, stainless and undivided. It is pure, the light of lights; those who know the Self know It. There the sun does not shine, nor the moon and stars, nor do these lightnings shine — how then this fire? As He shines, everything shines after Him; by His light all this is illumined. Truly, Brahman is this immortal one: Brahman in front, Brahman behind, Brahman to the right and to the left, below and above — spread everywhere. Truly, Brahman is all this, this most excellent universe."

13 As the sun appears to fleshly eyes as mere brilliance without features, so on the path of knowledge one cannot perceive His particular features.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Nirviśeṣa. A viśeṣa is a feature by which a thing is recognized; what lacks such features is nirviśeṣa, featureless.

*(Brahma-saṁhitā 5.40)*

14 "I worship Govinda, the original Person. Brahman — undivided, infinite and complete, distinct from all the opulences of countless universes, their earths and all else — is the effulgence of Him, the Almighty." (Brahma-saṁhitā, 5.40)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I worship Govinda, the original Puruṣa. From His radiance comes Brahman — undivided, infinite, boundless, and distinct from the countless opulences of millions and millions of universes, such as their lands.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Brahmā set forth the truth and greatness of Śrī Govinda in the form of a prayer; it is given in the fifth chapter of the Brahma-saṁhitā.

jagad-aṇḍa-koṭi-koṭiṣu (in millions and millions of universes, that is, in countless universes) aśeṣa-vasudhādi-vibhūti-bhinnam (distinct, that is, set apart, by the opulences — the countless universes and all else that has form and so on) niṣkalam ([that which is] without parts: undivided, perfect), anantam (beyond limited knowledge), aśeṣa-bhūtam (boundless —) tat brahma (that Brahman) prabhavataḥ ([of the One endowed with power]) yasya (whose [Govinda's]) prabhā (is the radiance of the body) tam ādi-puruṣam govindam aham bhajāmi (that original Puruṣa, Govinda, I worship).

15 That Brahman whose glory is spread through millions upon millions of universes is the radiance of Govinda's body.

16 I worship that Govinda; He is my Lord. By His grace I (Brahmā) have the power to create.

Anubhāṣya.
"I" is Brahmā.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.6.47)*

17 "Sages clothed by the wind, ascetics who keep their seed drawn upward, peaceful, pure renunciants — they go to the abode called Brahman." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.6.47)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Naked sages who practice austerity and keep their seed, and peaceful, pure sannyāsīs, attain the abode of Brahman.

Anubhāṣya.

Uddhava learned that Śrī Kṛṣṇa would soon withdraw from view, and in a prayer at His holy feet he said: devotees reach Kṛṣṇa's feet with ease, while sannyāsīs who impose hardships on themselves win the fruit of their practice by hard labor — and attain only Brahmaloka.

vāta-vasanāḥ (clothed in the wind, that is, naked, without garments) śramaṇāḥ (mendicant monks who emaciate the body) ūrdhva-manthinaḥ (who keep their seed) śāntāḥ (those whose minds are fixed on Brahman alone) amalāḥ (free from the filth of sense objects) sannyāsinaḥ (sannyāsīs) te (they) brahmākhyam (called Brahman [impersonal]) dhāma (the abode) yānti (attain).

(2) Examining Paramātmā —

18 The Supersoul, the Indweller, of whom the scriptures of yoga speak, is a partial manifestation of Govinda.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhagavān is a form full of spiritual vilāsa. He is the turīya-vigraha, the form beyond the three states, and so He Himself has no part in any affairs of Devī-dhāma, the material world: He controls pradhāna and the jīvas through the puruṣa-avatāras. As soon as the jīva understands the truth of the three puruṣa-avatāras, he is freed from perceiving the twenty-four elements of māyā. Kṣīrodakaśāyī Mahā-Viṣṇu is the indwelling Lord (antaryāmī) of each jīva; Garbhodakaśāyī Mahā-Viṣṇu is the indwelling Lord of the aggregate jīva of the universe; and the creator of the universes, Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī Mahā-Viṣṇu, is also an indwelling Lord. These three puruṣa-avatāras carry out the creation of Devī-dhāma and govern this partial work. The scriptures of yoga prescribe union (yoga) with Paramātmā in order to pass beyond the twenty-four elements of māyā. Thus the indwelling Puruṣa, Paramātmā, is only a partial manifestation (aṁśa-vibhūti) of Govinda.

19 As one sun is reflected in countless crystals, so Govinda’s portion, the Supersoul, is manifest in every living being.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

A single sun, reflected in countless pieces of crystal, shows itself in each as a separate image. So too Paramātmā, a part of Govinda, manifests in countless jīvas.

Anubhāṣya.

The one sun stays in its place and is reflected in countless pieces of crystal as countless images. So too the one Śrī Govinda, eternally manifest in Goloka-Vṛndāvana, manifests in the hearts of countless jīvas as the indwelling Paramātmā, the Puruṣa whom the jīva is meant to serve. The three mantras that begin "Two birds, inseparable friends…"[14] speak of two birds on one tree, the jīvātmā and Paramātmā; they stand in the relation of the servant and the One served. Paramātmā makes the jīvātmā taste the fruits of karma, but He Himself does not taste such fruits. When the jīva stops enjoying the fruits of karma and comes to know the glory of Paramātmā, whom he is meant to serve, he becomes stainless and attains the supreme equality — Vaikuṇṭha.

*(Bhagavad-gītā 10.42)*

20 "But what need have you, Arjuna, of all this detailed knowledge? By one portion of Myself I pervade and support this entire universe." (Bhagavad-gītā, 10.42)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Arjuna, what more need I say? With one part of Myself, as Paramātmā, I have entered the whole universe and abide in it.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhagavān explained to Arjuna in many ways the truth of His relationship with all that exists (sambandha-tattva), and in this verse He states it briefly.

atha vā (or else) arjuna (O Arjuna) bahunā (with many details, taught one by one) jñātena kim (what use is it [for you] to know? That is, enough) idam (this [made of spirit and matter]) kṛtsnam (entire) jagat (universe) ekāṁśena (with one part [the part called the Puruṣa, the indwelling Lord of prakṛti and the rest]) viṣṭabhya (supporting [as its foundation, bearing it; as its overseer, governing it; as its controller, subduing it; as the all-pervading one, pervading it]), aham (I [Bhagavān]) sthitaḥ (abide).

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.9.42)*

21 (Grandsire Bhīṣma said:) “O Śrī Kṛṣṇa! Having cast off the illusion of ‘difference’ between all Your forms, I have attained You, the Unborn, who abide in the heart of each of the embodied beings You have created — like the one sun, which each eye sees in its own way.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.9.42)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bhīṣma said: “O Kṛṣṇa, one and the same sun appears to each eye as a separate, distinct object. So too Paramātmā, Your part, abides in the heart of every embodied being, and people take Him to be a separate truth. But when they become ātma-kalpita — Your own, that is, when they know themselves to be Your servants — this delusion of difference vanishes. I have come to know Paramātmā as Your part, and so I too am free from the delusion of difference: I have gained knowledge of You, who are unborn in Your own nature (svarūpa).”[11]

Anubhāṣya.

Yudhiṣṭhira went to Bhīṣma wishing to ask him about dharma, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa followed him on Arjuna's chariot. Other divine and brahminical sages (devarṣis and brahmarṣis) also gathered there to see Bhīṣma. Bhīṣma answered some of Yudhiṣṭhira's questions. Then, when the time of his departure came, he praised Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who stood before him, in many verses; this verse is one of them.

prati-dṛśam (to each eye [of beings in different places]) naikadhā (in many ways [because they abide in different places]), ekam arkam iva (like the one sun) ātma-kalpitānām (created by Himself) śarīra-bhājām (of the embodied) hṛdi hṛdi (in each heart) dhiṣṭhitam (abiding), tam imam ajam (this Unborn One [Śrī Kṛṣṇa]) vidhūta-bheda-mohaḥ (one whose delusion of difference is cast off [vidhūta, removed]. This delusion is the idea that Bhagavān's name, form, qualities and pastimes are different from Him. It shows itself as a perception of multiplicity: one imagines that Bhagavān's form divides into different forms — prakāśas and vilāsa-mūrtis — in order to become all-pervading) aham (I) samadhigataḥ asmi (have fully realized [attained]).

(3) Examining Bhagavān —

22 That very Govinda is Śrī Caitanya Gosāñi Himself. There is none so merciful in delivering the souls.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

By using the word sākṣāt (directly, in person) here, the author establishes that Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is Govinda Himself, not a prakāśa or vilāsa of Govinda.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Caitanya Upaniṣad: "Gaura is the Self of all, the Great Person, the Great Soul, the great yogī; He is beyond the three modes and is the embodiment of pure goodness (sattva). He will reveal devotion in the world." In the Śvetāśvatara: "He is the supreme great Lord of lords, the supreme Deity of deities, the supreme Master of masters, higher than the highest. We know Him as God, the Lord of the worlds, worthy of praise." "Truly, the great Lord is the Puruṣa. He impels the intelligence toward this purest attainment; He is the Ruler, the imperishable Light." "When the seer sees the golden-colored Creator, the Lord, the Puruṣa, the source of Brahman…" "O Great Person! I bow to Your lotus feet. They are always to be meditated on; they destroy humiliation and fulfill desires; they are the refuge of the holy places, praised by Śiva and Brahmā, and they are the shelter. They destroy the sufferings of servants; O Protector of the surrendered, they are the boat on the ocean of birth and death. O most righteous One! At the word of a worthy one You gave up a glorious kingdom, so hard to renounce and coveted even by the gods, and went to the forest; You ran after the illusory deer that Your beloved desired…" "Thus, O Great Person, You descend as human, animal, sage, demigod and fish, sustain the worlds, slay the enemies of the world and protect the dharma proper to each age. But in Kali You came concealed (channa), and therefore You are Triyuga" — these are Prahlāda's words.[15]

There is no need to cite here the evidence already quoted in the Caritāmṛta. In the Kṛṣṇa-yāmala: "In the holy place Navadvīpa I shall become the son of Śacī." In the Brahma-yāmala: "Or else I shall descend to earth in the form of My devotee and appear in Māyā[16] in the Kali age, when saṅkīrtana begins." In the Vāyu Purāṇa: "When saṅkīrtana begins in the Kali age, I shall become the son of Śacī." In the Ananta-saṁhitā: "That same Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa, the beloved of Rādhikā's life, who at the beginning of creation is the Lord of the universe, became Gaura, O Maheśvarī!" And so on.

Nārāyaṇa, the Lord of Paravyoma, is described in all the scriptures —

23 In the spiritual sky dwells the Lord called Nārāyaṇa — Bhagavān, full in the six opulences, the beloved of Lakṣmī.

24 He whom the Vedas, the Bhāgavatam, the Upaniṣads and the Āgamas call "the complete Truth", and who has no equal —

Anubhāṣya.

In the Ṛg-veda-saṁhitā (1.22.20): "The sages always see that supreme abode of Viṣṇu, like an eye spread across the sky," and so on. In the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (11.3.34–35): "You are the best knowers of Brahman; tell us, then, of the foundation of Brahman, the Paramātmā called Nārāyaṇa." "It is the cause of the creation, maintenance and dissolution of this world, but Itself has no cause. It is present in dreaming, waking and deep sleep, and also beyond them. By It the body, the senses, the life air and the heart come alive and act. Know It as the Supreme, O king." In the Nārāyaṇa-atharvaśira Upaniṣad: "From Nārāyaṇa alone everything is born, by Nārāyaṇa it is set in motion, in Nārāyaṇa it dissolves. Nārāyaṇa is eternal. All this is Nārāyaṇa alone — all that has been and all that will be. Pure is the one God Nārāyaṇa, and there is no second." In the Nārāyaṇa Upaniṣad: "He from whom the mother of the world was born." In the Hayaśīrṣa-pañcarātra: "The Paramātmā is the Lord Hari."

A difference in vision brings a difference in what is seen; a difference in means brings a difference in how the goal is perceived —

25 Him the devotees behold through bhakti-yoga, as the gods behold the sun in its own form.

26 Those who worship Him on the paths of knowledge and yoga realize Him as Brahman and as the Supersoul.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bhagavān's eternal form (nitya-vigraha) cannot be seen with the material senses or by the efforts of knowledge. Only devotees, through bhakti-yoga, that is, through bhakti-rati, the loving attraction of devotion, become fit to see it. Here is an example. The sun is an object that has a form. Ordinary eyes of flesh, or demoniac eyes, cannot see that form; but the divine eyes of the demigods pierce the network of the sun's rays and see it. Those who seek Bhagavān on the path of knowledge and on the path of yoga can follow only Brahman, the network of rays of the eternal form, and Paramātmā, His part. They do not become fit to see the spiritual eternal form.

27 By the differences in worship we know the greatness of the Lord; that is why He is compared to the sun.

(1) Kṛṣṇa and Nārāyaṇa are one, yet differ in Their pastimes —

28 That Nārāyaṇa is not different from Kṛṣṇa's own form: They are one and the same Person, differing only in shape.

29 This One has two arms, while that One has four; this One holds the flute, that One the disc and the other emblems.[3]

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.14.14)*

30 "Are You not Nārāyaṇa? For You are the Self of all embodied beings, O Lord, and the witness of all the worlds. Nārāyaṇa is Your portion — so called because His abode is the waters born of Nara; and that too is true, not Your māyā." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.14)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Adhīśa, Supreme Lord, You are the witness of all the worlds. You are the Self of all embodied beings, that is, what is dearest to them; are You not, then, my father Nārāyaṇa? The water born of Nara is called nāra, and He whose resting place (ayana) is in it is Nārāyaṇa. He is Your aṅga, that is, Your part. None of Your parts — Kāraṇābdhiśāyī, Kṣīrodaśāyī and Garbhodaśāyī — is subject to māyā: They are the masters of māyā, the supreme Truth beyond māyā.

Anubhāṣya.

Brahmā stole the calves, then came to understand the truth about Śrī Kṛṣṇa and offered Him praise; this is one of the verses of that prayer.

adhīśa (O Adhīśa [Lord, endowed with majesty greater than that of the three puruṣa-avatāras]!) tvam (You) nārāyaṇaḥ (are Nārāyaṇa (He from whom comes the movement [ayana], that is, the activity, of nāra)) sarva-dehinām (of all the embodied [of all living beings]) ātmā (the Self; [and so]) tvam (You) nārāyaṇaḥ ((He whose shelter [ayana] is nāra, that is, the totality of jīvas: the third puruṣa-avatāra, who abides in the Ocean of Milk)) asi na hi (are You not?) akhila-loka-sākṣī (the witness of all the worlds [the indwelling Lord of the aggregate [of jīvas]]) tvam (You) nārāyaṇaḥ ((He who knows [ayase] nāra: the second puruṣa-avatāra, who abides in the Garbhodaka)) nara-bhū-jalāyanāt ([because His shelter is the arthas, that is, the twenty-four elements that arose from Nara, the Paramātmā, and also the water born of Nara]) nārāyaṇaḥ (Nārāyaṇa [that celebrated first puruṣa-avatāra, who abides in the Kāraṇodaka] —) saḥ api (He too) tava aṅgam (is Your aṅga [part]) tat ca api satyam (And this too is true), na tava eva māyā (and not at all māyā [not transient, like what belongs to māyā]).

(Even when You descend as an avatāra, māyā cannot touch Your spiritual body. O Kṛṣṇa, You are the original Nārāyaṇa, and the Puruṣa and the other avatāras are Your parts; You alone are the whole. These avatāras are limbs (aṅgas), and You are the possessor of the limbs (aṅgī) — such is my conviction.)

Explanation of the verse —

31 Having stolen the boys and the calves, Brahmā had committed an offence; to have it forgiven, he begged for mercy:

*Since Kṛṣṇa is the original Nārāyaṇa, all the puruṣa-avatāras are contained in Him —*

32 “From the lotus of Your navel I was born; You are my father and mother, and I am Your son.

33 A father and mother do not hold a child’s offences against him. Forgive my offence and be merciful to me.”

34 Kṛṣṇa said: “Brahmā, your father is Nārāyaṇa. I am a cowherd boy — how can you be My son?”

The first proof —

35 Brahmā said: “Are You not Nārāyaṇa? You are Nārāyaṇa — hear the reason.

36 You are the Self of all living beings, as many as there are in the material and spiritual creation; You are their original source.[4]

Anubhāṣya.

All the various things that have arisen from prakṛti through the modes are material (prākṛta). There are also the eternal varieties of spiritual vilāsa, which the modes cannot disturb; this is the transcendental (aprākṛta) creation. The hosts of liberated jīvas who belong to the transcendental manifestation are devoted to serving Kṛṣṇa. The conditioned jīvas are subject to time, are under the sway of the three modes and belong to the material creation. The liberated jīvas of the transcendental manifestation are always engaged in serving Kṛṣṇa, while the material jīvas are always bound to taste happiness and distress. Saṅkarṣaṇa is the original svarūpa of both the liberated and the conditioned jīvas. From His marginal potency (taṭastha-śakti) come various jīvas; some are turned toward service and others away from it, and all abide in various forms. When liberated, the jīva serves Bhagavān in the transcendental kingdom: in the five different rasas he abides under the protection of the āśraya (the shelter). In the kingdom of enjoyment, however, he is gripped by ignorance (avidyā): he thinks himself the enjoyer and sees in other things a “woman” (yoṣid-buddhi), that is, an object to enjoy. Both kinds of jīvas are manifestations of the transformation of the taṭastha-śakti; both depend on the Possessor of potency.

37 As the earth is the cause and the support of all earthen pots, so You are the cause of all souls, and You are the shelter of all.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The material (prākṛta) creation lies within the bounds of māyā, prakṛti. “Earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, intelligence and false ego — these are the eight divisions of My separated prakṛti. This is the lower…” (Bhagavad-gītā 7.4–5). According to these words of the Gītā, all of it belongs to māyā, that is, is material: both the subtle world — mind, intelligence and false ego — and the five great elements beginning with earth. The pure jīva and the spiritual world are transcendental (aprākṛta). There are two worlds, the material and the transcendental, and two kinds of jīvas, the conditioned and the pure; You are the Self of them all, and therefore their original svarūpa. Earth is the cause and shelter of all pots; so too You alone are the nidāna of the jīvas, that is, their cause and shelter.

Anubhāṣya.

All-pervading clay is the material cause of the various pots it pervades. So too from Bhagavān, nondual knowledge, all the hosts of jīvas are eternally manifest, like pots. Bhagavān, the cause of all causes, always abides [in them] as the cause of the jīvas. The Śruti "The eternal among the eternal, the conscious among the conscious"[17] shows that the shelter of all that exists is the Supreme Truth.

The Viśiṣṭādvaitins define the subject of Vedānta like this. The jīva, the possessor of the subtle and gross bodies, is seen in three states. So too the spiritual and the material worlds appear in two states, separately from Bhagavān's svarūpa, and so establish His nonduality endowed with distinguishing features. The spiritual world is full of Bhagavān's associates, and the material world is the field of enjoyment for the conditioned jīvas, who have turned away from Bhagavān. Bhagavān's internal potency is the cause of the variety of His retinue; His external potency has created the world born of the material modes. The material world is the gross, external part of Bhagavān's body, and the world of jīvas the subtle part of His body. Bhagavān is the possessor (aṅgī) of both kinds of parts. Gauḍīya philosophy (Gauḍīya-darśana) has established inconceivable oneness and difference (acintya-bhedābheda), present at once in the relation of cause and effect: between the Possessor of His own potency (svarūpa-śakti) and the two worlds, which are transformations of the spiritual and the non-spiritual potencies.

38 The word nāra means the aggregate of all souls, and the word ayana means their shelter.

39 Therefore You are the original Nārāyaṇa. That is one reason; hear now the second.

The second proof —

40 The Puruṣas and the other avatāras are the lords of the souls, but Your majesty is unlimited, greater than that of Them all.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"The Puruṣa and the other avatāras" are the three puruṣa-avatāras: Kāraṇābdhiśāyī, Garbhodakaśāyī and Kṣīrodakaśāyī.

41 Therefore You are the supreme Lord, the father of all; it is by Your power that They protect the world.

42 Since You protect those who are the shelter of the nāras, You are the original Nārāyaṇa.

The third proof —

43 Hear the third reason, O Śrī Bhagavān. There are unlimited universes and many abodes — the Vaikuṇṭhas and others.

44 All the beings in them, and their deeds in past, present and future — You see it all; You are the witness, You know the heart of everything.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Ithe (in them) means in the material multitudes of universes and in the transcendental abodes, Vaikuṇṭha and the rest. You are the one witness, that is, the seer, of all the deeds of the conditioned and the pure jīvas — past, future and present.

45 By Your glance all the worlds exist; if You did not look on them, nothing could either stand or move.

46 Since You see the ways of all the nāras, by that too You are the original Nārāyaṇa."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Yāte means “because”: because You see the jīvas, You are Nārāyaṇa, the shelter (ayana) of nāra. Brahmā establishes by three arguments that Kṛṣṇa is the original Nārāyaṇa. First: Kṛṣṇa is the nidāna (cause) and shelter of all jīvas, and therefore He is the original Nārāyaṇa. Second: the Lord of all jīvas is the Kāraṇābdhiśāyī Puruṣa; the Self of the aggregate jīva, that is, of Hiraṇyagarbha, is the Garbhodaśāyī Puruṣa; and the indwelling Lord, the Self of the individual jīva, is the Kṣīrodaśāyī Puruṣa. These three Puruṣas and Their avatāras receive Their power from Kṛṣṇa; He is its original source and thus the shelter of nāra, and therefore He is the original Nārāyaṇa. Third: in countless universes, in Vaikuṇṭha and in the other abodes, Kṛṣṇa is the witness of the deeds of the conditioned and the pure jīvas in all three times; thus He is the shelter of nāra, and therefore the original Nārāyaṇa.

47 Kṛṣṇa said: “Brahmā, I do not understand your words. Nārāyaṇa is He who dwells in the hearts of living beings and in the waters.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Jīva-hṛdi means in the heart of the individual and of the aggregate jīva. Jale (in the water) means in the Kāraṇābdhi, the Garbhodaka and the Kṣīrodaka.

48 Brahmā said: “The Nārāyaṇa who lies in the waters and dwells in the beings — in all these forms He is Your portion. What I say is true.

*The marks of the three puruṣa-avatāras —*

49 Kāraṇodakaśāyī, Garbhodakaśāyī and Kṣīrodakaśāyī Viṣṇu create through māyā; therefore all of Them are māyī, masters of māyā.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Tāte saba māyī: because these three Puruṣas create through māyā, They are māyī, that is, the masters of māyā.

50 These three, who lie on the waters, dwell within all as the Supersoul: They who are called Puruṣas are the Self of all the universes.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Ye puruṣa-nāmī means “They whose name is Puruṣa.”

51 Garbhodakaśāyī is the Self of Hiraṇyagarbha, and Kṣīrodakaśāyī is the Indweller of each individual being.

52 They glance upon māyā, and in this there is, as it were, a trace of māyā; but Kṛṣṇa, who abides in the fourth state (turīya), has no connection with māyā at all.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Hiraṇyagarbha is the aggregate jīva; his indwelling Lord is Garbhodakaśāyī. The indwelling Lord of the vyaṣṭi, that is, of each separate jīva, is the Puruṣa Kṣīrodakaśāyī. The Puruṣa beyond these three Puruṣas is turīya, that is, the fourth. He is Kṛṣṇacandra's vilāsa-mūrti, Nārāyaṇa, the Lord of Paravyoma; in Him there is not even a trace of māyā.

*(from the Bhāvārtha-dīpikā on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.15.16)*

53 "Virāṭ, Hiraṇyagarbha and Kāraṇa are designations of the Lord; that which is free from these three is called the fourth (turīya)." (Śrīdhara Svāmī's commentary on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.15.16)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Virāṭ, Hiraṇyagarbha and Kāraṇa are all designations (upādhis) connected with māyā. The truth free of upādhis is turīya, the fourth.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīdhara Svāmī quotes this verse in his commentary to explain the word turīya.

virāṭ ([the gross]), hiraṇya-garbhaḥ ([the subtle]) ca (and) kāraṇam ([ignorance, or prakṛti] —) iti ([these]) īśasya (of the Lord [the puruṣa-avatāra, creator of the mahat-tattva]) upādhayaḥ (are the upādhis [particular manifestations]) yat (That which) tribhiḥ (by [these] three [upādhis]) hīnam (is untouched [not connected with them]), tat (that [state]) turīyam (the fourth [Vaikuṇṭha, beyond the three Puruṣas]) pracakṣate (they call).

54 Although the three have dealings with māyā, she does not touch Them: all of Them are beyond māyā.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Hiraṇyagarbha and the rest — the aggregate and the individual jīvas — are subject to māyā. The three Puruṣas mentioned have dealings with māyā, yet They are beyond it. They are the truth that rules over māyā: They glance at māyā but do not touch it.

*To descend into the material world and remain beyond it — this is the very nature of Bhagavān — (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.11.38)*

55 "This is the lordship of the Lord: though He abides within material nature, He is never affected by its qualities — just as the intelligence of those who have taken shelter of Him is not affected." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.11.38)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Lord's lordship consists in just this: He abides in prakṛti yet does not come under the sway of its modes. When the intelligence of a jīva bound by māyā takes shelter of the Lord (Īśa), it does not join with the modes of māyā even when near māyā.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa returned to His palace in the city of Dvārakā and spent His time with the queens. There was not even a trace of māyā in His conduct, and Śrī Sūta spoke of it like this:

tad-āśrayā ([sheltered in Śrī Bhagavān, as is that of the great devotees]) buddhiḥ (intelligence) yathā (just as [though it has somehow come to be in prakṛti] [na yujyate] does not become bound [to the modes], so [He too]. Or else, by contrast): tad-āśrayā ([resting on prakṛti]) buddhiḥ (intelligence [the knowledge of the jīva]) yathā (just as [yujyate] becomes bound, so [He] na — does not [become bound]) prakṛti-sthaḥ api (even while abiding in prakṛti [being in the world made of the three modes]), sadā (always) ātma-sthaiḥ (abiding in Him) tad-guṇaiḥ (by its modes) na yujyate (is not bound [does not become attached to the material modes]) etat ([Just] this) īśasya (of the Lord [Bhagavān, all-powerful and beyond māyā]) īśanam (is the lordship [aiśvarya]).

56 You are the supreme shelter of those three; You are the original Nārāyaṇa — what doubt can there be?

Anubhāṣya.
For “those three” — Kṣīrodakaśāyī, Garbhodakaśāyī and Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī Mahā-Viṣṇu — You are the supreme shelter. Their source is Your vilāsa-mūrti, the catur-vyūha: Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha. From Saṅkarṣaṇa, in the Causal Waters, appears the first puruṣa-avatāra, the creator of the mahat-tattva, Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī; from Pradyumna, the second puruṣa-avatāra, Garbhodakaśāyī; and from Aniruddha, the third puruṣa-avatāra, Kṣīrodakaśāyī. Once They appear, They remain under the shelter of Nārāyaṇa alone.

57 The source of those three is the Nārāyaṇa of the spiritual sky. He is Your manifestation (prakāśa), and You are the original Nārāyaṇa.”[5]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Aṁśī is the One of whom [another] is a part. The Nārāyaṇa of Paravyoma is the aṁśī of the puruṣa-avatāras. He is Your secondary manifestation (prakāśa) in the form of vilāsa.

58 Thus, by Brahmā’s words, the Nārāyaṇa of the spiritual sky is a manifestation of Kṛṣṇa. This is the explanation of the truth.[6]

59 This verse (2.30), which reveals the characteristics of the Truth, is the essence of the Bhāgavatam; as a rule of interpretation (paribhāṣā) it applies everywhere.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Paribhāṣā means a [defining] sūtra. Sarvatrādhikāra: you will find this mark everywhere in the Bhāgavatam.

Anubhāṣya.
“This verse” is the verse nārāyaṇas tvam… quoted above as number 30.

60 Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān are manifestations of Kṛṣṇa. Not knowing this meaning, fools interpret otherwise.

Refuting the view that Kṛṣṇa is a part of Nārāyaṇa and Nārāyaṇa the whole —

61 They say: “Nārāyaṇa is the source of the avatāras, and Kṛṣṇa is His avatāra; for That One has four arms, while this One has a human form.”

62 In this way they raise various objections, but a verse of the Bhāgavatam skilfully refutes them.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Vihāra means vihāra in the form of manifestations (prakāśas). Fools do not understand this meaning and interpret otherwise, for example: “Nārāyaṇa is the source of the avatāras, and Kṛṣṇa is an avatāra.” When such conclusions are put forward as a pūrvapakṣa (an opponent's thesis), the verses of the Bhāgavatam refute them with special skill.

*(2) Refuting the view that Kṛṣṇa and Nārāyaṇa are different — (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.2.11)*

63 “The knowers of the Truth call the non-dual knowledge the Truth; it is named Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.2.11)[7]

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 2.11.

64 Hear, brothers, and consider the meaning of this verse: the principal Truth is one, and It is manifest in three ways.

65 The non-dual knowledge, the Truth itself, is Kṛṣṇa’s own form; Brahman, Paramātmā and Bhagavān are His three forms.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
In this verse the word advaya-jñāna (nondual knowledge) means the original Truth, Kṛṣṇa's svarūpa.

66 The meaning of this verse has left you speechless. Now hear another statement of the Bhāgavatam.

*Refuting the view that Kṛṣṇa is an avatāra or a part — (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.3.28)*

67 "All these (avatāras) are portions (aṁśa) and parts of portions (kalā) of the Puruṣa, but Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself. Age after age They bring happiness to the world when it is troubled by the enemies of Indra." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.3.28)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Rāma, Nṛsiṁha and the others are parts (aṁśas) or parts of parts (kalās) of the puruṣa-avatāra. But Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself. These avatāras protect the world, oppressed by the Daityas (demons), in age after age.

Anubhāṣya.
After listing Śrī Kṛṣṇa's avatāras, Śrī Sūta concludes with this verse.

ete ([the avatāras named before]) puṁsaḥ ([of the puruṣa-avatāra]) aṁśa-kalāḥ (are parts and kalās [parts of parts]) kṛṣṇaḥ tu (But Kṛṣṇa) bhagavān svayam (is Bhagavān Himself) indrāri-vyākulam ([These partial avatāras] [oppressed by the demons]) lokam ([the universe]) yuge yuge ([in every age, at the proper time]) mṛḍayanti ([make happy]).

68 Describing the general characteristics of all the avatāras, he counted Kṛṣṇacandra among them.

69 Then Sūta Gosāñi, feeling great apprehension in his mind, determined the distinguishing characteristic of each.

70 All the avatāras are portions and parts of the Puruṣa, but Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself, the crown of all.

71 An opponent says: "Your explanation is fine, but the Nārāyaṇa of the spiritual sky is Bhagavān Himself.

72 It is He who comes and descends in the form of Kṛṣṇa. This is the meaning I see in the verse — what more is there to consider?"

(3) Refuting, by the rules of poetics, the view that Kṛṣṇa is a part of Nārāyaṇa —

73 To him I say: “Why do you draw inferences by false logic? A meaning contrary to scripture can never be evidence.

*(a rule of poetics, Ekādaśī-tattva 13)*

74 ‘One should not state the predicate without first stating the subject; for nothing that has not found its footing can stand anywhere.’ (Ekādaśī-tattva, 13)[8]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In poetics the unknown is called the vidheya, and the known the anuvāda. Take the sentence “This brāhmaṇa is learned.” Everyone knows that this man is a brāhmaṇa; so this is the anuvāda. Not everyone knows that the brāhmaṇa is learned; so this is the vidheya. If someone states the vidheya first without stating the anuvāda, his statement has nothing to rest on and cannot stand.

Anubhāṣya.

anuvādam (the uddeśya, that is, the known subject) anuktvā (without stating) vidheyam (the unknown subject) na udīrayet (one should not state) hi (for) alabdhāspadam (that which has not found a footing, its own place) kiñcit (anything) kutracit (anywhere) na pratitiṣṭhati (does not stand firm).

*The rule for using the anuvāda and the vidheya —*

75 Without stating the subject one does not state the predicate: first the subject is stated, and afterwards the predicate.

*Definition of the anuvāda and the vidheya —*

76 That which is unknown is called the predicate (vidheya); that which is known is called the subject (anuvāda).

An example —

77 For example, we say: “This brāhmaṇa is a great scholar.” Here “brāhmaṇa” is the subject, and its predicate is “scholarship”.

78 That he is a brāhmaṇa is known, but his scholarship is not; therefore “brāhmaṇa” comes first, and “scholarship” afterwards.

*Explaining the verse ete cāṁśa-kalāḥ… by the rule of anuvāda and vidheya, or: Kṛṣṇa is the source of the avatāras —*

79 In the same way, here the avatāras are all known, but whose avatāras They are — that is unknown.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Iha means “this one” (He). “His avatāras” is a known subject. But whose avatāras they are is not yet known.

80 First, by the word “these”, the avatāras are stated as the subject; afterwards the predicate is given: “portions of the Puruṣa”.[9]

81 So too Kṛṣṇa became known among the avatāras, but the particular knowledge of Him remained unknown.

82 Therefore the word “Kṛṣṇa” comes first, as the subject, and afterwards the predicate is stated: that He is “Bhagavān Himself”.

83 Thus it is established that Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself; and it follows of necessity that Bhagavān Himself is Kṛṣṇa.

Otherwise Sūta's words would contradict themselves —

84 If Kṛṣṇa were the portion and Nārāyaṇa the source, Sūta’s statement would have been the reverse.

85 He would have said: “Nārāyaṇa, the source, is Bhagavān Himself, and He is Śrī Kṛṣṇa.”

Freedom from the four defects is the mark and distinction of the words of liberated souls —

86 In the words of the wise seers there are none of these faults: error, inattention, the wish to deceive, and imperfection of the senses.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the verse ete cāṁśa-kalāḥ… the word ete (these) names the avatāras; this is its anuvāda. That they are parts of the puruṣa-avatāra was not known before, and this is stated next as the vidheya. In this verse Kṛṣṇa too is mentioned among the avatāras. But the special knowledge about Kṛṣṇa is not yet known, so a vidheya is needed. That is why the word “Kṛṣṇa” comes first, as the anuvāda, and its vidheya is that Kṛṣṇa is “Bhagavān Himself.” This is what must be established here (sādhya): the reasoning must prove that Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself. Therefore the words kṛṣṇas tu bhagavān svayam necessarily (bādhya) mean “Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself,” and they can have no other meaning. If Nārāyaṇa were the whole and Kṛṣṇa the part, Sūta's words would stand in the reverse order: “Bhagavān Himself is Kṛṣṇa.” But ārṣa, the wise sayings of the sages, are free from the four defects — bhrama, pramāda, vipralipsā and karaṇāpāṭava. That is why the text reads kṛṣṇas tu bhagavān svayam. Bhrama is false knowledge; pramāda, inattention; vipralipsā, a mind distracted elsewhere; karaṇāpāṭava, the imperfection of the senses.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhrama is false knowledge of a thing, taking it to be what it is not, as when one takes a rope for a snake or mother-of-pearl for silver. Pramāda is inattention: one perceives, hears or says one thing as another. Vipralipsā is the desire to cheat. Karaṇāpāṭava is the imperfection of the senses. For example, the eye cannot see what is far away or make out what is tiny; in jaundice and other diseases the perception of color (form) is distorted; and the ear cannot hear a sound from far away.

87 You speak against the scriptures and grow angry when this is pointed out. The fault in your interpretation is that the predicate is wrongly placed (avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa).

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The defect called avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa arises when the vidheya is stated before the anuvāda. Avimṛṣṭa means unconsidered.

Anubhāṣya.

Avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa. The vidheyāṁśa is the unknown subject. If it is not set forth as the main thing, the defect called avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa arises. Its other name is vidheya-avimarśa.

The meaning and definition of the words "Bhagavān Himself" —

88 He from whose Godhood the Godhood of all others proceeds — in Him alone the words "Bhagavān Himself" have their meaning.

An example of the source of the avatāras and of the avatāras —

89 As many lamps are kindled from one lamp, and that one I count as the original,

Anubhāṣya.

Brahma-saṁhitā, Chapter 5, verse 46: "The flame of a lamp passes to another wick and itself becomes a lamp: it burns separately, yet has the same qualities as its source. In the same way He shines in the form of Viṣṇu. I worship Govinda, the original Puruṣa."

All the viṣṇu-tattvas are like lamps: they are full of light and have the same qualities as the original Nārāyaṇa. Yet they are lit from the original lamp. The viṣṇu-tattvas are equal to Govinda in being light. But Viriñci (Brahmā) and Śambhu (Śiva) are not so, even though they too are guṇa-avatāras. Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī says: "Śambhu, however, is the seat of tamas. He is like a thin lamp flame mixed with soot, and so there is no such equality."

90 so Kṛṣṇa is the cause of all the avatāras. Hear another verse, which refutes wrong interpretations.

*(4) By the marks of a Purāṇa too, the original shelter is not Nārāyaṇa but Kṛṣṇa — (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.10.1–2)*

91–92 "In this Bhāgavatam there are ten subjects: primary creation (sarga), secondary creation (visarga), maintenance (sthāna), the Lord's favour to His devotees (poṣaṇa), the impulses to action (ūti), the reigns of Manu (manvantara), the narrations of the Lord (īśānukathā), the winding up of the world (nirodha), liberation (mukti) and the shelter (āśraya). To reveal clearly the tenth, the great souls describe here the characteristics of the other nine — sometimes in prayers and narratives, sometimes by direct explanation." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.10.1–2)[10]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Bhāgavatam describes ten subjects: sarga, visarga, sthāna, ūti, poṣaṇa, the manvantaras, īśa-kathā, nirodha, mukti and āśraya. The tenth truth is āśraya, the shelter. To examine it in its purity, the great souls have described the nine preceding marks: in some places through prayers and narratives, and in others through direct reasoning.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the Tenth Canto Śrī Kṛṣṇa is pointed out as the āśraya-vigraha, the form who is the shelter of all who seek shelter. I bow to that supreme abode and abode of the universe whose name is Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The meaning is this. In the world there are two truths: āśraya, the shelter, and āśrita, that which rests on the shelter. The original truth on which all the āśrita-tattvas rest is the āśraya. All the truths that exist by resting on it are āśrita-tattvas. Everything from sarga to mukti is āśrita-tattva. Thus the puruṣa-avatāras and all the avatāras who follow Them, all the potencies, and after them the worlds of jīvas and of matter — all of these rest on that shelter, on Kṛṣṇa. In its prayers and narratives the Bhāgavatam examines the āśraya-tattva partly indirectly, and in its direct teachings directly. Therefore one must know Kṛṣṇa's svarūpa and His three potencies.

Anubhāṣya.

Parīkṣit asked how the rājasic creations arose from the Vairāja Puruṣa. In answer Śukadeva speaks this verse at the start of his explanation of the catuḥ-ślokī, the four verses.

atra (here, in the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam) sargaḥ (the birth of the elements, the subtle elements, the senses and the intelligence) visargaḥ (the imbalance of the modes in Brahmā's creation) sthānam (maintenance [sthiti]. This is Bhagavān's victory: His excellence shows in the fact that everything created keeps within its bounds) poṣaṇam (His mercy to His devotees) ūtayaḥ (the desires that impel one to karma) manvantara (the manvantaras, that is, the dharma of goodness) īśānukathāḥ (the narratives of Hari's avatāras) nirodhaḥ (withdrawal: the world, together with the potencies, lies down to sleep following the Self) muktiḥ (abiding in the pure state) āśrayaḥ (the Parabrahman, the Paramātmā, the cause of creation, maintenance and dissolution).

These are the ten subjects.

Anubhāṣya.

mahātmānaḥ (the great souls, Vidura and others) iha (here, in the Purāṇa Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam) daśamasya (of the tenth, that is, of the āśraya) viśuddhy-artham (for clear knowledge, that is, knowledge of the truth) navānām (of the nine [subjects]) lakṣaṇam (the nature) śrutena (by the word that names them directly) añjasā (directly) arthena (by the meaning) varṇayanti (describe).

1. Sarga — the arising of the five great elements, the five tanmātras (subtle elements), the ten senses, the mind, the mahat-tattva and false ego (ahaṅkāra), both in the form of the Virāṭ and in their own nature. 2. Visarga — Brahmā's creation of the moving and the unmoving. 3. Sthiti — Bhagavān's victory, His excellence over Brahmā, the creator, and over Śiva, the destroyer. 4. Poṣaṇa — Bhagavān's mercy to His devotees. 5. Ūti — the desires that impel one to karma. 6. Manvantara — the dharma followed by the jīvas in goodness. 7. Īśa-kathā — the narratives of Hari's avatāras and of the bhāgavatas (His devotees). 8. Nirodha — Hari enters His mystic sleep (yoga-nidrā) and lies down together with His potencies, the upādhis. 9. Mukti — the jīva gives up his gross and subtle forms and abides in the form of a pure jīva or of an associate of the Lord. 10. Āśraya — that celebrated Parabrahman and Paramātmā from whom creation and dissolution proceed and in whom the universe is manifest.

93 To make the shelter known I have named these nine categories; the cause from which these nine arise — that is what “the shelter” means.

94 Kṛṣṇa alone is the shelter of all; Kṛṣṇa is the abode of all. In Kṛṣṇa's body all the universes rest.

95 "In the Tenth Canto the tenth subject is revealed: the embodiment of the shelter of all who take shelter, the supreme abode named Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the abode of the world. To That I bow down." (Śrīdhara Svāmī, Bhāvārtha-dīpikā on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.1.1) daśame (in the Tenth Canto of the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam) āśritāśraya-vigraham (the form who is the shelter of the āśritas, the surrendered souls) daśamam (the tenth, that is, the āśraya-tattva) lakṣyam (is pointed out) tat paraṁ dhāma (that supreme abode, the best shelter), jagad-dhāma (the abode of the universe, the shelter of all), śrī-kṛṣṇākhyam (named Śrī Kṛṣṇa), namāmi (I worship).

Anubhāṣya.

The basis of knowledge about Kṛṣṇa —

96 One who knows Kṛṣṇa's own form and His three potencies is no longer ignorant of Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The three potencies are the cit-śakti, the jīva-śakti and the māyā-śakti.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Jīva Prabhu writes in the Bhagavat-sandarbha (16): "The one Supreme Truth, by Its own natural inconceivable potency, always abides in four ways: as Its svarūpa, as the manifestations of the svarūpa (vaibhava), as the jīvas and as pradhāna. So too the radiance within the sun's disc abides as the disc itself, as the rays issuing from it, and as their reflection. Inconceivability is the power to accomplish the impossible. Potency is of three kinds: internal, external and marginal. By the internal potency, called svarūpa-śakti, the Truth abides in Its full form and in the manifestations of that form, Vaikuṇṭha and the rest. By the marginal potency It abides as the pure jīvas: they are like the rays, spiritual and one with It in nature. By the external potency, called māyā, It abides as pradhāna: this is Its external, material manifestation, like the play of colors in a reflection. These are the four ways. The jīva is a part of It and therefore the marginal potency, while pradhāna belongs to māyā; with this in view the Viṣṇu Purāṇa counts three potencies. The potency whose work (karma) is ignorance (avidyā) is named there avidyā-karma; this is māyā. Although it is external, it has the power to cover even the jīva, who consists of the marginal potency. Its covering lies on bodies from Brahmā down to the unmoving beings, now lighter, now heavier. Pradhāna lacks such qualities as spirituality and changelessness; one should understand that it is this inconceivable māyā that makes it material and changeable. The internal, marginal and external potencies are one in nature [with the Truth]. It is said here only that each of them resembles its image in one respect, not in all: they take the place of the disc, the rays and the reflection, but are not identical with them. Therefore the defects of these images do not apply here."

This one Supreme Truth, by the power of a natural potency beyond human understanding, always abides in four ways: as the svarūpa, as the manifestations of the svarūpa, as the jīva and as pradhāna. So too the sun has four aspects: the radiance within the disc, the disc itself, the rays issuing from the disc, and their reflection. Inconceivability means that the Truth accomplishes the impossible. Potency, too, is of three kinds: internal, external and marginal. The internal svarūpa-śakti reveals the full form of the svarūpa and its manifestations — Vaikuṇṭha, Goloka and the rest. The marginal potency reveals the spiritual forms of the pure jīvas, which are like the rays. The external potency, māyā, reveals the external manifestation connected with the Truth — material pradhāna, like the play of colors in a reflection. These are the four ways. The jīva is a part of It and therefore the marginal potency, while pradhāna belongs to māyā; understanding this, the Viṣṇu Purāṇa counts three potencies. The potency that does the work of ignorance (avidyā) is called māyā. This potency is external, and yet it is given the power to cover the jīva, who consists of the marginal potency. The jīvas covered by māyā abide, to a greater or lesser degree, in bodies from the unmoving beings up to Brahmā. Pradhāna lacks such qualities as spirituality and changelessness — it is material and changeable; one should know that this happens only by the will of the inconceivable māyā. The internal, marginal and external potencies are one in nature, and they are equal in being potencies. But they do not resemble each other in everything: it is said of them only that they take the place [of the disc, the rays and the reflection], not that they are those images. Therefore the defects proper to the marginal and external potencies have no place in the internal potency. Nor do the defects of the external potency have a place in the marginal, or those of the marginal in the external.

97 Kṛṣṇa's own form has six kinds of pastime forms (vilāsa): His manifestations are of two kinds, prābhava and vaibhava;

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Prābhava and vaibhava are those whose forms, full of being, consciousness and bliss, are equal to Hari's, but who are slightly below His supreme state. Their names depend on the measure of potency: where lordship (prabhutā) predominates, there is prābhava; where greatness (vibhutā) predominates, vaibhava. Prābhava is of two kinds. Prābhavas of the first kind remain in the world only briefly: for example, Mohinī, Haṁsa, Śukla and other short-lived avatāras connected with particular ages. The fame of prābhavas of the second kind does not spread very widely: for example, Dhanvantari, Ṛṣabha, Vyāsa, Dattātreya, Kapila and others. But Kūrma, Matsya, Nara-Nārāyaṇa, Varāha, Hayagrīva, Pṛśnigarbha, Baladeva and the avatāras of the fourteen manvantaras — Yajña, Vibhu, Satyasena, Hari, Vaikuṇṭha, Ajita, Vāmana, Sārvabhauma, Ṛṣabha, Viṣvaksena, Dharmasetu, Sudhāmā, Yogeśvara and Bṛhadbhānu — are vaibhava-avatāras.

98 His avatāras are of two kinds, partial (aṁśa) and empowered (śaktyāveśa); and His pastimes are of two kinds, those of childhood (bālya) and of boyhood (paugaṇḍa).

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The aṁśāveśa- and śaktyāveśa-avatāras are explained elsewhere. They too are counted among the prābhavas and vaibhavas. The same holds for the guṇa-avatāras.

99 Kṛṣṇa in His own form is youthful (kiśora): He Himself is the source of the avatāras. In these six forms He sports, filling the universe.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa is eternally youthful (nitya-kiśora), and He has two kinds of pastimes, in childhood (bālya) and in boyhood (paugaṇḍa). Therefore the source of the avatāras Himself is precisely Kṛṣṇa in His youthful form.

100 Within these six forms there are unlimited varieties; yet in all those unlimited forms there is one form, and no difference at all.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa's svarūpa displays six kinds of vilāsa: two kinds of manifestation, prābhava and vaibhava; two kinds of avatāra, aṁśa and śaktyāveśa; and two ages, bālya and paugaṇḍa. In these six kinds of vilāsa of His svarūpa, Kṛṣṇa in His youthful form performs pastimes throughout the universe. Thus these six forms divide without end. But even having become endless, Kṛṣṇa remains the one undivided Truth.

*The cit-śakti and its manifestations —*

101 The spiritual potency (cit-śakti) is also called the personal potency (svarūpa-śakti) and the internal potency (antaraṅgā); her opulence is the unlimited abodes, such as the Vaikuṇṭhas.

*The māyā-śakti and its manifestations —*

102 The potency māyā, the external potency, is the cause of the world: her opulence is the unlimited multitude of universes.

*The jīva-śakti —*

103 The potency of the souls, called marginal (taṭasthā), has no end. These are the three principal potencies, and their varieties are unlimited.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The cit-śakti, or svarūpa-śakti, is also called the internal potency. From it come the endless manifestations of splendor in Vaikuṇṭha and the other abodes. From the marginal potency, the jīva-śakti, come the countless jīvas, conditioned and liberated. From the external potency, the māyā-śakti, comes the endless variety of material universes.

Anubhāṣya.

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad, Chapter 6, mantra 8: “He has no work and no organs of action; no one is seen equal to Him or higher than Him. The Śrutis say that His supreme potency is manifold, and knowledge, strength and action belong to Him by nature."

*Where the forms of the svarūpa and the potencies abide —*

104 Such are His personal forms and His three potencies. Kṛṣṇa is the shelter of them all; in Kṛṣṇa they all abide.

105 Although the Puruṣa is the shelter of the universes, Kṛṣṇa is the original shelter of all — of the Puruṣas and the rest.

Who Kṛṣṇa is —

106 Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself; Kṛṣṇa is the shelter of all. All the scriptures declare Kṛṣṇa to be the Supreme Lord.

*(Brahma-saṁhitā 5.1)*

107 "Kṛṣṇa, Govinda, is the Supreme Lord; His form is eternal being, knowledge and bliss. He has no beginning, yet He is the beginning of all, the cause of all causes." (Brahma-saṁhitā, 5.1)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Supreme Lord is Kṛṣṇa, the form of being, consciousness and bliss. He Himself has no beginning, yet He is the beginning of all and the cause of all causes.

Anubhāṣya.

kṛṣṇaḥ (Kṛṣṇa, Vrajendranandana) paramaḥ īśvaraḥ (the Supreme Lord. He is the Master of all: of Baladeva, Nārāyaṇa, Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha; of the puruṣa-avatāras, the Paramātmās who lie in the three oceans — Kāraṇa, Garbha and Kṣīrārṇava; of the naimittika-avatāras — Matsya, Kūrma, Varāha, Rāma, Nṛsiṁha and others; of the guṇa-avatāras — Brahmā, Śiva and others; of the impersonal Brahman; and of the vibhūti-avatāras — Mahendra and the rest) sac-cid-ānanda-vigrahaḥ (the form of being, consciousness and bliss, endowed with three potencies: sandhinī, saṁvit and hlādinī) anādiḥ (without beginning; of Him it is said, "I alone was in the beginning.") ādiḥ (the original form of all) sarva-kāraṇa-kāraṇam (the cause, the root, of all causes) govindaḥ (Govinda).

108 You know all these conclusions well, and yet you raise objections, only to unsettle me.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Calāite means "to unsettle me needlessly."

Śrī Caitanya is Kṛṣṇa, Himself the source of the avatāras —

109 That Kṛṣṇa, the source of all avatāras, the son of the king of Vraja, has Himself descended in the form of Caitanya.

In Śrī Caitanya, the source of the avatāras, all the avatāras are contained — 110 Therefore Caitanya Gosāñi is the furthest limit of the Supreme Truth. To call Him Kṣīrodaśāyī — what glory is that to Him?

Therefore it is no error to call Him by any name of Viṣṇu —

111 Yet such words of a devotee are not wrong: everything is possible in Him, for He is the source of the avatāras.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 6, 95: "I was lying in the Ocean of Milk — and Nāḍā's roar broke My sleep."[18]

112 All the avatāras are present in the body of their source; so each speaks of Him in his own way, according to his understanding.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
In some books Śrī Caitanya is called Kṣīrodaśāyī, the Lord of Vaikuṇṭha. This does not describe His greatness fully, yet the words of those devotees are not false either. For Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, who is non-different from Kṛṣṇa, is Himself the source of the avatāras, and so all the avatāras abide in Him.

113 Some call Kṛṣṇa Nara-Nārāyaṇa; others say that Kṛṣṇa is Vāmana Himself.

114 Some say that Kṛṣṇa is an avatāra of Kṣīrodaśāyī. Nothing of this is impossible; the words of all of them are true.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, where Kṛṣṇa is described as the source of the avatāras, it is said: "Therefore in the Purāṇas and other scriptures the sages, following particular events, name Kṛṣṇa differently: some call Him Narasakha, the Friend of Nara; others, the younger brother of Mahendra; still others, the One who lies in the Ocean of Milk; some, the Thousand-headed One; and some, the Lord of Vaikuṇṭha."

115 Some call Him Nārāyaṇa, Hari of the spiritual sky. Everything is possible in Kṛṣṇa, for He is the source of the avatāras.

*All devotees, on the path of vaidhī and on the path of rāgānugā alike, absolutely need to know the conclusions of devotion —*

116 I bow down at the feet of all my listeners: hear all these conclusions with undivided attention.

117 Do not be indifferent to them, thinking them mere doctrine; from them the mind becomes firmly attached to Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Some who thirst for devotion do not count these conclusions (siddhāntas) as part of devotion and are too lazy to study them. But this does not lead to good. For when one has understood one's relationship with Kṛṣṇa (sambandha-jñāna), the mind becomes firmly attached to His lotus feet. Therefore such true conclusions are the root of pure devotion.

Thus ends the second chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

Anubhāṣya.

Many see the example of devotees in whom taste (ruci) has awakened and think it is not so necessary to study the conclusions (siddhānta). Out of such laziness many grow poor in worship (bhajana) and turn away from Kṛṣṇa. They take for devotion material feelings hostile to devotion, and fall under the sway of anarthas. The path led by reasoning suits those in whom taste has not yet awakened. Yet those in whom taste has awakened but is still weak have special need of hearing, a part of devotion (śravaṇāṅga). Without hearing the conclusions about Kṛṣṇa, taste does not grow. Among the nine kinds of devotion, hearing is prescribed at the very beginning, before glorification. The creeper of devotion grows only when it is watered with hearing and glorification. Even Brahmā, when he praised Kṛṣṇa and described the devotees who had given up the effort for knowledge, said: "…the news of You, resounding from the mouths of the sādhus and reaching the ear." The Bhāgavatam grants the pure knowledge of the paramahaṁsas. Only one who reads and hears it while reflecting on it attains the level of a mahā-bhāgavata. In Śrī Mahāprabhu's teachings to Sanātana we hear: "One who is expert in scripture and reasoning and has firm faith is a devotee of the highest level; he delivers the world." And Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmīpāda said that one must give up laziness: "Devotion is perfected by six qualities: enthusiasm, conviction, patience, carrying out the prescribed duties, giving up [bad] company, and following the conduct of the sādhus."[19]

Those who claim to be devotees without knowing the conclusions often, out of foolishness, artificially practice the sāttvika-vikāras (spiritual transformations), and so lower the standing of a Vaiṣṇava in people's eyes. Condemning this bad habit, the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam gives the verse tad aśma-sāram….[20] In his commentary on it Śrīpāda Cakravartī Ṭhākura says: "If there are tears and thrilling outside but the heart is not transformed, that heart is made of stone. This censure is aimed at devotees of the lowest level (kaniṣṭha-adhikārīs): even when they have tears, thrilling and the like, their hearts are of stone." When the conclusions are not respected, artificial devotion appears; Śrī Rūpa Prabhu painted its picture like this: "In those whose hearts are slippery by nature, and in those who practice it, tears, thrilling and the like sometimes appear even without a semblance of sattva." Here too is a vivid example of how the crowd of false devotees, lacking the conclusions, take transformations of māyā for transcendental ones.

Many condemn even reading the works on siddhānta written by the Vaiṣṇava ācāryas — Śrī Rāmānuja, Madhvācārya, Nimbārka, Viṣṇusvāmī and others — just as they condemn studying the books of the Advaitavādīs, who are hostile to devotion. Yet for the good of the Vaiṣṇavas Śrī Jīva quoted precisely their excellent conclusions in the Ṣaṭ-sandarbha. The impersonalists (nirviśeṣa-vādīs) mistakenly take the parts of devotion for parts of karma. So too jīvas who are Vaiṣṇavas in name only, not knowing the conclusions, imagine that conclusions favorable to devotion are hostile to it — and fall away from devotion to Kṛṣṇa.

*Love for worship (bhajana) is born of the conclusions of devotion —*

118 Through all these conclusions I come to know the greatness of Caitanya; and from knowing His greatness the mind becomes firm and attached to Him.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Pañcarātra: “Firm love (sneha), surpassing all and joined with knowledge of [the Lord's] greatness, is called devotion; by it [one attains] sārṣṭi and the rest, and by nothing else.” “In those who follow the path of rules it is joined with knowledge of His greatness; but in those who have taken shelter of rāgānugā it is usually pure (kevala).”

The author describes the truth about Kṛṣṇa only to establish faith in Caitanya — 119 To tell the greatness of Caitanya Prabhu, I have described the greatness of Kṛṣṇa in detail.

He who is Kṛṣṇa is Caitanya —

120 This is the determination of the truth of Caitanya Gosāñi: He is Bhagavān Himself, Kṛṣṇa, the son of the king of Vraja.

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the second chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”

121 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

11. The verse translation reads differently: it takes ātma-kalpita as “created by Himself” (as the Anubhāṣya also glosses it), whereas here it is read as “made one’s own,” that is, those who know themselves as the Lord’s servants. ↩
12. The edition reads atan-māyā-rahita (literally “free from māyā, [which is] not-That”); taken here as “untouched by māyā.” ↩

Chapter 3

The Auspicious Invocation of Blessing: The General Cause of Caitanya’s Descent

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. This chapter considers the reasons why Śrī Caitanya descended. At the end of His pastimes Śrī Kṛṣṇa reflected: how could the four rasas of those pastimes — dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and śṛṅgāra (servitude, friendship, parental love and amorous love) — once manifest in the world, become something people could relish? Reflecting thus, He Himself descended in the form of a devotee to show the world how to relish these rasas of prema-bhakti. The chief dharma of the age of Kali is nāma-saṅkīrtana, and the yuga-avatāra, the avatāra of the age, can reveal it. But prema-bhakti in those four rasas no aṁśa-avatāra or any other avatāra has the power to give — only Kṛṣṇacandra Himself. Therefore Kṛṣṇacandra Himself took birth in Navadvīpa. The author cites the words of the Bhāgavatam and other scriptures as proof that Kṛṣṇa Himself would take birth. By the marks of a mahāpuruṣa, a great personality, he establishes that Caitanya is Bhagavān Himself. He further shows that Kṛṣṇa Caitanya descended with His limbs and their parts (aṅga-upāṅga) — that is, with Advaita, Nityānanda, Śrīvāsa and the other devotees — and preached hari-bhakti to the world. For the world the avatāra of Caitanya is more precious than all other avatāras, and therefore He is hidden. He is perceived through devotion alone (He is bhakti-vyaṅgya): only a devotee is fit to see Him with the eye of devotion. He takes great pains to keep this precious truth secret, yet before the highest devotees He stands revealed. To keep Him hidden, the Vedas, Purāṇas and other scriptures mention His future appearance only by hints. This makes clear how hidden His concealed avatāra (channa-avatāra) is and how especially precious. Advaita Ācārya appeared together with his elders and saw that the world had become utterly devoid of devotion to Kṛṣṇa. He reasoned: “If some aṁśa-avatāra descends, He will not be able to bring the world good fortune. The world will be blessed only if I can make Kṛṣṇa Himself descend.” With this in mind he began to offer water and tulasī at Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet and to call out loudly (huṅkāra), so that Kṛṣṇa, the Truth free of all designations, would descend. At the prayer of a pure and guileless devotee, Kṛṣṇa manifests His supreme form, the form on which that devotee meditates. Therefore Gaurāṅga descended in answer to the loving call of the pure devotee Advaita Ācārya — to give prema to the world.

*Obeisance to Mahāprabhu in order to gather the conclusions (siddhānta) of devotion —*

1 I bow to the Lord Śrī Caitanya. Through the power of taking shelter at His feet, even an ignorant man gathers the precious jewels of conclusive truth (siddhānta) from the many mines of scripture.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow down to Śrī Caitanya Prabhu. By the strength of shelter at His feet even an ignorant person can gather from the mines of the scriptures the finest jewels of siddhānta, the conclusions of truth.

Anubhāṣya.

A verse composed by the author himself.

ajñaḥ (even an ignorant person) yat-pādāśraya-vīryataḥ (by the power of shelter at whose feet, that is, at the feet of Śrī Caitanya) ākara-vrātāt (from the many mines, the places where metals are born) siddhānta-san-maṇīn (the true jewels of conclusions) saṅgṛhṇāti (is able to gather fully) ([that]) śrī-caitanya-prabhum (Śrī Caitanya Prabhu) ([I]) vande (worship).

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

3 I have explained the meaning of the third verse. Now, O devotees, hear the meaning of the fourth.

*Explanation of the fourth of the fourteen opening verses (Vidagdha-mādhava, Act 1, verse 2) —*

4 "May the Lord Hari, the son of Śacī, illumined by a mass of lustre more beautiful than gold, ever shine in the inmost cave of your hearts. Out of His mercy He has descended in the age of Kali to bestow what had not been given for a very long time — the treasure of devotion to Himself, rich in the most exalted, radiant ujjvala-rasa." (Vidagdha-mādhava, 1.2)[1]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

May Hari, the son of Śacī, radiant with masses of golden splendor, manifest within your hearts. He has descended in the age of Kali to bestow the treasure of devotion to Himself — the supreme ujjvala-rasa, the radiant rasa of amorous love, which He had never before given to the world.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī used this verse as the maṅgalācaraṇa (blessing the world) at the opening of his play Vidagdha-mādhava. The author, his follower, therefore follows in the footsteps of his own beloved guru.

cirāt (for a long time) anarpita-carīm (never given before) unnatojjvala-rasām (in which the ujjvala-rasa, the rasa of amorous love [śṛṅgāra], is exalted, that is, fully developed) sva-bhakti-śriyam (the beauty of love for Himself) samarpayitum (in order to bestow fully) kalau (in the age of Kali) karuṇayā avatīrṇaḥ (who has come into the world out of mercy) puraṭa-sundara-dyuti-kadamba-sandīpitaḥ (He who is brightly illumined by a mass of beautiful golden radiance) śacī-nandanaḥ (the son of Śacī) hariḥ (Hari) vaḥ (your) hṛdaya-kandare (in the cave of the heart, that is, of the mind) sadā (always, day and night) sphuratu (may He manifest).

The time of His descent —

5 Kṛṣṇa, the son of the king of Vraja, is Bhagavān in all His fullness. Together with all Vraja He enjoys His pastimes eternally in Goloka.

6 Once in a day of Brahmā He descends and displays those pastimes in this world.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The previous chapter established that Kṛṣṇa, the son of the king of Vraja, is Bhagavān in full. He eternally enjoys His pastimes in Goloka, the majestic manifestation (vaibhava) of Gokula, with everything that makes up the rasa of Vraja. These are called His unmanifest pastimes (aprakaṭa-vihāra). Descending into the world, He displays His manifest pastimes (prakaṭa-vihāra) once in every kalpa, that is, once in every day of Brahmā.

7 The four ages are Satya, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali, and together they make up one divine age (divya-yuga).

8 Seventy-one such cycles make one manvantara, the reign of a Manu, and fourteen manvantaras make up a day of Brahmā.

Anubhāṣya.

The age of Kali lasts 432,000 solar years. Dvāpara has twice as many years as Kali, Tretā three times as many and Satya four times as many. Satya, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali together therefore last 4,320,000 solar years. This mahā-yuga has been given the name divya-yuga. Seventy-one such mahā-yugas make one manvantara. Fourteen manvantaras, together with the junctions (sandhi) between them, which altogether equal fifteen Satya-yugas, make a thousand yugas — one day of Brahmā, or a kalpa.

"…A catur-yuga is declared to be, in solar years, [the numbers] two, three and [the four] oceans, multiplied by ten thousand.[21] Seventy-one such yugas are here called a manvantara. Know that in a kalpa there are fourteen Manus together with their junctions [sandhi]; at the beginning of the kalpa there is one more junction, as long as a Kṛta-yuga, and so fifteen are counted. Thus a kalpa of a thousand yugas, which brings about the destruction of living beings, is called a day of Brahmā; his night is just as long." (Sūrya-siddhānta, the chapter on mean motions [Madhyamādhikāra])

9 The present, seventh manvantara is called Vaivasvata, and twenty-seven of its cycles have already passed.

Anubhāṣya.

Mahāprabhu appears in the manvantara of the seventh Manu, named Vaivasvata. “The first Manu was Svāyambhuva. [After him] were born Svārociṣa, Uttama, Tāmasa, then Raivata and Cākṣuṣa; the present one, the seventh, is Vaivasvata. After him come Sāvarṇi, Dakṣa-sāvarṇi, Brahma-sāvarṇi, Dharma-sāvarṇi, Rudraputra, Raucya and Bhautyaka.” These are the fourteen Manus: (1) Svāyambhuva, (2) Svārociṣa, (3) Uttama, (4) Tāmasa, (5) Raivata, (6) Cākṣuṣa, (7) Vaivasvata, (8) Sāvarṇi, (9) Dakṣa-sāvarṇi, (10) Brahma-sāvarṇi, (11) Dharma-sāvarṇi, (12) Rudraputra (Sāvarṇi), (13) Raucya (Deva-sāvarṇi), (14) Bhautyaka (Indra-sāvarṇi). The reign of each lasts 71 mahā-yugas.

10 At the end of the Dvāpara of the twenty-eighth cycle, Kṛṣṇa appears in this world together with His Vraja.[2]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

At the end of the Dvāpara of the twenty-eighth catur-yuga in the manvantara of Vaivasvata, Kṛṣṇa appears with everything that belongs to the truth of Vraja.

Anubhāṣya.

Of the 71 mahā-yugas of the Vaivasvata manvantara, 27 have passed. In the twenty-eighth catur-yuga, after Satya and Tretā have passed, the time of Kṛṣṇa's manifest presence comes at the end of Dvāpara. From the beginning of Brahmā's day to the end of that Dvāpara, six Manus pass, together with their junctions. Adding this time to the 27 yugas of Vaivasvata Manu and to the Satya, Tretā and Dvāpara [of the twenty-eighth] (and subtracting the time of creation), one finds that 975,320,000[22] solar years have passed.

*The four principal rasas, apart from śānta —*

11 Servitude, friendship, parental affection and the love of the beloved (śṛṅgāra) are the four rasas, and Kṛṣṇa is under the sway of all the devotees who have these four moods.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Rasa is the very substance of Kṛṣṇa's pastimes. Rasa is of five kinds: śānta, dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and śṛṅgāra. Of these, Kṛṣṇa is wholly subject to the devotees of four — dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and śṛṅgāra.

Anubhāṣya.

Śānta-rasa is not named here for this reason. In the material world śānta-rasa stands highest of all, but in the spiritual world it stands very low. Śānta-rasa is transcendental, yet in it the ālambana of rasa — the viṣaya and the āśrayas, the object of love and those who love — do not exchange the roles of knower and known. Therefore in dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and madhura-rasa love for Kṛṣṇa rises step by step in excellence.

12 With His servants and friends, His father and mother and His beloved ones, Kṛṣṇa sports in Vraja, absorbed in love.

An intimation of the Gaura-avatāra, in which magnanimity is foremost —

13 Having sported as He wished, Kṛṣṇa disappears, and afterwards He reflects:

14 "For a long time I have not given the gift of loving devotion (prema-bhakti), and without devotion the world has no ground to stand on.

*The world is driven by vaidhī-bhakti and therefore knows nothing of love for Kṛṣṇa —*

15 All over the world they worship Me by the rules of scripture (vidhi-bhakti), but devotion by rule has no power to reach the love of Vraja.

*In the mood of reverence, love for Kṛṣṇa, which is attained by pure rāga (spontaneous attraction), is extremely rare —*

16 The whole world is permeated by the awareness of My majesty, and love slackened by awe gives Me no joy.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Until now I have not given prema-bhakti to the world. People in the world read the scriptures and worship Me through vidhi-bhakti, devotion by rules. But My highest mood is the mood of Vraja, and vidhi-bhakti cannot attain it. In vidhi-bhakti the awareness of My majesty (aiśvarya-jñāna) prevails. In the mood of majesty prema grows slack — that is, it loses its depth. Therefore such prema does not please Me."

*The fruit of vaidhī-bhakti full of reverence: the four kinds of liberation and attaining Nārāyaṇa in Vaikuṇṭha —*

17 Worshipping by rule in the awareness of My majesty, they go to Vaikuṇṭha and attain the four kinds of liberation.

18 These are sārṣṭi (opulence equal to Mine), sārūpya (a form like Mine), sāmīpya (nearness to Me) and sālokya (residence in My world). But sāyujya, in which one becomes one with Brahman, the devotee never accepts.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Sārṣṭi is attaining majesty equal to Viṣṇu's; sārūpya is attaining a form like Viṣṇu's, with four arms and the other limbs and the same complexion; sāmīpya is dwelling near Viṣṇu; sālokya is living in Viṣṇu's world.

Anubhāṣya.

"Even when I offer them sālokya, sārṣṭi, sārūpya, sāmīpya and even oneness [with Me], people do not accept anything other than serving Me." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 3.29.13); see also (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 9.7.67).[23]

Kṛṣṇa's own desire to teach how to worship Him —

19 I shall inaugurate the religion of the age, the congregational chanting of the holy name (nāma-saṅkīrtana), and, giving devotion in the four moods, I shall make the whole world dance.

For this very reason He descends as a devotee and a guru; preaching and personal example —

20 I shall take on the mood of a devotee, and by practising devotion Myself I shall teach it to all.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Those who worship Me on the path of rules, aware of My majesty, attain the four kinds of liberation — sārṣṭi, sārūpya, sāmīpya and sālokya — and go to Vaikuṇṭha. For sāyujya-mukti, liberation as oneness with Brahman, even the followers of vidhi-bhakti do not pray. But once devotees attain prema-bhakti, they reject even those four kinds of liberation and live in the happiness of serving Me. It is My desire to preach to the world this prema-bhakti, which lies beyond vidhi-bhakti. I will give the world the dharma of the age of Kali, nāma-saṅkīrtana, together with the rasas of dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and śṛṅgāra, and make all people dance. And I Myself will accept the mood of a devotee and teach the living beings of the world by My own conduct."

Preaching without personal example is fruitless —

21 Unless one practises dharma oneself, one cannot teach it. This is the conclusion sung in the Gītā and the Bhāgavatam.

*The time of descent (Bhagavad-gītā, Chapter 4, verses 7–8) —*

22 "Whenever, O descendant of Bharata, dharma declines and irreligion rises, then I manifest Myself." (Bhagavad-gītā, 4.7)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
O Arjuna, whenever dharma declines and adharma rises, I manifest Myself.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Kṛṣṇa recalled ancient times. The path of yoga He had once told the sun-god had been lost over time, so He told it again to Arjuna. To convince Arjuna, Bhagavān speaks of His own appearance:

he bhārata yadā yadā hi dharmasya glāniḥ (decline) adharmasya abhyutthānam (increase) bhavati, tadā aham (unable to bear these two [calamities], and in order to reverse them) ātmānaṁ sṛjāmi.

The work of the avatāra —

23 "To deliver the saints, to destroy the wicked and to establish dharma, I appear in age after age." (Bhagavad-gītā, 4.8)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
To deliver the sādhus, to destroy the wicked and to establish dharma, I appear in every yuga.

Anubhāṣya.

sādhūnām (of those wholly devoted to serving Me) paritrāṇāya (to remove the obstacles to their service) duṣkṛtām (of the enemies of the devotees — Rāvaṇa, Kaṁsa, Keśī and others, whom no one but I can slay) vināśāya, dharma-saṁsthāpanārthāya ca (and in order to practise and preach properly the dharma free of envy — devotion to the service of Bhagavān, which consists of paricaryā [service] and saṅkīrtana) yuge yuge (at the respective times) sambhavāmi.

*Preaching without personal example is futile and bears poisonous fruit (Bhagavad-gītā, Chapter 3, verse 24) —*

24 "If I did not act, these worlds would perish; I would be the cause of confusion among the classes of men and would ruin all these beings." (Bhagavad-gītā, 3.24)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

If I do not uphold the order of duties (karma) by performing My duties, this world will be ruined. I will become the cause of the mixing of the social orders, and I Myself will turn out to be the destroyer of the people.

Anubhāṣya.

Arjuna asked a doubting question about action. In reply, Bhagavān, who has no desire for material enjoyment, explains why He acts (sets an example):

cet (if) ahaṁ karma na kuryām, ime lokāḥ utsīdeyuḥ (would fall, taking Me as their example), saṅkarasya ca kartā syām, imāḥ prajāḥ upahanyām (I would make impure).

*The conduct of one who sets the example is the model for ordinary people (Bhagavad-gītā, Chapter 3, verse 21) —*

25 "Whatever the best of men does, others do the same; whatever standard he sets, the world follows." (Bhagavad-gītā, 3.21)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Whatever the best person does, others imitate. Whatever the best declares to be the "standard," everyone follows and holds dear.

Anubhāṣya.

śreṣṭhaḥ (a mahājana, a great soul) yad yad yathā ācarati, tat tad (the same) itaraḥ (the lesser) janaḥ ([does]); saḥ (the best) yat pramāṇaṁ kurute, lokaḥ (the other person) tad anuvartate (follows it).

*Preaching the dharma of the age is Viṣṇu's work, but no aṁśa of the Viṣṇu-tattva other than Kṛṣṇa can give love for Kṛṣṇa —*

26 The religion of the age can be established by My portion (aṁśa), but none but Me can give the love of Vraja.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"I wish to appear in order to preach two things: the dharma of the age, nāma-saṅkīrtana, and the love of Vraja. An aṁśa-avatāra can do the work of preaching the dharma of the age. But no one other than Me — Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Bhagavān in full — can preach the love of Vraja."

*The words of Bilvamaṅgala in the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta (first part, 5.37) —*

27 "Let there be many all-auspicious avatāras of the Lord whose navel is a lotus; but who other than Kṛṣṇa gives prema even to the creepers?" (Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, 1.5.37)[3]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Bhagavān Paṅkajanābha may have many auspicious avatāras. But who other than Kṛṣṇa gives prema to the creepers — that is, to those who have taken shelter of Him?

Anubhāṣya.
paṅkaja-nābhasya (of Bhagavān Padmanābha) sarvato-bhadrāḥ (bestowing auspiciousness) bahavaḥ avatārāḥ santu; api kṛṣṇāt anyaḥ ko vā latāsu (to those who have taken shelter of Him) prema-daḥ (the giver of prema-bhakti) bhavati.

28 Therefore, taking My own devotees with Me, I shall descend to earth and enjoy many kinds of pastimes."

29 Thinking thus, Kṛṣṇa Himself descended in Nadia in the first junction (sandhyā) of the age of Kali.

Anubhāṣya.

Prathama sandhyā: the first sandhyā. A sandhyā is the time at the beginning and at the end of a yuga, which [together] make up a sixth part of the yuga. The first sandhyā of a yuga is a twelfth part, and the last sandhyā is also a twelfth. The first sandhyā of the age of Kali is therefore 36,000 solar years. Śrī Gaurasundara appeared when 4,586 years of the age of Kali had passed; therefore He took birth in the first sandhyā, in Śrī Māyāpura Navadvīpa. "The sandhyās of Kṛta and the other yugas are, in order, a sixth part of their own yuga." (Śrī Sūrya-siddhānta, Madhyamādhikāra, verse 17)

30 So the lion Caitanya appeared in Navadvīpa — with the neck of a lion, the strength of a lion and the roar of a lion.

31 May that lion take His seat in the cave of every soul's heart — the lion at whose roar the elephant of sin perishes.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kalmaṣa means sin; dvirada, an elephant.

*The name "Viśvambhara" — the presiding deity of abhidheya, the means —*

32 In His early pastimes His name was Viśvambhara. He filled the world with the nectar of devotion and upheld all living beings.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bhūta-grāma is the multitude of living beings.

33 The root ḍubhṛñ means "to nourish and to sustain": giving love, He nourished and sustained the three worlds.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The word Viśvambhara is formed from the root ḍubhṛñ. The meaning of that root is to nourish and to sustain. By giving prema He nourished and sustained the three worlds.

*The name "Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya" — the presiding deity of sambandha, the relationship with the Lord —*

34 In His later pastimes He bears the name Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. Making Śrī Kṛṣṇa known to all, He blessed the whole world.[4]

Anubhāṣya.

"In His last pastimes": that is, in the twenty-four years after He accepted sannyāsa. In the sampradāya of Śrī Viṣṇusvāmī, tridaṇḍī Vedic sannyāsīs of the ten names and of the hundred and eight names existed long before Śrī Śaṅkarapāda. But when Śaṅkara arose — a Vedāntist in name only, fond of reasoning about the attributeless — the society of the pañcopāsakas, the worshippers of five deities, was reorganized in India on the principle of reconciling all doctrines. Therefore Śrī Mahāprabhu accepted Vedic sannyāsa according to the custom of the daṇḍī-sannyāsīs of the ten names in the sampradāya of Śrī Śaṅkarācārya. In Āryāvarta, in an Ārya society that only resembles the Vedic — that is, merely calls itself a follower of the Vedas — many follow Śaṅkarācārya and, by the rule of Śaṅkara's sampradāya, worship the five deities.

The sannyāsīs of the ten names are these: "Tīrtha, Āśrama, Vana, Araṇya, Giri, Parvata, Sāgara, Sarasvatī, Bhāratī and Purī — these are the ten names." Below, for each, the title of the sannyāsī, the place and the title of the brahmacārī are given in order (see Mañjuṣā, issue 2, pp. 104–107). Tīrtha and Āśrama are titles of sannyāsīs; the place is Dvārakā; the brahmacārī's name is Svarūpa. Vana and Araṇya are titles of sannyāsīs; the place is Puruṣottama; the brahmacārī's name is Prakāśa. Giri, Parvata and Sāgara are titles of sannyāsīs; the place is Badarikāśrama; the brahmacārī's name is Ānanda. Sarasvatī, Bhāratī and Purī are titles of sannyāsīs; the place is Śṛṅgerī; the brahmacārī's name is Caitanya.

Śrī Śaṅkarācārya established four maṭhas — in the east, west, north and south of India — and put four of his disciples at their head. Under these four principal maṭhas countless branch maṭhas gradually arose. The maṭhas are assigned to regions, but in many cases this order has been upset. In the four maṭhas there are four sampradāyas: Ānandavāra, Bhogavāra, Kīṭavāra and Bhūmivāra. Over time the understanding of these sampradāyas, too, has become confused. The four mahāvākyas, the great sayings, are also divided among the maṭhas. To accept sannyāsa, one must first go to a sannyāsī guru who heads a maṭha and become a brahmacārī. Whatever kind of sannyāsī that guru is, he gives the corresponding brahmacārī name. This custom is still strictly kept in this sampradāya today.

When Śrī Mahāprabhu went to Keśava Bhāratī to accept sannyāsa, His name became "Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya." Even after accepting sannyāsa, Bhagavān made known only His brahmacārī name. None of those who wrote of His pastimes says that He introduced Himself by the title "Bhāratī." In Śaṅkara's sampradāya the sannyāsa name is bound up with the conceit of being God (īśvarābhimāna); this, I think, is why Śrīman Mahāprabhu did not favor that usage. The brahmacārī name carries the self-conception of a servant of the guru (guru-dāsyābhimāna) and is not unfavorable to devotion. It is recorded, however, that Mahāprabhu accepted the daṇḍa, the kamaṇḍalu and the other marks of sannyāsa.

35 Knowing Him to be the avatāra of the age, the great Garga declared it at Kṛṣṇa's name-giving ceremony.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Garga Mahāśaya knew that Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the avatāra of the age of Kali, and in the following verse he specified His color.

*Avatāras of four colors in the four yugas (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 8, verse 13) —*

36 "Your son, who accepts a body in every age, has appeared in three colours — white, red and yellow; now He has become dark (kṛṣṇa)." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.8.13)[5]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"This boy of yours takes on white, red and yellow colors in the other three yugas; now, in Dvāpara, He has become black."

Anubhāṣya.
Garga Mahāśaya explains to Nanda Mahārāja why Kṛṣṇa is given this name, and in doing so he speaks of His other avatāras and of His being the source of avatāras:

anu-yugam (as befits each yuga) tanūḥ gṛhṇataḥ asya (of your son) śuklaḥ raktaḥ tathā (these words point to the future: in the first sandhyā of the Kali-yuga of the twenty-eighth mahā-yuga of the Vaivasvata manvantara) pītaḥ

(He will be yellow) trayaḥ varṇāḥ āsan. idānīṁ hi kṛṣṇatāṁ gataḥ (has attained).

37 White, red and yellow — these three lustres the Lord of Śrī assumes in the Satya, Tretā and Kali ages.

38 Now, in Dvāpara, He has become dark. This is the essence of all the scriptures — the Āgamas and the Purāṇas.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 11, Chapter 5, verse 27)*

39 "In Dvāpara the Lord is dark, clad in yellow and bearing His own weapons, and He is known by the Śrīvatsa and other marks and characteristics." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.5.27)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the Dvāpara-yuga Bhagavān is marked in this way: He is dark in color, wears yellow garments, holds His own weapons — the flute and the rest — and bears the Śrīvatsa and other marks.

Anubhāṣya.

Nimi, the king of Videha, asked at what time and in what way the avatāras of Bhagavān descend. In reply, one of the nine Yogendras, Śrī Karabhājana, described the avatāras of Satya and Tretā and then speaks of the avatāra of Dvāpara:

dvāpare bhagavān śyāmaḥ pīta-vāsāḥ (He whose garments are yellow) nijāyudhaḥ (He who bears His own weapons — the club, the disc and the rest) śrī-vatsādibhiḥ aṅkaiḥ (by marks on His body) lakṣaṇaiḥ (and by external signs, such as the Kaustubha) upalakṣitaḥ.

The marks of the avatāra of the age of Kali —

40 In the age of Kali the religion of the age is the spreading of the holy name. For this the golden-hued avatāra, Caitanya, has come.

Anubhāṣya.

In his commentary on the Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad, Śrī Madhvācārya cites this evidence from the Śrī Nārāyaṇa-saṁhitā: "In Dvāpara people worship Viṣṇu by the Pañcarātras alone, but in Kali Bhagavān Hari is worshipped by the name alone." The Kali-santaraṇa Upaniṣad also says: "Hare Kṛṣṇa Hare Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Hare Hare / Hare Rāma Hare Rāma Rāma Rāma Hare Hare — these sixteen names destroy the contamination of the age of Kali. No means higher than this is found in all the Vedas."

41 His lustre is like molten gold, His body tall and mighty, and His deep voice surpasses the thunder of fresh rain-clouds.

42 One whose height and arm-span both measure four of his own cubits is famed as a mahāpuruṣa, a great person.

43 Such a person is called nyagrodha-parimaṇḍala, and Caitanya, the abode of all virtues, has such a body.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

He whose height equals four of his own cubits, measured by the length and span of his arms, is famed as a mahāpuruṣa, and his name is nyagrodha-parimaṇḍala.

Anubhāṣya.

Nyagrodha-parimaṇḍala: one who is four of his own cubits tall and as many broad, that is, around, measured by his own arms, is a mahāpuruṣa. And He who has subdued (nyak) all living beings and holds them in check (rodha) by His own māyā is Viṣṇu in full, possessed of the catur-vyūha.

44 His arms reach down to His knees, His eyes are like lotuses, His nose is finer than a sesame flower, and His face is like the moon.

45 He is peaceful and self-controlled, wholly given to devotion to Kṛṣṇa. He loves His devotees, is gentle by nature and looks on all beings with an equal eye.

46 Adorned with sandal paste and wearing armlets and bracelets of sandalwood, He dances in the saṅkīrtana of Kṛṣṇa's names.

47 Drawing on all these qualities, the sage Vaiśampāyana included His names in the Thousand Names of Viṣṇu.

Anubhāṣya.

Sahasra-nāma means the thousand names of Viṣṇu, that is, the Mahābhārata, the Dāna-dharma section, Chapter 149. Śaṅkarācārya and the Vaiṣṇava ācāryas down to Śrī Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa have written commentaries on this text.

48 Caitanya's pastimes are of two parts, the early and the later, and in each of them He has four special names.

Anubhāṣya.

Ādi, the first: the householder pastimes (the first 24 years); śeṣa, the last: the pastimes of sannyāsa (the last 24 years). See verses 32–34. "Four names each": these are given in the next verse, 49.

*(Mahābhārata, Dāna-dharma, Chapter 149, Sahasra-nāma, 92 and 95)*

49 "He is of golden colour, His limbs are like gold, His form is beautiful, and He wears armlets of sandal. He has taken sannyāsa, He is self-restrained and tranquil, and His highest refuge is steadfastness and peace." (Mahābhārata, Dāna-dharma, 149; Viṣṇu-sahasra-nāma, 92 and 95)[6]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

A golden color, a body like molten gold, a form beautiful in every limb, adornment with sandal and garlands — these four marks are seen in His pastimes as a householder. [In His pastimes of sannyāsa He is] a sannyāsī; He possesses the quality of śama, which consists in reflecting on the secrets of Hari; He is firmly fixed in the great sacrifice of hari-kīrtana; and He is wholly devoted to mahābhāva, attained through śānti — the śānti that silences the non-devotees who hold to kevalādvaita, pure monism.

Anubhāṣya.

suvarṇa-varṇaḥ (He whose color is yellow, like the color of gold) hemāṅgaḥ (He whose body is like gold) varāṅgaḥ (He whose body bears the marks of a mahāpuruṣa) candanāṅgadī (He whose armlets are anointed with sandal) (these are four names of Bhagavān Gauracandra in His first pastimes). sannyāsa-kṛt (devoted to the duty of a renunciant) śamaḥ (free from sense objects) śāntaḥ (He whose mind is fixed on Kṛṣṇa alone) niṣṭhā-śānti-parāyaṇaḥ (niṣṭhā is one-pointedness of mind, and there is śānti; niṣṭhā and śānti are His highest shelter) (the Sahasra-nāma also cites these four names of Bhagavān Gaurahari in His last pastimes).

In Śrī Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa's commentary on the Viṣṇu-sahasra-nāma, called Nāmārtha-sudhā, it is said: "Suvarṇa-varṇa: 'His color, that is, His form, is like gold,' according to the Śruti: 'When the seer sees the golden Creator, the Lord, the Puruṣa, the source of Brahman.'[24] Hemāṅga: 'His limbs, the bearers of color, are as desirable as gold.' Varāṅga: 'His limbs are excellent, that is, full of beauty.' Candanāṅgadī: 'His armlets (aṅgada) are candana, that is, they gladden the hearts of the devotees.' Some apply these four names, beginning with suvarṇa-varṇa, to His form as Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. Now, with six names, the verse points to His being Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. Sannyāsa-kṛt: 'He who performs sannyāsa, the life of a wandering renunciant.' Śama: 'He who reflects (śamayati) on the secret of Hari'; the root śam in the sense of 'to reflect' belongs to the tenth class. Śānta: 'He who has withdrawn (śāmyati) from everything other than Kṛṣṇa.' Niṣṭhā: 'That in which the sacrifices of devotion abide (nitiṣṭhanti), the chief of which is hari-kīrtana' — for the smṛti says, kṛṣṇa-varṇaṁ tviṣākṛṣṇam ("He who utters the name of Kṛṣṇa, yet is not dark").[25] Śānti: 'That by which the opponents of devotion, headed by the followers of kevalādvaita, are subdued.' Parāyaṇa: 'The highest shelter of all kinds of bhāva, up to mahābhāva.'"

50 The Bhāgavatam makes it clear again and again: in the age of Kali the congregational chanting of Kṛṣṇa's name is the essence of all.

*The saṅkīrtana of Kṛṣṇa's name is the dharma of the age (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 11, Chapter 5, verse 32) —*

51 "With sacrifices in which congregational chanting predominates, the wise worship the Lord who ever sings of Kṛṣṇa and whose lustre is not dark. He is always surrounded by His intimate companions (aṅga), His devotees (upāṅga), His weapons and His associates (pārṣada)." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.5.32)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Intelligent people worship, with a sacrifice in which saṅkīrtana is foremost, the Great Personality (Mahāpuruṣa) in whose mouth the syllables “Kṛṣṇa” always dwell, whose luster is akṛṣṇa, that is, golden, and who is surrounded by His limbs and subsidiary parts (aṅgas and upāṅgas), His weapons and His associates.

Śrī Jīva (in the Krama-sandarbha): “Tviṣā, by His luster: the One who is not black — that is, golden — the intelligent worship Him. That He is golden follows by elimination from the verse: ‘Your son, who accepts a body in every age, has appeared in three colours — white, red and yellow; now He has become dark (kṛṣṇa).’ (Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Ādi 3.36). It says that ‘now’ — in the Dvāpara famous as the age in which this avatāra descends — ‘He has become black.’ White and red are assigned to Satya and Tretā. Therefore the yellow color is spoken of as past with reference to earlier avatāras. Later it will be said that Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the complete form [of God]. He is called a yuga-avatāra because all avatāras are contained within Him, and so all their purposes are fulfilled in Him alone. It is thus naturally understood that whenever Kṛṣṇa descends in Dvāpara, Śrī Gaura too descends in the following Kali. It follows that this Gaura is a special manifestation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, for this rule admits no exception. The verse itself shows that He is such a manifestation by the qualifier kṛṣṇa-varṇam: He in whom are the two syllables ‘Kṛṣ-ṇa’ — that is, in whose name ‘Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanyadeva’ the two syllables ‘Kṛṣ-ṇa’ are used, revealing that He is Kṛṣṇa.

“In the Third Canto, in the words of Śrī Uddhava, in the verse beginning samāhutāḥ, there is the phrase śriyaḥ savarṇena, and the commentary on it says: ‘He whose name has two syllables the same as [those of the name of] Śrī, that is, Rukmiṇī’; the expression śriyaḥ savarṇo rukmī is also found. Or else [kṛṣṇa-varṇam means]: He who describes (varṇayati) Kṛṣṇa — who Himself sings of Him, exulting in the memory of such pastimes of His own supreme bliss, and out of the greatest compassion teaches [this] to all people. Or else: He Himself is akṛṣṇa, golden, by tviṣā, His special beauty, and He teaches about Kṛṣṇa; the sense is that the mere sight of Him reveals Śrī Kṛṣṇa to all. Or else: though golden to all people, to special devotees He is, by tviṣā — a special manifestation — kṛṣṇa-varṇa, dark; that is, He is that very Śyāmasundara.[18] Therefore, since the very form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa is manifest in Him, He is a special manifestation of Kṛṣṇa Himself. That is the sense.

“The verse makes clear that He is Bhagavān with the words sāṅgopāṅgāstra-pārṣadam. His limbs (aṅgas) are so supremely charming that they themselves serve as upāṅgas, ornaments and the like. They are so powerful that they themselves are His weapons. They always dwell with Him alone, and so they themselves are His associates. Many great souls saw Him in just this way, again and again, and this is widely known among the people of Gauḍa, Varendra, Vaṅga, Utkala and other lands. Or else [by the other meaning of the particle ca]: His associates — the feet of the great soul Śrīmad Advaita Ācārya and others — are so intensely loved by Him that they are equal to His limbs, and He is present together with them. With what do they worship Him who is such? Yajñaiḥ, with the articles of worship, according to the words ‘[where there are no] sacrifices to the Lord of sacrifice, no great festivals.’[19] Among these the verse specially names the abhidheya itself, saṅkīrtana: when many gather together and sing of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, rejoicing in that singing — [with sacrifices] in which this is foremost. And since the primacy of saṅkīrtana is seen only among those who have taken shelter of Him, it is clear that here the abhidheya is He Himself. That is why the Sahasra-nāma gives names that point to His avatāra: ‘Golden in color, with a body like gold, beautifully formed, wearing armlets of sandal; the renunciant, self-controlled and peaceful’ (see Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Ādi 3.49). Śrī Sārvabhauma Bhaṭṭācārya, the crest-jewel of the most learned, also showed this: ‘May the bee of my mind sink ever more deeply into the lotus feet of Him who has appeared under the name Kṛṣṇa Caitanya to reveal again His own bhakti-yoga, lost in the course of time.’[20]” So [it is said] in the Sarva-saṁvādinī.

Anubhāṣya.

“In which yuga and in what way does Bhagavān descend?” In answer to this question of King Nimi, Śrī Karabhājana speaks of the source of avatāras in the age of Kali and of how He is worshipped:

su-medhasaḥ (the intelligent) tviṣā (by His luster) akṛṣṇam (golden like lightning — the third color, yellow, which remains after white and red) kṛṣṇa-varṇam (Him who describes, who sings of Kṛṣṇa; or, Him in whom are these two syllables, “Kṛṣṇa”) sāṅgopāṅgāstra-pārṣadam (together with His limbs [aṅgas] — Nityānanda and Advaita; His subsidiary parts [upāṅgas] — Śrīvāsa and the other devotees; His weapons [astras] — the holy name of Hari and so on; and His associates [pārṣadas] — Gadādhara, Dāmodara Svarūpa and others) saṅkīrtana- prāyaiḥ (by singing hari-kathā and the names when many people gather together) yajñaiḥ yajanti.

52 Hear, brothers, of all this glory of Caitanya: this verse speaks of the very height of His greatness.

*Explanation of the verse kṛṣṇa-varṇam —*

53 The two syllables ‘Kṛṣ-ṇa’ are always in His mouth; or else, in His own joy He describes Kṛṣṇa.

54 Thus the two meanings of the word kṛṣṇa-varṇa are established: nothing but Kṛṣṇa ever comes to His lips.

55 And if anyone should say that He is dark in colour, the next adjective rules this out.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Someone might say, from the word kṛṣṇa-varṇa in the original verse, that the One worshipped in the age of Kali is “Kṛṣṇa,” dark. But the other qualifier, tviṣākṛṣṇam, does not allow that meaning.

56 By the lustre of His body He is not dark; and by the words “not dark” the verse tells of His yellow colour.[7]

*(Stava-mālā, the second prayer to Śrī Caitanyadeva, verse 1)*

57 “May that Lord who has appeared in the form of Caitanya be ever merciful to us! In the age of Kali the learned openly worship Him with sacrifices of loud congregational chanting. He is Kṛṣṇa, yet from the abundance of His lustre His body is not dark, and they declare Him the object of worship for all who have entered the fourth āśrama.” (Stava-mālā, Second Caitanyāṣṭaka, 1)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa has become akṛṣṇa — that is, has taken a golden form — because He is overflowing with luster, the bhāva of Śrī Rādhikā. In the age of Kali the learned openly worship Him with a sacrifice made of kīrtana. He is the only object of worship for those who serve in the fourth āśrama, the paramahaṁsas within sannyāsa. May that Supreme Person in the form of Caitanya bestow His mercy on us in abundance.

Anubhāṣya.

vidvāṁsaḥ (the learned) sphuṭam (openly) dyuti-bharāt (from the abundance of His luster) akṛṣṇāṅgam (golden, of yellow color) kṛṣṇam utkīrtana-mayaiḥ (resting on the devotion called loud kīrtana) makha-vidhibhiḥ (by the rites of the sacrifice of the name) kalau abhiyajante, yaṁ ca akhila-caturthāśrama-juṣām (of all mendicant monks) upāsyam (worthy of worship) prāhuḥ, saḥ caitanyākṛtiḥ devaḥ naḥ (us) atitarām (exceedingly) kṛpayatu.

The effulgence of Brahman destroys darkness —

58 His lustre of molten gold is plain to see, and its radiance dispels all the darkness of ignorance.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Tamas-tati: the spreading darkness of ignorance.

59 To destroy the darkness of the living beings' sins, He bears many weapons — His intimate companions (aṅga), His devotees (upāṅga) and the holy name.

*What is called darkness, or kalmaṣa —*

60 Any action opposed to devotion, be it righteous or unrighteous, is called 'sin' (kalmaṣa). That is the great darkness.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Be it dharma or adharma, whenever an action is opposed to devotion, it is called kalmaṣa — and that is the great darkness.

61 Raising His arms and calling "Hari!", He casts His loving glance on all; He destroys their sins and floods them with love.

*(Stava-mālā, the second prayer to Śrī Caitanyadeva, verse 8)*

62 "His smiling glance wholly takes away the sorrow of the worlds; His very first words make a whole row of blessings burst into leaf; and what flood of love does the touch of His feet not bring? May that Lord who has appeared in the form of Caitanya be ever merciful to us!" (Stava-mālā, Second Caitanyāṣṭaka, 8)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

His smiling glance completely takes away the sorrow of the world. As soon as He begins to speak, the creeper of devotion — the creeper of every blessing — puts forth new leaves. Shelter at His feet reveals all the secrets of prema. May that Supreme Person in the form of Caitanya bestow His mercy on us in abundance.

Anubhāṣya.

yasya (of Caitanyadeva) smitālokaḥ (the glance with a gentle smile) jagatām (of all living beings) paritaḥ (completely) śokam (sorrow, want) harati (destroys), girāṁ prārambhaḥ (the beginning of His words) tu kuśala-paṭalīm (the series of blessings) pallavayati (unfolds), padālambhaḥ (shelter at His feet) kaṁ vā prema-nivaham (all prema) na hi praṇayati (does not bestow), saḥ caitanyākṛtiḥ devaḥ naḥ (us) atitarāṁ kṛpayatu.

*Whoever sees Gaura is freed of sin and attains prema —*

63 Whoever sees His beautiful form and face is freed from sin and attains the treasure of love.

*Other avatāras have weapons and armies, but the Gaura-avatāra has devotees and saṅkīrtana —*

64 In other avatāras the Lord came with armies and weapons, but the army of Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa is His intimate companions and devotees (aṅga and upāṅga).

*(Stava-mālā, the first Caitanyāṣṭaka, verse 1)*

65 "He is ever worshipped by the gods headed by Śiva and Brahmā, who, full of love for Him, have taken human bodies; and He teaches His own devotees the pure way of worshipping Him. Will that beautiful Caitanya come once again before my eyes?" (Stava-mālā, First Caitanyāṣṭaka, 1)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Caitanyadeva is lovingly honored by Śiva, Brahmā and the other gods, who have taken human bodies, and all living beings always worship Him. He teaches His devotees the pure way of worshipping Him. Will that Caitanyadeva come before my eyes again?

Anubhāṣya.

praṇayitāṁ vahadbhiḥ (bearing love, that is, intent on nourishing their own attachment) dhṛta-manuja-kāyaiḥ (who have taken human bodies) giriśa-parameṣṭhi-prabhṛtibhiḥ (Śiva, the four-headed [Brahmā] and others) gīr-vāṇaiḥ (by the gods) sadā (eternally) upāsyaḥ (worshipped) sva-bhaktebhyaḥ (to His own intimates — Svarūpa, Rāmānanda and others) śuddhām (pure — free of other desires, not covered by karma, jñāna and the like) nija-bhajana-mudrām (the way of worshipping Him) upadiśan saḥ caitanyaḥ kiṁ punaḥ api me (my) dṛśoḥ padaṁ yāsyati (will reach)?

66 These weapons, His intimate companions and devotees, accomplish His work. Now hear with attention another meaning of the word aṅga.

67 The evidence of scripture says that the word aṅga means a portion (aṁśa), and a part of that portion is called upāṅga.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Besides the meaning already explained, the word aṅga has another: aṅga means aṁśa, a part. Paramāṇa is the same as pramāṇa, evidence. The parts of an aṅga are the upāṅgas.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 14, verse 14)*

68 "Are You not Nārāyaṇa? For You are the Self of all embodied beings, O Lord, and the witness of all the worlds. Nārāyaṇa is Your portion — so called because His abode is the waters born of Nara; and that too is true, not Your māyā." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.14)[8]

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 2.30.

The meaning of this verse —

69 The Nārāyaṇa who lies on the waters and dwells within every heart is Your portion (aṁśa); You are the original Nārāyaṇa.[9]

70 By the word aṅga the portions (aṁśa) are meant, and They are real. They are not a product of māyā: all of Them are full of consciousness and bliss.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The word aṅga refers to the three puruṣas, beginning with Kāraṇābdhiśāyī, who are aṁśas. They are full of spirit and bliss, the true Īśvara, the Lord — not tattvas created by māyā. Therefore Advaita and Nityānanda are the Lord's two aṅgas.

Anubhāṣya.
In the realm of māyā, māyā divides an object and it becomes a part. With viṣṇu-tattva it is not so: it cannot come under the control of māyā. Therefore, though He is a part, He is not divided either in His nature as Viṣṇu or in His substance. The example of a lamp shows this: another lamp is lit from the original lamp, yet in substance they do not differ. In the same way all the viṣṇu-tattvas appear from Baladeva, the svayaṁ-prakāśa, or vilāsa, of Kṛṣṇa, the original form (svayaṁ-rūpa). Their pastimes differ, but in substance they are one. The separated parts (vibhinnāṁśa), however — Brahmā and Śiva — can come under the control of māyā, and therefore they have acquired a capacity for transformation. All those Viṣṇus are full of spirit and bliss, and all are masters of māyā: māyā has no power over them. On other tattvas māyā does act. As curd is a transformation of milk, so are śambhu-tattva and the rest.

The two generals —

71 Advaita and Nityānanda are the two aṅgas of Caitanya, and the parts of these aṅgas I call upāṅgas.

72 These aṅgas and upāṅgas, ever with the Lord, are His sharp weapons for crushing the unbelievers.

Anubhāṣya.

Pāṣaṇḍa: those who imagine that śiva-tattva and the like, which are subject to māyā, are equal to viṣṇu-tattva, the master of māyā. They do not realize that Bhagavān's pastimes are eternal, and they regard even the eternal truth of devotion as mere activity, divided by time and impermanent. Viṣṇu and His own associates labor to rid such pāṣaṇḍīs of their wicked intelligence.

The two Viṣṇus are the two generals —

73 Nityānanda Gosāñi is Haladhara Himself, the bearer of the plough, and Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is the Lord (Īśvara) Himself.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

That is, He is directly an avatāra of Mahā-Viṣṇu.

*The devotees are the army, and kīrtana of Kṛṣṇa is the weapon —*

74 Taking with them the army of associates headed by Śrīvāsa, the two generals go everywhere performing kīrtana.

75 Nityānanda Rāya bears the banner of the crusher of unbelievers, and at the roar of the Ācārya sins and unbelievers flee.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bānā: a sign; an instrument like the tūrī or bherī (trumpet or kettledrum), whose sound announces that the pāṣaṇḍīs, the godless, will be crushed.

*Gaurasundara is the very father of kīrtana of Kṛṣṇa —*

76 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the founder of saṅkīrtana, and blessed is he who worships Him by the sacrifice of saṅkīrtana.

As a father is pleased when his son is honored, so Gaura is pleased by kīrtana* of Kṛṣṇa —*

77 He alone is truly intelligent; the rest of the world is foolish. Of all sacrifices the sacrifice of Kṛṣṇa's name is the essence.

To think the Lord in the form of the holy name equal to material activities is godlessness —

78 Whoever says that ten million horse sacrifices (aśvamedha) equal one name of Kṛṣṇa is an unbeliever, and Yama punishes him.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One who worships Kṛṣṇa Caitanya with the sacrifice of saṅkīrtana is truly sumedhā, that is, intelligent. Those in this world who do not worship Him in this way are utterly foolish. The sacrifice of Kṛṣṇa's name is the essence of all sacrifices. Ten million aśvamedha sacrifices cannot be compared with a single name of Kṛṣṇa. One who thinks them equal is a pāṣaṇḍī, and Yama punishes him.

Anubhāṣya.

"To consider [the name] equal to all auspicious activities — dharma, vows, renunciation, sacrifices and the like — is also a blunder." This eighth offense against the holy name must be avoided in every way. "Giving away ten million cows during a solar eclipse, living for a kalpa by the waters of the Gaṅgā at Prayāga, performing ten thousand sacrifices, giving away as much gold as there is in Mount Meru — none of this equals even a hundredth part of glorifying Govinda."

79 Śrī Jīva Gosāñi has explained this verse of the Bhāgavatam (3.51) in the auspicious invocation of his book Bhāgavata-sandarbha.

*(Tattva-sandarbha, verse 2)*

80 "Inwardly He is Kṛṣṇa, outwardly He is golden, and He has displayed the splendour of His aṅgas and other associates. In this age of Kali, through saṅkīrtana and the other limbs of devotion, we have taken shelter of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya." (Tattva-sandarbha, 2)[10]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the age of Kali we take shelter, through saṅkīrtana and the other limbs [of devotion], of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. He is marked by the splendor of His aṅgas, upāṅgas and the rest; within He is Kṛṣṇa Himself, and without He is Gaura.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī placed the verse kṛṣṇa-varṇaṁ tviṣākṛṣṇam in the maṅgalācaraṇa of the Bhāgavata-sandarbha, or Ṣaṭ-sandarbha. Similar to it is his own verse, antaḥ kṛṣṇaṁ bahir gauram. This is the second verse of that maṅgalācaraṇa, and it merely explains Karabhājana's verse in the Bhāgavatam. Its meaning is explained at the beginning of the Sarva-saṁvādinī, the supplementary commentary (anuvyākhyā) on the Ṣaṭ-sandarbha.

antaḥ-kṛṣṇam (Him within whom, in the depth of whose heart, is Kṛṣṇa; Him in whom the mood of the lover [nāgara] dwelling in Kṛṣṇa's heart is covered by the mood of Rādhā's heart) bahir gauram (Him whose form is yellow with the rays of His bodily luster) darśitāṅgādi-vaibhavam (Him who has shown, revealed, the splendor of His limbs, subsidiary parts, weapons and associates) kṛṣṇa-caitanyam kalau saṅkīrtanādyaiḥ (by the sacrifice of nāma-kīrtana and the rest) vayam āśritāḥ sma.

81 In the Upapurāṇas too we hear the words of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, which He mercifully spoke to Vyāsa:

(In an Upapurāṇa)

82 “O brāhmaṇa, at some time in the age of Kali I Myself shall take the order of sannyāsa and lead people stricken by sin to devotion to Hari.” (Upapurāṇa)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O brāhmaṇa, in a certain special Kali-yuga I shall accept the āśrama of sannyāsa and give hari-bhakti to people stricken by sin.

Anubhāṣya.

This verse is found in one of the Upapurāṇas.

he brahman, aham (Bhagavān) eva kvacit kalau (in the first sandhyā of the Kali-yuga of the twenty-eighth catur-yuga of the Vaivasvata manvantara) sannyāsāśramam (the fourth āśrama) āśritaḥ san (having accepted) pāpa-hatān narān hari-bhaktiṁ grāhayāmi (I shall give).

The evidence of scripture that Gaurasundara is Bhagavān Himself —

83 The Bhāgavatam, the Mahābhārata, the Āgamas and the Purāṇas give clear proof of the descent of Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Many statements prove that Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa is a direct avatāra. In the Bhāgavatam there are the words kṛṣṇa-varṇaṁ tviṣākṛṣṇam ("He who utters the name of Kṛṣṇa, yet is not dark"), āsan varṇās trayaḥ ("there were three colors"), channaḥ kalau ("hidden in the age of Kali") and others. In the Mahābhārata there are the words sambhavāmi yuge yuge ("I appear in every yuga"), sannyāsa-kṛc chamaḥ śāntaḥ ("the renunciant, self-controlled and peaceful") and others. In the Vedas there are mahān prabhur vai puruṣaḥ ("the Puruṣa is indeed the great Lord"), yadā paśyaḥ paśyate rukma-varṇam ("when the seer sees the golden One") and others. In the Tantras that follow the Āgamas there are many statements such as māyāpure bhaviṣyāmi śacī-sutaḥ ("I shall be the son of Śacī in Māyāpura"). And in the Upapurāṇa there are the words aham eva ("I Myself") and what follows.

Anubhāṣya.

See the Anubhāṣya on Ādi 2.22.

Direct evidence of this —

84 See for yourselves His many manifest powers — His wondrous deeds and the extraordinary signs of His love.

Anubhāṣya.

Gaura is Kṛṣṇa, and this is the aim of the scriptures. One can understand it directly as well: by seeing with one's own senses what Śrī Mahāprabhu's pastimes can do, His superhuman conduct and the variety of His superhuman glory and power.[26]

*The adhokṣaja-tattva, the Truth beyond the senses, cannot be seen with eyes that crave enjoyment —*

85 Yet the non-devotees see without seeing, as the owl does not see the rays of the sun.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Ulūka: a kind of owl that is blind by day. Unable to see the rays of the sun, it cannot admit that the sun exists.

*(Ālavandāru Yāmunācārya, Stotra-ratna, verse 15)*

86 "Though You are made known by Your supremely excellent nature, forms and deeds, by Your wondrous power and purity, by the mighty scriptures and by the teachings of the renowned knowers of the divine Truth, those of demonic nature can never understand You." (Stotra-ratna, 15)[11]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Bhagavān, Vyāsa and the other devotees who know the highest truth and the truth of Your avatāras are able to know You: through the powerful sāttvika scriptures they discern Your character, Your form, Your deeds and Your supremely sāttvika nature. But living beings of demoniac nature, endowed with the qualities of rajas and tamas, are unable to know You.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Yāmunācārya, the guru and parama-guru of Śrī Rāmānujācārya, who is also called Ālavandāru, describes Bhagavān's glory and majesty in verses 15 and 18 of his Stotra-ratna:

he bhagavan, parama-prakṛṣṭaiḥ (most excellent) śīla-rūpa-caritaiḥ (by His character, forms and deeds) sattvena (by superhuman power) sāttvikatayā (by the predominance of sattva) prabalaiḥ śāstraiḥ prakhyāta-daiva-paramārtha-vidām (of the renowned knowers of the divine and of the highest truth) mataiḥ ca āsura-prakṛtayaḥ (the wicked, the enemies of the devotees) tvāṁ boddhum (to know) na samarthāḥ bhavanti.

But the devotee's love conquers the Unconquerable and makes the Unlimited measurable —

87 Kṛṣṇa tries in many ways to hide Himself, yet His devotee knows Him.

*(Ālavandāru Yāmunācārya, Stotra-ratna, verse 18)*

88 "Your sovereign nature transcends the three kinds of limits and admits of no equal or superior. Though You hide it by the power of Your māyā, some who are devoted to You alone see it constantly." (Stotra-ratna, 18)[12]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Bhagavān, everything is confined by three limits — space, time and thought. But Your hidden nature has no equal and none above it, and so it exists beyond those three limits. By the power of Your māyā You conceal this nature, yet Your exclusive devotees are always able to see You.

Anubhāṣya.

ullaṅghita-trividha-sīma-samātiśāyi-sambhāvanam (that which oversteps, surpasses, the limits of the three — space, time and substance — and even the possibility of an equal or a superior) bhavatā māyā-balena (by the power of Your yogamāyā) nigūhyamānam api tava parivraḍhima-svabhāvam (the nature, the svarūpa, of Your lordship) kecit tvad-ananya-bhāvāḥ (those whose feeling is directed to You alone — the ekāntins, the exclusive devotees) aniśam (unceasingly) paśyanti.

*The adhokṣaja-tattva is attained through devotion, not reached by knowledge born of the senses —*

89 Those of demonic nature never know Kṛṣṇa, but from His devotees He cannot hide.

*(Padma Purāṇa)*

90 "In this world there are two kinds of created beings, the divine and the demonic. The devotee of Viṣṇu is called divine, and his opposite demonic." (Padma Purāṇa)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In this world living beings are created of two kinds, daiva, the godly, and āsura, the demoniac. The devotees of Viṣṇu are daiva, and those who are not devoted to Viṣṇu are their opposite, that is, demoniac by nature.

Anubhāṣya.

asmin loke daivaḥ āsuraḥ ca eva dvau bhūta-sargau (two kinds of created beings): viṣṇu-bhaktaḥ (the servant of Hari) daivaḥ smṛtaḥ, tad-viparyayaḥ (one absorbed in enjoyment within māyā) āsuraḥ (a person of material nature) eva.

The Ācārya is the avatāra of a devotee, and therefore he has the power to make Gaura descend —

91 Ācārya Gosāñi is the Lord's avatāra as a devotee, and His roar was the cause of Kṛṣṇa's descent.

Before the avatāra of the original form, His servants, the elders, appear — 92 When Kṛṣṇa descends to earth, He first causes His elders to appear.

93 Father, mother, guru and all who are to be honoured — He first has them all take birth on earth.

94 Mādhavendra Purī, Īśvara Purī, Śacī and Jagannātha appeared, and Advaita Ācārya appeared along with them.

The state of society before the Lord's descent —

95 Having appeared, the Ācārya saw the whole world busy with worldly affairs, without even a trace of devotion to Kṛṣṇa.

The pious and the sinner alike enjoy the senses and alike suffer the disease of worldly existence —

96 Some through sin, some through piety, all were enjoying the objects of the senses; there was not even a scent of the devotion that cures the disease of worldly existence.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Before Bhagavān Himself descends, He sends the elders — that is, He has them take birth on earth. Together with other elders appeared Śrī Mādhavendra Purī, Śrī Īśvara Purī, Śrī Śacī, Śrī Jagannātha and Śrī Advaita Ācārya. Having appeared, the Ācārya saw that the whole world was entangled in sin and piety and devoid of devotion to Kṛṣṇa. Living beings were enjoying the objects of the senses, but they did not mix with this the devotion to Kṛṣṇa that cures the disease of worldly existence.

The Ācārya reflects on showing mercy to living beings —

97 Seeing the state of the people, the compassionate Ācārya pondered how they might be helped.

98 He thought: "If Śrī Kṛṣṇa Himself were to descend, He would practise devotion Himself and so spread it.

99 In the age of Kali there is no religion but the holy name. Yet how will Kṛṣṇa descend in the age of Kali?

Kṛṣṇa descends only by the power of pure service —

100 With a pure heart I shall worship Kṛṣṇa, and with humility I shall pray to Him unceasingly.

Only Viṣṇu can bring Viṣṇu down — hence his name, Advaita —

101 Only when I have brought Kṛṣṇa here and spread His kīrtana will My name 'Advaita' bear fruit."

102 As He pondered by what worship Kṛṣṇa could be won over, a verse came to His mind.

*The devotee's self-surrender defeats the Unconquerable (words of the Viṣṇu- dharma and the Gautamīya-tantra) —*

103 "For merely a leaf of tulasī or a palmful of water, the Lord who loves His devotees sells Himself to them." (Viṣṇu-dharma; Gautamīya-tantra)[13]

Anubhāṣya.

bhakta-vatsalaḥ (Bhagavān, devoted to His own) tulasī-dala-mātreṇa (with merely a tulasī leaf, without sandal paste, mantras and the like) jalasya culukena (with a mouthful of water) vā bhaktebhyaḥ ātmānaṁ vikrīṇīte (places Himself in their power).

104–105 The Ācārya pondered the meaning of this verse: "Kṛṣṇa is indebted to the person who offers Him tulasī and water. He considers how to repay him, and finds: 'In all My house there is no wealth equal to water and tulasī.'"[14]

106 So He repays the debt by selling Himself. Thinking thus, the Ācārya began His worship.

107 Meditating on Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet, He constantly offered Him tulasī buds (mañjarī) with the water of the Gaṅgā.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

When a tulasī leaf and merely a mouthful of water are offered to Śrī Kṛṣṇa with devotion, He sells Himself to the devotee out of love for His devotees.

Some manuscripts contain two more verses: "A tulasī leaf with a bud at its tip, double and small, is called a mañjarī; it is celebrated in the worship of Kṛṣṇa. As Rādhā is dear to Viṣṇu, so the mañjarī is dear to Hari; therefore one should offer it with care, mixed with sandal."

Kṛṣṇa cannot repay His debt to one who offers Him water and tulasī, and so He repays it by giving His very self in exchange. Therefore, to make Kṛṣṇa descend in His own true form, Advaita Ācārya kept offering Gaṅgā water with tulasī-mañjarīs at Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet.

108 With a mighty roar He called out to Kṛṣṇa, and in this way He brought about Kṛṣṇa's descent.[15]

Kṛṣṇa Himself displays the pastimes of Gaura to fulfill His devotee's desire — the distribution of love for Kṛṣṇa —

109 This is the chief cause of Caitanya's descent: the Lord, the protector of dharma, descends by the desire of His devotee.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa, the bridge of dharma, descends by the desire of His devotee. Caitanya appeared at the prayer of the great devotee Advaita Ācārya.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 3, Chapter 9, verse 11)*

110 "O Lord, the path to You is seen through hearing, and You dwell in the lotus of the heart that devotion has purified. O Urugāya, widely sung One, whatever form of Yours Your devotees contemplate, that very form You reveal to them out of mercy." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.9.11)[16]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Brahmā said: "O Lord, You always move along the paths of Your devotees' hearing and sight. You always dwell in the lotus of their hearts, purified by bhakti-yoga. O Urugāya, whatever eternal form of Yours the devotees contemplate in their hearts, out of mercy to them You manifest that very form."

Thus ends the third chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

Anubhāṣya.

Having attained the darśana and mercy of Bhagavān through austerity, Brahmā, wishing to create, offers Him prayers:

nanu (O) nātha (O Lord) śrutekṣita-pathaḥ (He whose path is seen through śruta, hearing the conclusions of scripture) tvaṁ puṁsāṁ bhakti-yoga-paribhāvita-hṛt-saroja (in the lotus of the heart, purified, made fit, by bhakti-yoga, that is, by prema) āsse (You dwell). dhiyā yad yad vibhāvayanti (contemplate), [he] urugāya (O You who are sung of in many ways — Urukrama), sad-anugrahāya (to show mercy to the sat, the devotees) tat tad vapuḥ (body) praṇayase (You bring fully near to them, You manifest).

Thus ends the third chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”

111 The meaning of this verse, in brief, is this: all Kṛṣṇa’s descents take place by the desire of His devotees.

112 Thus I have made the meaning of the fourth verse clear: Gaura descended to reveal divine love.[17]

113 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

An Account of the Root Purpose of Caitanya’s Descent

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. In this fourth chapter the author firmly declares that Śrī Caitanya descended to fulfill three hidden purposes. The first is this: “Rādhikā is the āśraya, the abode of My love. I am its viṣaya, its object, and so I cannot feel the happiness known to the āśraya. Therefore I will take up the bhāva of Rādhikā, the very embodiment of the āśraya, and relish that happiness.” The second purpose: “Śrīmatī Rādhikā relishes My own sweetness. Though this sweetness attracts the whole world, I Myself cannot relish it. Unless I accept Rādhikā's feelings and radiance, this purpose will not be fulfilled.” The third purpose: “In My company Rādhikā finds greater happiness than I find in Hers. So there must be in Me some unprecedented rasa, and by relishing it Rādhikā's happiness has grown greater. From My own, different position (vijātīya) I cannot experience that happiness. By accepting Rādhikā's feelings and radiance I will be able to relish it as She does (sajātīya).” The wish to fulfill these three hidden desires brought about the avatāra of Caitanya. Establishing the dharma of the age and the like, and the worship of Advaita and the other devotees, are only the external causes of this avatāra. Śrī Svarūpa Gosvāmī is the foremost of Mahāprabhu's intimate devotees, and this hidden truth is found in the verses of his diary (kaḍacā). Verses composed by Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī confirm this conclusion. In this chapter the author shows how kāma and prema differ in their very essence, and he separates the desire to please Śrī Kṛṣṇa from kāma.

The nature of Śrī Kṛṣṇa is ascertained by the mercy of Śrī Gaura —

1 By the grace of Śrī Caitanya even a child, looking into the scriptures, can ascertain the true form of Him who sports in Vraja.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
By the mercy of Śrī Caitanya even an ignorant person, having studied the scriptures, is able to ascertain the true nature of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who enjoys His pastimes in Vraja.

Anubhāṣya.
bālaḥ (a child) api śrī-caitanya-prasādena (by the mercy of Gaura) śāstram dṛṣṭvā vraja-vilāsinaḥ (of the son of the king of Vraja) tad-rūpasya (of the form of Gaura, nondifferent from Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa) vinirṇayam (a statement of the truth about Him) kurute.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

3 I have explained the meaning of the fourth verse. Now hear with attention the meaning of the fifth.

4 To bring out the meaning of the root verse, I shall first give an outline before applying it.

*The meaning of the fourth of the fourteen opening verses: preaching the name and prema is the external cause of the Gaura-avatāra —*

5 The essence of the fourth verse, as I have explained it, is this: the Lord descended to spread divine love and the holy name.

6 This reason is true, but it is external. There is another reason, an inner one — hear it.[1]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
In the third chapter the essence of the fourth verse was determined as follows: Gaurāṅga descended to preach prema, that is, prema-bhakti, and the name of Kṛṣṇa. The reason given in that conclusion is true, yet it too is external (bahiraṅga), not hidden. There is also an internal (antaraṅga), that is, a hidden reason, and that I shall now describe.

Approaching the hidden cause of the Gaura-avatāra, the author first describes how the pastimes of Kṛṣṇa and Viṣṇu differ —

7 The scriptures proclaim that in the past Kṛṣṇa descended to remove the burden of the earth.[2]

*The work of Viṣṇu is to protect the sādhus and destroy the wicked; this is not the work of Kṛṣṇa Himself —*

8 But removing the burden is not the work of Bhagavān Himself. It is Viṣṇu, the maintainer, who protects the world.

When Kṛṣṇa, the source of the avatāras, descends, the avatāra Viṣṇu joins Him —

9 Yet the time of Kṛṣṇa's descent coincided with the time for removing that burden.

10 When the complete Bhagavān descends, all the other avatāras come and meet in Him.

11–12 Nārāyaṇa, the Catur-vyūha, Matsya and the other avatāras, the avatāras of the yugas and the manvantaras, and as many others as there are — all come and descend within the body of Kṛṣṇa. So does Kṛṣṇa, the complete Bhagavān, descend.

Through Viṣṇu, His part present within His body, He removes the world's burden and performs the pastime of maintaining it —

13 Therefore Viṣṇu was then within the body of Kṛṣṇa, and through Viṣṇu Kṛṣṇa slew the demons.

14 The killing of the demons is a secondary work. Now I shall tell the root cause for which He descends.

*Viṣṇu descends to preach vidhi-bhakti, devotion by rules; Kṛṣṇa descends as Gaura to preach rāga-bhakti, devotion of spontaneous love —*

15–16 To taste the very essence of the rasa of love, and to spread in the world devotion on the path of rāga (rāga-mārga) — for these two reasons the desire to descend arose in Kṛṣṇa, the crown of all who relish rasa, the supremely merciful.

17 The whole world is permeated by the awareness of My majesty, and love slackened by awe gives Me no joy.[3]

Anubhāṣya.
For this same verse see Ādi 6.16.

18 One who regards Me as the Lord and himself as lowly — by his love I am not subdued; I do not become dependent on him.

19 In whatever mood a devotee worships Me, in that very mood I reciprocate with him. Such is My nature.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
When Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa Himself descended, the time had also come to remove the world's burden. That task belongs to Viṣṇu, the maintainer of the world; removing the burden is not the work of Bhagavān Himself. But when Kṛṣṇa's time to descend arrived, the time to remove the burden arrived as well. Therefore all of them descended in Kṛṣṇa, the complete Bhagavān, within His body: Nārāyaṇa; the catur-vyūha, that is, Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha; all the aṁśa-avatāras beginning with Matsya; the yuga-avatāras; and the manvantara-avatāras. The avatāras of Bhagavān — His limbs (aṅgas), parts (aṁśas) and other partial forms — invariably rest in the complete Bhagavān as their shelter. That is why Viṣṇu, the maintainer, was present in Kṛṣṇa's own form. It is through Viṣṇu that Kṛṣṇa slays the asuras. Killing the asuras is merely a secondary task of Kṛṣṇa's avatāra. Its root cause is this: Kṛṣṇa, the supreme rasika and supremely compassionate, wished to descend in order to relish the very essence of the rasa of prema and to spread rāga and devotion in the world. This was what Kṛṣṇa felt in His heart: “The world is filled with awareness of My majesty (aiśvarya-jñāna). The love that arises from such awareness is slackened, and it gives Me no pleasure. When a devotee thinks himself lowly and regards Me as the Lord (Īśvara), his love is bound up with majesty, and to such love I never submit. As anyone worships Me, so I reciprocate with him — that is My nature.”

*(Śrīmad Bhagavad-gītā, Chapter 4, verse 11)*

20 “As people surrender to Me, so do I reward them. O Pārtha, all men follow My path in every way.” (Bhagavad-gītā, 4.11)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Pārtha, in whatever way someone worships Me, in that way I become attainable to him. All people follow My path, that is, the path I have shown.

Anubhāṣya.

The teaching on yoga that Bhagavān once gave to Sūrya came down through the succession and in time became distorted. Then He gave the same teaching again to Arjuna. Bhagavān speaks this verse while explaining the reason for His manifest pastimes:

[he] pārtha (O Arjuna), ye (the devotees) yathā (with whatever feeling) mām (to Me, Kṛṣṇa) prapadyante (surrender), ahaṁ tathaiva tān bhajāmi (in that very way I show them mercy). manuṣyāḥ sarvaśaḥ (people, in every way) mama vartma (My path — the path to perfection) anuvartante (follow).

21–22 Whoever renders Me pure devotion in the mood “He is my son, my friend, the lord of my life”, considering himself great and Me equal or lower — in that mood I become subject to him.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Whoever in pure devotion feels toward Me vātsalya — ‘Kṛṣṇa is my son,’ sakhya — ‘Kṛṣṇa is my friend,’ or madhura-bhāva — ‘Kṛṣṇa is the lord of my life,’ — by the particular nature of his rasa regards Me as lower and himself as greater. To that feeling I submit.” Pure devotion (śuddha-bhakti) is the cultivation of service to Kṛṣṇa with a favorable intention, free from all other desires and not covered by jñāna and karma.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta, alongside the words "bhakti" and "śuddha-bhakti," we also find the word "viddha-bhakti." From this we see that devotion is divided into three kinds. Viddha-bhakti, "pierced" or mixed devotion, is the name for service to Hari joined with other desires, covered by jñāna, karma, yoga and the like, and accompanied by the pursuit of enjoying things unrelated to Kṛṣṇa. Covered attempts at service — mixed with karma, with jñāna, with yoga, with vows aimed at enjoyment and so on — belong to viddha-bhakti: in them there are endeavors other than pure devotion. When one follows rules that consist of unmixed service, "bhakti" arises. This devotion is distinct from viddha-bhakti and consists of endeavors favorable to Viṣṇu. But loving service that springs from greed (lobha) to follow the causeless, eternal service of Hari rendered by the rāgātmika devotees — that is śuddha-bhakti. It is not driven by rules alone. "Vaidhī-bhakti," or "bhakti," or "aviddha-bhakti" helps śuddha-bhakti, yet the word "śuddha-bhakti" points specifically to rāgānugā service. Among the stages of devotion śuddha-bhakti can be called "the highest limit" (parākāṣṭhā). It is devotion full of rāga, and it abides in Goloka. Vaidhī-bhakti, devotion full of reverence, abides in Paravyoma, or Vaikuṇṭha.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 82, verse 44)*

23 "Devotion to Me brings living beings to immortality. And how fortunate you are to have the love that brings you to Me!" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.82.44)[4]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Devotion to Me is the nectar of immortality for the jīva. O gopīs! Your love for Me is the one and only cause of your attaining Me.

Anubhāṣya.

At the time of a solar eclipse the Yādavas came to Samanta-pañcaka from Dvārakā, and Nanda Mahārāja came from Vraja with all his people. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa met the gopīs of Vraja, the residents of Gokula, He said to them:

mayi (to Me) bhūtānām (of living beings) bhaktiḥ (devotion — hearing, chanting and the rest) amṛtatvāya (for immortality — for the position of an eternal associate) kalpate (makes fit). bhavatīnām (in you, the gopīs) mad-āpanaḥ (which brings about meeting Me face to face) mat-snehaḥ (love for Me) yad āsīt (has arisen), tad diṣṭyā (that is truly My good fortune).

24 My mother binds Me in the mood of a son; thinking Me utterly helpless, she fondles and cares for Me.

25 My friend, in pure friendship, climbs on My shoulders and says, "What great man are You? You and I are equal!"

26 When My beloved, in her pique (māna), rebukes Me, her reproaches steal My heart more than the hymns of the Vedas.

Anubhāṣya.

Sometimes the āśraya, under the sway of pure anurāga and regarding the viṣaya as her very own, speaks harsh words to Him, like a scolding. Such words reveal the utmost and exclusive love (prīti). But where the viṣaya is regarded as worshipable and as a superior (guru), natural love is slackened to a greater or lesser degree. The Vedic scriptures have laid down injunctions and prohibitions for ignorant people devoid of love. Compare the respectful words that befit people bound by rules with words born of love. The latter lack reverential worship, yet in excellence they surpass vaidhī hymns of praise. A pure devotee, free from every object other than Kṛṣṇa, is more intimately related to Bhagavān. The eternal function (nitya-vṛtti) that awakens with awareness of such a relationship is in every respect more precious than vaidhī reverence, in which majesty predominates.

27–28 Taking this pure devotion with Me, I shall descend and perform many kinds of wondrous pastimes, such as are not shown even in Vaikuṇṭha — pastimes that astonish even Me.

29 By her own power Yogamāyā will awaken in the gopīs a love for Me as a lover who is not their husband (upapati).

Anubhāṣya.

In the realms beyond māyā — Vaikuṇṭha and the others — a variety of Bhagavān's pastimes is manifest. Yet there the wonder of Kṛṣṇa, the original form (svayaṁ-rūpa), does not become ever new. Above those realms is Goloka, where pastimes are manifest whose aim is the svayaṁ-rūpa's own happiness. He wished to manifest such pastimes in the material world in order to show their excellence to devotees for whom majesty is foremost. The āśraya herself understands that by the rules she owes greater reverence to another than to the viṣaya. Yet she deceives and abandons the one to whom her reverence is due by the rules and strives toward Kṛṣṇa — under the sway of anurāga for Him, drawn by a sweetness free of any trace of majesty. This urge to serve as parakīyā is brought about by yogamāyā. Such a working of the spiritual (cinmayī) māyā is beyond the comprehension even of the viṣaya; it is possible only through yogamāyā, the embodiment of His mercy.

30 Neither I nor the gopīs will know of it, for each of us will ever steal the other’s heart with beauty and virtues.

Anubhāṣya.

When one experiences the feeling that the Lord (Īśvara) has toward those subject to Him, one cannot perceive how the āśraya strives to astonish the viṣaya. That is why, in describing what is special about yogamāyā, the author calls her the helper of those who belong to the āśraya. The viṣaya and the āśraya, each experiencing his or her own feeling, are drawn to each other when they come to perceive the other's feeling. People who wander in the external world cannot enter this variety of pastimes. Until the jīva reaches that state, or at least acquires a taste for it, the good fortune of experiencing it does not dawn for him.

31 Leaving dharma behind, the two will meet in love (rāga) — sometimes meeting, sometimes not, as destiny arranges.

Anubhāṣya.

Leaving aside the dignified dharma of rules, Kṛṣṇa and the gopīs, drawn to each other, overcome every obstacle and meet. At that time their duties under the rules fall still, and, kindling each other, they cannot help but meet. To bring their meeting to its fullness it is sometimes nourished by the rasa of vipralambha, separation. In the material, inert world there are qualities such as undesirability, and therefore vipralambha there appears as mere absence. But in the transcendental realm, in the time of separation, the wonder born of complete absorption (samāveśa) increases. In meeting, the sense that the desired one is present slackens somewhat. In separation, however, the longing to be united with those feelings is stronger, and so separation brings forth even greater wonder.

32 I shall taste the essence of all these rasas, and by this means I shall show grace to all My devotees.

33 Hearing of the pure love (rāga) of Vraja, the devotees will worship Me on the path of rāga, leaving aside their religious duties (dharma-karma).

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"In Vaikuṇṭha and elsewhere," that is, in Vaikuṇṭha, Goloka and the other abodes, certain pastimes are not manifest. Those pastimes I shall manifest in this avatāra as Kṛṣṇa, and they will astonish even Me. My yogamāyā, My svarūpa-śakti, will by My will and by her inconceivable power awaken in the hearts of the gopīs, My eternal beloveds, the feeling that I am their upapati — a lover who is not their husband. For the fullness of rasa I Myself will not know this then: My inconceivable śakti will cover My omniscience and so produce a wonderful rasa. And the gopīs, though they are the svarūpa-śakti herself, will not know it either. I and My gopīs will steal each other's hearts by Our wonderful beauty and qualities. Then We will leave the ordinary path of dharma, and on the pure path of rāga the joy of Our meeting will dawn. Meeting and separation will come in turn, as if by the will of destiny. I will relish the very essence of all these rasas and then, well pleased, give it to the devotees. And this is how I will give that rasa to all devotees: hearing of the pure rāga I will manifest in Vraja, the devotees will give up dharma and karma and worship Me on the path of rāga.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Raghunātha Dāsa Gosvāmī Prabhu in his Manaḥ-śikṣā — "Do not perform the dharma or the adharma spoken of by the Śrutis"[33] — and the emperor Śrī Kulaśekhara in his prayer Mukunda-mālā — "I have no attachment to dharma, to amassing wealth or to sensual pleasure. Let whatever must be, according to my past deeds, come to pass, O Bhagavān. This alone I pray for, this I prize above all: birth after birth may I have unwavering devotion to Your two lotus feet" — in these and similar verses have described rāga-bhakti, which lies beyond svadharma. “Whoever, understanding merits and faults, gives up all his own duties, even those I have taught, and worships Me — he too is the best of the virtuous.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.11.32)

*Only liberated souls who have reached perfection on the path of rāgānugā sādhana are entitled to hear of the transcendental rāsa pastimes —*

34 “To show favour to His devotees, Kṛṣṇa takes a body like a human one and performs such pastimes that whoever hears of them must become wholly devoted to Him.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.33.36)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
To show mercy to His devotees Bhagavān manifested a human body and revealed the rāsa pastimes. Qualified devotees who hear of them will devote themselves to those pastimes and worship Him in them.

Anubhāṣya.
King Parīkṣit asked Śrī Śukadeva whether Kṛṣṇa's parakīyā pastimes were right and why they were needed. Śukadeva answered:

bhaktānām (to the servants of Hari abiding in their various rasas) anugrahāya (to distribute mercy) mānuṣaṁ deham (a body befitting a human being — a supreme transcendental body[34]) āśritaḥ (having assumed) tādṛśīḥ krīḍāḥ bhajate (performs such pastimes), yāḥ (pastimes) śrutvā (on hearing [of which] even another person gains faith in Bhagavān and) tat-paraḥ (devoted to the service of Kṛṣṇa) bhavet (becomes).

35 The verb bhavet is in the injunctive mood (vidhi-liṅ), and so it says here: this is certainly a duty, and to neglect it is a fault.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
In this verse the verb bhavet is in the vidhi-liṅ, the injunctive mood. It is therefore established that this is an obligatory duty. Otherwise, that is, if one does not do it, there is pratyavāya — a fault.

Anubhāṣya.
Bhagavān, full of endless pastimes, eternally abides in His many forms of manifestation (prakāśa). Devī-dhāma, the material world, is a distorted reflection of Goloka and Vaikuṇṭha. The variety within the material world resembles that of Goloka and Vaikuṇṭha, but it has limitation, inferiority, insignificance or undesirability, and subjection to time. The many manifestations of the viṣaya-vigraha abide eternally in relationships of service suited to the different classes of jīvas who depend on Him (āśrita). In Vaikuṇṭha there is pure sattva; in the material world one sees mixed sattva, made of the guṇas. Because the viṣaya and the āśraya eternally experience each other, the variety of pastimes is eternal. Judged by what suits the āśraya, the saying “The human body is the root of worship” is justified. In the material world the human race stands on a high rung of creation. Jīvas belonging to the āśraya, while they dwell in the material world, gain the right to serve the viṣaya-vigraha suited to them.

Besides His human form, Bhagavān also has many nonhuman forms. The variety of pastimes depends on how the object of worship appears as the jīva's original nature (svarūpa-vṛtti) awakens. If one compares these pastimes by what suits [the āśraya], the greatest mercy is given to devotees who have taken shelter of the eternal pastimes in human form. When such pastimes descend into the material world, the best of human beings become eager to serve the object of service, each in the way that suits him. Hearing how the object of worship is experienced at the summit of worship gives the jīva enormous help in the unfolding of his original nature. Of the five kinds of rati, or sthāyi-bhāva, the highest is madhura-rati. Joined with all the ingredients of rasa, it manifests the best of all rasas, and only a devotee who has acquired taste (ruci) is entitled to it. To make it easier to acquire taste, Bhagavān manifests in the world the pastimes of Rāma and others instead of the pastimes of Matsya, Kūrma, Varāha and others. Yet in the human pastimes of Rāma and the rest the wonder of rasa does not reach its full strength. That wonder is not wholly within the reach of the jīva's intellect and is extremely rare; still, parakīyā madhura-rati, when the degrees of majesty and sweetness are compared, manifests it as incomparable and ever new.

The sahajikas, whose intelligence is worldly, cannot understand the teaching of the transcendental sahaja-dharma and bring licentiousness into it. By this they do not point to the variety of Goloka, which consists of pure sattva; they only drag an impure heart down into sense gratification. In the transcendental pastimes there is service to Adhokṣaja. The prākṛta-sahajikas do not understand this, and in their error they take service to Kṛṣṇa for sense gratification aimed at enjoyment. Bhagavān's pastimes that have descended into the material world are by no means a playground for the prākṛta-sahajikas. Kṛṣṇa's rāsa and His other pastimes are created by yogamāyā, and worldly reasoning cannot see them properly. The Sahajiyā sect regards Kṛṣṇa's pastimes as one more perishable enjoyment. They distort the meaning of the words tat-paratvena nirmalam[35] and tat-paro bhavet and merely throw the rubbish of the mundane onto the transcendental. Mistaking the meaning of the words tādṛśīḥ krīḍāḥ (“such pastimes”), they sink into sense gratification. In truth, however, the primary meaning of the word tādṛśī is transcendental rati. The jīva seized by ignorance (avidyā) and turned away from Hari rejects the transcendental pastimes and, intoxicated with material enjoyment through knowledge gained by the senses, misinterprets this verse. As soon as vivarta — taking one thing for another — appears at the stage of sādhana or of perfection, the jīva becomes a prākṛta-sahajiyā.

Seeing the word bhavet in the vidhi-liṅ form, let no one think that this rāgānugā path, attained through taste, is a prescribed (vaidha) path for all regardless of qualification, even for a pleasure-seeker full of anarthas. In the material world there is consideration of what should and should not be done. In Goloka-Vṛndāvana such rules[36] cannot exist. There, on the path of anurāga, all the āśrita-tattvas, under the sway of greed (lobha), seek only one desirable thing — Kṛṣṇa's pleasure.

The madhura-bhāva is the highest [rati] in the material world; the jīva-soul must eternally and necessarily serve in it. If anyone is indifferent to it, he will certainly abandon service to Bhagavān and fall into perishable worldly debauchery. If the jīva does not devote himself to madhura-rati, the base doctrine of material enjoyment, the opposite of madhura-rati, will prevail in him. In the same way, if in vātsalya-rati the jīva turns away from serving Kṛṣṇa, the urge to enjoy will drag him down into perishable affection for a son. In the same way, if one does not regard Kṛṣṇa as one's only friend, perishable friends devoted to the senses will come and drag the jīva down. In the same way, having turned away from Bhagavān, the jīva will become indifferent to serving Kṛṣṇa. He will play the servant to a perishable body that serves the senses for enjoyment, and he will forget his true nature. In the same way, if the mind does not find equanimity (nirapekṣā) in Kṛṣṇa, the jīva will turn away from Kṛṣṇa and become indifferent to matter. That is, he will become a slave of mokṣa, or nirvāṇa, which is called “turning to stone,” and become an impersonalist. Whoever is indifferent to entering Kṛṣṇa's pastimes will be dominated by an intelligence devoted to the senses and bent on enjoyment. Because of this his false ego, founded on designations, will swell in good and bad deeds alike and deprive him of the ultimate good.

*Establishing dharma and the like is not the main work of Kṛṣṇa, the original form, or of Gaura —*

36–37 As this desire was the cause of Kṛṣṇa's appearance and the slaying of the demons only a secondary purpose, so too Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa is the complete Bhagavān, and to inaugurate the religion of the age (yuga-dharma) is not His own desire.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the avatāra as Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa appeared because of the desire just described, and killing the asuras was not His main purpose but only a secondary one. In the same way, in the avatāra as Gaura, Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the most complete Bhagavān, and establishing the dharma of the age, nāma-kīrtana, was not His own work. But when the complete Bhagavān resolved for a certain hidden reason to descend, it so happened that the time for the dharma of the age arrived at that very moment. So Gaurāṅga descended for two reasons: for His hidden, internal purpose and for the external one, preaching the dharma of the age. Having descended, He relished prema and nāma-saṅkīrtana together with His devotees.

*The source of the avatāras unites with His own part, the yuga-avatāra —*

38 When for some reason He resolved to descend, the time of the yuga-dharma coincided with it.

Having descended for the hidden and the external reasons, He Himself practices [the teaching] and preaches it —

39 Descending for these two reasons, together with His devotees He Himself tastes prema and the congregational chanting of the name.

40 By this means He spread kīrtana even among the outcastes; weaving a garland of the holy name and divine love, He placed it around the whole world.

41 Thus, accepting the mood of a devotee, He preached devotion by practising it Himself.

Anubhāṣya.

Wishing to manifest His pastimes of magnanimity (audārya-līlā), Kṛṣṇa revealed in the material world His eternal pastimes as Gaura. In the eternal pastimes of Gaura, Kṛṣṇa is in the mood of a devotee, and this is the wonder of His eternal pastimes. Kṛṣṇa, the original form, brought the eternal pastimes of Gaura down into the world and made the service of Kṛṣṇa, the object of service, easily accessible to the jīvas. The debauched sect of prākṛta-sahajikas does not know the true nature of transcendental vipralambha. They pervert the meaning of Śrī Gaurasundara's acceptance of the mood of a devotee and wish illegitimately to present Him as a form of sambhoga (enjoyment in union). They adorn themselves with invented titles such as “Nadīyā-nāgarī” or “Gaura-nāgarī” and wipe out the mood of the devotee, that is, of the āśraya, in the rasa of eternal separation. Such outrages do not please Kṛṣṇa, the original form. Śrī Gaura-vigraha, the original form, does not bestow mercy on these prākṛta-sahajikas devoted to enjoyment but keeps them far away from Himself. To apply the sambhoga considerations of Kṛṣṇa's pastimes to Him whose pastimes are full of the rasa of vipralambha is an attempt to destroy devotion to Kṛṣṇa. It is nothing but hatred of Śrī Gaura.

*The āśrayas of the four rasas other than śānta desire only Kṛṣṇa's pleasure —*

42 Servitude, friendship, parental love and the love of the beloved (śṛṅgāra) — these are the four kinds of prema, and the four kinds of devotees are their vessels.

*Each devotee considers his own rasa the best for pleasing Kṛṣṇa —*

43 Each considers his own mood the best, and in that mood he tastes happiness with Kṛṣṇa.

*Judged impartially, the transcendental madhura-rasa contains all the other* rasas*, and so in it the endeavor to please Kṛṣṇa is greatest —*

44 But if one considers it in one's heart without partiality, the sweetness of śṛṅgāra surpasses that of all the other rasas.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and madhura — each of these four rasas seems to its own devotees the best for relishing Kṛṣṇa's happiness. But if one looks taṭastha, that is, impartially, it becomes clear that the sweetness of the madhura, or śṛṅgāra, rasa surpasses the other three.

*In dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and madhura-rasa, one after another, the relish of Kṛṣṇa's happiness grows fuller —*

45 "Although love (rati), rising from one kind to the next, is ever richer in delight, by the inclination of the heart one particular kind seems sweetest to a particular devotee." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 2.5.38)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Rati full of delight (ullāsa) unfolds in ever more special relish. In particular cases, according to vāsanā, this rati becomes a special, supreme relish and manifests as madhura-rasa.

Anubhāṣya.

asau ratiḥ (this rati) yathottaram (progressively, one after another) svādu-viśeṣollāsa-mayī (ever more full of special sweetness) api vāsanayā (according to differences of vāsanā) kā api kasyacit (to one devotee or another) svādvī bhāsate (appears sweet).

Madhura-rasa* is of two kinds: svakīyā and parakīyā —*

46 Therefore I call it madhura-rasa, the sweet rasa. It exists in two forms: svakīyā, conjugal love, and parakīyā, love not bound by marriage.

Anubhāṣya.

The Ujjvala-nīlamaṇi says of Kṛṣṇa's svakīyā beloveds: "The svakīyās are those who have been married by rite, who are devoted to their husband's commands and unwavering in fidelity." The svakīyās are women who have been taken in marriage according to the rules of scripture; they diligently carry out their husband's will and are unwavering in the dharma of fidelity to him. Of the parakīyās (Kṛṣṇa's beloveds): “The parakīyās are those who have given themselves out of rāga alone, caring neither for this world nor for the next, and whom dharma has not accepted [as wives].” The parakīyās are women who, drawn by anurāga to a man not their husband, surrender themselves to him. They know that the rules of the dharma-śāstras do not recognize such a union, and still they pay no heed to any hardship, in this world or the next.

*Of the two, Kṛṣṇa's pleasure is greatest in parakīyā-bhāva, and it abides only in Vraja —*

47 In parakīyā rasa rises to its highest delight, and nowhere but in Vraja does it dwell.

Pārakīya-bhāva* abides eternally in the beautiful women of Vraja and reaches its highest limit in Śrī Rādhā —*

48 In the young women of Vraja this mood is boundless, and among them it reaches its summit in Śrī Rādhā.

49 Her love, mature and pure in feeling, is the highest of all; it is through this love that the sweetness of Kṛṣṇa is tasted in its fullness.

*Accepting the bhāva of Śrī Rādhā, He fulfills His three desires in the form of Gaura —*

50 Therefore Śrī Hari, appearing as Gaurāṅga, accepted that mood and fulfilled His own desire.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Because the sweetness of śṛṅgāra-rasa is greater than that of the other three rasas, it is called “madhura-rasa,” the sweet rasa. This madhura-rasa is of two kinds, svakīya and pārakīya. When madhura-rasa arises in the awareness that Kṛṣṇa is one's wedded husband, we call it svakīya madhura-rasa. When it arises in the awareness that Kṛṣṇa is an upapati, a paramour, we call it pārakīya madhura-rasa. Those who have studied madhura-rasa have concluded with one voice that in pārakīya-bhāva the delight of madhura-rasa is greater, and that this rasa abides nowhere but in Vraja. Many think that Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who eternally enjoys His pastimes in Goloka, appeared in Vraja only for a short time and there performed these pastimes in pārakīya-bhāva. But this is not the view of the Gosvāmīs. According to the Śrī Gosvāmīs, the pastimes in Vraja are eternal too. "Vraja" is the very name of the most intimate inner chambers of Goloka, the eternal spiritual abode. Whatever pastimes Śrī Kṛṣṇa performed when He descended into the material world, the same pastimes go on eternally in the eternal abode of Vraja. The pārakīya-rasa abides eternally in Vraja. Kavirāja Gosvāmī said in the third chapter: "At the end of the Dvāpara of the twenty-eighth cycle, Kṛṣṇa appears in this world together with His Vraja" (Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Ādi 3.10). From the words "together with His Vraja" it is clear that in the spiritual realm there is an inconceivable abode (pīṭha) called "Vraja." Together with that abode Kṛṣṇa descended into the material world by the power of His spiritual potency (cit-śakti). Nowhere except in this eternal Vraja, the inner chambers of Goloka, does the pārakīya-rasa abide, for there abides a rasa infinitely superior to that of Goloka. It is only that in the manifest Vraja the eyes of the jīvas beheld the variety of the unmanifest Vraja. The bhāva of the wives of Vraja reaches its limit, its utmost boundary, in Śrī Rādhā. Śrī Rādhā's love in Vraja, a mature and pure bhāva, is the highest of all. For through it Kṛṣṇa relishes the rasa of His own sweetness as fully as is at all possible. Therefore Gaurāṅga-Śrī Hari accepted that bhāva and fulfilled His own desire.

51 "He is the refuge hard to reach even for the lords of the gods, the supreme goal of the Upaniṣads, the all-in-all of the sages, the sweetness of the hosts who bow to Him, and the very essence of the love of the lotus-eyed cowherd girls of Vraja. Will that Caitanya ever again come before my eyes?" (Stava-mālā, the first Caitanyāṣṭaka, 2)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

He whom the gods can hardly approach, the supreme goal of the Upaniṣads, the whole wealth of the sages, the sweetness of the hosts of devotees bowed before Him, the very essence of the love that dwells in the eyes of the young maidens of Vraja — will that Caitanyacandra ever again come before my sight?

Anubhāṣya.

sureśānām (of Mahendra and the others) durgam (a shelter hard to approach) upaniṣadām (of the Upaniṣads, the crown of the Vedas) atiśayena gatiḥ (the supreme goal) munīnāṁ sarva-svam (the sole wealth of sages weary of matter) praṇata-paṭalīnām (of the hosts of devotees) madhurimā (the abode of beauty) nikhila-paśu-pālāmbuja-dṛśām (of all the women of Vraja) premṇaḥ viniryāsaḥ (the essence of love) sa caitanyaḥ punaḥ api kiṁ me dṛśoḥ padaṁ yāsyati (will reach)?

*(Stava-mālā, the second Caitanyāṣṭaka, verse 3)*

52 "Eager for delight, the Lord stole from one among the host of His beloveds (Śrī Rādhā) Her boundless wealth of rasa, indescribably sweet, that He might relish it Himself. For this He covered His own lustre and revealed here Her radiance. May He, in the form of Caitanya, be boundlessly merciful to us!" (Stava-mālā, the second Caitanyāṣṭaka, 3)[5]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa, who delights in play, relished the rasas of the many who love Him and wished to enjoy a certain boundless, special madhura-rasa. For that He hid His own complexion, accepted the radiance of Śrī Rādhā and appeared in the form of Caitanya. May He bestow on us His special mercy.

Anubhāṣya.

53 It was to accept that mood that He established dharma. Now I shall tell its chief reason — listen, everyone.

54 Up to now I have given an outline of the verse to point to the root reason. Now I shall reveal the meaning of that verse.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Wishing to accept the bhāva of Śrī Rādhā, He undertook to establish dharma. I shall now tell the main purpose of that undertaking. Until now I have only hinted at the verse, in order to come to the root cause.

Anubhāṣya.

In place of these four lines some manuscripts have six: “To accept that bhāva, He established dharma. First I shall explain the verse about the root cause. Hear now how He accepted the bhāva; for this I shall examine the fifth verse. Thus I have given a hint of the fifth verse; now I shall reveal the meaning of that verse.”

Explanation of the fifth of the fourteen opening verses —

55 “Śrī Rādhā is the transformation of Kṛṣṇa’s love, His pleasure potency, hlādinī-śakti. Therefore, though Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are one in Self, from time without beginning They have appeared in the world in two different forms. Now these Two have become one and are manifest as Śrī Caitanya. I bow to Him, Kṛṣṇa Himself, adorned with the sentiment and the lustre of Śrī Rādhā.” (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)[6]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The hlādinī-śakti is the transformation of the love of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa; because of it Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are one in Their own nature. But Their pastimes (vilāsa-tattva) are eternal, and so Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa eternally abide in two forms. Now these two tattvas have appeared in one form — as the Caitanya-tattva. Therefore I bow down to Gaurasundara, Kṛṣṇa Himself, adorned with the bhāva and radiance of Rādhā.

Anubhāṣya.

rādhā kṛṣṇa-praṇaya-vikṛtiḥ (the transformation of Kṛṣṇa's love — the hlādinī-śakti in the form of the pastimes of love); ekātmānau (one in soul) purā (since time without beginning) tau (They, Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa) bhuvi deha-bhedam (the difference of two bodies — the form of the viṣaya and the form of the āśraya) gatau (have assumed). adhunā (now) tad-dvayam (the two of Them) aikyam āptam (have attained oneness). rādhā-bhāva-dyuti-suvalitam (bhāva and radiance make bhāva-dyutī; the bhāva and radiance of Rādhā — He who is joined, suvalita, with them: Kṛṣṇa within, Gaura without) kṛṣṇa-svarūpam caitanyākhyam prakaṭam (the manifest form) naumi (I bow down).

The explanation of the fifth verse begins; the hidden cause of the Gaura-avatāra — first, the truth of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa —

56 Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are one Self; assuming two bodies, They sport with each other, tasting rasa.

Gaura is the form in which Rādhā and Govinda are united — 57 Now those Two are one — Caitanya Gosāñi; to taste that mood (bhāva), They have come together in one form.

To describe the glory of the truth of Gaura, the author explains the love of Rādhā and Govinda —

58 For this reason I shall first describe that truth, for from it comes the telling of Gaura's glory.

The truth of Śrī Rādhā and Her relationship with Kṛṣṇa —

59 Rādhikā is the transformation of Kṛṣṇa's love; She is the potency of His own nature (svarūpa-śakti) whose name is Hlādinī.

*The characteristics of the hlādinī-śakti —*

60 Hlādinī makes Kṛṣṇa taste bliss, and through Hlādinī He nourishes His devotees.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Jīva Prabhu writes in the Prīti-sandarbha (section 65): "And in the Śruti it is heard: 'Devotion leads him [to the Lord], devotion shows Him to him, the Puruṣa is subject to devotion, devotion is the greatest of all.' Let us therefore consider: what are the characteristics of that [power] which thus intoxicates Bhagavān with its bliss? It is not the bliss of māyā, made of material sattva, as with the Sāṅkhyas, for the Śruti says that māyā cannot overpower Bhagavān and that He is satisfied in Himself. Nor is it the bliss of Bhagavān's own nature, as the impersonalists hold, for then it could not surpass [His own bliss]. Still less is it the bliss of the jīva's own nature, for the jīva is exceedingly small. One possibility remains. According to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa — 'Hlādinī, sandhinī and saṁvit are one in You, the support of all; [the potency] that gives joy, pain and a mixture of the two is not in You, who are free from the guṇas' — it is the bliss of His svarūpa-śakti called hlādinī. Through her Bhagavān possesses the special bliss of His own nature, and through her alone He lets others too taste this or that bliss. But hlādinī too abides always in Bhagavān, and so she too could not surpass [Him]. Therefore one must reason thus, on the basis of arthāpatti, the inference of that without which the meaning of the Śruti cannot be explained. A certain function (vṛtti) of that very hlādinī, surpassing all bliss, is eternally deposited in the hosts of devotees and abides there under the name 'love for Bhagavān' (bhagavat-prīti). Therefore, by experiencing it, Śrī Bhagavān too feels an exceptional love for His devotees."

The Vedas too say that devotion leads the devotee to Bhagavān, that devotion lets the devotee see Bhagavān, that Bhagavān is subject to devotion — and there the supremacy of devotion is declared. Therefore the question is examined: what are the characteristics of that vastu-śakti, the potency of the Reality itself, which intoxicates Bhagavān with His own bliss? The Śruti's answer is this. Māyā cannot overpower Bhagavān, and Bhagavān is satisfied in Himself. Therefore this vastu-śakti cannot be called, as the Sāṅkhyas teach, the bliss of māyā endowed with material being. Nor can it be called, as the impersonalists say, the bliss of Bhagavān's own nature: considered from beginning to end, that conclusion is especially untenable. Still less is it the bliss of the jīva's own nature: the jīva, though eternal, is exceedingly small. Therefore [it remains to say] that the bliss is His svarūpa-śakti named hlādinī. Such is the sense of the words of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa: "Only in the all-powerful Bhagavān do the three potencies — hlādinī, sandhinī and saṁvit — abide. O Bhagavān, in You, who are free from the guṇas, there is no feeling of joy mixed with pain." For only through this potency is a special bliss seen in Bhagavān's own nature, and only through it does Bhagavān bestow this or that bliss on other devotees. This is the final conclusion. Because the hlādinī-śakti abides eternally in Bhagavān, the impersonalist's conclusion just mentioned must be firmly rejected — this must be understood. For if the meaning of the Śruti cannot be reconciled otherwise, a different conclusion must be admitted. The testimony of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa agrees with the meaning of the Vedas, whereas the impersonalists' claim distorts the meaning of the Vedas and does not belong to what the Vedas intend. Therefore, when the eternal function of that very hlādinī, surpassing all bliss, is bestowed on the hosts of devotees, it receives the name bhagavat-prīti, love for Bhagavān. And Śrī Bhagavān, feeling that love in the devotee, accepts the devotee's love.

The Viṣṇu Purāṇa speaks of three kinds of potency in Śrī Bhagavān. Therefore the potency that gives bliss to Bhagavān is neither the material bliss of the Sāṅkhya nor mere undifferentiated spiritual bliss (cid-ekānanda), as with the impersonalist, who does not know the difference between the potency and its possessor. It is the hlādinī-śakti that gives Bhagavān bliss. Through the hlādinī-śakti Bhagavān endows the jīva with the dharma of love for Himself, and then, won over by the devotee's love for Bhagavān, He Himself nourishes that love.

*The one potency of the one possessor of potency has three forms: (1) it gives bliss, that is, the relish of rasa; (2) it directs action, that is, makes [Him] the enjoyer; and (3) it manifests being, that is, grants existence —*

61 Kṛṣṇa's nature is eternity, knowledge and bliss; He is complete. And His one spiritual potency (cit-śakti) takes three forms:

62 In the aspect of bliss She is Hlādinī, in the aspect of being Sandhinī, and in the aspect of consciousness Samvit, which we know as knowledge.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Anyonye means "with each other." The literal sense of these verses is clear, but their inner meaning is hidden. Rādhā is the śakti, Kṛṣṇa the tattva who possesses śakti. The Vedānta saying śakti-śaktimator abhedaḥ ("the potency and its possessor are not different") means that no reasoning can separate the śakti from the one in whom it resides. Yet by the power of an inconceivable śakti, Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, in order to relish the rasa of Their pastimes with each other, are eternally separate — and at the same time one. Rādhā is truly the hlādinī, Kṛṣṇa's svarūpa-śakti. She bears that name because She keeps Kṛṣṇa immersed in supreme bliss. She is also recognized by the way She nourishes the prema inherent in the very nature of the jīva, Kṛṣṇa's separated spiritual part. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the possessor of śakti, is the complete tattva; by nature He is sac-cid-ānanda. The one and the same spiritual potency (cit-śakti), in its aspect of being (sat), is the sandhinī, that which expands existence. In its aspect of consciousness (cit) it is the saṁvit-tattva, complete knowledge, that is, the truth of Kṛṣṇa's own nature. In its aspect of bliss (ānanda) it is the hlādinī, that which gives joy to that very nature.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Jīva Prabhu writes in the Bhagavat-sandarbha (section 102): “The potency by which [Bhagavān], being Being itself, holds being and enables others to hold it, is the sandhinī; she grants [His] presence in all places, times, substances and so on. Likewise the potency by which He, being Consciousness itself, knows and makes others know, is the saṁvit. Likewise the potency by which He, being Bliss itself, knows that bliss through the highest development of saṁvit and makes others know it, is to be understood as the hlādinī. Thus it is established that the original potency is threefold. A particular function (vṛtti) of hers, whose mark is self-manifestation, through which [Bhagavān's] own form manifests — by itself or together with His own potency — is viśuddha-sattva. It is His manifestation, dependent on nothing else; and because its function is knowledge that makes known, it is in fact saṁvit. Since māyā does not touch it, it is pure… And from this sattva the world called Vaikuṇṭha becomes manifest. By the word sattva a particular function of the svarūpa-śakti, whose mark is self-manifestation, is meant here. For impure sattva is commonly defined as ‘sattva is a quality of prakṛti’; on that analogy it is fitting to call such a particular spiritual potency ‘sattva.’ Therefore it is said that, being a function of the svarūpa-śakti, it is identical with His own form. The Śruti declares that the material qualities, sattva and the rest, belong to the jīva, not to the Lord. So in the Eleventh [Canto]: ‘Sattva, rajas and tamas are the qualities of the jīva, not Mine.’[37] And in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa: ‘May that original Person be gracious, purest of all the pure, in whom, the Lord, there are no material qualities such as sattva.’ The qualification ‘material’ here shows that other, nonmaterial qualities do exist in Him. So too in the Tenth [Canto] the king of the gods said: ‘Your abode is pure sattva, peaceful, full of tapas, free from rajas and tamas. This stream of guṇas made of māyā, born of ignorance, does not exist in You.’[38] The qualities of prakṛti [are these]: sattva; when what is perceived is manifold, rajas; when the manifold is hidden, tamas. Likewise: in mutual indifference, sattva; in mutual help, rajas; in mutual harm, tamas. This viśuddha-sattva, when the sandhinī portion predominates in it, is the ādhāra-śakti, the supporting potency; when the saṁvit portion predominates, it is ātma-vidyā; when the essence of hlādinī predominates, it is guhyavidyā, the hidden knowledge; when all three potencies predominate together, it is the mūrti, the form. By the ādhāra-śakti the abode of Bhagavān is manifest."

The potency by which Bhagavān upholds being and enables others to uphold it is the sandhinī, which manifests all places, times, substances and so on. The potency by which He Himself can know and make known is the saṁvit. And the potency in which cit predominates, by which He Himself knows bliss and can make others know bliss, is to be understood as the hlādinī.

Thus it is established that the original supreme potency (parā-śakti) is threefold. There is a particular function of hers whose mark is self-manifestation; through it Bhagavān Himself, His svarūpa-śakti or His spiritual distinctions become manifest. This is viśuddha-sattva. It depends on nothing else and is the manifestation of Bhagavān. In it there are two functions — to experience oneself and to let others experience — and so it is also saṁvit. Māyā does not touch it; that is its purity; and from this viśuddha-sattva the abode called Vaikuṇṭha becomes manifest. The word viśuddha-sattva denotes a particular function of Bhagavān's svarūpa-śakti whose mark is self-manifestation. The common name for the mark of material impurity is here fittingly applied [by analogy], and so śuddha-sattva, or sandhinī, is a particular spiritual potency. This śuddha-sattva is a function of the svarūpa-śakti, and so it too consists of the svarūpa-śakti. The Śruti and Smṛti say that the material qualities, sattva and the rest, belong only to the jīva, not to the Lord. Thus in the Eleventh Canto Bhagavān says: "The three qualities — sattva, rajas and tamas — are connected with the jīva who has turned away from Me, but never with Me." And the Viṣṇu Purāṇa says: "In the Lord, in whom transcendental qualities abide, there are not and cannot be material qualities such as sattva. May that original Person, Bhagavān Nārāyaṇa, be gracious — He who is unmixed purity among all pure entities." The qualification "material" here specially shows that other — transcendental — qualities abide in Him, in Bhagavān. In the Tenth Canto Indra, the king of the gods, says: "O Bhagavān, Your abode consists of pure sattva. It is peaceful, full of service in the form of austerity, and free from rajas and tamas. You have nothing of this stream of guṇas made of māyā; You neither touch the material qualities nor accept them." In the unmanifest state there is the quality of sattva; in external manifestation, in manifold display that tends to generate, the quality of rajas; where manifold display is absent, the quality of tamas. In other words: where the three qualities are slack or indifferent to one another, there is sattva; where there is efficacy and activity, [rajas]; where there is destruction and ruin, there is tamas.

Here this viśuddha-sattva in which the sandhinī portion predominates is the ādhāra-śakti; that in which the saṁvit portion predominates is ātma-vidyā; that in which the essence of the hlādinī-śakti predominates is guhya-vidyā (prema-bhakti). Where all three potencies predominate at once, it is the mūrti, or vigraha, the form. By this ādhāra-śakti the abode of Bhagavān becomes manifest.

The Supreme Truth (para-tattva) is the true Reality, and It is eternally manifest in three potencies. By a single supreme inconceivable potency consisting of three potencies, It abides eternally in four ways: as the splendor of His own nature (svarūpa-vaibhava), Vaikuṇṭha and the rest; as the pure jīvas, called taṭastha, one with It in spiritual nature; as the external splendor, in which matter predominates; and as the complete Self (pūrṇa-svarūpa). His own form and the power that manifests His splendor abide in two ways as the internal potency: as the svayaṁ-rūpa and as the manifestation of splendor (vaibhava-prakāśa). The potency that abides in the inner limbs of the aṅgī, the possessor of the limbs, is the antaraṅgā, the internal one. Bhagavān, the svayaṁ-rūpa, the possessor of the internal potency, manifests the splendor of His own nature — Vaikuṇṭha and the rest. The external limbs of Bhagavān are pradhāna and material substances. This external potency, in the material world, in bodies from Brahmā down to motionless trees and stones, covers the jīva, the transformation of the marginal potency, more heavily or more lightly.

The svarūpa-śakti is seen in three divisions. They are called parts (aṁśas) of the potency as a whole, the svarūpa-śakti. The eternal existence of the potency, its sat portion — that is, its immunity to being disturbed by time and the like — is known by the name sandhinī. The knowing principle, the cit portion, distinguished from eternal bliss — nondual knowledge — is known by the name saṁvit. In other words, that in which Kṛṣṇa's independent agency is known in the fullness of spiritual nature is called the saṁvit-śakti. The part of the whole that keeps its distinction from sat and cit is the potency full of bliss. When their distinctions are described the three potencies have different characteristics, yet all three parts abide in the svarūpa-śakti itself. In the marginal and the external potencies, however, these three abide in different ways. In the external potency there are the three guṇas. In the conditioned part of the marginal potency there is the action of those three guṇas. And in the liberated part — in the service proper to the nature of the āśraya — there abides that part of the potency of sac-cid-ānanda which suits the object of service.

*(Dhruva's words, Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 12, verse 69)*

63 "O Lord, You are the basis of all, and in You Hlādinī, Sandhinī and Samvit are one potency. But that which causes joy, pain and a mixture of the two is not in You, for You are beyond the guṇas." (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 1.12.69)[7]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Bhagavān, shelter of all, free from the guṇas! In You all three functions of the śakti — hlādinī, sandhinī and saṁvit — are spiritual. The jīva is a spiritual particle that māyā can subdue. Having fallen under māyā's sway and taken shelter of her three guṇas, the jīva has come into a condition in which the śakti appears to him in three forms — "giving joy," "giving pain" and "mixed." But in You, who are beyond all the guṇas, this śakti is pure, free from the guṇas and one.

Anubhāṣya.

[he bhagavan] (O Bhagavān), ekā (the one — the chief, unfailing potency that is Your own nature) hlādinī (giving joy) sandhinī (being) saṁvit (the potency of knowledge) sarva-saṁsthitau (in You — since through You everything stands firm; in You, the foundation of all) tvayi (in You alone, not in the jīvas) [abides]. (But the threefold one made of the guṇas does not abide in You): hlāda-tāpa-karī miśrā (that which gives joy — the sāttvika, born of clarity of mind; that which gives pain — the tāmasika, on separation from sense objects and so on; that which is a mixture of both — the rājasika, born of sense objects) guṇa-varjite (free from sattva and the other guṇas) tvayi (in You, Bhagavān, but not in the jīvas) eva (here sandhinī, saṁvit and hlādinī are to be understood in ascending order of excellence).

In his commentary on this verse and on Bhāgavatam 1.7.6, Śrīdhara Svāmī quotes the following verse of Śrī Viṣṇusvāmī as a saying of the Sarvajña-sūkta: "The Lord is sac-cid-ānanda, embraced by hlādinī and saṁvit. The jīva, enveloped by his own ignorance, is a mine of countless miseries."

*The service of the sandhinī: she enables Bhagavān to become manifest —*

64 The essential part of Sandhinī is called śuddha-sattva, pure being; in it the existence of Bhagavān rests.

Anubhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa's mother and father, His place, His house and the rest are transformations of śuddha-sattva. In transformed śuddha-sattva the nature of Bhagavān is seen as consisting of śuddha-sattva. In the pure tattva that is Kṛṣṇa's source, one sees how He takes birth. And yet Kṛṣṇa is not mere śuddha-sattva made of Vasudeva: He is the eternal presiding Deity of the knowledge of Bhagavān, which is the essence of saṁvit and nondual knowledge. The things that belong to the āśraya and are related to Kṛṣṇa consist of śuddha-sattva. Therefore [the devotees], with hearts turned toward service, see in them the relationship with Kṛṣṇa. In truth, however, Bhagavān is spiritual by nature.

*Though Kṛṣṇa is the master of the sandhinī, everything He enjoys is a transformation of the sandhinī —*

65 His mother and father, His abode, His house, His bed and seat and all else — all these are transformations of Kṛṣṇa’s śuddha-sattva, pure transcendental being.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The essence of the sandhinī-śakti, which expands existence, is called śuddha-sattva. Sattva is of two kinds, mixed (miśra) and pure (śuddha). “Sattva” is simply the being of an entity. Without the action of the sandhinī no sattva is possible. The manifestation of Bhagavān's being is likewise the work of the sandhinī. The action of the sandhinī in the pure spiritual tattva is called śuddha-sattva. Bhagavān's mother and father, His place, house, bed, seat and the rest are transformations (vikāras), that is, special manifestations, of Kṛṣṇa's śuddha-sattva. To understand this truth clearly one should know this as well. The sandhinī belonging to His own nature, that is, to the cit-śakti, has manifested all the being of the spiritual world — the being of all spiritual forms: Bhagavān's spiritual form and those of His servants, maidservants, companions, father, mother and the rest. The sandhinī belonging to the māyā-śakti has spread out all the elemental being of the material world. And the sandhinī belonging to the jīva-śakti has spread out the being of the jīva, the spiritual particle.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 4, Chapter 3, verse 23)*

66 "Pure being (viśuddha-sattva) is called vasudeva, for in it the Supreme Person is revealed unveiled. And in that being I worship with my mind Lord Vāsudeva, who is beyond the senses (Adhokṣaja)." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 4.3.23)[8]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Mahādeva said: "There is an eternal tattva, śuddha-sattva; it exists through the power of the sandhinī belonging to Bhagavān's svarūpa-śakti, and it is called 'Vasudeva.' In this śuddha-sattva Bhagavān, whose nature is consciousness, is eternally manifest; His name is 'Vāsudeva.' He is beyond all the senses, material and māyika alike. With a heart purified by devotion I bow down to Him." The meaning is this: Kṛṣṇa's form and the rest are the eternal work of the sandhinī belonging to His svarūpa-śakti.

Anubhāṣya.

Satī was about to go to the house of her father Dakṣa to see the sacrifice. Mahādeva, knowing that Dakṣa, sunk in karma, was hostile to Viṣṇu, said to her:

viśuddham (free from all inertness, being a function of the svarūpa-śakti) sattvam (consisting of the function of the cit-śakti, transcendental) vasudeva-śabditam (vasaty asmin, "He dwells in it" — hence vasu; dīvyati dyotate, "it shines, it gleams" — hence deva; it is both), yat (because) tatra (in that sattva) pumān (the Person) apāvṛtaḥ (free of any covering) īyate (becomes manifest). tasmin sattve adhokṣajaḥ (He who has left behind and surpassed the knowledge born of the senses, akṣaja) bhagavān vāsudevaḥ ("He is, He is perceived, in Vasudeva" — hence Vāsudeva, the well-known Supreme Lord; by etymology, "He who makes God dwell") me (by me) manasā vidhīyate (is especially meditated upon).

Śrī Jīva Prabhu writes in the Bhagavat-sandarbha (section 102): "And in the form (mūrti) the Śrī Vigraha, the very Supreme Truth, becomes manifest; this [viśuddha-sattva] is what is called Vasudeva." See the conclusion [of that passage] below, and also the Gauḍīya-bhāṣya on this verse in the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, pp. 1172–1174.

*Through the saṁvit-śakti Bhagavān experiences, that is, knows Himself as the enjoyer of bliss; through it, too, within nondual knowledge there is* knowledge of Bhagavān —

67 The knowledge that Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān is the essence of Samvit; the knowledge of Brahman and all the rest are only its retinue.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The action of saṁvit is called “knowledge.” There are two seers: Kṛṣṇa and the jīva. Kṛṣṇa's seeing is founded on complete knowledge, and there are no gaps in His knowing; so His knowledge can be called “mere glance” (īkṣaṇa). In the jīva's seeing there are many gaps, so we call his seeing “knowledge by cognition” (saṁvedana-jñāna). That knowledge is of three kinds: direct (sākṣāt-jñāna), by negation (vyatireka-jñāna) and distorted (vikṛta-jñāna). The knowledge the jīva gains of material objects through the material senses is never pure and so is distorted; it is the distorting action of the saṁvit that belongs to the māyā-śakti. Impersonal knowledge by negation of matter rests on its relation to material knowledge, and so it is petty. It is only the action of the saṁvit-śakti that belongs to the jīva, and so it is incomplete. Such knowledge is called “knowledge of Brahman,” “knowledge of the self,” “impersonal knowledge,” “knowledge of nondifference” and so on. When the saṁvit-śakti that belongs to cit joins with the hlādinī and bestows mercy on the jīva, the knowledge that Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān is born. That, therefore, is the essence of saṁvit. Knowledge of Brahman and knowledge of objects are its “retinue” (parivāra), that is, merely coverings that differ from stage to stage.

*The divisions of the hlādinī —*

68 The essence of Hlādinī is prema, divine love; the essence of prema is bhāva; and the highest limit of bhāva is called mahābhāva.

Śrī Rādhikā is the embodied highest limit of love for Kṛṣṇa —

69 Śrī Rādhā Ṭhākurāṇī is the embodiment of mahābhāva. She is a mine of all virtues and the crest-jewel of Kṛṣṇa’s beloveds.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The action of the hlādinī is called prema. This prema is of two kinds, pure and mixed. The hlādinī-śakti belonging to Kṛṣṇa gives bliss to Kṛṣṇa and, together with pure saṁvit, bestows mercy on the jīva; then prema for Kṛṣṇa arises in the jīva. But when the transformed hlādinī belonging to the jīva attracts the jīva through the māyā-śakti, the jīva, intoxicated with love for sense objects, is deprived of prema for Kṛṣṇa and so falls under the sway of happiness and distress. The ideal of prema for the jīvas is the circle of the gopīs of Vraja, and among them Śrī Rādhā is supreme. The essence of the hlādinī belonging to the spiritual nature is prema; the essence of prema is bhāva; the highest limit of bhāva is mahābhāva. That is Śrīmatī Rādhikā Ṭhākurāṇī. She is the source of all virtues and the crown jewel of Kṛṣṇa's beloveds.

70 "Of the two, Rādhikā is superior in every way. She is the embodiment of mahābhāva, and in virtues She surpasses all." (Ujjvala-nīlamaṇi, the chapter on Śrī Rādhā, 2)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Among the gopīs who enjoy the pastimes of Vraja, the foremost are Candrāvalī and Rādhikā, and of these two Śrīmatī Rādhikā is better in every respect. She is the embodiment of mahābhāva, and no other gopī has qualities equal to Hers.

Anubhāṣya.

tayoḥ (of Śrī Rādhā and Candrāvalī) ubhayor api madhye rādhikā sarvathādhikā (superior, better in every respect). iyam (Śrī Rādhikā) mahābhāva-svarūpā (endowed with the mahābhāva called madana; Her form unites the eight bhāvas) guṇaiḥ (by the twenty-five qualities) ati-varīyasī (best of all).

Within and without, in every one of Her limbs, the form of love for Kṛṣṇa is manifest —

71 Her mind, senses and body are steeped in love for Kṛṣṇa; Rādhā is Kṛṣṇa's own potency, the helper in His play.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrīmatī Rādhikā is spiritual. She does not have, like a jīva in the material world, material senses, a material body and a mind in the form of the subtle body. In Her spiritual nature there are a pure spiritual mind, spiritual senses and a spiritual body. Her mind, senses and body are steeped in prema for Kṛṣṇa. She is Kṛṣṇa's own potency and therefore the only helper in His pastimes. Kṛṣṇa is the possessor of potency, and apart from His potency He can perform no pastime. The sandhinī of the svarūpa-śakti has manifested Śrī Kṛṣṇa's spiritual body. When Kṛṣṇa plays in that body, what could He do without Śrīmatī's help? Therefore Rādhikā is Kṛṣṇa's only helper in His pastimes.

*Govinda eternally enjoys the pastimes of rasa with the gopīs in Goloka —*

72 "I worship Govinda, the original Person, the Soul of all. He dwells eternally in Goloka with the gopīs, His potencies (kalās), who are one with Him in nature and imbued with blissful spiritual rasa." (Brahma-saṁhitā, 5.37)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I worship the original Person, Govinda, the wondrous Soul of all. In His own form He dwells eternally in Goloka together with the gopīs, who are imbued with the spiritual rasa of bliss.

Anubhāṣya.
akhilātma-bhūtaḥ (dear to all the residents of Gokula, their very soul) saḥ eva ānanda-cinmaya-rasa-pratibhāvitābhiḥ (imbued at every moment with the rasa made of bliss and spirit) nija-rūpatayā (known as His own form) kalābhiḥ (with parts — the embodiments of the hlādinī-śakti) tābhiḥ (with the beautiful women of Vraja) goloke eva nivasati; tam ādi-puruṣaṁ govindam ahaṁ bhajāmi.

73 Now hear how She makes Kṛṣṇa taste rasa and how She helps Him in His play.

*In madhura-rati marked by the mood of majesty or of sweetness, Kṛṣṇa's beloveds are of three kinds —*

74–75 Kṛṣṇa's beloveds are of three kinds: the Lakṣmīs, the queens in His city, and the girls of Vraja, the essence of them all. All of them expand from Śrī Rādhikā.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Āra means “of another kind.” The third kind are the women of Vraja: they are the essence of all kinds of beloveds, that is, the best of them.

*All of Kṛṣṇa's beloveds are parts of Rādhā, the whole (aṁśinī) —*

76 As Kṛṣṇa, the source of all avatāras, manifests the avatāras, so the three groups expand from Rādhā, the source of all parts.

77 The Lakṣmīs are, as it were, the splendour of Her body, and the queens are Her reflections (bimba-pratibimba).

Anubhāṣya.

In place of vaibhava-gaṇa yena tāra aṅga-vibhūti (“the vaibhavas are as it were the splendor of Her body”) there is also the reading lakṣmī-gaṇa hana tāra aṁśa-vibhūti (“the Lakṣmīs are the splendor of Her parts”).

The queens in Dvārakā and the Lakṣmīs of Nārāyaṇa, Vāsudeva and others —

78 The Lakṣmīs are partial manifestations (aṁśas) of Her vaibhava-vilāsa, and the queens are Her prābhava-prakāśas.[9]

*Lalitā and the other women of Vraja are Her kāya-vyūha —*

79 The goddesses of Vraja, differing in form and nature, are expansions of Her own body (kāya-vyūha), for the sake of rasa.

Anubhāṣya.

In place of the word svarūpa another reading has svabhāva.

*For the growth and wonder of rasa the one hlādinī displays many manifestations —*

80 Without many beloveds rasa does not rejoice; therefore, to help in the play, She has many manifestations.

Of these, the pastimes in Vraja are the highest wonder of Kṛṣṇa's pleasure —

81 Among them the girls of Vraja, differing in moods and rasas, make Kṛṣṇa taste the rāsa dance and His other pastimes.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Just as Kṛṣṇa, the source of the avatāras, expands the avatāras — the Puruṣas and the others — so Śrīmatī Rādhikā is the whole (aṁśinī) for all the beloveds: from Her parts the Lakṣmīs, the queens and the women of Vraja have expanded. These beloveds are counted among the vaibhavas as the splendor of Her body. The queens have expanded as reflections of Her image. The distinction here is this: the Lakṣmīs are Her parts in the form of vaibhava-vilāsa, and the queens are Her prābhava-prakāśa. The maidens of Vraja are Her own kāya-vyūha; differing in form and nature, they have become the cause of rasa. Without many beloveds rasa does not blossom, and so, to assist in the pastimes, She displays many such "manifestations." Of them the rasa of Vraja is the highest. There, through the variety of bhāvas and rasas, She lets Kṛṣṇa relish the rāsa and other pastimes.

The five names of Śrī Rādhikā —

82 Rādhā is the delight of Govinda and the enchantress of Govinda; She is Govinda's all-in-all and the crest-jewel of all His beloveds.

Anubhāṣya.

These are the five names of Śrī Rādhā.

*(Words of the Bṛhad-gautamīya-tantra)*

83 "The goddess (devī) Rādhikā is declared to be full of Kṛṣṇa (kṛṣṇa-mayī). She is the supreme deity; all the Lakṣmīs are within Her; She is the whole of splendour (sarva-kānti) and the supreme enchantress." (Bṛhad-gautamīya-tantra)[10]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The supreme goddess Rādhikā-devī is called "Kṛṣṇa-mayī Herself," "Sarva-lakṣmī-mayī," "Sarva-kānti," "Kṛṣṇa-sammohinī" and "Parā-śakti," the supreme potency.

Anubhāṣya.

rādhikā (she who worships) devī (the radiant one) kṛṣṇa-mayī (nondifferent from Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa's embodied manifestation) para-devatā (supremely worshipable) sarva-lakṣmī-mayī (the original mistress of all the Lakṣmīs) sarva-kāntiḥ (she in whom is all splendor, all beauty) sammohinī (whose nature is to enchant Śrī Kṛṣṇa) parā proktā (is called).

Meaning of the verse: (1) the abode of beauty and of pastimes —

84 Devī means "shining and supremely beautiful", or else "the city where Kṛṣṇa's worship and play abide".

(2) complete absorption in Kṛṣṇa —

85 Kṛṣṇa-mayī — Kṛṣṇa is within Her and without; wherever Her eyes fall, there Kṛṣṇa appears.

Oneness with Kṛṣṇa —

86 Or else: Kṛṣṇa's very nature is full of the rasa of love, and His potency is one with Him.

(3) the name "Rādhā" — because She worships Kṛṣṇa by fulfilling His desires —

87 Her worship of Kṛṣṇa consists in fulfilling His desires; therefore the Purāṇas explain Her name as Rādhikā.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

She is called "Devī" because She is radiant and supremely beautiful, or because She is the dwelling place of play, that is, of the worship of Kṛṣṇa. The word "Kṛṣṇa-mayī" has two meanings. The first: within and without She has Kṛṣṇa, and wherever Her glance falls, there He appears. Or else: Kṛṣṇa's own nature is full of the rasa of prema, and His potency is one tattva with Him; this is the second meaning of the word "Kṛṣṇa-mayī." The name "Rādhikā" is given to Her for Her worship (ārādhana), which consists in fulfilling Kṛṣṇa's desires.

*A hint of Rādhā's name in the Bhāgavatam —*

88 “Surely the Lord, Bhagavān Hari, has been worshipped by Her, for Govinda, pleased, has left us and led Her away to a secluded place.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.30.28)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O friend! She whom Śrī Kṛṣṇa, leaving us, has taken to a secluded place has surely worshipped the Lord Hari more than anyone. The hidden meaning is this: She is the crown jewel of Kṛṣṇa's beloveds, and so She is called “Rādhikā.”

Anubhāṣya.

When Śrī Rādhā and Śrī Govinda had gone away together from the place of the rāsa dance, the gopīs said:

anayā (by Rādhā) nūnam (surely) īśvaraḥ (who grants His devotees what they desire) bhagavān hariḥ ārādhitaḥ (has been won over by worship — and not by us, the wives of Vraja); yat (since) govindaḥ prītaḥ (full of love) naḥ (us) vihāya (leaving altogether) yām (Rādhā) rahaḥ (to a secluded place) anayat.

(4) She attracts Kṛṣṇa and so is above all; She nourishes all the devotees and devotion itself and is their original source —

89 Therefore She is worshipped by all; She is the supreme deity, the protectress of all and the mother of the whole world.

(5) The whole of which all of Kṛṣṇa's beloveds are parts —

90 I have already explained the word sarva-lakṣmī: She is the abode of all the Lakṣmīs.[11]

The original shelter of all of Kṛṣṇa's potencies of majesty —

91 Or sarva-lakṣmī means Kṛṣṇa’s six kinds of opulence, and She is the potency that presides over them, the best of all His potencies.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Rādhikā is the shelter of all the Lakṣmīs. Or else: the word sarva-lakṣmī means Kṛṣṇa's six kinds of majesty, and She is Kṛṣṇa's potency that presides over them.

(5) The original source of all beauty[39] —

92 In Her dwells the splendour of all beauty, and from Her comes the beauty of all the Lakṣmīs.

She who fulfills Kṛṣṇa's desires —

93 Or the word kānti may mean all of Kṛṣṇa's desires, and all of them abide in Rādhā alone.

94 Rādhikā fulfils whatever Kṛṣṇa desires. This is the meaning of the word sarva-kānti.

(6) She who enchants the mind of Him who enchants the world —

95 Kṛṣṇa enchants the world, and She enchants Him; therefore She is the supreme Mistress of all.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Up to the words "and therefore She is the supreme mistress of all," the meaning of each word of the verse beginning devī kṛṣṇa-mayī has been examined.

She is the full-moon night of Kṛṣṇa, the full moon —

96 Rādhā is the full potency, and Kṛṣṇa the full possessor of potency. The scriptures bear witness that there is no difference between the two.

Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are inseparably bound to each other — like musk and the deer, or the flame and the fire —

97 As musk and its fragrance are inseparable, as fire and its heat are never different,

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Musk and its fragrance are two different things, yet they are inseparable; fire and its heat are different things, yet they too are inseparable. So it is with Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa: to relish the rasa of Their pastimes They are eternally separate — and still one in Their own nature.

One in nature, They abide in two bodies — the one who relishes and the one who is relished —

98 so Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are always one essence; to taste the rasa of Their pastimes They assume two forms.

*To distribute Śrī Rādhā's love for Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa accepts Rādhā's bhāva and form and descends as Gaura —*

99–100 To teach loving devotion, He Himself descended, accepting both the mood and the lustre of Rādhā, and appeared in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. This is the explanation of the meaning of the fifth verse.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Having Himself accepted Rādhikā's bhāva and kānti, that is, the beauty of Her complexion.

The explanation of the sixth of the fourteen opening verses begins —

101 To bring out the meaning of the sixth verse, I shall first give an outline of it.

*A preliminary hint: establishing nāma-saṅkīrtana is the external cause of the Gaura-avatāra —*

102 The Lord descended and preached saṅkīrtana; but that, as I have indicated before, is an external reason.

The main and hidden cause: it is the very own work of Kṛṣṇa Himself, and only Śrī Dāmodara Svarūpa, Gaura's second self, knows it —

103 There is another, chief seed of the descent: it is the very own work of Kṛṣṇa, the crown of all who relish rasa.

104 That most hidden reason is threefold, and it was made known by Svarūpa Dāmodara.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The main cause of the Gaura-avatāra is extremely hidden, and it is threefold. Further on in the text it is stated in the verse beginning śrī-rādhāyāḥ praṇaya-mahimā.

105 Svarūpa Gosāñi is the Lord’s most intimate associate, and so he knows all these matters of the Lord.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Puruṣottama Bhaṭṭācārya lived in Navadvīpa. Even before Mahāprabhu took sannyāsa, he, wishing to take sannyāsa himself, went to Vārāṇasī and became a brahmacārī among the daṇḍī-sannyāsīs of the ten names. Then he came to be called “Śrī Dāmodara Svarūpa.” Afterward, without waiting for his sannyāsa to be completed, he came to the lotus feet of Śrī Mahāprabhu and stayed in Nīlācala for the rest of his life. He was always with Śrī Gaurasundara, singing songs of worship and the like that the Lord had taught, and so he constantly gave Him the greatest joy. Only by his mercy were the devotees able to grasp the hidden feelings of Śrī Prabhu's heart. In the pastimes of Vraja this great soul is Lalitā-devī, and therefore Rādhikā's second self. According to Kavi Karṇapūra's Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, he is Viśākhā-devī: “Viśākhā, who once taught Rādhā the arts in Vraja, is now Svarūpa Gosvāmī, who delights in her moods.” In the pastimes of Śrī Gaura, the second self of Gaurahari, the embodiment of Rādhā's bhāva, is Śrī Dāmodara Svarūpa.

*Gaurasundara is immersed in Rādhā's mahābhāva —*

106 The Lord’s heart is the very embodiment of Rādhikā’s mood, and in that mood joy and sorrow arise in Him incessantly.

Anubhāṣya.

The heart of Śrī Gaurasundara has a form full of Śrīmatī Rādhikā's bhāva. People of gross intelligence, busy gratifying the material senses, hear the word bhāva-mūrti, “embodiment of bhāva,” and cannot grasp the nature of a form made of bhāva. Devotees free from anarthas, in whom rati has awakened, are seen to be of five kinds when considered as āśrita-tattva. Rādhikā's bhāva is the highest and complete state of sweetness. That bhāva is of two kinds, rūḍha and adhirūḍha. The songs of the queens and the songs of the gopīs express these two bhāvas, rūḍha and adhirūḍha. What is meant here is Śrī Gaurasundara's adhirūḍha mahābhāva. When rules fall away, then, judged by eagerness (laulya), the adhirūḍha-bhāva of Dvārakā finds its culmination in the bhāva of Gokula. In Śrī Gaurasundara's heart there constantly arise a semblance of sorrow (duḥkhābhāsa) in vipralambha, separation from Kṛṣṇa, and the happiness of sambhoga, attaining Kṛṣṇa. Thus, passing beyond the reach of imagination, madhura-rasa is relished. There are people who do not understand how bhāva differs from its absence and who set up "adhirūḍha mahābhāva" on the ground of gratifying the material senses. They do not realize the āśrita-tattva in their own true nature. As long as his original nature has not unfolded, the unfortunate jīva does not know that Gaurasundara is maddened by the bhāva of the nāgarī, the beloved of Vraja. Seeing in Him an object for gratifying his own material senses, he takes Him for a "nāgara," a lover, and becomes guilty of the fault of rasābhāsa, a distorted rasa.

107 In His last pastimes the Lord was mad with separation from Kṛṣṇa: all His actions were bewildered, and He spoke always as in delirium.[12]

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Gaurahari, through the conduct of a siddha, displays the highest pinnacle of vipralambha-rasa, the rasa of separation. Those who hold to knowledge born of the senses therefore take His direct experiences for raving and for actions full of delusion. Foolish people devoted to the senses are always bound by the troubles of the external world; so the Object of service, in His spiritual form, is not drawn toward them. They think that just as the visible world makes them the center of enjoyment, so the transcendental acts of Śrī Gaurasundara must also belong to that world! Under the pretense of following, the doctrine called "Nadīyā-nāgarī," a perverted and wicked view that seeks to gratify the senses, is not the path shown by Śrī Gaurasundara and His followers. The adherents of this doctrine are materialists in search of enjoyment (jaḍa-bhoga-vādīs), and therefore enemies of Viṣṇu.

108 As Rādhikā felt on seeing Uddhava, so the Lord remained, intoxicated with that mood, day and night.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent Uddhava from Mathurā to the gopīs to bring them news of His well-being. On seeing Uddhava, Śrīmatī Rādhikā displayed a wondrous emotion.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent His friend Uddhava to Gokula, wishing to ease somewhat the longing of the gopīs and of His father and mother. On seeing Uddhava, Kṛṣṇa's friend, Śrīmatī Rādhikā expressed in many ways a hidden anger, full of many emotions and revealing Her intense, ultimate longing (utkaṇṭhā). Fully absorbed in Śrī Rādhā, Śrī Gaurasundara stayed intoxicated day and night with this māthura-bhāva, the mood of separation while Kṛṣṇa is in Mathurā. This is citra-jalpa-bhāva, the state of "varied talk." The Ujjvala-nīlamaṇi says: "When, on seeing the beloved's friend, [the heroine] utters talk full of many emotions, swelling with hidden anger and ending in intense longing, that is jalpa." For one who has taken shelter at the feet of Śrī Gaura, worship of Kṛṣṇa is precisely this long separation (vipralambha). Abundant separation is the cause of union (sambhoga). Not understanding this, many take union to be the very essence and fail to grasp the one thing needed: in the life of the sādhaka and of the siddha alike, the rasa of separation must be kindled.

The Lord reveals the feelings of His heart, and Svarūpa gives Him joy —

109 At night, holding Svarūpa by the neck, He spoke in delirium, and in His absorption He laid bare His own feelings.

110 Whatever mood arose in the Lord's heart, Dāmodara gave Him joy with a song or a verse that suited it.

111 There is no need to consider all this now; later I shall describe it in detail.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Later I shall describe this" — that is, in the Antya-līlā.

The three ages of Kṛṣṇa in Vraja —

112 Formerly in Vraja Kṛṣṇa had three ages — childhood, boyhood and youth — and youth was the most essential of them.

Kṛṣṇa's pastimes differ according to His age —

113 In the absorption of parental love He made His childhood fruitful, and with the host of His friends He made His boyhood fruitful.

*In the pastimes of kiśora everything finds its fulfillment —*

114 And with Rādhikā and the other gopīs He performed the rāsa dance and other pastimes, and tasted the very essence of rasa to His heart's content.

115 By the rāsa dance and other pastimes He made three things fruitful: His youth, Kāma (the god of love), and the whole world.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Up to five years of age is kaumāra, up to ten is paugaṇḍa, from eleven to sixteen is kaiśora, and after that comes yauvana (full youth). In kaumāra parental love (vātsalya) is manifest, in paugaṇḍa friendship (sakhya), and in kaiśora the rasa of amorous love (śṛṅgāra). Kāma is Kṛṣṇa, Manmatha (the god of love) Himself in person, who acts by His own will. In the age of kaiśora He performed the rāsa dance and other pastimes, and so He made fruitful the whole world and all three ages — bālya, paugaṇḍa and kaiśora.[31]

*(Viṣṇu Purāṇa 5.13.59)*

116 "Honouring His youth, Madhusūdana, the destroyer of all that is inauspicious, sported on autumn nights amid a host of jewel-like girls." (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 5.13.59)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa, free of everything inauspicious, enjoyed pastimes at night in the age of kaiśora, staying in the midst of women, and so paid special honor to that age. Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Consciousness, abides in the circle of Rādhā, full of mahābhāva, and of the gopīs, full of bhāva — He is the kūṭastha-tattva, the unchanging Truth at the center.

Anubhāṣya.

kṣapitāhitaḥ (He by whom everything inauspicious is destroyed, removed) saḥ api madhusūdanaḥ (He, Madhusūdana, Śrī Kṛṣṇa) kaiśoraka-vayaḥ (the age of kaiśora) mānayan (honoring, that is, making fruitful) strī-ratna-kūṭa-sthaḥ (staying amid the multitude of jewel-like women — the gopīs) kṣapāsu (on autumn nights) reme (enjoyed pastimes).

*(Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Dakṣiṇa-vibhāga 1.231)*

117 "By words that hinted boldly at the arts of love of the night before, He made Rādhikā close Her eyes in shyness before Her friends; then, drawing playful makarīs on Her breasts, He showed the utmost skill. So Hari, sporting in the bowers, makes His youth fruitful." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 2.1.231)[13]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

This Kṛṣṇa boldly spoke of the art of love of the previous night and so made Śrī Rādhikā all but close Her eyes in shame. Then He drew playful designs — bees and the like — on Her breasts and displayed special skill before Her friends. By such pastimes of rasa in the grove Hari makes the age of kaiśora fruitful.

Anubhāṣya.

Having described the marks of the dhīra-lalita hero, the author shows that Śrī Kṛṣṇacandra is a dhīra-lalita-nāyaka, the carefree and playful hero.

sūcita-śarvarī-rati-kalā-prāgalbhyayā (in which the boldness of [His] skill in the art of love that night is disclosed) vācā (by speech) sakhīnām agre (before Her friends) rādhikām (Rādhikā) vrīḍā-kuñcita-locanām (so that Her eyes closed in shame) viracayan (making) tad-vakṣo-ruha-citra-keli-makarī-pāṇḍitya-pāraṁ gataḥ (who has reached the summit of skill in drawing playful makarī designs on Śrī Rādhā's breasts; this is said in jest: as He drew, His hand trembled and the picture came out crooked; then, as if to correct the crooked lines and draw them straight, He touched Her breasts again and again; in private this is an occasion for samprayoga, one of the two kinds of sambhoga) asau hariḥ (this Hari, who enjoys pastimes in Vraja) kuñje vihāraṁ kalayan (performing pastimes in the grove) kaiśoram (the age of kaiśora) saphalī-karoti (makes fruitful).

118 “O sweet-eyed one, had this Hari and Rādhikā not descended in Mathurā, all creation would have been in vain — and above all the god of love.” (Vidagdha-mādhava, 7.3)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“O friend, if Hari and sweet-eyed Rādhikā had not appeared in Mathurā, the whole creation, and especially the creation of Kandarpa (the god of love), would have been fruitless.”

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Vṛndā-devī says to Paurṇamāsī:

he madhurākṣi (O lovely-eyed one), mathurāyām eṣaḥ hariḥ rādhikā ca (this Hari and Rādhikā in Mathurā) cet (if) na avātariṣyat (had not descended), tadā atra visṛṣṭiḥ (then the creation here, the making of the world) vṛthā abhaviṣyat (would have been in vain); viśeṣataḥ makarāṅkasya (and especially that of Kandarpa, the god of love) tu ([creation] would have been in vain)!

Three desires left unfulfilled in Kṛṣṇa's pastimes —

119–120 Thus formerly Kṛṣṇa, the abode of rasa, relished the very essence of rasa; yet three of His desires remained unfulfilled, though He tried to taste them.

(1) His first desire —

121 I shall explain His first desire. Kṛṣṇa says: “I am the source of rasa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Rasera nidāna: the root cause of rasa. Variant reading: rasera nidhāna, the treasury of rasa.

An inquiry into the power and depth of Rādhā's love —

122 I am full of complete bliss, the spiritual and complete Truth; yet the love of Rādhikā makes Me mad.

123 I do not know how much strength there is in Rādhā's love, by which She ever overwhelms Me.

124 Rādhikā is My teacher in love, and I am Her disciple, a dancer: She always makes Me dance new and unheard-of dances."

*(Govinda-līlāmṛta 8.77)*

125 " 'Where have you come from, Vṛndā, dear friend?' 'From the feet of Hari.' 'And where is He?' 'In the forest by Rādhā-kuṇḍa.' 'What is He doing there?' 'Learning to dance.' 'And who is His teacher?' 'Your own image, Rādhā: appearing in every tree and creeper, in every quarter of the sky, it wanders all around like a skilled dancer and makes Kṛṣṇa dance behind it.' " (Govinda-līlāmṛta, 8.77)[14]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Dear friend Vṛndā, where are you coming from?" — "O Rādhā, I am coming from Kṛṣṇa's feet." — "Where is Kṛṣṇa?" — "In Kuṇḍāraṇya (the forest by Rādhā-kuṇḍa)." — "What is He doing?" — "He is learning to dance." — "Who is His dancing teacher?" — "Your image. It has made every tree and creeper in every direction into Your image and, like a śailūṣī, a conjurer, it dances along, drawing Him after itself. Beside it Śrī Kṛṣṇa dances." This verse is made of questions and answers.

Anubhāṣya.

Within the midday pastimes of Śrī Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, Śrī Rādhā and Vṛndā exchange questions and answers:

he priya-sakhi vṛnde (O dear friend Vṛndā), tvaṁ kasmāt (where are you from)? (To Śrī Rādhikā's question where she has come from, Vṛndā replies:) hareḥ (of Bhagavān, the son of Yaśodā) pāda-mūlāt (from the feet). asau (He, Śrī Kṛṣṇa) kutaḥ (where)? (When Śrī Rādhā asks again, "Where?", Vṛndā replies:) kuṇḍāraṇye (in the grove near Rādhā-kuṇḍa). (Śrī Rādhā asks again:) iha ([He] here) kiṁ kurute (what is He doing)? (Vṛndā said:) nṛtya-śikṣām ([learning] to dance). (Rādhā said:) guruḥ kaḥ (who is the teacher)? (Vṛndā said:) prati-taru-latam (in every tree and creeper) dig-vidikṣu (in all ten directions) śailūṣī (a skilled dancer) iva sphurantī (appearing like) tvan-mūrtiḥ (Your image) tam

(Him, Kṛṣṇa) sva-paścāt paritaḥ (behind itself, everywhere) nartayantī (making Him dance) bhramati (moves about).

The love of Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā for each other: comparison and distinctions —

126 "The joy I feel in tasting My own love is great, but Rādhā's joy in tasting Her love is ten million times greater.

An explanation of the love of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa for each other — 127 As I am the shelter of mutually opposite qualities, so Rādhā's love is always full of opposite qualities.

Examples of the contradictory qualities of Rādhā's love —

128 Rādhā's love is all-pervading, with no room left to grow; yet it grows at every moment.

129 Nothing is greater than this love, and yet it is free of the pride that belongs to greatness.

130 Nothing is purer than this love, and yet its ways are ever contrary and crooked.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"I, Kṛṣṇa, am the shelter of mutually contradictory qualities. I am changeless yet act by My own will, all-pervading yet possessed of a beautiful form, impartial yet partial to My devotees, self-satisfied (ātmārāma) yet longing for My devotees' love, and so on. In the same way Rādhā's love is full of contradictory qualities: it is the highest mahābhāva yet always growing, full of the gravity of love yet without any deference, pure yet full of contrariness (vāmya) and the like."

*(Dāna-keli-kaumudī 2)*

131 "All glory to Rādhikā's love for Kṛṣṇa, the enemy of Mura! All-pervading, it grows at every moment; great, it is free of pride; again and again it grows more crooked, and yet it is pure." (Dāna-keli-kaumudī, 2)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Rādhikā's anurāga is vibhu, that is, it has reached the furthest limit, yet it is always growing; it is supremely exalted, yet it knows no deference; it is pure and spotless, yet again and again it takes crooked ways. May such anurāga of Rādhikā for Kṛṣṇa be glorious!

Anubhāṣya.

vibhuḥ (all-pervading) api sadā abhivṛddhim (increase on every side) kalayan (bearing), guruḥ api (though supreme) gaurava-caryayā vihīnaḥ (devoid of service out of deference, dākṣiṇya) (for it is born of madhu-sneha, affection sweet as honey and full of the feeling "He is mine"), muhuḥ (again and again) upacita-vakrimā (in which crookedness — cunning, the mark of contrariness — increases) api śuddhaḥ (yet pure, free of designations) rādhikānurāgaḥ (Śrī Rādhikā's anurāga) mura-dviṣi (for Murāri, Śrī Kṛṣṇa) jayati (stands supreme over all).

*Kṛṣṇa is the viṣaya of that love, Rādhikā its āśraya —*

132 Rādhikā is the supreme āśraya of that love — the one in whom it dwells; and I am only its viṣaya — the One toward whom it flows.

*The difference in the happiness of the viṣaya and the āśraya —*

133 The happiness I taste is that of the viṣaya; the joy of the āśraya is ten million times greater than Mine.

*Seeing the greater happiness of the āśraya, the viṣaya longs to become the āśraya —*

134 My mind runs after the happiness of the āśraya, but try as I may, I cannot taste it. What means can I find?

135 If ever I become the āśraya of this love, then I shall know its bliss."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One who loves is the āśraya, the abode, of love; one who is loved is its viṣaya, the object. In the science of rasa there are four kinds of ingredients: vibhāva, anubhāva, sāttvika and vyabhicārī. Vibhāva is of two kinds: ālambana, the support of the emotion, and uddīpana, that which awakens it. Ālambana in turn is of two kinds: viṣaya and āśraya. The āśraya of Rādhā's love is Rādhikā, and the one and only viṣaya of that love is Kṛṣṇa. “The happiness that I, Kṛṣṇa, relish is the happiness of the viṣaya. But the delight, or happiness, of the āśraya is millions of times greater than My happiness as viṣaya. Only Rādhikā relishes the happiness of the āśraya; I, as Kṛṣṇa, cannot relish it. Only if one day I become the āśraya of this love shall I experience that supreme bliss, the happiness of the āśraya. The longing to taste love as the āśraya tastes it — that is My desire.”

136 So Kṛṣṇa reflects, ever eager for wonder, and in His heart the longing for that love blazes ever higher.

(2) The second desire —

137 That is one. Now hear of another kind of longing. Seeing His own sweetness, Kṛṣṇa reflects:

Kṛṣṇa Himself is amazed and attracted by His own sweetness —

138 “Wondrous, endless and complete is My sweetness; in the three worlds no one finds its limit.

139 Through this love Rādhikā alone ever tastes all the nectar of My sweetness.

Śrī Rādhā's love is complete, yet it grows at every moment —

140 Though the mirror of Rādhā’s true love is spotless, its clearness grows at every moment.

141 My sweetness has no room to grow, and yet before this mirror it shines in ever new forms.

142 My sweetness and Rādhā’s love vie with each other; at every moment both grow, and neither is defeated.

Anubhāṣya.
Hoḍa kari: rivaling.

143 My sweetness is ever new, and devotees taste it each according to his own love.

144 When I see My own sweetness in a mirror or the like, a longing to taste it arises, but I cannot taste it.

To relish His own sweetness, He longs to take the form of Her who relishes it 145 And when I consider how I might taste it, My mind runs to become Rādhikā Herself.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The second desire is this. Kṛṣṇa's sweetness is wondrous, endless and unlimited. Rādhikā alone relishes this sweetness, through the love that fills Her as the āśraya. “The mirror of Rādhikā's pure love is spotless, yet its clarity increases at every moment. My sweetness is unlimited and so cannot increase — yet it does increase, and before the clear mirror of Rādhikā's love it shines in ever newer forms. Therefore My sweetness and Rādhā's love rival each other, each striving to surpass the other, and neither wants to yield. Seeing My own sweetness in the mirror of Rādhikā's love and in other such mirrors, I long to relish it. Out of that longing My mind runs to accept the svarūpa of Rādhikā.”

*(Lalita-mādhava 8.34)*

146 “What wondrous flood of My sweetness, never known before and surpassing all, appears here! Alas, seeing it, even I long with an eager heart to enjoy it, as Rādhikā does.” (Lalita-mādhava, 8.34)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Kṛṣṇa said: “Ah! Who is this excellent person (puruṣa) pictured here, never seen before, whose deep sweetness astonishes? Looking at Him, I am stirred at heart, and like Rādhikā I want to embrace Him impetuously.”

Anubhāṣya.

In Dvārakā, in Nava-Vṛndāvana, Śrī Kṛṣṇa sees His reflection in a wall of jewels and, beholding His own beauty, says:

aparikalita-pūrvaḥ (never experienced before) camatkāra-kārī (causing wonder) eṣaḥ garīyān (this most exalted) mama kaḥ (My indescribable) mādhurya-pūraḥ (flood of sweetness, a mass of beauty) sphurati (appears). ayam aham (I, Kṛṣṇa) api yam (it, this image in the reflection) prekṣya (seeing) rādhikā iva (like Rādhikā) lubdha-cetāḥ san (with a mind full of longing) sarabhasam (eagerly) upabhoktum (to enjoy) kāmaye (desire).

The power of Kṛṣṇa's sweetness and His efforts to relish it —

147 Kṛṣṇa's sweetness has a natural power: it makes all men and women restless, beginning with Kṛṣṇa Himself.

Anubhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa's sweetness by its very nature has the power to stir everyone: Kṛṣṇa Himself, the gopīs, Baladeva, Nārāyaṇa, Lakṣmī and all other living beings.

148 Heard of or seen, it draws every heart, and Kṛṣṇa Himself strives to taste it.

Kṛṣṇa's sweetness knows no worldly satiety — longing only grows —

149 Whoever drinks this nectar of sweetness finds his thirst never quenched; the thirst only grows without end.

150 Unsatisfied, he blames the Creator: "The unskilled Creator does not know how to create well!

151 He did not give me ten million eyes — he gave only two, and even those blink. How shall I see Kṛṣṇa?"

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.82.39)*

152 "At last, after long separation, the gopīs found their beloved Kṛṣṇa. Gazing at Him, they cursed the maker of their eyelids; then through their eyes they took Him into their hearts and embraced Him there to their fill. So they all attained a state that even perfected yogīs can hardly reach." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.82.39)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The gopīs attained Śrī Kṛṣṇa, whom they had longed for over many days, and as they gazed at Him they reproached the Creator who made the eyes blink. Through their eyes they all embraced Him to their hearts' content within the heart and attained the highest emotion, unattainable even for yogīs who meditate on Brahman.

Anubhāṣya.

After the cowherds met the Vṛṣṇis at Kurukṣetra, Śukadeva describes the feelings of the gopīs for Kṛṣṇa:

yat-prekṣaṇe (when seeing Śrī Kṛṣṇa) dṛśiṣu (on the eyes) pakṣma-kṛtam (the Creator who made the eyelashes, the hairs of the eyelids that obstruct the view) śapanti (they curse). ([All]) gopyaḥ (the gopīs) ([Him]) abhīṣṭam (Kṛṣṇa, their desired one) cirāt (after a long time, at Kurukṣetra) upalabhya (having attained), dṛgbhiḥ (through the eyes) hṛdī-kṛtam (brought into the heart) parirabhya (embracing), nitya-yujām (for yogīs who have reached the summit of yoga) api durāpam (hard to attain) tad-bhāvam (the state of concentrated supreme bliss) āpuḥ (attained).

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.31.15)*

153 "When by day You wander in the forest, a moment without You becomes an age for us. And as we gaze upon Your beautiful face framed in curling locks, we see what a fool was the maker of our eyelids." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.31.15)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The gopīs said: "O Kṛṣṇa, when You go to the forest by day, every instant (truṭi) in which we do not see Your beautiful face framed by curling locks becomes an entire yuga for us. And the Creator who made eyelids on our eyes, which gaze at Your face, we consider a fool."

Anubhāṣya.

When Kṛṣṇa disappeared during the rāsa dance, the gopīs sang in lament for Him:

yat (when) ahni (by day) bhavān (You) kānanam (to the forest, Vṛndāvana) aṭati (go), tadā tvām apaśyatām (then for [the living beings] who do not see You) truṭiḥ (even half a moment) yugāyate (seems to last a yuga). te (Your) kuṭila-kuntalam (framed by curling locks) śrī-mukham (beautiful face) udīkṣatām (of those looking up [at it]) ca dṛśām (of the eyes) pakṣma-kṛt (the Creator who made blinking) jaḍaḥ (a fool) eva (indeed).

The eyes of a fortunate soul find their purpose only in seeing Kṛṣṇa's form —

154 Without seeing Kṛṣṇa the eyes have no other fruit; whoever sees Kṛṣṇa is fortunate indeed.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.21.7)*

155 "O friends, we know no other fruit for the eyes than this: to drink in the faces of the two sons of Vraja's lord as They drive the cows into the forest with Their friends, playing Their flutes and casting loving glances." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.21.7)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The gopīs said: "O friends, when Nanda's two sons enter the forest with the cows, surrounded by Their friends, blessed are those who serve Their faces with their eyes: They play the flute and cast glances at those who love Them. Those who have eyes can gain nothing higher than this."

Anubhāṣya.

At the coming of autumn, the gopīs sing with Kṛṣṇa in mind:

he sakhyaḥ (O friends), vayasyaiḥ (with Their friends) paśūn anuviveśayatoḥ (leading the herds from forest to forest) vrajeśa-sutayoḥ (of the sons of the lord of Vraja, Rāma and Kṛṣṇa) anuveṇu-juṣṭam (playing the flute) anurakta-kaṭākṣa-mokṣam (casting tender sidelong glances) [the face] yaiḥ nipītam (by whom it was drunk) — that which they enjoyed — idam vai (this indeed) akṣaṇvatām (of those who have eyes) phalam (the fruit); param (anything else) na vidāmaḥ (we do not know).

*The women of Mathurā marvel at the good fortune of the gopīs —*

156 "What austerities did the gopīs perform, that with their eyes they drink His form — the essence of loveliness, unequalled and unsurpassed, perfect in itself, new at every moment, hard to attain, the sole abode of fame, beauty and majesty?" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.44.14)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The women of Mathurā said: "Ah, what austerity the gopīs must have performed! With their eyes they constantly drink the nectar of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's face. He is the sole abode of beauty, majesty and all fame; He is hard to attain, perfect by Himself, with none equal or superior to Him — the very essence of loveliness."

Anubhāṣya.

In Kaṁsa's arena in Mathurā, Rāma and Kṛṣṇa were wrestling with his wrestlers Muṣṭika and Cāṇūra. Seeing this, the assembled women say:

gopyaḥ kim tapaḥ acaran (what austerity did the gopīs perform), yat (since) amuṣya (of Śrī Kṛṣṇa) lāvaṇya-sāram (excelling all in loveliness) asamordhvam (that which has no equal or superior) ananya-siddham (perfect not through anything else — ornaments and the like — but by itself) anusavābhinavam (new at every moment) durāpam (hard to attain) yaśasaḥ śriyaḥ aiśvarasya (of fame, beauty and majesty) ekānta-dhāma (the sole abode) — rūpam (the form) — dṛgbhiḥ pibanti (they drink with their eyes).

157 Unprecedented is Kṛṣṇa's sweetness, and unprecedented its power: merely hearing of it, the mind trembles.

158 Kṛṣṇa's sweetness awakens longing in Kṛṣṇa Himself; He cannot taste it fully, and sorrow remains in His heart.

(3) The third desire —

159 So I have described the second reason. Now hear the nature of the third.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa longed to relish His own sweetness fully, with the love known to the āśraya, but He could not and was distressed. This is the second hidden reason why He accepted Rādhikā's emotion.

*Svarūpa Dāmodara alone is the original mahājana in the nectar of bhakti-rasa —*

160 This conclusion about rasa is most deeply hidden; Svarūpa Gosāñi alone knows it fully.

161 If anyone else knows it, he knows it from him, for he is the very heart of Caitanya Gosāñi.

*The definition of the gopīs' love*

162 The love of the gopīs is called rūḍha-bhāva. It is pure and spotless prema, never lust (kāma).

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"The love of the gopīs is called rūḍha-bhāva" — that is, the name of this prema is rūḍha-bhāva. For spotless prema cannot in truth be expressed by the word kāma (the desire to please one's own senses).

Anubhāṣya.

In the mahābhāva of the gopīs all the sāttvika-bhāvas blaze forth; therefore their love is called rūḍha-bhāva: "When the sāttvika [bhāvas] blaze forth, it is called rūḍha." Their love aims only at Kṛṣṇa's happiness and is therefore spotless. It cannot be called by the contemptible word kāma, which means enjoyment for someone other than Kṛṣṇa.

*The kāma and the prema of the gopīs are one and the same —*

163 "It is the prema of the cowherd women that became famed under the name kāma; and so even Uddhava and others dear to the Lord long for it." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 1.2.285)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

It became customary to call the pure love of the cowherd women "kāma." Even the devotees of Bhagavān — Uddhava and others — thirst for this love.

Anubhāṣya.

gopa-rāmāṇām (of the young women of Vraja) premā eva (the prema itself) kāmaḥ iti (as kāma) prathām (fame) agamat (attained); iti (therefore) uddhavādayaḥ api bhagavat-priyāḥ (even Uddhava and others dear to Bhagavān, that is, devotees who relish other rasas) etam (this prema) vāñchanti (desire).

*The nature, marks and difference of kāma and prema —*

164 Lust and love have different characteristics, as iron and gold differ in their very nature.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Iron and gold are entirely different by their very nature. So too kāma and prema: though they are almost of one kind, their characteristics differ.

*The definition of kāma and prema —*

165 The desire to please one's own senses is called lust (kāma); the wish to please Kṛṣṇa's senses bears the name of prema.

Anubhāṣya.

"When the bond of feeling between a young couple is in no way destroyed, even when there is cause for its destruction, it is called prema." When a cause for separation arises and yet the firm bond of feeling between two lovers is destroyed by nothing — that is called prema. The gopīs, the āśraya of love, are bound to Kṛṣṇa by a firm bond of feeling, exclusively and with their whole being. They are the model of renouncing one's own happiness, that is, kāma, and are intent only on the service that delights Kṛṣṇa. Thus one sees how, sacrificing their own happiness for Kṛṣṇa, they feel immense joy, and how firm the bond of their feeling is.

*The aim of kāma and the aim of prema —*

166 The aim of lust is only one's own enjoyment; the aim of love is only Kṛṣṇa's happiness, and so love is mighty.

The marks by which love for Kṛṣṇa is known —

167–169 Social custom and Vedic religion, the needs of the body and their duties, shame and restraint, bodily pleasure and the very core of their own happiness, the path of the noble (ārya-patha), so hard to give up, their own families, and all the chastisement and rebukes of their kin — giving up all this, they worship Kṛṣṇa and serve Him with love for His happiness alone.[15]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

A desire whose aim is one's own enjoyment is called kāma. The Vedas speak of such desires with the words lokaiṣaṇā (the craving for worldly recognition), putraiṣaṇā (the craving for offspring), vittaiṣaṇā (the craving for wealth) and the like. These make up the following: loka-dharma (social custom), veda-dharma (Vedic duty), deha-dharma (the needs of the body), karma, shame, composure, bodily happiness, one's own happiness in the form of liberation and so on, the path of the Āryans, affection for one's family, and fear of punishment and reproach from one's relatives. All this is kāma, the desire to please one's own senses: in all these activities what drives one is the wish to gratify one's own senses. Desires that follow the awareness “I am a servant of Kṛṣṇa” can be the desire to please Kṛṣṇa's senses. But all desires born of the notion “I am the enjoyer of the fruits” are desires of kāma.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The words “giving up everything” do not counsel abandoning the activities of body, mind and so on. If the activities of body and mind too are moved by the awareness “I am a servant of Kṛṣṇa,” that is not kāma either.

170 This is called firm attachment (anurāga) to Kṛṣṇa: it is as clean as washed cloth without a single stain.

*The difference between kāma and prema —*

171 Therefore there is a vast difference between lust and love: lust is blind darkness, and love the spotless sun.

Kāma* — and the gopīs' love for Kṛṣṇa —*

172 Therefore in the gopīs there is not even a trace of lust; their bond with Kṛṣṇa is for His happiness alone.

*How the deep love of the gopīs for Kṛṣṇa shows itself —*

173 "O dear one, Your tender lotus feet we place gently on our hard breasts, afraid to hurt them — and with those feet You wander through the forest! Are they not hurt by the sharp pebbles? You are our very life, and our minds are reeling." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.31.19)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The gopīs said: "O beloved, we gently hold Your tender lotus feet on our hard breasts. With these feet You now wander through the forest, and they must surely hurt, wounded by tiny stones and the like. You are our very life, and so our hearts are anxious for You."

Anubhāṣya.

When Kṛṣṇa disappeared during the rāsa dance, the gopīs sang in lament for Him:

he priya (O beloved), te (Your) yat sujāta-caraṇāmburuham (tender lotus feet) karkaśeṣu (on hard) staneṣu (breasts) bhītāḥ (afraid that the touch might hurt them) satyaḥ ([we]) śanaiḥ (carefully) dadhīmahi (hold), tena (with those feet) aṭavīm (through the forest) aṭasi (You wander); tat (then [Your lotus feet]) kūrpādibhiḥ (by tiny splinters of stone) kiṁ svit na vyathate (are they not pained?) — iti (so [thinking]) bhavad-āyuṣām (of those whose life is You) naḥ (our) dhīḥ (mind) bhramati (loses its calm).

*The pure love of the gopīs for Kṛṣṇa —*

174 The gopīs give no thought to their own happiness or sorrow; all they do is for Kṛṣṇa's happiness.

175 For Kṛṣṇa they have given up everything else, and their pure attachment is for His happiness alone.

*Kṛṣṇa, bound by the gopīs' love, asks forgiveness for having disappeared —*

176 "O tender ones! For My sake you have abandoned the laws of society and of the Vedas, and even your kinsmen. I disappeared only that your love for Me might grow still stronger — yet even unseen I went on loving you. So, beloved ones, do not be displeased with Him who is dear to you." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.32.21)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"O gopīs, for My sake you gave up social custom, Vedic duty and all your relatives. Still, I disappeared so that your attachment to Me might grow even stronger. O beloved ones, I am only trying to please you — do not blame Me."

Anubhāṣya.

Having returned to the place of the rāsa dance and heard the gopīs, Kṛṣṇa says:

he priyāḥ abalāḥ (O beloved, tender women), evam (thus) mad-arthojjhita-loka-veda-svānām (who for My sake, to attain Me, have abandoned loka — worldly duties and the like — veda — duties for the next world — and sva — your kin and family; [you] for whom Kṛṣṇa is the only life) vaḥ (your) mayi anuvṛttaye (so that your attachment to Me might increase, like that of other devotees with the marks described) parokṣam (so that you did not see Me) bhajatā (by Me, who was doing you good) mayā (by Me) tirohitam hi ([My presence] was hidden); tat (therefore) priyam (beloved) mā (Me) asūyitum (to look on with reproach, finding fault) na arhatha (you ought not).

Kṛṣṇa is attained differently according to the kinds of pure devotion —

177 Kṛṣṇa has a promise from of old: as one worships Him, so does He reciprocate.

*(Bhagavad-gītā 4.11)*

178 "As people surrender to Me, so do I reward them. O Pārtha, all men follow My path in every way." (Bhagavad-gītā, 4.11)[16]

Anubhāṣya.

See Ādi 4.20.

*Kṛṣṇa's unpayable debt to the gopīs' love —*

179 That promise was broken by the gopīs' worship, and the proof is in Kṛṣṇa's own words:

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.32.22)*

180 "O gopīs, your union with Me is faultless. Even in a lifetime of the gods I could not repay you for what you have done: you cut the fetters of home, so hard to break, and came to Me. So let your own good deed be your reward." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.32.22)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"O gopīs, your union with Me is spotless. Even in many lifetimes I could not fulfill My duty to you by good deeds of My own, for you completely broke the hardest chains of household life and went in search of Me. I am unable to repay My debt to you. So let your own deeds be your reward."

Anubhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa had disappeared, and the gopīs, unable to see Him, sang in lament at the separation. Hearing their song, Kṛṣṇa appeared and consoles them thus:

niravadya-saṁyujām (whose union [with Me] is faultless — guileless and complete) vaḥ (your) sva-sādhu-kṛtyam (own extraordinary good deed) aham (I) vibudhāyuṣā api (even in the lifetime of the gods) na pāraye (am unable [to repay]). yāḥ (you who) durjaya-geha-śṛṅkhalāḥ (the unbreakable chains of home) saṁvṛścya (cutting completely) mā (Me) abhajan (worshiped) — tāsām vaḥ eva (by your own) sādhunā (good deed) tat (that good deed of yours) pratiyātu (let it be repaid).

*Even when the gopīs bring happiness to themselves, they seek only Kṛṣṇa's happiness —*

181 And if we see that the gopīs care for their own bodies, know for certain that this too is for Kṛṣṇa.

182 "This body I have offered to Kṛṣṇa. It is His property, meant for His delight.

183 Seeing and touching this body gives Kṛṣṇa pleasure.” For this reason they cleanse and adorn their bodies.

*Even in adorning their bodies, the gopīs aim only to please Kṛṣṇa —*

184 “O Pārtha, the gopīs tend even their own bodies, for they regard them as Mine. There is no greater vessel of My secret love than they.” (Ādi Purāṇa; Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Uttara-khaṇḍa, 40)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The gopīs take care of their bodies, considering them meant for Kṛṣṇa's enjoyment. “O Pārtha, there is no one who is a greater vessel of My love than these gopīs.”

Anubhāṣya.

he pārtha (O Pārtha), yāḥ gopyaḥ (those gopīs who) nijāṅgam api (even their own bodies) mama iti (as “Mine,” that is, thinking, “This body has been given to the Beloved; it belongs to Bhagavān”) samupāsate (adorn with ornaments and the like) — tābhyaḥ (than those gopīs) param (other) me (My) nigūḍha-prema-bhājanam (vessel of hidden love) (there is none).

*The gopīs' happiness in service is millions of times greater than Kṛṣṇa's —*

185 There is another wondrous trait of the gopīs’ love, whose power lies beyond the reach of the intellect.

186 When the gopīs see Kṛṣṇa, they have no desire for happiness, and yet their happiness grows ten million times.

187 The joy Kṛṣṇa feels on seeing the gopīs — the gopīs taste ten million times more.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The gopīs have no desire for their own happiness. Still, when they see Kṛṣṇa, they relish a happiness millions of times greater than the happiness Kṛṣṇa feels on seeing the gopīs.

188 They have no concern for their own happiness, and still their happiness grows — here is a contradiction.

189 I see only one solution to this contradiction: the gopīs' happiness finds its fulfilment in Kṛṣṇa's happiness.[17]

190 On seeing the gopīs Kṛṣṇa's delight grows, and His sweetness, which has no equal, grows too.

191 "On seeing me Kṛṣṇa felt such happiness!" — with this happiness the gopīs' faces and bodies blossom.

192 The more Kṛṣṇa's beauty grows on seeing the gopīs' beauty, the more the gopīs' beauty grows on seeing His.

193 So a contest arises between them; both grow together, and neither turns away.

*The gopīs are happy in Kṛṣṇa's happiness —*

194 But Kṛṣṇa's happiness comes from the gopīs' beauty and virtues, and the gopīs' happiness grows by His happiness.

*The gopīs' love increases Kṛṣṇa's happiness — therefore it is not kāma —*

195 Thus their happiness nourishes Kṛṣṇa's happiness, and for this reason there is no fault of lust in the gopīs' love.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Someone may perhaps reproach the gopīs and call "kāma" the happiness they feel on seeing Kṛṣṇa. But in the gopīs' minds the feeling is this: "If Kṛṣṇa sees that we are happy looking at Him, His happiness will become still fuller." So the ultimate reason the gopīs attain happiness is the desire to please Kṛṣṇa's senses. Therefore it has no taint of kāma, the desire to please one's own senses.

*(Stava-mālā, Keśavāṣṭaka 8)*

196 "I worship Keśava, returning victorious from the forest to Vraja. Rows of beautiful girls come out on the road to worship Him with hundreds of dancing side-glances mingled with budding smiles, and the corners of His eyes, like bees, wander over the flower-clusters of their breasts." (Stava-mālā, Keśavāṣṭaka, 8)[18]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I worship Keśava, who is returning from the forest to Vraja. The beauties of Vraja honored Him on the road with hundreds of playful glances and gentle smiles. And the corners of His eyes, like bees, flit over the breasts of those gopīs, which are like clusters of flowers.

Anubhāṣya.

ābhiḥ sundarī-tatibhiḥ (by these rows of beauties who enjoy pastimes in Vraja) upetya (having climbed onto the rooftops) pathi (on the road) smitāṅkura-karambitaiḥ (mixed with budding gentle smiles) naṭad-apāṅga-bhaṅgī-śataiḥ (with hundreds of curves of dancing sidelong glances) abhyarcitam (worshiped on every side) stana-stavaka-sañcaran-nayana-cañcarīkāñcalam (Him the corners of whose eyes, like bees, flit over breasts that are like clusters of flowers) vipina-deśataḥ (from the forest — in the afternoon, returning from the pastures) vraje (into Vraja, into Nandīśvara) vijayinam (entering in triumph) keśavam (Keśava, Kṛṣṇa) bhaje (I worship).

*The natural mark of the gopīs' love —*

197 There is another natural sign of the gopīs' love, which shows that it has no trace of lust.

*The gopīs' love increases Kṛṣṇa's sweetness —*

198 The gopīs' love nourishes Kṛṣṇa's sweetness, and that sweetness in turn makes their love grow, to their great delight.

*The servant, the āśraya, finds pure joy only in the joy of the viṣaya, the*

One who is served —

199 The bliss of the āśraya of love lies in the bliss of its viṣaya; there is no connection with the desire for one’s own happiness.

The devotee's joy lies in Bhagavān's joy; such joy is pure and spotless —

200 Wherever love is unconditional, this is the law: the joy of the āśraya lies in the happiness of the viṣaya.

During service to Kṛṣṇa, gratifying one's own senses is contemptible and must be cast far away —

201 If the bliss of one’s own love hinders the bliss of serving Kṛṣṇa, the devotee is filled with great anger at that bliss.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The gopīs, the āśraya of love, delight in the delight of Kṛṣṇa, its viṣaya. In this abundance of joy there is no connection at all with a desire for their own happiness. Wherever love is free of all designations, you will see this very law: the āśraya of love is happy with the happiness of its viṣaya. You may, however, say: where one's own bliss of love arises, there will surely be an obstacle to the bliss of serving Kṛṣṇa. That is why, when a joy arises that hinders the bliss of service, the devotee becomes greatly angry.

202 “Dāruka did not welcome the bliss of love that brought on a stupor of his body, for it put no small obstacle in the way of his fanning Kṛṣṇa, the enemy of Kaṁsa.” (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 3.2.62)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

While fanning Śrī Kṛṣṇa with a cāmara, Dāruka understood that the stupor of the body caused by the bliss of love was an obstacle to service, and he did not welcome that bliss.

Anubhāṣya.

yena (by which, that is, by the bliss of love) kaṁsārāteḥ (of Kṛṣṇa) vījane (in fanning, in the service of the cāmara) sākṣāt akṣodīyān (directly, no small) antarāyaḥ (obstacle) vyadhāyi (was created) — dārukaḥ (Dāruka, Śrī Kṛṣṇa's charioteer) aṅga-stambhārambham (the stiffening of the limbs, the stupor of the body) uttuṅgayantam (producing) tam premānandam (that bliss of love, worthy to be experienced for oneself) na abhyanandat (did not welcome: he did not desire it at all, since it was not favorable [to service]).

*(Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Dakṣiṇa-vibhāga 3.54)*

203 "The lotus-eyed Rādhikā loudly condemned the bliss that poured floods of tears from Her eyes and kept Her from seeing Govinda." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 2.3.54)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa's lotus-eyed beloved bitterly reproached the bliss that poured from her eyes as tears and kept her from seeing Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

aravinda-vilocanā (lotus-eyed Rādhikā) govinda-prekṣaṇākṣepi-bāṣpa-pūrābhivarṣiṇam (which by its nature pours down floods of tears that hinder the sight of Govinda) ānandam (bliss) uccaiḥ (strongly) anindat (reproached).

Without devotion to Kṛṣṇa, even liberation is repugnant to a pure devotee —

204 And pure devotees, without loving service to Kṛṣṇa, will not accept sālokya and the other liberations for their own happiness.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

See this too: without loving service to Kṛṣṇa a pure devotee will never accept even liberation — sālokya and the others — if it brings happiness to himself.

*Only devotion to Kṛṣṇa — causeless and uninterrupted — is beyond the guṇas —*

205 "Merely by hearing of My qualities the mind flows unbroken toward Me, who dwell in all hearts, as the waters of the Gaṅgā flow into the ocean." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.29.11)

206 “Such is the mark of bhakti-yoga beyond the guṇas (nirguṇa): devotion to the Supreme Person that is unmotivated and uninterrupted.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.29.12)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Simply by hearing of My qualities, the mind flows toward Me, who dwell in all hearts, unbroken, like the waters of the Gaṅgā flowing into the ocean. This state is the mark of nirguṇa bhakti-yoga (bhakti-yoga free of the guṇas). Such devotion to Me, the Puruṣottama, is causeless and uninterrupted.” Causeless (ahaitukī) means it has no cause; it is perfect in itself. Uninterrupted (avyavahitā) means it has no obstacles and no search for incidental fruits.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Kapiladeva says to His mother Devahūti:

mad-guṇa-śruti-mātreṇa (simply by hearing of My qualities) sarva-guhāśaye (who dwell in all hearts) mayi (toward Me), ambudhau (into the ocean) gaṅgāmbhasaḥ yathā (as the waters of the Gaṅgā), avicchinnā (unobstructed: such that no other object can break it) mano-gatiḥ (the movement of the mind); puruṣottame (toward the Puruṣottama) yā ahaitukī (devotion free of the search for fruits) avyavahitā (free of such obstacles as craving for the body's comforts, for wealth, for popularity, godlessness and the like) bhaktiḥ (devotion) — sā (that) nirguṇasya (beyond the three guṇas, directed to Bhagavān) bhakti-yogasya (of bhakti-yoga) lakṣaṇam (the mark) udāhṛtam hi (is indeed declared).

207 “My devotees accept nothing but service to Me — not even when they are offered residence in My world, opulence equal to Mine, nearness to Me, a form like Mine, or even oneness with Me.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.29.13)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Even if they are offered sālokya (residence in Vaikuṇṭha), sārṣṭi (equal majesty and wealth), sāmīpya (nearness), sārūpya (a four-armed form) and ekatva (sāyujya, merging), the devotees do not accept them: apart from transcendental service to Me, they have nothing to ask for.”

Anubhāṣya.

janāḥ (the servants of Hari) mat-sevanam vinā (without service to Me, that is, giving up worship of Me) dīyamānam (offered) sālokya (living with Me in the same world) sārṣṭi (equal majesty) sāmīpya (dwelling nearby) sārūpya (the same form) ekatvam uta (and even sāyujya) na gṛhṇanti (do not accept, do not welcome).

Not to speak of perishable enjoyments — a devotee does not desire even liberation and the like —

208 "Fulfilled by serving Me, My devotees do not desire even the four kinds of liberation — sālokya, sārūpya, sāmīpya and sārṣṭi — that such service brings them of itself. How then would they seek worldly pleasures, or merging in Brahman? For all that is swept away by time." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 9.4.67)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"By serving Me they attain the four kinds of liberation — sālokya and the rest — of their own accord. Yet the pure devotee, fulfilled by service to Me, does not accept even these. Why then would he desire the enjoyments of māyā and sāyujya-mukti, which time very quickly destroys?" In sāyujya-mukti the very existence of the jīva falls into the jaws of time. Therefore neither worldly enjoyment (bhukti) nor sāyujya-mukti is lasting.

Anubhāṣya.

Describing the qualities of devotees like Ambarīṣa, Śrī Bhagavān says to Durvāsā:

sevayā pūrṇāḥ te (those devotees, fulfilled by service) mat-sevayā pratītam (attained by service to Me) api sālokyādi-catuṣṭayam (even the four [kinds of liberation] — sālokya and the others) na icchanti (do not desire); anyat (anything else — the heavenly planets and the like) kāla-viplutam (which in time is doomed to perish) — kutaḥ (what to speak of).

*A description of the gopīs' love —*

209 The natural love of the gopīs is free of any trace of lust; it is spotless, radiant and pure, like molten gold.

*The relationship of the gopīs with Kṛṣṇa*

210 The gopīs are Kṛṣṇa's helpers, teachers, friends and beloveds; they are His dear disciples, companions and servants.

*Kṛṣṇa Himself describes His bond with the gopīs —*

211 "Helpers, teachers, disciples, servants, friends and beloveds — truly I tell you, Pārtha, what are the gopīs not to Me?" (Ādi Purāṇa)[19]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"The gopīs are everything to Me. They are My helpers, that is, My beloveds; they love Me as a guru does; they serve Me as disciples; they are fit for My enjoyment; they love Me as friends, and they behave toward Me as wives."

Anubhāṣya.
he pārtha (O Pārtha), te (to you) aham satyam (the truth, on oath) vadāmi (I speak): me (My) sahāyāḥ (helpers in the rāsa dance and other pastimes) guravaḥ (teachers in the science of love and so on) śiṣyāḥ (disciples, always intent on carrying out My orders) bhujiṣyāḥ (serving Me like maidservants) bāndhavāḥ (loving Me like friends) striyaḥ (desired by Me as one's own wives) — ([therefore]) gopyaḥ me kiṁ na bhavanti (what are the gopīs not to Me)? (That is, they are My all in all.)

212 The gopīs know the desires of Kṛṣṇa's heart, the art of loving service, and all that their Beloved longs for.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Iṣṭa-samīhita: desired actions.

*(Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Uttara-khaṇḍa 39; words of the Ādi Purāṇa)*

213 "O Pārtha, My greatness, My worship, what I long for and what My mind intends — these the gopīs know in truth; others do not." (Ādi Purāṇa; Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Uttara-khaṇḍa, 39)[20]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“My greatness, service to Me, reverence for Me and the feelings of My mind are known only to the gopīs. O Pārtha, no one else truly knows all this.”

Anubhāṣya.

he pārtha (O Pārtha), gopikāḥ (the gopīs) man-māhātmyam (My greatness) mat-saparyām (service to Me) mac-chraddhām (what I desire) man-mano-gatam (the intentions of My mind) tattvataḥ (in truth, as they are) jānanti (know) (, but other devotees do not know).

*Śrī Rādhikā is the best of all the gopīs —*

214 Among those gopīs the best is Rādhikā; in beauty, virtues, good fortune and love She surpasses all.

*(Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Uttara-khaṇḍa 45; words of the Padma Purāṇa)*

215 “As Rādhā is dear to Viṣṇu, so is Her pond dear to Him; among all the gopīs She alone is His most beloved.” (Padma Purāṇa; Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Uttara-khaṇḍa, 45)[21]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

As Rādhā is dear to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, so is Rādhā-kuṇḍa dear to Him. Of all the gopīs, Kṛṣṇa loves Rādhā most.

Anubhāṣya.

viṣṇoḥ (to Kṛṣṇa) rādhā yathā priyā (as Rādhā is dear), tasyāḥ (Rādhā's) kuṇḍam tathā priyam (so dear is Her kuṇḍa). sarva-gopīṣu sā (among all the gopīs She, Śrī Rādhikā,) ekā eva (alone) viṣṇoḥ atyanta-vallabhā (is most beloved of Viṣṇu — the dearest of all).

The best of places is Vṛndāvana, the best of devotees is Śrī Rādhā —

216 “O Pārtha, in the three worlds the earth is blessed, for there is the town of Vṛndāvana; and there the gopīs are blessed, for among them is she who is called Rādhā — My beloved.” (Ādi Purāṇa; Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Uttara-khaṇḍa, 46)

Anubhāṣya.

he pārtha (O Pārtha), trailokye (in the three worlds — Bhūr, Bhuvar and Svar) pṛthivī dhanyā (blessed is the earth), yatra (where, on earth,) vṛndāvanam purī (there is the abode called Vṛndāvana). tatra api (there, in Vṛndāvana,) gopikāḥ ([blessed are] the gopīs), yatra mama rādhābhidhā (among whom is My [gopī] named Rādhā).

*In madhura-rasa the principal pastimes are with Śrī Rādhā; everything else only serves them —*

217 It is play with Rādhā that makes rasa grow; all the other gopīs only serve that rasa.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Rādhikā is Śrī Kṛṣṇa's all in all. The other gopīs are only what serves the rasa: they increase the relish of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's pastimes with Rādhā.

"The lovely-browed girls whose playful movements attract Mādhava from every side are the friends of the queen of Vṛndāvana; they are held to be of five kinds: sakhīs, nitya-sakhīs, prāṇa-sakhīs, priya-sakhīs and the celebrated parama-preṣṭha-sakhīs… Though their love for the Two reaches the highest limit, sometimes it seems greater for the One, sometimes for the Other… A sakhī fully unfolds the loving pastimes [of the Divine Couple]."

The lovely gopīs, able to attract Śrī Kṛṣṇa completely by actions born of eager loving desire, are the friends of Śrī Rādhikā, the queen of Vṛndāvana, and are of five kinds: sakhī, nitya-sakhī, prāṇa-sakhī, priya-sakhī and parama-preṣṭha-sakhī. Out of supreme love the eight parama-preṣṭha-sakhīs sometimes take Śrī Kṛṣṇa's side during a lovers' quarrel (māna), and sometimes, when Rādhā is khaṇḍitā (offended), they take Śrī Rādhā's side. Showing affection to one and opposition to the other, they increase the rasa.

Rādhā is the dearest to Kṛṣṇa —

218 Rādhā is Kṛṣṇa's beloved, the treasure of His life; without Her the gopīs cannot be the cause of His happiness.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Because Vṛndāvana-dhāma descended to the earth, the three worlds are blessed. Among them the gopīs are blessed, for among them is the gopī named Rādhā, who is very dear to Me.[32]

Without Rādhikā the other gopīs cannot be the cause of Kṛṣṇa's happiness.

*(Gīta-govinda 3.1)*

219 "Placing Rādhā in His heart — the chain that bound His desire for the very essence of the rāsa — Kṛṣṇa, the enemy of Kaṁsa, left the other beauties of Vraja." (Gīta-govinda, 3.1)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Kṛṣṇa, the enemy of Kaṁsa, took into His heart Rādhā, who was bound by the desire for the rāsa-līlā, the perfect essence of all, and went away, leaving the other beauties of Vraja.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Kṛṣṇa left the place of the rāsa and went in search of Rādhā, the chief shelter of the rāsa. On this occasion Śrī Jayadeva says:

kaṁsāriḥ (Śrī Kṛṣṇa) api saṁsāra-vāsanā-baddha-śṛṅkhalām (Her who, bound by the desire for the rāsa-līlā — saṁ-sāra, the perfect essence [of all] — became a chain and fetter to bind [Him] more firmly; Rādhā, the supreme shelter of the rāsa pastimes) rādhām (Rādhā) hṛdaye ādhāya (placing in His heart — ā means "fully") vraja-sundarīḥ (the beauties of Vraja — all the cowherd women) tatyāja (left).

*The principal aim — fulfilling the three desires in Rādhā's emotion; the secondary — preaching the holy name and prema —*

220 Taking that mood of Rādhā, Caitanya descended and preached the religion of the age — the holy name and divine love.

Anubhāṣya.
"That emotion of Rādhā." Rādhā is Śrīmatī Gāndharvikā, the highest of all, Kṛṣṇa's all in all, the āśraya of love. Her bhāva is the disposition of the heart given wholly and exclusively to the service of Kṛṣṇa alone.

221 In that mood He fulfilled His own desires; this desire was the root cause of His descent.

*The son of Nanda, the embodiment of the rasa of union, is Gaura, the embodiment of the rasa of separation —*

222 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Gosāñi is the son of the king of Vraja — Kṛṣṇa, a form full of rasa, śṛṅgāra in person.

The Relisher descends, taking the emotion and luster of Her whom He relished —

223 He descended to taste that rasa, and along the way He spread all the rasas.

Kṛṣṇa's eternal pastimes with the girls of Vraja —

224 "O friend, see how Hari sports in spring! Delighting all and giving them bliss, with limbs dark and tender as a row of blue lotuses He brings a festival to the god of love; freely embraced on every side by the beauties of Vraja, He is, as it were, śṛṅgāra embodied, enchanted Himself." (Gīta-govinda, 1.11)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O friend, Śrī Kṛṣṇa is śṛṅgāra personified. He delights the world with the beauty of His body, and with His hands, feet and other limbs, lovely and tender as blue lotuses, He awakens in the hearts of the girls of Vraja the festival of Kandarpa. In spring He plays freely with the beauties of Vraja, and they embrace Him.

Anubhāṣya.

he sakhi (O friend), anurañjanena (by delighting) viśveṣām (of all the cowherd women) ānandam janayan (producing bliss), indīvara-śreṇī-śyāmala-komalaiḥ (dark and tender, like many blue lotuses) aṅgaiḥ (with His limbs) anaṅgotsavam upanayan (bringing the festival of Anaṅga, the god of love), svacchandam (freely, without restraint) vraja-sundarībhiḥ abhitaḥ pratyaṅgam āliṅgitaḥ (embraced by the beauties of Vraja on every side, limb by limb) mugdhaḥ hariḥ (enchanted Hari) madhau (in spring) mūrtimān śṛṅgāraḥ iva (like śṛṅgāra personified) krīḍati (plays).

*In the avatāra of Gaura, Kṛṣṇa, the treasury of rasa, relishes in every way* *the rasa of the gopīs' love —*

225 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Gosāñi is the abode of rasa, and He tasted rasa in countless special ways.

*Only a servant of Caitanya, sheltered by the cit-śakti, knows the secret of Gaura's avatāra —*

226 By this means He inaugurated the religion of the age of Kali. Caitanya's servants know the heart of all this.

Obeisance to the devotees of Gaura —

227–228 With devotion I hold on my head the feet of Advaita Ācārya, Nityānanda, Śrīnivāsa, Gadādhara, Dāmodara, Murāri, Haridāsa and all the other devotees of Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa.

So far, a general description of the sixth verse; now, a detailed explanation

229 So I have given an outline of the sixth verse. Now hear the meaning of the root verse; I shall reveal it.

(A verse from the diary of Śrī Svarūpa Gosvāmī)

230 " 'What is the greatness of Śrī Rādhā's love? What is My own wondrous sweetness, which She alone tastes through that love? And what is the happiness She feels in experiencing Me?' Longing to know this, the moon Hari, rich with Her sentiment, was born from the ocean of Śacī's womb." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)[22]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"What is the glory of Śrī Rādhā's love? What is My wondrous sweetness that Śrī Rādhā relishes? And what happiness does Śrī Rādhā feel in experiencing My sweetness?" When Śrī Kṛṣṇa was seized by the longing to know these three things, He, like the moon, took birth from the ocean of Śacī's womb.

Anubhāṣya.

śrī-rādhāyāḥ (of Śrī Rādhā, the daughter of Vṛṣabhānu) praṇaya-mahimā (the greatness of love) vā kīdṛśaḥ (what is it like), anayā (by Rādhā) madīyaḥ adbhuta-madhurimā (My wondrous sweetness — an unprecedented fullness of sweetness) yena (by that love) kīdṛśaḥ vā āsvādyaḥ (how is it relished), mad-anubhavataḥ (from experiencing Me) asyāḥ (Śrī Rādhā's) saukhyam kīdṛśam vā (what is the happiness) — iti lobhāt (out of longing [to know] this) tad-bhāvāḍhyaḥ (rich with Her emotion) śacī-garbha-sindhau (in the ocean of mother Śacī's womb) harīnduḥ (Kṛṣṇacandra, the moon Hari) samajani (appeared).

*Though it is hidden, it is described for the sake of devotees who know the taste of rasa —*

231 All these conclusions are hidden, and it is not fitting to speak them; yet if I do not speak, no one will find their end.

Anubhāṣya.

The hidden conclusions about the avatāra of Śrī Gaura are the cherished desire of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's heart. It is not fitting to reveal them to the world, and listeners in this world are not qualified for them. Yet if this is not told, the jīva will never grasp their limit by his own efforts.

232 So I shall speak a little, keeping the secret veiled: devotees who relish rasa will understand, and fools will not.

*Only a servant of Śrī Guru and Gaurāṅga is qualified for the conclusions about *rasa

233 Whoever holds Caitanya and Nityānanda in his heart will find bliss in these conclusions.

234 All these conclusions are like the young shoots of the mango tree, ever dear to the cuckoos — the devotees.

235 The non-devotee camels cannot enter here, and so my heart feels a special joy.

Anubhāṣya.

These words delight only the devotees of Gaura and Nityānanda. The devotees of Gaura are like cuckoos, and the siddhānta is like young mango shoots. As the cuckoo prizes mango shoots, so the devotees find the highest joy in these conclusions. The camel, however, does not want mango shoots and the like — it wants thorns that tear its tongue. So too the nonbelieving camels — jñānīs, karmīs and false devotees with other desires (anyābhilāṣīs) — build specious arguments (kutarka) against these conclusions.

The ill will of nonbelievers is to be feared, but their ignorance is a joy —

236 If those for whom I fear to speak do not understand — what happiness in the three worlds is greater than this?

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Still, there is joy in my heart: the nonbelievers who are to be feared cannot enter this book. So they will not read it — will not understand it. What happiness could be greater?

237 Therefore, bowing to the devotees, I speak without fear; may they be filled with wonder.

*Before the sweetness of hlādinī, Kṛṣṇa's sweetness yields and is defeated —*

238 Once Kṛṣṇa reflected within Himself: “All call Me the embodiment of complete bliss and rasa.[23]

239 The three worlds are gladdened by Me — but who is there to give joy to Me?

240 Only one whose virtues are hundreds upon hundreds of times greater than Mine could gladden My heart.

241 One greater than Me in virtues is impossible in the world — yet in Rādhā alone I find it.

242–243 Though My beauty surpasses ten million Cupids, though My sweetness is unequalled and unsurpassed, and though My form satisfies the three worlds — My eyes find their refreshment in seeing Rādhā.

Anubhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa is Madana-mohana: Kṛṣṇa's sweetness can eclipse the matchless beauty of millions of Kāmadevas. Nothing has sweetness equal to Kṛṣṇa's form or greater than it. No one of beauty can compare with Kṛṣṇa.

244 The song of My flute attracts the three worlds, but My ears are captured by Rādhā’s words.[24]

245 Though My fragrance perfumes the whole world, the scent of Rādhā’s body steals My heart and My life.[25]

246 Though the world is made sweet by My rasa, the nectar of Rādhā’s lips holds Me in its power.

247 Though My touch is cooler than ten million moons, Rādhikā’s touch cools Me.

Rādhikā's beauty and qualities are Kṛṣṇa's life and all His wealth —

248 So I am the cause of the world’s happiness, but Rādhikā’s beauty and virtues are My very life.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Jīvātu: life.

An inquiry showing that Rādhikā's love for Kṛṣṇa exceeds Kṛṣṇa's love for Rādhā —

249 This is what I feel — but if I consider it, everything is the other way round.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“I think My love for Rādhikā is exceedingly strong. But on reflection the opposite appears: Rādhikā's love for Me seems greater than Mine.”

250 My eyes are refreshed by the sight of Rādhā, but at the sight of Me Rādhā swoons with happiness.

251 The flute-like sound of bamboos rubbing together steals Her senses, and, mistaking the tamāla tree for Me, She embraces it.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“The sound of My flute steals Rādhikā's consciousness, and Rādhikā's tender song steals Mine. When Rādhikā loses consciousness, She takes a tamāla tree for Kṛṣṇa, embraces it and attains great happiness.” There is another explanation too: bamboo stalks rub against one another and give out a sound like the song of the flute. Hearing it, Rādhikā loses consciousness, takes the tamāla for Me and embraces it.

Rādhikā is wholly absorbed in Kṛṣṇa: seeing Him everywhere, She is overwhelmed with bliss —

252 “I have found Kṛṣṇa’s embrace — my life is fulfilled!” Immersed in this happiness, She remains holding the tree in Her arms.

253 If a favourable breeze brings Her My fragrance, She longs to fly to Me, blind with love.

Rādhā's happiness in serving Kṛṣṇa is beyond the knowledge even of Kṛṣṇa —

254 When She tastes betel that I have chewed, She drowns in an ocean of bliss and knows nothing else.

255 The bliss Rādhā finds in My company — even speaking with a hundred mouths I could not reach its end.

256 When Our pastimes end, Her body glows with the sweetness of happiness, and seeing it I forget Myself in joy.

*In the material world the rasa of lover and beloved are equal, but in the spiritual realm the rasa of the beloved is greater* 257 Bharata Muni holds that the rasa of the two lovers is equal, but he does not know the rasa of My Vraja.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
According to Bharata Muni, the rasa of the man and the rasa of the woman are equal. But though he is a sage, he does not know the truth of the rasa of My Vraja: for Rādhikā's rasa is by its very nature greater.

With Rādhā Kṛṣṇa is happiest of all —

258 Whatever happiness I find in the company of others, in Rādhā's company it is a hundred times greater.

*(Lalita-mādhava 9.9)*

259 "O lovely one, Your bimba-red lips have a fragrance that surpasses the sweetness of nectar; Your face has the fragrance of the lotus; Your words put the cuckoo's song to shame; Your limbs are cool as sandal, and this body of Yours holds all the wealth of beauty. Having found You, O Rādhā, all My senses rejoice again and again." (Lalita-mādhava, 9.9)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"O auspicious one, Your lips, like the bimba fruit, have surpassed the sweetness and fragrance of nectar; Your face is fragrant as a lotus; Your words put to shame the song of the cuckoo; Your limbs are cool as sandal, and Your body is the abode of all beauty. Attaining You, so full of beauty, qualities and pastimes, My senses come to great delight again and again."

Anubhāṣya.
he kalyāṇi (O auspicious one, embodiment of bliss), te (Your) bimbādharaḥ (red lips) nirdhūtāmṛta-mādhurī-parimalaḥ (which have put to shame the sweetness and fragrance of nectar), vaktram (face) paṅkaja-saurabham (fragrant like a lotus), giraḥ (words) kuharita-ślāghā-bhidaḥ (which shame the praise given to kuharita, the cuckoo's song), aṅgam (limbs) candana-śītalam (cool as sandal), iyam tanuḥ (this body) saundarya-sarvasva-bhāk (possessing all the wealth of beauty). he rādhe (O Rādhā), tvām āsvādya (relishing You) mama idam indriya-kulam (all My senses) muhuḥ (again and again) modate (are filled with joy).

(Words of Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī)

260 "Her eyes are greedy for the beauty of Kṛṣṇa, the slayer of Kaṁsa; Her skin thrills at His touch; Her ears are eager for His words, and Her nostrils delight in His fragrance; Her tongue longs for the nectar of His lips. She bows Her lotus face and pretends to great composure, yet even outwardly She is shaken by the surging transformations of love." (Rūpa Gosvāmī)[26]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

This is what is seen in Śrī Rādhā. Her eyes long for the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the enemy of Kaṁsa; Her skin thrills with joy at Kṛṣṇa's touch; Her ears yearn for His words; Her nostrils open at the fragrance of Kṛṣṇa's body; Her tongue is conquered by the nectar of Kṛṣṇa's lips; Her lotus face, ever blooming, is bowed; and Her limbs are seized by intense transformations — horripilation and the rest — that shatter all composure.

Anubhāṣya.

kaṁsa-harasya (of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the slayer of Kaṁsa) rūpe (on seeing the form) lubdha-nayanām (Her whose eyes are full of longing, drawn to Kṛṣṇa's form) sparśe (at the touch) ati-hṛṣyat-tvacam (Her whose skin thrills with delight — whose body is full of bliss at Kṛṣṇa's touch) vāṇyām (at His words) utkalita-śrutim (Her whose ears are eager — attentive to Kṛṣṇa's sounds) parimale (at the fragrance of His body) saṁhṛṣṭa-nāsā-puṭām (Her whose nostrils are thrilled — who has felt wondrous joy breathing Kṛṣṇa's fragrance) adhara-puṭe (on tasting the nectar of His lips) ārajyad-rasanām (Her whose tongue is full of love — attached to Kṛṣṇa's lips) nyañcan-mukhāmbhoruhām (Her whose lotus face is reverently bowed) bahiḥ api kila dambhodgīrṇa-mahā-dhṛtim (Her who feigns great composure — outwardly behaving contrarily) prodyad-vikārākulām (seized by transformations surging forth — full of inner eagerness for pastimes) rādhām aham smarāmi (I remember Rādhā).

Kṛṣṇa considers the power of His own sweetness —

261 From this I know that there is in Me some rasa that holds in its power Rādhā, My enchantress.

Kṛṣṇa longs to relish Rādhā's happiness

262 I am ever eager to taste the kind of happiness Rādhā finds in Me.

263 I make many efforts, but I cannot taste it; and the very scent of that sweet happiness makes the longing in My heart grow.

*The avatāra of Gaura — to relish in every way the rasa of Rādhā's love —*

264 To taste rasa I have descended; I shall taste the rasa of love in all its kinds.[27]

*Preaching and practicing the way of rāga-bhajana —*

265 And through the conduct of My pastimes I shall teach how devotees worship on the path of rāga.[28]

*Without the emotion of the āśraya, in the emotion of the viṣaya, the happiness of service cannot be relished —*

266 These three thirsts of Mine have not been quenched, for they cannot be tasted in a mood of another kind.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Vijātīya: that is, the emotion of the viṣaya.

267 Without accepting Rādhikā’s mood and lustre, I can never taste these three kinds of happiness.

268 Accepting Rādhā’s mood and assuming Her colour, I shall descend to taste these three kinds of happiness.”

*When He descended as Gaura, the time of the yuga-avatāra and Advaita's call coincided —*

269 With all His heart Kṛṣṇa made this decision, and just then came the time for the avatāra of the age.

270 At that time Śrī Advaita was worshipping the Lord, and with His thunderous call He drew Kṛṣṇa down.[29]

First the elders descend, then Gaura, the original form —

271–272 First causing His father, mother and elders to descend, and accepting Rādhikā's mood and complexion, Kṛṣṇa appeared as the full moon in Navadvīpa, in the pure ocean of milk that was Śacī's womb.

Anubhāṣya.

Avatari: having caused to descend.

Meditating on the lotus feet of Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī, the author cites his verse to confirm the meaning of the verses —

273 So I have explained the sixth verse, meditating on the lotus feet of Śrī Rūpa Gosāñi.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"I shall fulfill the three desires described and by My own conduct teach the devotees devotion on the path of rāga." When Kṛṣṇa resolved to descend for all these reasons, the time of the yuga-avatāra arrived, and at that same time Śrī Advaita Ācārya was worshiping Kṛṣṇa. Therefore Kṛṣṇacandra accepted the emotion and complexion of Rādhikā and rose in Navadvīpa from Śacī's womb in the form of Gaurāṅga. The truth I have explained in the two verses of Svarūpa Gosvāmī I now confirm with a verse of Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī.

274 For the meaning I have given of these two verses, a verse of Śrī Rūpa Gosāñi is a fitting proof.

275 “Eager for delight, the Lord stole from one among the host of His beloveds (Śrī Rādhā) Her boundless wealth of rasa, indescribably sweet, that He might relish it Himself. For this He covered His own lustre and revealed here Her radiance. May He, in the form of Caitanya, be boundlessly merciful to us!” (Stava-mālā, the second Caitanyāṣṭaka, 3)[30]

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 4.52.

276 Thus the six verses set forth the auspicious invocation, the characteristic marks of the truth of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, and the purpose of His descent.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The six verses set forth three subjects: the maṅgalācaraṇa, the marks of the truth of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, and the purpose of Caitanya's avatāra.

Thus ends the fourth chapter of the “Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.”

Anubhāṣya.
kṛṣṇa-caitanya-tattva-lakṣaṇam (setting forth the truth of Gaura) maṅgalācaraṇam (the maṅgalācaraṇa), avatāre (concerning the avatāra of Gaura) prayojanam ca (and the purpose) śloka-ṣaṭkaiḥ (by the six verses — from vande gurūn to garbha-sindhau harīnduḥ) nirūpitam (are set forth).

Thus ends the fourth chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”

277 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Ādi-līlā

Chapter 5

Determining the Truth of Śrī Nityānanda

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. In the fifth chapter the glory of Śrī Nityānanda is described in five verses, as follows. Śrī Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself; His vilāsa-mūrti, that is, His second body, is Śrī Balarāma. Beyond prakṛti there is a spiritual abode called “Paravyoma,” and in its highest part lies “Kṛṣṇaloka.” In Kṛṣṇaloka are Dvārakā, Mathurā and Gokula; there abides the original catur-vyūha: Kṛṣṇa, Baladeva, Pradyumna (that is, Kāmadeva) and Aniruddha. The abode in Vṛndāvana within that Kṛṣṇaloka is called “Śvetadvīpa.” Below Kṛṣṇaloka is the Vaikuṇṭha called “Paravyoma,” where four-armed Nārāyaṇa, the vilāsa-mūrti of Kṛṣṇa, resides. He who is Baladeva in Kṛṣṇaloka is the original Saṅkarṣaṇa (mūla-Saṅkarṣaṇa). His vilāsa-mūrti in the Vaikuṇṭha of Paravyoma is Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa. By the cit-śakti of this Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa everything made of śuddha-sattva in Paravyoma is manifest, and by His jīva-śakti pure jīvas dwell there; māyā-śakti has no place there. In the abode of Nārāyaṇa is the second kāya-vyūha. Beyond Paravyoma lies “Brahmaloka,” the abode of effulgence. Beyond it is the Causal Ocean (Kāraṇa-samudra), filled with spiritual water. On the far shore of the Causal Ocean lies māyā, untouched by it. In the Causal Ocean is Mahā-Viṣṇu, the original puruṣa-avatāra, a part of mūla-Saṅkarṣaṇa. From afar He casts His glance (īkṣaṇa) upon māyā. And by a semblance of His body (aṅgābhāsa) — something that appears to be His body but is not — He unites with māyā as the material cause. Māyā herself, as the material cause (upādāna-kāraṇa), is called “pradhāna,” and as the efficient cause (nimitta-kāraṇa), “prakṛti.” The original efficient cause of material prakṛti is the glance of Mahā-Viṣṇu; prakṛti is therefore only a secondary efficient cause. This same Mahā-Viṣṇu, lying in the Causal Ocean, enters the aggregate universe as Garbhodaśāyī, and enters each universe and each jīva as Kṣīrodaśāyī. The Kṣīrodaśāyī Puruṣa manifests a Vaikuṇṭha in each universe and resides there as Viṣṇu, the Paramātmā, the Īśvara and so on; in the waters of the universe He lies on the bed of Śeṣa. He is the father of Brahmā, and one part of Him is conceived of as the Virāṭ. In each universe a "Śvetadvīpa" is manifest in the Ocean of Milk, and Viṣṇu resides there. Thus two Śvetadvīpas are manifest: one in Kṛṣṇaloka, and the other in the Ocean of Milk of every universe. The "Śvetadvīpa" of Kṛṣṇaloka is nondifferent from the Vṛndāvana there; it is the land of certain supplementary pastimes of Kṛṣṇa. Śeṣa within the universe serves Viṣṇu by becoming His umbrella, sandals, bed, pillow, garments, dwelling, sacred thread, throne and so on. The Baladeva of Kṛṣṇaloka is Prabhu Nityānanda Himself; He is therefore mūla-Saṅkarṣaṇa. Hence Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa of Paravyoma and His puruṣa-avatāras are the parts and portions (aṁśas and kalās) of Nityānanda Prabhu.

In this chapter the author has included an account of his journey to Vṛndāvana and of how he attained complete perfection there. From it we learn that he formerly lived in the village of Jhāmaṭapura near Naihāṭī, in the region of Kāṭoyā. There were two brothers. Śrī Mīnaketana Rāmadāsa, an associate of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu, came to his house at his invitation and was displeased with the priest, Guṇārṇava Miśra. The brother of Kavirāja Gosvāmī took the priest's side and did not acknowledge the glory of Śrī Nityānanda. For this Śrīla Kavirāja Gosvāmī rebuked his brother. Rāmadāsa broke his flute and left, and Kavirāja Gosvāmī's brother was at once utterly ruined. That same night, in a dream, Kavirāja Gosvāmī received the grace and the command of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu, and on the very next day he set out for Vṛndāvana.

By the mercy of Nityānanda one comes to know the true nature of Nityānanda

1 I bow to the Lord Śrī Nityānanda, whose divine opulence is endless and wondrous. By His will even a fool can come to know and describe His true nature.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow to the Lord (Īśvara) Nityānanda, whose majesty is endless and wondrous. By His will even a fool is able to describe His true nature.

Anubhāṣya.
yasya (Nityānanda's) icchayā (by the mercy) ajñena (by one unversed in the scriptures) api (even [by me]) tat-svarūpam (the truth of Nityānanda) nirūpyate (is described), tam anantādbhutaiśvaryam (Him whose majesty is endless and wondrous, that is, who possesses a majesty beyond place, time and circumstance) īśvaram (the God of gods) śrī-nityānandam ahaṁ vande.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

In six verses the truth of Gaura, in five verses the truth of Nityānanda —

3 In these six verses I have told of the glory of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya; in five verses I now tell the whole truth of Nityānanda.

The truth of Baladeva —

4 Kṛṣṇa, the source of all avatāras, is Bhagavān Himself, and Śrī Balarāma is His second body.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
His second body: the vilāsa body of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

5 The two are one in nature; only Their bodies differ. Balarāma is the first expansion of Kṛṣṇa's body and His helper in His pastimes.

Kṛṣṇa is Gaura; Balarāma is Nitāi —

6 That Kṛṣṇa is Śrī Caitanyacandra in Navadvīpa, and that Balarāma is Śrī Nityānanda, who is with Him.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Śrī Baladeva is the first kāya-vyūha of Kṛṣṇa, that is, an expansion of His body; He assists Kṛṣṇa in His pastimes. That same Kṛṣṇa descended in Navadvīpa as Śrī Caitanyacandra, and Śrī Balarāma, the first kāya-vyūha, came with Him as Śrī Nityānanda.

Explanation of the seventh of the fourteen opening verses: Nityānanda, or Baladeva, is the whole whose parts are Saṅkarṣaṇa, the Lords who lie in the waters of the Causal, Garbha and Milk Oceans, and Śeṣa — (a verse from the diary of Śrī Svarūpa Gosvāmī)

7 "Saṅkarṣaṇa, the Lord who lies in the Causal Ocean, the Lord who lies in the Garbha Ocean, the Lord who lies in the Ocean of Milk, and Śeṣa are His portions and the parts of His portions: may that Rāma who is called Nityānanda be my refuge." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)[1]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
May Nityānanda-Rāma be my shelter — He whose parts and portions are Saṅkarṣaṇa, Kāraṇābdhiśāyī, Garbhodaśāyī, Payobdhiśāyī and Śeṣa.

Anubhāṣya.
saṅkarṣaṇaḥ (Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa in Paravyoma), kāraṇa-toya-śāyī (the original puruṣa-avatāra), garbhoda-śāyī (the second puruṣa-avatāra, Hiraṇyagarbha, the aggregate Viṣṇu), payo 'bdhi-śāyī (the third puruṣa-avatāra, who lies in the Ocean of Milk, the individual Viṣṇu), śeṣaḥ (Anantadeva) — yasya aṁśa-kalāḥ, saḥ nityānandākhya-rāmaḥ (Baladeva) mama śaraṇam astu.

*The mūla-Saṅkarṣaṇa Baladeva serves Kṛṣṇa in five forms —*

8 Śrī Balarāma Gosāñi is the original Saṅkarṣaṇa. Assuming five forms, He serves Kṛṣṇa.

9 He Himself assists Kṛṣṇa in His pastimes, and in four other bodies He carries out the work of creation.

In four forms — for creating the spiritual and the material, for maintenance, for entering into creation and so on — and as Śeṣa, in ten bodies, He serves —

10 His work of creation and the rest is service done at Kṛṣṇa's command; and as Śeṣa He serves Kṛṣṇa in many ways.

Anubhāṣya.
The five forms of Śrī Balarāma: 1) Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa, 2) Kāraṇodaśāyī, 3) Garbhodaśāyī, 4) Kṣīrodaśāyī and 5) Śeṣa.

11 In all these forms He tastes the bliss of serving Kṛṣṇa. And that same Balarāma is Nityānanda, the companion of Gaura.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Śrī Balarāma, the first kāya-vyūha, may be called the original Saṅkarṣaṇa (mūla-Saṅkarṣaṇa). For He assumes five forms and serves Kṛṣṇa in them: as a part (aṁśa) belonging to His second form He is "Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa," and as portions (kalās) He is "Kāraṇābdhiśāyī," "Garbhodaśāyī," "Payobdhiśāyī" and "Śeṣa." He Himself remains Kṛṣṇa's assistant in His pastimes, and in four forms — Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa, Kāraṇābdhiśāyī, Garbhodaśāyī and Payobdhiśāyī — He carries out creation and other works. As Ananta, who is called Śeṣa, He serves Kṛṣṇa in many ways. In all these forms Balarāma relishes the bliss of serving Kṛṣṇa.

Describing the truth of Nityānanda, the author explains the seventh verse in four verses —

12 I shall explain the meaning of the seventh verse in four verses, so that all may know the truth of Nityānanda.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The meaning of the seventh verse: what is said in the seventh verse I explain in verses 8, 9, 10 and 11.

(a verse from the diary of Śrī Svarūpa Gosvāmī)

13 "I take refuge in Śrī Nityānanda Rāma, whose form called Saṅkarṣaṇa shines amid the fourfold expansion (catur-vyūha) in the all-pervading world of Vaikuṇṭha, full of every opulence and beyond māyā." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)[2]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I take shelter of Rāma, who is Nityānanda. In Vaikuṇṭha, which lies beyond māyā and pervades all, abides the catur-vyūha full of complete majesty —

Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha; among them shines His form named Saṅkarṣaṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

māyātīte (beyond the region made of the guṇas) vyāpi-vaikuṇṭha-loke (in Vaikuṇṭha, the undivided support, free from māyā and unlimited), pūrṇaiśvarye (full of the complete range of potencies), śrī-catur-vyūha-madhye (among the four Viṣṇus — Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha) yasya (Nityānanda-Rāma's) saṅkarṣaṇākhyaṁ rūpam udbhāti (shines), tam nityānanda-rāmam ahaṁ prapadye.

"Paravyoma," endowed with six transcendental opulences —

14 Beyond material nature lies the abode called Paravyoma. Like Kṛṣṇa's own form, it is endowed with every opulence and every divine quality.

The world of Brahman and the worlds above it, the abode of Kṛṣṇa and His avatāras —

15 There lie endless, all-pervading abodes — Brahman, Vaikuṇṭha and others — and in them Kṛṣṇa and His avatāras dwell.

16 In its highest region is the realm known as Kṛṣṇaloka, which abides in three divisions — Dvārakā, Mathurā and Gokula.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Above the prakṛti of twenty-four elements there is a spiritual abode called "Paravyoma." Like the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, this abode is endowed with every excellence, such as all-pervading power (vibhūti). Within it lie all-pervading, endless abodes — the abode of Brahman, Vaikuṇṭha and others. In all these abodes Kṛṣṇa Himself and all kinds of avatāras of Kṛṣṇa reside. Higher still, in the third part of this abode, is the supreme spiritual world, called "Kṛṣṇaloka." This Kṛṣṇaloka is varied: it exists in three forms — Dvārakā, Mathurā and Gokula.

On the very highest level, Vraja, Goloka and Śvetadvīpa —

17 Above all is Śrī Gokula, the abode of Vraja, which is also called Śrī Goloka, Śvetadvīpa and Vṛndāvana.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Highest of all in the abode of Paravyoma are Śrī Gokula, that is, the abode of Vrajaloka; Śrī Goloka, that is, the abode of Kṛṣṇa where the mood of svakīyā prevails; Śvetadvīpa; and Vṛndāvana.

Goloka-Vṛndāvana, an abode wholly nondifferent from Kṛṣṇa —

18 Like Kṛṣṇa's body, it is all-pervading, endless and vast; it extends above and below without any bound.[3]

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Jīva writes in the Śrī Kṛṣṇa-sandarbha (section 106): "What, then, is that abode where He sports? To this it is said. The Skanda Purāṇa says: 'As the cities dear to Bhagavān exist on earth, so they exist in Vaikuṇṭha, honored for the sake of those pastimes.' According to these words, the places that exist in Vaikuṇṭha should be understood to be these very places. And they lie above all the Vaikuṇṭhas. * * * The Svāyambhuva-āgama also says that this place stands in its own right, above all: in the dialogue of Īśvara and Devī, in the section on meditation on the fourteen-syllable [mantra], in the eighty-fifth chapter (paṭala): 'One should remember the all-pervading Vaikuṇṭha, strewn with many wish-fulfilling creepers. Below it is prakṛti, the equilibrium of the guṇas, the cause of all.' * * * Therefore, by the rule 'as they exist on earth' as well, it is established that Śrī Kṛṣṇaloka, consisting of Dvārakā, Mathurā and Gokula, exists in its own right and, as the place of the pastimes of Bhagavān Himself, lies above all. Hence Vṛndāvana is that very Gokula which shines above all and is renowned as Goloka. In the Brahma-saṁhitā: 'The great abode called Gokula is a lotus of a thousand petals. * * * Around it is a wondrous quadrangle called Śvetadvīpa.' * * * The abode of this Śrī Kṛṣṇa, fit for living together with Nanda, Yaśodā and others, is the great inner palace; of its nature it is said that its origin, that is, its eternal manifestation, is from a part of Ananta, Śrī Baladeva. Read in a double sense,[17] the words also convey this: there is the origin, that is, the dwelling, of Śrī Baladeva Himself, whose part is Ananta. * * * Next the coverings of Gokula are described, beginning 'Outside it is a quadrangle.' Outside that Gokula, on every side, a quadrangular, that is, four-cornered, place is called Śvetadvīpa, since that part has no particular name ‘Gokula.’ But the inner circle of the quadrangle should be known as Vṛndāvana, and the outer circle only as Śvetadvīpa; its other name is ‘Goloka.’ * * * Vaikuṇṭha is called Brahmaloka. * * * In the Nārada-pañcarātra, in the Vijaya-ākhyāna: ‘There, above all, in Goloka, Śrī Govinda Himself always sports, full of supreme bliss, the Lord of the gopīs and of Gokula.’ Thus it is established that Śrī Kṛṣṇaloka lies above all. It is also determined that this world, divided into parts according to the differences of those pastimes and associates, consists of three places — Dvārakā, Mathurā and Gokula. Elsewhere [in scripture], however, the places of the same names renowned on earth are spoken of as these very places: for of them, as of the other Vaikuṇṭhas, it is said that they lie beyond the material world, are eternal, have an unearthly form and are the eternal abode of Bhagavān.”

In what kind of abode does this Bhagavān move about? On this it is said: “As cities dear to Bhagavān exist in this material world, so three cities abide in Vaikuṇṭha for the sake of His pastimes.” According to these words of the Skanda Purāṇa, it should be known that the places existing in Vaikuṇṭha are the very same places that are in the material world. Above the material creation lie all the Vaikuṇṭhas. The Svāyambhuva-tantra, too, says that the place of Vaikuṇṭha stands in its own right, above all. In that book, in the section on meditation on the fourteen-syllable [mantra], in the 85th paṭala, in the dialogue of Devī and Maheśvara, it is said: “One should remember the all-pervading, undivided Vaikuṇṭha, strewn with many wish-fulfilling creepers. Below it lies prakṛti — the equilibrium of the guṇas, the cause of all material causes.” Therefore from the rule “as the abodes of Hari exist on earth, so also there” we understand that Kṛṣṇaloka, consisting of Dvārakā, Mathurā and Gokula, exists in its own right. It is the field of the pastimes of Bhagavān Himself, and so it is established that these abodes lie above all. Hence Vṛndāvana-Gokula is renowned as “Goloka,” shining above all. In the Brahma-saṁhitā: “The great abode shaped like a lotus of a thousand petals is known as ‘Gokula.’ The wondrous place around it, a quadrangle — that is, bounded by four straight lines — is called ‘Śvetadvīpa.’” In that abode of Kṛṣṇa is His great inner palace, fit for living with Nanda, Yaśodā and others. Its nature is described thus: that abode eternally arises from Ananta, the part of Baladeva Prabhu. The tantra scriptures convey the same: the abode of Bhagavān is where Anantadeva, the part of Baladeva, appears and dwells. The coverings of Gokula are described thus. Outside Gokula, on every side, lies a quadrangular place (a four-cornered field) known as “Śvetadvīpa.” The part that is Śvetadvīpa does not bear the name “Gokula”; but the inner circle of the quadrangle is known by the name “Vṛndāvana,” and only the outer circle should be known as “Śvetadvīpa”; its other name is “Goloka.” The word “Brahmaloka” means “Vaikuṇṭha.” In the Nārada-pañcarātra, in the account of the Vijaya-ākhyāna, it is said that in that abode, above all, in Goloka, Govindadeva Himself — Gopīnātha, the Lord of Gokula — always sports in supreme bliss. From this it is established that Kṛṣṇaloka lies above all worlds. It is also determined that this very Kṛṣṇaloka, by the differences of pastimes and associates and by the differences of parts, is the three places with many chambers, named “Dvārakā,” “Mathurā” and “Gokula.” Elsewhere [in scripture] we hear that the places of the same names on earth, in the material world, are of the same nature: for of them, as of the other Vaikuṇṭhas, it is said that they lie beyond the material world, are eternal, have an unearthly form and are the eternal abode of Bhagavān. Therefore they too should be known as nondifferent [from the abodes of Kṛṣṇaloka].

It is self-manifest — by Kṛṣṇa's will it descends into the material world —

19 By Kṛṣṇa’s will it is manifest within the universe, yet it remains one and the same: it does not have two bodies.

*To eyes that seek enjoyment it looks like the material world, but to the eyes of devotion it is the field of Kṛṣṇa's pastimes, a spiritual land of cintāmaṇi —*

20 Its land is cintāmaṇi, its forests are full of wish-fulfilling trees; yet eyes of flesh see it as no different from the material world.

21 With eyes of love one sees it as it truly is — the place where Kṛṣṇa sports with the cowherd boys and girls.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

This spiritual abode of Vraja, by Kṛṣṇa's will, is manifest within the material universe, yet even here it remains in the very same form. Some think that Goloka and the other abodes in Paravyoma are different from the abode of Vraja manifest in the material world. But that is not so: it is one and the same abode, only manifest at the same time both in Paravyoma and in the material world. Even in the Vraja manifest in the material world the ground is cintāmaṇi and the forests consist of wish-fulfilling trees. The eyes of prema see the true form of this abode, while to material eyes it looks like the material world.

*Govinda in Goloka — (Brahma-saṁhitā, Chapter 5, verse 29)*

22 "I worship Govinda, the original Person, who tends the surabhi cows in abodes built of cintāmaṇi gems and surrounded by millions of wish-fulfilling trees, and who is served with reverence by hundreds of thousands of Lakṣmīs." (Brahma-saṁhitā, 5.29)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I worship the original Puruṣa, Śrī Govindacandra. He tends the wish-fulfilling cows in places made of heaps of cintāmaṇi, surrounded by hundreds of thousands of wish-fulfilling trees, and hundreds of thousands of Lakṣmīs serve Him with reverence.

Anubhāṣya.

kalpa-vṛkṣa-lakṣāvṛteṣu (surrounded, that is, adorned, by hundreds of thousands — countless — wish-fulfilling trees, trees that give whatever fruit one may fittingly ask for) cintāmaṇi-prakara-sadmasu (in abodes, that is, palaces, built of heaps of cintāmaṇi, jewels able to grant desired fruits) surabhīḥ (the wish-fulfilling cows) abhipālayantam (tending in every way — as a cowherd should care for his cows), lakṣmī-sahasra-śata-sambhrama-sevyamānam (served with reverence by hundreds of thousands of Lakṣmīs — the beautiful cowherd girls) tam ādi-puruṣam govindam ahaṁ bhajāmi.

*"The original catur-vyūha" —*

23 In Mathurā and Dvārakā He manifests His own form and, becoming the fourfold expansion (catur-vyūha), sports in many forms.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the part of Kṛṣṇa's abode called Mathurā and Dvārakā, Kṛṣṇa manifests the original catur-vyūha — Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha — and sports in various forms. The catur-vyūha of Dvārakā is the whole of which all other catur-vyūhas are parts; it is pure and spiritual.

*The whole of all the catur-vyūhas —*

24 Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha are the source of every catur-vyūha; They are transcendent (turīya) and pure.

In Gokula, Mathurā and Dvārakā — pastimes in the two-armed form —

25 In these three abodes Kṛṣṇa is wholly given to His pastimes; there He plays with His own associates without end.

Anubhāṣya.

In three worlds: in Gokula, in Mathurā and in Dvārakā.

In the Vaikuṇṭha of Paravyoma — pastimes in the form of four-armed Nārāyaṇa —

26 In the midst of Paravyoma He manifests His own form and, as Nārāyaṇa, enjoys pastimes of many kinds.

*Kṛṣṇa, the svayaṁ-rūpa, is two-armed; Nārāyaṇa, the manifestation of His majesty, is four-armed —*

27 Kṛṣṇa's own form has only two arms; in the form of Nārāyaṇa that same body has four.

28 He holds the conch, disc, club and lotus and is full of supreme majesty; His feet are served by His potencies Śrī, Bhū and Nīlā.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa's svarūpa-vigraha, His original form, is always two-armed. His svarūpa-prakāśa in Paravyoma is four-armed Nārāyaṇa, served by the potencies Śrī, Bhū and Nīlā. These three potencies are described in detail in the books of the Vaiṣṇavas of the Śrī-sampradāya.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī, Bhū and Nīlā. Following a Bengali reading, some call Nīlā "Līlā-śakti." These three potencies abide in Vaikuṇṭha beside Nārāyaṇa. Once Bhūta-yogī, Sara-yogī and Bhrānta-yogī (the Āḻvārs) took shelter at night in a brāhmaṇa's house in the village of Gehalī. Then Nārāyaṇa entered that house and revealed His form to them.

Prapannāmṛta, Chapter 77, verses 61–62: “They saw Viṣṇu, the original Bhagavān. He was mounted on Tārkṣya (Garuḍa) and looked like a cloud with lightning; He bore Lakṣmī on His chest, His eyes were like lotuses, and in two hands shone the conch and the disc. His arms reached to His knees, His body was lovely, and Bhūmi and Nīlā shone at His two sides. He wore yellow garments, His body was adorned with ornaments and anointed with sandal paste, and He had four arms.”

In the Sītā Upaniṣad: “Mahālakṣmī of the Lord of the gods is both different and nondifferent from Him; She consists of the conscious and the unconscious. As potency this goddess is of three kinds: icchā-śakti (the potency of will), kriyā-śakti (the potency of action) and sākṣāt-śakti (the direct potency). Icchā-śakti is of three kinds: Śrī, Bhūmi and Līlā.”

In his commentary on the Gītā (Chapter 4, verse 6) Śrī Madhvācārya cites scripture: “She who is the mother of the mahat and the rest, conceived of as Śrī, Bhū and Nīlā, and the bewildering one named Durgā — through them Viṣṇu, though unborn, by the power of His own cit[-potency] is renowned as if born among those whose minds are bewildered.” * * * “Mahāmāyā, Vaiṣṇavī, divided as Śrī, Bhū and Durgā, is infinitely below His potency. Yet because she has taken shelter of the Lord, even Ananta, Brahmā, Rudra and others have not a fraction of her power. Without the grace of Viṣṇu even they cannot overcome her.” (Vyāsa-yoga, Chapter 7, section 14.)

Madhva's commentary on the Gītā (Chapter 14, verse 3): “‘The great Brahman’ is prakṛti. She is divided as Śrī, Bhū and Durgā. Umā, Sarasvatī and others are other jīvas, possessing a part of her.” So too the Kārṣāyaṇa-śruti: “Śrī, Bhū and Durgā are the great māyā; she brings forth the worlds and binds the universe. Umā, Vāk and others are other jīvas, her parts; in all the Vedas they are sung as one with her in nature.”

Śrī Jīva Prabhu in the Bhagavat-sandarbha (section 80): “As the Padma Purāṇa says: ‘The eternal, auspicious form of the Lord abides in the supreme abode; He is eternally delighted by the sovereign Śrī and by Bhūmi and is surrounded by them.’ In the Mahā-saṁhitā this is distinguished by name and nature as well: ‘His threefold potency — Śrī, Bhū and Durgā — which is divided, is the jīva-māyā of the Great Soul. Ātma-māyā is His will, and guṇa-māyā is material.'" (Ibid., section 22): "Śrī here is the potency that maintains the world, Bhū the potency of its creation, Durgā the potency of its dissolution. His potency that has become distinct in these forms and is directed toward the jīvas is called jīva-māyā. In the Padma Purāṇa, in the dialogue of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā, after the words 'I Myself, dividing threefold, abide through the three kinds of guṇas,' it is said: 'Then all the gods, hearing this and urged by those words, full of devotion, bowed down to Gaurī, Lakṣmī and Dharā.'"

*Though Kṛṣṇa is absorbed in pastime alone, He is full of causeless mercy toward the jīvas —*

29 Though His nature is simply to play, out of mercy to the jīvas He does one work:

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Though His nature is pastime alone, out of mercy for the jīvas He also performs this pastime: He delivers the jīvas.

*By four kinds of liberation He delivers the jīvas, that is, brings them to Vaikuṇṭha —*

30 Granting the four kinds of liberation — sālokya, sāmīpya, sārṣṭi and sārūpya — He delivers the jīvas.

Those who know the featureless Brahman remain outside Vaikuṇṭha —

31 Those liberated by merging into Brahman have no access there; they all remain outside it.

Beyond Paravyoma, the spiritual Brahmaloka —

32 Outside Vaikuṇṭha lies a sphere of light — the radiance of Kṛṣṇa's body, supremely bright.

*Though beyond māyā, it has no spiritual pastimes — it is spirit alone —*

33 It is called Siddhaloka and lies beyond material nature. It is spiritual, yet the spiritual potency displays no variety there.

An example of the abode of Brahman —

34 It is like the disc of the sun: from outside it is a featureless glow, but within are the sun's chariot and all its variety.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The word "Vaikuṇṭha" should be understood as "the abode of Kṛṣṇa" and "Paravyoma." Beyond Paravyoma the radiance of Kṛṣṇa's body spreads out and forms a sphere of light. It is called "Siddhaloka," "Brahmaloka" and so on. It is the only place for the liberation of merging into Brahman (brahma-sāyujya). This abode is indeed spiritual, but it has no transformations of the cit-śakti, that is, no variety. From outside, the disc of the sun is without features (nirviśeṣa): it is mere light, without any variety. But within the disc one sees the sun's chariot and the rest — things with features (saviśeṣa), that is, rich variety. So it is here: the outer part of the sun's disc is like the abode of Brahman.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 7, Chapter 1, verse 29)*[12]

35 "Many have fixed their minds on the Lord — some by devotion, others by loving desire (kāma), enmity, fear or affection — and, casting off the sin in those feelings, have attained Him." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 7.1.29)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Many fixed their minds on Him through kāma, enmity, fear and affection — just as through devotion — gave up that sin and attained Him. In another reading one more verse is found: "The gopīs through kāma, Kaṁsa through fear, Caidya and other kings through enmity, the Vṛṣṇis through kinship, you through affection, and we through devotion, O mighty Lord."[12]

Dharmarāja Yudhiṣṭhira asked: "Why did Śiśupāla, through his enmity toward Kṛṣṇa, become worthy of sāyujya-mukti?" In reply Śrī Nārada said:

yathā ([by prescribed]) bhaktyā (service) īśvare manaḥ āveśya ([people attain Him]), [so too,] tad aghaṁ (the sin caused by kāma and the rest) hitvā, kāmāt — like the gopīs, dveṣāt — like Dantavakra, Śiśupāla and others, bhayāt — like Kaṁsa and others, snehāt — like the Pāṇḍavas — bahavaḥ (many [such]) tad gatiṁ (one or another kind of liberation) gatāḥ (attained).

See Yudhiṣṭhira's question and Śrī Nārada's answer in the first chapter of the seventh canto of the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (verses 22–46), and also the various interpretations in the Gauḍīya-bhāṣya on verses 3.30, 32 and 34.

*(Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Pūrva-vibhāga, Sādhana-bhakti-laharī, verse 278)*

36 "The goal of the Lord's enemies and that of His beloved ones are sometimes spoken of as one, because Brahman and Kṛṣṇa are one, as the rays are one with the sun." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 1.2.278)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Wherever scripture says that the enemies of Bhagavān and His beloved ones attain the same thing, it speaks only of the oneness of Brahman, which is like the rays, and Kṛṣṇa, who is like the sun. The upshot is this: the beloved ones of Bhagavān attain the variety of Vaikuṇṭha, while the enemies of Bhagavān attain "Siddhaloka," which is without pastimes.

Anubhāṣya.

yat (if in some scripture) arīṇāṁ (of the enemies of Bhagavān) priyāṇāṁ ca (and of the devotees of Bhagavān) ekam prāpyam uditam (is declared), tat kiraṇārkopamā-juṣoḥ brahma-kṛṣṇayoḥ aikyāt (because of the oneness — that is, it should be understood that the featureless Brahman, which is like the rays, and Kṛṣṇa, who is like the sun, are in truth nondifferent).

Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.2.32: "Others, O lotus-eyed Lord, think themselves liberated, but their intelligence is impure because they lack devotion to You. Having climbed with difficulty to the highest position, they fall down from there, for they have neglected Your feet."

Śrī Rūpa Prabhu writes in the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, describing the glory of Śrī Kṛṣṇa (25–37): "There, in the fourth part [of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa] (Viṣṇu Purāṇa 4.15.1–10), is Maitreya's question: 'Slain by Viṣṇu as Hiraṇyakaśipu and as Rāvaṇa, he obtained enjoyments unattainable even by the immortals. Yet then he did not attain sāyujya with Him. How, then, did he, as Śiśupāla, attain sāyujya with the eternal Hari?' Parāśara's answer: 'To slay the lord of the Daityas, He who creates, maintains and destroys all the worlds took an unprecedented body and manifested the form of Nṛsiṁha. But Hiraṇyakaśipu did not think, "This is Viṣṇu." He thought, "This is a being born of an unsurpassed store of merit." His one-pointed mind, driven by an excess of rajas, was absorbed in that thought. Therefore, having died at His hand, he obtained, as the Ten-headed One (Rāvaṇa), an unsurpassed wealth of enjoyment surpassing everything in the three worlds. But his mind did not dissolve into that beginningless and endless Bhagavān, the Supreme Brahman, for he had not made Him his support. As the Ten-headed One, too, subject to Anaṅga (Kāma), he gave his heart to Jānakī and saw only the form of Him who had taken the form of Daśaratha's son. He did not think, "This is Acyuta," and because of his attachment, at the hour of death his heart saw in Him only a man. Then the sole fruit of being felled by Acyuta was birth as Śiśupāla in the line of the kings of Cedi, renowned throughout the earth, and unimpeded wealth. At that time all the names of Bhagavān found their causes [in Kṛṣṇa]. Therefore his mind, bound by an enmity toward Him that had run through many births, endlessly uttered all these names of Acyuta, prompted by those causes — in abuse, threats and the like. And because of his deep-rooted enmity, His form never left his mind — not while he walked, ate, bathed, sat or lay down, nor in any other state. So, uttering His names in his abuse and holding Him alone in his heart, when the hour of his destruction came, freed of faults such as enmity, he saw Bhagavān — shining with the garland of rays of the disc He had hurled, the embodiment of imperishable effulgence, the Supreme Brahman. At that very moment he was slain by Bhagavān's disc; remembrance of Him burned up his entire store of sins; Bhagavān brought him to his end — and he dissolved into Him alone. All this I have told you. For this Bhagavān, even when glorified and remembered with persistent enmity, bestows a fruit that all the gods and asuras find hard to attain. What then of those who possess true devotion?'

"Parāśara did not say here that these two were [the Lord's] associates. It is said only that the two of them had three births. Therefore they are not held to be [the Lord's] associates in every kalpa; otherwise their fall in every kalpa would make no sense.

"When Hari manifested the wondrous form of Nṛsiṁha, Hiraṇyakaśipu had no firm idea that this was Viṣṇu. He concluded, 'This is someone endowed with merit.' His mind was driven by an excess of rajas, and, absorbed in that idea, he then obtained as Rāvaṇa the best of all and most rare wealth of enjoyment, whose only cause was his death [at His hand]. Since he was not certain that this was Viṣṇu, there was no unbroken absorption through intense enmity. And without it enmity leads only to hell, as with Vena. Yet he obtained wealth as the fruit of death at His hand. Remembering this good, the sage spoke with the word eva ('only'). Since there was no absorption and his faults were not destroyed, he did not see [the Lord] as pure; and so, although the form of the Supreme Brahman was manifest, he did not dissolve into Him. As Rāvaṇa too, having given himself over to great kāma, he likewise saw a man in Śrī Rāma even at the hour of death. Therefore, as king of Cedi, he again obtained the highest wealth. Then in Kṛṣṇa there arose causes for all the names of the Lord of Ramā. From this he concluded that He was Viṣṇu — for He had twice been the cause of his death. Out of intense enmity and great absorption he endlessly uttered all those names, constantly abusing, threatening and so on. And seeing such a form and knowing for certain, 'This is Viṣṇu,' he remembered it everywhere and always, just like the names. His heap of sins born of enmity was burned; when the disc was hurled, its radiance removed his demonic nature, and at the end, his vision purified, he saw the radiant Supreme Brahman in a form like a man's. When the blow of the disc destroyed the body of the Daitya, he dissolved into that very Supreme Brahman. Having said this, [the sage] recalled that Bakī (Pūtanā) and others attained liberation through [Kṛṣṇa's] childhood pastimes, while Kālanemi and others, even by the Lord's will, did not attain liberation in other [avatāras] — and he said again: 'For this Bhagavān …' Hi ('for') means 'as is well known': this Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself. Therefore He quickly draws the hearts both of those who love Him and of those who hate Him. Hence the greatness spoken of in the words 'when glorified …' is no wonder here."

Paraphrase of the meaning: "In the fourth part of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa Maitreya asks Parāśara: 'That Daitya who, in the bodies of Hiraṇyakaśipu and Rāvaṇa, obtained enjoyments unattainable even by the immortals, yet did not obtain liberation — how did he, in the body of Śiśupāla, attain sāyujya with Śrī Kṛṣṇa?' Parāśara's answer: 'When Śrī Nṛsiṁhadeva appeared, Hiraṇyakaśipu did not think of Him, "This is Viṣṇu," but took Him for some being born of a heap of merit. Because of the predominance of rajo-guṇa, at the hour of death he could not think of His form. But because he died at His hand, in the body of Rāvaṇa he obtained boundless wealth of enjoyment that gave him power over the three worlds. He did not regard Bhagavān as his support (ālambana), that is, as the viṣaya-vigraha, the one to be served — so his mind did not dissolve into Bhagavān. In the body of Rāvaṇa, subject to kāma, he set his heart on Jānakī and only saw the form of Bhagavān Śrī Rāmacandra. But at the hour of death he did not understand that Śrī Rāma was Viṣṇu: in his heart there was only the idea that He was a man. Then, because he fell at Śrī Rāma's hand, he was born in the body of Śiśupāla in the renowned line of the kings of Cedi and obtained great wealth. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was called Vāsudeva, and [Śiśupāla] saw Viṣṇu in Him. For many births he had been hostile to Him; that enmity had grown firmly into his heart, and so even in abuse and threats he uttered the names of Kṛṣṇa. Because of his deep-rooted enmity the beautiful form of Bhagavān never left the mind of Śiśupāla, absorbed in Kṛṣṇa, in any state — not while he walked, ate, bathed, sat, lay down and so on. He uttered that name in anger and the like and held that form in his heart; so at the last hour his offenses — enmity and the rest — went away, and in the radiance of the rays of the Sudarśana disc that had come to destroy him, he saw the true form of Bhagavān, the Supreme Brahman. Remembrance of Bhagavān (though hostile) burned up his heap of sins; slain by Bhagavān's disc, Śiśupāla came near to Bhagavān and dissolved into Him. O Maitreya, this is the answer to your question. If the haters of Kṛṣṇa, by hostile cultivation (pratikūla-anuśīlana), even while persisting in enmity, attain a good destination, what doubt can there be that pure devotees, by favorable cultivation, will attain the highest goal of all — the lotus feet of Kṛṣṇa, that is, love for Kṛṣṇa?' Parāśara did not say that these two Daityas had formerly been Bhagavān's associates Jaya and Vijaya; he said only that they took birth three times. Therefore Parāśara did not mean that these two associates of Bhagavān are born as asuras in every kalpa. Otherwise the associates of Bhagavān would fall in every kalpa, and that is entirely incongruous. (That is to say: in Bhagavān Viṣṇu, just as the will to create, the will to fight is also eternally present. A mahārāja fond of sport always plays with rivals set against him. When there are no rivals, he makes his own courtiers or servants into opponents and sports with them; and these servants, playing in a hostile mood, give their master delight. So too Bhagavān Viṣṇu: He makes hostile the jīvas who have been turned away from Him since time without beginning, or some of His own associates; they take on a hostile mood, and so both sides satisfy their longing for the play of battle. Therefore the fall of Bhagavān's associates in every kalpa is incongruous.) When Bhagavān appeared in the unearthly form of Nṛsiṁha, Hiraṇyakaśipu did not see Viṣṇu in Him: He seemed to him merely a being born of a heap of merit. The predominance of rajo-guṇa disordered his intelligence: he thought of Nṛsiṁha, 'This is some mighty creature,' and so at the last hour he could not think of His form. Therefore, merely because he died at Nṛsiṁha's hand, he obtained in the body of Rāvaṇa a rare wealth of enjoyment. Since there was no firm conviction that this was Viṣṇu, and no intense enmity, his absorption in Bhagavān did not grow. Enmity without such growing absorption in Bhagavān, as with King Vena, leads only to hell. Without the most intense absorption the offenses born of abuse and the like are not destroyed. There was no absorption, the offenses did not vanish, and so Hiraṇyakaśipu did not see the pure form of Bhagavān and could not dissolve into Him, though the Supreme Brahman Nṛsiṁhadeva stood manifest before him. In the body of Rāvaṇa, too, his mind was wholly subject to kāma, and so, like Hiraṇyakaśipu, he saw a man in Śrī Rāma. Therefore that Daitya, in the form of Śiśupāla, again obtained, as before, a fine wealth of enjoyment. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was called Vāsudeva, and by that name [Śiśupāla] then concluded that He was the cause of his death in his two previous births. Out of intense enmity and great absorption he constantly uttered all those names, even in abuse and threats; seeing in Him the four-armed form and so on, and convinced that this was Viṣṇu, he thought of that form unceasingly, just as he uttered the names. Therefore his heap of sins born of enmity was burned; the radiance of the disc hurled by Śrī Kṛṣṇa destroyed his demonic nature; gaining purified, divine vision, he saw the form of the Supreme Brahman, like that of a man. Then the blow of the Sudarśana disc destroyed his demonic body, and he dissolved into the Supreme Brahman. Having said that Śiśupāla, through the most intense absorption in Śrī Kṛṣṇa by way of enmity, attained merging (sāyujya-laya) in Him, and having considered that Pūtanā and others slain in His childhood pastimes attained liberation, while Kālanemi and others slain in other avatāras, by the design of the Lord, did not, [the sage] uttered this prose passage. Hi is used in the sense ‘as is well known.’ If one glorifies and remembers the source of the avatāras rather than other avatāras — even with enmity, that is, in a hostile mood — even such asuras attain a good destination.” See also the commentary of Śrīpāda Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa.

Śrī Sanātana Prabhu in the Bṛhad-bhāgavatāmṛta (second part, called Goloka-māhātmya, 30–31): “Ah, how can liberation be praised, when even the Daityas obtain it — those whom the scriptures themselves condemn as killers of cows, brāhmaṇas and others? Sādhus and asuras are opposites in every way; so it is fitting that their means and their goal be opposite too.”

In the tenth volume of the Śrī Sajjana-toṣaṇī, the translation by Śrīmad Bhaktivinoda Ṭhākura: “The scriptures condemn the Daityas — Kaṁsa and others — as killers of cows, brāhmaṇas and others. How then can the sāyujya liberation those Daityas obtained be praised? The sādhus are the devotees of Bhagavān, and the asuras are those who hate Him. Just as sādhus and asuras are always opposite in nature, so their means and goals must be opposite too. The means of the asuras is enmity toward the sādhus and the killing of cows and brāhmaṇas, and their goal is liberation. The means of the devotees is devotion, and their goal is prema. Therefore those who strive for such liberation, like wicked people, take up a wicked means — the mere endeavor of jñāna."

37 So in Paravyoma there are manifold pastimes of the spiritual potency, while outside it a featureless sphere of light is manifest.

*That sphere of light is the featureless Brahman; those who attain sāyujya-mukti reach it —*

38 That featureless Brahman is light alone, and those who are fit for sāyujya are absorbed in it.

*The destination of jñānīs, yogīs and the haters of Hari — (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Pūrva-vibhāga, verse 280; words of the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa)*

39 "Beyond darkness lies Siddhaloka, where dwell the siddhas, immersed in the bliss of Brahman, and the demons slain by Hari." (Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa; Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 1.2.280)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Beyond tamas, that is, beyond the world of māyā, lies "Siddhaloka," the abode of Brahman. There dwell the māyāvādīs immersed in the happiness of Brahman, and the asuras — Kaṁsa and others — slain by Bhagavān. The yogīs of Patañjali's school, even after attaining kaivalya, will also reach that world.

*The second catur-vyūha in Paravyoma is a manifestation of the original catur-vyūha of Dvārakā —*

40 In that Paravyoma, on the four sides of Nārāyaṇa, the catur-vyūha of Dvārakā is present in a second manifestation.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Rūpa Prabhu in the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta (describing the catur-vyūha, 83–84): “The Padma Purāṇa, however, says that the four vyūhas — Vāsudeva and the others — abide in order in the four directions of Paramavyoma, beginning with the east. Likewise in the pāda-vibhūti they abide in order: in the city of Vedavatī, in the Vaikuṇṭha within the covering of water; in the world of Viṣṇu above Satya; in the eternal city of Dvārakā; and in Śvetadvīpa, north of the Ocean of Pure Water, in the city of Airāvatī — in the abode that is the couch on Ananta's lap, in the Ocean of Milk.”

The Padma Purāṇa says that in the four directions of Paravyoma, beginning with the east, the catur-vyūha — Vāsudeva and the others — abides in order. And in the eka-pāda-vibhūti, that is, in the material world, these four forms — Vāsudeva and the others — dwell in order in four places. Vāsudeva dwells in the Vaikuṇṭha within the covering of water, in the city of Vedavatī; Saṅkarṣaṇa in Viṣṇuloka above Satyaloka; Pradyumna in the eternal city of Dvārakā; and Aniruddha on the bed of Ananta, in the city of Airāvatī in Śvetadvīpa, in the middle of the Ocean of Milk, on the northern shore of the Ocean of Pure Water.

*They are turīya, beyond the Virāṭ, the Garbha and the Kāraṇa —*

41 Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha — this is the second catur-vyūha, transcendent and pure.

*Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa of the second catur-vyūha is the original shelter of the cit-śakti —*

42 There the form of Rāma is Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa. He is the shelter of the spiritual potency, the cause of all causes.

*The splendor of that form is a transformation of the sandhinī of the cit-

śakti —*

43 One manifestation of the spiritual potency is called śuddha-sattva, pure spiritual existence, and of it all the abodes of Vaikuṇṭha are made.

The six opulences and all the rest are the spiritual splendor of Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa —

44 The six kinds of opulence there are all spiritual; know for certain that all of them are the splendour of Saṅkarṣaṇa.

*Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa is the shelter of the jīva-śakti —*

45 There is a potency called jīva, known as the marginal (taṭasthā) potency; and Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa is the shelter of all jīvas.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The catur-vyūha of Dvārakā — Kṛṣṇa, Baladeva and the others — is manifest a second time in Paravyoma. This catur-vyūha is called "the second catur-vyūha"; it too is spiritual and pure. There the form of Balarāma is Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa. In Paravyoma there is a manifestation of the sandhinī aspect of the cit-śakti called "śuddha-sattva"; from it come the abodes of Vaikuṇṭha and the rest, made of śuddha-sattva, and the six kinds of majesty. All this is the splendor (vibhūti) of Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa. Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa is the shelter of all jīvas, and therefore the shelter of the jīva-śakti, called marginal (taṭastha). The being of the jīva, a particle of spirit, springs from the jīva-śakti, yet it is made such that the māyā-śakti can overpower it. It therefore stands on the border between two realms — māyā and spirit (cit) — and so has received the name "marginal" (taṭastha).

A part of Saṅkarṣaṇa — Viṣṇu who lies in the Causal Ocean —

46 Saṅkarṣaṇa is the shelter of the Puruṣa from whom the universe arises and into whom it dissolves.

47 He is the shelter of all, wondrous in every way, His opulence boundless; even Ananta cannot describe His glory.

48 The transcendent Saṅkarṣaṇa, pure spiritual existence (viśuddha-sattva), is a part of Nityānanda-Rāma.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa is spiritual, pure sattva (viśuddha-sattva); He is a limb (aṅga), that is, a manifestation (prakāśa), of Nityānanda-Rāma.

Anubhāṣya.
The verse itself reads aṁśa (“portion”), the Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya reads aṅga (“body”); both readings convey the same meaning.

Anubhāṣya.
Saṅkarṣaṇa is another name for “Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa” (He is described below, in 42–48).

In the second pāda of the second chapter of the Brahma-sūtra, in the Utpatty-asambhava-adhikaraṇa, Śrī Śaṅkarācārya in his commentary put forward a mistaken argument about the catur-vyūha. Settling the matter, the author refutes that doctrine in 41–47. Śrīpāda [Śaṅkara] erred in taking Viṣṇu, the nondual Knowledge (advaya-jñāna), for one of the objects of the visible world; in the Pañcarātra Śrī Nārāyaṇa Himself made this clear to him. Yet to bewilder the conditioned jīvas of demoniac nature he had to resort to deception (vipralipsā). Because of this the followers of Advaita — Appayya Dīkṣita and others — have reached the utmost limit of error. With the capacities of conditioned jīvas, knowledge of the catur-vyūha is not possible. The ācārya spoke such ill words to increase their folly. The catur-vyūha is made of śuddha-sattva, delights in the play of the cit-śakti and possesses the six kinds of majesty. To call Them poor and powerless, and to think of Them so, is the trait of deluded jīvas. Such jīvas are fit only to be bewildered by māyā. Whoever cannot understand [the difference between] Vaikuṇṭha and the realm of māyā falls into just this kind of error. In his commentary on sūtras 42–45 of the second pāda of the second chapter of the Brahma-sūtra, Śrīpāda Śaṅkara made a vain attempt to refute “the doctrine of the catur-vyūha.” Below are quoted from Śrīpāda Śaṅkarācārya's commentary his words on the “catur-vyūha,” rooted in his distorted understanding.

Utpatty-asambhavāt (42) (Śaṅkara's commentary): * * * “On this the Bhāgavatas hold: Bhagavān Vāsudeva alone, stainless, whose nature is knowledge, is the highest reality. Dividing Himself fourfold, He abides in the form of the vyūha of Vāsudeva, the vyūha of Saṅkarṣaṇa, the vyūha of Pradyumna and the vyūha of Aniruddha. Vāsudeva is the name for the Supreme Self, Saṅkarṣaṇa for the jīva, Pradyumna for the mind, Aniruddha for the ego (ahaṅkāra). Of these, Vāsudeva is the highest prakṛti, and the others — Saṅkarṣaṇa and the rest — are effects. To this we say: what is asserted — that the supreme Nārāyaṇa, the Supreme Self, the Self of all, by Himself dividing Himself in many ways, abides in the form of vyūhas — is not refuted. But what is said further — that from Vāsudeva Saṅkarṣaṇa is born, from Saṅkarṣaṇa Pradyumna, and from Pradyumna Aniruddha — to this we say: the birth of the jīva called Saṅkarṣaṇa from the Supreme Self called Vāsudeva is impossible, for then defects such as impermanence would follow. If the jīva were born, defects such as impermanence would attach to it, and then liberation — attaining Bhagavān — would be impossible for it, for an effect, on reaching its cause, would dissolve into it. And the Ācārya will reject the birth of the jīva [by the sūtra] ‘The self [is not born], because śruti does not speak [of its birth], and because of eternity [known] from them.’ Therefore their construction is incoherent.”

The meaning of the commentary is this: “The Bhāgavatas hold that Bhagavān Vāsudeva is one, stainless, His body is knowledge, and He is the highest reality. He Himself has divided Himself into four and so abides. These four vyūhas are: 1) the vyūha of Vāsudeva, 2) the vyūha of Saṅkarṣaṇa, 3) the vyūha of Pradyumna, 4) the vyūha of Aniruddha; these four vyūhas are His body. Another name of Vāsudeva is ‘Paramātmā’; of Saṅkarṣaṇa, ‘jīva’; of Pradyumna, ‘mind’; and of Aniruddha, ‘ahaṅkāra.’ Of the four vyūhas, the vyūha of Vāsudeva is the highest prakṛti, that is, the root cause. Saṅkarṣaṇa and the others have arisen from the vyūha of Vāsudeva, and so Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha are the effects of that highest prakṛti. For a long time the jīva goes to the temple of Bhagavān, gathers [the articles of worship], performs worship (ijyā), studies [scripture] and practices yoga; thus it becomes free from sin, obtains a pure body and attains the highest prakṛti, Bhagavān. The great-souled Bhāgavatas say that Nārāyaṇa is beyond prakṛti, renowned as the Paramātmā, and is the Self of all — this does not contradict śruti. We also accept that He by Himself abides in the form of many vyūhas. Therefore this part of the Bhāgavata doctrine is not refuted by this sūtra. The Ācārya composed this sūtra only to reject the part where the Bhāgavatas say that from Vāsudeva Saṅkarṣaṇa was born, from Saṅkarṣaṇa Pradyumna, and from Pradyumna Aniruddha. The birth of the jīva called Saṅkarṣaṇa from the Paramātmā called Vāsudeva is utterly impossible: the jīva would then be subject to defects such as impermanence. If the jīva is born, defects such as impermanence are unavoidable for it. And if the jīva is perishable by nature, liberation — attaining Bhagavān — is impossible for it altogether. When the cause perishes, the effect must perish too. Ācārya Vedavyāsa rejected the birth of the jīva by the sūtra of the third pāda of the second chapter, ‘The self [is not born], because śruti does not speak [of its birth], and because of eternity [known] from them,’ and by rejecting its birth he will prove its eternity. Therefore this construction is incoherent.”

Na ca kartuḥ karaṇam (43) (Śaṅkara's commentary): “For this reason too their construction is incoherent: in the world we do not see an instrument, such as an axe, arising from an agent such as Devadatta. Yet the Bhāgavatas describe that from the agent, the jīva called Saṅkarṣaṇa, there arises the instrument, the mind called Pradyumna, and from that, born of the agent, arises the ego called Aniruddha. Without an example we cannot accept this. Nor do we find any such śruti.”

The meaning of the commentary is this: “There is a reason why such a construction is incoherent. In the world we do not see an instrument — a sickle and the like — arising from an agent such as Devadatta. Yet the Bhāgavatas describe that from the agent, the jīva named Saṅkarṣaṇa, there arose the instrument, the mind named Pradyumna, and from that Pradyumna, born of the agent, arises Aniruddha, the ahaṅkāra. If the Bhāgavatas cannot explain this by an example, how can it be accepted? Nor do we hear any words of śruti that disclose this truth.”

Vijñānādi-bhāve vā tad-apratiṣedhaḥ (44) (Śaṅkara's commentary): “It may also be said thus: Saṅkarṣaṇa and the others are not meant as the jīva and the rest. What, then? All of them are accepted as Lords, endowed with the attributes of the Lord — knowledge, sovereignty, power, strength, valor and splendor; all of them are Vāsudevas, faultless, without [external] support, untainted. Therefore the defect described — the impossibility of origin — does not apply to them. To this it is said: even so, tad-apratiṣedhaḥ — the impossibility of origin is still not removed. The point is that this defect, the impossibility of origin, arises in another way. How? If the intention is that these four — Vāsudeva and the others — are Lords distinct from one another, of equal attributes, and have no single self, then positing many Lords is pointless, for the Lord's work is accomplished by one Lord alone. And their own doctrine collapses, since they accept that Bhagavān Vāsudeva alone is the highest reality. If, however, the intention is that these four vyūhas of equal attributes belong to one Bhagavān, the impossibility of origin remains as before. For Saṅkarṣaṇa cannot arise from Vāsudeva, nor Pradyumna from Saṅkarṣaṇa, nor Aniruddha from Pradyumna, since there is no pre-eminence (atiśaya) among them. Between effect and cause there must be pre-eminence, as between clay and pot. Without pre-eminence one cannot establish which is the effect and which the cause. And the followers of the Pañcarātra doctrine accept no difference — whether in any one of them or in all — arising from greater or lesser knowledge, sovereignty and the like: they hold all the vyūhas to be Vāsudeva without distinction. Nor would the vyūhas of Bhagavān stop at the number four, for the whole world, from Brahmā down to a blade of grass, is understood to be a vyūha of Bhagavān."

The meaning of the commentary is this: "The Bhāgavatas may also intend the following: Saṅkarṣaṇa and the others named are not of the nature of the jīva; all of them are Lords, all possess the potency of knowledge and the potency of sovereignty, are endowed with power, valor and splendor, all are Vāsudeva, all are faultless, without [external] support and untainted. So the defect of impossibility of origin does not apply to them. To this we say: even with such an intention the defect of impossibility of origin is not removed — it remains, only in another form. Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha are different from one another and not of one self, and at the same time all are alike in attributes and all are Lords. If this is meant, one must accept many Lords. But there is no need to accept many Lords: the purpose is served by accepting one Lord. Moreover, since it is asserted that Bhagavān Vāsudeva is one, that is, without a second, and is the highest reality, the defect of contradicting one's own doctrine (siddhānta-hāni) also arises. And if this catur-vyūha belongs to Bhagavān Himself and They are all alike in attributes, the defect of impossibility of origin still cannot be avoided. For without some pre-eminence (inequality — more or less) Saṅkarṣaṇa cannot be born of Vāsudeva, Pradyumna of Saṅkarṣaṇa, or Aniruddha of Pradyumna. One must accept that there is some distinction between effect and cause, as when a pot comes from clay. Without pre-eminence one cannot point out which is the effect and which the cause. And consider further: the adherents of the Pañcarātra doctrine do not accept a difference between Vāsudeva and the others in greater or lesser knowledge and so on; on the contrary, they honor the four vyūhas as Vāsudeva without distinction. Are the vyūhas of Bhagavān exhausted by the number four? Certainly not. Both śruti and smṛti prove that the whole world, from Brahmā down to a blade of grass, is a vyūha of Bhagavān."

Vipratiṣedhāc ca (45) (Śaṅkara's commentary): “And in this scripture many kinds of contradiction are found, such as the positing of quality and possessor of qualities. For we see [statements such as]: ‘Knowledge, sovereignty, power, strength, valor and splendor are qualities; and they are the Self, the Bhagavāns, the Vāsudevas.’”

The meaning of the commentary is this: “In the Pañcarātra and other scriptures of the Bhāgavatas many contradictory constructions are seen — for instance, on the relation of quality and its possessor. It is in no way possible to be at once the quality and the possessor of qualities. Yet the Bhāgavatas say that the potency of knowledge, the potency of sovereignty, power, valor and splendor — these qualities — and Pradyumna and the others, though different, are the Self and Bhagavān Vāsudeva.”

In reply to this doctrine of Śrīpāda Śaṅkarācārya, Śrī Rūpa Prabhu writes in the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta (describing the catur-vyūha, verses 80–83): “Of the four vyūhas renowned by the name ‘Mahāvasthā,’ He [Vāsudeva] is the first; He is to be worshipped in the citta, for He is its presiding deity (adhidaivata). He is also spoken of as the seat of viśuddha-sattva. His own part is Bhagavān Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa. This Saṅkarṣaṇa is regarded as the second vyūha; He may also be called the jīva, for He is the place from which all jīvas become manifest. His luster is sweeter than myriads of full autumn moons. He is worshipped in the ahaṅkāra; He has placed His own part in Śeṣa. Becoming the indwelling ruler (antaryāmī) of Rudra, the enemy of Smara (Kāma), and of adharma, the serpents, Antaka and the enemies of the gods, He brings about the destruction of the world. The third vyūha is Pradyumna, renowned as His vilāsa. The wise worship this Pradyumna in the buddhi-tattva. In Ilāvṛta the goddess Śrī serves Him, singing His praises. His luster is like pure jāmbūnada gold, and in places like a dark rain-cloud. He is the source of the creation of the universe; He has placed His own part in Kāma. Becoming the indwelling ruler of Vidhi (Brahmā), the Prajāpatis, the attached and Smara, He properly accomplishes creation. The fourth vyūha is Aniruddha, praised as His vilāsa. The thoughtful worship this Aniruddha in the manas-tattva. Like a dark-blue cloud, He is intent on protecting the universe. Becoming the indwelling ruler of Dharma, the Manus, the gods and kings, He maintains the world. In the Mokṣa-dharma, however, it is said that Pradyumna is the presiding deity of the mind and Aniruddha of the ahaṅkāra. Yet the order given [above] is accepted in all the Pañcarātras. The Padma Purāṇa, however, says that the four vyūhas — Vāsudeva and the others — abide in order in the four directions of Paramavyoma, beginning with the east."

Of the four renowned vyūhas of Nārāyaṇa, the Lord of Mahā-Vaikuṇṭha in Paravyoma, called "Mahāvasthā," this Vāsudeva is "the first vyūha." He is to be worshipped in the citta, for He is its presiding deity and abides in viśuddha-sattva (Bhāgavatam 4.3.23). Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa is His own part, that is, His vilāsa. Saṅkarṣaṇa is called "the second vyūha," and since He is the source from which all jīvas become manifest, He is also called "jīva." The radiance of His body is sweeter than the white rays of countless full autumn moons. He is worshipped in the ahaṅkāra-tattva. He has invested His supporting potency (ādhāra-śakti) in Anantadeva, and as the antaryāmī of Rudra, the enemy of Smara, and of adharma, the serpents, Antaka and the asuras, He carries out the destruction of the world. The vilāsa-mūrti of that Saṅkarṣaṇa is Pradyumna, the third vyūha. The wise worship this Pradyumna in the buddhi-tattva. The goddess Lakṣmī serves Him in Ilāvṛta-varṣa, singing of His qualities. The radiance of His body is in some places like molten jāmbūnada gold, in others like a fresh dark rain-cloud. He is the source of the creation of the universe; He has invested His creative potency in Kandarpa. As the antaryāmī of the creator (Vidhātā), of all the Prajāpatis, of beings attached to sense objects — gods, humans and others — and of Kandarpa, He accomplishes creation. His vilāsa-mūrti is the fourth vyūha, Aniruddha. The thoughtful worship this Aniruddha in the manas-tattva. The radiance of His body is like a dark-blue cloud. He is intent on protecting the universe. As the antaryāmī of Dharma, the Manus, the gods and kings, He maintains the world. The Mokṣa-dharma names Pradyumna the presiding deity of the mind and Aniruddha the presiding deity of the ahaṅkāra. The order stated before (that is, that Pradyumna is the presiding deity of buddhi and Aniruddha of the mind) is accepted by all kinds of Pañcarātra. [The Padma Purāṇa, however, describes the four vyūhas — Vāsudeva and the others — as abiding in order in the four directions of Paravyoma, beginning with the east.]

On the vilāsa of Bhagavān and His inconceivable potency the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta (44–66) says: "But surely we hear in scripture the words of the Mahā-varāha Purāṇa: 'All the bodies of that Supreme Self are eternal and everlasting; they are neither given up nor taken on, and never anywhere born of prakṛti. They are masses of supreme bliss, knowledge through and through; all are full of every excellence and free from every fault.' And in the Śrī Nārada-pañcarātra: 'As a gem, joined with blue, yellow and other colors, takes on different appearances, so Acyuta [appears differently] according to the difference of meditation.' How, then, do you explain gradation (tāratamya) among Them? To this it is said: oneness and separateness, and likewise being a part and being the whole, are quite fitting in Him, the One, by His inconceivable, unlimited potency. Separate manifestation within oneness — as [in the Bhāgavatam 10.69.2]: 'How wonderful! The one [Kṛṣṇa], in one body, at the same time married sixteen thousand women in separate palaces.' Oneness of form within separateness — as in the Padma Purāṇa: 'That God, the Supreme Person, beyond the guṇas, having become many, again becomes one and lies down — the faultless Hari, the original creator.' That one and the same is both part and whole and has opposing potencies — as [in the Bhāgavatam 10.40.7]: 'Those absorbed in You worship You, who have many forms and one form.' And in the Kūrma Purāṇa: 'He is neither large nor small, yet in every way large and small; He is said to be colorless in every way, yet He is dark, with eyes reddish at the corners. Because He possesses majesty, Bhagavān is said to have opposing attributes. Yet faults are in no way to be ascribed to the Supreme; these attributes, though opposed, are to be reconciled in Him in every respect.' In the sixth canto — on His inconceivable potency that unites opposites — in prose (Bhāgavatam 6.9.34–37): 'This play of Yours seems hard to understand: without needing support, without a body, without waiting for our help, You Yourself, remaining unchanged — beyond the guṇas — create, destroy and maintain this world endowed with the guṇas. So do You, like a Devadatta here, fallen into the stream of the guṇas, out of dependence accept the fruits of Your good and bad deeds? Or, delighting in Yourself, tranquil, seeing all equally, do You remain indifferent? Truly, we do not know. For in You — Bhagavān, the Lord of countless excellences, whose greatness is unfathomable — the two do not contradict each other. You are beyond the reach of the disputes of disputants whose hearts and intentions are shaped by recent fancies, doubts, deliberations, false proofs and scriptures of bad logic, and who cling stubbornly to their views. In You, the One, in whom all that is made of māyā has ceased — when Your own māyā is set in between — what thing could be hard to accomplish? You have no two natures; yet You follow the opinions of people of even and uneven minds, as a piece of rope [seems] a snake and the like to those who think so.'

"Here are the kārikās: 'Without bodily effort, without the support of earth and the like, without helpers — the work of You, the changeless, is very hard to understand. By "the stream of the guṇas" the battles of the gods and asuras and so on are meant. “Fallen” means attached to it; that would be dependence — for Your dependence on the gods who have taken shelter of You is born of mercy. Hence: “Your own deeds,” that is, the good and the other, done by Your own [gods], in the form of happiness, suffering and so on — do You accept these as Your fruit? Or, delighting in Yourself, do You remain wholly indifferent to them? We do not know. But in You the two are not contradictory at all. The reason is given by the two words beginning with bhagavati, and likewise by the five words beginning with īśvare. By the word “Bhagavān” omniscience is clearly indicated, by another word the possession of good qualities, and by the word kevala the nature of Brahman. Though by the nature of Brahman there would be indifference everywhere, the first two qualities give partiality toward the devotees. “But how can one nature be twofold at one and the same time?” To this he says, “recent …” and so on — for You are beyond the disputes of such disputants, beyond their range. Therefore, when that inconceivable potency of Your own is set in between, what thing, even a contradictory one, could be hard to accomplish here? For such indeed is its inconceivability. And that it is inconceivable is understood from its being the support of many opposing actions. The author of the Brahma-sūtra says: “Because of śruti, because the basis is the word.” And the Skanda Purāṇa: “What is inconceivable should not be subjected to reasoning.” This is seen even in gems and the like. Without such potency the Supreme Lord's supreme lordship would not be established, for His greatness is spoken of as unfathomable. Ignorance or sorcery (indra-jāla) can be seen anywhere; therefore the Lord's supreme lordship is not established by them. That these are not in Him is clearly stated by the words “in whom has ceased ….” Otherwise the six words beginning with bhagavati would have been used to no purpose. Therefore, by scripture and by reason, the two do not contradict each other. Yet according to the opinions of people of high and low minds, who do not know the truth, You appear now this way, now that, like the rope. “But surely knowledge alone is Brahman, while Bhagavān has many attributes; so here too two natures are seen.” To this he says, “… no two natures …” — for there is never duality in His nature: these are certainly two attributes of the One. Therefore, if contradiction is seen in the manifestations (vilāsas) of His potency, that is His inconceivable majesty: it adorns Him and is no fault. The same statement of contradiction is found in the third canto too (Bhāgavatam 3.4.16): “You are free from desire, yet You act; You are unborn, yet You take birth; You are Time itself, yet in fear of an enemy You take refuge in a fortress and flee; You delight in Yourself, yet You live as a householder among many women. Here the intelligence of the wise is bewildered.”

If all this were not real, the intelligence of the wise would not be bewildered. Thus the cause in the pastimes is the inconceivable potency alone: as His will is, so it manifests.'"

Here the following objection may be raised. In the Mahā-varāha Purāṇa we hear: "All the bodies of that Supreme Self, Hari, are eternal, and all of them appear in the world again and again. These bodies are neither given up nor taken on, and so they are never products of prakṛti. All these bodies are condensed supreme bliss, by nature of the single taste of spirit; they are endowed with every spiritual quality and free from every fault." And the Nārada-pañcarātra says: "As a vaidūrya gem takes on blue, yellow and other colors in different places, so Bhagavān Acyuta, according to the difference of worship, manifests His form in different ways." Why, then, do you explain a gradation among these avatāras? In answer to this doubt it may be said: by the power of His inconceivable, unlimited potency, in one vessel — in one and the same Puruṣottama — oneness and separateness, being a part and being the whole, are in no way impossible or incongruous. Separate manifestation within oneness — as in the Tenth Canto (the words of Nārada): "How wonderful! One and the same Śrī Kṛṣṇa at one and the same time married sixteen thousand women in separate palaces." Oneness of form within separateness — as in the Padma Purāṇa: "That faultless original creator, beyond the guṇas, Puruṣottama, the God Hari, having taken many forms, again lies down in one form." That one and the same is both part and whole and has opposing potencies — as in the Tenth Canto: "You, of many forms, are one; the devotees whose minds are absorbed in You worship You." And the Kūrma Purāṇa says: "Bhagavān is in every respect not large, yet large; not small, yet small; colorless, yet dark, with eyes reddish at the corners. By the power of His majesty He is called the possessor of opposing forms. Yet faults are in no way to be ascribed to the Supreme Lord; on the contrary, all these mutually opposed qualities are to be reconciled in Him in every respect." And the prose of the Sixth Canto speaks of His inconceivable potency that unites opposites: "O Bhagavān, Your transcendental play, or sport, seems hard to understand; that is, the ordinary relation of cause and effect is not seen in You. For You need no support, make no bodily effort, are Yourself beyond the guṇas and do not wait for our help — and by Your own nature alone You create, maintain and destroy this world endowed with the guṇas, without undergoing any change at all. O Lord, do You, like an ordinary man named Devadatta, fallen into the stream of the guṇas in this world, out of dependence regard as Your own the fruits of action — happiness, suffering and the like? Or, without losing Your cit-śakti, delighting in Yourself and at peace, do You remain indifferent to all this, that is, abide only as a witness? This we do not know. You are full of the six opulences, Your excellences cannot be counted to the end, You are the Lord, the ruler of all, and Your greatness cannot become the object of anyone's intellect. There are disputants whose intelligence is covered and scattered by fancies that claim to reveal the nature of things, by doubts, deliberations, false proofs and scriptures full of bad logic; their disputes cannot touch You. In You, the possessor of inconceivable potency, both of these qualities are not opposed to each other. You are beyond all material knowledge and consist of pure knowledge alone; when Your potency of will is set in between, what work could be hard to accomplish in You? The impersonal and the personal, or that which has spiritual qualities and that which is without qualities, are not two different natures of Yours: they are only two perceptions of Your one nature, according to the difference of conceptions. But just as, for those whose minds are occupied with a snake and the like, one piece of rope appears in different forms — as a snake and so on — so You follow the intentions of those whose minds are even and uneven, that is, unsteady — that is, You manifest different doctrines among them."

Here is the kārikā on this passage: "Without bodily effort, without the support of earth and the like, without helpers — the stick, the wheel and so on — Your work, free from change, is very hard to understand. By 'the stream of the guṇas' the battles of the gods and asuras and the like are meant. 'Fallen' means attached; this is what is called pāratantrya, that is, dependence. For Your dependence on the gods who have taken shelter of You is born of mercy (that is, Your independence does not suffer by it). Therefore — do You regard as Your own 'Your own deeds,' that is, 'the deeds of Your own people' — the good and bad fruits in the form of happiness, suffering and the like earned by Your gods? Or, delighting in Yourself, do You remain wholly indifferent to them? This we do not know. But in You (the possessor of opposing qualities) both are possible. The reason is the two epithets beginning with bhagavati and the five epithets beginning with īśvare. Of these, by the word bhagavat omniscience is clearly understood, by the epithet aparigaṇita and the others the possession of good qualities, and by the word kevala the nature of Brahman. Though by the nature of Brahman one might expect indifference everywhere, the two qualities beginning with bhagavati make partiality toward the devotees possible. If you say, 'How can one nature be twofold at the same time?' — in answer to this doubt it is said, 'arvācīna …' and so on; that is, You are beyond the disputes of those disputants who cannot grasp the nature of the Truth — You are out of their reach. Therefore, when the inconceivable potency of Your own is set in between, what work, even a contradictory one, could be hard to accomplish in You? Your nature is inconceivable to disputants who lack devotion; Your potency is likewise inconceivable. Only by seeing that it is the support of many opposing actions can one infer that this potency of Yours is inconceivable. The author of the Brahma-sūtra has said: ‘The inconceivable object of service is within the reach of śruti alone, that is, of the evidence of the word.’ And the Skanda Purāṇa says: ‘One should not build inferences about the inconceivable.’ Such inconceivable power can be noticed even in material gems, potent herbs and the like. Without such inconceivable potency the Supreme Lord's supreme lordship could not be established. It is by the power of this inconceivable potency that the Lord's greatness is glorified as unfathomable. Ignorance and the art of sorcery can be seen anywhere; therefore ignorance, sorcery and the like do not prove the Supreme Lord's supreme lordship. For the epithet uparata and the others show that neither is present in the Lord. If ignorance and sorcery were accepted in the Lord, the use of the six epithets beginning with bhagavati would become pointless. Therefore, by the scripture and reasoning that reveal the inconceivable potency, these two qualities — that He protects the universe and that He is indifferent to it — cannot contradict each other. Just as for those whose minds, through ignorance, are occupied with a snake and the like, a piece of rope appears as a snake and so on, so You, for those whose thoughts are occupied with various conceptions and who therefore lack true knowledge, appear in this or that way according to their opinions. If you say, ‘Knowledge alone is called Brahman, and that which bears many attributes is called “Bhagavān”; so here two different natures are seen,’ — to remove this doubt it is said, ‘for there are not two natures.’ By this no duality at all is asserted of His nature; only two attributes of one and the same nature are determined. Therefore, if contradiction is seen in the manifestations of His potency, that is called inconceivable majesty: it adorns Him and is no fault at all. Such contradiction is mentioned in the Third Canto too: ‘Action in Him who is free from material endeavor; birth in the Unborn; He who is Time itself takes refuge in a fortress out of fear of the enemy and flees from Mathurā; He who delights in Himself enjoys with sixteen thousand women — in all this even the intelligence of the knowers of truth is bewildered.’ If all these deeds were not real, the intelligence of the knowers of truth would never be bewildered. Thus the cause of the pastimes is Bhagavān's inconceivable potency: as His will is, such are the pastimes it manifests.”

The Pañcarātra scripture is a book that unfolds the Vedas; it is wholly approved by the Vedas and devoted to the section on worship (upāsanā-kāṇḍa). It is not a rājasic or tāmasic tantra: the wise know it as the "Sātvata-saṁhitā." Śrī Nārāyaṇa Himself spoke it; this is specially stated in the Mahābhārata, in the Mokṣa-dharma-parva of the Śānti-parva, Chapters 3–9, verse 68. It was propagated by divine sages (divya-sūris) — Śrī Nārada and others — free from the four defects beginning with bhrama. The book Śrī Bhāgavatam is also known as the "Sātvata-saṁhitā." Śaṅkara puts forward as a pūrvapakṣa, as if it were the Pañcarātra doctrine, what is wholly opposed and contrary to that doctrine, and then tries to refute it. This is merely an utter violation of logic and truth, and below it is shown briefly by way of refutation.

(1) In his commentary on sūtra 42 Śrīpāda Śaṅkara called Saṅkarṣaṇa "the jīva." In fact the Bhāgavatas have never called Saṅkarṣaṇa "the jīva." He Himself is Adhokṣaja, Acyuta, viṣṇu-tattva, the presiding Lord of the jīva, the complete whole (aṁśī), all-pervading consciousness (vibhu-caitanya), the cause of all material and transcendental creation — not the jīva, a part, a minute consciousness (aṇu-caitanya). The jīvātmā has neither birth nor death — this is accepted by the Bhāgavatas and by any follower of śruti who studies and hears the scriptures.

(2) In reply to the commentary on sūtra 43: the manifestation of all the other viṣṇu-tattvas from mūla-Saṅkarṣaṇa is described in the Brahma-saṁhitā: "As the flame of a lamp, passing to another [wick], itself shines as a lamp, with the same qualities though its cause is separate, so He who in just this way shines forth as Viṣṇu — Govinda, the original Puruṣa — Him I worship." That is: "As the ray of a lamp on another base acts as a separate lamp — having the same qualities as the first lamp — so the original Puruṣa Govinda manifests Himself by becoming Viṣṇu. Him I worship."

(3) In the commentary on sūtra 44 Śrīpāda puts forward the pūrvapakṣa: "They are different from one another and not of one self." The followers of the Pañcarātra never accept this as their doctrine. In his commentary on sūtra 42, as quoted above, Śrīpāda Śaṅkara himself accepted: "that He by Himself, dividing Himself in many ways, abides in the form of vyūhas — this is not refuted," that is, "that He by Himself abides in the form of many vyūhas we too accept as agreeing with śruti." This contradicts the pūrvapakṣa objection in this sūtra. In other words, his commentaries on sūtras 44 and 42 contradict each other: what he accepted before, he now tries to refute as a pūrvapakṣa. By accepting the catur-vyūha of Nārāyaṇa the Bhāgavatas do not thereby accept “a doctrine of many Lords.” They know the Truth as Bhagavān, nondual Knowledge, and never preach a plurality of Gods contrary to the Vedas. They firmly believe in the inconceivable great potency of Śrī Nārāyaṇa. See the paraphrase of the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta given above. Among these four tattvas — Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha — there is no relation of cause and effect: “there is nothing else beyond the existent and the nonexistent”; “this difference between body and the possessor of the body never exists in the Lord” (Kūrma Purāṇa). All of Them are the tattva that rules over māyā, the presiding Lords of śuddha-sattva, turīya; in Their manifestation there can be no power of māyā, no change, no transformation, no fragmentation. They are the one nondual Knowledge, Adhokṣaja, the complete Reality. The evidence of śruti: “Oṁ. That is full, this is full; from the full the full comes forth. When the full is taken from the full, the full remains.” (Bṛhad-āraṇyaka Upaniṣad 5.1.) The whole world, from Brahmā down to a blade of grass, is the gross, external manifestation of Bhagavān Viṣṇu. Those who teach the merging of spirit and matter (cid-acit-samanvaya) vainly try to identify it with, or make it equal to, the Śrī catur-vyūha, the Lord of the three potencies. This is mere atheism rooted in extreme enmity toward Bhagavān. The world from Brahmā down to a blade of grass, or the universal form of Viṣṇu, is His external splendor, the eka-pāda-vibhūti; it is connected with māyā, or prakṛti, and is therefore material. To think the catur-vyūha, the Lord of spirit and matter, equal to it, or to strive to make it so, is the trait of the māyāvādīs.

(4) In reply to the commentary on sūtra 45 — a paraphrase of the words quoted in the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta in describing the transcendence of Bhagavān's qualities (97–99): “If you say, ‘Every quality is a product of prakṛti and therefore like a mirage; what wonder, then, that they cannot be counted?’ — you have no right to say so. Bhagavān's qualities can never be material: all His qualities constitute His very nature, and so all of them are certainly, by nature, bliss. As in the Brahma-tarka: ‘Bhagavān Hari possesses qualities that constitute His own nature; therefore the qualities of Viṣṇu and of liberated jīvas are never separate from their nature.’ In the Śrī Viṣṇu Purāṇa: ‘May Hari be gracious — the supreme, utterly pure, original Puruṣa, the Supreme Lord untouched by the material qualities such as sattva.’ And in that same Viṣṇu Purāṇa: ‘Knowledge, power, strength, sovereignty, valor and splendor in their fullness — without the heya, that is, material, qualities — are what the word bhagavat denotes.' And in the Padma Purāṇa: 'That the Supreme Lord is glorified in scripture as nirguṇa (without qualities) means only that He has no heya, that is, material, qualities.' And in the first chapter of the first canto: 'O Dharma, the qualities I have listed, and many other great qualities, abide eternally in Śrī Kṛṣṇa; the qualities sought by those who desire greatness never leave Śrī Kṛṣṇa.'[19] Thus this Śrī Kṛṣṇa possesses countless transcendental qualities and boundless potency, and His form is a mass of complete bliss." See Bhāgavatam 3.26.21, 25, 27, 28.

Śrī Śaṅkara rejected certain parts even of the Pañcarātra scripture, spoken by Bhagavān and leading to the highest good: he suspected that, like the scriptures of Kapila and others, they contradict śruti and are therefore not authoritative. The Pañcarātra scripture says: "From Vāsudeva, the supreme cause, whose nature is Brahman, was born the jīva named 'Saṅkarṣaṇa'; from Saṅkarṣaṇa, the mind named 'Pradyumna'; and from the mind, the ahaṅkāra named 'Aniruddha.'" [The objection is:] one cannot speak here of the birth of the jīva, for that contradicts śruti. With the words "The spiritual jīvātmā is never born and never dies" (Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.18), all the śrutis speak of the jīva as beginningless, that is, as unborn. Therefore what is meant here is the appearance of the presiding deities of the jīva, the mind and the ahaṅkāra (sūtra 42).

It is said that from Saṅkarṣaṇa the mind named Pradyumna is born. Here too it is impossible for the instrument, the mind, to be born from the agent, the jīva, for śruti says that "the vital breath, the mind and all the senses are born from the Paramātmā." If, then, the mind is said to be born from the jīva, this contradicts such words of śruti as "they are born from the Paramātmā." Therefore, since this statement establishes a meaning contrary to śruti, its authority is rejected (sūtra 43).

[The answer is:] Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha have the nature of the Supreme Brahman, and therefore the authority of the scripture that teaches this can never be rejected. That is, these vyūhas — Saṅkarṣaṇa and the others — are by no means meant to be like ordinary jīvas, liable to fall under the sway of māyā: all of Them are Lords, all possess the six opulences — knowledge, sovereignty, power, strength, valor, splendor and the rest. Therefore the Pañcarātra doctrine is not without authority. Only those unversed in the Pañcarātra, or the Bhāgavata doctrine, could say such unscriptural things as "it speaks of the birth of the jīva, and that is a contradiction." The Bhāgavata doctrine is this. He who loves the devotees who have taken shelter of Him, and who is called the Supreme Brahman named Vāsudeva, by His own will abides in four ways, so that those who seek His shelter may approach Him. Thus the Pauṣkara-saṁhitā says: "The scripture in which brāhmaṇas, as is their duty, worship the cāturātmya (the catur-vyūha), calling It by names handed down in succession — that is the 'āgama.'" And the Sātvata-saṁhitā says that the worship of this cāturātmya is worship of the Supreme Brahman named Vāsudeva. The Supreme Brahman named Vāsudeva, whose body is the fullness of the six opulences, is divided [into forms] as sūkṣma, vyūha and vibhava. The devotees, each according to his qualification (adhikāra), worship Him by acts informed by knowledge, and so fully attain Him. By worshipping the vibhavas — Nṛsiṁha, Raghunātha, or the avatāras Matsya, Kūrma and others — one attains the vyūhas, Saṅkarṣaṇa and the others; and by worshipping the vyūhas one attains the Supreme Brahman named Vāsudeva. For the Pauṣkara-saṁhitā says: "By this scripture, through acts informed by knowledge, one attains the unmanifest Supreme Brahman named Vāsudeva." Hence it is established that Saṅkarṣaṇa and the others too are the Supreme Brahman, for They too have forms by Their own will. The śrutis declare: "He, without being born as material things are born, descends, that is, appears, in many forms." Out of love for those who have taken shelter of Him He accepts form by His own will, and so the authority of the Pañcarātra scripture, which teaches this, is not rejected. In this scripture Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna and Aniruddha are the presiding deities of, respectively, the jīva, the mind and the ahaṅkāra; therefore there is no contradiction in Their being called by the words "jīva" and so on. In the same way Brahman is called by the words "ākāśa," "prāṇa" and so on (sūtra 44).

In this scripture the birth of the jīva is denied. For the Parama-saṁhitā says: "The three guṇas — unconscious, serving another's purpose, always subject to change — are the field of those who perform karma: such is the form of prakṛti. The Puruṣa's connection with it is by way of pervasion, and that this connection is beginningless is also true." Thus in all the saṁhitās the "jīva" is eternal, and therefore the Pañcarātra doctrine denies its birth. Whatever is born must perish: accepting the birth of the jīva, one would have to accept its destruction as well. But since the jīva is eternal, its birth is excluded of itself, by its eternity. Above, the Parama-saṁhitā said: "the form of prakṛti is always subject to change"; so birth, destruction and the like should be understood as included in this “constant change.” Thus Śaṅkarācārya's charge that Saṅkarṣaṇa and the others are born as jīvas has been refuted (sūtra 45). See Śrīdhara [Svāmī]'s commentary on Bhāgavatam 3.1.34.

49 Thus I have briefly explained the eighth verse. Now hear attentively the meaning of the ninth.

The meaning of the ninth of the fourteen opening verses —

50 “I take refuge in Śrī Nityānanda Rāma. A part of Him is the original Lord, the Puruṣa, the master of māyā, who lies in person in the midst of the Causal Ocean, His body the shelter of countless universes.” (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)[4]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow down to Nityānanda-Rāma, one part of whom is the master of māyā, Kāraṇābdhiśāyī, the shelter of the host of universes, the first deity, the Puruṣa-avatāra.

Anubhāṣya.

sākṣāt māyā-bhartā (the very master of māyā, her Lord) ajāṇḍa-saṅghāśrayāṅgaḥ (He whose body is the shelter of the host of universes: ajāṇḍa, universes; saṅgha, host) kāraṇāmbhodhi-madhye (upon the waters of the Causal Ocean) śete (lies) (He) — śrī-pumān ādi-devaḥ (the first Puruṣa-avatāra), yasya (of Śrī Nityānanda) ekāṁśaḥ (one part); taṁ śrī-nityānanda-rāmaṁ (to that Śrī Nityānanda-Rāma) (I) prapadye (surrender).

Description of the Causal Waters —

51 Outside Vaikuṇṭha is the luminous abode, and beyond it lies what is called the Kāraṇārṇava, the Causal Ocean.

The Causal Ocean at the border of Paravyoma —

52 Encircling Vaikuṇṭha is an ocean, endless and shoreless; it has no bound.

Anubhāṣya.

Jalanidhi (ocean): the "Virajā," or the "Causal Waters" (see Madhya 15.175–176; Madhya 20.268–269; and Madhya 21.52).

*The great elements and all else in Vaikuṇṭha are beyond māyā —*

53 In Vaikuṇṭha earth and all the elements are spiritual; material elements never arise there.

Anubhāṣya.
Māyika bhūta (the elements of māyā): the five great elements, earth and the rest.

The spiritual nature of the Causal Waters —

54 That spiritual water is the supreme cause; a single drop of it is the Gaṅgā, purifier of the fallen.

Anubhāṣya.
Kāraṇa (cause): although it is a designation (upādhi) connected with māyā, in reality it is free of rajas and tamas mixed with sattva; that is, it consists of sattva. See Ādi 2.53.

Saṅkarṣaṇa of Paravyoma, in one part of Himself, is Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī —

55 In that Causal Ocean the same Saṅkarṣaṇa lies in the form of one of His parts.

*He is the first Puruṣa-avatāra, the one who glances at māyā —*

56 He is the Puruṣa, creator of the mahat-tattva, the cause of the world. This first avatāra casts His glance upon māyā.

Māyā* does not touch the Causal Ocean —*

57 The potency māyā stays outside the Causal Ocean; māyā cannot touch its waters.

*The two forms of māyā, "pradhāna" and "prakṛti" —*

58 That māyā exists in two ways; as the material cause of the world it is called pradhāna or prakṛti.

Anubhāṣya.

"Pradhāna" and "prakṛti": see Madhya 20.271. Śrī Jīva Prabhu writes in the Paramātma-sandarbha (section 49):

"This māyā has two portions. One is the efficient portion (nimitta): it consists of the guṇas and is called māyā. The other is the material portion (upādāna): it is substance and is called pradhāna. The difference between them is described in four verses (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.24.1–4). … (section 53) Elsewhere (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.63.26) the differences between these two, the material and the efficient, are also stated according to the difference in their functions: 'Time, destiny, karma, the jīva, his nature, the subtle elements, the field, the vital air, the ego, the transformations, their aggregate, and the flow like seed and sprout — this is Your māyā. I take shelter of You, the limit of its negation.' Here time, destiny, karma and nature are efficient portions; the rest are material portions. The jīva, who possesses them, is of a dual nature: thus a particle of the efficient potency is present within the material class as well. … (section 55) The potency well known by the name māyā, as the efficient portion, is seen to be threefold: knowledge, desire and action. … Now the characteristic of pradhāna, the material portion (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 3.26.10): 'That which is made of the three guṇas, unmanifest, eternal, consisting of cause and effect, without distinctions and yet containing distinctions, they call pradhāna and prakṛti.' That which is made of the three guṇas — the combination of the three guṇas, sattva and the others — is what they call the unmanifest, pradhāna and prakṛti. Why is it called unmanifest? It is 'without distinctions': the three guṇas are in balance in it, so its distinctions are not manifest; hence one understands why it is also called avyākṛta, the undeveloped. Why is it called pradhāna? It 'contains distinctions': the mahat and the other distinctions are effects of its own portions, and it is their shelter and therefore superior (śreṣṭha) to them. … The efficient portion is māyā; the material portion is pradhāna."

Bhagavān's external potency, māyā, has two portions: the efficient portion, "māyā made of the guṇas," and the material portion, "pradhāna made of substance." The mutual difference between these two names is described in four verses of the twenty-fourth chapter of the eleventh canto of the Bhāgavatam.

Elsewhere, in the twenty-sixth verse of the sixty-third chapter of the tenth canto, the two portions — material and efficient — are divided according to the difference in their functions: “O Bhagavān! Agitating ‘time,’ efficient ‘karma,’ ‘destiny,’ which brings forth the fruits, and its impression, ‘nature’ (svabhāva) — this is the conditioned jīva, marked by these four efficient portions of māyā. The subtle elements are ‘substance’; prakṛti is the ‘field’; the sūtra is the ‘vital air’; ahaṅkāra is the ‘self’; and the eleven senses and earth, water, fire, air and ether are the sixteen transformations; their total aggregate is the ‘body.’ From the body comes karma as a seed, and from karma the body as a sprout: this endless flow is ‘māyā.’ O Prabhu, You are the Truth at which all this is negated; You I worship.” “Although the jīva is a particle of the efficient potency, he possesses portions of both natures and so follows the material class as well.” The potency known by the word “māyā,” the efficient portion, has three divisions: “knowledge,” “desire” and “action.” The characteristic of “pradhāna,” the material portion: “That in which the three guṇas — sattva, rajas and tamas — are combined is called ‘the unmanifest,’ ‘pradhāna’ and ‘prakṛti.’ The reason for the name ‘unmanifest’ is this: it is without distinctions — the three guṇas are in balance in it — so its distinctive qualities are not manifest; therefore pradhāna also received the name avyākṛta. The reason for the name ‘pradhāna’: the mahat-tattva and the other distinctions are māyā's own effects, and she, like a distinct object, is their shelter and is therefore superior to them.” … In the efficient portion, “māyā”; in the material portion, “pradhāna.”

Māyā*, made of the guṇas, is never the chief cause of the world —*

59 Inert prakṛti is not the cause of the world; Kṛṣṇa shows her mercy by infusing her with His potency.

*By the power of Bhagavān's glance prakṛti becomes the secondary cause of the world —*

60 By Kṛṣṇa’s potency prakṛti becomes a secondary cause, just as iron burns by the power of fire.

Bhagavān is the original cause of the world —

61 Therefore Kṛṣṇa is the original cause of the world. To call prakṛti the cause is like taking the teats on a goat's neck for an udder.

Anubhāṣya.

See Madhya 20.259–261. The external potency, māyā, is known in the material portion of the world by the names "pradhāna" and "prakṛti," and in the efficient portion of the world by the name "māyā." Inert prakṛti is not the cause of the world. For Kṛṣṇa, as Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī Mahā-Viṣṇu, grants prakṛti the material, substantial potency and so infuses her with power. The example is red-hot iron. Iron has no "power" to burn or give heat, but touched by fire, red-hot iron can burn and heat other things. In the same way inert prakṛti, which is like iron, has no independent capacity to be the substance or the material cause. Only when the glance-potency of Kāraṇodakaśāyī, who is like fire, is infused into her does iron-like prakṛti, a mere likeness of the material cause, acquire the power to burn and give heat. To regard prakṛti, known as the material, as the material cause of the world is therefore sheer delusion. Śrī Kapiladeva also says: "As the firebrand, the sparks and the smoke are born of the fire itself and are thought of as one with it, yet the fire is distinct from the firebrand…" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 3.28.40) Smoke, the burning log and the sparks contain the substance of fire, and so they are spoken of as one with fire; nevertheless fire is something distinct from the firebrand. "The elements," like the smoke, "the jīva," like the sparks, and "pradhāna," like the firebrand — all of them receive their powers from Bhagavān, who is like the fire, the substance of everything, and so each displays its own separate identity. Even so, the substance of them all is Bhagavān. "Pradhāna" is held to be the material of the world, but it appears as such only through the substance Bhagavān has placed in it. "Pradhāna" cannot be an independent material cause separate from Bhagavān. To forget Kṛṣṇa, the root shelter of all material causes, and to ascribe that role to the prakṛti of Sāṅkhya is as fruitless as expecting milk from the teat-like lumps of flesh on a goat's neck.

Śrī Nārāyaṇa is the efficient cause —

62 In her aspect as māyā I call her the efficient cause of the world; but even that is not so, for the true maker and cause is Nārāyaṇa.

The original Director is Bhagavān, the all-pervading Consciousness —

63 As the potter is the efficient cause of the pot, so the Puruṣa-avatāra is the maker of the world.

*Kṛṣṇa creates the world through māyā —*

64 Kṛṣṇa is the maker, and māyā only helps Him, as the wheel, the stick and other tools are causes of the pot.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Beyond the abode of Paravyoma lies the effulgent "abode of Brahman," and beyond that the "Causal Ocean" (Kāraṇa-samudra). The spiritual world is free of causes, while māyā is full of them. The region between the two is called the "Causal Ocean," an ocean of spiritual water. For the glance of Bhagavān, who lies upon that water, is directed toward māyā beyond it, and it carries out creation and the other acts. Kṛṣṇa and the Lord of Paravyoma are Themselves free of creation and such acts, and no act connected with māyā takes place in Their svarūpa. Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa, by a portion of Himself — His glance (īkṣaṇa) — lies in that ocean and creates the mahat-tattva; He is the first avatāra. Māyā-śakti stays outside the Causal Ocean, and Bhagavān casts His glance upon her. Māyā cannot touch the Causal Ocean. Bhagavān's glance enters māyā and makes her active. Māyā exists in two forms: as "pradhāna," the material cause of the world, and as "māyā," its efficient cause. Prakṛti is in truth inert. But when the power of Bhagavān's glance is infused into her, by that power prakṛti becomes the "secondary cause" of creating the world — just as fire, entering iron, gives it the power to burn. Kṛṣṇa, therefore, is the original cause of the world, and prakṛti's being its substantial cause is like the nipples on a goat's neck. Māyā in her portion — that is, the portion made of the guṇas — is called the efficient cause; yet even then the efficient cause is Nārāyaṇa. When a pot is made, the wheel, the rod and the like, as well as the potter, are its efficient causes. Nārāyaṇa is the efficient cause in the potter's place (the chief one), and māyā the efficient cause in the place of the wheel and rod (the secondary one). So, just as without a potter there is no pot, without Nārāyaṇa there is no world. The efficient cause made of the guṇas, in the place of the wheel and rod, works as the helper of Nārāyaṇa, the root efficient cause.

*Kāraṇābdhiśāyī glances at māyā and brings the jīvas into manifestation —*

65 From afar the Puruṣa glances upon māyā and places in her the seed — the jīvas.

*By a semblance of His body He touches māyā, and so Bhagavān Himself is the material cause —*

66 By a mere semblance of His body He unites with māyā, and from māyā the hosts of universes are then born.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Vedic view, the world is created only by the joining of potency that comes from the Reality itself, and in that form it appears before the conditioned jīva. In the non-Vedic view, the visible world is born of prakṛti. The potency of the Reality works in three ways: as cit, as acit, and as a potency that partakes of both. Some, following a path foreign to the Śrutis, think that the world arose from inert prakṛti; the Vedas do not accept that view. The Reality, Bhagavān, is nondifferent from His spiritual potency. When the cit-śakti is infused into the acit potency, a temporary, perishable semblance of spiritual being appears. Bhagavān's jīva-śakti, called taṭasthā, combines cit and acit. It is eternally subordinate to the spiritual potency, yet from time without beginning it is liable to wander in the visible world, the transformation of the acit potency. Cut off from the Reality, the jīva misuses pure spirit, and this gradually becomes his experience of bondage. In truth, once the jīva knows his own svarūpa, he can understand that readiness to serve is the ground of his eternal highest good. When he turns away from service, this potency called taṭasthā imagines itself the possessor of potency and sets out to enjoy. To become masters of acit, his senses begin to act against the purely spiritual potency. Only Kṛṣṇa's own potency gives power to His acit potency, which is of a different nature (vijātīya). An example: fire and its power to burn, infused into iron that has no fire, display the iron as fire. In truth the acit potency gains its activity only from Kṛṣṇa's cit-śakti. The taṭasthā jīva, driven by the acit potency, thinks that the visible material world is born of prakṛti. But the liberated jīva, situated in pure spirit, can understand that the cit-śakti of the Possessor of potency imparts a share of strength to the acit potency and so makes it active. Prakṛti, the root cause of the acit potency, brings with it every kind of undesirability, limitation and inferiority. A jīva who follows reasoning in the conceit of his bondage sees the goat's milk-giving udder and yet vainly seeks milk from the teat-like growths on her neck. Equally foolish is it to call prakṛti, whose root is acit, the cause of the material world. Bhagavān's acit potency, "māyā," appears before the jīva who is averse to Hari as the "efficient" and the "material" cause and turns him away from accepting the true Reality. When knowledge of his svarūpa dawns, the jīva notices the twofold action of the acit potency: "covering" (āvaraṇī) and "projecting" (vikṣepātmikā). A thing such as a pot has a twofold cause: the potter is the efficient cause, while the clay, the wheel, the rod and the like are the material cause and the instruments. In the same way, when one considers the Reality, the controller of the visible world and its elements is shown to be the Possessor of potency (śaktimat-tattva). If, however, one considers the potencies separately, māyā, made of the three guṇas, governs the elements — the material portion — through the guṇas. The taṭasthā-śakti, the jīva, turning away from Hari in this visible world, takes on the role of enjoyer. That the Reality is perceived in the visible world as acit is merely the fruit of aversion to Kṛṣṇa. The perception of acit displays enjoyment, that is, devotion to the senses. But in perceiving Bhagavān with readiness to serve, the jīva sees his own relationship with Him. Kṛṣṇa is the cause of the eternal spiritual world. He is also the cause of the world of acit, whose truth is covered, and He is the root cause and ordainer of the jīva called taṭasthā. The perception of acit is the work of Bhagavān's external potency, and the perception of cit is the work of His internal potency. From the word born of spiritual perception we can learn that every attribute of independent agency and of being the source of all is established in the Reality, Bhagavān. That Reality is the Great (Bṛhat), and His minute fragments are what the word "jīva" denotes. The Reality, Bhagavān, though divided, does not display the quality of fragmentation; and fragmented perception is never identical with undivided perception. In terms of pervaded and pervader, Brahman and the jīva are of the same kind. Yet the Lord is the master of māyā, while the dependent is subject to māyā. But when one who is subject to māyā becomes subject to the Lord of māyā, his subjection to māyā can no longer remain.

The fruit of Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī's glance —

67 Into all those countless, endless universes the Puruṣa enters, taking as many forms.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The Kāraṇābdhiśāyī Puruṣa casts His glance upon māyā from afar. That glance, by nature a fruit of cit, acts in two ways. As particles of His rays He places countless jīvas within māyā, and Himself, uniting with māyā by a semblance of His body (aṅgābhāsa), creates countless universes. He enters each of them in the form of a Puruṣa. "Aṅgābhāsa" means a mere semblance of bodily contact; in truth there is no contact of His body.

With His exhalation and inhalation the universes are created and dissolved —

68 When the breath goes out of the Puruṣa's nostrils, the universes become manifest with His exhalation.

69 And when the breath enters again, the universes enter the Puruṣa's body with it.

In His bodily pores are countless universes —

70 As specks of dust move through the holes of a lattice window, so hosts of universes move through the pores of the Puruṣa's skin.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I worship the original Person Govinda, whose kalā is that Mahā-Viṣṇu from whose bodily pores all the lords of the universes are born and live for the span of one of His exhalations.

And where is Your greatness, when countless such universes drift like atoms through the pores of Your skin, as through the openings of a lattice?" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.14.11)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Where am I, enclosed in this body made of prakṛti, the mahat-tattva, ahaṅkāra and the five elements and measuring seven spans? And where is Your greatness, such that all the universes, like the finest particles, wander through the openings of Your bodily pores? That is, my body — the universe — is nothing compared with Your greatness.

Anubhāṣya.

After stealing the calves, Brahmā prayed to atone for his offense. This is one of those prayers:

*The relationship of mūla-Saṅkarṣaṇa, Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa and the three Puruṣas —*

73 A part of a part is called a kalā. Śrī Balarāma is Govinda's second body.

Anubhāṣya.
Pratimūrti (image): the second body (Ādi 5.4–5; Madhya 20.174).

74 One of His forms is Śrī Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa, and Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa's part, the Puruṣa, is counted as a kalā.

75 He whom I call a kalā is Mahā-Viṣṇu. He is the source of the Puruṣa-avatāras, ever victorious.

Anubhāṣya.
The words "Mahā-Viṣṇu" and "Mahāpuruṣāvatārī" (the source of the Puruṣa-avatāras) refer to Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī.

76 The Lords who lie in the Garbha and Kṣīra oceans are both called Puruṣas, and He whose parts They are is Viṣṇu, the abode of all the universes.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Balarāma, the vilāsa-mūrti of Kṛṣṇa, is mūla-Saṅkarṣaṇa, the original Saṅkarṣaṇa. A portion of His svarūpa in Paravyoma is Saṅkarṣaṇa. His portion is Kāraṇābdhiśāyī Mahā-Viṣṇu; He is a portion of a portion and is therefore called a "kalā." The two Puruṣas, Garbhodaśāyī and Kṣīrodaśāyī, are portions of Mahā-Viṣṇu.

Anubhāṣya.
The characteristic of the Puruṣa: the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, in describing the avatāras (section 4), paraphrases a verse of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa (6.8.59) quoted there: "I always bow down to that imperishable Puruṣa. He is a portion of Kṛṣṇa, Puruṣottama, who is free from the six kinds of change. He has contact with the guṇas, that is, He glances at prakṛti, the mahat and the other material things. In truth He never gives up His one svarūpa, yet He divides into many portions of Himself and expands all living beings. He is pure, that is, free from contact with māyā, and yet He appears impure, as if in contact with māyā. And He is eternally spiritual." Śrī Rūpa's kārikā on this verse: "That portion of the Supreme Lord who seems to partake of the guṇas of pradhāna, who casts His glance upon it and performs the other acts, and who has many avatāras, is known as the Puruṣa." That is, the portion of the Supreme Lord who, as if in contact with the guṇas of pradhāna, glances at prakṛti, the mahat-tattva and the rest, and who manifests the various avatāras — that portion the scriptures call the "Puruṣa."

77 "Viṣṇu has three forms called Puruṣas: the first creates the mahat, the second abides within the universe, and the third dwells in all beings. Knowing Them, one is set free." (Sātvata-tantra; Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Pūrva-khaṇḍa, 2.9)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the eternal abode Viṣṇu has three forms. The first is Kāraṇābdhiśāyī Mahā-Viṣṇu, the creator of the mahat-tattva. The second is Garbhodaśāyī, the Puruṣa within the aggregate universe. The third is Kṣīrodaśāyī, the Puruṣa within each individual universe; He is the indwelling Lord (antaryāmī) and the Paramātmā of every jīva. Whoever can know the truth of these three is freed from material intelligence.

Anubhāṣya.

viṣṇoḥ tu puruṣākhyāni trīṇi rūpāṇi viduḥ (Viṣṇu is known to have three forms called Puruṣas). Of them, ekam (the first) tu mahataḥ (of the mahat-tattva) sraṣṭṛ (the creator — the indwelling Lord of prakṛti), dvitīyaṁ tu aṇḍa-saṁsthitam (the second, who dwells in the universe, its indwelling Lord), tṛtīyaṁ sarva-bhūta-stham (the third, who dwells in all beings, the indwelling Lord of the jīvas). tāni rūpāṇi jñātvā vimucyate (knowing these forms, the knower is freed from the bonds of māyā).

Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī is the source of all the avatāras, beginning with Matsya —

78 Though I call Him a kalā of Kṛṣṇa, He is the source of Matsya, Kūrma and the other avatāras.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 1, Chapter 3, verse 28)*

79 "All these (avatāras) are portions (aṁśa) and parts of portions (kalā) of the Puruṣa, but Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself. Age after age They bring happiness to the world when it is troubled by the enemies of Indra." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.3.28)[5]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
See Ādi 2.67.

The work of the three Puruṣa-avatāras —

80 That Puruṣa creates, maintains and dissolves the world; He sends forth many avatāras and sustains the world.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
That Puruṣa-avatāra (as the protector of the world) is Kṣīrodaśāyī.

Anubhāṣya.
"He is the storehouse and the imperishable seed of the many avatāras; by portions of His portions the gods, animals, humans and others are created." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.3.5) As Kāraṇābdhiśāyī He is the cause of creation, maintenance and dissolution; as Garbhodaśāyī, the abode where the many avatāras are born; and as Kṣīrodaśāyī, the Lord of the earth.

The avatāras are only portions —

81 The part that descends for creation and the rest I call by the name avatāra.

Anubhāṣya.
The Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, describing the characteristics of the avatāras (section 1), says: "When the forms mentioned before appear for the work of the universe, as if for the first time, either themselves or through another medium, they are then called avatāras. That medium is either a tad-ekātma-rūpa or His devotee — like Śeṣaśāyī and others, or like Vasudeva and others." That is, when the original form mentioned before, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, appears for the work of the universe either Himself or through a medium, He is called an "avatāra." The medium is of two kinds: a tad-ekātma-rūpa and a devotee. Śeṣaśāyī is a tad-ekātma-rūpa, while Vasudeva and others are devotees. Śrī Baladeva's commentary: "'Themselves' means without a medium; 'through another medium' — if they appear in the world in either way, they are then called avatāras. Descent from what lies beyond the world into the world is indeed avatāra. Through a medium: as Garbhodakaśāyī from Śeṣaśāyī Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī, Kṛṣṇa from Vasudeva, Rāma from Daśaratha. 'The work': agitating prakṛti and producing the mahat and the rest; increasing the happiness of the gods and others by crushing the wicked; distributing the bliss of prema to sādhakas who long for Him by appearing before them Himself; and spreading pure devotion — such is the meaning of 'for the work.'"

In the realm of māyā everything is fragmented by differences of place, time and person, and actions there are fragmented. In those actions, in their efficient or material portion, one sees the causality of Bhagavān's svarūpa. The Godhood in the form of Mahā-Viṣṇu, the cause of those actions, is a portion of Kṛṣṇa. It is this portion that is called an "avatāra." Ordinarily, by gross vision and on the maxim of the lame and the blind, inert prakṛti is called the "material" cause and the enjoyer, the puruṣa-jīva made of the three guṇas, the "efficient" cause. But prakṛti is neither the "material" nor the "efficient" cause of the world; this the devotees (bhāgavatas) have subtly realized. By the power of His glance prakṛti is known as the "material" of the world, and māyā is famed as its "efficient agent"; both these potencies are given by Bhagavān Himself. Those manifestations of Bhagavān in which He displays the pastime of empowering māyā — to create the universe or for its welfare — those manifest forms are called "portions" or "avatāras." In truth the avatāras, who are likened to lamps, are Viṣṇu. But because they exercise authority over māyā, in the language of māyā they are merely called "portions" or "avatāras." See Madhya 20.263–264.

82 He is the first avatāra, the Mahā-Puruṣa, Bhagavān — the seed of all avatāras, the abode and shelter of all.

Anubhāṣya.

On Garbhodaśāyī, the seed of all avatāras, see Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.3.5.

83 "The Puruṣa is the first avatāra of the Supreme. Time, nature, prakṛti as cause and effect, the mind, the elements, false ego, the guṇas, the senses, the universal body (virāṭ) and the Vairāja (svarāṭ), and all beings, moving and unmoving — all these are the splendour of the Great One." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.6.42)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Kāraṇābdhiśāyī Puruṣa is the first avatāra of Bhagavān. Time, nature (svabhāva), prakṛti as cause and effect, the mahat-tattva — the mind and the rest, ahaṅkāra — the great elements and the rest, the guṇas — sattva and the others, the senses, the Virāṭ, the Svarāṭ, the unmoving and the moving — all these are His opulence (vibhūti).

In another reading these verses are also found[13]: "I [Brahmā], Bhava, Yajña, these lords of progeny headed by Dakṣa, you [Nārada] and others; the guardians of the heavenly worlds, of the worlds of birds, of the human world and of the lower worlds; the lords of the Gandharvas, Vidyādharas and Cāraṇas; the masters of the Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, serpents and Nāgas; the best of the sages and of the Pitṛs; the kings of the Daityas, the lords of the Siddhas and the kings of the Dānavas; and the others — the rulers of the pretas, piśācas, bhūtas and kūṣmāṇḍas, of aquatic creatures, beasts and birds; whatever in the world has greatness, splendor, strength of the senses, endurance, bodily might, forbearance, beauty, modesty, wealth, intelligence or wondrous color — whether it has form or is formless — [all this is] the supreme Truth."

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Brahmā describes to Nārada the opulence of Bhagavān Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī:

parasya bhūmnaḥ (of Bhagavān) puruṣaḥ (Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī) is ādyaḥ avatāraḥ (the first avatāra). kālaḥ (time, the agitator of the guṇas), svabhāvaḥ (its impression), sad-asat (prakṛti, effect and cause), manaḥ (the mahat-tattva), dravyam (the subtle elements, the five great elements), vikāraḥ (ahaṅkāra), guṇaḥ (sattva and the others), indriyāṇi (the eleven), virāṭ (the aggregate body), svarāṭ (the Vairāja), sthāsnu (the unmoving), cariṣṇu (the moving, the individual body) ca (all are forms of His opulence).

*The creator of the mahat-tattva, the first Puruṣa-avatāra —*

84 "In the beginning, desiring to create the worlds, Bhagavān accepted the form of the Puruṣa, joined with the mahat and the other principles and possessed of sixteen potencies (kalā)." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.3.1)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bhagavān, wishing to create the worlds, assumed the form called the Puruṣa, composed of the mahat-tattva and the rest and endowed with sixteen kalās.

Anubhāṣya.

Answering the five questions of the sages headed by Śaunaka, Sūta describes the avatāras of Bhagavān:

ādau (at the beginning of creation) bhagavān (Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa) loka-sisṛkṣayā (wishing to create the worlds) mahad-ādibhiḥ (with the mahat-tattva, ahaṅkāra, the five great elements, the eleven senses and the five tanmātras) sambhūtam (composed) ṣoḍaśa-kalam (endowed with the full complement of potencies needed for that creation) pauruṣaṁ rūpaṁ jagṛhe (manifested the form of the Puruṣa).

Ṣoḍaśa-kalam (endowed with sixteen kalās): the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, describing the Puruṣa (section 68), says: "Śrī, Bhū, Kīrti, Ilā, Līlā, Kānti and Vidyā — these seven — and the nine headed by Vimalā: these are the sixteen chief potencies." Śrī Baladeva comments on this: "Vimalā, Utkarṣiṇī, Jñānā, Kriyā, Yogā, and also Prahvī, Satyā, Īśānā and Anugrahā — these are known as the nine." In the Bhagavat-sandarbha (section 102): "He is served by Śrī, Puṣṭi, Gīr, Kānti, Kīrti, Tuṣṭi, Ilā, Ūrjā, Vidyā, Avidyā, Śakti and Māyā."[20] "One should also know Sandhinī, Saṁvit, Hlādinī, Bhakti, Ādhāra-śakti, Mūrti, Vimalā, Jayā, Yogā, Prahvī, Īśā, Anugraha and others. Therefore in the verse 'Śriyā…' and the like one should everywhere understand two kinds of powers: some are functions of the śakti, others are functions of māyā. The varieties of the first are the opulence of Bhagavān; the varieties of the second are the opulence of the world. … Here Ilā indicates Bhū, and through her Līlā as well. Sandhinī is Satyā, Jayā is Utkarṣiṇī, Yogā is yogamāyā, and Saṁvit is the Jñānājñāna-śakti and śuddha-sattva; so it should be understood. The difference between Prahvī and Īśānā is this: Prahvī is the source of wondrous, unlimited capacity, and Īśānā the source of the power of sovereignty over all."

1) Śrī, 2) Bhū, 3) Līlā, 4) Kānti, 5) Kīrti, 6) Tuṣṭi, 7) Gīḥ, 8) Puṣṭi, 9) Satyā, 10) Jñānājñānā, 11) Jayā-Utkarṣiṇī, 12) Vimalā, 13) Yogamāyā, 14) Prahvī, 15) Īśānā and 16) Anugrahā — these sixteen potencies are present in Vaikuṇṭha. See the Bhāgavata-tātparya of Śrī Madhva, included in the Gauḍīya-bhāṣya on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, and the Tathya section there.

The shelter of all and the indwelling Lord —

85 He is the shelter of all, and the world rests in Him; as the Supersoul He is the support of the world.

Anubhāṣya.
See Madhya 20.282.

*Though related to māyā in His glance and other acts, He is in truth beyond māyā —*

86 He has a twofold relation with prakṛti, and yet there is not even a trace of contact between Him and prakṛti.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
He is the shelter of all, and saṁsāra abides in Him; yet as the indwelling Self (antarātmā) He is the support of the world. Although He has these two kinds of relation with prakṛti, He accepts no fault from contact with prakṛti.

Anubhāṣya.
In the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, where Viṣṇu's freedom from the guṇas is described, Śrī Rūpa's kārikā is given: “Relation with the guṇas as their controller is called yoga. Therefore He who is the Supreme's own portion is not bound up with them.” That is, Viṣṇu's relation with the guṇas as their controller is called yoga. That Puruṣa, therefore, is never bound by the guṇas. Still less is any of the Viṣṇus — His own portions, in truth nondifferent from the Supreme Person — ever in any way joined with the guṇas. Śrī Baladeva's commentary: “But how can the Supreme Person have a relation with the guṇas? That contradicts such statements as ‘māyā, abashed, withdraws from His sight’ (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.7.47). To this the word yoga replies. The guṇas are the controlled, and the Puruṣa who appears in three ways is the controller: such is the relation, and here it is called yoga, not bondage. And He is not joined with them, for in the words of Drumila, lord of yogīs (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.4.5), no relation with the guṇas is mentioned."

"If you say: is not a relation of Mahā-Viṣṇu with the guṇas established? For then it would contradict the words 'māyā, abashed, stands turned away from Bhagavān.' The answer is this: the word 'guṇa' means 'the controlled.' The Puruṣa who appears in three forms — Viṣṇu, Brahmā and Śiva — is related to prakṛti as her controller. In the world this is called yoga; it is never denoted by the word 'bondage' by those three guṇas. That Viṣṇu is never joined with the guṇas, for in the words of Drumila, one of the nine Yogendras, no relation of the three guṇas with Viṣṇu is mentioned at all."

With both kinds of cause — material and efficient — He is related as the one who glances; yet māyā can in no way overpower Him. The world with all its transformations is a transformation of Bhagavān's potency of desire (icchā-śakti), but in Him no material transformation is possible. See Ādi 2.52, 54.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 1, Chapter 11, verse 38)*

87 "This is the lordship of the Lord: though He abides within material nature, He is never affected by its qualities — just as the intelligence of those who have taken shelter of Him is not affected." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.11.38)[6]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
See Ādi 2.55.

*The Lord (Īśvara) possesses inconceivable potency —*

88 So the Gītā too declares again and again that the truth of the Lord is always endowed with inconceivable potency:

The world's relation with the Lord — difference and nondifference —

89 "I abide in the world, and the world is in Me; and yet I do not abide in the world, nor is the world in Me.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I abide in the world, and the world abides in Me; and yet I am not in the world, and the world is not in Me. This is called the “inconceivable meaning.”

Anubhāṣya.

Without Bhagavān's existence the visible world can have no foundation at all. The world rests in Bhagavān; but one must not therefore take the external perception — the vision of acit, full of enjoyment — to be Bhagavān, nor regard the world of enjoyment as Godhood. Enjoyment, that is, aversion to Bhagavān — in other words, māyā — does not rest in Bhagavān: in the Reality, Bhagavān, aversion to Bhagavān can have no place. Bhagavān Adhokṣaja descends into the world, into the phenomenal realm (prapañca), and yet He does not become, and cannot become, a fragmented and perishable thing of this world. In both His manifest and unmanifest pastimes He is eternally beyond māyā and eternally her master — that is, His nature as the nirguṇa Vaikuṇṭha is eternally present. Through various pastimes He descends into the world and remains the original presiding deity of everything that exists in the world.

Nor can the world exist as a second reality, with a being separate from Him. Viṣṇu Himself never comes into contact with the material world or with māyā. Neither His own svarūpa nor His opulence of the same nature (tad-rūpa-vaibhava) belongs in the least to the measurable world of enjoyment or to prakṛti, which is turned away from Him. This is the independent sovereignty and the Godhood of Bhagavān, who acts by His own will and is full of inconceivable majesty.

See the Gauḍīya-bhāṣya, with its various commentaries, on the verse “yathā mahānti” (34), one of the catuḥ-ślokī in the ninth chapter of the second canto of Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, and also Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.15.36.

90 Know this to be My inconceivable power.” Such is the meaning the Gītā proclaims.

Anubhāṣya.

The Gītā (9.4–5) says: “By Me, in My unmanifest form, this whole world is pervaded. All beings rest in Me, but I do not rest in them. And yet beings do not rest in Me — behold My divine yoga! My Self sustains beings and brings them into being, yet does not abide in beings.”

91 He of whom that Puruṣa is called a part is Nityānanda-Rāma, the companion of Caitanya.

92 Such is the explanation of the ninth verse. Now hear attentively the meaning of the tenth.

The meaning of the tenth of the fourteen opening verses —

93 "I take refuge in Śrī Nityānanda Rāma. A part of His part is the blessed Garbhodakaśāyī, whose navel-lotus, with all the worlds as its stem, is the birthplace of Brahmā, the creator of the worlds." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)[7]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I bow down to Nityānanda-Rāma, a portion of whose portion is Garbhodaśāyī. The stem of the lotus that grows from Garbhodaśāyī's navel is the birthplace of Vidhātā, who beholds the worlds[14], and the resting place of all the worlds.

Anubhāṣya.
yan-nābhy-abjam (the lotus that grows from whose navel), loka-saṅghāta-nālam (whose stem, that is, support, is the host of worlds, the fourteen worlds), is loka-sraṣṭuḥ (Brahmā's) sūtikā-dhāma (birthplace); śrīla-garbhoda-śāyī (the second Puruṣa-avatāra) is yasya (Nityānanda-Rāma's) aṁśāṁśaḥ (portion of a portion, kalā); taṁ śrī-nityānanda-rāmam ahaṁ prapadye (to that Śrī Nityānanda-Rāma I surrender).

Description of Garbhodaśāyī —

94 Having created endless universes, that Puruṣa entered them all, becoming many forms.

95 Entering, He saw only darkness everywhere, and finding no place to stay, He reflected.

96 From the perspiration of His own body He created water and with it filled half the universe.

Anubhāṣya.
See Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.10.10.

97 The universe measures fifty crores of yojanas, equal in length and breadth.

The origin of the fourteen worlds —

98 Filling half with water, He made His dwelling there; in the other half He manifested the fourteen worlds.

Anubhāṣya.
Caudda bhuvana (the fourteen worlds): Bhū, Bhuvaḥ, Svaḥ, Mahaḥ, Jana, Tapaḥ and Satya — these seven higher worlds; and Tala, Atala, Vitala, Nitala, Talātala, Mahātala and Sutala — these seven pātālas (lower worlds). See Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.5.38–42 and 11.4.3.

In the Garbha Ocean He manifests His own abode, Vaikuṇṭha —

99 There He manifested Vaikuṇṭha, His own abode, and rested on the water with Śeṣa as His bed.

*He whom the hymn of the Ṛg-veda praises —*

100–101 There He lay on Ananta as His bed. He has a thousand heads and a thousand faces, a thousand hands and feet and a thousand eyes. He is the seed of all avatāras and the cause of the world.

Anubhāṣya.
See Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.3.2, 4, 5.

Anubhāṣya.
(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.3.4): “With flawless eyes the devotees behold His wondrous form with thousands of feet, thighs, arms and faces, with thousands of heads, ears, eyes and noses, shining with thousands of crowns, garments and earrings.” (Ṛg-veda-saṁhitā 8.4.17; Sāma-veda 6.4.4.3; Śukla Yajur-veda 31.1; Atharva-veda 19.6.1): “The Puruṣa has a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, a thousand feet. Enveloping the earth on every side, He extends beyond it by ten fingers' breadth." See Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.4.4–5 and Brahma-saṁhitā 5.10–11.

From Him come Viṣṇu, Brahmā and Rudra —

102 From His navel-lotus a lotus arose, and that lotus became the birthplace of Brahmā.

103 In the stem of that lotus the fourteen worlds came to be, and He, becoming Brahmā, brought forth the creation.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Mahābhārata, in the Mokṣa-dharma, in the narrative of Nārāyaṇa (Śānti-parva, Chapter 339, verses 70–72, and Chapter 340, verses 27–28), it is said: "He who is Pradyumna is also Aniruddha; He is also the father of Brahmā." Here it must be understood that He who is Garbhodaśāyī is also Kṣīrodaśāyī. The two are nondifferent, and therefore in truth Pradyumna is the controller — that is, the indwelling Lord (antaryāmī) — and the father of Hiraṇyagarbha, who was born from the lotus. See Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 3.1.2.

104 Taking the form of Viṣṇu, He maintains the world. Viṣṇu is beyond the guṇas; the guṇas of māyā never touch Him.

Anubhāṣya.

See Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 3.8.16. The Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, describing the three Puruṣas (sections 137–139), says: "The four-armed vilāsa of this Garbhodaśāyī enters the lotus of the worlds and, called Viṣṇu, lies in the Ocean of Milk. He becomes the indwelling Lord in the hearts of all embodied beings, from the gods down to the unmoving, and abides as if in many forms. The form of Viṣṇu of whom the Sātvata-tantra says, 'The third abides in all beings,' is accepted as His vilāsa." The four-armed form, the vilāsa of Garbhodaśāyī, enters the lotus of the worlds, is called "Viṣṇu" and lies in the Ocean of Milk. As the indwelling Lord, this Viṣṇu abides in the hearts of all living beings, from the gods down to the unmoving, as if in many forms. The form of Viṣṇu called in the Sātvata-tantra "the third Puruṣa, who abides in all beings" is the vilāsa-mūrti of Garbhodaśāyī Viṣṇu.

The Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, describing the Puruṣa (section 12), gives Śrī Baladeva's commentary: “Viṣṇu is not joined even with sattva; by His will alone He merely controls it. That is why it is said: ‘The highest good comes from Him.’ So the Vāmana Purāṇa says: ‘Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Īśa are the three forms of the great-souled Viṣṇu. In Brahmā He is in the form of Brahmā, in Śiva in the form of Śiva, but the god Janārdana, in the form of Viṣṇu, remains apart.’” Viṣṇu is the presiding deity of the guṇa of sattva, yet He is never bound by sattva-guṇa: by His will alone He merely controls it. That is why it is said, “From Him alone comes the welfare of the jīva.” So the Vāmana Purāṇa says that one and the same Viṣṇu exists in the forms of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva: in Brahmā He is in the form of Brahmā, in Śiva in the form of Śiva, and Janārdana in the form of Viṣṇu remains separate from them both.

And where Viṣṇu is described (sections 29–30): “Viṣṇu extends (tanoti) sattva, and so in the scriptures He is known as sattva-tanu. His avatāras, likewise, are sattva-tanu. Or else sattva is His ‘body’ (tanu) in the sense of an external seat. That He is nirguṇa, beyond the guṇas, is therefore fully established in all the scriptures. So it is said (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.88.5): ‘Hari is indeed nirguṇa, the Puruṣa Himself, beyond prakṛti.’”

He extends sattva-guṇa, and so in the scriptures Viṣṇu has received the name sattva-tanu. The avatāras of Kṣīrābdhiśāyī Viṣṇu are likewise called sattva-tanu; or He is called sattva-tanu because that body, sattva, is merely His external seat. That is why all the scriptures call Viṣṇu nirguṇa. So too in the tenth canto: “Hari is nirguṇa, the Supreme Lord Himself, beyond prakṛti, the giver of knowledge to Brahmā and the other gods, the witness of all; whoever worships Him attains freedom from the guṇas.” This is why the verse of the Bhāgavatam says: “From this sattva-tanu comes every kind of good.”

105 Assuming the form of Rudra, He destroys the world. Creation, maintenance and dissolution all take place by His will.

Anubhāṣya.

The Puruṣa of the verse Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.2.23 is this very Garbhodaśāyī!

106 He is Hiraṇyagarbha, the Indweller, the cause of the world; and it is a part of Him that is conceived as the universal form (virāṭ).

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Garbhodaśāyī Viṣṇu Himself is Hiraṇyagarbha, the indwelling Lord (antaryāmī) and the cause of the world. His portion is conceived of as the "Virāṭ."

107 Great as Nārāyaṇa is, He is only a part of a part of Lord Nityānanda, the crown of all avatāras.

Anubhāṣya.
Brahma-saṁhitā (5.14): "Thus by a single portion He Himself enters each one." Madhya 20.283–293.

108 I have explained the meaning of the tenth verse; now hear attentively the meaning of the eleventh.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"The meaning of the tenth verse": the tenth verse and the verses that follow it describe Garbhodaśāyī Viṣṇu.

Explanation of the eleventh of the fourteen opening verses —

109 "I take refuge in Śrī Nityānanda Rāma. A part of a part of His part is Viṣṇu who lies on the Ocean of Milk, the Supersoul and maintainer of all beings; and Ananta, who upholds the earth, is a portion of that Viṣṇu." (diary of Svarūpa Dāmodara)[8]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I bow down to Nityānanda-Rāma. A portion of a portion of His portion is Kṣīrodaśāyī, the Paramātmā of all, Viṣṇu the maintainer; and His kalā is "Ananta," who holds up the earth.

Anubhāṣya.
akhilānām (of the jīvas) parātmā (the Paramātmā), poṣṭā (the maintainer), dugdhābdhi-śāyī (the third Puruṣa-avatāra, Kṣīrodaśāyī) viṣṇuḥ bhāti (Viṣṇu shines); saḥ api (He too) is yasya aṁśāṁśāṁśaḥ (a portion of a portion of the portion of Nityānanda-Rāma: a portion of a portion is a kalā, and its portion a vikalā); kṣauṇī-bhartā (the maintainer of the world) anantaḥ (Ananta) is yat (Kṣīrodaśāyī's) kalā (portion of a portion); taṁ śrī-nityānanda-rāmam ahaṁ prapadye (to that Śrī Nityānanda-Rāma I surrender).

Description of the abode of Kṣīrodaśāyī Viṣṇu —

110 Within the stem of Nārāyaṇa's navel-lotus is the earth, and within the earth are counted seven oceans.

"Śvetadvīpa" —

111 There, in the midst of the Ocean of Milk, is the island called Śvetadvīpa, the abode of Viṣṇu the maintainer.

Anubhāṣya.

The Siddhānta-śiromaṇi says: "The best of teachers say that the half of the earth lying north of the Salt Ocean is Jambudvīpa. In the other, southern half lie the six other dvīpas and the oceans of salt, milk and the rest. First comes the ocean of salt water, then the ocean of milk, from which nectar, the moon and Śrī appeared; there dwells Vāsudeva, the shelter of all, whose lotus feet are honored by lotus-born Brahmā and the other gods. Then come the oceans of yogurt, of ghee and of sugarcane juice, then of wine, and the last is of fresh water. Within the ocean of fresh water is the submarine fire, Vaḍavānala, and the pātāla worlds are layers within the earth." That is: 1) the Salt Ocean, 2) the Milk Ocean, 3) the ocean of yogurt, 4) the ocean of ghee, 5) the ocean of sugarcane juice, 6) the ocean of wine, 7) the ocean of fresh water. South of the Salt Ocean is the Kṣīroda, the Milk Ocean; there Vāsudeva, the shelter of all, dwells, and Brahmā and the other gods worship His feet.

*The indwelling Lord of each individual jīva —*

112 He is the Indweller of all beings, the maintainer of the world and its master.

The Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, describing Śrī Viṣṇu — the gist of verses 26–28: "I shall briefly point out all the abodes mentioned in the Viṣṇu-dharmottara and other books among the manifestations of Viṣṇu within the universe. Namely: 'Above Rudraloka there is another world, "Viṣṇuloka," fifty thousand yojanas in size and inaccessible to every other world. Above it, east of Sumeru, in the middle of the Salt Ocean, within the waters, there is said to be a huge golden "Mahā-Viṣṇuloka"; Brahmā goes there from time to time to see it. In that world Janārdana Viṣṇu sleeps with Lakṣmī on the couch of Śeṣa during the four months of the rainy season. East of Meru, in the middle of the Milk Ocean, amid its waters, there is another abode, “Śubhravarṇā” (the white); in it Lord Viṣṇu sits with Lakṣmī on the throne of Śeṣa. There too the Lord enjoys the bliss of sleep during the four months of the rains. South of it, in the Milk Ocean, is a most beautiful island, twenty-five thousand yojanas in size, known as “Śvetadvīpa.”’”

The Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa also says: “The island surrounded by the Milk Ocean, a hundred thousand yojanas in extent, … — that very great, beautiful golden island is called ‘Śvetadvīpa.’” Further, the Viṣṇu Purāṇa and other books, and the Mokṣa-dharma of the Mahābhārata as well, describe it: “Śvetadvīpa lies on the northern shore of the Milk Ocean,” and so on. The Padma Purāṇa says that Śvetadvīpa shines on the northern shore of the Ocean of Water. On Śvetadvīpa see Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.15.18.

The Śrī Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, describing the Puruṣa (section 10), says: “The third form, too, is seen from the verse of the second canto (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.2.8): ‘Some [meditate on Him] in the space of the heart within their own body.’” Śrī Baladeva's commentary: “So too Aniruddha, the lord of the Milk Ocean, the third Puruṣa, in a form the size of a span, dwelling in the hearts of all jīvas, is the object of meditation.” That is, the third Puruṣa, Kṣīraśāyī, in a form the size of a span, is to be meditated upon as the indwelling Lord of all jīvas. Where Viṣṇu is described (section 25): “He who is called ‘Viṣṇu’ is considered to be Kṣīrāmbudhiśaya. He is the vilāsa of Garbhodaśāyī, and so the lords of the sages call Him Nārāyaṇa and the indwelling Lord of the Virāṭ.” That is, He who is called “Viṣṇu” is Kṣīrodaśāyī. He is the vilāsa of Garbhodaśāyī, and so the sages call Viṣṇu “Nārāyaṇa” and also the indwelling Lord of the Virāṭ.

*The avatāras of the yugas and manvantaras come from Kṣīrodakaśāyī —*

113 In each yuga and manvantara He takes many avatāras, establishing dharma and destroying adharma.

114 Even the gods cannot see Him; they go to the shore of the Ocean of Milk and offer Him prayers.

Kṣīrodaśāyī Viṣṇu is the maintainer of the world —

115 Then He descends and protects the world. His splendour is endless, beyond all counting.

116 And that Viṣṇu is a part of a part of a part of Lord Nityānanda, the crown of all avatāras.

His form as the great serpent called "Śeṣa" —

117 That Viṣṇu, in the form of Śeṣa, holds the earth, and does not even know where on His heads it lies.

118 On the circle of His thousand broad hoods hosts of gems glitter, outshining the sun.

119 The earth, fifty crores of yojanas wide, rests on one of His hoods like a mustard seed.

Anubhāṣya.
See Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 5.17.21 and 5.25.2.

Viṣṇu in the form of Śeṣa, the devotee of Kṛṣṇa —

120 That Ananta Śeṣa is an avatāra in the form of a devotee; He knows nothing but service to the Lord.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Jīva Prabhu writes in the Śrī Kṛṣṇa-sandarbha (section 86): "'Ananta, the kalā of Vāsudeva, thousand-mouthed, self-effulgent (svarāṭ), the god, will appear first, wishing to please Hari.'[21] The kalā of Vāsudeva, the son of Śrī Vasudeva, is His first portion, Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa. Svarāṭ: He who shines by His own [glory] alone. Therefore He is Ananta, unlimited by time or place; He, called Śeṣa, is also the thousand-mouthed one. By one portion of Himself He is the one called Śeṣa. In the Skanda Purāṇa, in the Ayodhyā-māhātmya: 'Then, as all looked on, Śakra spoke sweetly to Lakṣmaṇa, true to his word, who had become Śeṣa: "Attain Your own eternal supreme abode of Viṣṇu. Your form has come too — Śeṣa with his shining hoods." Having said this to Lakṣmaṇa, the king of the gods, together with the gods, sent Śeṣa, who is able to bear the burden of the earth, to Pātāla.' Therefore both in the words 'My abode called Śeṣa' (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.2.8) and here, in the words 'remains, called Śeṣa' (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.3.25), He is called an unfailing portion. Or else [Śeṣa is He] from whom the name and fame of Śeṣa come."

The kalā of Bhagavān (the portion of His portion) is Śrī Anantadeva, thousand-mouthed and svarāṭ. Wishing to do what pleases Śrī Hari, He is always present before Him. The first portion of Vāsudeva, the son of Vasudeva, is Saṅkarṣaṇa. He is self-manifest and is therefore svarāṭ; and so He is Ananta, that is, free from the limits of time and place. He is present also in the form of the thousand-mouthed "Śeṣa." "By one portion" means in the form of the avatāra called Śeṣa. In the Skanda Purāṇa, in the Ayodhyā-māhātmya: "As all looked on, Indra, the king of the gods, began to speak to Lakṣmaṇa, true to his vow, who bore the form of Śeṣa: 'Go to Your own eternal abode of Viṣṇu — Your form, Śeṣa adorned with hoods, has come as well.' Having said this, the king of the gods sent Lakṣmaṇa in the form of Śeṣa, able to bear the burden of the earth, to Pātāla and went to the abode of the gods." (That is, when Lakṣmaṇa, the vyūha Saṅkarṣaṇa, descended with Śrī Rāma, Śeṣa, the bearer of the earth who lives in Pātāla, came and merged with him. Later, when the time of disappearance came (aprakaṭa: the Lord and His eternal associates do not die as ordinary beings do, but only become invisible to this world), "Śeṣa" separated from Lakṣmaṇa and went to his own abode, Pātāla, and Lakṣmaṇa went to Vaikuṇṭha, the abode of Viṣṇu.) Therefore in the words "My abode called Śeṣa" too, "Śeṣa" means that by which the end (śeṣa) is reached — that which remains at the very end. Just as the remainder is nondifferent from the original thing, so Śeṣa is spoken of as a nondifferent portion of Vāsudeva. Or else "Śeṣa" is He from whom comes His fame by the name of Śeṣa.

The Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, describing the truth of Rudra (section 19), gives Śrī Baladeva's commentary: "'Like Śeṣa': Śeṣa who is the bed of Śārṅgī (Viṣṇu), His supporting potency, belongs to the category of the Lord; but the Śeṣa who bears the earth is a jīva whom He has entered." That is, Śeṣa in the form of the bed of Viṣṇu, the wielder of the bow Śārṅga — the supporting potency — belongs to the category of the Lord, while the earth-bearing "Śeṣa" belongs to the category of empowered (śaktyāviṣṭa) jīvas. And again, where the truth of Śrī Rāma is described (section 28): "Saṅkarṣaṇa, the second vyūha, is Rāma Himself. Uniting with Śeṣa, the bearer of the earth, He became manifest. Śeṣa is twofold:

one bears the earth, the other is the bed of Śārṅgī. Of them, the one who bears the earth is considered Saṅkarṣaṇa, because Saṅkarṣaṇa has entered him. But the one who is the bed thinks of Himself as His friend and servant." That is, Saṅkarṣaṇa of the second catur-vyūha, uniting with the earth-bearing "Śeṣa," descended in the form of Rāma. "Śeṣa" is twofold: the bearer of the earth and Bhagavān's bed. The earth-bearing "Śeṣa" is an āveśa-avatāra of Saṅkarṣaṇa; that is why he too is called "Saṅkarṣaṇa." The one who is the bed thinks of Himself as the servant and friend of the wielder of Śārṅga.

He is always absorbed in glorifying Kṛṣṇa and instructs the four Sanas —

121 With His thousand mouths He sings of Kṛṣṇa's qualities; He sings without cease and never reaches their end.

122 From His mouth Sanaka and the other Kumāras hear the Bhāgavatam, while He, awash in the joy of love, tells of the qualities of Bhagavān.

Serving Kṛṣṇa in ten forms —

123 He becomes umbrella, sandals, bed, pillow, garments, resting place, dwelling, sacred thread and throne.

Why He is called Śeṣa —

124 Assuming all these different forms He serves Kṛṣṇa; and because He has reached the utmost limit of service to Kṛṣṇa, He bears the name Śeṣa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Śeṣatā means ultimate servitude (dāsya).

Anubhāṣya.
"You alone remain, and so You are called Śeṣa." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.3.25)

125 That Ananta I call but one kalā of Him. Such is Lord Nityānanda — who can know His play?

All the avatāras of Viṣṇu are parts of Kṛṣṇa and in truth nondifferent from Him; therefore calling Kṛṣṇa by the name of Viṣṇu is no fault —

126 By all these proofs I know the full truth of Nityānanda. If I call Him Ananta, what glory is that to Him?

127 Or else, accepting the words of the devotees as true, I say: everything is possible in Him, for He is the source of the avatāras.

128 One who knows that the avatāras and their source are non-different speaks in this way — just as in the past people saw in Kṛṣṇa this or that avatāra:

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One who does not know how an avatāra differs from the source of the avatāras once equated Kṛṣṇa with Vāmana and the other avatāras. In the same way, a person who sees no difference calls Nityānanda "Ananta" and so on. But since devotees have said so, it is not false: in the highest Truth everything is possible.[15]

The source of the avatāras is called by the names of various avatāras —

129 some said that Kṛṣṇa was Nara-Nārāyaṇa Himself, others that He was Vāmana Himself, 130 and still others that He was an avatāra of Kṣīrodaśāyī. None of this is impossible: the words of all are true.

131 When Kṛṣṇa, the shelter of all portions, descends, all His portions come and unite in Him.

132 So each speaks of Him in the form in which he knows Him. Everything is possible in Kṛṣṇa; none of it is false.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, Śrī Rūpa Prabhu first refutes the opponent's views (pūrvapakṣa): "Kṛṣṇa is an avatāra of Kṣīraśāyī," "Kṛṣṇa is an avatāra of Vāsudeva, the first vyūha of Nārāyaṇa, the Lord of Paravyoma," "Kṛṣṇa is a vilāsa of Nārāyaṇa," and so on. Then (in sections 136, 137, and 139) he quotes Bhāgavatam 3.2.15 and says: "When His own peaceful forms — Vasudeva and the other devotees — were being oppressed by distorted forms, that is, by fearsome-looking demons led by Kaṁsa, then Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Lord of spirit and matter, supremely merciful and though unborn, joined and merged with His vilāsas — the Lord of Vaikuṇṭha and others — and descended from Kṛṣṇaloka into the material world, just as fire appears from the wooden araṇi when it is churned." The vyūha of Śrī Kṛṣṇa became one with His own vilāsa, the vyūha of the Lord of Paravyoma, came into the material world, and appeared there. He always remains united with His famous avatāras: the Puruṣas and others, Śrī Rāma, Nṛsiṁha, Varāha, Vāmana, Nara-Nārāyaṇa, Hayagrīva, Ajita, and the rest. That is why in Vṛndāvana too the pastimes of all these avatāras are seen in Śrī Kṛṣṇa. And so the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa says: "He who is four-armed in Vaikuṇṭha, who is the Lord of Śvetadvīpa, who is Nārāyaṇa, the friend of Nara — He is Puruṣottama, the son of Nanda. As hundreds and thousands of sparks fly out of a great fire and vanish back into it, so all the other countless charming avatāras of this Kṛṣṇa become one with Him again." Therefore, in the Purāṇas and other scriptures, some have glorified Śrī Kṛṣṇa as Nārāyaṇa, the friend of Nara, some as Upendra, that is, Vāmana, some as Kṣīrodaśāyī, some as the thousand-headed Garbhodaśāyī, and some as the Lord of Vaikuṇṭha. For the original Saṅkarṣaṇa abides in Śrī Kṛṣṇa, and from Him Badarīnātha and other forms are manifested (that is, they appear by His mere wish). The sages saw only the pastimes of one or another of these forms. They followed the accounts of Viṣṇu with those different pastimes, and so they called Śrī Kṛṣṇa by the names of those forms of Viṣṇu. Therefore, even if the original source of the avatāras is called an "avatāra," in truth there is no fault in it. See Ādi 2.110–115.

Through Nityānanda, Gaurasundara manifests all the avatāras —

133 Therefore Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Gosāñi performed the pastimes of all the avatāras and showed them to everyone.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Therefore Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, the highest Truth, showed everyone the pastimes of Varāha, Nṛsiṁha, and the other avatāras.

134 In this way Nityānanda is manifest as Ananta, and in that same mood He says, “I am Caitanya’s servant.”

Nityānanda-Rāma serves Gaura-Kṛṣṇa in different forms and different moods —

135 Sometimes He plays the guru, sometimes the friend, sometimes the servant — just as He once played in Vraja in these three moods.

136 Becoming a bull, He would fight with Kṛṣṇa head to head; and sometimes Kṛṣṇa would massage His feet.

Nityānanda-Rāma always considers Himself the servant of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa —

137 He thinks of Himself as a servant and knows Kṛṣṇa as His Master; He considers Himself but a kalā of Kṛṣṇa’s kalā.

The play of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa —

138 “Pretending to be bulls, the two would bellow and fight with each other; imitating the cries of animals, They roamed about like ordinary children.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.11.40)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Sometimes, like ordinary people, the two brothers become bulls and butt each other, bellowing. And sometimes they imitate swans, peacocks, and other creatures and make their sounds.

Anubhāṣya.
These two verses are spoken where the childhood play of Kṛṣṇa and Rāma is described.

vṛṣāyamāṇau (acting like bulls) nardantau (making their sounds, bellowing) kṛṣṇa-baladevau (Kṛṣṇa and Baladeva) parasparam yuyudhāte (butted each other). rutaiḥ (with imitative sounds) jantūn anukṛtya (imitating the animals), prākṛtau (ordinary) bālakau yathā (like boys), tathā ceratuḥ (so They played).

Kṛṣṇa serves Rāma, massaging His feet and so on —

139 "Sometimes, when His elder brother lay tired from play with His head on a cowherd boy's lap, Kṛṣṇa Himself would give Him rest by massaging His feet and serving Him in other ways." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.15.14)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Sometimes, tired from play, Kṛṣṇa Himself lies down with His head on the lap of the cowherd boys, and He has Baladeva lie down and massages His feet.

Anubhāṣya.
kvacit (sometimes) krīḍā-pariśrāntam (tired from play) gopotsaṅgopabarhaṇam (Him whose pillow was the lap of a cowherd boy) āryam (the elder brother, Baladeva) pāda-saṁvāhanādibhiḥ (by massaging His feet and other service) svayam (Kṛṣṇa Himself) viśrāmayati (relieved of fatigue).

*Baladeva's amazement at seeing Kṛṣṇa's yogamāyā —*

140 (Baladeva said in wonder:) "Who is she, and where has she come from? Is she divine, human or demonic? Most likely she is the māyā of My Master, for no other can bewilder even Me." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.13.37)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Who is this māyā? Where has she come from? Is she divine, human, or demoniac? No māyā can bewilder me except the māyā of my Lord Kṛṣṇa."

Anubhāṣya.
When Brahmā stole the calves, Śrī Kṛṣṇa created the calves and the rest anew and went on with His pastimes as usual. One day Śrī Baladeva saw how the cows were behaving, understood what had happened, and was amazed:

iyam (this [māyā]) kā (who)? kutaḥ vā āyātā (where has she come from)? kim daivī (is she related to the gods), nārī (to humans), vā (or — uta) āsurī (to the demons)? prāyaḥ (most likely) māyā me bhartuḥ (it is the māyā of my Master, Bhagavān Himself) astu (it must be); anyā (another [māyā]) na (it cannot be), ([for]) iyam me api (even me) vimohinī (she bewilders).

The six opulences eternally abide in Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet —

141 (Baladeva said:) "The guardians of all the worlds bear on their crowned heads the dust of His lotus feet, the holiest of holy places; and Brahmā, Śiva, Lakṣmī and I Myself, mere parts of His part, carry it on our heads forever. What then is a king's throne to Him?" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.68.37)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The dust of His feet is the holy place of all holy places. The guardians of the worlds carry it on their heads. Brahmā, Śiva, I, Baladeva, and Lakṣmī — some of us are His parts, others parts of parts — forever carry the dust of His feet. What does an ordinary royal throne mean to Him?

Anubhāṣya.

The Kauravas spoke ill of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and tried to win Baladeva over to their side. Then Baladeva grew angry and said to them:

yasya (Kṛṣṇa's) aṅghri-paṅkaja-rajaḥ (the dust of the lotus feet) akhila-loka-pālaiḥ (by the rulers of all the worlds) mauly-uttamaiḥ (on their heads adorned with crowns) dhṛtam (borne, held in the mind by concentration), upāsita-tīrtha-tīrtham (the holy place even for the yogīs who honor holy places); yasya kalāyāḥ kalāḥ (parts [vikalās] of whose part) — brahmā, bhavaḥ (Śiva), aham (I, Baladeva), śrīḥ ca (and Lakṣmī) — api ciram (forever) udvahema (we pray to carry it on our heads), — asya (for Him, Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa) nṛpāsanam (a royal throne) kva (where; what does it mean)?

*Kṛṣṇa alone, the original form (svayaṁ-rūpa), is the Lord of all —*

142 Kṛṣṇa alone is the Lord; all others are His servants. As He makes each one dance, so each one dances.

Gaurasundara is the Supreme Lord, and His associates are His servants —

143 In the same way Caitanya Gosāñi alone is the Lord; all the rest are His associates or His servants.

144–145 Nityānanda, Advaita Ācārya, Śrīvāsa and others play the part of His elders and gurus, and all the rest are His juniors, equals and seniors. All are His associates and helpers in His pastimes, and with them all Gaura-rāya accomplishes His purpose.

*Gaura's two limbs (aṅgas): Nitāi and Advaita —*

146 Advaita Ācārya and Nityānanda are His two limbs (aṅga); with these two the Lord performs all His pastimes.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 3.71.

Though Advaita Prabhu is an avatāra of Mahā-Viṣṇu, He considers Himself a servant of Gaura — 147 Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is the Lord Himself. The Lord honours Him as a guru, yet He is His servant.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Mahāprabhu honored Advaita Ācārya, regarding Him as one of His elders (guru-varga). Yet Śrī Advaita Prabhu considered Himself a servant of Śrī Caitanya. He was a contemporary and friend of Śrī Mahāprabhu's father. Śrī Īśvara Purī and Śrī Advaita Prabhu were disciples of Śrī Mādhavendra Purī. Mahāprabhu accepted Śrī Īśvara Purī as His dīkṣā-guru, and so Advaita Prabhu was a godbrother of Mahāprabhu's guru and worthy of respect.

*Proof of the Ācārya's mercy to the jīvas —*

148 The truth of Ācārya Gosāñi cannot be told: it was He who brought Kṛṣṇa down and delivered the world.

Because Lakṣmaṇa, the younger brother, served the elder, Rāmacandra, in the avatāra of Kṛṣṇa Balarāma is the elder brother and Kṛṣṇa the younger — 149 Nityānanda Svarūpa, appearing before as Lakṣmaṇa, served Rāma as His younger brother.

Anubhāṣya.
Among the daṇḍī-sannyāsīs of the ten names, a brahmacārī bears one of four titles: “Svarūpa,” “Ānanda,” “Prakāśa,” and “Caitanya.” While traveling to the holy places, Nityānanda Prabhu stayed with a sannyāsī whose title was “Tīrtha” or “Āśrama.” Therefore His brahmacārī name became “Nityānanda-svarūpa.”

150 Everything Rāma did brought Him suffering, and Lakṣmaṇa, of His own free will, bore that suffering with Him.

151 Being the younger brother, He could not object; so Lakṣmaṇa kept silent and grieved within.

152 In Kṛṣṇa’s descent He became the elder brother for the sake of service, and He gave Kṛṣṇa many joys to taste.

153 Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa are particular portions of Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma, and when Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma descend, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa enter into Them.

Anubhāṣya.
In the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, where the truth of Śrī Rāghavendra is described, section 20 says (in substance): “The Viṣṇu-dharmottara glorifies Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Bharata, and Śatrughna as avatāras of Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna, and Aniruddha respectively. And the Padma Purāṇa glorifies Rāmacandra as Nārāyaṇa, and Lakṣmaṇa, Bharata, and Śatrughna respectively as Śeṣa, the Cakra, and the Śaṅkha (conch).”

154 Together with those portions They take the roles of elder and younger brother, and the scriptures describe Them as the whole and His portion.

Anubhāṣya.
In the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, where the līlā-avatāras are described, section 79 says (in translation): “The Rāma-gītā of the Skanda Purāṇa says that Lakṣmaṇa, Bharata, and Śatrughna are the three vyūhas of Śrī Rāma.”

*Kṛṣṇa alone is the original form (svayaṁ-rūpa); all the other avatāras are His parts (aṁśas) or kalās —*

155 "I worship Govinda, the original Person, who, abiding through His kalās in Rāma and other forms, manifested many avatāras in the worlds, but who Himself, the Supreme Person, appeared as Kṛṣṇa." (Brahma-saṁhitā, 5.39)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Dividing Himself into parts (kalās), Bhagavān manifested various avatāras in the world in the forms of Rāma and others. But I worship Govinda, the original Person: this Supreme Person Himself appears in the form of Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

yaḥ (He who), paramaḥ pumān (the Supreme Person) kṛṣṇaḥ (Kṛṣṇa), kalā-niyamena (as parts, parts of parts, and so on) rāmādi-mūrtiṣu tiṣṭhan (abiding in the forms of Rāma and others — manifesting the forms of the various naimittika avatāras, who descend for a particular occasion) nānāvatāram akarot (manifested many avatāras), kintu svayam samabhavat (but appeared Himself [as Kṛṣṇa]) — tam govindam ādi-puruṣam (that Govinda, the original Person) ahaṁ bhajāmi (I worship).

*Gaura's desire — to spread the holy name and prema — is fulfilled through Nityānanda alone —*

156 Śrī Caitanya is that Kṛṣṇa, and Nityānanda is Rāma. Nityānanda fulfils all of Caitanya's desires.

Nityānanda's glory is boundless —

157 The ocean of Nityānanda's glory is endless and shoreless. I touch but a single drop of it — and that only by His mercy.

From his own experience, the author describes the greatness of Nityānanda's mercy —

158 Hear one more glory of His mercy: He raised a fallen soul to the very highest.[9]

159 This story is as secret as the Vedas and not fit to be told; still I tell it to reveal His mercy.

160 In overflowing joy I write of Your grace. O Nityānanda Prabhu, forgive my offence!

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Ullāsa-upari means: "I rejoice so much that I cannot keep it hidden, and so I am writing the account of Your favor."

The greatness of a servant: Mīnaketana Rāmadāsa —

161 Avadhūta Gosāñi had a servant who was an abode of love; his name was Mīnaketana Rāmadāsa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Avadhūta Gosāñi is Nityānanda Prabhu. Prema-dhāma means the abode of prema.

Anubhāṣya.

In his commentary on Bhāgavatam 3.1.19, Śrīdhara Svāmipāda explains the word avadhūta as asaṁskṛta-deha, one who does not care for his body. The disciple of the avadhūta Śrī Nityānanda was also a mahā-bhāgavata, a paramahaṁsa, eternally perfect and beyond varṇāśrama. Therefore his body bore no marks of varṇāśrama, and, careless of his body, he remained intoxicated with the moods of Vraja.

Mīnaketana Rāmadāsa: see the Anubhāṣya on Ādi 11.53.

162 In my house there was saṅkīrtana day and night, and he came there by invitation.

Anubhāṣya.

Ahorātra means eight praharas, that is, the whole day and night. In those days pure devotees had the custom of sending one another letters of invitation to kīrtana festivals.

*The state of a mahā-bhāgavata, or paramahaṁsa —*

163 Full of great love, he sat down in the courtyard, and all the Vaiṣṇavas bowed at his feet.

164 As they bowed, he would climb on the back of one, and in his love strike another with his flute or slap yet another.

165 From those eyes, the very sight of which brings tears to one's heart, flowed an unbroken stream of tears.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Whenever anyone looked into the eyes of Mīnaketana Rāmadāsa, tears welled up from the depths of his heart into his own eyes. And from the eyes of Rāmadāsa himself streams of tears flowed without pause. By another reading, ye nayane dekhite, the sense is this: in whatever eyes a person wished to see tears, from those eyes the tears flowed.

166 At times I saw the hair on some limb stand on end like kadamba blossoms; one limb would stiffen while another trembled.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kadamba means a multitude. Jāḍya means stupor (stambha).[16]

167 When he roared out "Nityānanda!", all who saw it were filled with wonder.

*A worldly devotee of the lowest level (kaniṣṭha), lacking faith, offends the feet of a Vaiṣṇava —*

168 A respectable brāhmaṇa named Guṇārṇava Miśra was serving the Deity there.

169 Rāmadāsa sat in the courtyard, but the brāhmaṇa did not greet him; seeing this, Mīnaketana said angrily:[10]

170 “Here is a second Romaharṣaṇa Sūta, who did not rise to greet Baladeva when he saw Him!”

Anubhāṣya.

Bhāgavatam 10.78.22–28 tells how, in Naimiṣāraṇya, Baladeva killed Romaharṣaṇa, the disciple of Vyāsa.

Even when insulted, a Vaiṣṇava does not look for faults in others —

171 Having said this, he danced and sang and rejoiced; but the brāhmaṇa went on with his service to Kṛṣṇa and showed no anger.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Guṇārṇava Miśra, the servant of the Deity, sat in the courtyard and did not greet the servant of Śrī Nityānanda. So Mīnaketana Rāmadāsa grew angry and said, “This Guṇārṇava Miśra is a second Romaharṣaṇa Sūta.” The meaning is this. In Naimiṣāraṇya, Romaharṣaṇa Sūta saw Baladeva but did not leave the seat of Vyāsa and did not greet Him. Guṇārṇava Miśra behaved just as improperly. In Guṇārṇava Miśra's heart there was no special faith in Śrī Nityānanda. Śrī Mīnaketana understood this and lost respect for him. The devotees do not fault Śrī Mīnaketana for this act or call him proud.

172 At the end of the festival he was leaving, having given his blessings, when a dispute arose between him and my brother.

Kavirāja Gosvāmī's brother is devoted to Gaura but does not honor Nityānanda and the Vaiṣṇavas — 173 My brother had firm faith in Caitanya Prabhu, but towards Nityānanda only a semblance of faith.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Seeing this behavior, my brother got into an argument with Mīnaketana. My brother had firm faith in Śrī Caitanya Prabhu, but he did not have the same faith in Nityānanda Prabhu.

Anubhāṣya.

Viśvāsa-ābhāsa means very slight faith.

Kavirāja Gosvāmī rebukes his brother —

174 Knowing this, Rāmadāsa was grieved at heart, and so I rebuked my brother:

Disrespect that comes from taking the undivided Truth as divided is nothing but godlessness — 175 "The two brothers are one body, equally manifest. If you do not accept Nityānanda, you will be utterly ruined.

176 You have faith in one but show the other no respect: your standard is the logic of half a hen.

*Faith in Nitāi without Gaura, or in Gaura without Nitāi, is also nothing but opposition to bhakti —*

177 If you accept neither, you are an atheist; and to accept one and not the other is hypocrisy."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Ardha-kukkuṭī-nyāya, "the logic of half a hen," is the same as ardha-jaratīya-nyāya: as if half of a hen were old and half young. As an argument this is utterly unacceptable. In the same way, holding to the logic of half a hen, you accept one of Caitanya and Nityānanda, the one undivided Lord, and reject the other. This is your godlessness and hypocrisy.

For insulting a devotee, the brother devoted to Gaura is ruined and falls —

178 In anger Rāmadāsa broke his flute and went away, and at that very moment my brother was ruined.

179 Thus I have told of the power of His servant. Now I tell of something more — the nature of His mercy.

Proof of Nityānanda's mercy —

180 Because I had rebuked my brother — and He counted this as a virtue — that night the Lord appeared to me.

The author sees Nityānanda in a dream —

181 In a village called Jhāmaṭapura, near Naihāṭi, Nityānanda-Rāma appeared to me in a dream.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Kavirāja Gosvāmī lived in the village of Jhāmaṭapura, near the village of Naihāṭī, two krośas north of Kāṭoyā. Now a Deity of Śrī Mahāprabhu is there.

Anubhāṣya.
To reach Jhāmaṭapura, one takes the small train on the Kāṭoyā line and gets off at Sālār station.

The author attains the lotus feet of Nityānanda Himself —

182 I fell flat like a rod at His feet, and the Lord placed His lotus foot upon my head.

183 Again and again He said to me, “Rise, rise!” I rose, and seeing His form I was struck with wonder.

Nityānanda's form, and the expert service rendered to Him by His associates dressed as cowherd boys —

184 His huge body had a glossy dark lustre. He was as beautiful as Kandarpa, the god of love, in person, and had the bearing of a great champion wrestler.

185 His hands and feet were finely shaped, His eyes like lotuses; He wore silk on His head and silk as His garment.

186 Golden earrings hung in His ears, golden armlets and bracelets adorned His arms; ankle-bells rang on His feet, and a garland of flowers lay on His neck.

187 His body was anointed with sandal and graced with a lovely tilaka; His slow, intoxicated gait surpassed that of a maddened elephant.

188 His bright face outshone millions of moons; as He chewed betel, His teeth looked like pomegranate seeds.[11]

189 Intoxicated with love, His body swayed to right and left, and in a deep voice He called, "Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!"

190 With a red staff in His hand He swayed like a maddened lion, and bees hovered all around His feet.

191 I saw His associates, all dressed as cowherds, all calling "Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!" in loving rapture.

192 Some played horns and flutes, some danced and sang; one servant offered betel, another waved a cāmara.

On seeing Nityānanda, the author is immersed in bliss —

193 I beheld the splendour of Nityānanda Svarūpa — what form, what qualities, what pastimes, all beyond this world!

194 Overwhelmed with bliss, I knew nothing at all. Then, smiling, the Lord spoke to me:

Nityānanda orders the author to go to Vṛndāvana —

195 "O Kṛṣṇadāsa, Kṛṣṇadāsa, do not be afraid! Go to Vṛndāvana: there everything can be attained."

Nitāi disappears —

196 Saying this, He touched me with His hand and sent me forth; and the Lord disappeared with His associates.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Hātasāna means a touch of the hand.

197 I fell senseless to the ground; my dream broke, and I saw that morning had come.

198 I reflected on what I had seen and heard: the Lord had ordered me to go to Vṛndāvana.

Kavirāja Gosvāmī goes to Vṛndāvana —

199 At that very moment I set out, and by the Lord's mercy I reached Vṛndāvana in happiness.

A prayer to Śrī Nityānanda —

200 Glory, glory to Nityānanda, to Nityānanda-Rāma, by whose mercy I attained the abode of Vṛndāvana!

201 Glory, glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Him who is full of mercy, through whom I attained the shelter of Rūpa and Sanātana!

202 Through Him I attained the great soul Raghunātha; through Him I attained the shelter of Śrī Svarūpa.

Anubhāṣya.
For one who longs to serve Śrī Rādhā-Govinda, the one desirable goal of life is to gain the shelter and grace of Śrī Svarūpa, Rūpa, Sanātana, and Raghunātha Gosvāmī Prabhus. These two payāras show that this can be gained only by the power of Nityānanda's mercy. On Śrī Dāmodara Svarūpa Gosvāmī Prabhu, see Ādi 4.160–161.

203 By Sanātana's mercy I came to know the conclusions of bhakti; by Śrī Rūpa's mercy I came near to bhakti-rasa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bhakti-rasa-prānta means only nearness to bhakti-rasa.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Sanātana Gosvāmī Prabhu is the ācārya of the conclusions of bhakti (bhakti-siddhānta-ācārya). At the end of the fourth chapter of the Antya-līlā of this book, the author writes: "Sanātana wrote the book Bhāgavatāmṛta, from which we learn the truth about the devotee, devotion, and Kṛṣṇa. He wrote the Daśama-ṭippanī, a book that is the essence of conclusions, from which we learn Kṛṣṇa's pastimes, rasa, and prema. He wrote the book Hari-bhakti-vilāsa on Vaiṣṇava conduct, in which we find the full extent of a Vaiṣṇava's duties."[22] Śrī Raghunātha dāsa Gosvāmīpāda writes of Śrī Sanātana in his prayer Vilāpa-kusumāñjali: "I was blind and had no wish to drink, yet with great effort he made me drink the nectar of devotion joined with renunciation. He is an ocean of mercy, and he suffers at the suffering of others. I take shelter of that master, Sanātana."[23] Śrī Kavirāja Gosvāmī (Antya 4.236) first names Śrī Rūpa, Śrī Sanātana, and Śrī Jīva, and then writes: "These three gurus and Raghunātha dāsa — I bow to the feet of them all, for I am their servant." Śrī Raghunātha dāsa, too, calls Śrī Sanātana Prabhu the ācārya of the conclusions of bhakti.

Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī Prabhu is the ācārya of bhakti-rasa (bhakti-rasa-ācārya). (Antya 4.224): "Rūpa Gosāñi wrote the Rasāmṛta-sindhu, the essence, in which we find the full expanse of the rasa of devotion to Kṛṣṇa; and another book named Ujjvala-nīlamaṇi, in which we find the full extent of the rasa of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa's pastimes."[24]

204 Glory, glory to the lotus feet of Nityānanda, through which I attained Śrī Rādhā-Govinda!

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīla Narottama Ṭhākura sings in his Prārthanā: "When will Nitāi-cāṅd be merciful to me? When will worldly desires become trifling to me? When will my mind give up the objects of the senses and become pure? When will I see Śrī Vṛndāvana? When will an ardent longing for the feet of Rūpa and Raghunātha awaken in me? When will I understand the love of the Divine Couple?" And again:

“Without such a Nitāi, brothers, Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa cannot be attained. Hold fast to the feet of Nitāi.”

The author's words of humility —

205 I am more sinful than Jagāi and Mādhāi, lower than a worm in excrement.

206 Whoever hears my name loses his piety; whoever utters my name commits sin.

207 Who in all the world but Nityānanda alone would show mercy to one as despicable as I?

The author tells of Nityānanda's mercy to himself —

208 Intoxicated with love, Nityānanda is the avatāra of mercy; He makes no distinction between the high and the low.

209 He delivers whoever falls before Him; and so He delivered even a sinner like me.

210 He brought me, the most sinful, to Śrī Vṛndāvana, and to one as low as I He gave the feet of Śrī Rūpa.

By Nityānanda's mercy the author attains the service of Śrī Madana-mohana — 211 The sight of Śrī Madana-Gopāla and Śrī Govinda — all this is not fit to be told.

Śrī Madana-Gopāla, the companion of Śrī Rādhā —

212 Śrī Madana-Gopāla is the lord of Vṛndāvana, the enjoyer of the rāsa dance, the son of the king of Vraja Himself.

213 With Śrī Rādhā and Lalitā He dances the rāsa, appearing in a form that enchants even Cupid.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 32, verse 2)*

214 "Among them appeared Śauri (Kṛṣṇa), His lotus face smiling, wearing yellow garments and a garland — the very enchanter of Cupid." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.32.2)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the rāsa pastime the gopīs bitterly lamented in separation. Suddenly Madana-mohana Himself appeared among them — in yellow garments, with a garland of forest flowers, and with a smile on His face.

Anubhāṣya.

During the rāsa dance Kṛṣṇa disappeared. The gopīs, longing to see Śrī Kṛṣṇa, lost all composure and wept. Then Govindadeva appeared before the cowherd women.

tāsām (among those gopīs, worn out with sorrow) smayamāna-mukhāmbujaḥ (He whose lotus face was smiling), pītāmbara-dharaḥ (wearing yellow garments), sragvī (wearing a garland), sākṣāt manmatha-manmathaḥ (He whose form enchants Kāmadeva himself) — śauriḥ (Kṛṣṇa) āvirabhūt (appeared).

215 By His own sweetness He draws the minds of all, and on either side Rādhā and Lalitā serve Him.

216 Nityānanda's mercy showed Him to me and gave me Śrī Rādhā and Madanamohana as my Lady and Lord.

By Nityānanda's mercy the author attains the service of Śrī Govinda —

217 To me, so lowly, He gave the sight of Śrī Govinda. It is not a thing to be told; it is beyond all telling.

*Śrī Rādhā-Govinda beneath the desire tree, served by the sakhīs —*

218–219 In Vṛndāvana, at Yogapīṭha, in a grove of wish-fulfilling trees, there is a pavilion of jewels, and there on a jewelled throne sits Śrī Govinda, the son of the king of Vraja. Revealing His sweetness, He enchants the whole world.

220 On His left is Śrī Rādhikā with Her friends, and with them the Lord delights in the rāsa and so many other pastimes.

The one Brahmā worships — the Deity to whom the eighteen-syllable mantra is addressed —

221 In his own world Brahmā, who sits on the lotus, meditates on Him and worships Him with the eighteen-syllable mantra.

Anubhāṣya.

Brahmā, who sits on the lotus, together with the residents of his own world, Brahmaloka, meditates on the form of Govinda, the Deity to whom the mantra is addressed (abhidheya-vigraha). This Govinda, on whom the residents of the fourteen worlds meditate, is worshipped with the eighteen-syllable mantra.

222 All the fourteen worlds meditate on Him, and in Vaikuṇṭha and the other abodes they sing of His pastimes and qualities.

223 His sweetness attracts even Lakṣmī. Rūpa Gosāñi has described that form:

Anubhāṣya.

Ādi 4.147: “Kṛṣṇa’s sweetness has a natural power: it makes all men and women restless, beginning with Kṛṣṇa Himself.”

In Śrī Rūpa Prabhu's Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, where the supremacy of Kṛṣṇa's sweetness is described (sections 351–352), a story from the Padma Purāṇa is retold: “Lakṣmī-devī saw the sweetness of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, longed for it, and began to perform austerities. Śrī Kṛṣṇa asked her, ‘Why are you performing austerities?’ Lakṣmī replied, ‘I wish to enjoy pastimes with You in Vṛndāvana in the form of a gopī.’ Śrī Kṛṣṇa said, ‘That is very hard to attain.’ Lakṣmī spoke again: ‘O Lord, then I wish to stay on Your chest like a golden line.' And Śrī Kṛṣṇa said, 'So be it.' Since then Lakṣmī has remained on Kṛṣṇa's chest as a golden line." In the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (10.16.36) the wives of the serpent say: "Lakṣmī is the most beautiful of all, and yet she longed for the dust of Your feet. For its sake she gave up all desires, took vows, and performed austerities for a long time."

*(Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Eastern Division, second wave — sādhana-bhakti, verse 239)*

224 "O friend, if you still care for the company of your relatives, do not look at that form of Hari called Govinda, standing here by Keśī-tīrtha: He smiles, His body bends in three places, His wide glance falls sidelong, His lips, tender as new shoots, rest upon the flute, and a peacock feather makes Him radiant." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 1.2.239)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O friend, if you cherish the company of your relatives, do not look at the form of Govinda near Keśī-ghāṭa. He is gently smiling, His body is bent in three places, and He casts sidelong glances to the left. The flute rests on His lips, tender as young lotus shoots, and a peacock feather lends Him wondrous beauty. The meaning is this: whoever sees the form of Śrī Govinda will lose all attraction for anything else.

Anubhāṣya.

sakhe (O friend), yadi tava bandhu-saṅge (in the company of those attached to sons, wife, and other worldly things) raṅgaḥ (interest) asti (there is), [then] itaḥ (here) keśi-tīrthopakaṇṭhe (near Keśī-tīrtha on the bank of the Yamunā) smerām (smiling), bhaṅgī-traya-paricitām (bent in three places — at the neck, the waist, and the knees), sāci-vistīrṇa-dṛṣṭim (casting wide sidelong glances), vaṁśī-nyastādhara-kiśalayām (whose lips, tender as young shoots, are placed on the flute), candrakeṇa (with a peacock feather) ujjvalām (shining, full of supreme beauty) govindākhyām (named Govinda) hari-tanum (the form of Hari, the son of Nanda) mā prekṣiṣṭhāḥ (do not look at). (Under the guise of a prohibition, it is said here that this form, the abode of supreme beauty, must certainly be seen. Once you taste His sweetness, you will think everything else worthless. Therefore look at Him alone — that is the intent.)

To see mundane stone, wood, or metal in the transcendental Deity is a grave offense —

225 He is the son of the king of Vraja Himself — of this there is no doubt. The fool who thinks of Him as a mere image 226 has no deliverance for that offence; he falls into a terrible hell. What more can I say?

Anubhāṣya.

The Bhakti-sandarbha (section 286) says: "The highest worshippers see the Deity as none other than the Supreme Lord Himself. For as soon as the idea of difference arises, bhakti is broken; therefore only this is proper."

The highest worshippers see the Deity (śrī-mūrti) as the Supreme Lord Himself. If one considers Bhagavān's Deity different from Bhagavān, bhakti is broken. Therefore one must regard the Deity as Bhagavān Himself. Once fallen from bhakti, the jīva becomes a nondevotee and falls into offenses. A verse of the Padma Purāṇa says: "One who sees stone in the worshipable Viṣṇu … is a dweller in hell." By its meaning, a jīva who thinks that the form of Śrī Viṣṇu is made of material substance, or is only a symbol (pratīka), earns the name nārakī, a dweller in hell. The impersonalists are deprived of seeing the Deity with eyes of love, and their vision is mundane. Therefore Vaiṣṇavas call them "offensive Māyāvādīs." And the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, in the verse yasyātma-buddhiḥ ("one who takes [the body] as the self…"),[25] says that a person with such notions as bhauma ijya-dhīḥ ("regarding earthly things as worshipable") does not gain eligibility for service, because of his ignorance.

227 Through Him I attained such a Lord as Govinda — who can describe the mercy of His feet?

To be a Vaiṣṇava is to worship Rādhā-Govinda under the shelter of Nityānanda and Gaura —

228 All the circles of Vaiṣṇavas who dwell in Vṛndāvana are devoted to the name of Kṛṣṇa and are supremely auspicious.

229 Nityānanda and Śrī Caitanya are the treasure of their lives; they know nothing but devotion to Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

All the Vaiṣṇavas who live in Śrī Vṛndāvana bring supreme good. They are devoted to Kṛṣṇa's name and have taken shelter of the bhakti called kīrtana. The treasure of their lives is Śrī Gaura-Nityānanda. Apart from the eternal service of Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa, they know no other, invented bhakti. But nowadays some abandon the worship of the pure devotees of old and devise new paths! Some say, "Whether Śrī Gaurāṅga is Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa or not, we like His name Gaura; the name Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa does not give us as much taste." Others hold that "Gaura-bhakti" is worshipping Gaura in madhura-rasa (sambhoga) in the mood of "Nadīyā-nāgarī"! If, they say, Gaura is not worshipped in the mood of a nāgarī, what is the point of Śrī Gaurāṅga's separate avatāra? Such wicked views did not exist before. But as Kali grows, such grotesque ideas are spreading under the garb of Vaiṣṇavas, and the pure devotees grieve to see it. These people have become playthings of insurmountable māyā and consider Śrī Gaurāṅga a little greater than Śrī Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa. They reason: "Gaurāṅga is the united body of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, and so He is greater than Kṛṣṇa alone." Others again bow at the feet of the mundane smārtas and the society of pañcopāsakas; they oppose Gaura, Gaura's abode, Gaura's śakti, and devotion to Gaura, and they invent the worship of Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa by the power of knowledge born of the material senses. Both these groups oppose the pure teaching of the six Gosvāmīs. They therefore lack devotion to Bhagavān; they are given to the senses, godless, and servants of Kali. Śrī Kavirāja Gosvāmī, all-seeing and all-knowing, foresaw this: in the future, proud people averse to Hari will try by force of imagination to pass themselves off as most dear to Śrī Gaurasundara. They will forget the real Gaura, abandon devotion to Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa, and extol a Gaura of their own invention, born from the womb of their wicked desires, to deceive unfortunate jīvas. Needless to say, in truth the only object of worship for those who have taken shelter at the feet of Śrī Gaurāṅga is the two feet of Śrī Gāndharvikā-Giridhārī.

Only by Nityānanda's mercy does one attain the lotus feet of the Vaiṣṇavas —

230 The dust of those Vaiṣṇavas' feet and the shelter of their shade — this the mercy of Lord Nityānanda gave to me, the lowly one.

231 “There everything can be attained” — these words of the Lord are the sūtra, and this is my explanation of it.

Anubhāṣya.

In Vṛndāvana the author wrote Śrī Caitanya-caritāmṛta at the order of the Vaiṣṇavas, but the root and source of this work is Nitāi's merciful order. See Ādi 5.196.[26]

By Nityānanda's mercy all desires are fulfilled —

232 All this I attained when I came to Vṛndāvana, and all of it I attained by the mercy of this Lord.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Āya means having come.

Thus ends the fifth chapter of the “Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.”

233 Shamelessly I write my own story: Nityānanda’s qualities have made me mad and make me write.

234 The glory of Nityānanda Prabhu’s qualities is boundless: even Śeṣa with His thousand mouths cannot reach its end.

Anubhāṣya.

See Madhya 21.10 and 12, and Bhāgavatam 2.7.41 and 10.14.7.

Thus ends the fifth chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”

235 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Chapter 6

Determining the Truth of Śrī Advaita

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. Here the true nature and the glory of Śrīmad Advaita Ācārya Prabhu are established by examining two verses. Māyā has two functions (vṛttis): nimitta and upādāna. The puruṣa-avatāra seen in prakṛti as the efficient cause is called “Mahā-Viṣṇu.” And Mahā-Viṣṇu's second form, present in pradhāna, the material cause, is “Advaita.” This Advaita took on a special role as agent in the creation of the world and so on; He also accepted the mood of a devotee and taught bhakti to the world. To say that He is Caitanya's servant only adds to His glory, for in no rasa can one taste Kṛṣṇa's sweetness without the mood of a servant (dāsya-bhāva) contained within each of them.

By the mercy of Advaitācārya one becomes able to describe His true nature —

1 I bow to Śrī Advaita Ācārya, whose deeds are wondrous. By His grace even an ignorant person may describe His true nature.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow down to Śrīmad Advaitācārya, whose deeds are wondrous; by His mercy even an ignorant person can describe His true nature.

Anubhāṣya.

yasya (Advaita Prabhu's) prasādāt (by the mercy) ajñaḥ api (even an ignorant person) tat-svarūpaṁ (the truth about Him) nirūpayet (can describe), tam adbhuta-ceṣṭitam (Him whose deeds are wondrous) śrīmad-advaitācāryam (I) vande.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

3 In five verses I have set out the truth of Śrī Nityānanda; now in two I speak of the greatness of Advaita Ācārya.

Explanation of the twelfth and thirteenth of the fourteen opening verses — (a verse from the diary of Śrī Svarūpa Gosvāmī)

4 Mahā-Viṣṇu is the maker of the world, who creates it through māyā; and this Lord Advaita Ācārya is His avatāra.[1]

Anubhāṣya.

yaḥ jagat-kartā mahā-viṣṇuḥ (the shelter of the efficient cause) māyayā adaḥ (this world) sṛjati, tasya avatāraḥ eva ayam īśvaraḥ (the shelter of the material cause) advaitācāryaḥ.

5 He is called Advaita because He is non-different from Hari, and Ācārya because He teaches bhakti. I take shelter of Him, the Lord Advaita Ācārya, who has descended as a devotee.[2]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Mahā-Viṣṇu, who creates this world by māyā, is the Creator of the world; the Lord Advaitācārya is His avatāra. He is called "Advaita" because He is a tattva nondifferent from Hari, and "Ācārya" because He teaches bhakti. I take shelter of this Lord Advaitācārya, the avatāra in the form of a devotee.

Anubhāṣya.

hariṇā (with the Viṣṇu-tattva) (in nonduality) advaitāt (because there is no difference) — "advaitam"; bhakti-śaṁsanāt (because He instructs in bhajana) — "ācāryam"; bhaktāvatāram īśam tam advaitācāryam āśraye (I surrender).

The truth of Śrī Advaita and His greatness —

6 Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is the Lord Himself; His greatness lies beyond the reach of the jīva.

The avatāra of Mahā-Viṣṇu —

7 Mahā-Viṣṇu carries out the creation of the world and all that goes with it, and Advaita Ācārya is His direct avatāra.

A part nondifferent from Kāraṇārṇavaśāyī —

8 That Puruṣa creates and maintains the world through māyā, and in play He brings forth endless universes.

9 By His will He manifests endless forms, and in one of them He enters each universe.

10 Advaita is a part (aṁśa) of that Puruṣa, and there is no difference between Them at all: He is a particular body of the Puruṣa, and the two are never apart.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
One and the same māyā is called "pradhāna" in its material portion (upādāna) and "māyā" in its efficient portion (nimitta). In keeping with these two functions of māyā, Mahā-Viṣṇu abides in two forms. In one form Mahā-Viṣṇu abides in prakṛti as the efficient cause of the world — this is the form of "Viṣṇu." In His second form He abides in pradhāna and, in the form of Rudra, is called "Advaita." Advaita is therefore not in the least different from the Puruṣa; only Their bodies differ.

*The presiding Lord of pradhāna, the material cause of the world —*

11 Taking pradhāna, the material basis of the world, Advaita assists the Puruṣa, and by His will He fashions millions of universes.

Śrī Advaita, full of auspiciousness —

12 Advaita is the good of the whole world and the abode of all auspicious qualities. His conduct is ever auspicious, and His name is Maṅgala, “the Auspicious”.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Advaita Prabhu is Mahā-Viṣṇu. He is the ācārya. Viṣṇu's conduct is auspicious in His very nature as the agent. When the jīva sees the auspiciousness in His auspicious pastimes and in His very being, good comes to the jīva. He is the source of all auspiciousness. His conduct, turned toward service, brings good to everyone in the world. The worthless people of the world (“the world's encumbrance”) cannot understand this pure, eternal, complete and free auspiciousness, and so they fall away from bhakti, the natural function of the soul. Acts rooted in the wish to enjoy, the attainment of featureless liberation and every other inauspicious thing find no place in Śrī Advaita, who possesses spiritual qualities. Certain jīvas of demoniac nature, bewildered by māyā, failed to understand that He is the nondual Viṣṇu-tattva; holding to the devotionless doctrine of kevalādvaita, they only pretended to follow Him. The Ācārya punished these nondevotees under the guise of nourishing their self-conceit through His own māyā. Yet even this punishment is only an auspicious act. The Viṣṇu-vastu, by both the direct and the indirect way (anvaya and vyatireka), brings the jīva nothing but good. One who passes off the inauspicious as auspicious cannot grasp the Source of Viṣṇu's māyā in its material aspect. Some say that Advaita Prabhu had another name, “Maṅgala.” As a naimittika-avatāra (one who descends for a particular occasion), He instills into prakṛti the power of the material cause. He is not an inauspicious material object, nor is He the abode of inauspicious material qualities. By following His example the jīva attains good. When the jīva hears and chants His name, all that is inauspicious in it is destroyed. One must not attribute to the Viṣṇu-vastu any quality that is undesirable, inferior, limited or featureless. Only by gaining transcendental knowledge of His real being does the jīva attain the highest good (niḥśreyasa).

The Puruṣa creates, taking with Him countless opulences —

13 Taking millions of parts, millions of potencies and millions of avatāras, the Puruṣa creates the whole world.

*The two forms of māyā —*

14 Māyā has two aspects, the efficient cause (nimitta) and the material cause (upādāna): as the efficient cause it is called māyā, and as the material cause, pradhāna.

Anubhāṣya.
See Madhya 20.271.

Kāraṇaśāyī creates in two forms —

15 In the same way the Lord, the Puruṣa, assumes two forms and creates the universe with these two causes, the efficient and the material.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Prakṛti has two divisions, "nimitta" and "upādāna." In the same way the Puruṣa creates the universe by taking two forms: as the nimitta, the form of "Mahā-Viṣṇu," and as the upādāna, the form of "Advaita."

Anubhāṣya.
When people try to determine the source of the visible world, two different methods of reasoning appear. According to one view, the world is created from the Reality full of being, consciousness and bliss (sac-cid-ānanda), but only secondarily; primarily, that Reality manifests Goloka, Vaikuṇṭha and the other abodes together with their associates. According to the other view, the source is the source of the unreal, the unconscious and the joyless: it is unknowable, unmanifest and material. The former view is upheld by Vedānta, the purpose of the Vedas and their final fruit. Sāṅkhya and other smṛtis put forward the opposite, latter view in order to oppose the teaching of the true Reality. The visible world is perceived, for the most part, as unconscious. In living beings there is a semblance of consciousness (cid-ābhāsa) bound up with the universe fashioned by guṇa-māyā. Some hold that even this conscious principle is produced from prakṛti by the guṇas, and on this ground they set their teaching on the material cause apart from Vedānta. But the source, the cause of all causes, is the Possessor of potency (śaktimat-tattva), and the potency abides in the Possessor of potency. Besides the potency from which the visible world arose, other potencies also abide eternally in that great, all-sustaining Reality. Those bound to serving the objects of the visible world perceive the worldly potency and think Bhagavān merely its possessor. They reach a false conclusion (apasiddhānta): that the Possessor of potency was born of a single potency, and that, since with mundane minds they see partial possessors of potency, the undivided Possessor of potency was also born of prakṛti. If one takes as the “source” what mundane sense-knowledge defines as knowable being and non-being, one will of course conclude that consciousness arises from the unconscious. But the actual truth rests in the true Reality, who possesses potency. There is a method that does not accept as the root cause the Reality who creates place, time and circumstance; it first takes up countless objects in all their variety and from them, relying on inference, ascends toward the One. This method is called adhiroha-vāda, the ascending method. In the descending (avaroha) method of reasoning, the Reality is the cause of all causes. Since infinite potency abides in Him, He is the Truth possessed of features (saviśeṣa-tattva). Even His featurelessness is but one among countless ways of considering His features. When people start from notions of unconscious objects, take Him to be an effect and search for His cause, there arises a mind like that of one who has kept company with intoxicants. In fact, the idea that inert prakṛti is the root cause is far from the real truth. The world, unmanifest and evolved from the unconscious potency (acit-śakti), comes from the power of glance (īkṣaṇa) of the Supreme Lord, the Possessor of infinite potencies. Only by receiving power from the All-powerful does prakṛti build the world, which lies in time and space and is accessible to the jīva's material senses. The true Reality, who possesses infinite potencies, is perceived by the conditioned jīva only through the potency that builds the world. Such errors of reasoning arise from failing to discern how the Reality is related to His potency; they give rise in the jīva to vivarta, taking one thing for another. Until the truth is revealed, the jīva turned away from Bhagavān wanders in the world fit for enjoyment and does not find the true Reality.

Śrīla Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa writes in the Govinda-bhāṣya (Brahma-sūtra, Chapter 2, pāda 2): “Kapila, the teacher of Sāṅkhya, gathered the tattvas as follows. Prakṛti is the state of equilibrium of sattva, rajas and tamas. From prakṛti comes the mahat; from the mahat, ahaṅkāra; from ahaṅkāra, the five tanmātras, both kinds of senses and the gross elements; and there is the puruṣa. Such is the set of twenty-five. Sattva and the other guṇas, abiding in equilibrium, are prakṛti. They are to be understood as happiness, sorrow and delusion respectively, for in the world, their effect, everything is seen to take the form of happiness and the rest. Thus a young woman who gives her husband happiness by love is sāttvikī; when she gives him sorrow by her pique (māna) she is rājasī; when she bewilders him by separation she is tāmasī. All states are to be viewed in this way. ‘Both kinds of senses’ means the ten external senses and the one internal sense, the mind — eleven in all. Prakṛti is eternal and all-pervading. The root has no root; therefore the root is rootless. The material cause of all is not limited: ‘All-pervading, because effects are seen everywhere,’ say the sūtras. The mahat, ahaṅkāra and the five tanmātras are the seven prakṛti-vikṛtis: they are prakṛti (that which produces) for ahaṅkāra and the rest, and vikṛti (that which is produced) for pradhāna and the rest. The eleven senses and the five elements are sixteen, and they are only vikṛtis. The puruṣa does not change; therefore he is neither prakṛti nor vikṛti of anything. Prakṛti, however, is ever transforming. Though itself unconscious, it is the cause of the enjoyment and the liberation (apavarga) of many conscious beings. Though utterly beyond the senses, it is inferred from its effects. It is one, yet its guṇas are unequal, and by its power of transformation it gives birth to the world with its varied design, beginning with the mahat. Thus it is both the efficient and the material cause of the world. The puruṣa is inactive and without guṇas, an all-pervading spirit; he is distinct in each body and is inferred from the fact that composite things exist for the sake of another. Because the puruṣa neither changes nor acts, he is neither agent nor enjoyer. Given this nature of prakṛti and puruṣa, their mere proximity leads to an exchange of properties: consciousness is superimposed on prakṛti, and agency and enjoyment on the puruṣa. Thus from non-discrimination comes enjoyment, and from discrimination, liberation. When prakṛti becomes indifferent, that is [liberation]. Kapila set out such points in sūtras with arguments. In this system he accepted perception, inference and scriptural testimony as the means of valid knowledge (pramāṇas): ‘The pramāṇas are three; when a thing is established by them, all is established; there is no further means of establishing.’ Among these, there is no great dispute about matters established by perception and scripture. But pradhāna, which he infers to be the cause of the world by sūtras such as ‘From limitation,’ ‘From uniformity,’ ‘From potency’ and others, must be refuted: by refuting it one refutes his whole doctrine. Here a doubt arises: is pradhāna the efficient and material cause of the world or not? [The opponent says:] Pradhāna is exactly that. The world is sāttvika and so on; therefore pradhāna, which consists of sattva and the other guṇas, must be inferred to be its material cause. We see that the material cause of effects like a pot is homogeneous with them — clay and the like. And just as we say ‘the tree bears fruit’ or ‘the water flows,’ so inert pradhāna too has the capacity to act. Therefore pradhāna alone is the material cause of the world and its maker. When this is proposed, [it is said] (Brahma-sūtra, Chapter 2, pāda 2):

"'And because design is impossible, not that which is inferred' (1).

"'That which is inferred' is what is inferred to be the cause of the world, namely inert pradhāna. It is neither the material cause of the world nor its efficient cause. Why? 'Because design is impossible': inert pradhāna, unless a conscious being directs it, cannot build the varied world. In our world, bricks and the like do not assemble into palaces and other buildings unless a conscious being directs them. The word 'and' adds the impossibility of concomitance (anvaya): external things such as pots are not endowed with the nature of happiness and the rest. Happiness and the rest are internal; pots and the like merely cause happiness and so on, and no one perceives them to be happiness themselves.

"'And because of activity' (2).

"Supply: 'when the inert is directed by a conscious being.' Clearly the activity belongs to the controller in whose presence the inert acts — as with a chariot and its driver. This also refutes 'it bears fruit' and the like: there too a conscious being is in control — this is known from the Antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa, and it will become clear later. 'And' here has a restrictive sense. Or else: activity is seen only in a conscious being — 'I do' — therefore the inert cannot be an agent. One may object: the mere proximity of prakṛti and puruṣa leads to a mutual superimposition of properties, and this explains the design of the world. We reply: is the proximity that causes superimposition simply their coexistence, or some change in prakṛti or in the puruṣa? Not the first, for then superimposition would occur even in the liberated. Not the second: a change in prakṛti is held to be an effect of superimposition and cannot be its cause, and a change in the puruṣa is not accepted at all.

"One may object: milk turns into curd by itself, and rainwater from a cloud, though it has a single taste, takes on varied tastes — sweet, sour and others — in the palm, the mango and other trees. In the same way pradhāna, because of the variety of the puruṣas' karma, takes the form of bodies, worlds and the rest. To this it is said:

"'If [it is said:] like milk and water — there too' (3).

"Milk and water, too, become active only when a conscious being directs them, and not by themselves: so we infer from the example of the chariot and the like. And that He directs them is established by the Antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa.

“‘And because there is nothing apart [from pradhāna], [there can be no talk of] independence’ (4).

“‘And’ has the sense of ‘also.’ Before creation, they say, there was no other cause apart from pradhāna, and pradhāna depended on nothing. Yet even then pradhāna alone cannot bring about its own transformation. They accepted that before the first creation there was no cause apart from pradhāna to impel it or to restrain it. But then they again needed such a cause: they accepted another cause, the proximity of consciousness. Thus the doctrine that the inert alone can be an agent collapses. Moreover, if there is no separate cause and proximity is always present, effects would arise even during the dissolution of the world (pralaya). Nor can one say that there are no effects then because the fruits of past deeds (adṛṣṭa) have not awakened, for their awakening would also have to be ascribed to that very time.

“One may object: grass, creepers, leaves and the like turn into milk by their own nature, without any other cause; so too pradhāna turns into the mahat and the rest. To this it is said:

“‘And not like grass and the like, because it does not happen elsewhere’ (5).

“‘And’ is for emphasis. This argument is not clever. Why? ‘It does not happen elsewhere’: grass and the like, when eaten by a bull or a similar animal, do not turn into milk. If grass and the like turned into milk by their own nature, the same would happen to grass fallen in a courtyard; but it does not. Therefore nature alone is not enough. This happens by the will of the Lord of all, through a connection with a particular being.

“It has been shown that pradhāna is inert and therefore does not act by itself. Now, to make you happy, let us grant that it does; even then nothing you wish for will follow. So it is said:

“‘And even if granted — because there is no purpose’ (6).

“‘Not’ is understood in the four [sūtras]. [Sāṅkhya] holds that pradhāna acts for the enjoyment and the liberation of the puruṣa: ‘The puruṣa will enjoy me, experience my faults and attain liberation, which is my indifference to him.’ The activity of pradhāna is for another's sake, since it does not enjoy anything itself, like a camel carrying saffron. And [Sāṅkhya] holds that the puruṣa, though not an agent, is an enjoyer: even one who does not cook enjoys the fruit, like an eater of food. But such activity is unreasonable. Why? If it is granted, it will bear no fruit. Its fruit would be the puruṣa's enjoyment, that is, his beholding prakṛti, and his liberation, that is, the indifference of prakṛti. Enjoyment is impossible: before the activity begins, the puruṣa is pure consciousness, changeless and not an agent, and cannot undergo the change of beginning to behold prakṛti. Liberation is also impossible: he had it even before prakṛti became active, and so the activity would be pointless. And if mere proximity is the cause of enjoyment, then even the liberated will enjoy, for proximity is eternal.

“One may object: a blind man who can walk but cannot see moves through the proximity of a lame man who cannot walk but can see. Iron, though inert, moves in the presence of a magnet. So too prakṛti, though unconscious, in the presence of the puruṣa, who is pure spirit, becomes as if conscious through his reflection and acts in creation for his sake. To this it is said:

“‘If [it is said:] like a man and a stone — even then [the argument fails]’ (7).

“Even in this way one cannot prove that the inert acts by itself. The lame man, though he cannot walk, has his own capacities: he sees the road and points it out. The blind man, though he cannot see, also has capacities: he accepts directions. The magnet has nearness to the iron and so on. But the puruṣa, eternally inactive and without properties, undergoes no change at all. If creation is held to come from mere proximity, then, since proximity is eternal, creation would be eternal and there would be no liberation at all. Moreover, the lame man and the blind man are both conscious, while the magnet and the iron are both inert; the examples are plainly dissimilar.

“Some hold that the universe is created when one guṇa rises and the others decline, so that a relation of principal and subordinate arises among them. This is refuted as follows:

“‘And because principal status is impossible’ (8).

“The state of pradhāna is the equilibrium of sattva and the other guṇas. In that state none of them, independent by nature, can become principal: the other two are equal to it and cannot become subordinate. Thus no relation of principal and subordinate arises among the guṇas. Nor can its cause be Īśvara or time, for [Sāṅkhya] does not accept them. As Kapila says: ‘Because Īśvara is not proved’; ‘He would be neither liberated nor bound; therefore He is not proved’; and ‘Space and time come from ether and the rest.’ Nor can the puruṣa be that cause, for he is indifferent here. Therefore a creation caused by the imbalance of the guṇas does not take place. Furthermore, since there is no cause, the guṇas might lose their balance even at the dissolution of the world, and not lose it at the first creation.

“One may object: we should infer that the guṇas have different natures, according to their effects; then there is no room for the fault mentioned. To this it is said:

“‘And if inferred otherwise — because they lack the power of knowing’ (9).

“Even if one infers that the guṇas have various powers, there is no escape from the fault. Why? ‘Because they lack the power of knowing,’ that is, because the guṇas do not know: they have no thought ‘I create this, and in this way.’ From the inert, devoid of knowledge, there is no creation — just as with bricks — unless a conscious being directs it.”

Kapila, the teacher of Sāṅkhya, gathered the tattvas as follows. In his view, “prakṛti” is the state of equilibrium of the three guṇas: sattva, rajas and tamas. From prakṛti comes the mahat-tattva; from it, ahaṅkāra; from ahaṅkāra, the five tanmātras; from them, the senses of knowledge and the senses of action, and also the gross elements; and there is the “puruṣa.” These are the twenty-five tattvas in all. The three guṇas, sattva and the others, abiding in equilibrium, are prakṛti. These three guṇas are to be understood as happiness, sorrow and delusion respectively, for in the world, the effect of prakṛti, only states such as happiness are seen. An example: a young woman who gives her husband happiness by love displays a “sāttvika” mood; the same woman becomes “rājasī” when she causes sorrow, and “tāmasī” when she bewilders. The words “both kinds of senses” mean the ten external senses and the one internal sense, the mind — eleven senses in all. Prakṛti is eternal and all-pervading. At the root there is no root (no conscious principle); therefore the root (pradhāna) has no root, that is, it has no other cause. This pradhāna is unlimited and is the material cause of everything; this follows from sūtras such as “All-pervading, because effects are seen everywhere.” The mahat-tattva, the ahaṅkāra-tattva and the five tanmātras are the seven prakṛti-vikṛtis: they are prakṛti for ahaṅkāra and the rest, and at the same time transformations of pradhāna. The eleven senses and the five great elements are the sixteen transformations. The puruṣa does not change, and therefore he is neither prakṛti nor a transformation of anything. Prakṛti is ever transforming; though itself unconscious, it is the cause of the enjoyment and the liberation (apavarga) of many conscious jīvas; though beyond the senses, it is inferred from its effects. Prakṛti is one, but its guṇas are unequal, and so by its power of transformation it gives birth to a world full of varied creations, beginning with the mahat. Thus prakṛti is both the efficient and the material cause of the world. The puruṣa is inactive, without guṇas and all-pervading. He is spiritual by nature and distinct in each body; he is inferred from the way pradhāna is set in motion. Because the puruṣa neither changes nor acts, he is neither agent nor enjoyer. Such is the truth of prakṛti and puruṣa, and therefore their mere proximity leads to an exchange of properties: consciousness is superimposed on prakṛti, and agency and enjoyment on the puruṣa. While there is no such discrimination, there is enjoyment; with discrimination comes apavarga, that is, liberation. These and other points — for example, the puruṣa's indifference toward prakṛti — are set out in sūtras with arguments. In his system the author of Sāṅkhya accepted three means of knowledge (pramāṇas): “perception,” “inference” and “scripture” (āgama). When something is established by them, all is established. (Comparison and the other pramāṇas are included in these three and are not separate pramāṇas.) There is no great dispute about matters established by perception and scripture. But now we must refute the claim that pradhāna is the cause of the world, which is inferred by sūtras such as “From limitation,” “From uniformity,” “From potency” and others; for by refuting this view one refutes all the other views of Sāṅkhya. The doubt here is this: is “pradhāna” the efficient and the material cause of the world or not? The pūrvapakṣa grants pradhāna both. The pūrvapakṣa says: pradhāna, consisting of sattva and the rest, is inferred precisely as the material cause of the world. The material cause is always homogeneous with the effect: thus for a pot and similar things the material cause is clay and the like, which is homogeneous with them. An inert tree bears fruit; equally inert water flows; seeing this, one concludes that inert, unconscious pradhāna too is able to create the world. So: “pradhāna is both the material and the efficient cause of the world.” To refute this conclusion of the pūrvapakṣa, the author introduces the first sūtra.

Pradhāna is unconscious; therefore inert pradhāna cannot be either the material or the efficient cause of the world. Looking at the varied design of this world, it is clear that inert pradhāna cannot build the visible world without the direction of a conscious being, and that it is unreasonable to infer so. In this world, bricks and the like have never yet assembled into palaces and similar buildings unless a conscious being directed them. The word “and” in the sūtra adds the impossibility of concomitance (anvaya). External objects such as pots are never endowed with the nature of happiness and the like. For happiness and the rest are internal properties, and therefore they cannot accompany external things. Above all, a pot and the like merely cause happiness and so on; they themselves are not perceived as happiness.

The second sūtra. Even if we look at activity, pradhāna cannot be the cause. Activity is seen only in what is inert and directed by a conscious being. Clearly that activity belongs to the one under whose direction the inert is set in motion. The best example is a chariot and its driver. The same holds for the example “the tree bears fruit” and similar ones offered in support of pradhāna as the cause. There too the direction of a conscious being is accepted, for the Antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa speaks of it; this will be explained later in this commentary. The word “and” in the sūtra has a restrictive sense. In the example “I am doing,” activity is seen only in a conscious being; therefore the inert cannot be an agent. You may say: the world is designed because, through the mere proximity of prakṛti and puruṣa, their properties are superimposed on each other. The answer: this cannot be said either. Very well — is the proximity that causes the mutual superimposition of properties the coexistence of prakṛti and puruṣa, or some change in prakṛti or in the puruṣa? The answer: it can by no means be their coexistence, for if we accept that, we must accept superimposition in all liberated puruṣas as well. Nor can this proximity be a change in prakṛti: a change in prakṛti is considered an effect of superimposition and so cannot be its cause. Nor can it be a change in the puruṣa: a change in the puruṣa cannot be accepted either. Therefore “pradhāna” cannot be the cause of the world.

You may say: as milk turns into curd by itself, and as the water from a single cloud, though it has one taste, becomes sweet, sour and of many tastes in the fruits of the palm, the mango and other trees, so the one pradhāna, according to the variety of the puruṣas' karma, transforms into bodies, worlds and the rest. In reply the author says:

The third sūtra. Unconscious things such as milk and water also act in their effects only when a conscious being directs them; they are not set in motion by themselves: so it is inferred from the example of the chariot and the like. And from the Antaryāmi-brāhmaṇa it is established that these two inert things are directed by consciousness.

The fourth sūtra. The claim that there is no cause apart from pradhāna had to be abandoned; therefore the claim that pradhāna alone is the agent is also untenable. The word api means the same as ca, that is, “and” (conjunction). The view that before creation there was no cause apart from pradhāna has been given up; therefore the view that pradhāna alone transforms itself is also refuted. The view that “before the first creation there is no other cause apart from pradhāna to impel it or restrain it” has been set aside, for at that point another cause is accepted — the proximity of the conscious principle. Therefore the doctrine that the inert alone is the agent is refuted. Moreover, under such a pūrvapakṣa effects would arise even during the dissolution of the world: since there is no cause apart from pradhāna and proximity to it remains, effects would arise at pralaya just as at creation. Nor can one say that there are no effects at pralaya because the adṛṣṭa has not awakened, for the awakening of that adṛṣṭa might also come at that very time.

You may say: as grass, leaves and the like, eaten by a cow or another animal, turn into milk by themselves, so pradhāna transforms into the tattvas beginning with the mahat. In reply the author says:

The fifth sūtra. Elsewhere grass does not turn into milk; therefore one cannot say that pradhāna, like grass, transforms by its own nature (by itself). The word “and” here is for affirmation. Such a pūrvapakṣa is untenable, for this is not seen elsewhere: grass eaten by a bull or a similar animal does not turn into milk, and so the transformation is not natural. Besides, if grass and the like turned into milk by their own nature, this would be seen in a courtyard too. Since it is not seen, nature alone cannot be called the cause of the transformation; its cause is the will of the Lord of all: “Let grass, in connection with particular living beings, turn into milk.”

It has been proved that pradhāna is inert and therefore does not come into action by itself. Next the author says: even if, to please you, I grant it, nothing you desire will follow.

The sixth sūtra. Even if one grants that pradhāna acts by its own nature, there is no purpose in it. In four sūtras the sense “not” is understood. It seems that pradhāna acts for the sake of enjoyment and liberation: “The puruṣa will enjoy me, feel my faults and attain liberation, that is, indifference toward me.” As a camel carries a load of saffron only for others and does not enjoy it itself, so pradhāna acts only for the sake of others. And the puruṣa, it seems, though not an agent, is an enjoyer. As an eater enjoys food though he has not cooked it, so the puruṣa tastes the fruits. But to hold, with the pūrvapakṣa, that pradhāna acts in this way is unreasonable: even if it is granted, no fruit is seen. The fruit of the activity is the puruṣa's enjoyment, that is, beholding prakṛti, and liberation, that is, indifference toward prakṛti. Enjoyment from the activity of pradhāna is impossible, for then the puruṣa — pure consciousness, changeless and not an agent — would enjoy only because, by beholding prakṛti, he came into contact with it and underwent change. Apavarga from the activity of pradhāna is also impossible: apavarga existed even before the activity arose, and so the activity is useless. And if mere proximity is called the cause of enjoyment, then, since proximity is eternal, even the liberated will have to enjoy.

You may say: a blind man who can walk but cannot see begins to move near a lame man who cannot walk but can see; and inert iron also moves near a magnet. So too prakṛti, though unconscious, near the puruṣa, who is pure consciousness, under the influence of his reflection sets about creation and the rest for the puruṣa's enjoyment, as if it were a conscious being. In reply the author says:

The seventh sūtra. Even if the puruṣa is like a magnet, inert pradhāna does not act by itself. Even so, one cannot prove that the inert acts by itself. The lame man cannot walk, yet he has his own capacities — to point out the road and to give directions. The blind man cannot see, yet he too has a capacity — to accept the lame man's directions. And a magnet can come near iron. But the eternally inactive puruṣa, devoid of properties, undergoes no change whatever. If proximity itself is accepted as change, then, since proximity is eternal, one must accept eternal creation and the absence of liberation. Above all, the lame man and the blind man are both conscious, while the magnet and the iron are both inert; the examples are plainly dissimilar.

Next the author refutes the view that the universe is created because the guṇas rise and decline and a relation of principal and subordinate arises among them:

The eighth sūtra. The principal status of a guṇa is impossible in itself; therefore this view is untenable. The abiding of the guṇas — sattva and the rest — in equilibrium is called “the state of pradhāna.” In that state the guṇas are independent by nature, and so none of them proves to be principal over another. For if one of the three guṇas is accepted as principal, the other two, being equal to it, cannot become subordinate. A relation of principal and subordinate among the guṇas never arises. Nor can Īśvara or time be called its maker, for no one [among them] accepts this. Kapila himself said: “Since [Īśvara] could be neither liberated nor bound — that is, since there is no proof — Īśvara is not proved." Space and time arise from ether and the rest; the puruṣa is not their maker, for he is entirely indifferent to activity. Nor is an imbalance of the guṇas the cause of creation. Moreover, since there is no cause, the guṇas might lose their balance at every later creation, but not at the first.

You may say: one can infer that the guṇas, according to their effects, are of different natures; then there is no room for the fault mentioned. In reply the author says:

The ninth sūtra. Even if one infers otherwise, the inert does not act by itself. That is, even if one infers that the guṇas are endowed with such varied powers, there is no escaping the fault: the guṇas lack the capacity to know (consciousness); evidently they do not have even the thought "Here I am, and this is how I create." Creation from inert matter devoid of knowledge is never possible. As bricks, wood and other unconscious things can do nothing unless a conscious being directs them, so the unconscious guṇas can do nothing unless the potency of the conscious Supreme Lord directs them.

(Chapter 2, pāda 1.) "The great sage Kapila, desiring liberation, composed the smṛti [Sāṅkhya] to elaborate the meaning of the jñāna-kāṇḍa. He duly accepted the agnihotra and the other rites enjoined by the karma-kāṇḍa, and the Śrutis recognize him as trustworthy: 'the sage Kapila, born [in the beginning],' and so on. By his sūtras 'Now, the complete cessation of the threefold misery is the highest goal of man,' 'Not by visible means, for even after cessation [misery] returns' and others, it is established there that the cause of the world is unconscious, independent pradhāna alone; [this is also said in the sūtras] 'For the liberation of the liberated,' 'Or for its own sake — of pradhāna,' 'Though pradhāna is unconscious, its activity is like that of milk' and others. If Brahman is accepted as the cause, this smṛti will be left without a subject, for the whole of it speaks of nothing but pradhāna. Therefore Vedānta should be interpreted so as not to contradict the smṛti of Kapila, who is entirely trustworthy. The smṛtis of Manu and others will not be left without a subject, for by setting forth dharma they elaborate the meaning of the karma-kāṇḍa and so have their own subject. When this is proposed, it is said:

"'If [it is said:] there follows the fault that the smṛti has no room — no, for there follows the fault that other smṛtis have no room' (1).

"'Has no room' means is left without a subject. If Vedānta is interpreted according to its single import (samanvaya), the Sāṅkhya smṛti incurs the fault of being left without a subject; so must [the texts of Vedānta] be interpreted in a sense contrary to the Śruti? If that is said — no. Why? 'Other' and so on. For then a great fault would arise: other smṛtis would be left without a subject — the smṛtis of Manu and others, which follow Vedānta and teach that Brahman alone is the cause. In them the Lord of all is shown to be the cause of the origin of the world and the rest, and by no means some other principle named by Kapila. Thus Śrīman Manu says: 'This [world] was darkness — unknown, without marks, beyond reasoning, unknowable, as if wholly asleep. Then the self-born Bhagavān, unmanifest, manifesting this [world] — the great elements and the rest — appeared in full power, dispelling the darkness. He who is beyond the senses, imperceptible, subtle, unmanifest, eternal, containing all beings and inconceivable — He Himself appeared. Wishing to create various beings from His own body, He reflected and first created the waters, and placed a seed in them. It became a golden egg, shining like the sun; in it Brahmā himself was born, the grandfather of all the worlds,'[11] and so on. Śrī Parāśara says: 'From Viṣṇu the world arose, and in Him it abides; He is the one who maintains and dissolves this world, and He is the world';[12] 'As a spider draws a thread from its heart through its mouth, plays with it and swallows it again, so does Janārdana,' and so on. Others speak in the same way. Nor can one say that these smṛtis have their subject in elaborating the meaning of the karma-kāṇḍa. They enjoin dharmas for purifying the mind, so that knowledge of Brahman may dawn, and therefore their purpose is only to elaborate the meaning of the jñāna-kāṇḍa. That they purify the mind is seen from the Śruti: 'Him [the brāhmaṇas seek to know] by the study of the Vedas,'[13] and so on. Here and there one sees and experiences that they bring such fruits as rain, sons, heaven and the like. But this too, by creating trust in the scriptures, finally leads to Him, for it is said: 'The goal that all the Vedas proclaim'[14] and 'The Vedas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa.'[15] The Sāṅkhya smṛti cannot elaborate the meaning of Vedānta, for it teaches what contradicts the Śruti. Elaboration (upabṛṁhaṇa) is the clarifying of a meaning that agrees with the Śruti, and in it there is no such thing. Therefore the Sāṅkhya smṛti, which contradicts the Śruti, is invented out of its author's own head and is not trustworthy; and we do not fear the charge that it will prove useless. Nor is it right to favor that smṛti on the pretext that it is trustworthy. Many interpreters are declared trustworthy, and their smṛtis differ in meaning; if one favors one of them, the real meaning will never be settled. When smṛtis contradict one another, there is no other way to decide than to rely on the Śruti; therefore one should honor only the smṛti that follows the Śruti. You object by the strength of smṛti — by the strength of smṛti we shall refute you: thus the fault ‘other smṛtis have no room’ is pointed out. Some cite the Śvetāśvatara-śruti as proof that Kapila is trustworthy: ‘He who in the beginning endowed the born sage Kapila with knowledge.’[16] But this is not so: those words speak of someone else, and one whose words contradict the meaning of the Śruti cannot be trustworthy. As for Manu's trustworthiness, the Taittirīyas recite: ‘Whatever Manu said is medicine.’ And of Śrī Parāśara tradition says that he understood the highest truth about the Deity by the grace of Pulastya and Vasiṣṭha. Kapila, the founder of the smṛti opposed to the Vedas, is a particular jīva of the line of Agni, deluded by māyā, and not Vāsudeva born of Kardama. For tradition says: ‘Kapila, called Vāsudeva, taught the doctrine of Sāṅkhya to Brahmā and the other gods, to Bhṛgu and others, and likewise to Āsuri; all of it was elaborated by the meaning of the Vedas. But another Kapila taught a doctrine opposed to all the Vedas’; ‘[he taught] Sāṅkhya to another Āsuri, elaborated with false arguments.’ Therefore, if the Sāṅkhya smṛti, untrustworthy because it contradicts the Vedas, proves useless, there is no fault in that.

“‘And the rest,’ that is, what the Sāṅkhya smṛti speaks of, is not found in the Vedas; therefore it is not trustworthy. These are its tenets: the puruṣas are all-pervading and are consciousness alone; prakṛti alone binds and liberates them, and bondage and liberation belong to prakṛti alone; there is no Lord of all, a special Puruṣa; time is not a tattva; the five prāṇas and the rest are merely functions of the senses. Such tenets and others like them are to be seen in it.”

1. The Śruti mentions a trustworthy sage named “Kapila.” He duly accepted the karma-kāṇḍa enjoined by the Vedas. This same sage Kapila composed the Sāṅkhya smṛti in order to elaborate the jñāna-kāṇḍa. In sūtras such as “Now, the complete cessation of the threefold misery is the highest goal of man,” the Sāṅkhya smṛti calls the complete cessation of the threefold misery — ādhyātmika and the rest — “the highest goal of man,” or liberation. In it unconscious pradhāna alone is established as the independent cause of the world. If Brahman alone is called the sole cause of the world, this Sāṅkhya smṛti will be left without a subject, for from beginning to end it speaks of nothing else. Therefore the texts of Vedānta should be interpreted so as not to contradict the views of the entirely trustworthy sage Kapila. Then the smṛtis proclaimed by Manu and others will not be left without a subject either: by setting forth dharma they elaborate the karma-kāṇḍa and so have a subject. To refute this, the author introduces the first sūtra, “If [it is said:] there follows the fault that the smṛti has no room…”.

Absence of room is anavakāśa; the word anavakāśa means being left without a subject. If Vedānta is interpreted according to its single import (samanvaya), the Sāṅkhya smṛti incurs the fault of being left without a subject. So should the texts of Vedānta be interpreted in a sense opposite to what one hears in them? The answer: that is impossible. If they are interpreted so, a great calamity follows: other smṛtis — those of Manu and others, which follow Vedānta and teach that Brahman alone is the cause — will be left without a subject. In these smṛtis only the Lord of all is shown to be the cause of the origin of the world and the rest. The tattvas are not described in them as the sage Kapila describes them. Thus Śrī Manu says: “Before creation the whole universe was darkness — unknown, without marks, beyond reasoning, unknowable — and lay as if asleep. Then the self-born Bhagavān, though Himself unmanifest, appeared endowed with the potencies of the great elements and the rest in order to manifest this world, and dispelled that darkness. He is beyond the senses, imperceptible, subtle, unmanifest, eternal, containing all beings and inconceivable by nature. Having appeared Himself, He desired in His mind to create various beings from His own body, and first of all He created water. Then the Supreme Lord placed His seed in that water. From the seed arose a golden egg, shining like a thousand suns. In that egg Brahmā himself, the grandfather of all the worlds, was born.” And the sage Parāśara says: “The visible world arose from Bhagavān Viṣṇu and abides resting on Him. He maintains it and He destroys it. This world is a particular potency of His. As a spider draws threads out of its own body and later swallows them itself, so Bhagavān Viṣṇu creates the universe from His potency and later dissolves it again in His potency.” Other sages say the same. Nor can one say that the Sāṅkhya smṛti[17] will have a subject by elaborating the karma-kāṇḍa: [these smṛtis] enjoin dharma for the purification of the mind, so that knowledge of Brahman may dawn. Therefore the purpose of these smṛtis is to elaborate the jñāna-kāṇḍa. It is also seen that these dharmas purify the mind: the words of the Śruti “Him [the brāhmaṇas seek to know] by the study of the Vedas” and so on are the proof. Here and there it is seen and confirmed that these dharmas (their performance) bring such fruits as rain, sons, heaven and the like. But this too is only to purify the mind by creating faith in the scriptures. The Śrutis “The goal that all the Vedas proclaim” and “The Vedas are devoted to Nārāyaṇa” express the same intention. Even if the purpose of the Sāṅkhya smṛti is to elaborate the jñāna-kāṇḍa, one still cannot accept that it elaborates the meaning of Vedānta, for the Sāṅkhya smṛti teaches what contradicts the Śruti. To clarify the meaning of the statements of the Śruti — that is what “elaboration” (upabṛṁhaṇa) means. No such clarification of the meaning of the Śruti is seen in the Sāṅkhya smṛti. It must therefore be judged contrary to the Śruti. And what contradicts the Śruti is invented out of one's own head and is therefore untrustworthy. So the uselessness of this untrustworthy Sāṅkhya smṛti is inevitable. Nor is it right to favor one smṛti while waiting for the untrustworthiness of another to be established. If one favors smṛtis that differ in meaning, then, faced with the many opinions of Gautama and many others who interpret in different ways, one will never settle the real meaning. When two smṛtis contradict each other, one cannot resort to any deciding proof other than the Śruti. Whatever one relies on must certainly follow the Śruti; if it does not follow the Śruti, it cannot be honored. Those who raise censure by the strength of smṛti will be refuted by the strength of that same smṛti; therefore pointing out the fault “other smṛtis will be left without a subject” is unavoidable. In the Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad the words “the sage Kapila, born…” and so on do speak of a trustworthy sage Kapila. But that Kapila is not this one; he is another sage Kapila. Therefore, in calling Kapila, the author of Sāṅkhya, untrustworthy, we show no disrespect to the Śruti. The trustworthiness of Manu and Parāśara is well known from the Śruti and the smṛti. Thus with the words “Whatever Manu said is medicine” the Taittirīyas affirm Manu's trustworthiness. And the smṛti says that Śrī Parāśara understood the highest truth about the Deity by the grace of Pulastya and Vasiṣṭha. Kapila, the founder of the Sāṅkhya smṛti opposed to the Vedas, and Bhagavān Kapila, the son of Kardama, are not the same person. The first Kapila is a particular jīva of the line of Agni, deluded by māyā; the second, the son of Kardama, is an avatāra of Vāsudeva Himself. The Padma Purāṇa says: “Bhagavān Vāsudeva descended from the sage Kardama as Kapila and taught the doctrine of Sāṅkhya to the gods headed by Brahmā, to the sages headed by Bhṛgu and to a brāhmaṇa named Āsuri; the Sāṅkhya smṛti He taught is elaborated by the meaning of the Vedas. But another Kapila taught another Āsuri a different Sāṅkhya — opposed to all the Vedas, elaborated with false arguments and invented out of his own head.” Therefore there is no fault whatever in calling this latter Sāṅkhya smṛti, opposed to the Vedas and untrustworthy, useless.

2. Moreover, this Sāṅkhya smṛti speaks of certain matters that are not found in the Vedas. For this reason too it can be called "untrustworthy." These are the matters: "The puruṣas, that is, the individual souls, are consciousness alone and all-pervading; prakṛti alone binds and liberates them. Both 'bondage' and 'liberation' are material. There is no puruṣa called 'the Lord of all.' 'Time' is not a tattva at all. The five prāṇas and the rest are merely functions of the senses." These and certain other tenets opposed to Vedānta are seen in this Sāṅkhya smṛti.

He Himself is the "efficient" cause, and Advaita Prabhu the "material" cause —

16 The Puruṣa Himself is the efficient cause of the world, and in the form of Advaita, Nārāyaṇa becomes its material cause.

As the one who casts the glance He is the efficient cause, and as Advaita He is the Creator in the form of the material cause —

17 As the efficient cause He casts His glance upon māyā; as the material cause, Advaita creates the universe.

Refutation of the Sāṅkhya doctrine —

18 Although Sāṅkhya holds pradhāna to be the cause, the world can never come into being from inert matter.

24 Why call Him ‘aṅga’ and not ‘aṁśa’? Because ‘aṅga’, a limb, is closer and more intimate than ‘aṁśa’, a part.

Why the name “Advaita” is fitting —

25 Advaita, the abode of all good qualities, is a part of Mahā-Viṣṇu. He is non-different from the Lord, and so the name Advaita, “Non-dual”, fits Him in full.

Why the name "Ācārya" is fitting —

26 As once He created the whole universe, so now, having descended, He has established bhakti.

In His descent as Advaita, His one work is to preach devotion to Kṛṣṇa —

27 He delivered the jīvas by giving them devotion to Kṛṣṇa, and He explained the Gītā and the Bhāgavatam in the light of bhakti.

28 He has no work but teaching bhakti; therefore His name became Advaita Ācārya.

Anubhāṣya.

Although Advaita Prabhu is the Viṣṇu-tattva, the one who is served, He has no other duty and no other conduct than this: to awaken in the jīvas the inclination to serve, for that is what securing their good means. Bhagavān Viṣṇu saw that if He displayed His pastimes only as the one who is served, the pleasure-seeking people of the world would imitate Him and become godless kevalādvaita-vādīs or ahaṅgrahopāsakas, who worship themselves as God. Therefore He manifested the pastimes of a servant; displaying this kind of ācāryaship is also one of His works. The Ācārya has no work other than conduct turned toward the service of Kṛṣṇa. He behaves as the servant of the One who is served — that is why He is the ācārya; this is a particular pastime of a naimittika-avatāra. Wicked people try to defile the Ācārya's holy place and His dress and, instead of serving Bhagavān, launch into a wild dance (tāṇḍava) of gratifying their own senses. The Ācārya condemns this utterly.

29 He is the guru of the Vaiṣṇavas, honoured by the whole world. Joined together, these two names became Advaita Ācārya.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Advaita Ācārya is the guru of the whole Vaiṣṇava world, and everyone honors Him. Following His lotus feet, the Vaiṣṇavas devoted to Bhagavān adopt His conduct and serve Hari.

Why the name "Kamalākṣa" is fitting —

30 Because He is the limb and the part of the Lotus-eyed Lord, He bears the beautiful name Kamalākṣa, "Lotus-eyed".

In Vaikuṇṭha the Vaiṣṇavas attain a form like that of Viṣṇu —

31 The Lord's associates attain a form like His (sārūpya): like Nārāyaṇa, they are four-armed and clad in yellow.

The glory of Advaita Prabhu's qualities —

32 Advaita Ācārya is the foremost part of the Lord; His truth, His name and His qualities are all wondrous.

Advaita Prabhu calls Mahāprabhu down into the world —

33 It was His offering of tulasī leaves and His roar that brought Caitanya into the world together with His associates.[4]

34 Through Him the Lord spread the kīrtana, and through Him the Lord delivered the world.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 3.91, 95–108.

35 The glory of Ācārya Gosāñi's qualities is boundless. Where can the jīva, a mere worm, find its end?

One limb of Gaura is Advaita, another is Nitāi —

36 Ācārya Gosāñi is the principal limb (aṅga) of Caitanya, and His other limb is Nityānanda Prabhu.

*The subsidiary limbs (upāṅgas) and weapons — the devotees headed by Śrīvāsa —*

37 The Lord's lesser limbs (upāṅga) are Śrīvāsa and the other devotees; they are like His hands, face and eyes, and like His disc and other weapons.

*With His limbs and subsidiary limbs Gaura preaches the holy name and prema —*

38 With them Caitanya Prabhu performs His pastimes, and with them He spreads what He desires.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 3.71–74.

Gaura regards Advaita Prabhu as His guru —

39 Knowing that He is a disciple of Mādhavendra Purī, the Lord regards Ācārya Gosāñi as His guru.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Advaita Prabhu was a disciple of Mādhavendra Purī, and His godbrother Īśvara Purī was Mahāprabhu's guru. Because of this relationship Mahāprabhu regards Ācārya Gosāñi as His "guru." In truth Śrī Caitanya Gosāñi is the Lord of all, and Advaita Ācārya Prabhu is His servant. In this relationship Advaita Prabhu regarded Himself as a "servant."

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Mādhavendra Purī is one of the gurus of the Śrī Madhvācārya-sampradāya. His disciples are Īśvara Purī and Śrī Advaita Prabhu. The branch of the Śrī Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇavas in the succession of Śrī Madhva is cited in the Śrī Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, in the Prameya-ratnāvalī and in the book of Śrī Gopāla-guru Gosvāmī; it is also mentioned in the Śrī Bhakti-ratnākara. In the Śrī Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā the branch of Śrī Madhva is described as follows: "The disciple of the Lord of Paravyoma was Brahmā, the master of the universe. His disciple became Nārada, and Nārada's disciple was Vyāsa. Śuka, having given up the path of (dry) knowledge, became the disciple of Vyāsa.[18] From Vyāsa the renowned Madhvācārya received initiation into the mantra of Kṛṣṇa. His disciple was the great-hearted Padmanābhācārya. His disciple was Narahari, and his disciple the brāhmaṇa Mādhava. His disciple was Akṣobhya, and his disciple Jayatīrtha. His disciple was Jñānasindhu, and his disciple Mahānidhi. His disciple was Vidyānidhi, and his servant Rājendra. His disciple was the sage Jayadharma; from among his followers came Śrīmad Viṣṇu Purī, the author of the Bhakti-ratnāvalī. The disciple of Jayadharma was Brahmaṇya Puruṣottama. His disciple was Vyāsatīrtha, who composed the Viṣṇu-saṁhitā. His disciple was the glorious Lakṣmīpati, the abode of bhakti-rasa. His disciple was Mādhavendra, who inaugurated this dharma. His disciple was the glorious sannyāsī Īśvara Purī. He whose very nature is the fruit of śṛṅgāra cultivated śṛṅgāra; Advaita cultivated both fruits, dāsya and sakhya. Gaura respectfully accepted Īśvara Purī [as guru] and flooded the whole world, both material and transcendental [with prema].”

Following worldly custom, Gaura treats Advaita like a guru —

40 In His worldly pastimes the Lord keeps the bounds of dharma: with praise and devotion He bows at the Ācārya’s feet.

Advaita Prabhu regards Mahāprabhu as His Lord —

41 The Ācārya knows Caitanya Gosāñi as His Master, and He thinks of Himself as His servant.

*Thinking of Himself as Kṛṣṇa's servant, He preaches bhakti —*

42 In the happiness of that feeling He forgets Himself, and He teaches the jīvas, “Become servants of Kṛṣṇa!”

Anubhāṣya.

Accepting the mood of a devotee, Mahā-Viṣṇu sets aside the awareness of His own true nature (svarūpa) and joyfully regards service to Bhagavān as His own duty to perform. That very joy of service loosens Mahā-Viṣṇu's awareness of His own nature (His sense of Himself as the enjoyer). By His own example He constantly inspires the jīvas to serve Kṛṣṇa. See verses 27–28.

In service to Kṛṣṇa lies the bliss of Vaikuṇṭha —

43 Such is the ocean of bliss in feeling oneself Kṛṣṇa's servant that the happiness of Brahman, multiplied ten million times, is not equal to a single drop of it.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Brahma-sukha (the happiness of Brahman) is the happiness that comes with the thought of nondifference: "I am Brahman."

Advaita and Nityānanda find happiness only in serving Gaura —

44 "I and Nityānanda are servants of Caitanya. Nowhere is there bliss equal to the mood of a servant."

Anubhāṣya.

See Ādi 7.85, 97–98. In the Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu (Pūrva-vibhāga, First Wave): "Even if the bliss of Brahman were multiplied a parārdha times, it would not equal even an atom of the ocean of the happiness of bhakti."[19] In the Bhāvārtha-dīpikā: "A fortunate few, sporting in great joy in the ocean of nectar of topics about You, hold the four goals of life no higher than a blade of grass. And those among them who do not desire even the subtle goal [of liberation] — bhakti, through prema, makes them people whose minds and very lives have been stolen. Devotees whose hearts have found bliss in serving the lotus feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa never desire liberation." In the Padma Purāṇa, in the Kārtika-māhātmya: "O Lord, though You are the master of all who grant boons, I ask of You neither liberation, nor the highest limit of liberation, nor any other boon. O Lord, may only this form of Yours as a cowherd boy always appear in my mind! What do I want with anything else? As You, while bound, freed the two sons of Kuvera and made them devotees, so grant me too Your own prema-bhakti. O Dāmodara, I have no craving for liberation."[20] In the Śrī Nārāyaṇa-vyūha-stava of the Hayaśīrṣa-pañcarātra: "O Lord of those who grant boons, I pray for neither dharma, nor kāma, nor artha, nor mokṣa. At Your lotus feet I desire only service." "Viṣṇu wished again and again to grant him boons, yet he did not ask for liberation and chose bhakti alone — I bow to that Prahlāda." "Though liberation came to him unsought from Viṣṇu, the son of Daśaratha, he did not want liberation without service — obeisances to that Hanumān." In the words of Śrī Hanumān: "I do not long for the liberation that cuts the bonds of worldly existence, for in it [the awareness] 'You are the Lord and I am the servant' disappears." In the Nārada-pañcarātra, in the Jitante-stotra: "I never have any desire for dharma, artha, kāma or mokṣa. Grant that I may live at the foot of Your lotus feet. O upholder of the earth, I do not pray for mokṣa, sālokya or sārūpya. O most blessed one, true to Your vows, I desire only Your mercy." In the hymn Mukunda-mālā of the emperor Kulaśekhara: "O Hari, I worship Your lotus feet not to be free of duality, not to escape the dreadful hell of Kumbhīpāka, and not to enjoy, in the garden of Nandana, beautiful women whose soft bodies are like creepers. I wish only, in whatever birth I take, to contemplate You in the chamber of my heart." In the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, see many verses: 3.25.36, 3.4.15, 3.25.34, 4.1.22, 4.9.10, 4.20.24, 5.14.43, 6.11.25, 6.17.28, 6.18.74, 7.6.25, 7.8.42, 8.3.20, 9.4.49, 9.21.12, 10.16.37, 10.87.21, 11.14.14, 11.20.34, 12.3.6 and others.

Examples showing that service to Kṛṣṇa is supreme: (1) Lakṣmī begs for service to Kṛṣṇa —

45 Lakṣmī, His dearest beloved, dwells upon His heart, yet she too humbly begs for the happiness of service.

(2) Viṣṇu's associates, and Brahmā, Śiva, the four Sanas, Nārada, Śuka and others also serve Kṛṣṇa —

46 In the mood of service His associates rejoice — Brahmā, Śiva, Nārada and others, Śuka, and Sanātana with his brothers.[5]

(3) Nitāi, mad in the service of Gaura —

47 Nityānanda Avadhūta is the foremost of all; in His love of serving Caitanya He became mad.[6]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Āgala means foremost, the first.

*(4) Śrīvāsa and the other great souls (mahājanas) — all serve Gaura —*

48–49 Śrīvāsa, Haridāsa, Rāmadāsa, Gadādhara, Murāri, Mukunda, Candraśekhara and Vakreśvara — all these are learned men of the highest greatness, and service to Caitanya makes every one of them mad.

Being servants of Gaura themselves, they teach only service to Gaura —

50 So they sing, dance and laugh aloud, and they teach everyone: "Become servants of Caitanya!"

51 "Caitanya Gosāñi regards Me as His guru, yet I feel Myself His servant."

The power of love for Kṛṣṇa —

52 This is one wondrous power of love for Kṛṣṇa: it gives elders, equals and juniors alike the mood of a servant.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Guru: the elders, who abide in the rasa of parental love (vātsalya); sama: the equals (who abide in the rasa of friendship, sakhya); laghu: the younger ones. Love for Kṛṣṇa gives the mood of a servant to all three. Therefore all of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya's elders, equals and juniors are His servants.

Anubhāṣya.

The Lord's elders in this world serve Him without knowing it. A mind dominated by majesty, or the path of reverent propriety (maryādā-mārga), often cannot grasp this. That is why service to Nārāyaṇa lacks the wonder found in love for Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa's elders accept the position of elders only to become established in the highest service — and so they serve Him. Service by those related to the Lord as equals or juniors can be grasped even by a mind dominated by majesty; but the strength of a servant's mood in one who regards himself as an elder exists only in service to Kṛṣṇa. To be inclined to serve with one's whole being and to long for service without measure is possible only toward Kṛṣṇa, whom all serve. Nārāyaṇa has many servants, equals and juniors; but Kṛṣṇa's elders, displaying a wondrous power, serve Him wholly. Kṛṣṇa's elders, His equals and those He embraces with tender affection — all three kinds of [associates], filled with love for Him, serve Kṛṣṇa. This is the wondrous power of prema.

Evidence from the experience of perfected souls —

53 Hear the proof of this in the explanations of scripture, firmly confirmed by the experience of great souls.

*(5) Service to Kṛṣṇa — even in the parental love (vātsalya-rasa) of Nanda Mahārāja —*

54–55 What to speak of others? In Vraja Kṛṣṇa has no elder equal to Nanda Mahāśaya. In his pure parental love he has no thought that Kṛṣṇa is God; yet love makes even him feel something like a servant.

56 He too begs at Kṛṣṇa's feet for attachment and devotion; his own words are the proof of it.

57–58 "Listen, Uddhava: Kṛṣṇa is truly my son. But if it seems to you that He is God, still let all the workings of my mind rest in Him; let my thoughts be fixed on your God, Kṛṣṇa."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
O Uddhava, even if Kṛṣṇa is regarded as Īśvara, let my mind still rest in that Kṛṣṇa.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.47.66–67)*

59 "May the workings of our minds take shelter at Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet, may our words utter His names, and may our bodies be given to bowing down to Him and serving Him." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.66)

Anubhāṣya.
After meeting the residents of Vraja, Uddhava took leave of them and was about to return to Dvārakā.[21] Then Nanda and the other cowherd men, full of love for Śrī Kṛṣṇa, speak to Uddhava:

naḥ (our) manasaḥ vṛttayaḥ (workings of the mind) kṛṣṇa-pādāmbujāśrayāḥ (taking shelter of Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet) syuḥ (may be). [Our] vācaḥ (words) tu nāmnām (His names) abhidhāyinīḥ (uttering — may they be devoted to kīrtana), kāyaḥ (the body) tat-prahvaṇādiṣu (in bowing to Him, Kṛṣṇa, and so on) astu (may be engaged).

60 "Wherever we may wander, driven by our karma and the Lord's will, by our good deeds and gifts may we have love for Kṛṣṇa, the Lord." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.67)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Nanda said: "O Uddhava, may all the workings of our minds take shelter of Śrī Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet, may our words sing His names, and may our bodies bow down to Him. Whatever our condition may be by the will of Īśvara, according to the fruits of our karma, may charity and other auspicious deeds increase our love (rati) for Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Person."

Anubhāṣya.
karmabhiḥ (by deeds — sinful, pious and others that bear fruit) īśvarecchayā (by the will of Īśvara) yatra kvāpi (wherever it may be) bhrāmyamāṇānām (wandering — being born among the eighty-four [lakhs of] species) naḥ (our) maṅgalācaritaiḥ dānaiḥ (by the auspicious deeds that arise from them) īśvare (for Bhagavān) kṛṣṇe (Kṛṣṇa) ratiḥ (attachment) astu (may there be).

*(6) Service to Kṛṣṇa — even in the friendship (sakhya-rasa) of the friends of Vraja —*

61 All the host of Kṛṣṇa's friends in Vraja, led by Śrīdāmā, know nothing of His majesty: their love is pure friendship.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Sakhya is of two kinds: "with awareness of majesty" and kevala, that is, "unmixed," sakhya. Śrīdāmā and the other friends in Vraja have kevala sakhya: they do not know Kṛṣṇa's majesty.

62 They wrestle with Kṛṣṇa and climb on His shoulders, and yet, in the mood of servants, they tend His feet.[7]

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.15.17)*

63 "Some of them massaged the feet of that great soul, while others, their sins destroyed, fanned Him with fans." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.15.17)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

When Kṛṣṇa lay down, one friend began to massage His feet, and another, in a mood of pure friendship, to fan Him with a fan made of leaves.

Anubhāṣya.

Before the demon Dhenuka was killed in Tālavana, the cowherd boys played with one another in this way, together with Rāma and Kṛṣṇa:

hata-pāpmānaḥ (freed of impurity) kecit (some cowherd boys) mahātmanaḥ (of Bhagavān) tasya (of Him, Kṛṣṇa) pāda-saṁvāhanam (massaging of the feet) cakruḥ (did); apare (other cowherd boys) vyajanaiḥ (with fans) samavījayan (fanned properly).

*(7) Service to Kṛṣṇa — even in the conjugal love (madhura-rasa) of the gopīs of Vraja —*

64–65 Even the beloved gopīs of Vraja, dearer to Kṛṣṇa than anyone else, whose foot-dust Uddhava prays for, think of themselves as His maidservants.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.31.6)*

66 "O You who take away the distress of the people of Vraja! O Hero, whose smile destroys the pride of Your own! O friend, we are Your maidservants: be kind to us, and show us women Your beautiful lotus face." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.31.6)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O You who destroy the sorrows of Vraja! O supreme hero among women! O You whose gentle smile dispels the pride of Your own people![10] O friend, we are Your maidservants: show us Your lotus face.

Anubhāṣya.

When Kṛṣṇa disappeared during the rāsa dance, the gopīs, searching for Him, sang:

he vraja-janārti-han (O You who destroy the pain of separation of those full of love for Kṛṣṇa), vīra (O You whose form is magnanimous), nija-jana-smaya-dhvaṁsana-smita (O You whose smile destroys the smaya, that is, the pride, of Your own people, the embodiments of rasa), sakhe (O friend), sma (surely) bhavat-kiṅkarīḥ naḥ (us, Your maidservants) bhaja (stay with us); cāru (enchanting) jala-ruhānanam (lotus face) ca yoṣitām (to us women, the gopīs) darśaya (show).

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.47.21)*

67 "O gentle one! Alas, Nanda's son now lives in Mathurā. Does He remember His father's house, His kinsmen and the cowherd boys? Does He ever speak of us, His maidservants? When will He place on our heads His arm, fragrant as aguru?" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.47.21)[8]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

How sad that our ārya-putra now lives in the city of Mathurā! O Uddhava, does He remember the home of His father Nanda and His cowherd friends? Does He ever speak of us, His maidservants? Ah, will He ever again place on our heads His hand, fragrant like aguru?

Anubhāṣya.

When Uddhava came to Vraja, Śrīmatī, addressing a bee, speaks citra-jalpa (varied talk):

he saumya (O gentle one), api bata ārya-putraḥ (the son of Nanda) adhunā (now) madhu-puryām (in Mathurā) āste (does He live happily)? saḥ pitṛ-gehān (together with His parents, Nanda and Yaśodā, and with the homes) bandhūn (the relatives — Parjanya, Varīyasī, Upananda, Abhinanda, Sannanda, Nandana, Rohiṇī, Sānandā, Nandinī, Kaṇḍava, Daṇḍava and others), gopān (the cowherd boys — Subala, Arjuna, Gandharva, Vasanta, Śrīdāmā, Sudāmā, Ujjvala, Kokila, Sanandana, Vidagdha and others) ca kiṁ smarati (does He remember)? kvacit (ever) api kiṅkarīṇām (of the maidservants — Lalitā, Viśākhā, Citrā, Campakalatā, Tuṅgavidyā, Indulekhā, Raṅgadevī, Sudevī, Kalāvatī, Śubhāṅgadā, Hiraṇyāṅgī, Ratnalekhā, Śikhāvatī, Kandarpa-mañjarī, Phullakalikā, Anaṅga-mañjarī, Puṇḍarīkā, Sītākhaṇḍī, Cārucaṇḍī, Sadaṇḍikā, Kuṇṭhitā, Kalakaṇṭhī, Romaci, Mecakā, Haridrābhā, Haricchelā, Vitaṇḍikā, Līlāvatī, Sādhikā, Candrikā, Mādhavī, Vijayā, Nandā, Gaurī, Sudhāmukhī, Vṛndā, Kaumudī, Ratnabhavā, Ratnaprabhā and others) naḥ (of us — Śrīmatī, the daughter of Vṛṣabhānu, Gāndharvikā) kathām (talk) saḥ gṛṇīte (does He speak with His own lips)? kadā nu (when) aguru-sugandham (more fragrant even than aguru) bhujam (His arm) mūrdhni (on our heads) adhāsyat (will He place)?

(8) More than that, even Śrī Rādhā Herself serves Kṛṣṇa —

68–69 Let alone them: Śrīmatī Rādhikā, who surpasses them all in every respect and by whose love Kṛṣṇa is bound at every moment — even She has become His maidservant and serves His feet.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.30.39)*

70 "O Master, O Beloved, O dearest one! Where are You, where are You, O mighty-armed? O friend, show Yourself to Me, Your wretched maidservant!" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.30.39)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Lord! O lover! O dearest! O mighty-armed one! I am Your most wretched maidservant: bring me near to You!

Anubhāṣya.

During the rāsa dance Kṛṣṇa left the other gopīs and disappeared with Śrīmatī Rādhikā alone. Seeing the other gopīs lament in separation from Kṛṣṇa, Śrīmatī, in a fit of pride, said that She could walk no further and told Kṛṣṇa to carry Her. Then Kṛṣṇa disappeared, and Śrīmatī lamented:

hā nātha, ramaṇa, preṣṭha (the best of all), kvāsi ([where are] You), kvāsi? he sakhe, kṛpaṇāyāḥ (tormented by separation from You) dīnāyāḥ te (Your) dāsyāḥ (to the maidservant, that is, to me) sannidhim (Your nearness) darśaya (reveal).

71 In Dvārakā all the queens, led by Rukmiṇī, also think of themselves as Kṛṣṇa's maidservants.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.83.11)*

72 "Knowing that I was performing austerities in the hope of touching His feet, He came with His friend and took my hand. And so I am the sweeper of His house." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.83.11)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I was performing austerities, longing to touch Śrī Kṛṣṇa's feet. In His mercy Kṛṣṇa came with His friend and took my hand in marriage. Since then I have been His maidservant who sweeps His house.

Anubhāṣya.

When the women of the Yadu and Kuru dynasties gathered together at Samanta-pañcaka, Kṛṣṇa's queen Kālindī, in a conversation about Kṛṣṇa, said to Draupadī:

sva-pāda-sparśanāśayā (with the hope of touching the feet of Him, Śrī Kṛṣṇa) tapaś carantīm mā (me), who was performing austerities, ājñāya (knowing), saḥ kṛṣṇaḥ sakhyā (with Arjuna) saha upetya (coming near) pāṇim agrahīt; sā (I) am tat (His) gṛha-mārjanī (maidservant).

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.83.39)*

73 "By austerity and by turning away from every attachment, we have become, in truth, maidservants in the house of Him who delights in Himself." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.83.39)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Through many austerities, giving up all attachment, we have attained the position of maidservants in the house of this Person, who delights in Himself (ātmārāma).

Anubhāṣya.

At the same time, in the same conversation, Kṛṣṇa's queen Lakṣmaṇā says to Draupadī:

imāḥ vayam (we, the queens) sarva-saṅga-nivṛttyā (by withdrawing, through indifference, from attachment to everything — happiness, wealth, sons and so on, or the four goals of life including mokṣa) tapasā (by the service of maidservants) ātmārāmasya tasya (of Him, Kṛṣṇa) addhā (directly) gṛha-dāsikāḥ babhūvima (have become).

*(10) Service to Kṛṣṇa — even by Balarāma, the svayaṁ-prakāśa —*

74 What to speak of others? Consider Baladeva Mahāśaya, whose mood is full of pure friendship, parental love and the rest.

Anubhāṣya.

Baladeva is the elder brother and so worthy of honor, yet He knows Himself only as the servant of His younger brother Kṛṣṇa. In Mahā-Vaikuṇṭha the catur-vyūha is only a chamber (prakoṣṭha) of this same Baladeva, the svayaṁ-prakāśa: this is the supreme majesty of the all-powerful Parameśvara. On the path of reverence (maryādā-mārga) even such an exalted, supreme position is established in service to Kṛṣṇa. Therefore no being — neither in Goloka and Vaikuṇṭha, nor in the countless universes, nor within them — is able to enjoy Kṛṣṇa or make Him its servant. Everyone other than Kṛṣṇa excels others exactly to the degree that he is inclined to serve Kṛṣṇa. And to the degree that a being has given up service to Kṛṣṇa and turned away from Him, to that degree he has invited misfortune. In the material world the urge to enjoy Kṛṣṇa, or to think oneself Kṛṣṇa's equal and enjoy as He does, is the root mantra of the nondevotees; yet by their true nature all who take shelter of Kṛṣṇa are eternally engaged in serving Bhagavān. It is aversion to serving Kṛṣṇa that makes the jīva like one dead. When knowledge of Kṛṣṇa awakens, the inclination to serve Kṛṣṇa is seen in every jīva, to a greater or lesser degree.

75 Even He thinks of Himself as a servant. Is there anyone without the mood of a servant of Kṛṣṇa?

(11) Ananta in the form of Śeṣa serves Kṛṣṇa in ten bodies —

76 Śeṣa-Saṅkarṣaṇa, with His thousand mouths, assumes ten bodies and serves Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The ten bodies are the umbrella, sandals, bed, pillow, garments, ornaments, pleasure garden, dwelling, sacred thread and throne.

(12) Śiva's service to Kṛṣṇa —

77 In the endless universes Rudra is a part of Sadāśiva; he is a guṇa-avatāra, the crown of all the gods.

78 He longs for the service of Kṛṣṇa; Śiva says at every moment, "I am Kṛṣṇa's servant."

Anubhāṣya.

Rudra and Sadāśiva. In the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta, in the description of the guṇa-avatāras (verses 18–24), it is said of Rudra: "He is said to be eleven vyūhas and eight bodies; usually he has five faces, three eyes and ten arms. Sometimes Hara, like Brahmā (Vidhi), is said to be a particular jīva. But this should be understood as in the case of Śeṣa, for he is glorified as a part [of the Lord]. Hara is the abode of the Puruṣa and so is in essence almost nirguṇa; but because of his connection with tamas everyone sees him here as subject to change. As the Tenth Canto says (10.88.3): 'Śiva is always joined with his potency, has three marks and is covered by the guṇas.' As the Brahma-saṁhitā says (5.45): 'As milk, joined with a particular transforming agent, becomes yogurt, yet [the yogurt] is not different from its cause, so He who for a particular task takes the form of Śambhu — Govinda, the original Person, Him I worship.' Sometimes he is born from the forehead of Brahmā (Vidhi), sometimes from the forehead of the Lord of Kamalā; and at the end of a kalpa Kālāgni-Rudra appears from Saṅkarṣaṇa as well. His form called Sadāśiva is free from even a trace of tamas. He is the cause of all and a part of the Lord Himself. It is he who is described in the Vāyu Purāṇa and others as [dwelling] in Śivaloka. So too in the Brahma-saṁhitā, where the original Śiva is spoken of (5.8): 'Niyati is Ramā-devī, His beloved, obedient to Him. His liṅga is the eternal Bhagavān Śambhu, whose form is light. And she who is the yoni is the aparā śakti,' and so on."

Śrī Rudra has eleven vyūhas: Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Virūpākṣa, Raivata, Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka the best of the gods, Sāvitra, Jayanta, Pinākī and Aparājita; and eight forms (mūrtis): earth, water, fire, air, ether, the sun, the moon and the performer of the soma sacrifice. Among them Rudra is usually five-faced, three-eyed and ten-armed. In some places Rudra, like Vidhi (Brahmā), is glorified as "a particular jīva." But since he is also glorified as a part of Bhagavān, this must be reconciled as in the case of "Śeṣa": Śiva, the svāṁśa (the Lord's own part), belongs to the category of Īśvara, while Rudra the destroyer is a vibhinnāṁśa, a jīva. Hara is an avatāra of Bhagavān and by nature the Puruṣa, so in truth he is nirguṇa; but because of his connection with the mode of darkness, to ordinary people who do not know the truth he seems at first sight to be subject to change. As the Tenth Canto says: “Rudra is always joined with prakṛti, the state of equilibrium of the guṇas; when the guṇas are agitated, he is joined with the three guṇas and covered by them from afar.” As the Brahma-saṁhitā says: “Milk, joined with a particular transforming agent, turns into yogurt, yet that yogurt is never a thing separate from its cause, the milk. So too He who descends in the form of Rudra for the sake of destruction — the original Person Govinda, Him I worship.” In one kalpa Rudra is born from the forehead of Brahmā (Vidhi), in another from the forehead of Viṣṇu. At the end of a kalpa Kālāgni-Rudra is born from Saṅkarṣaṇa as well. The Vāyu Purāṇa and others describe a form of Śiva named Sadāśiva in Śivaloka, which lies within Vaikuṇṭha: He is the cause of all and has no connection with the mode of darkness. This Sadāśiva is a vilāsa of Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa Himself. As the Brahma-saṁhitā says of the original Śiva: “The unfailing Ramā-devī, inseparable from Bhagavān, part of His own nature and obedient to Him, is His beloved; the eternal Bhagavān Śambhu, whose form is light, is a particular part of that svayaṁ-rūpa. She who is the yoni, the part that serves as the womb — Mahāmāyā, the source of the mahat-tattva and the other [elements] — is the aparā, the lower potency made of the three guṇas, called pradhāna,” and so on.

Śrī Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa [comments as follows]. Because particular statements [of scripture] are found, [the author] speaks [this verse] to show that Rudra too is of two kinds.[22] First he speaks of the one who in the verse beginning sattvaṁ rajaḥ (Bhāgavatam 1.2.23) is named as belonging to the category of Īśvara: “Rudra is eleven vyūhas.” Here [are meant] the words of the Mahābhārata: “Ajaikapāt, Ahirbudhnya, Virūpākṣa, then Raivata, Hara, Bahurūpa, Tryambaka the lord of the gods, Sāvitra, Jayanta, Pinākī and Aparājita.” Likewise “eight bodies”: “Earth, water, fire, air and ether, the sun and the moon, and the performer of the soma sacrifice — these are the eight forms,” says Yādava. “Usually” — because the Rudra who dwells in the covering of water [around the universe] is seen to have one face.

Next [the author] speaks of his belonging to the category of jīvas: “Sometimes….” In the Ṛg-veda: “Whom I wish, him I make fierce, him a Brahmā, him a sage, him wise,” and so on. In the Nārāyaṇa Upaniṣad, beginning with the words “Then the Person Nārāyaṇa desired, ‘Let Me create beings’”:

“From Nārāyaṇa Brahmā is born, from Nārāyaṇa Rudra is born, from Nārāyaṇa Prajāpati is born, from Nārāyaṇa Indra is born, from Nārāyaṇa the eight Vasus (are born), from Nārāyaṇa the eleven Rudras (are born), from Nārāyaṇa the twelve Ādityas” (Nārāyaṇa Upaniṣad 1), and so on. In the Mahā Upaniṣad, beginning with the words “There was only Nārāyaṇa; there was neither Brahmā nor Īśāna”: “From the forehead of Him, absorbed in meditation, was born a three-eyed Person holding a trident, endowed with beauty, truth, celibacy, austerity and renunciation” (Mahā Upaniṣad 1–2), and so on. And in the Mokṣa-dharma: “Prajāpati and Rudra too I Myself create. But they do not know Me, bewildered by My māyā.” These statements speak of his birth — so here Hara is a jīva. Hence for him there is also destruction. In the Viṣṇu-dharma: “Brahmā, Śambhu, and likewise the Sun, the Moon, Śatakratu and others, as well as the rest, are endowed with the potency of Viṣṇu. But when their work in the world is over, they are deprived of that potency; and, deprived of potency, they all die.” The śruti “There was only one…” says the same. Otherwise these [statements] would be contradicted. The example here is “as of Brahmā (Vidhi).” “As in the case of Śeṣa”: Śeṣa, who serves as the bed of the Lord of the Śārṅga bow — His supporting potency — belongs to the category of Īśvara, while [the Śeṣa] who holds up the earth is a jīva empowered by Him. “For he is glorified as a part [of the Lord]” means that in the Purāṇas he is called both His svāṁśa and His vibhinnāṁśa.

But that Hara who in the verse sattvaṁ rajas tamaḥ is named as a manifestation of the Supreme Person — “being the abode of the Puruṣa,” that is, being He Himself — is indeed nirguṇa. “Almost” — because he is covered by tamas, which he accepted by his own will. Therefore “everyone,” that is, those who do not know the truth, “sees him here as subject to change,” among the guṇa-avatāras; in reality he is changeless — that is the meaning. To prove that “because of his connection with tamas he is seen as subject to change,” [the author] cites “Śiva … with his potency….” Śiva is Rudra; “always” — at all times; “with his potency” — with prakṛti, the state of equilibrium of the guṇas, which he accepted by his own will; “joined.” When the guṇas are agitated, he “has three marks,” that is, the three guṇas; and when they are manifest, he is “covered” by them from afar. If one asks, “It is well known that he is covered by tamas; why then is he said here to have three marks?” — we answer: the three guṇas are mixed with one another, so sattva and rajas are also present there; there is no contradiction. And this statement itself should be understood as a restatement (anuvāda) of how people see him.

The proof that [Hara] is nirguṇa as the abode of the Puruṣa, and is called changing because of his connection with tamas, is “As milk….” As milk, joined with a particular transforming agent, becomes yogurt, and the yogurt is not separate, not different, from its cause, the milk, so “He” — Govinda — joined with the tamas He accepts by His own will, becomes Śambhu; that is, Śambhu is not other than Govinda. And since the change comes from outside, it does not touch His own nature (svarūpa).

[The author] names the sources from which Rudra appears: “of Brahmā….” “From the forehead of Brahmā” is found in the Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa and others; “from the forehead of the Lord of Kamalā” — in the Mahā Upaniṣad (2) and in the Purāṇas; this is possible because the kalpas differ. “Kālāgni-Rudra” should be understood from the words of the Eleventh Canto: “Beginning from Pātāla-tala, the fire from Saṅkarṣaṇa's mouth…” (Bhāgavatam 11.3.10).

One may object: “The author of the scripture, having found [such] statements, decided that Kṛṣṇa is the Lord Himself (svayaṁ-prabhu), that Nārāyaṇa and others are His vilāsas and svāṁśas and some are āveśas; that from His svāṁśa Garbhodaśāyī [come] Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra; that they are Īśvaras, while Brahmā and Rudra are sometimes jīvas. But this is not skillful. The original Truth is Sadāśiva: He is meant by the word ‘Himself,’ and He also takes the forms of Nārāyaṇa and others. Therefore the three — Brahmā and the rest — are His effects; for the Kaivalya Upaniṣad (6–9) says: ‘Meditating on Him who is inconceivable, unmanifest, infinite in forms, auspicious (śiva), serene, immortal, the womb of Brahman; without beginning, middle or end, one, all-pervading, consciousness and bliss, formless, wondrous; the companion of Umā, the Supreme Lord, the master, three-eyed, blue-throated, serene — the sage reaches the Source of all beings, the Witness of all, Him who is beyond darkness. He is Brahmā, He is Śiva, He is Indra, He is the Imperishable, the Supreme, the self-ruling Lord. He is Viṣṇu, He is prāṇa, He is the fire of time, He is the moon. He is all that was and that will be, the moving and the unmoving. Knowing Him, one passes beyond death; there is no other path to liberation.’ So this view is better, being based on śruti.” To this [the author] answers: “Sadāśiva….” That form is a part of the Lord Himself, Kṛṣṇa; Nārāyaṇa is His vilāsa — that is the meaning. That is why the Taittirīyas read “Śiva,” “Acyuta” and “Nārāyaṇa” in one sense. In the [cited] śruti, “Umā” means glory, and “the companion of Umā” is one accompanied by glory; “three-eyed” means knowing the three times; “blue-throated” means one whose throat is adorned with a blue gem (nīla). So it should be explained, for the ordinary meanings do not apply to that Śiva. “In the Vāyu Purāṇa and others”: “in Śivaloka” means in the abode of Vaikuṇṭha. This Sadāśiva and His world were described by the author of the Sandarbhas with the words of the Vāyu Purāṇa that begin “All around the waters….”

[The author] cites the decisive statement that Sadāśiva is a form of Kṛṣṇa Himself, the svayaṁ-rūpa: “Niyati….” The words “and so on” include the following: “The desire of Hari is the great seed. These progeny of Maheśvara were born having the nature of liṅga and yoni. This Puruṣa, the possessor of potency, is Maheśvara in the form of the liṅga. In that liṅga appeared Mahā-Viṣṇu, the Lord of the world” (Brahma-saṁhitā 5.8–10). The meaning is as follows. Earlier His sport with Ramā was mentioned. What is that Ramā like? It is said: “niyati” — she who is held, fixed in Him, the lover; that is, she is inseparable from Him and part of His own nature. Hence it is said: “His beloved, obedient to Him.” For the Hayaśīrṣa-pañcarātra says: “There is no Devī without Viṣṇu, and no Viṣṇu without the lotus-born one,” and the Viṣṇu Purāṇa: “Eternal indeed is she, Śrī, the mother of the world, inseparable from Viṣṇu” (Viṣṇu Purāṇa 1.8.15). Bhagavān Śambhu is the “liṅga” of that svayaṁ-rūpa, that is, His sign: “Liṅga — in the sense of sign and of inference,” says the Viśva [lexicon]. Bhagavān is the Lord of Paravyoma, possessed of the six opulences. “Śambhu” is He who, as His second vyūha Saṅkarṣaṇa, brings welfare (śam) to the jīvas dissolved in prakṛti by creating their respective upādhis; “whose form is light” — whose form is consciousness. Kṛṣṇa's being Lord over Him reveals that Kṛṣṇa is the svayaṁ-rūpa, as a cow is recognized by its dewlap and other marks: He of whom this [Śambhu] is the vilāsa is [Bhagavān] Himself; that is why [Śambhu] is called His liṅga. “She who is the yoni” — the material cause of the mahat and the rest — “is the aparā śakti,” that is, consisting of the three guṇas. “Of Hari” — of His part, Saṅkarṣaṇa; “desire” — His desire to glance [at her] — bears fruit in the creation of the mahat and the rest; hence “the great seed.” “Great” — the immeasurable jīva-tattva — is placed in her. Therefore “these progeny of Maheśvara, having the nature of liṅga and yoni,” are said to be born from the Puruṣa and prakṛti as their causes. Since prakṛti is secondary and depends on Him, the progeny are called “of Maheśvara”: this he establishes with the words “the possessor of potency….” Then he clarifies what was said: “In that….” “In the liṅga” — in her Lord, in His presence. Mahā-Viṣṇu is Saṅkarṣaṇa.

79 Mad with love for Kṛṣṇa, overwhelmed and naked, he sings of Kṛṣṇa's qualities and pastimes and dances without end.

*(13) Service to Kṛṣṇa runs through all four rasas — conjugal, parental, friendly and servile —*

80 Whatever the mood — of father, mother, elder or friend — by the very nature of love for Kṛṣṇa it brings forth the mood of service.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Whatever mood [toward Kṛṣṇa] one may take up, one must certainly acknowledge the mood of a servant (dāsya) contained within every mood.

Kṛṣṇa Himself is the Lord of all —

81 Kṛṣṇa alone is served by all; He is the Lord of the world. All others are His servants and followers.

Anubhāṣya.

See Ādi 2.70, 83, 88, 102, 106; 3.5; 4.11–12; 5.131; 7.7–8; Madhya 6.147; 8.133–135; 10.15; 15.139; 18.190–191; 20.152–155, 240, 400; 21.3, 92; 22.7; 24.71 and others.

82 That Kṛṣṇa has descended as the Lord Caitanya; therefore all others are His servants.

(14) Everything spiritual other than He is His servant —

83 Some accept Him and some do not, yet all are His servants. One who does not accept Him is destroyed by that very sin.

Anubhāṣya.

Forgetting his true nature, the jīva puts on the costume of an enjoyer and turns away from serving Kṛṣṇa. And some, out of ignorance, at times think that service to Bhagavān is not their only duty. But in fact every living being eternally abides in His service. If the jīva does not serve Bhagavān, his nature is overturned and misfortune arrives. Service to Śrī Caitanya is the intrinsic duty (svarūpa-dharma) of the jīva, an atomic particle of spirit. When the conditioned jīva forgets the function of his true nature and strives for something else, it is only the pull of enjoying matter. When consciousness (caitanya) awakens in him, service to Caitanya naturally manifests in his heart. Deprived of service to Caitanya, the conditioned jīva in his undertakings comes to lord it over other things; but even then he is only an unworthy servant of Caitanya.

84 "I am Caitanya's servant, Caitanya's servant! I am Caitanya's servant, the servant of His servants!"

85 Saying this, He danced and sang with deep roars, and a moment later the Ācārya sat down, grown calm.

*Baladeva and all His aṁśa-avatāras regard Themselves as servants of Kṛṣṇa —*

86 The conception of oneself as a devotee has its root in Śrī Balarāma, and all His parts follow Him in that mood.

(1) His avatāra Saṅkarṣaṇa regards Himself as a servant —

87 One avatāra of His is Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa, who at every moment thinks of Himself as a devotee.

(2) His avatāra Lakṣmaṇa regards Himself as a servant —

88 Another avatāra of His is the glorious Lakṣmaṇa, who served Śrī Rāma at every moment.

(3) His avatāra the original Puruṣa also regards Himself as a devotee —

89 The avatāra of Saṅkarṣaṇa who lies in the Causal Ocean likewise bears the mood of a devotee in His heart.

(4) His avatāra Advaita also regards Himself as a devotee —

90 A distinct manifestation of His is Advaita Ācārya, whose work at every moment is devotion to the Lord in body, mind and speech.

91 In words He says, “I am Caitanya’s attendant,” and in His mind He thinks at every moment, “I am His devotee.”

92 With His body He serves, offering water and tulasī, and by spreading bhakti He has delivered the whole world.

(5) His avatāra Śeṣa also regards Himself as a servant —

93 Śeṣa-Saṅkarṣaṇa, who holds up the earth, expands Himself into many bodies to serve Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Kāya-vyūha means the ten bodies. See verse 76.

*All of Kṛṣṇa's aṁśa-avatāras are His devotees —*

94 All these are avatāras of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, yet we always see Them conduct Themselves as devotees.

*The supreme dignity of the bhakta-avatāra —*

95 The scriptures call all of Them devotee-avatāras, and the position of a devotee-avatāra is above all others.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhagavān descends into the material world to display His majesty. But for the welfare of the jīva, higher and more needful than all the pastimes of these Īśvara-avatāras is the exemplary bhakta-avatāra, who awakens in the jīva an understanding of how to serve [the Lord]. Trying to see the avatāras in whom majesty predominates through knowledge born of the senses, the jīva often comes to grief; but when he sees an avatāra of Bhagavān in the form of a devotee, his false ego cannot draw bad fruit from such an example. Many ignorant people, while being jīvas, call themselves “Vāsudeva” and the like, and after death take birth as jackals. Such a fate befalls precisely those who are bewildered and do not see the true nature of the bhakta-avatāras. False ego intoxicates the conditioned jīva with a craving for the majesty of Bhagavān and turns him into a Māyāvādī.

*The behavior of elder and younger between the aṁśa-avatāras and Kṛṣṇa, the whole (aṁśī) —*

96 Kṛṣṇa alone is the whole (aṁśī); the avatāras are His parts (aṁśa). And between the whole and the part we see the conduct of elder and younger.

*An elder aṁśa-avatāra sees the younger aṁśī as master, and a younger aṁśa-avatāra regards himself as servant of the elder aṁśī —*

97 In the mood of the elder, the whole is conscious of being the Master; in the mood of the younger, the part thinks of Himself as a devotee.

Anubhāṣya.

A separated portion of a thing is called aṁśa, and that of which it is a portion is the aṁśī. The part of the aṁśī, the portion of the undivided, is contained within the aṁśī, within the undivided. The aṁśī is the master (prabhu), the aṁśa is the devotee (bhakta). The relationship of "master" and "devotee" includes the distinction of elder and younger, greater and lesser: the greater is called "prabhu," the lesser "bhakta." The aṁśī is Kṛṣṇa; the aṁśas are Baladeva and the manifestations of Mahā-Viṣṇu who share His nature. Kṛṣṇa regards Himself as the Lord, and Baladeva and the others regard Themselves as devotees.

With Kṛṣṇa the devotee receives the highest honor —

98 Greater than equality with Kṛṣṇa is the position of a devotee, for Kṛṣṇa's devotee is dearer to Him than His own self.

Anubhāṣya.

The position of Kṛṣṇa's devotee, that is, the devotee's service to Kṛṣṇa, is higher than the idea of equality with Kṛṣṇa: for Kṛṣṇa loves His servant more than He loves His own interests. The best evidence of this is the verse of the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (9.4.68): "The sādhus are My heart, and I am the heart of the sādhus. They know nothing but Me, and I know nothing but them."

99 Kṛṣṇa regards His devotee as greater than Himself, and many words of scripture prove it.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.14.15)*

100 "Neither Brahmā, born of Me, nor Śaṅkara, nor Saṅkarṣaṇa, nor Śrī, nor even My own self is as dear to Me as you are." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.14.15)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
O Uddhava! Neither Brahmā, nor Saṅkarṣaṇa, nor Lakṣmī, nor even I Myself am as dear to Me as you, My devotee, are dear to Me.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Kṛṣṇa's words to Uddhava, the best of His devotees:

me (to Me) yathā bhavān (you, Uddhava) priyatamaḥ (the devotee), [so] ātma-yoniḥ (Brahmā) tathā na; śaṅkaraḥ tathā na; saṅkarṣaṇaḥ ca na tathā priyatamaḥ; śrīḥ (Lakṣmī) tathā na, ātmā tathā na eva (not even I Myself, My divine form, am so dear).

Only in the mood of a devotee does Kṛṣṇa taste His own sweetness —

101 In equality with Kṛṣṇa there is no tasting of His sweetness; it is in the mood of a devotee that one relishes it.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
One who regards himself as Kṛṣṇa's equal does not taste His sweetness.

Thus ends the sixth chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

102 This is the conclusion of the scriptures and the experience of the wise; foolish people do not know the glory of this mood.

Anubhāṣya.
In sārūpya and the other kinds of liberation, and in viṣṇu-tattva, there is [a sense of] equality with Kṛṣṇa, so the sweetness of service to Kṛṣṇa is not tasted so [fully]. In the mood of a devotee there is no equality with Kṛṣṇa (no position of enjoyer), and so Kṛṣṇa's sweetness is fully realized, like the taste of food that is chewed. Ordinary people, out of foolishness and greed for mastery, are by their very nature unable to experience the highest limit of the servant's mood. Only those who are highly experienced and have entered deeply into the scriptures can understand this subtle subject.

Nityānanda, Rāma and the other Viṣṇus taste Kṛṣṇa's sweetness only in the mood of devotees —

103–104 Accepting the mood of devotees, Balarāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Advaita, Nityānanda, Śeṣa and Saṅkarṣaṇa drink the nectar of Kṛṣṇa's sweetness; intoxicated with that happiness, They know nothing else.

To taste His own sweetness, Kṛṣṇa Himself descends in the mood of a devotee as Gaura —

105 Let alone others: Śrī Kṛṣṇa Himself became thirsty to drink His own sweetness.

106 He strives to taste His own sweetness, but without the mood of a devotee it cannot be tasted.

Anubhāṣya.
Kṛṣṇa, the object of the devotees' worship, wished to know how the devotees taste His sweetness. Understanding that it cannot be tasted without accepting the mood of a devotee, He Himself became a devotee.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 4.137–158.

Tasting His own sweetness in the mood of a devotee —

107 So, accepting the mood of a devotee, He descended in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, full of every mood (bhāva).

108 In the moods of various devotees He drinks His own sweetness. I have explained this conclusion before.[9]

Anubhāṣya.
To taste the five different rasas — śānta, dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and madhura — Śrī Gaurahari accepted the mood of each, and so He is full of every mood. Accepting the moods of devotees who take shelter of different bhāvas, Gauracandra, full of every mood, drinks His own sweetness.

The mood of a devotee belongs to all the avatāras of Viṣṇu —

109 All the avatāras have a claim to the mood of a devotee; there is no happiness greater than that of the devotee's mood.

Anubhāṣya.

All the avatāras of Viṣṇu are entitled to descend in the mood of a devotee for the sake of serving Kṛṣṇa. One who tastes [rasa] feels more happiness in serving the One who is served in the mood of a devotee than in the mood of Īśvara.

*Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa is the original bhakta-avatāra —*

110 The original devotee-avatāra is Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa, and among the devotee-avatāras Advaita too is counted.

Anubhāṣya.

Advaita Prabhu is viṣṇu-tattva, yet He displayed the pastimes of a servant befitting an associate of Śrī Caitanya. Regarding Himself as a servant is precisely what makes a viṣṇu-tattva a bhakta-avatāra. Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa in Mahā-Vaikuṇṭha, though He abides as the Īśvara of the catur-vyūha, is the original bhakta-avatāra. From Him [comes] Mahā-Viṣṇu in the Causal Waters, and through the differences of His manifestations we learn of [His] glance (īkṣaṇa) in the efficient and material [causes]. Therefore Śrī Advaitācārya, the avatāra of Mahā-Viṣṇu, is Śrī viṣṇu-tattva. All the manifestations of Saṅkarṣaṇa are engaged in the service of Kṛṣṇa, the svayaṁ-rūpa — therefore Advaita Prabhu too is a servant of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa, that is, a bhakta-avatāra.

The glory of Advaita Prabhu —

111 The glory of Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is boundless: it was by His roar that Caitanya descended.

112 By spreading saṅkīrtana He delivered the whole world; by Advaita's grace people obtained the treasure of prema.

113 Who can tell the endless glory of Advaita? I write only what I have heard from great souls.

Homage to Ācārya Prabhu —

114 Millions of times I bow at the Ācārya's feet. May He not count any offence of mine in this.

Anubhāṣya.
Thus ends the sixth chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

115 Your glory is as fathomless as millions of oceans; to speak of its measure is a great offence.

116 Glory, glory, glory to Śrī Advaita Ācārya! Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya and to the venerable Nityānanda!

117 In two verses I have set out the truth of Advaita. Now, O devotees, hear something of the Pañca-tattva.

118 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Chapter 7

Setting Forth the Account of the Pañca-tattva

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. This seventh chapter describes the glory of the Pañca-tattva. Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, who comprises the five tattvas, descended and gave the world the holy name and prema, and a great flood of prema arose. Several kinds of sophists (kutārkikas) — the Māyāvādīs, the blasphemers and others — fled from that flood. Wishing to deliver them, Mahāprabhu accepted sannyāsa and, by preaching pure devotion, drew all those people to His feet. He also wished to deliver the Māyāvādī sannyāsīs living in Kāśī. At the entreaty of the devotees He met all those sannyāsīs together in the house of a certain brāhmaṇa in Vārāṇasī-dhāma. First He showed them the majesty of His own true nature (svarūpa) and so won their faith. Then, answering their questions, He showed that the doctrine of Māyāvāda has no foundation and pointed out every kind of fault in the views of Śrī Śaṅkarācārya. By the strength of the sukṛti they gained by seeing Bhagavān, He brought them onto the path of bhakti and bestowed His mercy on them.

A description of the great magnanimity of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya —

1 I bow to Śrī Caitanya, the only refuge of those who have no other refuge, who gives the highest treasure to those bereft of every good. Now I write of the magnanimity with which He bestows love and devotion for Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow down to Śrī Caitanya, the refuge of those who have no other refuge — that is, of the akiñcanas — who grants the greatest goal to people bereft of the highest goal (paramārtha). And I describe the magnanimity with which He gives prema-bhakti.

Anubhāṣya.

agaty-eka-gatiṁ (the one, incomparable refuge of the agati, those who have no other refuge), hīnārthādhika- (to those who are hīna-artha — bereft of artha, that is, of the highest goal, deprived of it — that which is beyond all [adhika], the greatest: love for Kṛṣṇa, the fifth goal of human life) sādhakam (the giver) śrī-caitanyaṁ natvā (having bowed down), asya (of this Bhagavān, Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya) prema-bhakti-vadānyatā (the great compassion of granting prema-bhakti for Kṛṣṇa) likhyate (is described).

2 Glory, glory to Mahāprabhu Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya! Whoever takes shelter at His feet is truly blessed.

*Of the six tattvas in the verse "vande gurūn…," apart from guru-tattva, the examination of the Pañca-tattva begins; though without difference, it is fivefold for the tasting of rasa —*

3 At the beginning I offered obeisance to the six truths, headed by the guru. I have spoken of the truth of the guru; now I shall consider the other five.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In the first chapter I described guru-tattva, dividing it into the dīkṣā-guru and the śikṣā-guru. The six tattvas are those named in the verse "vande gurūn īśa-bhaktān…." Now, in this verse, setting guru-tattva aside, I examine the remaining five tattvas.

4 The five truths descended together with Śrī Caitanya, and with them He delights in saṅkīrtana.

5 The five truths are one substance; there is no difference between them at all. Yet to taste rasa, the one truth appears in different forms.

Anubhāṣya.

The Reality possessed of potency (śaktimān vastu) is manifest as the Pañca-tattva, recognized through five different kinds of pastimes. In substance it has no duality and so is one, yet it is full of fivefold variety. This variety is a distinctive feature of the pastimes: unlike a dry existence without taste, it serves the sweetness of rasa. The śruti says: “His supreme potency is heard to be manifold indeed.”[6] From these words it follows that the distinctions of the many potencies of the Reality, the nondual Knowledge (advaya-jñāna), exist eternally.

In the Pañca-tattva — Śrī Gaurāṅga, Nityānanda, Advaita, Gadādhara, Śrīvāsa and the others — there is no difference whatsoever in substance. But for the tasting of rasa this tattva, full of varied pastimes, is distinguished in five ways: “bhakta-rūpa,” “bhakta-svarūpa,” “bhaktāvatāra,” “bhakta-śakti” and “śuddha-bhakta.” Of these five tattvas, the “bhakta-rūpa,” the “bhakta-svarūpa” and the “bhaktāvatāra” are the Prabhu, the Viṣṇu-tattva, in the forms of “svayam,” “prakāśa” and “aṁśa.” The “bhakta-śakti” and the “śuddha-bhakta” are the tattva of potency: it is included within the Viṣṇu-tattva, rests on Him as its shelter and is nondifferent from Him. Therefore everything that serves rasa (rasopakaraṇa) is nondifferent from the Reality and intimately united with the Form full of rasa; in substance they cannot differ from one another. If, of the two — the “worshipper” and the “One who is worshipped” — one is separated or absent, there can be no pastimes of tasting rasa.

Explanation of the last of the fourteen opening verses of Ādi — (a verse from the diary of Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī)[7]

6 “I bow to Kṛṣṇa, who is manifest as five truths — the Pañca-tattva: as a devotee in form and a devotee in essence, as the incarnation of a devotee, as the one called a devotee, and as the potency of devotion.” (Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī)[1]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow down to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, who comprises the five tattvas: Kṛṣṇa's bhakta-rūpa, bhakta-svarūpa, bhakta-avatāra, bhakta and bhakta-śakti.

Anubhāṣya.

bhakta-rūpa-svarūpakam (Him whose form [rūpa] is Śrī Gaura, full of a devotee's feelings, with a pure body, intent on tasting Himself, and whose svarūpa is Nityānanda, who has taken the form of a brother), bhaktāvatāraṁ (Advaita), bhaktākhyaṁ (Śrīvāsa and others, who abide in śānta, dāsya and the other rasas), bhakta-śaktikam (Śrī Gadādhara, Dāmodara, Rāmānanda and others), pañca-tattvātmakaṁ (Him whose very self, the svarūpa, is the five tattvas) kṛṣṇaṁ (Kṛṣṇa Caitanya-deva) namāmi.

*Only Śrī Nanda-nandana, the svayaṁ-rūpa, is the Lord of all —*

7 Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself, the one Lord of all. He has no equal; He is the son of Nanda and the crown of all who relish rasa.

*All the Viṣṇus, the Vaiṣṇavas and everything that serves in the dhāma, the jīvas and pradhāna — all are Kṛṣṇa's servants —*

8 He enjoys the rāsa dance and His other pastimes and is the beloved of the maidens of Vraja; all the others you see are His associates.

That same Kṛṣṇa is Gaura —

9 That same Kṛṣṇa has descended as Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, and with Him have come all those associates, every one of them blessed.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the Lord of all, and yet He is full of the mood of being subordinate —

10 Lord Caitanya alone is the Supreme Lord, yet His pure, spiritual body is filled with the sentiment of a devotee.

Anubhāṣya.

The śruti mantra "The eternal among the eternals, the conscious among the conscious"[8] points to countless spiritual entities, and their one Supreme Lord is Śrī Caitanya-deva. The Māyāvādīs try to merge the atomic particles of spiritual potency with the all-pervading Spirit (vibhu-cit), and so they fall into error; this verse is presented to dispel it. Śrī Caitanya-deva is nondifferent from Vrajendranandana, yet, regarding Him (Kṛṣṇa) as the One to be worshipped, He assumes a form full of the mood of serving Him. Let no one, then, consider this form of Bhagavān an object of material enjoyment, or count it among the jīvas within the material world. That is why Śrī Caitanya's form has not been called merely the form of a sādhaka within the material world. It is manifest in viśuddha-sattva, and so this form of rasa is recognized only in a heart made bright by sattva. Śrī Caitanya-deva is the Supreme Lord Himself, and yet He displays pastimes befitting a servant, not the pastimes of an enjoyer. To see His holy form, with a vision darkened by tamas, as some instrument engaged in gratifying the senses is forbidden.

Kṛṣṇa descends as Gaura "in the form of a devotee" only to taste His own sweetness —

11 Kṛṣṇa's sweetness has one wondrous property: to taste Himself, He takes on the sentiment of His own devotee.

Anubhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa, the shelter of all sweetness, has one unprecedented disposition of heart: though He Himself is the viṣaya-vigraha, He accepts the mood of the āśraya, the worshipper, and becomes absorbed in tasting service to the viṣaya. Yet Śrī Caitanya-deva is not merely a form full of the mood of the āśraya: He is the svayaṁ-rūpa, the Reality Himself.

*Nitāi is the "bhakta-svarūpa," Advaita the "bhaktāvatāra" —*

12 That is why Caitanya Gosāñi appears in the mood of a devotee, and His brother Nityānanda is the devotee in essence (bhakta-svarūpa).

13 Advaita Ācārya is His incarnation as a devotee (bhakta-avatāra). These three truths we all glorify as the Lord — as Prabhu.

Nitāi and Advaita — Gaura is the Lord even of these two Lords —

14 One is Mahāprabhu, and the other two are Prabhus; the two Prabhus serve the feet of Mahāprabhu.

*Three tattvas are the worshipped, and the fourth and fifth tattvas are the worshippers —*

15 These three truths we accept as worshipable by all; the fourth, the truth of the devotee, we know as the worshipper.

Anubhāṣya.

From the description of the true nature of the Pañca-tattva we can understand that Śrī Mahāprabhu alone is the highest Truth (para-tattva), and that Śrī Nityānanda and Advaita Prabhu are the "Īśvara-tattva" subordinate to Him. The Supreme Lord and the two manifestations of the Lord are all para-tattva, and all of Them are worshipped by every other tattva. The fourth, the tattva of the pure devotee (śuddha-bhakta), and the fifth, the tattva of the intimate devotee (antaraṅga-bhakta), are both tattvas of "worshippers." The two tattvas who are "worshipped" appear in the form of servants: though the two tattvas of "worshippers" revere Them, They Themselves abide in the service of Śrī Gaurāṅga, the One who is served.

*Śrīvāsa and others — the tattva of the devotee —*

16 The countless millions of devotees headed by Śrīvāsa are all counted among the pure devotees (śuddha-bhakta).

*Gadādhara and others — the tattva of potency —*

17 Gadādhara Paṇḍita and others are incarnations of the Lord's potency (śakti); they are counted as His intimate devotees.

Anubhāṣya.

The tattvas of the intimate devotee and of the pure devotee differ in this way: the tattva of potency abides in madhura-rasa, and in vātsalya, sakhya and dāsya-rasa. If one compares them impartially, the potencies are higher than the devotees, and therefore Śrī Gaurasundara's intimate servants are the devotees eternally sheltered in madhura-rasa. The servants of Śrī Nityānanda and Śrī Advaita generally abide in vātsalya, sakhya, dāsya and śānta-rasa. But when these pure devotees come to feel intense love for Śrī Gaurasundara, they take shelter of madhura-rasa under the guidance of the intimate devotees. This is made clear at the beginning of Śrī Ṭhākura Mahāśaya's Prārthanā: "When will my body thrill as I say 'Gaurāṅga'? When will tears flow from my eyes as I say 'Hari, Hari'? When will Nitāicānd be merciful to me? When will my desire for worldly life become insignificant? When will my mind become pure, giving up the objects of the senses? When will I see Śrī Vṛndāvana? When will I yearn for the feet of Rūpa and Raghunātha? When will I understand the love of the Divine Couple?"

Describing how the "śuddha-bhakta" and the "antaraṅga-bhakta" differ, Śrī Rūpapāda in his book Upadeśāmṛta depicted the steps by which the practicing jīva rises higher and higher: "Of all who perform karma, the knowers (jñānīs) are dearer to Hari — so it is said everywhere. Dearer than they are those who have left knowledge behind and are wholly given to bhakti. Dearer than these are those fixed in prema alone. Dearer than they are the lotus-eyed cowherd girls, and dearer even than they is Rādhikā, the most beloved. And just as dear to Him is this pond of Hers. What wise person would not take shelter of it?" (Upadeśāmṛta 10)

Of the five tattvas of the Pañca-tattva, two are potency (śakti) and three are the possessor of potency (śaktimān). The pure devotees and the intimate devotees are the two kinds of potency. Those who are free of other desires and do not cover their pure inclination to serve Kṛṣṇa with the covering of karma or jñāna are śuddha-bhaktas. The devotees wholly devoted to Kṛṣṇa (aikāntika) who have taken shelter in madhura-rasa alone are the antaraṅga-bhaktas. Madhura-rasa includes vātsalya, sakhya and dāsya. The antaraṅga-bhakta is a special kind of śuddha-bhakta.

*With the four tattvas the Lord plays, preaches, tastes and gives —*

18–19 With them the Lord enjoys His eternal pastimes, with them He spreads the kīrtana, with them He tastes prema, and with them He gives away the treasure of prema.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Mahāprabhu, together with all of them — His prakāśa, the avatāra of His puruṣa-avatāra, the intimate devotees and the pure devotees — Himself eternally plays by tasting prema, and gives prema to the world by preaching kīrtana.

*The five tattvas together eternally taste and distribute the rasa of love for Kṛṣṇa —*

20–21 Coming to earth together, the five truths broke the seal of the ancient storehouse of prema. Together they plunder that love and taste it, and the more they drink, the more their thirst grows at every moment.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa's own pastimes are the storehouse of prema. That storehouse had indeed come into the world, but its doors were locked and sealed. In the avatāra of Śrī Caitanya the five tattvas together broke that seal, opened the doors and, plundering prema, tasted it.

22 Again and again they give it to others to drink and grow wild with love; they dance, weep, laugh and sing as though intoxicated.

In distributing love for Kṛṣṇa there is no considering who is fit and who is unfit —

23 They make no distinction between the fit and the unfit, nor between a proper place and an improper one: wherever they find anyone, there they give prema.

*Distributing prema makes it increase rather than diminish —*

24 Plundering, tasting and giving, they empty the storehouse; yet so wondrous is this storehouse that the prema in it grows a hundredfold.

*The world drowns in the flood of prema —*

25 The flood of prema surged and spread on every side, drowning everyone — women and old men, boys and youths.

26 The good and the wicked, the lame, the dull and the blind — the flood of prema engulfed all the people of the world.

*Immersed in the rasa of love for Kṛṣṇa, the jīva is rid of the seed of karma —*

27 The world was drowned, and the seed of the jīvas' bondage was destroyed. Seeing this, the five felt the highest joy.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

When the storehouse of prema was thrown open, the flood of the rasa of prema drowned the whole world with tremendous force. In it perished the seed from which the bondage of ignorance (avidyā) grows in the conditioned jīvas — their forgetfulness that they are Kṛṣṇa's servants.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Lord's marginal potency, called the jīva-śakti, together with the endeavor turned toward Kṛṣṇa there also lies, in unmanifest form, the seed of the desire to enjoy — aversion to Kṛṣṇa. This seed of desire, born of the tree of saṁsāra, is watered by the flow of time, and day after day it binds the conditioned jīva with all kinds of bonds of enjoyment and torments him with the threefold miseries. A seed buried in the soil will not sprout if water submerges it. Just so, in the flood of prema — the bottomless waters of the ocean of service to Bhagavān — the seeds of the desire to enjoy anything other than service to Kṛṣṇa were drowned and destroyed, and no sprouts of desire could arise from them any longer. Śrī Caitanyacandra descended in the form of the Pañca-tattva, and the purpose of His descent was fulfilled; seeing this, all were filled with joy. Śrīmat Prabodhānanda Sarasvatī, the tridaṇḍipāda, described this in his book Śrī Caitanya-candrāmṛta: “When Caitanyacandra revealed the supreme path of bhakti-yoga, the worldly gave up talk of wives, sons and the like; the learned gave up disputes over the śāstras; the kings of yogīs gave up the hardship of restraining the breath; ascetics gave up their austerities; and sannyāsīs gave up the practice of knowledge. No other rasa remained.”

*The rain of prema increases the rasa of prema —*

28 The more the five pour down the rain of prema, the higher the waters rise, until they fill the three worlds.

*Those deprived of the rasa of love for Kṛṣṇa —*

29–30 But the Māyāvādīs, those devoted to fruitive work, the false logicians, the blasphemers, the pāṣaṇḍīs and the lowest of students — all these, being very clever, ran away, and the flood could not touch them.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Māyāvādīs are Prakāśānanda and the other sannyāsīs. In every matter that is real they raise disputes about “māyā”! They call Brahman “beyond māyā,” yet they make Īśvara “an associate of māyā” and call the bodies of all Īśvara's avatāras “made of māyā.” They say that māyā takes part in the very constitution of the jīva, that is, that every notion of “I” in the jīva is made by māyā. From this they conclude that once the jīva is liberated, no state that could be called “the pure jīva” remains. In other words, they teach that the liberated jīva becomes nondifferent from Brahman.

Those devoted to karma (karma-niṣṭha) are Devānanda and other karmīs devoid of bhakti, and the smārtas dulled by karma — that is, those who declare karma and its fruits to be the chief aim of the jīva.

The sophists are Sārvabhauma and other logicians who deny Īśvara.

The blasphemers are the man whom the Lord chased with a stick, and Gopāla Cāpāla and others who blasphemed the Lord and His devotees.

The pāṣaṇḍīs are those who explain other gods as equal to Bhagavān.

The lowly students are those who take learning to be a cause for argument and do not know that learning is the means to attain Īśvara.

The ocean of causeless mercy thinks how to deliver them —

31–32 Seeing this, Mahāprabhu reflected: “I tried to drown the whole world, but some have escaped, and My vow has been broken. To drown them too, I shall devise a playful ruse.”

*To deliver the fallen jīvas deprived of prema, He accepts sannyāsa —*

33 Saying this and deliberating within Himself, the Lord accepted the order of sannyāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

One who mistakenly believes that “māyā” is present in Bhagavān's being, in His abode, in devotion to Him and in His devotee — though all of these are beyond māyā — is a “Māyāvādī.” One who mistakenly believes that these four truths are subject to karma and to enjoying its fruits is “devoted to karma” (karma-niṣṭha). People who mistakenly think that in these four truths there is room for argument born of ignorance are “sophists.” One who mistakenly thinks that these four truths deserve censure is a “blasphemer.” One who mistakenly thinks that other things of māyā are equal to these four truths is a “pāṣaṇḍī.” And those fond of study who mistakenly think that these four truths are on a par with other objects of material enjoyment are “lowly students.” All of them fled, driven by one aim: that the waters of the flood of prema given by Gaurasundara, who is full of love, should in no way touch them. Seeing this, Śrī Mahāprabhu wished to accept the ornament of the fourth āśrama. It is highly revered by those people of material nature already mentioned, who turn away from love for Kṛṣṇa and long for the four goals of life (catur-varga). He reasoned that in the eyes of these worldly people, bewitched by māyā, the fourth āśrama is the desirable ideal.

34 For twenty-four years He lived as a householder; in His twenty-fifth year He took up the dharma of a renunciant.

Anubhāṣya.

There are four kinds of āśramas: brahmacārī, gṛhastha, vānaprastha and yati. Each āśrama in turn has four divisions. The Bhāgavatam says: "Sāvitrya, prājāpatya, brāhma and bṛhat [for the brahmacārīs]; vārtā, sañcaya, śālīna and śiloñcha for the householder; the vaikhānasas, vālakhilyas, audumbaras and phenapas in the forest; and for the sannyāsīs, first the kuṭīcaka, then the bahūdaka, the haṁsa and the niṣkriya." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 3.12.42–43) That is, brahmacarya is of four kinds: (1) sāvitrya, a brahmacarya of three nights, from the upanayana until the study of the Gāyatrī; (2) prājāpatya, a brahmacarya in which one keeps vows for a year after the upanayana; (3) brāhma, a brahmacarya from the upanayana until the three Vedas have been learned; (4) bṛhat, a brahmacarya from the upanayana until death. The first three are known as "upakurvāṇa" and the last as "naiṣṭhika." Householders are of four kinds: (1) vārtā, who lives by agriculture and other occupations that are not forbidden; (2) sañcaya, who lives by performing sacrifices for others and the like; (3) śālīna, who lives on what comes unasked; (4) śiloñchana, who lives on grains gleaned from the ground. Vānaprasthas are of four kinds: (1) the vaikhānasa, who lives on what grows without plowing; (2) the vālikhilya, who, on obtaining new grain, gives up what he had stored before; (3) the auḍumbara, who, on rising from bed, accepts food brought from whatever direction he first looks; (4) the phenapa, who sustains life on fruits that have fallen by themselves. Sannyāsīs are of four kinds: (1) the kuṭīcaka, chiefly devoted to the duties of his own āśrama; (2) the bahūdaka, who has given up karma and is chiefly devoted to cultivating knowledge; (3) the haṁsa, fixed in the cultivation of knowledge; (4) the niṣkriya, a paramahaṁsa, or one who has realized the truth.

Sannyāsa is of two kinds, "dhīra" and "narottama": "One who, detached and freed from bonds, gives up this body, which no longer serves any purpose, without anyone knowing where he has gone, is called 'dhīra.' And one who, self-possessed, has become disgusted with the world by himself or through another's instruction and, placing Hari in his heart, leaves home, is 'narottama.'" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.13.26–27) Śrī Mahāprabhu accepted sannyāsa in the bright fortnight of the month of Māgha in the Śaka year 1432 from Śrī Keśava Bhāratī, a daṇḍi-svāmī of the sampradāya of Śrī Śaṅkara, who lived in Kāṭoyā. These sannyāsīs are under the Śṛṅgerī maṭha in the south.

*The deliverance of those deprived of prema — the karmīs, students, pāṣaṇḍīs, logicians, blasphemers and the rest —*

35 Having taken sannyāsa, the Lord drew to Himself all who had fled — the logicians and the rest.

36 Students, pāṣaṇḍīs, karmīs, blasphemers and all the others came and bowed down at the Lord's feet.

Anubhāṣya.

See the last part of the Anubhāṣya on Ādi 7.33.

*They are freed from their offenses and gain bhakti —*

37 He forgave their offences, and they sank into the waters of prema. Who can escape the Lord's great net of love?

*The Lord devises a means to deliver all jīvas —*

38 The Lord is the avatāra of mercy who came to deliver everyone, and to that end He devises countless stratagems.

All people are delivered except the Māyāvādīs of Kāśī —

39 He made His devotees of all — even the mlecchas and others; only the Māyāvādīs of Kāśī escaped.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

As soon as the Lord accepted sannyāsa, the sophists, those devoted to karma, the blasphemers, the pāṣaṇḍīs and the lowly students one after another took shelter at His feet, and even many mlecchas accepted His guidance. Only the Māyāvādīs of Vārāṇasī-dhāma, having fled from the flood of prema, remained apart!

Anubhāṣya.

"The Māyāvādīs of Kāśī." People bewildered by knowledge born of the senses say that the world they see with their senses is "created by māyā," since it can be measured by sensory knowledge. There are people skilled in this kind of reasoning: "The Truth (tattva-vastu) is beyond māyā, yet in it there is no eternal spiritual variety and no spiritual pastime; it is pure consciousness alone (cin-mātra)." They are the "Māyāvādīs of Kāśī." The "Māyāvādīs of Sārnāth," or the "Māyāvādīs of Bodh Gayā," do not accept the māyā of Brahman: in their reasoning, the doctrine that there is nothing but non-spirit (acin-mātra-vāda) is established. The "Māyāvādīs of Kāśī" and the Māyāvādīs of other places are all prakṛti-vādīs; none of them is a "brahma-vādī or tattva-vādī." The Māyāvādīs of Kāśī call themselves "brahma-vādīs" with their lips, but they do not accept the distinction between Brahman and prakṛti: following their doctrine of merging (samanvaya-vāda), they hold Brahman and māyā to be one and the same. The Māyāvādīs know nothing of bhakti and Yogamāyā, and that is why they are nondevotees, averse to devotion to Kṛṣṇa. In their hearts the Māyāvādīs are convinced that everything said about eternal bhakti, the One who is worshipped and the devotee — all of it is subject to their sense-born knowledge. But in fact, judged by the real truth, such words are worth nothing. However many sophistries and disputes the Māyāvādīs put forward among themselves, they never approach the real truth, and so the Truth and His spiritual variety are not subject to their imaginary reasonings.

40 On His way to Vṛndāvana the Lord stayed in Kāśī, and the Māyāvādīs began to blaspheme Him:

The Māyāvādīs blaspheme the Lord —

41 "Though a sannyāsī, He sings and dances. He does not hear Vedānta, but performs saṅkīrtana.

Anubhāṣya.

The smṛti enjoins: “The sannyāsī should give up the tauryatrika — singing, dancing and playing instruments — and should always study Vedānta.” The sannyāsīs of Kāśī saw that Śrī Mahāprabhu did not listen to Śaṅkara's Māyāvāda but, on the contrary, was absorbed in singing of Kṛṣṇa and so on, and danced overwhelmed with love. Measuring Him by this injunction, they concluded that He did not know the dharma of sannyāsa. Śaṅkara says: “Fortunate indeed are those who wear only a loincloth and always delight in the words of Vedānta.”[9] Not seeing this mark in Śrī Mahāprabhu, the Māyāvādī sannyāsīs and the home-bound householders (gṛhavratas) blasphemed Him. On the deliverance of the Māyāvādī sannyāsīs of Kāśī, see especially Madhya 25.5–169.

42 This foolish sannyāsī does not know His own dharma; a sentimentalist Himself, He wanders about with sentimentalists.”

43 Hearing all this, the Lord smiled within, and, paying no heed, He spoke with none of them.

The Lord disregards them and goes to Mathurā —

44 Disregarding them, He went on to Mathurā, and after seeing it He came back again.

The Lord stays in Candraśekhara's house —

45 In Kāśī lived the scribe Śrī Candraśekhara, a śūdra, and the Lord, supremely independent, stayed in his house.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Śrī Caitanya-candrodaya-nāṭaka Śrī Candraśekhara is called a “śaukra-vaidya” (a Vaidya by birth). In those days the Vaidyas by birth, and every varṇa other than the brāhmaṇas by birth, were called “śūdras.” Later, in the present century, the Kāyasthas, resorting to the purificatory rite for the vrātyas (those who have lost the right to initiation), took and are taking the saṁskāras of kṣatriyas, and the Vaidyas those of vaiśyas. In the families of the Śrī Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇava ācāryas who follow the Vaiṣṇava faith — in the line of Ṭhākura Raghunandana, in the line of Ṭhākura Kṛṣṇadāsa and Navanī Hoḍa, and in the line of Śrī Rasikānanda-deva, the disciple of Śyāmānanda Prabhu — the upanayana-saṁskāra, the ideal of brahminhood, has continued for three or four centuries now. To this day they act as dīkṣā-gurus for all varṇas, brāhmaṇas included, and worship śālagrāmas and other Deities.

*Leaving the Māyāvādī sannyāsīs, the Lord accepts bhikṣā in the house of Tapana Miśra —*

46 He took His meals at the house of Tapana Miśra and accepted no invitation in the company of the sannyāsīs.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Vaidya Candraśekhara was a śūdra by varṇa. It is not proper for sannyāsīs to spend the night in a śūdra's house, but Mahāprabhu, out of mercy to him, stayed in his house: for He is the independent Īśvara, and before His mercy all are equal, brāhmaṇa and śūdra alike. He accepted bhikṣā, that is, His meals, in the house of Tapana Miśra. And nowhere did He accept invitations together with other sannyāsīs.

Instructions to Śrī Sanātana —

47 Sanātana Gosāñi came and met Him there, and to instruct him the Lord stayed two months.

48 He taught him the whole dharma of the Vaiṣṇavas and all the hidden heart of the Bhāgavata and the other scriptures.

The appeal of Candraśekhara and Tapana Miśra —

49 Meanwhile Candraśekhara and Tapana Miśra, deeply grieved, came to the Lord’s feet with a petition:

50 “How much longer must we hear You blasphemed, O Lord? We cannot bear it; we would rather give up our lives.

51 All the sannyāsīs revile You, and we cannot listen to it: our hearts and ears are bursting.”

52 Hearing this, the Lord only smiled a little. Just then a brāhmaṇa came to meet Him.

The brāhmaṇa's request —

53 He came and, clasping the Lord’s feet, made his petition: “I beg one thing of You; be pleased and grant it.

54 I have invited all the sannyāsīs; if You come too, my heart’s desire will be fulfilled.

55 I know that You do not go to gatherings of sannyāsīs; yet be merciful to me and accept my invitation.”

The Lord accepts the invitation —

56 Smiling, the Lord accepted the invitation; He made this gesture to show mercy to the sannyāsīs.

57 The brāhmaṇa knew that the Lord does not go to anyone’s house, but, inspired by the Lord Himself, he pressed Him with great insistence.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Even so, the Lord, wishing to bestow mercy on the sannyāsīs, inspired the brāhmaṇa from within his heart, and that is why he made such an insistent request.

*The Lord enters the assembly of sannyāsīs —*

58 The next day the Lord went to the brāhmaṇa’s house and saw the sannyāsīs all seated there.

The Lord's humility —

59 Bowing to them all, He went to wash His feet, and when He had washed them He sat down in that very place.

*The Lord displays His majesty and bewilders the pāṣaṇḍīs —*

60 As He sat there, He revealed a little of His majesty: His body shone with great effulgence, with the splendour of millions of suns.[2]

61 That splendour drew the minds of all the sannyāsīs, and they all rose from their seats.

The words of Prakāśānanda Sarasvatī —

62 The chief among the sannyāsīs, Prakāśānanda by name, addressed the Lord with respect:

63 "Come here, Gosāñi; listen, Śrīpāda. You are sitting in an impure place — why are You so downcast?"

The Lord's humble words —

64 The Lord replied, "I belong to a lower sampradāya; it is not fitting for Me to sit in your assembly."

Anubhāṣya.

Among the daṇḍīs of the ten names, whose order Śrī Śaṅkarācārya founded, three sampradāyas — "Tīrtha," "Āśrama" and "Sarasvatī" — rank above the sannyāsīs of the other sampradāyas in good conduct and in honor. Śrī Mahāprabhu had accepted sannyāsa in the "Bhāratī" sampradāya, and so He regarded Prakāśānanda Sarasvatī as belonging to a higher sampradāya. Or else: the brahma-sannyāsīs themselves consider their social standing high, and so Śrī Mahāprabhu, wishing to show the dharma of a Vaiṣṇava sannyāsī — to seek no honor for oneself (amānī) and to give honor to others (mānada) — spoke of Himself as belonging to a lower sampradāya. Even today the sannyāsīs of Śaṅkara's sampradāya are unwilling to call other sannyāsīs "sannyāsīs": they give them only the title "brahmacārī" and fancy themselves "gurus."

Prakāśānanda's question —

65 Then Prakāśānanda himself took Him by the hand and, with respect, seated Him in the midst of the assembly.

66 He asked, “Your name is Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, is it not? You are a disciple of Keśava Bhāratī, and so You are worthy of glory.

Anubhāṣya.
Keśava Bhāratī — see the Vaiṣṇava-mañjuṣā-samāhṛti (part 2).

67 You are a sannyāsī of our own sampradāya and You live in this town; why then do You not come to see us?

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“A sannyāsī of the sampradāya”: according to the teaching of Śrī Śaṅkarācārya, the brāhmaṇas who accept sannyāsa in the order of the ten names are the world-honored “Vedic sannyāsīs,” that is, genuine sannyāsīs sanctioned by the śāstras.

68 Though You are a sannyāsī, You dance and sing, and You take all these sentimentalists with You and perform kīrtana.

69 The study of Vedānta and meditation are the dharma of a sannyāsī; why do You abandon them and do the work of sentimentalists?

Anubhāṣya.
See the Anubhāṣya on Ādi 7.41.

70 From Your splendour we see that You are Nārāyaṇa Himself; why then do You behave so lowly? What is the reason?”

The Lord describes the glory of the holy name —

71 The Lord said, “Listen, Śrīpāda, to the reason for this. My guru saw that I was a fool, and he chastised Me:

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Caitanya-deva is the Form of the real Reality, the one thing Vedānta establishes. Determining who is qualified to study Vedānta, He proclaimed that the right to the path of śruti belongs to those who are “humbler than a blade of grass,” tolerant like a tree, who seek no honor for themselves and give honor to others.[10] The guru chants the words of śruti with his holy mouth, and the listener chants them after him; only this kīrtana — the abhidheya, that is, the sādhana — brings forth the fruit, the prayojana. That part of the words of śruti in which realized knowledge (vijñāna) of the real Reality, the object of worship, is glorified is the all-embracing whole (aṁśī), the root and source of the śruti-śāstras. Within that whole lie both the perception and the non-perception of all its parts. The devotee who serves the Reality that is worshipped is, by his own worship, connected with It. But where the inclination to serve grows slack, the Reality is grasped only in part instead of as the whole. As the inclination to serve slackens, the potency that rests on the worshipped Reality as its shelter becomes separated from It; this is forgetfulness of one's own true nature, or aversion to serving Hari.

Śrī Caitanya-deva, in teaching the devotee's pure conduct, independent of the world, showed the highest ideal of where Vedānta ultimately leads. And the best example of it is what the Lord of the fourteen worlds, free of all pride, says here: He speaks as a disciple. People intoxicated by the brilliance of their learning are not fit to serve the lotus feet of the guru — nor fit to study the Brahma-sūtra. The nondevotee absorbed in a “second” (in something other than the Lord), while trying to serve the Reality that is worshipped, abandons service to the guru who himself worships It. To prevent any error in understanding the servant's own true nature in such a case, Bhagavān in the form of the guru, describing the pure nature of the disciple, speaks of his “foolishness.” Śrī Gurudeva, for the disciple's good, says in simple words that the disciple lacks the qualification. In doing so he ascribes no relative fault to the disciple. The disciple's “foolishness” lies in not knowing the truth about Bhagavān. The modesty that befits a “fool” is eternally present in the disciple. We, however, not knowing our own true nature, often hypocritically pose as disciples and deceive those who are really our disciples by calling them “guru” with our lips; this brings us no good. All the Vedas constantly serve the feet of the Puruṣa who is known through Vedānta; one who judges Him by knowledge born of the senses is a “fool” indeed. Whatever a person bewildered by sensory knowledge takes to be the real foundation of the Vedic śāstras is guided by external intelligence and belongs to the lower knowledge (aparā vidyā). Until the jīva loses the conceit, born of the guṇas, that the world is subject to him, all his limited, undesirable, changing knowledge born of the senses is that same “foolishness.”

One who is qualified for Vedānta is a servant of the Viṣṇu-vastu alone, the Great One and the Maintainer. Unless one goes beyond serving limited things and the like, one cannot become a knower of Brahman. Being qualified to read and teach the Brahma-sūtra on the level of karma or on the level of knowledge does not make one qualified for the name of Kṛṣṇa — the eternal, pure, complete, free Form of the rasa of consciousness, the transcendental cintāmaṇi. And one who is qualified for the name need not again acquire a qualification for Vedānta through knowledge born of the senses.

People who are not qualified to serve the name do not understand that the name and the One who bears the name are nondifferent, and they try to become Māyāvādī Vedāntists. By transcendental judgment they are, in the words of Śrī Gurudeva, the greatest “fools.” Whoever studies Vedānta by relying on the ascending method (adhiroha-vāda) is overtaken by “foolishness,” or dullness. But the one who is truly qualified for the name abides eternally on the far shore of Vedānta. In this connection one should reflect on the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam verse “Oh, how great is even a dog-eater on the tip of whose tongue Your name abides! Those who chant Your name have already performed austerities and fire sacrifices, bathed at the holy places; they are true Āryans and have studied the Vedas,”[11] and others like it, and also on the verse “One who has uttered the two syllables ‘Ha-ri’ has studied the Ṛg-veda, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda and the Atharva-veda,” and others.

The foolish sect of the sāhajikas, fancying themselves Vaiṣṇavas while being Vaiṣṇavas in name only, consider Vedānta the playground of the ahaṅgrahopāsakas — the kevalādvaita-vādīs who worship themselves as God. But “Vedānta” is the playground only of Hari's servants from Vaikuṇṭha. The Vaiṣṇava ācāryas of the four sampradāyas, following Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam — the commentary on the Brahma-sūtra, Vedānta — composed works on Vedānta, and these are not to be shunned as bad association. This simple point the prākṛta-sahajiyās cannot grasp. So they imagine the genuine pure Vaiṣṇavas and Vaiṣṇava ācāryas to be viddha-bhaktas, whose devotion is mixed with knowledge and karma; thus they head for hell and themselves become Māyāvādīs devoid of service to Viṣṇu. If one seeks the qualification for Vedānta through knowledge born of the senses, the meaning of chanting the Kṛṣṇa mantra cannot be realized. Those enchanted by sensory knowledge are bound in saṁsāra on every side. The two tattvas — the enjoyer and the enjoyed — have the power to hold them in saṁsāra and do not let them turn the mind away from external objects.

72 ‘You are a fool; You are not qualified for Vedānta. Always chant the Kṛṣṇa-mantra — it is the essence of all mantras.

*The mantra and the mahā-mantra, the holy name: a variety of pastimes —*

73 From the Kṛṣṇa-mantra will come release from saṁsāra, and by Kṛṣṇa’s name You will attain Kṛṣṇa’s feet.

Anubhāṣya.

When the jīva attains divine knowledge (divya-jñāna), he is freed from absorption in the “second” and takes up the service of Adhokṣaja. Service to Mukunda is the only means (upāya) of ending one's endeavors in the external world, and it is also the goal (upeya). Chanting the mantra, the devotee gains transcendental experience step by step and ceases to perceive the external world as an object of enjoyment. Under the shelter of one of the five kinds of rati, when all the ingredients of rasa (sāmagrī) come together, by the power of serving rasa he tastes the One he worships in a heart made bright by viśuddha-sattva. Such practice is not mere enjoyment for the two upādhis. When the chanter of the name becomes truly established, in his very practice, in the divine knowledge that the name and the One who bears the name are nondifferent, he attains direct service to Kṛṣṇa. Then words in the dative case — the grammarians' language that defines relations — lose their hold on him. The real Reality addressed by the vocative word is at once captured in the heart made bright by sattva. And then he becomes able to serve Him without hindrance, addressing Him with vocative words. All the śāstras and all mantras consisting of divine knowledge free the jīva completely and engage him directly in the service of Kṛṣṇa.

All this I, a fool, have heard from Śrī Gurudeva. Śrī Vyāsa says: “For the sake of people who do not know [this], the learned sage compiled the Sātvata-saṁhitā.”[12] Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam and similar books are the rungs of the ladder that leads to serving the name. Gurudeva taught that studying them, teaching them and discussing them all culminate in the service of the name. The name and the One who bears the name are one nondifferent Reality, knowable only to those free of the endeavors of māyā: this is the divine knowledge received at the guru's lotus feet. Until I took shelter at Śrī Guru's lotus feet I was a fool in my understanding of sambandha; but now that I have turned toward service, I see in myself the endeavors of one who knows what bondage and liberation are. The word “Kṛṣṇa's name” here does not mean nāmābhāsa or nāmāparādha.

In Kali-yuga the name of Kṛṣṇa alone is to be worshipped —

74 In the age of Kali there is no dharma other than the name; the name is the essence of all mantras — this is the heart of the scriptures.’

Anubhāṣya.

In the three ages — Satya, Tretā and Dvāpara — the path of śruti was honored; with the coming of Kali-yuga there arose a path alien to śruti, the path of argument. It is born when people doubt the descent of the real truth and when knowledge born of the senses prevails; this path opposes śruti. Kṛṣṇa's name is a Reality of Vaikuṇṭha, and so it is completely nondifferent from Kṛṣṇa, the real Reality. Because the name and the One who bears the name are nondifferent, the name of Vaikuṇṭha is just what Kṛṣṇa, the real Reality, is: the eternal, pure, complete, free Form of the rasa of consciousness and the transcendental cintāmaṇi. The name is distinct from the material names of everything other than Kṛṣṇa, and is Itself a Reality of Vaikuṇṭha. Followers of the path of argument have no access to this name. Only the worship of the name removes both dharmas of the upādhis, the gross and the subtle. That is why, in days when the path of argument prevails, all other limited (kuṇṭha) dharmas are hampered by it. Only the name Itself is the One who bears the name, the Reality beyond the arguments of the disputers. Only the name of the Reality of Vaikuṇṭha can deliver (trāṇa) the jīva from a mind (manana) intent on thoughts of material enjoyment, and therefore it is the essence of all mantras. The name, form, qualities, nature and actions of material things are subject to the path of argument; the Reality of Vaikuṇṭha is not. The transcendental name, form, qualities, distinctive associates and pastimes of this name of Vaikuṇṭha abide in nondual knowledge (advaya-jñāna). The Māyāvādīs, relying on knowledge born of the senses, posit a difference between the Reality's name, form and qualities, and so fall into the baseness of dualistic reasoning. That is why their teacher frees them from material reasoning with great sayings (mahā-vākyas) such as “In the beginning, my dear, there was Being alone"[13] and "All this is indeed Brahman."[14] Without taking shelter of the holy name, while committing offenses against the name, one never gets free from the path of argument, born of the senses and full of enjoyment.

The glory of the mantra is stated in the Nārada-pañcarātra: "The three Vedas, the six vedāṅgas, the meters, the many gods — all of these, and whatever else is expressed in words, are contained within the eight-syllable mantra. It is the essential meaning of all Vedānta and carries one across the ocean of saṁsāra." In the Kali-santaraṇa Upaniṣad: "'Hare Kṛṣṇa Hare Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Hare Hare / Hare Rāma Hare Rāma Rāma Rāma Hare Hare' — these sixteen names destroy the contamination of Kali. No means higher than this is to be found in all the Vedas." The words that Śrī Madhva cites in his commentary on the Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad: "The people of Dvāpara worship Viṣṇu by the Pañcarātra alone, but in Kali the Lord Hari is worshipped by the name alone."

On the "Kṛṣṇa mantra" and the "name of Kṛṣṇa," Śrī Jīva Prabhu says in the Bhakti-sandarbha (section 284): "One may object: mantras consist of the names of Bhagavān; moreover, they are specially adorned with the word namaḥ and the like, Śrī Bhagavān and the venerable ṛṣis have invested them with special potencies, and they establish a special personal relationship [of the chanter] with Śrī Bhagavān. Yet the names of Śrī Bhagavān alone, depending on nothing else, are able to grant the fruit up to the highest goal of human life. That being so, since mantras do not gain greater power than the name, why is there need for dīkṣā and the like? The answer: intrinsically there is no such need. But people are mostly, by their very nature, through their connection with the body and so on, of base character and distracted mind. To curb this, the venerable ṛṣis and others have established certain rules here and there on the path of arcana."

You may say: mantras consist of the name of Bhagavān; what distinguishes a mantra is that, together with Bhagavān's name, it is adorned with the word namaḥ and the like — that is, it carries the mood of subordination to the name; by Bhagavān's will the ṛṣis, Śrī Nārada and others, invested the mantras with special potency; the mantras establish a special relationship between the one who utters the mantra and Śrī Bhagavān; and the names of Bhagavān contained in the mantra, depending on nothing else, are themselves able to grant the fruit up to the highest goal of human life. If so, then, since the mantra does not gain greater power than the name,[15] why does one who chants the name need dīkṣā into that mantra? To this Śrī Jīva replies: intrinsically, the one who chants the name has no need of dīkṣā. But people mostly have a connection with a body and so on that is by nature bent on enjoyment; their character is base and their minds distracted. To curb that base nature and restlessness of mind, the ṛṣis, Śrī Nārada and others, have established certain rules in the mantra here and there on the path of arcana.

For the conditioned jīva to cease from enjoyment, that is, to be rid of the material ego, perfection in the mantra (mantra-siddhi) is necessary. In the word namaḥ the syllable "ma" means the ego and the syllable "na" its cessation; that is, the fruit of mantra-siddhi is the jīva's transcendental experience. And Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī Prabhu in the Nāmāṣṭaka invokes the name of Hari with the words "O You, who are worshipped by hosts of the liberated!"[16]

*The verse "harer nāma" —*

75 Saying this, he taught Me a verse: 'Keep this verse on Your lips and reflect on it.'

*(Bṛhan-nāradīya Purāṇa 38.126)*

76 "The name of Hari, the name of Hari, the name of Hari alone! In the age of Kali there is no other way, there is no other way, there is no other way." (Bṛhan-nāradīya Purāṇa, 38.126)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
In Kali there is no way other than the name of Hari; the name of Hari is the only way.

Anubhāṣya.
(In Satya-yuga the way is meditation), kalau nāsty eva (only harer nāma eva [the name of Hari alone]); (in Tretā-yuga the way is worship of the Lord of sacrifice through yajña), kalau nāsty eva (only the name of Hari); (in Dvāpara-yuga the way is arcana), kalau nāsty eva (the way is only the name of Hari). (Especially) kalau anyathā gatiḥ nāsty eva (for all other sādhanas are fruitless).

The fruit of chanting the name —

77 Receiving this order, I took the name constantly, and as I chanted on and on, My mind grew bewildered.

78 I could no longer keep My composure; I became mad. I laughed and wept, I danced and sang like one intoxicated.

79 Then, gathering My composure, I reflected: ‘Kṛṣṇa’s name has covered all My knowledge.

Amazement at seeing one's own state brought on by chanting the name —

80 I have gone mad; there is no composure left in My mind.’ Thinking this, I came to the feet of My guru and said:

81 ‘What mantra have you given Me, Gosāñi? What power it has! Chanting it again and again, I have gone mad.

82 It makes Me laugh, it makes Me dance, it makes Me weep.’ Hearing this, My guru spoke these words to Me:

The nature of Kṛṣṇa's name —

83 ‘Such is the nature of the great mantra, Kṛṣṇa’s name: it awakens bhāva for Kṛṣṇa in whoever chants it.

Anubhāṣya.

When Śrī Gurudeva sings the name, that holy name enters the ears of the disciple. Following Śrī Gurudeva, the disciple places the holy name he has heard in his heart with faith and worships it by repeating it (japa). When the holy name is worshipped, He Himself unfolds His nature as the independent Agent and grants the chanter the right to kīrtana. It is then that, by singing the name, he becomes able to make the whole world his disciple. Under the instructing power of the name's kīrtana, the world begins to chant the name of Kṛṣṇa. As one goes on chanting, the way of serving the name becomes manifest in him — laughing, weeping, dancing, kīrtana and the rest. Some people, out of foolishness, do not know that the sixteen names “Hare Kṛṣṇa” — thirty-two syllables — are the mahā-mantra. Regarding it as merely a mantra for japa, they artificially obstruct the kīrtana of this mahā-mantra. Therefore one who has attained prema sings the name of Kṛṣṇa and, together with the devotees, performs the full kīrtana of Kṛṣṇa's name; through such kīrtana the people of the world receive instruction in Kṛṣṇa's name. Along with hearing and chanting the name comes remembrance of the name. Because the name and the One who bears the name are nondifferent, the power of chanting Kṛṣṇa's name awakens the inclination to serve Kṛṣṇa, the Reality — and this is called "bhāva." Those in whom bhāva has been born are not bound by the fetters of avidyā and are free of anarthas. Rati has been born in them, and so they taste the rasa that arises when its four ingredients (sāmagrī) come together. Bhāva in its condensed state is "prema."

Kṛṣṇa's name is the mahā-mantra. The mantras of the Pañcarātra are known by the name "mantra," while the name of Bhagavān is renowned as the "mahā-mantra."

The four goals of life and love for Kṛṣṇa —

84 Prema for Kṛṣṇa is the supreme aim of human life; before it the four other goals are like straw.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Dharma," "artha," "kāma" and "mokṣa" are the four goals of human life (puruṣārthas). Love for Kṛṣṇa is the fifth goal. The bliss of Brahman and the like — the first stage of mokṣa — cannot be compared even with a single drop of it. Dharma, artha, kāma and mokṣa are not the "fruit" of Kṛṣṇa's name. All the śāstras agree that love for Kṛṣṇa is the one and only fruit of Kṛṣṇa's name.

Anubhāṣya.

Love for Kṛṣṇa is the highest of all the goals of the jīva. If one compares the fifth goal, prema, with the jīva's goals — dharma, artha, kāma and mokṣa — the gradation makes it clear that what those who hunger for enjoyment (bubhukṣus) and those who hunger for liberation (mumukṣus) attain is perishable and worthless. The hunger for enjoyment and the hunger for liberation are rooted in identifying oneself (asmitā) with the perishable upādhis. Love for Bhagavān is the eternal, unchanging dharma of the soul, and therefore all reasoning about the goals of the catur-varga — bhukti and mukti — is worth nothing compared with prema.

Prema*, which puts mokṣa and the rest to shame, is the fifth goal of human life —*

85 The fifth goal of life is prema, a boundless ocean of nectarean bliss; the bliss of Brahman and all the rest is not equal to a single drop of it.[3]

The fruit of Kṛṣṇa's name —

86 All the scriptures say that the fruit of Kṛṣṇa's name is prema, and by good fortune that prema has dawned in You.

The nature of love for Kṛṣṇa —

87 It is the nature of prema to stir both mind and body and to awaken a burning longing to attain Kṛṣṇa's feet.

88 Moved by prema, the devotee laughs, weeps and sings; as if mad, he dances and runs here and there.

Anubhāṣya.

Nondevotees devoid of love for Kṛṣṇa make a show of restless senses and, as if mad, laugh, weep, dance, sing and so on; but this is only a sign that misfortune awaits them. One engaged in bhajana must avoid in every way any artificial agitation of the body and senses. When the natural function of the soul awakens, bhāva and prema appear, and in them arise laughing, weeping, singing, dancing and longing (utkaṇṭhā). All of these are the genuine expressions of one who is turned toward service. But when a person in whom prema has not arisen audaciously claims the high position of a devotee, he brings calamity (anartha), that is, turmoil, into the world.

Śrī Jīva Prabhu says in the Prīti-sandarbha (section 66): "The function that is love for Bhagavān is not made of māyā or the like; it is the bliss of the svarūpa-śakti, on which even Śrī Bhagavān Himself depends." (Ibid., section 69):[17] "Thus the sign of prīti is the melting of the heart, and the signs of that are horripilation and the like. It has also been shown that if the melting of the heart, horripilation and the rest somehow arise but there is no purity of intention (āśaya-śuddhi), then even so bhakti has not fully appeared. Purity of intention means giving up every other aim and aiming at prīti alone. Hence its qualifiers: ‘causeless’ and ‘natural.’”

The function that is love for Bhagavān is never made of māyā: it is the svarūpa-śakti, whose essence is bliss, for even Śrī Bhagavān is subject to that bliss. The sign of such prīti is the melting of the heart, and its result is horripilation and the like. But if, despite some melting of the heart or horripilation, there is no purity of intention, one must understand that bhakti has not fully appeared. “Purity of intention” means giving up other aims and aiming at prīti alone. Hence its qualifiers: “ahaitukī” (causeless) and “svābhāvikī” (natural).

*The sāttvika and vyabhicārī bhāvas —*

89–90 Perspiration, trembling, hair standing on end, tears, a faltering voice and change of colour; madness, despondency, steadiness, pride, joy and humility — with all these feelings prema makes the devotees dance and sets them afloat on the ocean of the nectar of Kṛṣṇa’s bliss.

The guru instructs the disciple in his duty —

91 It is good that You have attained the supreme goal of life; by Your prema my own life has been fulfilled.

92 Dance, sing and perform saṅkīrtana with the devotees; teach Kṛṣṇa’s name and deliver all people.’

Anubhāṣya.

Those who have become qualified in the eyes of Śrī Gurudeva are granted by Śrī Gurudeva the right to dance, sing, perform saṅkīrtana and so on together with Hari's servants who are devoted to bhajana, like-minded and affectionate (sajātīyāśaya-snigdha). Only they, following in the footsteps of Śrī Gurudeva, take up the work of delivering the world with the knowledge of their own bhajana. Those who are not qualified should chant the name of Kṛṣṇa in solitude. In such worship there is no association with others. But once the qualification is attained, association with people can no longer bring an evil result; on the contrary, even people averse to the Lord then become able to receive the mercy of the name. In this connection one should reflect on such verses as “One who is not a controller should never do this, even in his mind”[18] or “When one is not attached to the objects of the senses, uses them as is fitting and firmly connects everything with Kṛṣṇa, that is called proper renunciation (yukta-vairāgya).”[19]

93 Saying this, he taught Me a verse and told Me again and again: ‘This is the essence of the Bhāgavata.’

*The state of a mahā-bhāgavata —*

94 “One who has taken this vow, chanting the names of his beloved Lord, finds love awakening within him; his heart melts, and, heedless of the world, he laughs aloud, weeps, cries out, sings and dances like a madman.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.2.40)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

A person whose vow is service to Kṛṣṇa loses control of his heart: as he chants the name of his most beloved Śrī Kṛṣṇa, attachment (anurāga) awakens in him, and his heart melts. Like a madman he becomes loka-bāhya, that is, he no longer looks to anyone: now he laughs, now he weeps, now he cries out, now he sings, dances and does much else.

Anubhāṣya.

Vasudeva wished to hear from Śrī Nārada about bhāgavata-dharma. Śrī Nārada then told the story of the nine Yogendras, the sons of Ṛṣabha, and of Nimi, the king of Videha. In that story Kavi, one of the nine Yogendras, said to King Nimi:

evaṁ-vrataḥ (one whose vow is service in the form of hearing, chanting and so on) sva-priya-nāma-kīrtyā (by chanting and so on the name of his own dear Bhagavān) jātānurāgaḥ (one in whom attachment has been born — in whom rati has awakened; therefore) druta-cittaḥ (with a longing heart) unmāda-vat loka-bāhyaḥ (outside people: unconcerned with their laughter, blame, praise and so on) uccaiḥ hasati atho roditi, rauti (cries out), gāyati, nṛtyati ca.

*Firm endeavor in bhajana at the guru's command —*

95 With firm faith in these words of his, I constantly perform the saṅkīrtana of Kṛṣṇa’s name.

*The fruit of bhajana — the mercy of Śrī Nāma-Prabhu, who acts by His own will —* 96 That name of Kṛṣṇa sometimes makes Me sing and dance; I do not sing and dance of My own will.

Anubhāṣya.

Those who cannot believe the words of Śrī Gurudeva and pervert their own qualification (adhikāra) do not obtain the right to the saṅkīrtana of Kṛṣṇa's name. Śrī Gaurasundara upheld the words of the śruti: "To those great souls who have supreme devotion to God, and the same devotion to the guru, the whole meaning of what has been said is revealed"[20] — and He began the saṅkīrtana of Kṛṣṇa's name. Following His guru (ānugatya), He did not disobey his order and never stopped the unbroken nāma-saṅkīrtana. The kīrtana of such a Kṛṣṇa-nāma-Prabhu, by His own power of will (icchā-śakti), moved Śrī Gaurasundara to dance and sing. Śrī Gaurasundara did not chant the holy name condescendingly, as if it were a material object. But those driven by the restlessness of the senses take Kṛṣṇa's name for their plaything: instead of serving the holy name, they try to become its masters and command it. Instead of bhajana they reap the fruits of karma — they merely aggravate their bile (pitta) and ruin their bodily health.

"I am a fool who cannot tell good from harm. I feared that if I went searching for the pure meaning of Vedānta, the false arguments of Māyāvāda spoken by Śrī Śaṅkarācārya would come and destroy My natural inclination to bhajana. So, knowing that I have no right to Vedānta as Śaṅkara explains it, I am freed from the anarthas of worldly existence simply by chanting the mantra of Kṛṣṇa. I take up the name of Kṛṣṇa, whom the liberated worship, and thereby attain Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet. In the quarrelsome age of Kali there is no dharma other than taking the name. I received all these instructions from Śrī Gurudeva, and by taking the name I became almost mad. Later I asked him again and learned that when the jīva attains the right to prema, an incomparable good comes to him. Prema is the highest goal of life (parama-puruṣārtha), desirable above all, and the petty hopes of those who crave the fruits of the four goals of life cannot be compared with it. A person in whom prema has awakened naturally disregards public shame and chants Kṛṣṇa's glories loudly — laughing, weeping, singing, dancing and so on. I learned that this is what is called 'the life of a bhāgavata.' I have done nothing artificially, hiding behind deceit. I chant Kṛṣṇa's glories because I firmly believe My Gurudeva's words. The holy name Himself has made Me a singer and a dancer, in defiance of the grave dignity of the kaupīna-clad Vedāntists. My own part in this — My own will or initiative — is very small: it is all the mercy of Śrī Nāma-Prabhu."

The difference between the bliss of Brahman and the bliss of love for Kṛṣṇa —

97 Before the ocean of bliss tasted in Kṛṣṇa's name, the bliss of Brahman is like water in a ditch.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Khātodaka: a little water in a ditch.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 6.43–44.

A comparison of the ocean and a cow's hoofprint —

98 "O Guru of the world, now that I am immersed in the pure ocean of joy that comes from seeing You face to face, all other joys — even the bliss of Brahman — seem to me like the water in a calf's hoofprint." (Hari-bhakti-sudhodaya, 14.36)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
O Teacher of the world! I have seen You Yourself (Your svarūpa), and now I abide in a pure ocean of joy. All other happiness seems to me like a cow's hoofprint; even the happiness the jīva finds in dissolving into Brahman is only a hoofprint. Where a cow steps, a hollow is left; the water in it is tiny compared with the ocean.

Anubhāṣya.
he jagad-guro (O Teacher of the world) tvat-sākṣāt-karaṇāhlāda-viśuddhābdhi-sthitasya (abiding in the pure — that is, unmixed — ocean of the joy born from directly seeing You, from Your darśana) me (my) brāhmāṇi (born of realizing Brahman) sukhāni api goṣ-padāyante (seem like the water in the hollow of a cow's hoofprint).

*The gradual change in the minds of the sannyāsīs, and their question —*

99 Hearing the Lord's sweet words, the sannyāsīs had a change of heart, and they answered Him with gentle words:

*Still, their faith in bhakti is slight, but their faith in Māyāvāda is firm —*

100 "All that You have said is true: love for Kṛṣṇa is attained only by one whose good fortune has dawned.

101 You have devotion for Kṛṣṇa, and we are all pleased with that. But why do You not hear Vedānta? What fault is there in it?"

Anubhāṣya.

The Māyāvādīs call "Vedānta" only the scripture that Śrī Śaṅkarapāda's Śārīraka-bhāṣya has in view. In other words, when the followers of Śaṅkara's doctrine say "Vedānta," they mean the Upaniṣads and the Brahma-sūtra as read through their ācārya's commentary, which is built on the doctrine of kevalādvaita. The Vedānta-sāra of Sadānanda Yogīndra says: "Vedānta is the evidence of the Upaniṣads, together with the Śārīraka-sūtras and other works that assist it." In truth, however, the word "Vedānta" does not mean the doctrine of kevalādvaita. All four Vaiṣṇava ācāryas are ācāryas of Vedānta, yet they are not Māyāvādīs and do not follow Śaṅkara's doctrine. The followers of Māyāvāda see no difference at all; starting from kevalādvaita, they worship themselves as God (ahaṅgrahopāsanā). They accept neither śuddhādvaita, nor śuddha-dvaita, nor viśiṣṭādvaita, nor dvaitādvaita, nor acintya-bhedābheda; they believe that kevalādvaita alone is the faultless doctrine of Vedānta. The Māyāvādīs are pleased with the impermanent service that is rendered to Kṛṣṇa with a material body and mind. That is, they regard devotion to Kṛṣṇa as merely a special kind of ritual work (karma); so for them it too is "non-devotion" (abhakti), and with this they are content.

The Lord's words —

102 Hearing this, the Lord smiled and said, "If you will not take offence, I shall explain."

*The humility of the Māyāvādī sannyāsīs —*

103 At this all the sannyāsīs said, “We see You as Nārāyaṇa Himself.

104 Your words soothe our ears, and the sight of Your sweetness soothes our eyes.

105 Your presence has filled all our hearts with joy, and Your words are never unfitting.”

The Lord's view and explanation of Vedānta —

106 The Lord said, “The Vedānta-sūtra is the word of the Lord: Śrī Nārāyaṇa Himself composed it in the form of Vyāsa.[4]

Anubhāṣya.

Sūtra: “Knowers of sūtras know a sūtra to be brief, unambiguous, full of essence, facing every side, free of superfluous words, and faultless.” (Skanda Purāṇa and Vāyu Purāṇa) The Vedānta-sūtra is known by various names: (1) Brahma-sūtra, (2) Śārīraka, (3) Vyāsa-sūtra, (4) Bādarāyaṇa-sūtra, (5) Uttara-mīmāṁsā and (6) Vedānta-darśana. It is a book composed of sūtras, with four chapters (adhyāyas) and sixteen quarters (pādas). Each pāda contains several topics (adhikaraṇas). Each topic contains the five-membered argument (pañcāvayava-nyāya): the proposition (pratijñā), the reason (hetu), the example (udāharaṇa), the application (upanaya) and the conclusion (nigamana). In other words: “One verse [states] the subject and the doubt and sets out the pūrvapakṣa; the other verse establishes the siddhānta; the connections between them are clear.”

According to the different commentaries, it has from 162 to 223 topics (adhikaraṇas) and from 520 to 560 sūtras.

On the word “Vedānta” the lexicographer Hemacandra says: “Vedānta is the Upaniṣads together with the Brāhmaṇas — the remainder of the Vedas, their last portion, that is, the end of the Vedas.” A scripture that shows the ultimate purpose of the Vedas is also “Vedānta.” A scripture that uses the Upaniṣads as its evidence, and the sūtras and other works that assist it, are also “Vedānta.” The Vedānta-sūtra is called the nyāya-prasthāna, one of the three prasthānas (foundations of doctrine). The Upaniṣads are the śruti-prasthāna, and the Gītā, the Mahābhārata, the Purāṇas and so on are the smṛti-prasthāna.

The Vedas came into the material world from the breath of Śrī Nārāyaṇa. The scripture spoken by Śrī Nārāyaṇa that unfolds the Vedas is called the Sātvata-pañcarātra. The Vedānta-sūtra was compiled by Śrī Vyāsa, the āveśa-avatāra of Śrī Nārāyaṇa — or, in the opinion of some (Śaṅkara's commentary 3.3.32),[21] by the sage Apāntaratamā. Śrī Gaurasundara says that the Pañcarātra and the Vedānta express one and the same teaching. Since Śrī Vyāsa composed the sūtras, they too must be known as the word of Śrī Nārāyaṇa Himself.

While composing the sūtras, Śrī Vyāsadeva examined the Vedānta doctrines set forth by seven other sages: Ātreya, Āśmarathya, Auḍulomi, Kārṣṇājini, Kāśakṛtsna, Jaimini and Bādari. Besides these, two more collections — the sūtras of Pārāśarī and of Karmandī-bhikṣu — also preceded the sūtras of Śrī Vyāsa.

The first two chapters of the Vedānta-darśana describe knowledge of sambandha; the third chapter, abhidheya, the practice of devotion (sādhana-bhakti); and the fourth, prayojana, the fruit: love for Bhagavān. The genuine commentary on Vedānta, written by Vyāsa, the author of the sūtras himself, is the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam. Besides it, the commentaries of the four Vaiṣṇava ācāryas, who follow the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam to a greater or lesser degree, and the many glosses written by their successors in their sampradāyas, declare that Vedānta aims at the worship of Bhagavān. This Vedānta-sūtra is honored even in the sampradāya that lacks devotion to Viṣṇu and holds to the doctrine of the featureless. The commentaries on this Vedānta written from the standpoint of māyā, and the glosses, treatises and other works that follow them, are devoid of service to Viṣṇu, and their reasoning departs from the real truth.

(1) The word of the Lord is free from the four defects —

107 Error, inattention, the wish to deceive and the imperfection of the senses — none of these faults is found in the words of the Lord.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 2.86.

*(2) By the direct (primary) meaning (abhidhā-vṛtti), what Vedānta makes* known is Bhagavān, the Truth possessed of features —

108 The truth that the sūtras declare together with the Upaniṣads is of supreme greatness when taken in its primary sense.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Upaniṣads are the Īśa, Kena, Kaṭha, Praśna, Muṇḍaka, Māṇḍūkya, Taittirīya, Aitareya, Chāndogya, Bṛhad-āraṇyaka and Śvetāśvatara: eleven Upaniṣads, the crown of the Vedas.

The sūtra is the Brahma-sūtra: four chapters, sixteen pādas. These two are the chief among the scriptures.

*Śaṅkara's commentary was written in the secondary meaning to bewilder the asuras; to hear it is to lose everything —*

109 But to hear the commentary that the Ācārya wrote in the secondary sense is to lose every spiritual gain.

Anubhāṣya.

The Muktikā Upaniṣad (30–39)[22] lists: "Īśa, Kena, Kaṭha, Praśna, Muṇḍa, Māṇḍūkya, Tittiri, Aitareya, Chāndogya and Bṛhad-āraṇyaka; Brahma, Kaivalya, Jābāla, Śvetāśva, Haṁsa, Āruṇi, Garbha, Nārāyaṇa, Haṁsa, Bindu, Nāda, Śiraḥ, Śikhā; Maitrāyaṇī, Kauṣītakī, Bṛhaj-jābāla, Tāpanī, Kālāgni-rudra, Maitreyī, Subāla, Kṣuri, Mantrikā; Sarvasāra, Nirālamba, Rahasya, Vajrasūcikā; Tejo, Nāda, Dhyāna, Vidyā, Yoga-tattva, Ātma-bodha; Parivrāṭ, Triśikhī, Sītā, Cūḍā, Nirvāṇa, Maṇḍala; Dakṣiṇā, Śarabha, Skanda, the one called Mahānārāyaṇa; Rahasya, Rāma-tapana, Vāsudeva and Mudgala; Śāṇḍilya, Paiṅgala, Bhikṣu, Mahat, Śārīraka, Śikhā; Turīyātīta, Sannyāsa, Parivrāja, Akṣamālikā; Avyakta, Ekākṣara, Pūrṇā, Sūrya, Akṣi, Adhyātma, Kuṇḍikā; Sāvitrī, Ātmā, Pāśupata, Parabrahma, Avadhūta; Tripurā-tapana, Devī, Tripurā, Kaṭha, Bhāvanā; Hṛdaya, Kuṇḍalī, Bhasma, Rudrākṣa, Gaṇa, Darśana; Tāra-sāra, Mahā-vākya, Pañca-brahma, Agnihotra; Gopāla-tapana, Kṛṣṇa, Yājñavalkya, Varāha; Śāṭyāyanī, Hayagrīva, Dattātreya and Gāruḍa; Kali, Jābāli, Saubhāgya, Rahasya and Muktikā." These are the one hundred and eight Upaniṣads.

The word mukhya-vṛtti means abhidhā-vṛtti. Abhidhā is the power [of a word] by which one understands the meaning known from dictionaries, grammar and so on. The word gauṇa-vṛtti means lakṣaṇā-vṛtti. Lakṣaṇā is the power by which, for some purpose or through frequent usage, one understands another meaning connected with the actual sense.

Bhāṣya — as it is said: “Knowers of bhāṣya know that a bhāṣya takes up the words of the sūtra, explains them in sentences that follow the sūtra, and also explains its own words.”

The highest is the Truth possessed of features (saviśeṣa-tattva): it is what the Upaniṣads and the sūtras establish, and it is shown through the direct (abhidhā) meaning. The nirviśeṣa-vādīs, however, rely on the secondary (lakṣaṇā) meaning and show only a semblance of truth (tattvābhāsa); it is known not as “Tattvavāda” but as “Māyāvāda.” Śrī Viṣṇusvāmī's śuddhādvaita was obstructed by the doctrine of kevalādvaita. Only after this did viśiṣṭādvaita and the “Tattvavāda” of Śrī Madhvācārya, following the path of the śruti, refute the conclusions of those ignorant of the truth, which rested on logic alone. Śrī Mahāprabhu relied on abhidhā-vṛtti and honored the meaning of Vedānta. But the meaning of Vedānta that Śrī Śaṅkarācārya set down in his commentary, relying on lakṣaṇā-vṛtti, ruins everything. Thus in the Padma Purāṇa: “Hear, O Devī, I shall tell you in order of the tāmasa [scriptures], by merely hearing which even the learned fall. [In Māyāvāda] the words of the śruti are given a false meaning, which people condemn; in it, it is taught that action must be given up by its very nature. There, freedom from action (naiṣkarmya) is said to be the abandonment of all action. And in it I establish the oneness of the Supreme Soul and the jīva.”

See Antya 2.94–99.

110 The fault is not his: he received the Lord’s order and so gave the secondary meaning, covering the primary.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The truth that these chief scriptures teach by their primary meaning (mukhya-vṛtti), that is, by abhidhā-vṛtti, is supremely great. Śrī Śaṅkarācārya abandoned the primary meaning of these scriptures, established the conclusion of kevalādvaita by their secondary meaning (gauṇa-vṛtti), that is, by lakṣaṇā-vṛtti, and wrote his commentary. Whoever hears it loses every spiritual endeavor. You may ask: why did Śaṅkara Svāmī, a direct avatāra of Śiva, do such an improper thing? Then listen: he undertook this work at the Lord's command, and so he bears no fault. Thus in the Padma Purāṇa Śrī Mahādeva says: “Māyāvāda is a false doctrine; it is called covert Buddhism. O Devī, in the age of Kali I Myself devised it in the form of a brāhmaṇa. To bewilder all the people of this world in the age of Kali, I shall describe Brahman in another form — as devoid of qualities (nirguṇa). O Devī, in the great scripture, the Vedānta, I Myself shall expound the non-Vedic Māyāvāda, to bring the world to ruin." And in the Śiva Purāṇa Bhagavān says: "At the beginning of Dvāpara and the other ages, appear by your partial power among humans and others, and by āgamas of your own invention turn people away from Me."

*(3) The śrutis establish Bhagavān alone, full of spiritual pastimes and opulence —*

111 In its primary sense the word "Brahman" means Bhagavān, full of spiritual majesty, with none above Him or equal to Him.

(4) He possesses a form full of eternal being, knowledge and bliss, and is not formless —

112 His opulence and His body are all spiritual in form; but, covering His spiritual opulence, the Ācārya calls Him "formless".

*To call the Truth formless, and the body of Viṣṇu and so on a transformation of māyā — this is "Māyāvāda" —*

113 His body, His abode and His retinue are spiritual bliss, yet they say that He is a transformation of material sattva.

Anubhāṣya.

The Vedānta-sāra of Sadānanda Yogīndra says: "The real (vastu) is Brahman — being, consciousness and bliss, nondual. The whole mass of inert things, beginning with ignorance (ajñāna), is the unreal (avastu). Ignorance, they say, cannot be described as either existent or nonexistent; it consists of the three guṇas, is opposed to knowledge, is of a positive nature, and is 'something.' This ignorance is spoken of as one or as many, depending on whether one means the aggregate or the individual. This aggregate, because its upādhi is excellent, is one in which pure sattva predominates. Consciousness conditioned by it, possessing qualities such as omniscience, lordship over all and control over all, is sad-asad-avyakta, unmanifest as either the existent or the nonexistent; it is the inner ruler, the cause of the world, and it is called Īśvara. Because it illumines all ignorance, it is omniscient."

The Śaṅkarite Vedāntist Sadānanda summarized the purport of Śaṅkara's doctrine in the book Vedānta-sāra. Today this book is a highly respected, authoritative foundation of Śaṅkara's sampradāya.

"Brahman is the nondual Reality, being, consciousness and bliss; the whole mass of inert things, beginning with ignorance, is unreal. 'Ignorance' means everything that is distinct from both the existent and the nonexistent, indescribable, made of the three guṇas, opposed to knowledge and of a positive nature. This ignorance is spoken of both as one and as many, depending on whether it is the aggregate or the individual. When this aggregate is endowed with an excellent upādhi, it receives the name 'that in which pure sattva predominates.' When this [aggregate ignorance], in which pure sattva predominates, is reflected in consciousness, [consciousness] receives the name 'Īśvara' — omniscient, lord of all, ruler of all, unmanifest as either the existent or the nonexistent (sad-asad-avyakta), the inner ruler of the jīvas, the cause of the world. Īśvara is 'omniscient' because He illumines all ignorance. In their view, being Īśvara is merely a transformation of material sattva born of ignorance. The jīva, in turn, is one in whom impure sattva predominates, and he is endowed with an individual upādhi."

*To regard Viṣṇu, the Master of māyā, as a product of māyā — this is* *godlessness (pāṣaṇḍatā) —*

115 One who regards the body of Viṣṇu as material commits the gravest blasphemy against Viṣṇu; there is none greater than this.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The meaning that appears clearly, that is, directly, as soon as one reads a text is called the primary meaning (mukhyārtha). The Bṛhad-āraṇyaka says: “That is full, this is full; from the full the full comes forth” (5.1). The Śvetāśvatara says: “The ancient Puruṣa, possessed of wondrous potencies”; “He is beyond the tree [of worldly existence], time and forms, and other than them; from Him this world revolves; He brings dharma, removes sin, and is the Lord of all opulence” (6.6); “I know this great Puruṣa, radiant like the sun, beyond darkness” (3.8); “the supreme Master of masters, higher than the highest” (6.7); “the Puruṣa is the great Lord” (3.12); “His supreme potency is heard to be manifold” (6.8), and so on. The Ṛg-veda says: “The sages always see that supreme abode of Viṣṇu.” The Praśna says: “He glanced” (6.3). The Aitareya says: “He glanced” (1.1.1) and “He created these worlds” (1.1.2). The Talavakāra says: “Brahman knew [their pride] and appeared before them” (3.2). As soon as one reads many such statements of the Vedas, it becomes clear that [they speak] only of Bhagavān, the one Supreme Truth, full of the six opulences, who has none equal to Him or above Him. There are, of course, statements that deny form, such as apāṇi-pādaḥ (“without hands and feet”) (Śvetāśvatara 3.19). They must be understood only to mean that this Bhagavān's form is spiritual, and that His body and His opulence are spiritual opulence. The Māyāvādīs, headed by the ācārya, cover His spiritual opulence and declare Him “formless,” a transformation of the quality of sattva. But He Himself, His abode and His associates are all, by nature, spiritual bliss beyond prakṛti. How, then, can He be called a transformation of material sattva? In truth His form too, full of transcendental spiritual opulence, is real. Is the ācārya at fault for describing Him as formless? No — he is a servant carrying out an order. As the Nārada-pañcarātra says: “And conceal Me, so that this creation may keep on increasing.” But anyone else who hears such an explanation loses everything. There can be no worse blasphemy of Viṣṇu than to consider Viṣṇu's body “material.”

Anubhāṣya.

The Truth possessed of features is Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu's prakṛti is the root of the material, inert world. In the reasoning of vivarta-vāda, the prakṛti, or māyāśakti, of the featureless Brahman has no real existence. The scriptures have described Viṣṇu's māyā at length. Viṣṇu is not some god born of māyā. Those who think so have a distorted idea of Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu can never be counted among the material gods. Only those deluded in this way regard Viṣṇu as a material deity. To free them from the bondage of worldly existence, Śrī Bhagavān said in the Gītā:

"This divine māyā of Mine, made of the guṇas, is hard to overcome. But those who surrender to Me cross over this māyā."[23] Viṣṇu is the Reality of Vaikuṇṭha. To regard Him as a deity born of prakṛti is to do violence to what is said about the Reality; this is blasphemy. Viṣṇu is the Reality beyond the senses (adhokṣaja): He cannot be perceived by the material senses, as material objects are. Between His body and the possessor of that body there is nonduality (advaya-jñāna). In material things, the body and its possessor are different. Material things are objects of enjoyment, but Viṣṇu is eternally the enjoyer. To regard the "enjoyer" as the "enjoyed" is an offense. And to present the One whom the jīva eternally serves as a servant on a level with the jīva is to blaspheme Him.

See the Anubhāṣya on Ādi 7.112–113 and Madhya 25.35–39.

116 The truth of the Lord is like a blazing fire, and the jīva in its true nature is like a particle of a spark.

117 The jīva is a potency (śakti); Kṛṣṇa is the possessor of all potency (śaktimān). The Gītā, the Viṣṇu Purāṇa and other scriptures bear witness to this.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

If the truth of the Lord is compared to a blazing fire, the countless jīvas can be compared to tiny sparks of that fire. The point is this: the Lord is a special fire — spiritual, unlimited and blazing. The countless jīvas have come forth from Him like tiny sparks and become separate tattvas. Here māyā plays no part in forming the jīva's svarūpa; that is, nothing material takes place. You may ask: why form such particles of spirit at all? Then listen: the Lord's wondrous svarūpa-śakti has two kinds of tendencies — toward unlimited action and toward minute action. From the tendency toward unlimited action come the Lord's own form and the Vaikuṇṭha-tattva, the spiritual world; this tendency is called cit-śakti. From the tendency toward minute action come the countless jīvas, atomic consciousness; this tendency is called jīva-śakti. If the svarūpa-śakti did not have both these functions, His fullness would be impaired. Bhagavān is full of all opulence, and so the jīva — the minute action of His potency — must exist inevitably and necessarily. Therefore it is through the jīva-tattva that Kṛṣṇa's possession of potency (vilāsa) [is manifest] in the Kṛṣṇa-tattva. Without the jīva-tattva, Kṛṣṇa's full possession of potency could not be admitted. Where there are none to be ruled, there is no Ruler.

*(Bhagavad-gītā 7.5)*

118 "This nature is inferior. But know, O mighty-armed, that I have another, superior nature, consisting of the jīvas, who take up this world for their own enjoyment." (Bhagavad-gītā, 7.5)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Earth, water, fire, air and ether — this is the gross world of the five elements; mind, intelligence and ahaṅkāra — the subtle (liṅga) world. Prakṛti, divided in these eight ways, is "inferior" (aparā), or "inert" (jaḍā); it is called māyā-prakṛti. Apart from it I have another, "superior prakṛti" (parā-prakṛti). This prakṛti, whose nature is the jīva, fills this world. The point is this: Bhagavān is the one Reality; He has a potency called svarūpa, or ātma. There is a potency that appears almost separate from this svarūpa-śakti, yet shows itself as its shadow; it is called māyā-śakti. The material universe, gross and subtle, is born of that māyā. Beyond it is the jīva-tattva. The jīva's pure being, pure ahaṅkāra and mental functions are all formed by a certain superior potency (parā-śakti) beyond māyā. So māyā had no authority at all in the making of the "jīva." When the jīva has entered māyā, a minute intelligence and ahaṅkāra tinged with materiality appear in him — that alone is māyā's work. When the jīva is cleansed of this connection with māyā and abides in his own svarūpa, this is called mukti. In mukti not even the ahaṅkāra made by māyā remains; but all the spiritual faculties natural to the jīva will be able to act in their pure form. Therefore the jīva is a particular potency of Bhagavān.

Anubhāṣya.

Cit*, jīva and māyā — the three kinds of Viṣṇu's potency —*

119 "The potency of Viṣṇu is declared to be superior; the potency called the knower of the field (kṣetrajña) is likewise superior; and the other, called ignorance and karma, is held to be a third potency." (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 6.7.61)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Viṣṇu's potency is of three kinds: the superior (parā), the kṣetrajñā, and the one called ignorance (avidyā). Viṣṇu's superior potency is cit-śakti; the kṣetrajñā potency is jīva-śakti (it is said to be "other" [distinct] from māyā, that is, avidyā); and the potency of avidyā, which is called karma, is named māyā.

Anubhāṣya.

*To consider the Lord, like the jīva, to be full of ignorance — this too is Māyāvāda —*

120 Yet the Ācārya took such a jīva and declared it to be the Supreme Truth, and so he hid the supreme greatness of the Lord.

*The Brahma-sūtra accepts only the doctrine of the transformation of potency (śakti-pariṇāma-vāda) —*

121 In Vyāsa's sūtras the doctrine of transformation (pariṇāma-vāda) is taught; but Śaṅkara said that Vyāsa was mistaken and raised a dispute.

Anubhāṣya.

Setting out to describe the nature of the Lord, the jīva and prakṛti as indescribable and to explain it in terms of ignorance, Śaṅkara concealed the transcendent supremacy of the Lord.

Śrī Rāmānujapāda writes in the Vedānta-sāra: “Objection: the statement ‘In the beginning all this was the Ātmā alone’ establishes oneness before creation. How, then, can Nārāyaṇa, qualified by subtle spirit and matter, be the cause? Answer: [it is said:] ‘That from which these beings are born, by which, once born, they live, and into which, departing, they enter.’ What is taught here is that beings, having given up their gross forms and taken on subtle ones, abide in Brahman — not that their own nature ceases. For [in the śruti] we hear: ‘The akṣara dissolves into darkness (tamas); darkness becomes one with the supreme Deity’ — that is, prakṛti, called by the word tamas, becomes one with the Paramātmā. To become one is to exist without being perceived separately; and that is the meaning of the word laya (dissolution): as birds dissolve into a tree, and deer into a forest.”

You may ask: “Before the creation of the world only the Ātmā existed (Bṛhad-āraṇyaka 1.4.1); how then can Nārāyaṇa, possessed of subtle spiritual and material potencies, be the root cause of the world?” The answer can be given thus. The statement of the Taittirīya, “He from whom these beings were born, by whom they are sustained, and into whom they enter” (Taittirīya, Bhṛgu-vallī 1), shows that beings give up their gross material forms, are released from them, take on subtle forms and [so] abide in Brahman, but their svarūpa is not destroyed. For when the imperishable soul dissolves into prakṛti, called by the word tamas, prakṛti becomes nondifferent (one) with Brahman. At that time prakṛti is not perceived separately from Brahman, and so the existence of prakṛti abides in Brahman itself. This is what the word laya means. An example: just as birds in a tree or animals in a forest dissolve into the tree or the forest, that is, are hidden within it.

Śrī Vedavyāsa, the author of the Brahma-sūtra, says: “The ānandamaya [is Brahman], because [this] is repeated” (Brahma-sūtra 1.1.12). In connection with this sūtra, while explaining the sūtra “And [scripture] teaches its union with that in it” (Brahma-sūtra 1.1.19), Śrī Śaṅkara wrote what may be paraphrased thus: “The statement about the ānandamaya lacks the word ‘Brahman,’ so the ānandamaya cannot be called the principal Brahman. If the ānandamaya were called ‘Brahman,’ then, since it has parts, one would have to speak of a Brahman possessed of features. Yet at the end of the statement about the ānandamaya the featureless Brahman is spoken of. If one says that in the word ānandamaya the suffix mayaṭ means abundance — ‘abounding in bliss’ (the sense in which the bhāgavatas, who teach spiritual variety, have used it) — then it follows that suffering also exists in it. For the word ‘abundant’ is used according to predominance, not according to scarcity. The śruti does not repeat (abhyāsa, repeated mention) the ‘ānandamaya’ but repeats ‘ānanda’ alone — precisely because the ānandamaya is not ‘pure Brahman.’ Had it been established that the ānandamaya is Brahman, then perhaps the repetition of ‘ānanda’ alone might have been taken as a repetition of the ānandamaya. But since the ānandamaya is connected with parts, it is certain that it is not Brahman. For all these reasons, and because in śrutis such as ‘Brahman is ānanda’ the word ānanda is used of the Supreme Brahman, it is clear that in other śrutis too what is repeated is ‘ānanda alone, Brahman,’ not ‘ānandamaya.’ True, in the śruti ‘ānandamayam ātmānam’ we see the ānandamaya itself repeated; but it stands in the series with the annamaya and the rest, and so the ānandamaya cannot denote pure Brahman. Near the statement about the ānandamaya there are the words ‘He desired: may I become many’; but the ānandamaya has no close connection with pure Brahman, and so it does not denote pure Brahman. The statement that follows, ‘He is rasa,’ and the rest depends on that [pure Brahman] and so does not point to the ānandamaya. Since there are no words indicating parts, such as ‘joy is His head,’ it is certain that the principal Brahman is ‘ānanda,’ not ‘ānandamaya.’ You may say: does not that śruti intend the Brahman possessed of features? The answer: you cannot say so — that is refuted by the śrutis which say He is ‘beyond speech and mind.’ Therefore the suffix mayaṭ in the word ānandamaya indicates transformation (vikāra), not abundance.”

Thus Śrīpāda Śaṅkara, in explaining these sūtras, wanted to remove the suffix mayaṭ, that is, to show that it is useless or superfluous — and what effort he made to repeat one and the same point again and again in sūtras 12–19! On this Śrīmad Jīva Prabhu says in his Sarva-saṁvādinī: “If one secretly intends [to show] that the author of the sūtras did not know the meaning of Vedānta, and, with an artfulness that betrays one's own cleverness in correcting his mistake, explains that sūtra on the ānandamaya thus — ‘In [the passage] “ānandamaya” and so on, Brahman, principal in its own right, is taught [by the words] “Brahman is the tail, the foundation”’ — and in the sūtra on vikāra (1.1.13) explains the word vikāra as ‘part’ and the word prācurya as ‘similarity,’ then it would follow that the author of the sūtras did not know the meaning of words, since by those words he would not be expressing those meanings. That the words — the suffix mayaṭ, vikāra and prācurya, stated one after another — have some other sense would not occur even to a child.”

Reading Śaṅkara's commentary, one gets the impression that his hidden aim is, as it were, [to show] that Śrī Vedavyāsa, the author of the sūtras, could not understand the meaning of Vedānta. So Śrī Śaṅkara, on the pretext of correcting the mistake of the ācārya Śrī Vedavyāsa, the author of the sūtras, used his own cleverness and artfully explained the sūtra on the ānandamaya thus: “Among the statements of the śruti beginning with ‘ānandamaya,’ the principal Brahman is ‘taught’ in the statement ‘Brahman is the tail, the foundation’; and in sūtra 1.1.13 I shall explain the word vikāra as ‘part’ and the word prācurya as ‘similarity.’” Explained this way, it follows that the author of the sūtras (Vyāsa) had no knowledge of words, since the words he used do not yield those meanings of Vedānta. What other meaning could the words vikāra, prācurya and the rest, derived from the suffix mayaṭ and stated one after another, possibly have? Even a child can see this! In other words, it is easy to understand that to give the suffix mayaṭ any meaning other than “transformation” and “abundance” is a plain error.

See Madhya 6.170–175 and Madhya 25.40–41.

*The “vivarta-vāda” of the Māyāvādī, who considers his guru mistaken —*

122 He argued that under the doctrine of transformation the Lord would be subject to change, and on that ground he established vivarta-vāda, the doctrine of illusion.

*The basis of vivarta —*

123 In truth the doctrine of transformation alone is authoritative; illusion lies in taking the body for the self.

*Refutation of vivarta-vāda: (1) Bhagavān possesses inconceivable potency —*

124 Śrī Bhagavān possesses inconceivable potency, and by His own will He is transformed into the world.

*(2) The example of the material cintāmaṇi stone —*

125 Yet by that same inconceivable potency He remains unchanged. We find an example of this even in this world — the cintāmaṇi stone.

*The cintāmaṇi, which produces heaps of jewels, remains unchanged —*

126 Heaps of various jewels come from the cintāmaṇi, yet the gem itself remains unchanged in its nature.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Jīva Prabhu writes in the Paramātma-sandarbha (section 58): “For in that doctrine the view is that all duality, beginning with the jīvas, is imagined through ignorance alone in Brahman, which is one's own nature. But Brahman — pure consciousness, without ego, free of any other attribute, distinct from everything — can be neither the shelter of ignorance, nor its object, nor the cause of error. Yet inconceivable potency is possible in Him, since He is a supreme and transcendent Reality. This is seen even in the cintāmaṇi and the like. [Brahman's potency], like a medicine that cures disorders of all three humors, holds even mutually contradictory qualities in Him; by it, although He is without parts and so on, He is acknowledged to have parts and so on. For this, the word [of scripture] is the evidence. It is: ‘The ancient Puruṣa has wondrous potencies, and others have no such potencies,’ and so on, in the Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad and elsewhere; ‘the Self, the Lord, possessed of thousands of potencies beyond reasoning’ (Bhāgavatam 3.33.3), and so on, in the Śrī Bhāgavatam and elsewhere. So too the Brahma-sūtra (2.1.28): ‘For in the Self too it is so, since [in Him] there is variety.’ Therefore, even on the plea that duality cannot otherwise be explained, ignorance and the like cannot be imagined in Brahman — simply because it is impossible. And since inconceivable potency in Brahman is grasped by reason and heard in the śruti, the plea ‘duality cannot otherwise be explained’ falls away. In the end, then, inconceivable potency alone remains as what explains duality. Therefore, although the Paramātmā is by nature changeless and so on, by His inconceivable potency transformation and the like take place — into the shape of the universe and so on — just as the cintāmaṇi yields every desired object and the magnet moves iron. Śrī Bādarāyaṇa accepted this: ‘But on the basis of śruti, for [this] rests on the word’ (Brahma-sūtra 2.1.27). Hence, since He has such potency, it is also wrong to take the word māyā, as in worldly usage, to mean the art of sorcery (indra-jāla). It means the potency that creates wondrous variety:

In the Paramātma-sandarbha [it is said]: relying on vivarta, that is, on the doctrine of falsity, they claim that all tattvas that have a second existence — the jīva and the rest — are imagined through ignorance in Brahman's own svarūpa. But Brahman is devoid of any other attribute, distinct from everything, free of ego, pure consciousness; so He can never be the shelter of ignorance, nor that toward which ignorance is directed, nor the cause of error. Brahman is a supreme and transcendent Reality, and so He can have a potency inconceivable to puny human beings. If transcendent power is seen even in material things such as the cintāmaṇi, then such power certainly exists in Brahman. When the three humors — vāta, kapha and pitta — afflict a patient all at once, a medicine is prescribed to correct the mutually opposed elements of the body. In the same way the potency that holds three mutually opposed qualities [allows us to accept] that Brahman, though formless and so on, possesses limbs and so on. There is Vedic evidence for this: “The eternal Puruṣa possesses wondrous potencies; others have no such potencies” — so says the Śvetāśvatara. And the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam and other works say: “The Self is the Lord, possessed of thousands of inconceivable potencies.” And the Brahma-sūtra: “In the Self there is such variety.” Even though duality may find no explanation in Brahman, ignorance and the like still cannot be imagined in Brahman, since that is impossible. “Inconceivable potency in Brahman agrees with reason and is confirmed by the śruti, so the plea ‘duality cannot otherwise be explained’ has fallen away; what remains to explain duality is inconceivable potency alone. Therefore, although the Paramātmā is changeless by nature, by the power of His inconceivable potency transformation and the like take place into the shape of the universe. The cintāmaṇi does not change, yet it can yield every desired object; the magnet does not change, yet it can attract and move iron and so on. In the same way Brahman does not change: only Brahman's potency, which is capable of change, changes and is transformed into the shape of the universe. Śrī Bādarāyaṇa accepted this in the Brahma-sūtra. And since Brahman has such potency, it is wrong to take the word māyā, as in worldly usage, to mean the art of sorcery. This māyā creates variety, and so it is established that the word means the potency that produces wondrous variety. Therefore the conclusion of scripture is that this universe is the transformation of the Paramātmā Himself.  Here what is transformed is the untransformed real Entity — by the power of inconceivable potency. So what is transformed is only the potency called dravya, an unfolding of the svarūpa of that Entity, which appears as pure being alone; the svarūpa itself is not transformed. So the cintāmaṇi exerts its power, yet itself undergoes no change at all. * That is why, as we hear, some say that the material cause of this world is ‘Brahman,’ while others say it is ‘pradhāna.’  Earlier, when one saw water, a notion of it arose. While there is no occasion for it, that notion sleeps, but on seeing something similar it awakens. If, without examining that thing, one arbitrarily imposes on it identity with the earlier thing, then it is not the water that becomes false, nor the image in the form of water made of its memory, nor the water-like thing such as a mirage — only the imposition of identity with water is untrue, that is, false. And in a dream too, by the rule ‘[the dream] is mere māyā; its nature is not fully manifest,’ the Paramātmā's māyā, just as before, imposes identity with things on a state of mind shaped like things perceived (seen) in waking. Therefore in reality nothing is false. Only such an imposition on the pure self or on the Paramātmā is false; the universe is not false. * Further, the examples of vivarta are mentioned among the sections on knowledge and the like, and so are secondary; pariṇāma-vāda is set forth in its own section, and so is primary; and since it is set forth in both — in the sections on knowledge and the like as well — its strength is established by the maxim of the tongs. Therefore it is known that the purport of the Śrī Bhāgavatam is the transformation of potency (śakti-pariṇāma).”

(3) Even when His potency is transformed, He Himself remains unchanged —

127 If even a material thing possesses inconceivable power, what wonder is there in the inconceivable potency of the Lord?

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The jīva-tattva is a particular potency. If one tries to establish the jīva-tattva not as atomic consciousness (aṇu-caitanya) but as “Brahman,” the conclusion will certainly be mistaken. Śrī Śaṅkarācārya, carrying out the Lord's order, intended to conceal the Lord's sovereignty; so he established the oneness of the jīva-tattva with the Supreme Truth (para-tattva) and preached a mistaken conclusion. In fact, Vyāsa's sūtras accept the doctrine of the transformation (of potency) — (śakti-)pariṇāma-vāda. The ācārya raised the argument: “If pariṇāma-vāda is accepted, the Lord must be said to undergo change.” He reasoned: “If pariṇāma-vāda is admitted, Vyāsa will have to be admitted to have ‘erred,’” and so he established vivarta-vāda. In his commentary on the fourteenth sūtra of the first pāda of the second chapter of the Brahma-sūtra — “It is not other [than the cause], according to the word ārambhaṇa and the rest” — he cited such Vedic statements as “Change is only a verbal designation, a name” (Chāndogya 6.1.4) and argued that pariṇāma-vāda is a faulty doctrine of change (vikāra-vāda). In reality, the Brahma-sūtra presents pariṇāma-vāda thus: by the mere will of the Lord, His inconceivable potency is transformed into effects. The definition of pariṇāma is: “Vikāra is said to be the perception [of a thing] as other while it is real.” When from one real tattva another real tattva arises, and it is perceived as a different thing, that is vikāra, that is, pariṇāma. “Brahman” is a real Entity; from Him there have arisen separately a real entity, the “jīva,” and a real entity, the “material universe of māyā.” This understanding is called the vikāra, or pariṇāma, of Brahman. An example of pariṇāma:

“milk” is a real substance, and it changes into another real substance, “curd.” Vedic statements such as “All this has That as its soul” (Chāndogya 6.8.7) leave no doubt that the world is Brahman. Brahman has an inconceivable potency; this is established by the Vedic statement “His supreme potency is heard to be manifold” (Śvetāśvatara 6.8). By that potency Brahman's real nature is transformed into the world — and no fault can attach to such a conclusion. From the statements of the Chāndogya — “In the beginning, my dear, all this was Being alone, one without a second” (6.2.1), “It glanced: may I become many, may I be born” (6.2.3), “All these creatures, my dear, are rooted in Being, abide in Being, are established in Being” (6.8.4), “All this has That as its soul” (6.8.7) — it is well known that this Brahman, by His own superior potency, is transformed into this world of spirit and matter. The world and the jīva are upādeya (what is made from the material), and Brahman is the upādāna (the material cause). The Vedic statement “That from which these beings are born” (Taittirīya, Bhṛgu-vallī 1) accepts that Brahman is the material cause and that the jīva and matter are made from Him. One who has not grasped the true essence of pariṇāma-vāda does not understand that this “world” and the “jīva” are separate real tattvas. From such statements as “All these creatures, my dear, are rooted in Being, abide in Being” (Chāndogya 6.8.4), it is clear that the “jīva” and the “material world,” the jīva's dwelling, are indeed real. To imagine the jīva and the world as false, like a snake in a rope or silver in a shell, out of a groundless fear that Brahman would then turn out to be subject to change — this is mere deception. True, the Māṇḍūkya and other Vedas give the examples of “a snake in a rope” and “silver in a shell,” but these have their own particular fields of application. The jīva is a pure particle of spirit. The jīva in a human body identifies himself with this material body — that is the place of vivarta. Vivarta is explained thus: “Vivarta is said to be the perception [of a thing] as other when it is not so in reality.” To take a thing for what it is not — that is vivarta. For the jīva, vivarta is a great defect: the conditioned jīva is stained by this fault of false perception (vivarta-buddhi). To impose such a fault of vivarta on the original tattva of the universe and on the jīva-tattva is utterly worthless. Such an error arises only when one forgets the inconceivable potency. How Bhagavān has transformed into the world can be illustrated by a simple example. Many say that in the material world there is a treasure, the stone cintāmaṇi: it produces heaps of various jewels, yet itself remains unchanged. If a material thing has such an inconceivable power, what is surprising in the Lord's having an inconceivable potency that surpasses it infinitely in its qualities?

*The praṇava, seed of the tree of the Vedas, is the great statement (mahā-vākya) and the very form of the Lord —*

128 The praṇava (oṁ) is the great utterance, the source of the Vedas; the praṇava is the Lord Himself in sound, the abode of all the universes.

Anubhāṣya.

In the Gītā: "Whoever departs, leaving the body, uttering the single syllable Om — Brahman — and remembering Me, attains the supreme goal" (8.13); "[I am] what is to be known, the purifier, the syllable Om" (9.17); "Om tat sat — this is remembered as the threefold designation of Brahman" (17.23). In the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (1.1.1, 1.4.1): "One should worship the syllable Om as the udgītha, for one sings the udgītha beginning with Om. Here is its explanation"; (Chāndogya 1.5.1): "What is the udgītha is the praṇava; what is the praṇava is the udgītha"; (Atharva-śikhā 2): "It makes all the life-breaths bow (praṇāvayati) to the Paramātmā; therefore it is the praṇava. The praṇava abides in four forms; it is the source of the Vedas and of the gods, the object of meditation; it holds all together and carries one across all sorrows and fears, because it delivers; [pervading] all, it is Viṣṇu; it conquers all";[5] (Māṇḍūkya 1): "The syllable Om is all this. Here is its explanation: past, present and future — all this is Om alone; and whatever else lies beyond the three times is also Om alone"; (Taittirīya, Śikṣā, ch. 8): "Om is Brahman. Om is all this. With Om they sing the Sāmans. With Om a brāhmaṇa, about to recite [the Veda], says, 'May I attain Brahman' — and he attains Brahman."

In the Śrī Bhagavat-sandarbha (section 48): "The śruti says of the praṇava: 'Om is the nearest name of Brahman: as soon as it is uttered, it carries one across the fear of worldly existence; therefore it is called tāra, the deliverer.'  Therefore the name is the very svarūpa of Bhagavān. It is also clearly said in the Śrī Nārada-pañcarātra about the eight-syllable [mantra]: 'Clearly, Bhagavān Himself — Nārāyaṇa directly — abides in [people's] mouths in the form of the eight syllables.' And in the Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad (4.4–7) about the praṇava: 'Om is all this. The syllable Om is all this.' 'The praṇava is indeed the Supreme Brahman, and the praṇava is held to be the Supreme. The praṇava has nothing before it, nothing within, nothing without, nothing after; it is imperishable. The praṇava is the beginning, the middle and the end of all. Knowing the praṇava thus, one attains it at once. Know the praṇava to be the Lord, abiding in the heart of everyone. One who understands Oṁkāra as all-pervading is wise and does not grieve. It is without measure and of infinite measure; in it duality comes to rest; it is auspicious. One who has known Oṁkāra is a sage, not an ordinary person.' One should not think that, since such things are possible only for the Supreme Lord, the words about a mere letter are only praise. For the same śruti accepts the sense that, like the other avatāras, this is an avatāra of the Supreme Lord Himself in the form of sound; and this is possible because the sound is nondifferent from Him. Therefore the name and the Bearer of the name are nondifferent."

The Śrī Bhagavat-sandarbha [says]: the śruti says of the praṇava that Om is the nearest (the sweetest) of all the names of the Supreme Brahman: from the moment one begins to utter it, it saves the jīva from the fear of worldly existence; therefore He is also called "Tāra." [Śrīdhara Svāmipāda, at the beginning of his own commentary on the Bhāgavatam, called the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam tārāṅkura, "the sprout of Tāra," because it begins with Om.] So the holy name is directly the svarūpa of Bhagavān. About the eight-syllable mantra the Śrī Nārada-pañcarātra says clearly: "It is well known that Bhagavān Śrī Nārāyaṇa Himself directly appears in the mouth of the jīva in the form of the eight syllables." And about the praṇava the Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad says: "All that is seen by spiritual vision is Oṁkāra, the syllable Om." "The praṇava is another appearance of Brahman; He is called the Supreme Reality. He has nothing before Him, is unbounded, has nothing outside Him, is supreme and imperishable; He is the beginning, the middle and the end of all. Knowing the praṇava thus, one tastes immortality. Know that the praṇava, abiding in the heart of everyone, is the svarūpa of the Lord. As soon as a wise person understands Oṁkāra as all-pervading — vibhu, that is, the svarūpa of Viṣṇu — he no longer needs to grieve; that is, he is no longer a śūdra.[25] He is without material measure, yet possesses infinite measure; through Him the material knowledge of duality subsides and nondual knowledge is attained; therefore He is the supreme good itself." One should not think that such auspicious works are possible only for the Supreme Lord as an avatāra, and that therefore such statements about a material sound or letter contain no real truth and are mere praise. In fact, like the other avatāras of the Supreme Lord, this praṇava too is His avatāra in the form of sound. This sense is accepted on the very strength of the śruti statements quoted above, and since the praṇava is nondifferent from Him, this is possible; so this sense alone is correct. Therefore there is no doubt that the name of Bhagavān and the Bearer of the name, Bhagavān, are nondifferent.

Om, or the praṇava, is the mahā-vākya, the root of the Vedas. The praṇava is placed at the beginning and at the end of every Vedic mantra. The praṇava is the very form of the Lord. “By the sound a Kṛṣṇa is denoted, the sole Master of all the worlds; by the sound u Rādhā is denoted; m denotes the jīva.”

*The Lord is what is denoted (vācya), the praṇava is what denotes (vācaka); “You are That” and similar statements only illumine one part of the Vedas —*

129 The praṇava points to the Lord, the shelter of all, whereas the utterance tat tvam asi is one particular statement of the Veda.

Anubhāṣya.

The śruti “You are That” (tat tvam asi) is found in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, in the sixth prapāṭhaka, in the eighth to the sixteenth khaṇḍas: “He is the Self; you are That, Śvetaketu.” “You are That” is one of the four Vedic “great statements” (mahā-vākyas) introduced by Śaṅkara.

130 The praṇava is the great utterance; but he covered this and set up tat tvam asi as the great utterance instead.

*The Vedas and other scriptures, in their direct meaning (abhidhā-vṛtti), acknowledge Kṛṣṇa alone —*

131 All the Vedas and sūtras name Kṛṣṇa in their primary sense; but he abandoned the primary sense and explained them by the secondary one (lakṣaṇā).

Anubhāṣya.

“In the Vedas, in the Rāmāyaṇa, in the Purāṇas and in the Mahābhārata — in the beginning, at the end and in the middle — Hari is sung everywhere.”

The evidence of the word, dependent on nothing else, is supreme — 132 The Veda is self-evident, the crest-jewel of all proofs; interpreted by the secondary sense, it loses that self-evidence.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The root statement of the Vedas is the praṇava; therefore it alone is the great statement (mahā-vākya) that denotes Brahman. The praṇava is the word that reveals the svarūpa of the Lord; therefore it is the Lord's eternal name and points to the Lord — sarva-viśva-dhāma, the shelter of all. To call "mahā-vākyas" such statements as "You are That" (Chāndogya 6.8.7), "All this is what this Self is," "All this is Brahman" (Bṛhad-āraṇyaka 2.5.1), "All this is the Self" (Chāndogya 7.25.2) and "There is no diversity here" (Kaṭha 2.1.11; Bṛhad-āraṇyaka 4.4.19) is a grave error. For the chief among them, "You are That," is only a partial statement: what the words "You are That" teach covers only one part of the Vedas. A mahā-vākya is what covers the Vedas as a whole; therefore nothing but the praṇava can be a "mahā-vākya."[5] Concealing this truth, Śrī Śaṅkarācārya called "You are That" a mahā-vākya. Relying on this invented mahā-vākya, he everywhere in the Vedas abandoned the primary meaning, that is, abhidhā-vṛtti, and explained them by lakṣaṇā, the secondary meaning. In this way he rejected without any reason the way all the Vedas and sūtras reveal the Kṛṣṇa-tattva. The Vedas are their own evidence (svataḥ-pramāṇa); so to impose a figurative sense (lakṣaṇā) on their words is merely to destroy the authority of evidence that is self-established.

Anubhāṣya.

See the Anubhāṣya on Ādi 7.107.

*Śaṅkara's explanation rests on lakṣaṇā-vṛtti and is therefore invented —*

133 So in every sūtra he abandoned the natural meaning and explained it by a secondary one, inventing it all himself."

*The Lord refutes Śaṅkara's commentary on each sūtra —*

134 In this way He showed the faults in the commentary on every sūtra, and the sannyāsīs were astonished to hear it.

*The sannyāsīs' astonishment, their admission, and their loyalty to their sampradāya —*

135 All the sannyāsīs said, “Listen, Śrīpāda: the meaning You have refuted is beyond dispute.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
O Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya! You presented these arguments and refuted Śaṅkara's interpretation; this is no empty dispute (vivāda) — that is, a fortunate person accepts it as “the truth.”

136 We all know that the meaning is the Ācārya’s own invention; yet out of deference to our sampradāya we accept it as the truth.

Anubhāṣya.
See Madhya 25.46–48.

*The Lord is asked to explain by the direct meaning (abhidhā-vṛtti) —*

137 Explain the primary meaning; let us see Your power.” And the Lord set about explaining all the sūtras in their primary meaning:

*The Lord's explanation: (1) Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa is the sambandha —*

138 “The great reality called Brahman is Śrī Bhagavān, full of the six kinds of majesty, the abode of the Supreme Truth.

139 In His own form and majesty there is not a trace of māyā; in all the Vedas Bhagavān is the sambandha — the One to whom everything is related.

140 To call Him featureless (nirviśeṣa) is to deny His spiritual potency; and one who does not accept half of His being diminishes His fullness.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
In the Bṛhad-āraṇyaka (5.1), in the statement “That is full…” and so on, the Supreme Truth, full of the six opulences, is called bṛhad-vastu, the great Reality. In the Purāṇas these characteristics are described by the word “Bhagavān”; therefore wherever the Vedas say “Brahman,” the word fulfills its purpose only when “Śrī Bhagavān” is put in its place. So in all the Vedas the one sambandha is Bhagavān. Bhagavān embraces even the quality of featurelessness, yet He is eternally possessed of features. To call Him “featureless” is to deny His cit-śakti. Brahman possesses cit-śakti — that is, possesses features; so if one does not accept half of His svarūpa, His fullness is impaired.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Rāmānujapāda writes in the Vedārtha-saṅgraha: “If it is asked, ‘How is it known that the very nature [of Brahman] is defined by knowledge as an attribute, and not that Brahman is mere knowledge?’ — [the answer is:] this is understood from the śrutis that speak of Him as the knower, such as ‘He who is all-knowing, all-wise’; from hundreds of śrutis such as ‘His supreme potency is heard to be manifold’ and ‘By what, my dear, should one know the knower?’; and also because knowledge is only an attribute, and a mere attribute without a substrate cannot be accepted as an independent entity. Therefore words such as ‘truth,’ ‘knowledge’ and so on establish Brahman as possessed of knowledge and so on — the very things that are their own meanings. And if in ‘tat tvam’ both words abandon their own meanings in order to point to the nature of an entity without features, that is an abandonment of the primary meaning. [It may be said:] ‘Since the purport [of the statement] is established to be oneness, there is no fault of lakṣaṇā, as in the words “This is that very Devadatta.”’[26]  Moreover, a word gains its force as evidence because, by its very nature as words and sentences, it conveys differences of meaning and their particular relations; therefore it is incapable of conveying an entity without features, and for such an entity the word is not evidence. Words such as ‘featureless’ convey [meaning] in another way: of an entity known as possessed of some feature, they deny a feature known from some other thing.”

*(2) The means, or abhidheya, is sādhana-bhakti, beginning with hearing*

141 The means by which one attains Bhagavān is devotion beginning with hearing; it is what brings one to Kṛṣṇa.

142 All the Vedas call this the abhidheya, the means to be practised; from devotion in practice (sādhana-bhakti) prema springs up.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

To attain shelter at the feet of that Bhagavat-tattva, all the Vedas have determined sādhana-bhakti to be the abhidheya. It is from the ninefold sādhana-bhakti, beginning with hearing, that love for Kṛṣṇa awakens.

*(3) The goal to be attained — the prayojana, or fifth goal of life — is love for Kṛṣṇa —*

143 When deep attachment for Kṛṣṇa's feet arises, no attachment to anything other than Kṛṣṇa remains.

144 That great treasure of prema is the fifth goal of life; it lets one taste the rasa of Kṛṣṇa's sweetness.

145 By prema Kṛṣṇa comes under the control of His devotee, and by prema one tastes the joy of serving Kṛṣṇa.

*The Brahma-sūtra establishes sambandha, abhidheya and prayojana —*

146 Sambandha, abhidheya and prayojana — relationship, means and goal: in these three meanings all the sūtras find their conclusion."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Who am I? What is this material universe? What is Bhagavān? And what is our relationship with one another?" When one finds the true answer to these four questions, one has "knowledge of sambandha." What is the duty of one who has gained knowledge of sambandha? One must understand this, and taking up that duty is to be known as the abhidheya of all the scriptures. The fruit one attains by carrying out that duty is called the prayojana. The Brahma-sūtra teaches precisely these three meanings.

*Having heard the explanation of all the sūtras, the sannyāsīs offer praise —*

147 Hearing all the sūtras explained in this way, all the sannyāsīs humbly said:

148 “You are the Vedas embodied — Nārāyaṇa Himself. Forgive us for having blasphemed You before.”

They constantly take the name of Kṛṣṇa —

149 From that time the sannyāsīs’ hearts were changed, and they always took the name “Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa”.

Anubhāṣya.

The leader at that time of the ekadaṇḍī sannyāsīs of Śaṅkara's sampradāya living in Kāśī was Śrī Prakāśānanda Sarasvatī. Some mistakenly try to identify him with Śrī Prabodhānanda Sarasvatī, who lived in Śrī Raṅga-kṣetra and later in Kāmyavana. Needless to say, Prabodhānanda was a tridaṇḍī of Rāmānuja's line, a jīyar svāmī, who had come from the land of Mysore and lived in Raṅga-kṣetra. He is the author of such books as Śrī Caitanya-candrāmṛta, Rādhā-rasa-sudhā-nidhi, Saṅgīta-mādhava, Vṛndāvana-śataka and Navadvīpa-śataka. Veṅkaṭa Bhaṭṭa, Tirumalaya Bhaṭṭa and Prabodhānanda were three brothers. Mahāprabhu saw him in Śaka 1433, during the cāturmāsya, as a member of Rāmānuja's sampradāya; so it is unreasonable to think that in Śaka 1435 He saw him in Kāśī as a member of Śaṅkara's sampradāya. See the book Śrī Bhakti-ratnākara.

The Lord forgives their offenses and bestows mercy —

150 So He forgave their offences and graced them all with Kṛṣṇa’s name.

*Together they honor the mahā-prasāda —*

151 Then all the sannyāsīs took their meal together with Mahāprabhu, seating Him in their midst.

152 After the meal Mahāprabhu returned to His lodging. Such are the wonderful pastimes of the beautiful Gaurāṅga.

The devotees rejoice at the Lord's magnanimous pastimes —

153 Candraśekhara, Tapana Miśra and Sanātana rejoiced at heart to hear and see all this.

154 All the sannyāsīs came to see the Lord, and all Vārāṇasī sang His praises.

Kāśī is blessed, for the Lord set foot there —

155 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya had come to Vārāṇasī, and the city and all its people were greatly blessed.

Countless people come to see the Lord —

156 People came in their hundreds of thousands to see the Lord; there was such a crowd at the door that no one could get in.

157 Whenever the Lord went to see Viśveśvara, hundreds of thousands of people gathered there.

158 When He went to bathe on the bank of the Gaṅgā, there too all the people thronged in a great crowd.

The Lord delivers the people by making them chant the names of Hari —

159 Raising His arms, the Lord would say, “Chant ‘Hari! Hari!’”, and the people’s cry of “Hari!” filled heaven and earth.

The Lord leaves Kāśī and sends Śrī Sanātana to Vṛndāvana —

160 Having delivered the people, the Lord decided to leave, and He sent Śrī Sanātana to Vṛndāvana.

161 Hearing the clamour of the crowds night and day, the Lord left Vārāṇasī and returned to Nīlācala.

162 I shall tell these pastimes in detail later; here I have told them briefly, as the occasion arose.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Later": see Madhya, Chapter 25.

Thus ends the seventh chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

The Lord, in the form of the Pañca-tattva, delivers the world —

163 Thus, in the form of the Pañca-tattva, Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya blessed the whole world, giving everyone Kṛṣṇa's name and love for Him.

*The Lord, Himself and through His preachers, spreads the name and prema throughout India and delivers the people —*

164 He sent Rūpa and Sanātana to Mathurā, and these two commanders spread bhakti there.

165 He sent Nityānanda Gosāñi to the land of Gauḍa, and there He preached bhakti in every possible way.

166 He Himself went to the south and spread Kṛṣṇa's name from village to village.

167 As far as Setubandha He preached bhakti, and, giving Kṛṣṇa-prema, He delivered everyone.

Anubhāṣya.

To deliver everyone throughout India through love for Kṛṣṇa, [Mahāprabhu] spread the name of Kṛṣṇa: in the northwest, in the Māthura-maṇḍala, through Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana; in Gauḍa and Bengal through Śrī Nityānanda; and Himself in the south, village after village, as far as Setubandha.

*By hearing the explanation of the Pañca-tattva one gains knowledge of the Gaura-tattva —*

168 Thus I have given the explanation of the Pañca-tattva; by hearing it one comes to know the truth of Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.
Thus ends the seventh chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”

169 Śrī Caitanya, Nityānanda and Advaita — the three; Śrīvāsa, Gadādhara and all the other devotees —

170 at the lotus feet of all of them I bow millions of times, and as best I can I tell something of Caitanya’s pastimes.

171 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. According to the Anubhāṣya: the devotee in form is Śrī Gaurāṅga, who tastes His own sweetness; the devotee in essence (in the form of His brother) is Śrī Nityānanda; the devotee-avatāra is Śrī Advaita; the one called a devotee is Śrīvāsa and others, established in śānta, dāsya and the other rasas; the potency is Gadādhara, Svarūpa Dāmodara, Rāmānanda and others. Chapter 8

An Account of the Vaiṣṇavas’ Command to Compose the Book

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. In the eighth chapter the greatness of Śrī Caitanya and Nityānanda is described in this way: even if a person chants the name of Kṛṣṇa birth after birth, he does not obtain the treasure of prema as long as offenses against the holy name remain in him. From this one must understand that the sāttvika-vikāras (spiritual transformations) and other signs shown by one who offends the name are mere pretense. But whoever takes the names of Caitanya and Nityānanda without duplicity and expresses joy — the two Lords directly free his heart from offenses, and then, when he chants Kṛṣṇa's name, love awakens in him. Śrī Vṛndāvana dāsa Ṭhākura had noted the final pastimes of Mahāprabhu only briefly in his Śrī Caitanya-bhāgavata, and they remained to be described. Therefore, at the order of the Vaiṣṇavas living in Śrī Vṛndāvana, and after receiving the garland of command from Śrīla Madana-mohana, Kavirāja Gosvāmī composed this book.

By Gaura's will even a wholly unfit person becomes fit —

1 I worship Lord Caitanya-deva, by whose will even this dull fool has suddenly been set to dance so wondrously on the stage of writing.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow down to Bhagavān Caitanyadeva. By His will I, a fool like a painted puppet, have suddenly begun the dance of writing this book.

Anubhāṣya.

yad-icchayā (by whose [yat = yasya] will, that is, Caitanyadeva's) ayam (this one, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa) jaḍo 'pi (though like one who is dull and insensible) lekha-raṅge (in the play of composing a book) prasabham (suddenly) citram (wonderfully) nartyate (is made to dance), taṁ kṛpāmayaṁ bhagavantam caitanya-devam ahaṁ vande (I bow down).

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Gauracandra! Glory, glory to Nityānanda, full of the highest bliss!

3 Glory, glory to Advaita Ācārya, glory to the all-merciful! Glory, glory to the noble-hearted Gadādhara Paṇḍita!

4 Glory, glory to Śrīvāsa and to all the devotees! Bowing low, I worship the feet of them all.

5 By remembering them the mute become poets, the lame cross mountains and the blind see the stars.

To disregard the greatness of the Pañca-tattva and worship Gaura or Kṛṣṇa while seeing Them as separate is a grave offense —

6 The learning of scholars who do not accept all this is no more than the croaking of frogs.

7 Whoever practises devotion to Kṛṣṇa yet does not accept all this receives no mercy from Kṛṣṇa and reaches no goal.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“All this”: one who serves Kṛṣṇa without accepting this Pañca-tattva does not receive Kṛṣṇa's mercy.

Anubhāṣya.

“Tāre”: to him.

8 Long ago Jarāsandha and other kings followed the Vedic dharma and worshipped Viṣṇu.

*Devotion to Gaura without devotion to Kṛṣṇa, and devotion to Kṛṣṇa without devotion to Gaura, are non-devotion (abhakti) —*

9 But they did not accept Kṛṣṇa, and so we regard them as demons; and whoever does not accept Caitanya, we know, is a demon just the same.

Anubhāṣya.

Jarāsandha and others abandoned the worship of Śrī Kṛṣṇa — the Supreme Truth, Viṣṇu, the original form (svayaṁ-rūpa) — out of hatred or indifference toward Him. They worshipped Viṣṇu with Vedic mantras, but even that worship ended in nothing but demoniac dharma. In the same way, when the jīva forgets his nature as a minute particle of spirit (aṇu-cid-dharma), that is, his servitude to Caitanya, his attempt to worship Viṣṇu is also nothing but a calamitous, demoniac dharma — that is, non-Vaiṣṇavism.

*The reason for the Lord's pastime of sannyāsa —*

10 "If they do not accept Me, all people will be lost." For this reason the Lord, His heart melting with mercy, accepted sannyāsa.

11 "Even if they bow to Me thinking Me an ordinary sannyāsī, their misery will be cut away and they will find deliverance."

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Caitanyacandra is a Reality nondifferent from the truth of Śrī Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa. Out of ignorance some people equated the pastimes of Śrī Gaurasundara with their own material attachments, full of the desire for enjoyment, and so they could not understand Him. Considering their predicament, Śrī Gaurahari Himself, before the eyes of the world, accepted the dharma of a renunciant (yati-dharma) and thus showed mercy to foolish people.

To lack devotion to the supremely magnanimous Gaura is a demoniac disposition —

12 Whoever does not worship Caitanya, so full of mercy, is counted among the asuras, even if he is the greatest of men.

Anubhāṣya.

"O jīva, worship Kṛṣṇa alone!" — such is the mercy of Śrī Caitanyacandra. Whoever cannot even perceive it is certainly an asura, a non-Vaiṣṇava devoid of devotion to Viṣṇu, however much worldly people may honor him as the best in the world. And if one abandons the worship of Kṛṣṇa and worships Caitanya, Śrī Caitanya's mercy is not upon him: such worship is imaginary, born of Kali. The same holds for one who follows the godless smārtas or the society of pañcopāsakas (worshippers of five deities) and strives to worship Viṣṇu for some petty, perishable self-interest. He may reject one of the six tattvas whose very self is Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and show faith or worship to another. Or he may consider Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Prabhu merely the best of mortal beings, separate from Kṛṣṇa, and so have no faith in Gaura's name, Gaura's mantra and Gaura's śakti. This too is demoniac dharma — imagination born of Kali and opposed to the truth.

Kavirāja Gosvāmī's earnest appeal to all to worship Gaura and Nityānanda —

13 Therefore, with arms upraised, I say again: give up false argument and worship Caitanya and Nityānanda!

Instruction even to the logician who holds to direct perception and inference —

14 But a logician may say: "Logic is the proof. Whatever the science of logic establishes is what deserves worship."

Gaura's mercy is more wonderful than any other mercy —

15 Then weigh the mercy of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya; weigh it well, and your heart will be struck with wonder.

Anubhāṣya.

By the power of their own narrow, pleasure-seeking intelligence, people imagine one ideal of mercy or another. But the mercy of Śrī Caitanyacandra is not of that kind.

After studying the science of logic (tarka-śāstra), a person comes to think that no other faculty equals reasoning (tarka) in the power to determine the nature of a thing and to uncover the truth. So, falling into the hands of reasoning, the jīva gives it the place of his sole patron and protector. But if an intelligent jīva carefully examines the foundation on which reasoning stands, he can understand how weak, how incapable and how deficient his worldly senses of knowledge are when it comes to grasping the subject of Bhagavān. Often reasoning merely settles on untruth as a truth established by argument; and so, as the fruit of false argument (kutarka), one obtains birth as a jackal.

Even so, there are people ready to determine the true nature of things relying chiefly on direct perception (pratyakṣa) and inference (anumāna). Kavirāja Gosvāmī addresses them too. He says: let those who have sight and the power of judgment, who have experienced every picture of every kind of mercy or have gained the ability and the opportunity to see them, make a list of all kinds of mercy and compare them with the mercy of Śrī Gaurahari. Then they will know that a mercy like that of Śrī Gaurahari is found in no created thing, nor in the creator, nor in the series of avatāras, nor even in the source of the avatāras — in Kṛṣṇa. The mercy of Gaurahari, the embodiment of magnanimity (udāra-vigraha), certainly brings more wonder and amazement than any other.

As long as offenses remain, hearing and chanting about Kṛṣṇa countless times is in vain —

16 One may hear and chant for many births, and still not obtain the treasure of love for Kṛṣṇa’s feet.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

A person burdened with the ten kinds of offenses against the holy name may hear and chant for many births, yet he never obtains the treasure of prema at Kṛṣṇa's feet.

Anubhāṣya.

If someone takes up the devotion called hearing and chanting without taking shelter of Śrī Caitanya's feet, he has no prospect of attaining love for Kṛṣṇa even in many births. According to the teaching of Śrī Caitanyacandra, devotees are lower than a blade of grass and more tolerant than a tree; free from pride themselves, they honor others and are not occupied with any worldly conceit. Such persons become free from the grip of the ten offenses, are able to take Kṛṣṇa's name constantly, and attain prema.

The meaning is this. The jīva who has turned away from the service of Kṛṣṇa seeks to gratify the material senses or to achieve some perishable self-interest. He imagines a difference between Kṛṣṇa's name and Kṛṣṇa, the possessor of the name — between the word that designates (vācaka) and the One designated (vācya) — as if it were the label of some object perceptible to the material senses, or ordinary material letters. He does not know himself to be the eternal servant of Śrī Nāma-Prabhu. Such a jīva may utter the name and so forth with offenses countless times, yet he will not be able to attain kṛṣṇa-prema, which is attained through pure sādhana-bhakti. The words of the Padma Purāṇa quoted in the Hari-bhakti-vilāsa (11.289): “If even one name [of the Lord] is on a person's tongue, or has entered the path of his memory, or has reached his ears — whether pronounced correctly or incorrectly, so long as it is not broken — it certainly delivers him. But if, O brāhmaṇa, it is cast amid [concern for] body, wealth, followers, greed and godlessness, it does not quickly bear fruit here.” And further: “Therefore the name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and all that is His cannot be grasped by the senses. Only when the tongue and the other senses are turned toward service does it reveal itself upon them.” (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Pūrva-vibhāga 2.234)

Prema-bhakti* for Kṛṣṇa is extremely rare (words of the Tantra quoted in the Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu 1.1.36) —*

17 “Liberation is easily won through knowledge, and enjoyment through the merit of sacrifices and other pious works; but devotion to Hari is hard to attain even by thousands of spiritual practices.” (Tantra; also Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 1.1.36)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

By the endeavor of knowledge one easily attains liberation, and by the merit of sacrifices and the like one easily gains the enjoyments of heaven; but even by thousands of practices one does not easily attain hari-bhakti. The meaning is this: besides practice there is something more — service to the pure devotee and knowledge of one's relationship with the Supreme Truth (sambandha-jñāna). By taking shelter of this one attains hari-bhakti.

*Until the jīva has bhāva, or rati, Kṛṣṇa grants only liberation; when He sees rati, He grants prema-bhakti —*

18 Kṛṣṇa may slip away from a devotee by giving him enjoyment or liberation, but devotion He never gives: He keeps it hidden.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

If the devotees hope for worldly enjoyment (bhukti) and liberation (mukti), Kṛṣṇa keeps the truth of pure devotion hidden from them; He gives them bhukti and mukti and so is free of them.

"Chuṭe": leaves, goes away.

*Without a relationship of rasa with Kṛṣṇa, one obtains liberation alone (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 5, Chapter 6, verse 18) —*

19 (Śukadeva said:) "O King, Mukunda is the master and guru of you Pāṇḍavas and of the Yadus; He is your worshipped Deity, your dearest friend and the head of your family, and at times He even becomes your servant. So it is, dear one; yet to those who worship Him the Lord gives liberation, but bhakti-yoga He never gives." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 5.6.18)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Nārada said: "O child Yudhiṣṭhira! For you and for the Yadus, Bhagavān Kṛṣṇacandra is sometimes master, guru, worshipable Deity, dear friend, head of the family, and at times even a servant." Here one should understand this: to those who worship Him, Mukunda easily grants "liberation"; but when He sees that a devotee has some firm skill in worship (niṣṭhā-cāturya), He gives that devotee "bhakti-yoga."[2]

Anubhāṣya.

The words of Śukadeva to Parīkṣit, spoken while describing the life of Ṛṣabhadeva:

rājan (O king), bhagavān mukundaḥ (Śrī Kṛṣṇa) bhavatām (of you, the Pāṇḍavas) yadūnāṁ ca patiḥ (the supreme master and protector), guruḥ (the instructor), daivam (the worshipable Deity), priyaḥ (dear as one's very self), kula-patiḥ; kva ca (and at times — in embassies and other errands) vaḥ (of you, the Pāṇḍavas) kiṅkaraḥ (one who carries out orders) ca. aṅga (O dear one), evam astu (let it be so; [yet this Bhagavān]) bhajatām (to people who worship Him, that is, to devotees with selfish desires) muktiṁ dadāti, karhicit (ever) ([to them]) bhakti-yogaṁ na dadāti sma.

*But in the pastime of Gaurasundara, the embodiment of magnanimity, prema-bhakti is given to all, down to the most fallen —*

20 Such love Śrī Caitanya gave everywhere, even to Jagāi and Mādhāi — what then of others?

Anubhāṣya.

Even sinful and wicked people like Jagāi and Mādhāi, once they receive Gaura's mercy, will give up sin and wickedness and one day attain prema for Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

*The pastime in which Mahāprabhu, without discrimination, anywhere at all, distributes His causeless, hidden prema —*

21 The independent Lord gave away prema, that hidden storehouse, to anyone at all, and made no distinctions.

Love for Kṛṣṇa awakens only through service to Gaura and Nitāi —

22 See it even today: whoever takes the name of Caitanya is overwhelmed with love for Kṛṣṇa, his body thrilling and his eyes streaming with tears.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

There is one wonderful feature of the avatāra of Śrī Caitanya. To anyone who comes near Him He gives the hidden storehouse of prema, without considering whether that person is worthy or not, for He is the independent Lord. Consider also that Caitanyacandra has descended as the guru of the whole world. Whether one is an offender or free from offense, if he surrenders and calls out to Him, "O Gaurāṅga! O Kṛṣṇa Caitanya!" he is overwhelmed by the thrill and the tears of love for Kṛṣṇa.

23 At the name "Nityānanda" love for Kṛṣṇa awakens; every limb is shaken, and a Ganges of tears flows.

While offenses remain, the holy name of Kṛṣṇa, worshipped by the liberated, does not arise —

24 The name of Kṛṣṇa takes account of offences: an offender may say "Kṛṣṇa", but love works no change in him.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Offenses against the holy name are listed in the Padma Purāṇa: (1) blasphemy of the saints; (2) thinking that the names and so on of Śiva are independent of Śrī Viṣṇu; (3) disregard for the guru; (4) blasphemy of the śruti and of the scriptures that follow it; (5) thinking that the glorification of Hari's name is mere exaggeration (arthavāda); (6) interpreting the name in some other way; (7) inclining to sin on the strength of the name; (8) thinking the name equal to other auspicious acts; (9) instructing the name to those who are faithless and have turned away from the Lord; (10) having no love for the name even after hearing of its glory. (For a detailed explanation see the Anubhāṣya.) As long as these ten offenses remain, Kṛṣṇa does not show mercy. In an offender, Kṛṣṇa's name does not produce genuine sāttvika-vikāras and the other signs.

Anubhāṣya.

The original verses on the ten offenses against the holy name: "(1) Blasphemy of the saints is the greatest offense against the name: how can it tolerate the reviling of those through whom it has gained fame? (2) Whoever here sees with his mind all the qualities, names and so on of the auspicious (śiva) Śrī Viṣṇu as separate, truly harms himself with Hari's name.[3] (3) Disregard for the guru; (4) blasphemy of the śruti and the śāstras; (5) the view that [the praise of the name] is arthavāda; (6) imagined interpretations of Hari's name. (7) One who, relying on the strength of the name, is inclined to sin is not purified by any yamas (restraints). (8) To consider [the name] equal to all auspicious acts — dharma, vows, renunciation, fire sacrifices and the rest — is also negligence. (9) Instruction given to one who lacks faith, has turned away [from the Lord] and does not wish to hear is an offense against the auspicious name. (10) And a man who, even after hearing of the glory of the name, has no love for it, absorbed in 'I' and 'mine,' also commits an offense."

(1) Blasphemy of the saints is the greatest offense before Śrī Nāma. Through the saints wholly devoted to the name, the glory of Kṛṣṇa's name becomes known in the world, that is, it is preached. How then will Śrī Nāma-Prabhu tolerate blasphemy of these saints? Therefore blasphemy of sādhus is an offense against the name. (2) Someone in this world sees with his intellect a difference among the name, form, qualities, pastimes and so on of the all-auspicious Śrī Viṣṇu. That is, he thinks that the name, form, qualities and pastimes of Śrī Viṣṇu are different from Śrī Viṣṇu, the possessor of the name, as is the case with material things. Or he regards Śiva and the other gods as rivals and sees them as independent of Śrī Viṣṇu or different from Him. Such an offense against the name, committed under the guise of the name, certainly does him harm. (3) Envy (asūyā) toward the guru, the knower of the truth of the name, from regarding him as material and mortal; (4) blasphemy of the Vedas, the Sātvata Purāṇas and the other scriptures; (5) considering the glory of Hari's name to be exaggerated praise, and (6) thinking the names of Bhagavān to be imagination — these are offenses against the name. (7) If someone, relying on the strength of the name, is inclined to sinful conduct, that offender is certainly not purified by many yamas, many niyamas, or by the artificial methods of yoga — dhyāna, dhāraṇā and the rest. (8) To consider the chanting of the transcendental name equal or similar to material auspicious acts — dharma, vows, renunciation, fire sacrifices and the like — is also inattention, or negligence (pramāda); this too is an offense against the name. (9) To instruct one who lacks faith or is unwilling to hear the name is an offense before the all-auspicious Śrī Nāma. (10) Whoever, even after hearing the wonderful glory of the name, thinks in bodily terms of “I” and “mine” and shows no love or regard for chanting and hearing Śrī Nāma is also an offender against the name.

*Without the desire to please Kṛṣṇa, the emotion in an offender's stony heart is not pure — it is merely feigned (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 2, Chapter 3, verse 24) —*

25 “Alas, that heart is hard as stone which does not change when the names of Hari are chanted; for when the heart is changed, tears fill the eyes and the hairs of the body stand on end in joy.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 2.3.24)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

If, when a person takes Hari's name, his heart does not change, his eyes do not fill with tears and his hair does not stand on end, his heart is made of stone. That is, grave offenses have hardened his heart, and it does not melt at the name.

Anubhāṣya.

The sages were hearing from the lips of Śrī Sūta the conversation between Śrī Śuka and Parīkṣit and wanted to hear more and more. Condemning people unwilling to hear hari-kathā, Śaunaka said to Śrī Sūta:

yat hṛdayaṁ gṛhyamāṇaiḥ (even while they are being chanted) hari-nāma-dheyaiḥ na vikriyeta, bata (alas!) tat idaṁ hṛdayam aśma-sāram (that whose substance [sāra], because of offenses against the name, is like stone, like a piece of rock — that is, it is hard). atha yadā vikāro (occurs), ([then]) netre jalaṁ (tears) [and] gātra-ruheṣu harṣaḥ (the hair stands on end) (occurs). (In deeply grave mahā-bhāgavatas the heart melts at the names of Hari, yet outward tears, thrills and so on are not seen. But in those whose hearts are slippery (picchila-citta), who merely imitate by artificial practice and long for material prestige, feigned tears, thrills and the like are seen outwardly, though there is not even a semblance of sattva (sattvābhāsa). Therefore in kaniṣṭha-adhikārīs, even when they chant the name many times, the artificial melting of the heart, owing to their inclination toward sense enjoyment, is merely a sign of offense against the name. So says the Sandarbha.[4])

See the Gauḍīya-bhāṣya on the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam: the commentary of Śrīla Viśvanātha Cakravartī, the Tathya and the Vivṛti.

The self-manifest Nāma-Prabhu rises on the tongue and bestows love for Kṛṣṇa —

26 A single name of Kṛṣṇa destroys all sins and reveals devotion, from which love is born.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
He reveals the sādhana-bhakti that awakens prema.

*The signs of kṛṣṇa-prema, the fruit of the pure name —*

27 When love dawns, its transformations appear: sweat and trembling, the hairs standing on end, a faltering voice and flowing tears.

28 Worldly existence ends without effort, and one is given the service of Kṛṣṇa: such is the wealth that a single name of Kṛṣṇa brings.

For an offender against the name, countless hearing and chanting is fruitless —

29–30 If one takes such a name of Kṛṣṇa again and again, and still no love comes and no tears flow, then I know that his offences are many: the seed of Kṛṣṇa's name does not sprout in him.

Gaura and Nitāi, and Their names, do not judge offenses —

31 With Caitanya and Nityānanda there is no such reckoning of offences: as soon as one takes Their names They give love, and streams of tears flow.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

If someone takes shelter of Caitanya and Nityānanda with faith, all his past offenses are washed away in a moment; and as soon as Kṛṣṇa's name rises on his lips, the Lord gives him prema.

Anubhāṣya.

Those who have taken shelter of Śrī Caitanya and Nityānanda chant the pure name without duplicity, as the verse "tṛṇād api" teaches, and tears of love are seen to flow from them.

The name of Kṛṣṇa judges offenses; the name of Gaura and Nityānanda does not. If an offender chants Kṛṣṇa's name, he never obtains the fruit of the name, kṛṣṇa-prema. But one who chants the name of Gaura and Nityānanda, even while he remains an offender, is freed from his offenses as he goes on chanting and obtains the fruit of the name. The reasoning and conclusion here are as follows. A sādhaka who has turned away from Kṛṣṇa goes to Gaura and Nityānanda in order to turn toward Kṛṣṇa. The name of Kṛṣṇa is uttered by one who has attained perfection through practice, is free from anarthas and is turned toward Kṛṣṇa; as long as anarthas remain, it never gives its fruit, kṛṣṇa-prema. Gaura and Nityānanda can be served even by jīvas who have anarthas. Therefore, for an unfortunate jīva, serving Them is more necessary than serving Kṛṣṇa. If a sādhaka who has not received instruction thinks himself perfected and sets out to serve Kṛṣṇa's name, only anarthas come to him. But if, in the worship of Nitāi-Gaura, he does not pretend to be perfected and approaches the two Teachers, the gurus of the world, even while burdened with anarthas, They free such persons from anarthas and let them realize the true nature of Their svayaṁ-rūpa and svayaṁ-prakāśa. Then knowledge of the jīva's own true nature (svarūpa) dawns in him.

The name of Kṛṣṇa and the name of Gaura are both nondifferent from the possessor of the name. If someone considers Kṛṣṇa lesser or narrower than Gaura, that must be understood as the work of ignorance (avidyā). In truth, judged by what the jīva needs, chanting the names of Śrī Gaura and Nityānanda is more beneficial for him. Śrī Gaura and Nityānanda are magnanimous, and within that magnanimity They are sweet. Kṛṣṇa's magnanimity extends only to the liberated, the perfected and those surrendered to Him. But in the stream of Gaura-Nityānanda's magnanimity even an offending jīva with anarthas is freed from the grip of offenses born of the desire for enjoyment and attains the lotus feet of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa.

There is no other path than the worship of the supremely magnanimous Gaura

32 The Lord is independent and supremely magnanimous; without worshipping Him there is never any deliverance.

Anubhāṣya.

“The worship of Śrī Caitanya” does not mean the worship of a Gaura other than Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, giving up Kṛṣṇa. In such imagined worship, which is service to māyā, the sweetness of kṛṣṇa-prema is not present. There are people who override the ācāryas — Śrī Svarūpa, Rūpa, Raghunātha and the others, Śrī Caitanya's dearest intimate associates — and think that by their invented efforts they have worshipped Gaura. Such people are never delivered. When their outrages, conceived by māyā, are directed at the form of Śrī Gaurāṅga, nondifferent from Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, great offense, and with it their descent toward hell, quickly increase. Then, trying to find fault with the devotees devoted to the service of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, they offend the feet of the ācāryas headed by Śrī Rūpa. Thus they reveal that, though with their lips they call Śrī Gaurāṅga “the source of the avatāras” (avatārī), in their minds they regard Him merely as a sādhu, like other preachers of passing, mind-made religions (mano-dharma).

*The jīva's highest good lies in hearing the Caitanya-bhāgavata of* Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa, the avatāra of Vyāsa —

33 O foolish people, hear the Caitanya-maṅgala, and from it you will know all the glory of Caitanya!

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Caitanya-maṅgala" is the Caitanya-bhāgavata of Śrī Vṛndāvana dāsa Ṭhākura, who lived in the village of Denuḍa (Mantreśvara police station, Barddhamāna district). Earlier that book was called Caitanya-maṅgala. There is a tradition that when Locana dāsa Ṭhākura began to sing his own Caitanya-maṅgala, Vṛndāvana dāsa Ṭhākura changed the name of his book.

34 Veda-vyāsa told the pastimes of Kṛṣṇa in the Bhāgavata; the Vyāsa of Caitanya's pastimes is Vṛndāvana dāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Vṛndāvana dāsa: see "The Life of the Ṭhākura" in the introduction to the Śrī Caitanya-bhāgavata edited by the author of this commentary.

35 Vṛndāvana dāsa composed the Caitanya-maṅgala, and by hearing it all that is inauspicious is destroyed.

*The Caitanya-bhāgavata is a mine of the glory of Gaura and Nitāi and of the conclusions of devotion —*

36 In it one comes to know the glory of Caitanya and Nitāi, and in it I come to know the conclusions of devotion to Kṛṣṇa to their farthest limit.

Anubhāṣya.

The Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam is the original source of the conclusions of devotion (bhakti-siddhānta). But it is very extensive, and many are unable to grasp its essence. Śrī Vṛndāvana dāsa Ṭhākura recorded that essence in his own Śrī Caitanya-bhāgavata. Only those who know the conclusions of devotion to Kṛṣṇa are able to understand properly the glory of Śrī Nitāi-Gaura. All books of devotion declare at the top of their voice that without bhakti-siddhānta Bhakti-devī cannot be served.

37 He understood the essence of all the conclusions of devotion in the Bhāgavata, drew it out and set it down in his book.

*Hearing the Caitanya-bhāgavata makes even the wicked good —*

38 If even an unbeliever or a yavana hears the Caitanya-maṅgala, he becomes a great Vaiṣṇava at that very moment.

Its unearthly composition —

39 No human being could compose so blessed a book: it is Śrī Caitanya who speaks through the mouth of Vṛndāvana dāsa.

By a single book he delivered the world —

40 Millions of obeisances at the feet of Vṛndāvana dāsa! By writing such a book he delivered the world.

Śrī Vṛndāvana dāsa, the son of Nārāyaṇī, the recipient of the Lord's mercy —

41 Nārāyaṇī partook of Caitanya's remnants, and from her womb Śrī Vṛndāvana dāsa was born.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Nārāyaṇī was the daughter of Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita's brother. As a child she used to receive the remnants of Mahāprabhu's meal at the end of kīrtana.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Kavi-karṇapūra writes about Śrī Nārāyaṇī Devī in the Śrī Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā: "The sister of Ambikā, named Śrīla Kilimbikā, who ate the remnants of Kṛṣṇa's food, is considered to be this Nārāyaṇī." Ambikā is Śrī Kṛṣṇa's nurse, and her sister is Kilimbikā. She used to eat Kṛṣṇa's remnants. She herself, in the avatāra of Śrī Gaura, is "Nārāyaṇī Devī."

Ṭhākura Śrī Vṛndāvana is the son born of Nārāyaṇī, the niece of Śrīvāsa. His mother, the Ṭhākurāṇī, ate the remnants of Śrī Gaurasundara's meals (vighasāśī), that is, she received His mercy. The Ṭhākura Mahāśaya is known through her. And since naming one's forefathers is not needed to introduce a Vaiṣṇava, they have been left out here.

By describing the life of Gaura he delivered the world —

42 How wonderful is his description of Caitanya's deeds! By hearing it the three worlds were purified.

*Auspiciousness lies only in worshipping Nitāi-Gaura; hence the appeal to the jīvas —*

43 Therefore, O people, worship Caitanya and Nityānanda! The misery of worldly life will be cut away, and you will attain the bliss of love.

*Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana described Gaura's pastimes first briefly, as sūtras, and then in detail —*

44 Vṛndāvana dāsa composed the Caitanya-maṅgala, and in it he told all the pastimes of Caitanya.

45 First he set down all the pastimes in a brief summary, and afterwards described them at length.

46 The pastimes of Caitanya-candra are endless and boundless, and as he went on describing them the book grew long.

*But fearing the book would grow too large, he did not wish to expand the sūtras —*

47 Seeing its length, he grew somewhat hesitant, and some of the pastimes held in the summary he did not describe.

Absorbed in describing Nitāi's pastimes, he left the description of Gaura's final pastimes incomplete —

48 He became absorbed in describing the pastimes of Nityānanda, and Caitanya's final pastimes were left untold.

The residents of Vṛndāvana wish to hear of Gaura's final pastimes —

49 The devotees of Vṛndāvana longed to hear the account of all those pastimes.

A description of the service of Śrī Govinda on a jeweled throne beneath the wish-fulfilling tree —

50 In Vṛndāvana, beneath a wish-fulfilling tree, stands a golden temple; there is the great Yogapīṭha, and in it a jewelled throne.

51 On it the son of the king of Vraja is ever seated: His name is Śrī Govinda-deva, the very God of love.

52 There He is served like a king in many wonderful ways, with divine offerings, divine garments and ornaments.

53 A thousand servants attend Him constantly; that service could not be described even with a thousand mouths.

A description of the virtues of Śrī Haridāsa Paṇḍita, the superintendent of His service —

54 The superintendent of that service is Śrī Haridāsa Paṇḍita, whose fame and virtues are known throughout the world.

Anubhāṣya.

Paṇḍita Haridāsa: his gurudeva was Śrī Ananta Ācārya, a disciple of Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosvāmī. See verses 59–65 below and the Anubhāṣya on them.

55 He is gentle, patient, serene, generous and grave, sweet in speech and sweet in conduct, and steady beyond measure.

56 He honours everyone and works for the good of all; his heart is free of crookedness, envy and malice.

57 The fifty good qualities of Kṛṣṇa that are shared in part by others all dwell in his person.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa's general good qualities are fifty. These fifty qualities are described in the verse "ayaṁ netā suramyāṅgaḥ…" ("This Hero has a most beautiful body…") and following (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Dakṣiṇa-vibhāga, First Wave).

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 5, Chapter 18, verse 12)*

58 "In one whose devotion to the Lord is free of desire all the gods dwell, and with them every virtue. But how can great qualities be found in one who is not devoted to Hari? Driven by his desires, his mind is forever running outward after what is passing." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 5.18.12)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

In one who has exclusive devotion (kevalā bhakti) to Śrī Kṛṣṇa, all the gods reside with all good qualities. But the mind of one devoid of devotion to Hari always runs toward false, external objects. Great qualities are impossible for him.

Anubhāṣya.

Describing the qualities of the great devotee Prahlāda, Śrī Śukadeva says to Mahārāja Parīkṣit:

yasya (of which devotee) bhagavati (for Śrī Viṣṇu) akiñcanā (free from selfish desire) bhaktiḥ (the inclination to serve in a way favorable to Him) asti (there is), tatra (in that devotee) surāḥ (all the gods) sarvaiḥ guṇaiḥ (with the whole multitude of good qualities) samāsate (fully reside, dwell eternally). asati (in the transient happiness of sense objects) mano-rathena (by the mind's desires) bahiḥ dhāvataḥ (of one bent on enjoyment) harau abhaktasya (of one not devoted to Hari — one who follows the path of other desires, karma, jñāna or yoga; and so of a person attached to home and the like, since for him devotion to Hari is impossible) kutaḥ mahad-guṇāḥ (the qualities of the great — knowledge, renunciation and the rest, or the multitudes of excellent virtues; supply "can arise").

Who Paṇḍita Haridāsa was, and his guru-paramparā —

59 Ananta Ācārya was the disciple of Paṇḍita Gosāñi; his very body was made of love for Kṛṣṇa, and he was generous and noble in every way.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Paṇḍita Gosāñi" is Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita.

60 Who could recount his endless virtues? And this Haridāsa Paṇḍita is his dear disciple.

Anubhāṣya.
Sudevī-sakhī, one of the eight sakhīs, is in the avatāra of Gaura (1) Śrī Ananta Ācārya, as stated in the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 165): "Ananta Ācārya Gosvāmī was formerly Sudevī in Vraja." The famous "Gaṅgāmātā Maṭha" in Śrī Puruṣottama is one branch of his line. In the guru-paramparā of that maṭha he is called "Vinoda Mañjarī." (2) His disciple is Śrī Haridāsa Paṇḍita Gosvāmī, also called "Śrī Raghu Gopāla" — Śrī Rāsa Mañjarī. His disciple was (3) Śrī Lakṣmīpriyā (the aunt of Gaṅgāmātā, the wife of her maternal uncle). (4) Śrī Gaṅgāmātā was the daughter of the king of Puṭiyā. She brought the Deity "Śrī Rasika-rāya" from Kṛṣṇa Miśra of Jaipur and established His service in Puruṣottama, in the house of Sārvabhauma. (5) Śrī Vanamālī, (6) Śrī Bhagavān dāsa (of Bengal), (7) Śrī Madhusūdana dāsa (of Orissa), (8) Śrī Nīlāmbara dāsa, (9) Śrī Narottama dāsa, (10) Śrī Pītāmbara dāsa, (11) Śrī Mādhava dāsa, (12) his disciple — at present the mahānta of the Gaṅgāmātā Maṭha.

His attachment to Nitāi and Gaura —

61 His faith in Caitanya and Nityānanda is boundless, and the deeds of Caitanya fill him with the greatest joy.

Deep love for the Vaiṣṇavas —

62 He takes in the virtues of the Vaiṣṇavas and never sees their faults; with body, mind and words he seeks to please them.

*He reads the Caitanya-bhāgavata in the assembly of Vaiṣṇavas —*

63 He listens constantly to the Caitanya-maṅgala, and by his grace all the Vaiṣṇavas hear it too.

64 Like the full moon he lights up the assembly with his words, and with the nectar of his virtues he increases the joy of the Vaiṣṇavas.

The order to the author to describe Gaura's final pastimes —

65 Out of his great mercy he gave me the order to describe Gaurāṅga's final pastimes.

Separate introductions of the devotees who gave the same order —

66 Govinda Gosāñi, the disciple of Kāśīśvara Gosāñi, is the dear servant of Govinda, and there is none to equal him.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Kāśīśvara (Paṇḍita) Gosvāmī was a disciple of Śrī Īśvara Purī and the son of Vāsudeva Bhaṭṭācārya of the Vātsya gotra, of the Kāñjilāla Kānu family. His family title was Caudhurī. His nephew, his sister's son, was Śrī Rudra Paṇḍita of Vallabhapura (see verse 106).[5] In the village of Cātarā, one mile from Śrīrāmapura station, there are Deities of Śrī Rādhā-Govinda and Śrī Gaurāṅga established by him. He was very strong: every day, when Śrīman Mahāprabhu went to see Jagannātha, Kāśīśvara walked ahead, pushed the crowd aside and cleared the way for Him (see Ādi 10.138–142; Madhya 12.207; 13.89). In Puruṣottama he distributed prasāda to the devotees after kīrtana. On his meeting with Mahāprabhu see Madhya 10.134, 185.

The present superintendent of the service is Śrī Śivacandra Caudhurī, of the line of Kāśīśvara Gosvāmī Prabhu's brother. Here nine seers of rice are allotted daily for the service. From of old there were lands near the village set aside for the service of the Deity, but the descendants of his brother lost all that property in the courts, and the service is now poorly provided for. In the Śrī Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verses 137 and 166) it is said that he who in Vṛndāvana was Kṛṣṇa's servant "Bhṛṅgāra," or she who was "Śaśirekhā," is Kāśīśvara in the avatāra of Gaura (?).

67 Yādavācārya Gosāñi, the companion of Śrī Rūpa, takes the greatest delight in Caitanya's deeds.

68 Bhūgarbha Gosāñi, the disciple of Paṇḍita Gosāñi, has nothing on his lips but talk of Gaura.

69 His disciples are Caitanya-dāsa, the priest of Govinda, Mukundānanda Cakravartī and Kṛṣṇadāsa, full of love.

Anubhāṣya.
The disciples of Bhūgarbha (Ādi 12.81) were Caitanya dāsa, Mukundānanda and Kṛṣṇadāsa. On Śivānanda see Ādi 12.87.

70 Śivānanda Cakravartī, the disciple of Ācārya Gosāñi, holds Śrī Caitanya and Nityānanda ever in his heart.[1]

71 And all the other devotees who live in Vṛndāvana wished to hear the final pastimes.

72 In their compassion they all gave me the order, and at their word I write, casting off all shame.

At the order of the Vaiṣṇavas he reverently asks permission of Śrī Madana-Gopāla —

73 Having received the Vaiṣṇavas' order, I went with an anxious heart to Madana-gopāla to beg for His order too.

As soon as he made his request through the priest Gosāñi dāsa, the garland of command fell from Madana-Gopāla before all the Vaiṣṇavas —

74 When I had seen Him, I bowed at His feet; the pūjārī Gosāñi-dāsa was serving His feet.

75 When I begged at the Lord's feet for His order, the garland slipped from His neck and fell.

76 All the Vaiṣṇavas cried out "Hari!", and Gosāñi-dāsa brought the garland and placed it around my neck.

Receiving the garland of command, he set out to write this book —

77 Receiving the garland of His order, I was filled with joy, and then and there I began this book.

Madana-mohana Himself is wholly the doer and inspirer of the book's composition —

78 It is Madana-mohana who makes me write this book; my writing is like the recitation of a parrot.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

That I have written this Caitanya-caritāmṛta is by the inspiration of Śrī Madana-mohana. Therefore, like a parrot reciting what it was taught, I have no merit of my own.

Thus ends the eighth chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

79 I write what Madana-gopāla makes me write, as a magician makes a wooden doll dance.

The service of Madana-mohana in the author's guru-paramparā —

80 My family Deity is Madana-mohana, whose servants are Raghunātha, Rūpa and Sanātana.

As befits a Vaiṣṇava, the author regards Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa as his guru and bows to him —

81 Meditating on the lotus feet of Vṛndāvana dāsa and taking his permission, I write what brings blessing.

82 In the pastimes of Caitanya, Vṛndāvana dāsa is Vyāsa; without his mercy no one else can reveal them.

Words of humility —

83 I am foolish, low and insignificant, greedy for the objects of the senses; it is by the strength of the Vaiṣṇavas' order that I make so bold.

Anubhāṣya.
Thus ends the eighth chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

84 This is the strength of the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Raghunātha, by remembering whom every desire is fulfilled.

85 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. Ācārya Gosāñi — by the context (8.59–60), Ananta Ācārya; in Ādi 12.87 Śivānanda Cakravartī is counted in the branch of Gadādhara Paṇḍita. ↩
2. The verse translation reads differently: the verse is given there as the words of Śukadeva Gosvāmī to Mahārāja Parīkṣit (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 5.6.18; so also in the Anubhāṣya), and it says that the Lord gives bhakti-yoga to no one. ↩
3. Śivasya can also be read as "of Śiva"; it then refers to one who sees the names and qualities of Śiva as different from Śrī Viṣṇu, that is, as independent. In the explanation below Bhaktisiddhānta gives both readings. ↩
4. Apparently Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī's Krama-sandarbha on this verse. ↩
5. The edition does not name the chapter. ↩

Chapter 9

The Description of the Wish-fulfilling Tree of Bhakti

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. In the ninth chapter the author describes devotion as a tree and so reveals a mystery. He makes Viśvambhara Gaurāṅga the main tree and describes Him as the gardener of the tree of devotion and as the giver and enjoyer of its fruit. The planting of this fruit tree began in Śrī Navadvīpa-dhāma; later such gardens of the fruit of prema were extended to Puruṣottama, Vṛndāvana and other places. Śrī Mādhavendra Purī is the first sprout of this tree, and his disciple Śrī Īśvara Purī nourished that sprout. Mahāprabhu Caitanyadeva, though He is the gardener, by His inconceivable power also became the trunk of this tree. The nine sannyāsīs headed by Paramānanda Purī are its roots. Above the main trunk two more trunks arose, Śrī Advaita and Śrī Nityānanda. From these two trunks came forth branches and sub-branches of every kind, which encircled the world. The fruit of prema from this tree was given everywhere to everyone without distinction. Having planted the tree of devotion in this way, the Lord let the world taste its fruit and made the whole world mad. This description is an allegory (rūpaka).

By Gaura's mercy the impossible becomes possible —

1 I worship the glorious Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, the guru of the whole world, by whose mercy even a dog can easily swim across the great ocean.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow down to Kṛṣṇa Caitanyadeva, the guru of the world, by whose mercy even a dog can swim across the great ocean.

Anubhāṣya.

yasya (of Caitanyadeva) anukampayā (by the mercy) śvā (a dog) api mahābdhiṁ (the great ocean) sukhaṁ santaret (may swim across, reaching the other shore), taṁ jagad-gurum (the guru of the whole world, worthy of worship) śrīmat-kṛṣṇa-caitanya-devam (I) vande.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Gauracandra! Glory, glory to Advaita, and glory, glory to Nityānanda!

3 Glory, glory to Śrīvāsa and all the devotees of Gaura, whose remembrance fulfils every desire!

4 I remember also Śrī Rūpa, Sanātana, Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa, Śrī Jīva, Gopāla Bhaṭṭa and Raghunātha Dāsa.

5 By the mercy of them all I write of the pastimes and qualities of Śrī Caitanya. Whether I understand them or not, I do it for my own purification.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Āpana-śodhana": for one's own purification.

The gardener is Mahāprabhu Himself —

6 I take shelter of Śrī Caitanya, who is Himself the gardener and Himself the immortal tree of love for Kṛṣṇa, and who both gives away its fruits and enjoys them.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Caitanya Himself is the divine tree of prema, and He Himself is its gardener. I take shelter of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, who gives and enjoys the fruits of that tree.

Anubhāṣya.

yaḥ (Caitanyadeva) svayaṁ mālākāraḥ (the keeper of the garden), svayaṁ kṛṣṇa-premāmara-taruḥ (love for Kṛṣṇa itself, the immortal, imperishable tree, that is, the wish-fulfilling tree), tat-phalānāṁ (of the fruits of prema of that wish-fulfilling tree) dātā bhoktā [ca] ([Himself]), taṁ (in Caitanya — I) āśraye (take refuge).

*Why He became the gardener — to fulfill His position as the Lord of abhidheya, the means —*

7 The Lord said to Himself: "I bear the name Viśvambhara, 'He who fills the universe'. My name will be true if I fill the universe with love."

He lays out a garden of the fruits of devotion in Navadvīpa —

8 Thinking thus, the Lord took up the work of a gardener and began to lay out an orchard in Navadvīpa.

9 Bringing it to the earth, the gardener Śrī Caitanya planted the wish-fulfilling tree of bhakti and watered it with the water of His will.

Its first sprout — Śrī Mādhavendra Purī —

10 Glory to Śrī Mādhava Purī, brimming with love for Kṛṣṇa! He is the first sprout of the wish-fulfilling tree of bhakti.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Śrī Mādhava Purī" is Mādhavendra Purī. He was a famous sannyāsī in the sampradāya of Śrī Madhvācārya, and Śrī Caitanyadeva was the disciple of his disciple. Before him there was no sign of prema-bhakti in the Śrī Madhva-sampradāya. In his verse "ayi dīna-dayārdra nātha…" the teaching that Mahāprabhu later gave was present in seed form.

Growth in Īśvara Purī —

11 In the form of Śrī Īśvara Purī the sprout grew strong, and then the gardener, Śrī Caitanya Himself, became the trunk of the tree.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Īśvara Purī": Īśvara Purī, the mantra-guru of Mahāprabhu, was born in a brāhmaṇa family in Kumārahaṭṭa, that is, in the village of Hālisahara. He was a disciple of Mādhavendra Purī.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Īśvara Purī was born in a brāhmaṇa family in Kumārahaṭṭa (Hālisahara station on the E.B.R. line) and was the dearest disciple of Śrī Mādhavendra Purī. Antya 8.26–29: "Īśvara Purī served his master's feet and with his own hands cleaned away stool and urine. He constantly made him remember Kṛṣṇa's name and made him hear Kṛṣṇa's name and pastimes at every moment. Pleased, Purī embraced him and gave the blessing: 'May you have the treasure of love for Kṛṣṇa.' From then on Īśvara Purī became an ocean of love…"

Before initiating Śrī Mahāprabhu into the ten-syllable mantra at Gayā, Īśvara Purī came to the town of Navadvīpa and stayed several months in the house of Gopīnātha Ācārya. At that time he conversed with Śrī Mahāprabhu and had Him hear his own book, the Kṛṣṇa-līlāmṛta. See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 7.

When Śrīman Mahāprabhu came to Kumārahaṭṭa to see the birthplace of Śrīpāda Īśvara Purī, He showed this pastime to teach the jīvas devotion to the guru: "The Lord Himself picked up earth from that place, tied it in a bundle in His outer cloth and took it with Him." (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 12) Since then everyone who comes to see the place of Īśvara Purī takes earth from there.

By His inconceivable power, though the gardener, He Himself became the trunk and the support of all the branches —

12 By His own inconceivable power the gardener became the trunk, the original support of all the branches.

*The nine sannyāsīs — the nine roots —*

13–15 At the base of the tree nine roots sprang up: Paramānanda Purī and Keśava Bhāratī, Brahmānanda Purī and Brahmānanda Bhāratī, Viṣṇu Purī, Keśava Purī, Kṛṣṇānanda Purī, Śrī Nṛsiṁha Tīrtha and Sukhānanda Purī. On them the tree stood immovable.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

All the sannyāsīs named “Purī” are related to Śrī Īśvara Purī, and all those named “Bhāratī” are related to Keśava Bhāratī, the guru who gave Mahāprabhu sannyāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

Keśava Purī, Kṛṣṇānanda Purī, Nṛsiṁha Tīrtha and Sukhānanda Purī. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verses 97–100): “Kṛṣṇānanda, Keśava, Śrī Dāmodara and Rāghava, Ananta, Sukhānanda, Govinda and Raghunātha — with the title ‘Purī,’ in that order — are to be known as the eight siddhis beginning with aṇimā. The nine sons of Jayantī, steadfast in celibacy and equal-sighted — the nine bhāgavatas who formerly, as the Śrī Bhāgavata-saṁhitā relates, answered Janaka — have now become sannyāsīs and always sport with the Lord Gaurahari, as before: Śrī Nṛsiṁhānanda Tīrtha, Śrī Satyānanda Bhāratī, Śrī Nṛsiṁha, Cidānanda and Jagannātha — the Tīrthas.”

Anubhāṣya.

Paramānanda Purī was a brāhmaṇa from Trihuta (Tirhut), a disciple of Śrī Mādhavendra Purī and very dear to Śrī Mahāprabhu. Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya, Chapter 11): “Among the sannyāsīs the Lord's dear one is he alone, Purī Gosāñi, and no other. Dāmodara-Svarūpa and Paramānanda Purī — these two alone have a place among His sannyāsī associates. Both are always near Him, and in the Lord’s sannyāsa they take up the daṇḍa. Purī is absorbed in meditation, Dāmodara in kīrtana.  As much love as the Lord has for Purī Gosāñi, so much He has for Dāmodara-Svarūpa.”

The Lord's words on seeing Paramānanda Purī (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 3): “Today My eyes are blessed, today My birth has borne fruit, today all My dharma has borne fruit. The Lord said: ‘Today My sannyāsa has borne fruit; today Mādhavendra has appeared to Me.’ For a long while they bowed to each other. Paramānanda Purī is Caitanya's beloved abode.”

Paramānanda Purī lived in Puruṣottama, west of the temple, where he made a maṭha for himself and dug a well. The water of the well was bad, and Mahāprabhu said (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 3): “‘Mahāprabhu Jagannātha, give Me this boon: let the Gaṅgā enter this well.’ The Lord said: ‘Listen, all devotees! Whoever bathes in or drinks the water of this well will truly obtain the fruit of bathing in the Gaṅgā and will have the purest devotion to Kṛṣṇa.’ The Lord said: ‘Know for certain that I remain on earth out of love for Purī Gosāñi.’” In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 118): “Śrī Paramānanda Purī was formerly Uddhava.”

Keśava Bhāratī belonged to the “Bhāratī” sampradāya, one of the sampradāyas of the daṇḍīs of the ten names founded by Śrī Śaṅkara. Three sampradāyas — Sarasvatī, Bhāratī and Purī — are under the Śṛṅgerī maṭha in the south. Śrī Keśava Bhāratī was living at that time in a branch maṭha at Kāṭoyā. Some say that, although he was a brahma-sannyāsī, he received his mantra from Śrī Mādhavendra Purīpāda of the Śrī Mādhva-sampradāya and was a Vaiṣṇava sannyāsī. In the village of Khāṭundi (Kāndarā post office, Barddhamāna district) he established the service of a Deity and a maṭha. According to the proprietors of the maṭha, they are of Keśava Bhāratī's line: Keśava had sons (by another account, disciples) named Niśāpati and Uṣāpati. Of Niśāpati's line, Śrī Nakaṛicandra Vidyāratna is now the custodian of the service, and Uṣāpati's line lives at Rākhāladāsapura near Baiṁci in Hooghly. They may be descendants from Keśava Bhāratī's life before sannyāsa. According to some, Keśava Bhāratī's brother — or, by another account, Balabhadra, a disciple of his disciple Mādhava Bhāratī — also became a Bhāratī. From his life before sannyāsa he had two sons, Madana and Gopāla. Madana lived in Āuriyā and Gopāla in Denduḍa. Madana's descendants bear the title “Bhāratī,” and Gopāla's the title “Brahmacārī.” Many members of both families are still living. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 52): “The sage Sāndīpani, who formerly gave Kṛṣṇa the sacred thread in Mathurā, has now become Keśava Bhāratī.” Verse 117: “Some say that Keśava Bhāratī is Akrūra.” In 1432 of the Śaka era he gave sannyāsa to Nimāi Paṇḍita at Kāṭoyā. See the Vaiṣṇava-mañjuṣā, issue 2.

Śrī Brahmānanda Purī was Śrī Mahāprabhu's companion in kīrtana during His pastimes in Navadvīpa. Before and at the time of His sannyāsa, Mahāprabhu especially trusted him. He also came with the Lord to Nīlācala.

Śrī Brahmānanda Bhāratī came to Nīlācala for the Lord's darśana dressed in a deerskin. Śrī Mahāprabhu Himself went up to him and, as if He did not recognize him, said that He wished to see Bhāratī. Hearing this, Brahmānanda took off the deerskin and put on a saffron outer cloth. He lived for some time in Nīlācala near Mahāprabhu.

Paramānanda Purī — the central root —

16 The central root is Paramānanda Purī, a man of great steadfastness, and on these nine roots the tree stood secure.[1]

From them, countless branches and sub-branches —

17 From the trunk many branches grew, and as they rose higher and higher, they became countless.

18 The branches grew in circles of twenty, and the mighty boughs covered all the universes.

19 Each branch put out hundreds of smaller ones. Who can count how many sprang up?

20 I shall list the names of the chief branches further on; now hear the description of the tree.[2]

On the two sides of the main trunk, two trunks — Nitāi and Advaita —

21 Higher up, the tree branched into two trunks: one is named Advaita, and the other Nityānanda.[3]

The spread through a succession of branches and sub-branches — disciples and their disciples —

22 Many branches sprang from those two trunks, and their offshoots covered the world.

23 Great branches, smaller branches and their offshoots filled the world. Who could ever write them all down?

24 Disciples, the disciples of disciples and their followers spread over the world beyond all counting.

25 As the udumbara fig bears fruit on all its limbs, so the tree of bhakti bears fruit everywhere.

And so the pastime in which Gaura the gardener distributes the nectarean fruits of love for Kṛṣṇa —

26 On the branches and offshoots of the main trunk grew the fruit of love, sweeter than nectar.

*The fruits of prema are given away free —*

27 When the fruit of love ripened, sweet as nectar, the gardener Caitanya gave it away and asked no price.

Anubhāṣya.
"Mūla": price (mūlya).

28 All the wealth and jewels of the three worlds I would not count as the price of a single fruit.

Distribution without regard to who is worthy or unworthy —

29 Whether one asks or not, whether one is worthy or unworthy, He does not consider; He simply gives.

*The deliverance of poor and suffering jīvas —*

30 Filling His hands again and again, He scatters the fruit in all directions; the poor gather it up and eat, and the gardener smiles.

31 The gardener said: "Listen, O family of the tree, all you main branches and offshoots of every kind!

*The whole tree of Caitanya is full of consciousness, and by tasting its conscious fruits the insensible jīva gains consciousness —*

32 This wondrous tree is wholly spiritual and does the work of all the senses. Though rooted like any tree, it moves and acts like a living creature.

33 All the limbs of this tree are conscious, and as they grow, they spread through all the worlds.

*Seeing that He alone cannot preach the name and prema, He orders everyone to distribute without discrimination —*

34 I am a lone gardener. How many places can I go to? How many fruits can I pick and give away by Myself?

35 It is hard work to pick them and give them out alone, and I am left in doubt: some will receive them, and some will not.

36 Therefore I give this order to all of you: wherever you are, give the fruit of love to anyone and everyone.

37 I am a lone gardener. How many fruits can I eat? And if I do not give this fruit away, what else shall I do with it?

38 I water the tree unceasingly with the nectar of My own desire, and so it bears countless fruits.

*By tasting prema the jīva attains immortality —*

39 Therefore give all these fruits away to anyone, and let people eat them and be free from old age and death.

*Seeing Gaura's mercy, the jīva attains eternal good in chanting Gaura's name —*

40 My holy fame will spread through the world, and people will sing My glory with joy.

Anubhāṣya.

Piety makes people in the world happy, and the spread of sin increases human misery. The pure life of the pious is glorified, while people do not even wish to speak of the outrages of the sinful. In the same way, when the people of the world become happy by obtaining kṛṣṇa-prema, the good fame of the One who gives prema will grow.

Everyone born as a human being in the land of Bhārata must show people eternal mercy — that is, turn them toward Kṛṣṇa —

41 Let everyone who has taken human birth in the land of Bhārata make that birth fruitful by working for the good of others.

Anubhāṣya.

To be born a human being in holy Bhāratavarṣa and to do the world real, eternal good — this is the fulfillment of having received a body in the holiest land and among the highest of beings.

*To turn the jīva toward devotion to Kṛṣṇa by body, mind and words is the highest mercy, the highest auspicious act (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 22, verse 35) —*

42 ‘This alone is the true success of birth for embodied beings in this world: always to do good to others with one’s life, wealth, intelligence and words.’ (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.22.35)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The fulfillment of birth for an embodied jīva is always to do good to others with his life, wealth, intelligence and speech.

Anubhāṣya.

After the pastime of stealing the garments, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went far away with His friends, the cowherd boys, and sat down to rest beneath some trees. Seeing how the trees help others and how compassionate and tolerant they are, He pointed to them and said to His friends:

sadā prāṇaiḥ arthaiḥ dhiyā vācā (by every means) dehiṣu (toward the jīvas) śreya ācaraṇam (doing eternal good — that is, removing their aversion to Bhagavān, turning them toward Him, and so fully showing eternal mercy) — etāvat eva iha (in this world) dehinām (for the jīvas) janma-sāphalyam ([is], to be supplied).

*(Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 12, verse 45)*

43 'By deeds, thoughts and words the wise should do only that which brings good to living beings, in this world and the next.' (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 3.12.45)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
An intelligent person does by deed, mind and word whatever benefits living beings in this life and the next.

Anubhāṣya.
mati-mān (an intelligent person) yat eva karma iha (in this world) paratra (in the next) ca prāṇinām upakārāya (for their eternal good) [is], tat eva (that is, only what produces the sukṛti that turns one toward devotion to Bhagavān) karmaṇā manasā vācā (by body, mind and words) bhajet.

44 I am a gardener, a man with no kingdom and no riches. By giving away fruits and flowers I earn merit.

Seeing the causeless mercy of the tree, He wishes to become the original wish-fulfilling tree —

45 I am the gardener, and yet I have become the tree, for that was My wish: a tree benefits every living being.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 22, verse 33)*

46 'Ah, how excellent is the birth of these trees, which sustains all living beings! Like a good man, they never let one who asks of them go away disappointed.’” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.22.33)[4]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Pointing to the trees, He says: “Oh, all living beings live by them! Their birth is fruitful. Those who ask never leave them empty-handed. They behave like good people.”

Thus ends the ninth chapter of the “Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.”

Anubhāṣya.

After the pastime of stealing the garments, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went far away with His friends, the cowherd boys, and rested beneath the trees. Seeing the trees' tolerance and their constant readiness to help others, He pointed to them and said to His friends:

aho eṣām (of these trees) sarva-prāṇy-upajīvanam (that by which all beings live)[5] janma sujanasya iva varam (the best), — yeṣām (from whom) arthinaḥ (those who ask) vimukhāḥ (with their wishes unfulfilled) na yānti (do not go away).

Hearing this, all the parts of the tree were filled with joy —

47 When the gardener Caitanya gave this order, the whole family of the tree was filled with joy.

*The fruits of prema are given without regard to qualification —*

48 Each branch began to give away the fruit of love everywhere, and all the people who tasted it became intoxicated.

49 People ate their fill of this most intoxicating fruit of love, and, maddened by it, they all laughed, danced and sang.

50 Some rolled on the ground, some roared, and seeing this, the gardener smiled with delight.

*By giving the jīva love for Kṛṣṇa like His own, He makes him a mahā- bhāgavata —*

51 The gardener Himself eats this fruit of love and remains ever intoxicated, helpless and overwhelmed.

52 He made all people as intoxicated as Himself; I see no one who is not mad with love.

Even lowly blasphemers and others are delivered by obtaining love for Kṛṣṇa —

53 Even those who once reviled Him, calling Him a drunkard, ate that fruit and danced, crying, “Wonderful, wonderful!”

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the ninth chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”

54 Thus I have told of the distribution of the fruit of love. Now hear of the branches that give the fruit.

55 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

The Description of the Branches of the Main Trunk

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. The tenth chapter describes Śrīman Mahāprabhu's own branches.

Obeisances to the devotees of Gaura

1 Again and again I bow to the devotees who, like bees, drink the honey of Śrī Caitanya’s lotus feet. Even one as low as a dog, if he takes shelter of them in any way at all, comes to share in the fragrance of those feet.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Again and again I bow down to the bees who drink the honey of Śrī Caitanya's lotus feet. If one takes shelter of them in any way at all, even a dog obtains the fragrance of those lotus feet.

Anubhāṣya.
śrī-caitanya-padāmbhoja-madhupebhyaḥ (to the bees who drink the honey — the rasa of devotion — of Śrī Caitanya's lotus feet, that is, to the devotees of Gaura) namo namaḥ; — yeṣāṁ kathañcit (in any way whatever) āśrayāt śvā (a dog — one intent on enjoyment, without faith in devotion to Bhagavān) api tad-gandha-bhāk (one who partakes of, that is, obtains, the fragrance of those lotus feet of Gaura — a devotee of Gaura) bhavet.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra, and glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

Description of the main branches of Gaura, the wish-fulfilling tree —

3 This gardener, this tree, is beyond all telling. Now hear the names of its principal branches.

Among Gaura's devotees there is no distinction of greater and lesser —

4 Caitanya Gosāñi's associates are a vast host, and no one can determine who among them is greater and who is lesser.

5 Many great souls have listed them all, yet none has been able to set them in order of seniority.

6 Therefore, bowing down to them all, I shall simply name them. Please do not count this as a fault in me.

7 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the immortal tree of love. I worship His dear devotees, who are the branches of that tree and give everyone the fruit of love for Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the wish-fulfilling tree of prema. Its branches are His dear devotees, who give the fruit of love for Kṛṣṇa. I offer my obeisances to them.

Anubhāṣya.

śrī-kṛṣṇa-caitanya-premāmara-taroḥ (of the wish-fulfilling tree, Gaura's prema) kṛṣṇa-prema-phala-pradān śākhā-rūpān priyān bhakta-gaṇān ahaṁ vande.

(1 — a, b, c, d) The branch of the four brothers, Śrīvāsa, Śrīrāma and the others —

8 Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita and Śrī Rāma Paṇḍita — two brothers, two branches — are renowned throughout the world.[1]

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīvāsa. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 90): “Wise Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita is he who was formerly the sage Nārada. The best of sages named Parvata, who was dear to Nārada, is the glorious Śrīrāma Paṇḍita, his younger brother.” “She who was formerly in Vraja the nurse named Ambikā, who suckled [Kṛṣṇa], is considered to be Śrīvāsa's wife, named Mālinī.” The daughter of Śrīvāsa's own brother was Nārāyaṇī Devī, the mother of Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana.

After Śrīman Mahāprabhu accepted sannyāsa, Śrīvāsa left his home in Navadvīpa and settled in Kumārahaṭṭa. This is known from the Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya, Chapter 5) and other books.

9 Śrīpati and Śrīnidhi are their two brothers, and the four brothers had menservants, maidservants and a whole household.

Their exclusive devotion to Gaura —

10 All of them are counted among the offshoots of these two branches. In their house Mahāprabhu held saṅkīrtana constantly.

11 With their whole family they served Śrī Caitanya, and apart from Gauracandra they knew no god or goddess.

(2) The branch of Śrī Candraśekhara —

12 Another great branch bears the name Ācāryaratna; his associates are its branches and offshoots.

13 Ācāryaratna’s own name is Śrī Candraśekhara. In his house the Lord danced in the form of the Goddess, the Ādi-śakti.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Candraśekhara Ācāryaratna, according to some books, was the husband of Śrīman Mahāprabhu's maternal aunt.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Candraśekhara is one of the glorious nine nidhis (treasures), or else Candra (?). It was in his house that Mahāprabhu danced, enacting the role of the Goddess (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 18). This house of Candraśekhara is now well known by the name “Vrajapattana.” He learned of Śrīman Mahāprabhu's sannyāsa beforehand from Śrī Nityānanda's own lips (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 26). At the time of the sannyāsa he was at Kāṭoyā with Śrī Nityānanda and Mukunda Datta and performed all the duties proper to the occasion. Returning to Navadvīpa, he told everyone that the Lord had accepted sannyāsa. On Mahāprabhu's kīrtana in his house, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 8. On his presence in the town kīrtana when the Kazi was subdued, and when the Lord showed mercy to Śrīdhara, see Madhya, Chapter 23. He used to travel with the devotees from Gauḍa to Śrī Kṣetra.

(3) The branch of Śrī Puṇḍarīka —

14 Puṇḍarīka Vidyānidhi is a great branch; the Lord Himself would weep as He spoke his name.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Puṇḍarīka Vidyānidhi was a resident of Caṭṭagrāma.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Puṇḍarīka Vidyānidhi. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 54): “He who was formerly known in Vraja-maṇḍala as Vṛṣabhānu is now Puṇḍarīkākṣa Vidyānidhi Mahāśaya. Tasting His own mood and tormented by Rādhā's separation, Caitanya Himself called Puṇḍarīkākṣa, ‘O father!’ Wise Gaura gave him the fame of ‘Premanidhi’ (treasury of prema), and because he was a disciple of Mādhavendra, He always showed him reverence. His wife Ratnāvatī is declared by the wise to be Kīrtidā.”

His father's name was Bāṇeśvara (by another account, Śuklāmbara Brahmacārī), and his mother's name was Gaṅgādevī. By another account, Bāṇeśvara was born in the line of Śivarāma Gaṅgopādhyāya. Vidyānidhi's father was a brāhmaṇa of the Vārendra class who lived in the village of Bāghiyā in Ḍhākā district, and so the Rāḍhīya brāhmaṇa community there did not accept him. For this reason his descendants[8] became ekaghare — outcasts from the community — and since then have served as priests only for the community's other outcasts. One of them, named Sarojānanda Gosvāmī, now lives in Vṛndāvana. Their family has one peculiarity: among brothers only one has a son, while the others have daughters or no children at all. That is why the family has not spread very far.

Six krośas north of Caṭṭagrāma there is a police station called Hāṭ-Hājārī. One krośa east of it, in the village of Mekhalā, was his family's former home. From the town of Caṭṭagrāma one can go there by land, in a horse-cart or bullock-cart, or by water, by boat or steamer. The steamer stops at Annapūrṇā's ghāṭa, and from there the śrīpāṭa (holy site) lies two miles to the southwest. Vidyānidhi's temple of worship (bhajana-mandira) is now utterly decayed and neglected; unless it is restored, it is likely to vanish soon. Two verses are carved on brick tablets in the temple wall, but the letters are worn away, and they can be neither read nor understood. Some 400–500 cubits southeast of this temple another temple can be seen; the inscriptions on the tablets of its walls cannot be read either. Directly in front of it, 15–20 cubits to the north, there once stood another temple: the many scattered pieces of brick show this. Tradition says it was Mukunda Datta's temple of worship.

Mahāprabhu called Vidyānidhi “Father” and gave him the name “Premanidhi.” He was the guru of Śrīla Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosvāmī and the friend of Śrī Dāmodara Svarūpa. To warn ignorant jīvas and give them auspicious instruction, Paṇḍita Gosvāmī at first acted as if he had mistaken Vidyānidhi for a worldly man, and in the end displayed the pastime of taking initiation from him. On how Śrī Jagannāthadeva slapped him on the cheeks, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 11.

In Puṇḍarīka's family Śrī Harakumāra Smṛtitīrtha and Śrī Kṛṣṇakiṅkara Vidyālaṅkāra are now living (see the Vaiṣṇava-mañjuṣā, issue 1).

(4) The branch of Śrī Gadādhara —

15 Another great branch is Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosāñi. He is the very form of Lakṣmī, and none is his equal.

Anubhāṣya.

Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosāñi (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 147–153): “She who was formerly the Queen of Vṛndāvana, the embodiment of Śrī Rādhā's prema, is now Śrī Gadādhara, the beloved of Gaura, who bears the name ‘Paṇḍita.’ Śrī Svarūpa has determined that he is the Lakṣmī of Vraja: ‘She who formerly in Vṛndāvana was Lakṣmī, the beloved of Śyāmasundara, is now the Lakṣmī of Gaura's prema, Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita.’ Lalitā follows Rādhā and is therefore also called Anurādhikā; so she too entered him, as described in the Gauracandrodaya.”

For the branch of Gadādhara, see the end of Ādi, Chapter 12.

16 His disciples and their disciples are the offshoots of this branch, and so it is with all the other branches and offshoots.

(5) The glory and the branch of Śrī Vakreśvara —

17 Vakreśvara Paṇḍita was a servant very dear to the Lord. In a single unbroken ecstasy he could dance for twenty-four praharas — three days and nights.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Vakreśvara Paṇḍita. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 71): “He who was Aniruddha, the fourth vyūha, is Vakreśvara Paṇḍita. With his dancing, born of absorption in Kṛṣṇa, he gave the Lord joy. ‘O merciful one, give me a thousand singers!’ — these sweet words he spoke at Caitanya's feet. Śaśirekhā entered him as a distinct manifestation of herself.”

Śrī Dhyānacandra Gosvāmī Prabhu writes: “I worship Śrī Vakreśvara Paṇḍita, the best of the twice-born, the devotee of Caitanya. He is devoted to revealing the rasa of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, adorned with garlands of songs, born to spread the happiness of Vṛndāvana, and endowed with stambha and the other bhāvas; he is the sprout of the avatāra of dance that merges with the rasa of Śrī Gaurāṅga Mahāprabhu. Within him Tuṅgavidyā always dwells, full of eager longing: she has become a vipralabdhā (a heroine disappointed in her waiting) and is ever filled with love for Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Her age is the measure (?).[9] In Gaura's rasa, in the Kali age, she again became famous as Vakreśvara.”

He used to dance in Mahāprabhu's kīrtana in Śrīvāsa's courtyard and in Candraśekhara's house. On how the Lord told Devānanda of Vakreśvara's glory, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 3.

The Utkala poet Śrī Govinda writes of Śrī Vakreśvara in the Śrī Gaura-kṛṣṇodaya: “Considering that he was the Lord's first disciple, they settled Vakreśvara in that hermitage and each went to his own dwelling.”

His disciple was Śrī Gopāla-guru, and Gopāla-guru's disciple was Śrī Dhyānacandra. In Utkala most of those in the line of Śrī Vakreśvara's disciples call themselves Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇavas.

18 While he danced, Mahāprabhu Himself would sing, and once Vakreśvara clasped the Lord's feet and said:

19 "O moon-faced Lord, give me ten thousand Gandharvas! Let them sing while I dance — that would be my joy."

20 The Lord replied, "You are one of My wings. If I had another like you, I would fly up into the sky."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The Lord says: "You are one of My wings. If I had one more wing like you, I would fly away into the sky."

(6) The greatness of Śrī Jagadānanda —

21 Paṇḍita Jagadānanda is the Lord's very life. He is renowned as a manifestation of Satyabhāmā.

Anubhāṣya.
Jagadānanda. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 51): "By a certain inner distinction the Sātvatas set him apart: Jagadānanda Paṇḍita is also a manifestation of Satyabhāmā." He was the Lord's companion in kīrtana in Śrīvāsa's courtyard and in Candraśekhara's house. When the Lord went to Orissa after His sannyāsa, he carried His daṇḍa and begged alms.

22 Out of love he longed to surround the Lord with care and comfort, but the Lord, guarding His renunciation and wary of what people would say, never accepted it.

23 So the two of them would fall into little quarrels. I shall tell the whole story of his love later on.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
See Antya, Chapters 4, 7, 12 and 13.

(7) The branch of Śrī Rāghava Paṇḍita —

24 Rāghava Paṇḍita was one of the Lord's first followers, and his chief branch is Makaradhvaja Kara.

Anubhāṣya.

Rāghava Paṇḍita. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 44): "Dhaniṣṭhā, who in Vraja gave Kṛṣṇa countless foodstuffs, is now Rāghava Paṇḍita, dear to Gaurāṅga."

Rāghava's house is in the village of Pāṇihāṭī on the bank of the Gaṅgā: on the E.B.R. line from Śiyāladaha station to Sodapura station, and from there one mile west. Over Rāghava Paṇḍita's samādhi a high platform has been built, surrounded by a bower of creepers. North of the samādhi, in a nearly ruined, dilapidated house, resides the Deity Śrī Madana-mohana, who is served without proper care. This service is managed under the supervision of the present zamindar of Pāṇihāṭī, Śrī Śivacandra Rāya Caudhurī.

Makaradhvaja. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 141): "He who was formerly the actor Candramukha is Makaradhvaja Kara." He lived in the village of Pāṇihāṭī.

The virtues of his sister Damayantī —

25 His sister Damayantī, a dear maidservant of the Lord, prepared provisions for Him all year round.

Anubhāṣya.

Damayantī. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 167): "She who in Vraja was Guṇamālā is Damayantī, his sister."

26 Filling bags with all those provisions, Rāghava would carry them secretly to the Lord.

27 All year round the Lord accepted them, and they became famous as "Rāghava's bags."[2]

Anubhāṣya.

For a description of the jhāli (bags), see Antya, Chapter 10.

28 I shall describe those provisions in detail later. Hearing of them, the devotees shed streams of tears.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Āge" (later): see Antya, Chapter 10.

(8) Śrī Gaṅgādāsa —

29 Paṇḍita Gaṅgādāsa was extremely dear to the Lord. Simply to remember him destroys all bondage.

Anubhāṣya.
Gaṅgādāsa Paṇḍita. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 53): "He who was formerly the sage Vasiṣṭha, the guru of Raghunātha, [became] by a special manifestation Gaṅgādāsa and Sudarśana." The same, verse 119: "… Gaṅgādāsa, dear to the Lord, was formerly Durvāsā in Nidhuvana, dear to the gopīs."

(9) Śrī Purandara Ācārya —

30 Śrī Purandara Ācārya was an associate of Śrī Caitanya; Gaurāṅgasundara called him Father.

Anubhāṣya.
Purandara Ācārya. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 5: "As soon as the Lord arrived at the Paṇḍita's house, Ācārya Purandara heard the news and came. Seeing him, the Lord called him 'Father' and, maddened with ecstatic love, took him in His arms. Supremely fortunate is that Ācārya Purandara: seeing the Lord, he wept, unable to restrain himself."

(10) The branch of Śrī Dāmodara Paṇḍita —

31 Dāmodara Paṇḍita, another branch, was so fierce in his love that he even rebuked the Lord.

32 I shall tell the story of that rebuke in detail later. Pleased with it, the Lord sent him to Nadīyā.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Āge" (later): see Antya, Chapter 3.

Anubhāṣya.

Dāmodara Paṇḍita. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 169): “The fierce Śaibyā who was in Vraja is Dāmodara Paṇḍita. For some purpose the goddess Sarasvatī entered him.” By the Lord's order Dāmodara would come to Gauḍa to see Āi (Śacīmātā), and then, before the Ratha-yātrā, go again with the devotees to Puruṣottama (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9). For the Lord's question about Śacīdevī's devotion to Kṛṣṇa and Dāmodara Paṇḍita's answer, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 10. For Dāmodara's verbal chastisement of the Lord, see Antya-līlā, Chapter 3.

(11) The greatness and the branch of Śrī Śaṅkara Paṇḍita —

33 His younger brother, Śaṅkara Paṇḍita, is a branch known by the name “the Lord’s footrest.”

Anubhāṣya.

Śaṅkara Paṇḍita. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 157): “She on whose breast Kṛṣṇa formerly slept in Vṛndāvana, Śrī Bhadrā, is now Śaṅkara Paṇḍita, dear to Gaurāṅga.” See Antya 19.67–74.

Mahāprabhu's love for Paṇḍita Dāmodara was mixed with reverence, while for his younger brother, Paṇḍita Śaṅkara, He had pure (kevala) prema: see Madhya 11.146–148.

(12) Śrī Sadāśiva Paṇḍita —

34 Sadāśiva Paṇḍita set all his hope on the Lord’s feet, and at first Nityānanda lived in his house.

Anubhāṣya.

Sadāśiva Paṇḍita. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9 (at the time of the Ratha-yātrā): “Sadāśiva Paṇḍita, pure of mind, set out — he in whose house Nityānanda formerly lived.”

He lived in Navadvīpa and was the Lord's companion in kīrtana. On returning from Gayā, Mahāprabhu told him and other devotees, in Śuklāmbara's house, of His own worship of Kṛṣṇa. When Mahāprabhu was going to dance in Candraśekhara's house in the guise of Lakṣmī, He told Sadāśiva to prepare the costumes and everything else for the play (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 18).

(13) Śrī Pradyumna Brahmacārī —

35 Pradyumna Brahmacārī was a worshipper of Śrī Nṛsiṁha, and the Lord gave him the name Nṛsiṁhānanda.

Anubhāṣya.

Pradyumna Brahmacārī. Antya, Chapter 2: "His own name was Pradyumna Brahmacārī; Gaura, the abode [of all], named him 'Nṛsiṁhānanda.'" (CC Antya 2.53) Coming from Rāghava's house in Pāṇihāṭī to Śivānanda's house in Kumārahaṭṭa, Mahāprabhu appeared within his heart and accepted the offerings meant for three — Jagannātha, Nṛsiṁha and Himself (CC Antya 2.48–78). When he heard in Kuliyā that Mahāprabhu was going to Vṛndāvana, he became absorbed in meditation and in his mind built a road from Kuliyā to Vṛndāvana. Then his meditation broke, and he told the devotees that this time the Lord would go only as far as Kānāi Nāṭaśālā and would not go to Vṛndāvana (Madhya 1.155–162).[10]

In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 74): "Āveśa should likewise be recognized in the Miśra named Pradyumna." Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 3: "… in whose body Nṛsiṁha is manifest"; and Antya, Chapter 9: "… with whom Nṛsiṁha Himself converses face to face."

(14) Śrī Nārāyaṇa Paṇḍita —

36 Nārāyaṇa Paṇḍita was a most generous soul who knew nothing but the feet of Śrī Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.

Nārāyaṇa Paṇḍita went to Nīlācala with Śrīrāma Paṇḍita, the brother of Śrīvāsa, to see Śrī Mahāprabhu. See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9, verse 93.

(15) The branch of Śrī Śrīmān Paṇḍita —

37 Śrīmān Paṇḍita, a branch and the Lord's personal servant, held the torch whenever the Lord danced.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīmān Paṇḍita lived in Śrī Navadvīpa and was the Lord's companion in His first kīrtana. On the day of the play, when the Lord danced in the mood of the Goddess, and whenever the Lord danced, he held a lighted torch. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 18: “In the guise of Ādyā-śakti the Lord, Gaura the lion, dances, and all the bees at His feet joyfully watch … Paṇḍita Śrīmān holds the torch before Him.”

(16) Śrī Śuklāmbara Brahmacārī —

38 Śuklāmbara Brahmacārī was most fortunate: the Lord Himself would beg his rice, or snatch it from him, and eat it.

Anubhāṣya.

Śuklāmbara Brahmacārī lived in Śrī Navadvīpa and was the Lord's companion in His first kīrtana. On returning from Gayā, Mahāprabhu gathered the devotees in his very house and asked to hear the narrations of Kṛṣṇa from him (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 1). In His Navadvīpa pastimes Mahāprabhu, in great joy, would snatch and eat the rice cooked from the grain Śuklāmbara had collected as alms (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapters 16 and 25). In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 191): “Śuklāmbara Brahmacārī was formerly one of the wives of the sacrificing brāhmaṇas; the Lord, Śrī Gaurāṅga, begged his food and ate it. Some say that this brahmacārī was formerly a brāhmaṇa who performed sacrifice.”

(17) The branch of Śrī Nandana Ācārya —

39 Nandana Ācārya is a branch renowned throughout the world, for the two Lords hid in his house.

Anubhāṣya.

Nandana Ācārya lived in Navadvīpa and was the Lord's companion in kīrtana. After travelling to many holy places in the dress of an avadhūta, Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu came first to his house. There Mahāprabhu met Him together with the devotees. On the day of the Mahā-prakāśa, Mahāprabhu sent Rāmāi Paṇḍita to bring Advaita Prabhu. Advaitācārya was hiding in Nandanācārya's house, but Gaurasundara, who knows every heart, came to know of it. Śrī Mahāprabhu too once hid in his house. See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapters 6 and 17.

(18) The branch of Śrī Mukunda Datta —

40 Śrī Mukunda Datta, another branch, was the Lord's fellow student; when he sang kīrtana, Caitanya Gosāñi danced.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Mukunda Datta was born in the village of Chanharā, under the Paṭiyā police station in Caṭṭagrāma district, ten krośas from Mekhalā, the village of Vidyānidhi's śrīpāṭa. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 140): "Madhukaṇṭha and Madhuvrata, the two singers in Vraja, are Mukunda and Vāsudeva, the two Dattas, the singers of Gaurāṅga."

In His student days Nimāi used to argue with His classmate Mukunda, posing trick questions of logic (nyāya) (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapters 5 and 8). When the Lord returned from Gayā, mad with love for Kṛṣṇa, Mukunda would delight Him by reciting verses of the Bhāgavatam. It was through his efforts that his companion Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosvāmī took initiation from Śrī Vidyānidhi (Madhya, Chapter 7). When he sang kīrtana in Śrīvāsa's courtyard, Mahāprabhu would dance and sing. During the bhāva that lasted seven praharas ("sāt-prahariyā"), he sang the "Abhiṣeka." For the Lord's punishment of Mukunda and His mercy to him, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 10. When the Lord danced in Candraśekhara's house in the guise of Lakṣmī, it was he who first began to sing.

After telling Nityānanda Prabhu that He would take sannyāsa, the Lord went to Mukunda's house. Hearing everything, Mukunda begged the Lord to continue His kīrtana pastimes in Navadvīpa a few days longer (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 25). When Mukunda learned of the Lord's sannyāsa from Nityānanda's lips, he went to Kāṭoyā with Gadādhara and Candraśekhara. There he sang kīrtana and performed everything proper to the Lord's sannyāsa. After the sannyāsa he followed the Lord together with Nitāi, Gadādhara and Govinda (Madhya, Chapter 26; Antya, Chapter 1), and in this way followed Him all the way to Puruṣottama (see Antya, Chapter 2). On the way to Jaleśvara he was present when Nityānanda broke the Lord's daṇḍa, and he reached Jaleśvara shortly after the Lord. Every year he came with the devotees from Gauḍa to Nīlācala to see the Lord.

(19) The virtues of Śrī Vāsudeva Datta Ṭhākura —

41 Vāsudeva Datta was the Lord's great-souled servant; even with a thousand mouths one could not tell his virtues.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Vāsudeva Datta was born in Caṭṭagrāma; he was the brother of Mukunda Datta. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9: "… to whom Kṛṣṇa Himself is sold." When the Lord was staying at Śrīvāsa's house in Kumārahaṭṭa (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 5): "Such was the Lord's love for Datta! The Lord says: 'I certainly belong to Vāsudeva … This body of Mine belongs to Vāsudeva Datta. Wherever Datta sells Me, there I am sold. It is true, true — it cannot be otherwise. I speak the truth; hear, O assembly of Vaiṣṇavas: this body of Mine belongs to Vāsudeva alone.'"

Yadunandana Ācārya, who received his mercy, was the dīkṣā-guru of Śrī Raghunātha dāsa Gosvāmī (Antya 6.161). Seeing his tendency to spend lavishly, the Lord ordered Śivānanda Sena to become his sarakhela (manager) and to manage his expenses (Madhya 15.93–96). For his prayer to Mahāprabhu on seeing the suffering of the jīvas, see Madhya 15.159–180.

On the E.I.R. line, one mile from Pūrvasthalī station, in the village of Māmagāchi, the birthplace of Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana, the Śrī Madana-Gopāla he established still resides. His service is very much neglected. It is desirable that His service be made splendid.

42 He wished to take upon himself the sins of every living being in the world and suffer in hell himself, if only they could be set free.[3]

(20) The virtues of Ṭhākura Haridāsa, the Nāmācārya, and his branch —

43 Haridāsa Ṭhākura, another branch, lived a wondrous life: without fail he chanted three hundred thousand names every day.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Apatita": without breaking the rule.

44 His virtues are endless; I can give only a glimpse of them. It was he whom Advaita Ācārya fed from the plate of the memorial offering, the śrāddha-pātra.

45 The waves of his virtues were like Prahlāda's: even when the Yavanas beat him, he did not so much as frown.

46 When he attained perfection, Caitanya Prabhu took his body in His arms and danced in great joy.

47 Vṛndāvana dāsa has described his pastimes; what remains I shall tell later.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Haridāsa Ṭhākura. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 2: "Haridāsa descended in Būṛhana … After staying there some days, he came to the bank of the Gaṅgā and settled in Phuliyā, near Śāntipura." The persecution by the Muslims is described in the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Chapter 11. On Haridāsa's humble words and the Lord's mercy, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 10; on preaching the holy name from door to door, Madhya, Chapter 13; on Haridāsa playing the koṭāla (chief of the watch) during the play in Candraśekhara's house, the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 18; on his worship of the holy name of Hari at Benāpola and his test, the Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Antya, Chapter 3; and on Haridāsa's departure, Antya, Chapter 11.

In the Sātakṣīrā subdivision of the Twenty-four Parganas (now Khulnā district) there is a paragaṇā called Būṛhana. Whether the Ṭhākura appeared there is not known.

(20a) Haridāsa's disciples, Satyarāja Khān (Vasu) and others —

48 All the people of Kulīna-grāma are his offshoots; Satyarāja and others received his mercy.

Anubhāṣya.

Satyarāja Khān was the son of Guṇarāja Khān of Kulīnagrāma and the father of Rāmānanda Vasu. Ṭhākura Haridāsa lived in Kulīnagrāma during Cāturmāsya, performing his worship, and bestowed his mercy on the Vasu family. On Mahāprabhu's merciful order to bring silk ropes (paṭṭa-ḍorī) for Jagannāthadeva every year, see Madhya, Chapter 14. On how Satyarāja asked about a householder's duties and heard of the characteristics of a Vaiṣṇava, a better Vaiṣṇava and the best Vaiṣṇava and of the gradation of their qualification, see Madhya 15.102–109 and 16.69–75. At the place where he worshipped there is now a Deity of Śrī Mahāprabhu.

Kulīnagrāma lies within two miles of Jaugrāma station on the Howrah–Barddhamāna New Chord line. For Mahāprabhu's words on the glory of Kulīnagrāma, see Ādi 10.82–83 and Madhya 15.100–101.[11]

(21) The greatness and the branch of Śrī Murāri Gupta —

49 Śrī Murāri Gupta is a branch, a storehouse of love; whenever the Lord heard his humble words, His heart would melt.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Murāri Gupta was the author of the book Śrī Caitanya-carita. He was born in a Vaidya family of Śrīhaṭṭa and later settled in Navadvīpa. He was older than Mahāprabhu. In his house Mahāprabhu showed the form of Varāha (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 3), and in the state of the Mahā-prakāśa He showed him His form as Śrī Rāma (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 10).

One day in Śrīvāsa's house Gaurasundara was seated with Nityānanda. Murāri Gupta first bowed down to Gaura and then offered prostrated obeisances to Nityānanda. The Lord said to Murāri, “You have offered obeisances in violation of proper order,” and at night, in a dream, He revealed to him the truth about Nityānanda. The next morning Murāri first worshipped the feet of Nityānanda and then those of Mahāprabhu. The Lord gave Murāri chewed betel. One day Murāri offered rice with ghee to Śrī Mahāprabhu in thought. The next morning Mahāprabhu, suffering indigestion from eating so much rice, came to Murāri for treatment. Saying, “The only medicine for this is the water in Murāri's water pot,” the Lord drank that water. In Śrīvāsa's house Mahāprabhu assumed a four-armed form; Murāri felt himself to be Garuḍa, and the Lord mounted his shoulders. Thinking that he could not bear the separation when the Lord concealed Himself, Murāri resolved to give up his body while the Lord was still manifest, but the Lord, the indweller of the heart, held him back (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 20). One day the Lord, absorbed in bhāva, manifested the form of Varāha in Murāri Gupta's house, and Murāri, seeing Him, offered prayers (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 4). For Murāri Gupta's humble words, see Madhya 11.152–158; for Murāri's steadfast devotion to Śrī Rāma, see Madhya 15.137–157.

50 He accepted no gifts and took no one’s money, but supported his family by his own calling.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“Ātma-vṛtti”: the occupation of one's own varṇa; Murāri Gupta's profession as a physician (kavirāja).

51 All whom he treated with kindness were freed from both diseases — the disease of the body and the disease of worldly existence.

(22) Śrīmān Sena —

52 Śrīmān Sena was a foremost servant of the Lord and knew nothing but the feet of Śrī Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrīmān Sena lived in Navadvīpa and was a companion of the Lord.

(23) The branch of Śrī Gadādhara dāsa —

53 Śrī Gadādhara dāsa is a branch above all others; he made even the Kazis utter the name of Hari.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Gadādhara dāsa was a resident of Eṅḍiyādaha.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Gadādhara dāsa. The village of Eṅḍiyādaha lies on the bank of the Bhāgīrathī, four krośas north of Calcutta. After Mahāprabhu withdrew from the world's sight, Dāsa Gadādhara went from Navadvīpa to Kāṭoyā (Bhakti-ratnākara, seventh wave), and later came from there to this village and lived there. He is the luster (kānti) of Śrī Rādhā: as Śrīla Paṇḍita Gosvāmī is Śrīmatī Vṛṣabhānu-nandinī Herself, so Śrīla Gadādhara dāsa is the beauty of Śrīmatī's body. Gaura is “adorned with the mood and luster of Rādhā,” and Gadādhara dāsa is that very luster of Gaura. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa he is named the vibhūti, the expansion, of Vṛṣabhānu-nandinī. He is counted among the associates of both Gaura and Nityānanda. Gaura's associates are connoisseurs (rasikas) of the madhura-rasa of Vraja; Nityānanda's associates are connoisseurs of sakhya and the other rasas in which pure devotion predominates. Although Śrī Dāsa Gadādhara is among Nityānanda's associates, he is not a gopāla, a cowherd boy full of sakhya-bhāva: he was a connoisseur of madhura-rasa. At Kāṭoyā he had the worship of Gaura.

In 1434 Śaka, when Śrī Mahāprabhu requested Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu to go from Nīlācala to Gauḍa to preach devotion, Gadādhara became one of Nityānanda's chief helpers in the work of preaching (Ādi 11.13–14). Śrī Gadādhara dāsa taught everyone to chant the holy name of Hari. The Kazi of that village opposed kīrtana. One night Śrī Dāsa Gadādhara, while performing kīrtana, went to the Kazi's house, wishing to deliver him, and asked him to utter the holy name of Hari. The Kazi replied, “I will say ‘Hari’ tomorrow,” and Gadādhara dāsa, filled with the joy of prema, said: “… Why tomorrow? You have just said ‘Hari’ with your own mouth.” In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa: “She who was formerly in Vraja Candrakānti, the vibhūti of Rādhā, is Gadādhara of the Dāsa family, who is near Śrī Gaurāṅga. She who in Vraja was Pūrṇānandā, the foremost of Baladeva's beloveds, also entered that Gadādhara for some purpose.”

On the way from Nīlācala to Gauḍa, Śrī Dāsa Gadādhara, in the mood of Śrī Rādhā and laughing loudly, became a seller of yogurt and forgot his external identity. Nityānanda Prabhu saw this. Sometimes Gadādhara, absorbed in the mood of a gopī, would carry on his head a pot full of Gaṅgā water and sell it as milk. When Śrīman Mahāprabhu wished to go to Śrī Vṛndāvana by way of Gauḍa-maṇḍala, He came to Rāghava's house in the village of Pāṇihāṭī. Then “hearing that Śrī Gaurasundara was in Rāghava's house, Gadādhara dāsa came running at once. The Lord, seeing pious Gadādhara, raised His feet and placed them on his head” (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 5). During his manifest presence there was a Deity of Bāla-Gopāla in Gadādhara's house in Eṅḍiyādaha. With the help of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu and Śrī Dāsa Gadādhara, Śrī Mādhava Ghoṣa sang and danced before the Deity of Śrī Gopāla, enacting the “Dāna-khaṇḍa” (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 5).

When Śrī Gadādhara disappeared, his samādhi was made in that village. The samādhi was in the possession of saṁyogī Vaiṣṇavas. On the instruction of the perfected Śrī Bhagavān dāsa Bābājī Mahārāja of Kālnā, the late Madhusūdana Mallika of Nārikeladāṅgā in Calcutta founded a pāṭabāṭī (holy residence) there and in the Bengali year 1256 arranged the service of the Deity Śrī Rādhākānta. His son Balāi Mallika in 1312 established a service of Śrī Gaura-Nitāi. On the throne of the temple reside the Deities of Śrī Gaura-Nityānanda and of Śrī Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa; beneath the throne a Sanskrit verse is engraved. A Gopeśvara Śiva-liṅga is also installed there. At the temple entrance all that is stated above is engraved on a stone tablet. See the Vaiṣṇava-mañjuṣā-samāhṛti (issue 1).

(24) The branch of Śrī Śivānanda Sena —

54 Śivānanda Sena was an intimate servant of the Lord; all who went to see the Lord went in his company.

55 Every year he took the Lord's devotees with him to Nīlācala, caring for them all along the way.

The Lord bestows mercy by descending in three forms —

56 The Lord shows His mercy to the devotees in three ways: by being with them in person (sākṣāt), by entering someone with His power (āveśa), and by appearing where He is not present in person (āvirbhāva).

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

To all the devotees He gave darśana in one and the same form, and so bestowed "sākṣāt," direct mercy. But at times He entered (āviṣṭa) the body of Nakula or of Pradyumna Brahmacārī; in that brahmacārī's body Śrī Caitanya's "āvirbhāva," manifestation, took place.

Anubhāṣya.

"Sākṣāt": Gaurasundara in His own form; "āveśa": in Nakula or Pradyumna Brahmacārī; āvirbhāva (CC Antya 2.34–35): "In Śacī's house, where Nityānanda dances, at Śrīvāsa's kīrtana and in Rāghava's house — in these four places the Lord is always manifest (āvirbhāva). To be drawn by love is the Lord's natural disposition."

According to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, the Lord's āvirbhāva and āveśa took place in Nakula Brahmacārī and Pradyumna Miśra, thus (verse 74): "The āvirbhāva of Gaurahari was in Nakula Brahmacārī, and āveśa likewise should be recognized in the Miśra named Pradyumna."

57 In His direct presence all the devotees see Him alike; in the body of Nakula Brahmacārī there was the Lord's āveśa.

Anubhāṣya.

In the direct manifestation (sākṣāt) all the devotees are seen without distinction among themselves — as servants of one kind, not different from one another.[12] But because Śrīman Mahāprabhu entered Nṛsiṁhānanda, Śrī Śivānanda Sena and other devotees saw him exactly like Śrī Gaurasundara: full of love for Kṛṣṇa and performing more superhuman, divine acts than all the other devotees.

58 His earlier name was Pradyumna Brahmacārī; afterwards the Lord gave him the name Nṛsiṁhānanda.

Anubhāṣya.

Pradyumna Brahmacārī formerly lived in the hamlet of Piyārīgañja near Kālnā. He is mentioned in Ādi 10.35 and Antya 2.3–83. See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapters 3 and 9.

59 In him Śrī Caitanya manifested Himself (āvirbhāva). The Lord has many such wonderful, unearthly ways.

60 Śivānanda Sena tasted all these rasas; I shall describe this bliss in detail later.

(24a) The branch of Śrī Śivānanda — his sons, servants and others —

61 The offshoots of Śivānanda are his own people — his sons, his servants and others, all devoted to the service of Śrī Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.

Śivānanda Sena was a resident of Kumārahaṭṭa, or Hālisahara, and a devotee of the Lord. One and a half miles from there, in Kāñcaḍāpāḍā, there is a Deity of Gaura-Gopāla established by him (still present today in the temple of Śrī Kṛṣṇa-rāya). His son Paramānanda (Purīdāsa) writes in the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 176): "She who formerly in Vṛndāvana, as the messenger Vīrā, brought all the gopīs to Kṛṣṇa, is now my father." Every year he guided the devotees from Gauḍa, bore their travel expenses, looked after them and brought them to Mahāprabhu in Nīlācala (Madhya 16.19–26). His three sons were Caitanya dāsa, Rāmadāsa and Paramānanda (Kavikarṇapūra). On Karṇapūra's dīkṣā-guru (Śivānanda's guru and family priest) Śrīnātha Paṇḍita, see Ādi 10.107. Seeing Vāsudeva Datta's lavish spending, Mahāprabhu ordered Śivānanda to act as his sarakhela (manager) (Madhya 15.93–97).

Śrī Mahāprabhu bestows mercy on the devotees in three ways — "sākṣāt," "āveśa" and "āvirbhāva." Śivānanda Sena experienced and tasted these three rasas (Antya, Chapter 2), and the story of his dog, who longed to see Gaura's feet, is told in Antya, Chapter 1. When Raghunātha dāsa Gosvāmī Prabhu fled to Nīlācala to see the Lord, Govardhana sent Śivānanda a letter and learned news of his son. He then sent a cook, a servant and much money for Raghunātha's comfort, and the next year Śivānanda took them to Nīlācala (Antya 6.245–267). Once in Nīlācala Śivānanda invited the Lord and fed Him a very heavy meal. The Lord's mind was not fully pleased, so the next day Śivānanda's son Caitanya dāsa fed the Lord foods that aid digestion and satisfied Him (Antya 10.124–151).

Once, on the way to Nīlācala, while Śivānanda was settling matters at the toll station (ghāṭi), Nityānanda and all the others found no lodging and had to stay under a tree in a nearby village. Nitāi, feigning hunger and anger, cursed: "May Śivānanda's three sons die!" Śivānanda's wife, fearing misfortune, began to weep. Śivānanda came from the toll station, heard everything and spoke to his wife in praise of his own good fortune. As soon as he came to Nitāi, he received the good fortune of being kicked by Nitāi. Seeing this, Śivānanda's nephew Śrīkānta took offense and went alone to the Lord. The Lord, the indweller of the heart, forgave and consoled him. On that same visit the Lord put His big toe into Purīdāsa's mouth; at first the boy kept a vow of silence, and later, on another day, by the Lord's order he composed a verse (Antya 16.15–75). At that time the Lord ordered Govinda: "As long as Śivānanda's wife and sons are here, let them receive the plate of My remnants" (Antya 12.15–53).

His three sons —

62 Caitanya dāsa, Rāmadāsa and Karṇapūra, the three sons of Śivānanda, were heroic devotees of the Lord.

Anubhāṣya.

Caitanya dāsa was Śivānanda's eldest son. His commentary on the Kṛṣṇa-karṇāmṛta, with a translation by Śrīmad Bhaktivinoda Ṭhākura, was published in the journal Śrī Sajjana-toṣaṇī. In the opinion of those who know, he, and not Kavi-karṇapūra, is the author of the Sanskrit mahākāvya (great poem) called Caitanya-carita.

Rāmadāsa was the middle son. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 145): “The two parrots famous in Vṛndāvana, Dakṣa and Vicakṣaṇa, have now been born as my elder brothers, Caitanya and Rāmadāsa.”

Karṇapūra is Paramānanda dāsa, also called Purīdāsa or Kavi-karṇapūra. He was a disciple of Śrīnātha Paṇḍita of the Advaita branch. He composed the Ānanda-vṛndāvana-campū, the Alaṅkāra-kaustubha, the mahākāvya Śrī Caitanya-carita (?), the play Śrī Caitanya-candrodaya, the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā and other books. He was born in 1448 Śaka and wrote books until 1498 Śaka.

(24b) Śrī Śivānanda's two nephews —

63 Śrī Vallabha Sena and Śrīkānta Sena, related to Śivānanda, were wholly devoted to the Lord.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Vallabha Sena and Śrīkānta Sena were the sons of Śivānanda's sister. When they were coming to Purī, Nityānanda Prabhu abused, cursed and kicked their maternal uncle Śivānanda. Śrīkānta took offense, left the party and came to Mahāprabhu ahead of the others. The omniscient Lord knew this and told Govinda to give him His own prasāda for as long as he stayed in Nīlācala. At the Ratha-yātrā these two brothers were singers in Mukunda's party, one of the seven kīrtana parties (Madhya 13.41). In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 174): “She who in Vraja was Kātyāyanī is now Śrīkānta Sena.”

(25) Śrī Govindānanda and (26) Śrī Govinda Datta —

64 Govindānanda, dear to the Lord, was a great devotee, and Śrī Govinda Datta was the leading singer in the Lord’s kīrtana.

Anubhāṣya.

Govindānanda was Mahāprabhu's companion in His first kīrtana in Navadvīpa. On the day the Lord drank water at Śrīdhara's house, he wept. He went to Puruṣottama for the Ratha-yātrā.

Govinda Datta was the Lord's companion in kīrtana in Navadvīpa and sang kīrtana with Mahāprabhu as the lead singer (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9): "… he who, as lead singer, performs kīrtana with the Lord." His śrīpāṭa is in the village of Sukhacara on the southern border of Khaḍadaha.

(27) Śrī Vijaya dāsa —

65 Śrī Vijaya dāsa was the Lord's copyist; he wrote out many books for Him.

Anubhāṣya.

Vijaya dāsa was a scribe of Navadvīpa, one of the nine nidhis. He copied many books for the Lord, and for this Gaurahari gave him the name "Ratnabāhu." On the mercy Mahāprabhu showed Vijaya in Śuklāmbara's house, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 25.

(28) Akiñcana Kṛṣṇadāsa —

66 The Lord named him Ratnabāhu, "Jewel-armed." Akiñcana Kṛṣṇadāsa, too, was dear to the Lord.

Anubhāṣya.

Akiñcana Kṛṣṇadāsa lived in Navadvīpa and was the Lord's companion. He came to Puruṣottama for the Ratha-yātrā. See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9.

(29) The virtues of Śrīdhara —

67 Śrīdhara, who sold cups of banana bark, was a dear servant of the Lord, and the Lord was always joking with him.

68 Every day the Lord took banana pith, banana flowers and fruit from him, and once He drank water from his broken iron pot.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīdhara was a poor brāhmaṇa of Navadvīpa who lived on what the banana groves gave him. On the Lord's snatching from Śrīdhara, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 8; on the Lord's mercy to Śrīdhara during the sāt-prahariyā bhāva, Madhya, Chapter 9; on Śrīdhara's dancing when he heard the kīrtana on the day the Kazi was subdued, the beginning of Madhya, Chapter 23; on the Lord's drinking water in great joy from his old, holed iron pot, the end of Madhya, Chapter 23; and on how, the night before His sannyāsa, the Lord had Śacīdevī cook the gourd Śrīdhara had brought and ate it, Madhya, Chapter 16. He used to go to Puruṣottama for the Ratha-yātrā. According to Karṇapūra he is one of the twelve gopālas, "Kusumāsava-gopāla." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 133): "Paṇḍita Śrīdhara, the brāhmaṇa famed as a seller of kholā (banana bark), was in Vraja the jester named Kusumāsava."

(30) Śrī Bhagavān Paṇḍita —

69 Bhagavān Paṇḍita was a servant very dear to the Lord; once Kṛṣṇa had dwelt within his body.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhagavān Paṇḍita. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9: "The scribe Paṇḍita Bhagavān set out, in whose body Kṛṣṇa had resided."

(31) Śrī Jagadīśa Paṇḍita and (32) Hiraṇya —

70 Jagadīśa Paṇḍita and Hiraṇya Mahāśaya received the compassionate Lord's mercy when He was still a child.

71 In these two houses, on the day of Ekādaśī, the Lord begged for the food offered to Viṣṇu and ate it Himself.

Anubhāṣya.

Jagadīśa Paṇḍita. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 192): "Two other wives of the sacrificing brāhmaṇas are Śrī Jagadīśa and Hiraṇya, whose food the Lord begged and ate on Ekādaśī." Verse 143: "He who in Vraja was Candrahāsa, a dancer expert in rasa, is this Śrī Jagadīśa Paṇḍita, who delights in dancing." How on the day of Ekādaśī the Lord ate the food offered to Viṣṇu in the house of Hiraṇya and Jagadīśa is described in CC Ādi 11.30 and 14.39 and in the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 4. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Jagadīśa Paṇḍita is the abode of supreme effulgence; Nityānanda with His associates is his wealth and life."

Hiraṇya Paṇḍita. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 5: Nityānanda, alone and wearing very costly ornaments, was staying in Navadvīpa in the house of a good brāhmaṇa named Hiraṇya Paṇḍita. A chief of robbers tried again and again to take those ornaments from His body, but in the end, his plans frustrated, he took shelter at Nitāi's feet.

(33) Śrī Puruṣottama and (34) Śrī Sañjaya —

72 Puruṣottama and Sañjaya, two great souls, were the Lord's pupils in grammar.

Anubhāṣya.

Puruṣottama and Sañjaya. These two paṇḍitas lived in Navadvīpa: first they were the Lord's students, and later, when the kīrtana began, His companions. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 10: "… Mukunda Sañjaya, a servant for many births. Puruṣottama dāsa is his son. Every day Gauracandra goes to teach at that fortunate man's home. The Lord first comes and sits in the Caṇḍī-maṇḍapa, and then the students gather one by one." Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9: "Puruṣottama Sañjaya set out with a joyful heart, he who was formerly the Lord's chief student." Thus, according to the description in the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Puruṣottama Sañjaya is the son of Mukunda Sañjaya. But Kavirāja Gosvāmī, intending to speak of two persons named "Puruṣottama" and "Sañjaya," used these two words three times and so corrected the idea of the Caitanya-bhāgavata.

(35) The branch of Śrī Vanamālī Paṇḍita —

73 Vanamālī Paṇḍita is a branch renowned throughout the world; he saw a golden club and plough in the Lord's hands.

Anubhāṣya.

Vanamālī Paṇḍita. "The auspicious Vanamālī Paṇḍita set out, he who saw the golden plough and club." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 144): "He who in Vraja, named Mālādhara, held the veṇu and the muralī (flutes) is now called Vanamālī Paṇḍita and is dear to Gaura." He saw the Lord in the mood of Baladeva. CC Ādi 17.119 and the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9: in Śrīvāsa's house the Lord ascended the throne of Viṣṇu, took the plough and club from Nityānanda Prabhu and displayed a pastime; but it is not mentioned there that on that day Vanamālī Paṇḍita saw a golden plough and club in the Lord's hands.

(36) Śrī Buddhimanta Khān —

74 Buddhimanta Khān was very dear to Śrī Caitanya; obedient to Him all his life, he was among His chief servants.

Anubhāṣya.

Buddhimanta Khān was a wealthy devotee of Navadvīpa. He bore all the expenses of the Lord's second marriage, to Viṣṇupriyā Devī, the daughter of the royal paṇḍita Sanātana Miśra. When the Lord suffered a disorder of vāyu (air in the body), he arranged His treatment. He was the Lord's companion in water sports and in kīrtana, and in Candraśekhara's house, when the Lord enacted the play in the guise of Mahā-lakṣmī, he collected the clothes, ornaments and other things. He went to Nīlācala for the Ratha-yātrā.

(37) Śrī Garuḍa Paṇḍita —

75 Garuḍa Paṇḍita constantly chanted the auspicious holy name, and by the power of the name even a snake's poison could not harm him.

Anubhāṣya.

Garuḍa Paṇḍita lived in Navadvīpa and was the Lord's companion. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9: "Śrī Garuḍa Paṇḍita set out joyfully, he whom snake poison could not overcome by the power of the holy name." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 17): "Garuḍa Paṇḍita is now he who was formerly known as Garuḍa."

(38) Śrī Gopīnātha Siṁha —

76 Gopīnātha Siṁha was a servant of Śrī Caitanya, and the Lord would jokingly call him Akrūra.

Anubhāṣya.

Gopīnātha Siṁha. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 9 (at the Ratha-yātrā): "Gopīnātha Siṁha Mahāśaya set out, he whom Gauracandra calls 'Akrūra.'" In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 117): "He who was formerly named Akrūra is this Gopīnātha Siṁha."

(5a) The branch of Devānanda Paṇḍita —

77 Devānanda, the reciter of the Bhāgavata, is an offshoot of Vakreśvara's branch. By Vakreśvara's mercy he received from the Lord the devotional meaning of the Bhāgavata.

Anubhāṣya.

Devānanda. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 21: "The Lord Viśvambhara went to the embankment of Maheśvara Viśārada, the father of Sārvabhauma. There Devānanda Paṇḍita lived." CC Madhya 1.153: "In the village of Kuliyā He bestowed His mercy on Devānanda." He desired liberation (he was a mumukṣu) and used to recite the Bhāgavatam. One day, during his recitation, Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita began to weep, and Devānanda's godless students drove Śrīvāsa out (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapters 9 and 21). Long afterwards, one day Mahāprabhu came that way and saw Devānanda explaining the Bhāgavatam. In anger the Lord sharply rebuked Devānanda, who had no faith in the Vaiṣṇavas. Devānanda had no faith in Mahāprabhu either. But by his great good fortune Vakreśvara Paṇḍita once stayed at his house and sang kīrtana of Kṛṣṇa. Then by Vakreśvara's grace Devānanda understood the Lord's greatness, and the Lord told him to explain the Bhāgavatam in terms of devotion. He is Bhāguri Muni, the court paṇḍita of Nanda in Vraja: see the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 106 and 77.

(39) Mukunda, (40) Narahari, (41) Cirañjīva and (42) Sulocana of Śrī Khaṇḍa —

78–79 Mukunda dāsa, Śrī Raghunandana, Narahari dāsa, Ciranjīva and Sulocana, all of Śrīkhaṇḍa, are great branches, abodes of Śrī Caitanya's mercy. Everywhere they give away the fruits and flowers of love.

Anubhāṣya.

Mukunda dāsa was the son of Nārāyaṇa dāsa and the elder brother of Narahari Sarakāra Ṭhākura; the middle brother's name was Mādhava dāsa. His son was Raghunandana. Raghunandana's descendants still live in the village of Śrīkhaṇḍa, four miles west of Kāṭoyā. Raghunandana's son was Kānāi, and Kānāi had two sons: Madana Rāya (a disciple of Narahari Ṭhākura) and Vaṁśīvadana. In this family somewhat more than four hundred persons have been born up to the present. Their unbroken genealogy is kept at Śrīkhaṇḍa. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (verse 170): "She who was formerly the mistress of Vraja, named Vṛndā-devī, is now Śrī Mukunda dāsa of Khaṇḍa, dear to the Lord." For a description of Mukunda's most wonderful love for Kṛṣṇa, see this book, Madhya 15.113–131.

Raghunandana served the Deity of Śrī Gaura (see the Bhakti-ratnākara, eighth wave). In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 70): "The third vyūha, Pradyumna, became the dear confidential friend (priya-narma-sakha) who assisted Rādhā and Mādhava in Their pastimes in Vraja." He is the third vyūha, Pradyumna Viṣṇu (see "Mukunda dāsa" above). For a description of the great festival at Śrīkhaṇḍa, see the Bhakti-ratnākara, ninth wave.

Narahari dāsa Sarakāra Ṭhākura. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 177[13]): "She who was formerly Madhumatī in Vṛndāvana, a dearest friend, is now the one called Narahari Sarakāra, dear to the Lord." His disciple was Śrī Locana dāsa Ṭhākura of Kogrāma near Jhāmaṭapura, the author of the Śrī Caitanya-maṅgala. In that book Śrī Gadādhara and Śrī Narahari are described as most dear to Śrī Mahāprabhu. In the Caitanya-bhāgavata, however, there is hardly any special mention of the residents of Khaṇḍa.

Cirañjīva and Sulocana were both residents of Khaṇḍa. Their homes can still be seen in Śrīkhaṇḍa, and their descendants are living. Cirañjīva Sena had two sons: the elder, Rāmacandra Kavirāja, was a disciple of Śrīnivāsa Ācārya and a companion of Ṭhākura Mahāśaya; the younger was Govinda dāsa Kavirāja, the composer of padas. Cirañjīva's wife was Sunandā, and his father-in-law was Dāmodara Sena Kavirāja of Khaṇḍa. Cirañjīva formerly lived in the village of Kumāranagara on the bank of the Bhāgīrathī (Bhakti-ratnākara).

Cirañjīva is Candrikā of Vraja. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 197 and 207: "Cirañjīva and Sulocana of Khaṇḍa, great through their association with Narahari, whose only shelter is Gaurāṅga."

Residents of Kulīnagrāma — (20b) Rāmānanda, (20c) Yadunātha, (20d) Puruṣottama, (20e) Śaṅkara, (20f) Vidyānanda —

80 From Kulīna-grāma came Satyarāja, Rāmānanda, Yadunātha, Puruṣottama, Śaṅkara and Vidyānanda.[4]

Anubhāṣya.

Rāmānanda Vasu. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa: "Kalakaṇṭhī and Sukaṇṭhī, the two singer-actresses in Vraja, are Rāmānanda Vasu and Satyarāja respectively." Yadunātha, Puruṣottama, Śaṅkara, Vidyānanda and the others were all born in the Vasu family. Everyone in this Vasu family was a devotee of Kṛṣṇa and highly skilled in dramatic performances of Kṛṣṇa's pastimes; the memory of these performances is preserved even today. They were pure devotees, followers of Haridāsa Ṭhākura. See the comment on verse 48 above.

(20g) The glory of the residents of Kulīnagrāma headed by Vāṇīnātha Vasu —

81 Vāṇīnātha Vasu and all the other villagers were servants of Śrī Caitanya, and He was the treasure of their lives.

82 The Lord said, "Even a dog of Kulīna-grāma is dear to Me — what to speak of its people!

83 "The good fortune of the people of Kulīna-grāma is beyond words: even the Ḍoma who herds the pigs there sings of Kṛṣṇa."

(43) The branch of Śrī Sanātana, (44) Śrī Rūpa and (45) Śrī Anupama —

84 Anupama Vallabha, Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana are counted as the three branches on the western side of the tree.

Anubhāṣya.

Anupama was the father of Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī and the younger brother of the two Gosvāmīs, Śrī Sanātana and Śrī Rūpa. His former name was Śrī Vallabha, and the name "Anupama" was given him by Śrī Mahāprabhu. Because the brothers served the Bādaśāha of Gauḍa, they bore the title "Mallika." "Anupama Mallika — his name was Śrī Vallabha; Śrī Rūpa Gosāñi's younger brother, a great Vaiṣṇava." (CC Madhya 19.36)

In the twelfth century of the Śaka era, in the land of Karṇāṭa, in a royal family of brāhmaṇas, there arose a great soul named Sarvajña, a jagad-guru of the Bharadvāja gotra. His son Aniruddha had two sons, Rūpeśvara and Harihara. Both were deprived of the kingdom, and the elder, Rūpeśvara, settled in Śikharabhūmi. Rūpeśvara's son Padmanābha settled in a village called Naihāṭī on the bank of the Gaṅgā and had five sons. The son of the youngest of them, Mukunda, was Kumāradeva, a man of exemplary conduct, the father of Sanātana, Rūpa and Anupama. Kumāradeva lived in Bākalā-Candradvīpa; his home was in a place called Phateyābāda, in what was then the province of Yaśohara. Of his several sons, three accepted the Vaiṣṇava dharma. Śrī Vallabha, together with his elder brothers Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Sanātana, moved from Candradvīpa for their work to the village of Rāmakeli in Gauḍa. There Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī was born. Because they served in the Nawab's government, all three received the title “Mallika.” When Śrī Mahāprabhu went to Rāmakeli, Anupama met Him for the first time. When Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī gave up worldly work and set out for Śrī Vṛndāvana, seeking Śrī Mahāprabhu's feet, Vallabha became his companion. For the description of their meeting with Mahāprabhu at Prayāga, see Madhya, Chapter 19.

From Śrī Mahāprabhu, Śrī Rūpa and Anupama went to Vṛndāvana. This is known from Śrī Mahāprabhu's words to Sanātana: “Rūpa and Anupama, both went to Vṛndāvana” (CC Madhya 20.66). At that time Subuddhi Rāya was living in the city of Mathurā, selling dry wood; with this he maintained himself and served other Vaiṣṇavas. When Śrī Rūpa and Anupama reached him, he was especially pleased and took them with him through the twelve forests of Vṛndāvana. The two brothers stayed a month in Vṛndāvana and then came to Prayāga along the Gaṅgā in search of Śrī Sanātana Gosvāmī. But Śrī Sanātana came to Mathurā by the royal road, and the three brothers could not meet. Subuddhi Rāya told Sanātana about Anupama and Rūpa. Anupama and Śrī Rūpa both came to Kāśī, heard everything from Mahāprabhu, and after ten days set out for Gauḍa. Having settled their worldly affairs there, both set out for Nīlācala by Śrī Mahāprabhu's order. In 1436 Śaka, on the way, on the bank of the Gaṅgā, Anupama attained the abode of Śrī Rāmacandra. Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī informed Śrīman Mahāprabhu in Nīlācala that his younger brother had attained that abode.

Because Vallabha was a worshipper of Śrī Rāma, he could not fully accept the path of worship in Vraja shown by Śrīman Mahāprabhu. He knew Śrīman Mahāprabhu to be Śrī Rāmacandra Himself. In the book Bhakti-ratnākara it is written of Anupama: “Śrī Gaurasundara gave him the name Anupama. He was always absorbed in serving the Deity of Raghunātha and knew no one but Raghunātha. Caitanya Gosāñi is Śrī Raghunātha Himself.”

Śrī Rūpa. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 180): “She who was formerly known in Vṛndāvana as Śrī Rūpa-mañjarī has now become manifest as the one called Rūpa Gosvāmī.” Bhakti-ratnākara, ninth wave: “Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī wrote sixteen books: (1) the poem Haṁsadūta and (2) the Uddhava-sandeśa; (3) the Kṛṣṇa-janma-tithi-vidhi, with its countless injunctions; (4) the Gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, both the large and the small; (5) the Stava-mālā; (6) the Vidagdha-mādhava, full of rasa; (7) the Lalita-mādhava, the very limit of vipralambha; (8) the Dāna-līlā-kaumudī, a great ocean of bliss — (9) known by this name, the Dāna-keli-kaumudī; (10) the incomparable book Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu; (11) the book Śrī Ujjvala-nīlamaṇi, full of rasa; the most sweet book (12) Prayuktākhyāta-candrikā; (13) the Mathurā-mahimā, (14) the well-known Padyāvalī; (15) the Nāṭaka-candrikā, (16) the Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta. At the Vaiṣṇavas' wish he composed eleven verses and gave them to Kṛṣṇadāsa Kavirāja to elaborate. The Gosvāmī also composed separate prayers (stavas); collected by Śrī Jīva, they were named the Stava-mālā. Briefly he also set out the characteristics of the viruda; the Govinda-virudāvalī is its example." See CC Madhya 1.35–44 and Antya 4.219–231.

Śrī Rūpa's giving up worldly affairs — Madhya 19.4; his division of wealth — 7; his coming to Prayāga and meeting the Lord — 37 and 45; his honoring prasāda with Anupama in Vallabha Bhaṭṭa's house — 88; the Lord's instruction at Prayāga — 135–233; the Lord's order to go to Vṛndāvana — 237; Rūpa's return to Gauḍa and Anupama's attaining the Gaṅgā (leaving his body on the Gaṅgā) — Antya 1.37; his coming to Ṭhākura Haridāsa's hut in Śrī Kṣetra and meeting the Lord and His associates — 48 and 54; the Lord's praise of Śrī Rūpa's handwriting; the verse in accord with the feelings of the Lord's heart; the beginning of the Lalita-mādhava and Vidagdha-mādhava and the praise of Śrī Rāma Rāya — 68–192; the Lord's wish to reveal the scriptures of devotion and His order to Śrī Rūpa to go to Vṛndāvana — 202, 216; Rūpa's going to Vṛndāvana — 211; his meeting Sanātana Prabhu when Sanātana came to Vṛndāvana — Antya 4.213; and his carrying out Gaura's order — 217–222.

Sanātana. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 181): "She who was formerly Rati-mañjarī, dearest to Rūpa-mañjarī, and whom the wise call by another name, Lavaṅga-mañjarī, is now Sanātana, whose body is non-different from Gaura's and who is worshipped by all. For some purpose Sanātana, the jewel among sages, also entered him." Bhakti-ratnākara, first wave: "Śrī Sanātana's guru was Vidyāvācaspati; from time to time he stayed in the village of Rāmakeli. Under him Sanātana studied all the scriptures. I cannot describe how great his devotion to his guru was. His father, on seeing a yavana, would perform atonement, yet he himself constantly had to keep company with such yavanas. Depending on them, he went to the yavanas' houses, and so he considered himself equal to a mleccha. Therefore he considered himself utterly low and wretched. Sinking into the ocean of humility, he considered himself lower than the mlecchas and others.

With people of low birth he always behaved humbly; that is why he spoke of himself as ‘of low birth and so on.’ Though a king among brāhmaṇas, with deep sorrow in his heart he never thought of himself as a brāhmaṇa.”

Bhakti-ratnākara, first wave: “Sanātana Gosvāmī's four books: the two parts of the Bhāgavatāmṛta with commentary; the commentary on the Hari-bhakti-vilāsa, the Dig-darśinī; the ṭippanī on the Tenth Canto named Vaiṣṇava-toṣaṇī; and the Līlā-stava, which is called the Daśama-carita. These are the four books of Sanātana Gosvāmī. In fourteen hundred seventy-six (1476) the Bṛhat (that is, the Vaiṣṇava-toṣaṇī) was completed, and in fifteen hundred four Śaka (1504) the well-accepted Laghu-toṣaṇī. (Mahāprabhu) through Rāmānanda destroyed the pride of Kandarpa, through Dāmodara revealed indifference (nairapekṣya), through Haridāsa made tolerance known, and through Sanātana and Rūpa revealed humility.”

Sanātana's pondering how to give up worldly affairs — Madhya 19.13; his study of the Bhāgavatam on the pretext of illness — 15; the Bādaśāha's coming to see him — 18; his imprisonment by the Bādaśāha — 27; his refusal to go with the Bādaśāha to war in Orissa — 29; the letter Rūpa sent to Sanātana in prison when leaving home — 32 and 20.3; his release by bribing the jailer — 4; his escape with his only servant Īśāna, saving himself from the clutches of a robber chief by giving eight mohars, crossing the mountains with the robber's help, dismissing Īśāna and going on alone — 16–25; his meeting with his sister's husband Śrīkānta at Hājipura, his refusal to stay there, and the Bhoṭa blanket he accepted from him — 38–44; his arrival in Vārāṇasī and meeting the Lord in Candraśekhara's house — 51; how he had himself shaved, changed his dress and made an outer cloth and kaupīna from the old cloth given by Tapana Miśra — 68–77; alms in the house of a Mahārāṣṭrian brāhmaṇa — 79; his questions to the Lord about the truth and the Lord's teaching: (1) knowledge of sambandha — 20.98 through the whole of Chapter 21; (2) abhidheya — the whole of Chapter 22; (3) prayojana — 23.3–93; the order to Sanātana to write the conclusions of devotion, restore lost holy places, establish a Vaiṣṇava society by compiling the Vaiṣṇava smṛti, and spread the scriptures of devotion — 97; the blessing — 118; the explanation to him of the ātmārāma verse, first in eighteen and then in sixty-one ways — 24.4–308; Sanātana's going to Mathurā by the royal road and meeting Subuddhi Rāya — 203–204; Sanātana's coming again to Nīlācala by the Jhārikhaṇḍa route — Antya 4.3; his resolve to give up his body under the wheel of the chariot — 12; meeting Haridāsa and seeing the Lord with His associates — 14–22; hearing of Anupama's attaining the Gaṅgā and of his glory — 30–47; the Lord's disapproval of Sanātana's resolve to give up his body — 54–65; the Lord's wish to accomplish His own purposes through Sanātana Gosvāmī — 76–88; Sanātana's description of the glory of Haridāsa Ṭhākura — 100–103; his walking to the Lord over hot sand, keeping to propriety for fear of touching the servants of Jagannātha, and the Lord's satisfaction on seeing this — 115–131; his request, on Jagadānanda's words, for permission to go to Vṛndāvana — 141–155; the Lord's praise of Sanātana — 163–170; the Lord's love for Sanātana's transcendental body and His embrace, by which he obtained a divine body — 172–198; the Lord's order to stay a year in Nīlācala — 200; His sending him to Vṛndāvana — 207; his going to Vṛndāvana and meeting Śrī Rūpa after a long time — 213; and his carrying out Gaura's order — 217–222.

The śrīpāṭa of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Sanātana Gosvāmīs is Śrī Rāmakeli ("Gupta Vṛndāvana," the hidden Vṛndāvana), about eight miles south of the present town of Iṁrejabājāra. The following places can be seen there: (1) the Deity Śrī Śrī Madana-mohana, installed by Śrī Sanātana; (2) the keli-kadamba tree: tradition says that beneath this tree, at midnight, Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Sanātana Gosvāmīs met Śrīman Mahāprabhu, and Mahāprabhu with His associates gave the devotees the nectar of prema; (3) the Rūpa-sāgara, a large pond made by Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī Prabhu. To dredge this pond and restore the lost glory of the Śrī Rāmakeli pāṭa, the "Rāmakeli Restoration Committee" (Rāmakeli-saṁskāra-samiti) was founded at Māladaha on 8.6.24 (English calendar).

(44a) Śrī Jīva —

85 Among them Rūpa and Sanātana are the great branch, and Anupama, Jīva, Rājendra and others are its offshoots.

Anubhāṣya.

Of Jīva the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 203) says: "Jīva, the son of Śrī Vallabha, is gentle, learned and handsome." According to verse 195, in the pastimes of Vraja he is Vilāsa-mañjarī. As a boy Śrī Jīva loved the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam. Later he came to Navadvīpa and, following Śrī Nityānanda, walked around Śrī Navadvīpa-dhāma and saw its holy places. From there he went to Kāśī and studied all the scriptures under Madhusūdana Vācaspati; then he went to Vṛndāvana and took shelter of Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana. The Śrī Bhakti-ratnākara (first wave) says: "Twenty-five books of Śrī Jīva are known: (1) the grammar Harināmāmṛta, wonderful in its design; (2) the Sūtra-mālikā; (3) the excellent Dhātu-saṅgraha; (4) the most wonderful book Kṛṣṇārcā-dīpikā; (5) the Gopāla-virudāvalī; (6) the Rasāmṛta-śeṣa; (7) the Śrī Mādhava-mahotsava, excellent in every part; (8) the book Śrī Saṅkalpa-kalpavṛkṣa; (9) the most wonderful campū Bhāvārtha-sūcaka; (10) a commentary on the Gopāla-tāpanī; (11) a commentary on the Brahma-saṁhitā; (12) a commentary on the Rasāmṛta (13) and on the Śrī Ujjvala; (14) a commentary on the Yogasāra-stava, in which everything is well reconciled; (15) a commentary on the Śrī Gāyatrī of the Agni Purāṇa; (16) the marks on Śrī Kṛṣṇa's feet according to the Padma Purāṇa; (17) separately, the marks on Śrī Rādhikā's hands and feet; (18) the Gopāla-campū in two parts, Pūrva and Uttara — what a wonder he described, the whole world knows; (19–25) the seven famous Sandarbhas, which follow the Bhāgavatam: the Krama-, Tattva-, Bhagavat-, Paramātma-, Kṛṣṇa-, Bhakti- and Prīti-sandarbha."

After Śrī Rūpa, Sanātana and the others withdrew from view, he stood at the head of the Gauḍīya Vaiṣṇava sampradāya as its foremost ācārya in Gauḍa, Utkala and Māthura-maṇḍala. He proclaimed to everyone the truth that Śrī Gaurasundara had preached and brought them to the worship of Hari. From time to time he walked around Vraja-dhāma with the devotees and went to Mathurā to see Viṭṭhala-deva. Śrīla Kavirāja Gosvāmī wrote the Caitanya-caritāmṛta while Śrī Jīva was still present. Some time later Śrī Jīva gave Śrīnivāsa, Narottama and Duḥkhī Kṛṣṇadāsa, who had come from Gauḍa, the names "Ācārya," "Ṭhākura" and "Śyāmānanda," and sent them to Gauḍa with all the books of the Gosvāmīs to preach the holy name and prema. First he heard the news that the books had been stolen, and later the news that they had been recovered. He gave the name "Kavirāja" to Śrīnivāsa's disciple Rāmacandra Sena and to Rāmacandra's younger brother Govinda. While he was still present, Śrīla Jāhnavā Devī came to Vṛndāvana with a few devotees. When devotees arrived from Gauḍa, he arranged prasāda for them and showed them where to stay. His disciple Śrī Kṛṣṇadāsa Adhikārī gave a list of the books of Śrī Rūpa, Sanātana and Jīva in his own book.

In the ignorant sampradāya of the prākṛta-sahajiyās three slanders against Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī Prabhu are current. The sahajiyās have turned away from Kṛṣṇa, and these slanders grow from enmity toward Hari, guru and Vaiṣṇavas; by spreading them they only increase their offenses.

(1) A digvijayī paṇḍita who hungered for worldly fame obtained from the selfless Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana a written admission of defeat, and so declared Śrī Jīva's gurus (Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana) to be ignorant; then he demanded the same document from Śrī Jīva. Hearing this, Śrī Jīva Prabhu defeated the digvijayī and silenced the tongue of the guru's slanderer. In this way he showed that he honored even the luster of the nails on his Gurudeva's feet, and gave the example of a true disciple, for whom the guru is his deity and his very self[14]. These sahajiyās say that such conduct contradicted the humility of one "lower than a blade of grass" and the duty to honor others; therefore Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī Prabhu rebuked him sharply and sent him away, and later, at a sign from Śrī Sanātana Gosvāmī Prabhu, accepted Śrī Jīva Prabhu again.

On the day when, by Kṛṣṇa's mercy, these opponents of guru and Vaiṣṇavas understand that they are eternal servants of guru and Vaiṣṇavas, they will receive the mercy of Śrī Jīva Prabhu. Then they will truly become "lower than a blade of grass" and "giving honor to others," and will become qualified for the kīrtana of the holy name.

(2) Some ignorant people say: Śrī Jīva saw how beautifully Kavirāja Gosvāmī Prabhu had written the Caritāmṛta and how it revealed the glory of the transcendental rasa of Vraja. He feared for his own fame, envy arose in him, and he threw the original Caritāmṛta into a well. Hearing of this, Kavirāja Gosvāmī gave up his body. And the Caritāmṛta, they say, came to light again only because his disciple named "Mukunda" had earlier copied the original manuscript; otherwise the book would have vanished from the world.

Such fabrications, born of hatred for Vaiṣṇavas, are utterly false and absurd.

(3) Certain other libertines, devoted to gratifying their senses, say: Śrī Jīva Prabhu did not accept the parakīyā-rasa of the gopīs of Vraja, which Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī accepts, and approved the svakīyā-rasa; therefore he was not a rasika devotee, and his example is not to be followed.

During his lifetime Śrī Jīva saw that some devotees among his followers had a taste for svakīyā-rasa. For their good he took their qualification (adhikāra) into account. He also feared that unqualified people would fail to grasp the beauty and glory of the transcendental, supreme and most wonderful parakīyā-rasa of Vraja, would try to imitate it themselves and so fall into debauchery. For this reason Śrī Jīva Prabhu, the ācārya of the Vaiṣṇavas, accepted the svakīyā doctrine. But one must not conclude from this that he opposed the transcendental parakīyā-rasa of Vraja, for he himself is the foremost follower of Śrī Rūpa and one of the śikṣā-gurus of Śrīla Kavirāja Gosvāmī himself.

The spread of the branch of Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana, and their work —

86 By the gardener's wish these branches grew so vast that they covered all the western lands.

The deliverance of all India —

87 They spread as far as the banks of the Sindhu and the Himālaya, over Vṛndāvana, Mathurā and every holy place.

*Everyone maddened by prema —*

88 The fruits of love from these two branches flooded everything, and tasting them the people grew mad with love.

(1) Establishing the conduct of devotion —

89 The people of the west were all foolish and of degraded conduct; there the two brothers taught the good conduct of bhakti.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Through contact with the yavanas, the people of the western lands had partly lost the sense of their duty, and compared with the good customs of Bengal they lived largely without proper conduct. At that time, under the influence of the Muslims, they had strayed still further from proper conduct. By the mercy of Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana they became inclined to good conduct (sadācāra).

(2) Recovering the lost holy places and (3) spreading the worship of the Deities —

90 Guided by the scriptures they recovered the lost holy places, and in Vṛndāvana they spread the worship of the Deities.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The lost holy places are Śrī Śrī Rādhā-kuṇḍa and others. The Deities: they spread the worship of seven Deities — Śrī Madana-mohana, Śrī Govinda, Śrī Gopīnātha and others.

(45) Śrī Raghunātha dāsa —

91 Raghunātha dāsa was a dear servant of Mahāprabhu; giving up everything, he made his home at the Lord's feet.

Anubhāṣya.

Raghunātha dāsa was born in about 1416 Śaka in the village of "Śrī Kṛṣṇapura" in Hugalī district, in a family of Kāyasthas (by birth), in the house of Govardhana, the younger brother of Hiraṇya Majumadāra.

Śrī Kṛṣṇapura, where Śrīla Raghunātha dāsa Gosvāmī Prabhu appeared, lies a little more than a mile from Saptagrāma and about one and a half miles from Triśabighā station. There resides the Deity of Śrī Rādhā-Govinda, said to have been installed by Śrī Govardhana dāsa, the father of Śrīla Dāsa Gosvāmī Prabhu in his former āśrama. In front of the temple is a wide courtyard; there is no nāṭya-mandira, only a jagamohana. A year ago Śrīyukta Haricaraṇa Ghoṣa of Simlā, Calcutta, had the temple repaired. The temple courtyard is enclosed by a wall. In a small room next to the one where the Deity resides, a low stone seat (one and a half cubits long, one and a quarter cubits wide and three quarters of a cubit high) is shown as the "seat of worship" (bhajanāsana) of Śrīla Dāsa Gosvāmī Prabhu. Tradition says that Śrīla Dāsa Gosvāmī Prabhu sat on it and performed his worship. Beside the temple lies the Sarasvatī river, shallow and without current, thin and faded.

His forefathers were nearly Vaiṣṇavas and very wealthy. His dīkṣā-guru was Yadunandana Ācārya. Soon after entering family life he sought the shelter of Śrī Mahāprabhu. A little later, in 1439 Śaka, he seized an opportunity, left home for Puruṣottama, attained the cool lotus feet of Śrī Caitanya-deva and remained under the guidance of Dāmodara Svarūpa. He stayed there sixteen years; after the Lord withdrew from view, he came to Śrī Vṛndāvana and lived near Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana. Bhakti-ratnākara (first wave): "The three books of Raghunātha dāsa Gosvāmī: the Stava-mālā, which is called the Stavāvalī, the Śrī Dāna-carita and the sweet Mukta-carita."

He lived a very long life. Before Śrīnivāsa Ācārya returned from Vṛndāvana with the books, he received the mercy of Śrī Dāsa Gosvāmī, as the same book says in the sixth wave: "His body was extremely emaciated, weaker at every moment; he ate a little once in two or four days. Day and night he knew nothing but chanting the holy name; there was no sleep in his eyes, and streams of tears flowed from both. On seeing Śrī Dāsa Gosvāmī, Śrīnivāsa thought himself fortunate and fell at his feet. Śrī Dāsa Gosvāmī embraced Śrīnivāsa. Śrīnivāsa told him that he was going to Śrī Gauḍa. Hearing this, Śrī Gosvāmī gave his permission with his own lips." This took place after 1512 Śaka. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 186) says: "The former name of Dāsa Śrī Raghunātha is Rasa-mañjarī. Some call him Śrīmatī Rati-mañjarī, and some call him Bhānumatī; the difference is only in the name."

Śrī Raghunātha's service to Gaura under the guidance of Śrī Svarūpa —

92 The Lord placed him in the care of Svarūpa, with whom he rendered the Lord confidential service.

After Śrī Gaura and Svarūpa withdrew from view — coming to Vṛndāvana —

93 For sixteen years he served the Lord intimately, and when Svarūpa departed from this world, he came to Vṛndāvana.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Hidden service": those services to which outsiders have no access. The intimate services dear to the Lord, needed when He bathes, eats, rests, sings kīrtana and so on, are here also called antaraṅga-sevā, intimate service.

94 He thought, "In Vṛndāvana I shall see the feet of the two brothers, and then at Govardhana I shall give up my body by throwing myself from the hill."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Throwing myself down": falling from a high mountain peak.

Meeting with Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana —

95 With this resolve he came to Vṛndāvana and bowed down at the feet of Rūpa and Sanātana.

The third brother of Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana —

96 But the two brothers would not let him die; they kept him close by as their own third brother.

97 From his lips the two brothers constantly heard all the pastimes of Mahāprabhu, both outer and inner.

His daily practices —

98 He gave up food and water, to say nothing of anything else, taking only two or three palas of buttermilk.

Anubhāṣya.
Māṭhā: buttermilk.

99 Every day he offered a thousand prostrations, chanted a hundred thousand names and bowed down to two thousand Vaiṣṇavas.

100 Night and day he served Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa within his mind, and for one prahara he spoke of the life of Mahāprabhu.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“Day and night he served Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa within his mind”: together with chanting (kīrtana) the holy name, he meditated on the service of the eight periods of the day (aṣṭa-kālīya sevā).

101 At dawn, noon and evening he bathed in Rādhā-kuṇḍa without fail, and he embraced the Vaiṣṇavas of Vraja.

102 He spent seven and a half praharas a day in the practice of bhakti and slept for four daṇḍas — on some days not even that.

The author's conviction that he is the eternal servant of Rūpa and Raghunātha —

103 His way of practice is wonderful to hear of. These two, Rūpa and Raghunātha, are my masters.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Kṛṣṇadāsa Kavirāja Gosvāmī Prabhu regarded Śrīla Dāsa Gosvāmī and Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī as “my masters,” and at the end of every chapter he wrote: “Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Raghunātha, always hoping for their mercy, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.” Some want the word “Raghunātha” to mean Śrī Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa and call Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa the pāñcarātrika dīkṣā-guru of Kavirāja Gosvāmī; there is no evidence for this. The guru-succession of Kavirāja's branch does mention Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa as his dīkṣā-guru, but this mention does not establish any reliable truth.

104 How each of them met the Lord I shall describe in detail later.[5]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“Later”: for the Lord's meeting with Raghunātha see Antya, Chapter 6.

Anubhāṣya.
For the Lord's meeting with Śrī Rūpa see Madhya, Chapter 19, verse 45; for His meeting with Śrī Sanātana, Madhya, Chapter 20, verse 51; and for His meeting with Śrī Raghunātha, Antya, Chapter 6, verse 191.

(46) The branch of Śrī Gopāla Bhaṭṭa —

105 Śrī Gopāla Bhaṭṭa is a branch of the very highest order; he would converse about love with Rūpa and Sanātana.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Gopāla Bhaṭṭa was the son of Veṅkaṭa Bhaṭṭa, a resident of Raṅga-kṣetra, and the disciple of Prabodhānanda (formerly a follower of Rāmānuja, later a Gauḍīya). In 1433 Śaka, when Mahāprabhu stayed for the Cāturmāsya vow in Śrī Raṅga-kṣetra in the house of Veṅkaṭa Bhaṭṭa of the Śrī-sampradāya, Gopāla Bhaṭṭa served the Lord with all his heart. He received initiation from his paternal uncle, the tridaṇḍī Śrīmat Prabodhānanda Sarasvatī, as the Hari-bhakti-vilāsa (first vilāsa, verse 2) says: “Gopāla Bhaṭṭa, the disciple of Prabodhānanda, who is dear to the Lord, gathers the pastimes (vilāsas) of devotion to please Raghunātha dāsa, Rūpa and Sanātana.” Bhakti-ratnākara (first wave): “Gopāla's mother and father were most fortunate: they gave their minds and lives to the feet of Śrī Caitanya. They told their son to go to Vṛndāvana, and both departed remembering the Lord. After some time Gopāla went to Vṛndāvana and met Rūpa and Sanātana.  (To the Lord in Nīlācala) Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana wrote in a letter that Gopāla Bhaṭṭa had come to Vṛndāvana. (The Lord) rejoiced at Gopāla's coming and writes in a letter to His dear Rūpa and Sanātana: ‘Know Gopāla Bhaṭṭa to be your own brother.' * In Gopāla's name Śrī Gosvāmī Sanātana composed the Śrī Hari-bhakti-vilāsa. Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī loved him as his own life and entrusted him with the service of Śrī Rādhā-ramaṇa.  (To Kavirāja Gosvāmī) Śrī Gopāla Bhaṭṭa gladly gave his order, but forbade him to write about him in the book. Kavirāja could not disobey his order: he writes only his name and makes nothing else known. He always considered himself most lowly." — "All this I heard from the mouths of the elders" (the words of the author, Ghanaśyāma dāsa).

At the beginning of the Tattva-sandarbha, the first of the Ṣaṭ-sandarbha (after the obeisances to Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana), it is said: "A certain Bhaṭṭa, their friend, born in a family of southern brāhmaṇas, wrote a book after sifting what the elder Vaiṣṇavas had written. His original draft ran in order in some places, out of order in others, and in fragments in yet others. Having examined it and arranged it in order, the insignificant Jīva writes." That is: Śrī Gopāla Bhaṭṭa, the dear friend of the two masters Śrī Rūpa and Sanātana, a southerner born in a twice-born family, gathered arguments and other material from the books of the ancient Vaiṣṇava ācāryas — Śrī Madhva, Śrī Rāmānuja, Śrīdhara Svāmī and others — and wrote a book. What he wrote there in order in some places, out of order — that is, breaking the sequence — in others, and in fragments in yet others, I, a tiny jīva, have examined and now set down properly and in order. The same words appear at the beginning of the Bhagavat-sandarbha and the other Sandarbhas. Gopāla Bhaṭṭa is the author of the Sat-kriyā-sāra-dīpikā, the compiler of the Hari-bhakti-vilāsa and the first writer of the Ṣaṭ-sandarbha. "He wrote a commentary on the Kṛṣṇa-karṇāmṛta; hearing it, the Vaiṣṇavas feel the highest joy." He installed the Deity of Śrī Rādhā-ramaṇa. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 184) says: "She who was Anaṅga-mañjarī is now Gopāla Bhaṭṭa. Some call Bhaṭṭa Gosvāmī Śrī Guṇa-mañjarī." Śrīnivāsa Ācārya and Gopīnātha Pūjārī were his disciples.

(47) The branch of Śaṅkarāraṇya, (47a) Mukunda, (47b) Kāśīnātha, (47c) Rudra —

106 Śaṅkarāraṇya is one branch of the Ācārya's tree, and Mukunda, Kāśīnātha and Rudra are recorded as its offshoots.

Anubhāṣya.

Śaṅkarāraṇya. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 60) says: "His elder brother did not take a wife. He is Saṅkarṣaṇa, Bhagavān, who appeared on earth as Viśvarūpa. It is said that he passed his own splendor on to Purīśvara and, having taken sannyāsa earlier, withdrew from view." He withdrew from view in 1432 Śaka at the holy place Pāṇḍerapura in Śolāpura district — see Madhya, Chapter 9, verses 299–300.

Mukunda (Mukunda Sañjaya). Viśvambhara kept His school in Mukunda's house, and his son Puruṣottama was a student of the Lord.

Kāśīnātha was the brāhmaṇa paṇḍita who arranged Viśvambhara's wedding. He advised Rāja-paṇḍita Sanātana to give his daughter Viṣṇupriyā-devī in marriage to the Lord. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 50) says: "The brāhmaṇa whom Satrājit sent to Mādhava to arrange the marriage of Satyā — that matchmaker is now Śrī Kāśīnātha."

Rudra. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 135) says: "Kṛṣṇacandra's friend in Vraja named Varūthapa is now Rudra Paṇḍita, dear to Gaurāṅga."

Vallabhapura lies a mile north of Māheśa, the śrīpāṭa of Kamalākara Pippalāi. Here, in a large temple, resides Śrī Rādhā-vallabha Jiu, installed by Śrī Rudrarāma Paṇḍita, the son of Kāśīśvara Gosvāmī's sister. The present servitors of Śrī Rādhā-vallabha Jiu are the "Cakravartīs," descendants of Yadunandana Bandyopādhyāya Mahāśaya, the younger brother of Rudrarāma Paṇḍita. Formerly, at the time of the Ratha-yātrā, Śrī Jagannātha-deva used to come from Māheśa to the temple of Śrī Rādhā-vallabha Jiu at Vallabhapura, but from the (Bengali) year 1262 the custom was discontinued because of quarrels among the servitors of that Deity.

(48) Śrīnātha Paṇḍita, who received the mercy of Śrīman Mahāprabhu, a wonderful example of service to Śrī Kṛṣṇa —

107 Śrīnātha Paṇḍita received the Lord's mercy; seeing his service to Kṛṣṇa, the three worlds were captivated.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Śrīnātha Paṇḍita": a resident of Kāṁcaḍāpāḍā.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīnātha Paṇḍita. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 211) says: "He who skillfully expounded the Bhāgavata-saṁhitā, and whose glory is Kṛṣṇa-deva, who resides in Kumārahaṭṭa."

About one and a half miles from Kumārahaṭṭa, at Kāṁcaḍāpāḍā, is the place of Śivānanda Sena. There, in a very large temple, reside the Deity "Śrī Gaura-Gopāla," installed by Śivānanda, and the Deity of Śrī Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa named "Śrī Kṛṣṇa-rāya," installed by the brāhmaṇa Śrīnātha. In front of the temple are a large courtyard, a kitchen for cooking the offerings, a guesthouse and so on. The courtyard is enclosed by a high wall. This temple is larger even than the temple at Māheśa. The present temple was built in 1708 Śaka. In front of the temple a verse in the anuṣṭubh meter is engraved, giving the names of the temple's founder, his father and his grandfather, and the date. The temple was built by a wealthy man named Nimāi Mallika of Pāthuriyāghāṭā, Calcutta, now deceased. Śrīnātha Paṇḍita was a disciple of Śrī Advaitācārya; Śivānanda's third son, Paramānanda Kavi Karṇapūra, the author of the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā, received the mercy of Śrīnātha Paṇḍita. The Deity Śrī Kṛṣṇa-rāya probably manifested in the time of Kavi Karṇapūra. Tradition says that Vīrabhadra Prabhu brought a large and beautiful stone from Murśidābāda, and from it three Deities manifested: Śrī Rādhā-vallabha of Vallabhapura, Śrī Śyāmasundara of Khaḍadaha and Śrī Kṛṣṇa-rāya of Kāṁcaḍāpāḍā.

The old place of Śivānanda Sena is on the bank of the Gaṅgā; a small, almost ruined temple stood there. It is said that Nimāi Mallika was traveling to Kāśī, went ashore at this place, saw with his own eyes the ruined state of Śrī Kṛṣṇa-rāya's temple and built the present large temple.

(49) Śrī Jagannātha Ācārya —

108 Jagannātha Ācārya was a dear servant of the Lord; at the Lord's command he made his home by the Gaṅgā.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"He lived by the Gaṅgā": he founded a village named "Gaṅgāvāsa" on the bank of the Alakānandā within Śrī Navadvīpa.

Anubhāṣya.

Jagannātha Ācārya. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 111) says: "Ācārya Śrī Jagannātha, who lived by the Gaṅgā and was dear to the Lord, was formerly, in Nidhuvana, Durvāsā, dear to the gopīs."

(50) Kṛṣṇadāsa, (51) Śekhara Paṇḍita, (52) Kavicandra and (53) Ṣaṣṭhīvara —

109 Other branches are Kṛṣṇadāsa Vaidya, Paṇḍita Śekhara, Kavicandra and the kīrtana singer Ṣaṣṭhīvara;

(54) Śrīnātha Miśra, (55) Śubhānanda, (56) Śrīrāma, (57) Īśāna, (58) Śrīnidhi, (59) Gopīkānta, (60) Bhagavān Miśra —

110 Śrīnātha Miśra, Śubhānanda, Śrīrāma, Īśāna, Śrīnidhi, Śrī Gopīkānta, Bhagavān Miśra;

Anubhāṣya.

Kavicandra and Śrīnātha Miśra. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 171) says: "Śrīnātha Miśra is Citrāṅgī; Kavicandra is Manoharā."

Śubhānanda is Mālatī of Vraja. During the dancing before the chariot he was one of the singers in the party of Śrīvāsa and Nityānanda, one of the seven kīrtana parties, and he drank the foam that flowed from the mouth of the Lord when He was overwhelmed by bhāva (see Madhya, Chapter 13, verse 110). See the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 197 and 199.

Īśāna. Caitanya-bhāgavata (Madhya, Chapter 8): "Īśāna served Āi (Śacī) at all times; in all the fourteen worlds he is most fortunate." In the Vaiṣṇava-vandanā: "With folded hands I shall bow to Īśāna dāsa, whom Śacī Ṭhākurāṇī loved so much." Bhakti-ratnākara (twelfth wave): "That Īśāna is very dear to Nimāi-cāṁda."

(61) Subuddhi Miśra, (62) Hṛdayānanda, (63) Kamalanayana, (64) Maheśa Paṇḍita, (65) Śrīkara, (66) Madhusūdana —

111 Subuddhi Miśra, Hṛdayānanda, Kamala-nayana, Maheśa Paṇḍita, Śrīkara, Śrī Madhusūdana;

Anubhāṣya.

Subuddhi Miśra is Guṇacūḍā of Vraja (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 194 and 201). His śrīpāṭa is "Belagāṁ," three miles west of Śrīkhaṇḍa. The Deities of Śrī Nitāi-Gaura are there. His present descendant is Śrī Govindacandra Gosvāmī.

Kamalanayana is Gandhonmādā of Vraja (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 205 and 196).

Maheśa Paṇḍita: see Ādi, Chapter 11, verse 32.

(67) Puruṣottama, (68) Śrī Galīma, (69) Jagannātha dāsa, (70) Śrī

Candraśekhara, (71) Dvija Haridāsa —

112 Puruṣottama, Śrī Gālīma, Jagannātha dāsa, Śrī Candraśekhara Vaidya, Dvija Haridāsa;

Anubhāṣya.

Candraśekhara Vaidya. When Mahāprabhu stayed in Kāśī, He lived in his house. He earned his living as a scribe. See Ādi, Chapter 7, verse 45 and the Anubhāṣya on it; Chapter 10, verses 152 and 154; Madhya, Chapter 17, verse 92; Chapter 19, verses 241–243; Madhya, Chapter 20, verses 46–53 and 67–71; Chapter 25, verses 62 and 172.

Dvija Haridāsa. It is uncertain whether he is the author of the Aṣṭottara-śata-nāma. His two sons, Śrīdāma and Gokulānanda, residents of Kāñcanagaḍiyā, were disciples of Śrīnivāsa Ācārya Prabhu. Kāñcanagaḍiyā is in Murśidābāda district, within five miles of "Bājārasāu" station, the fifth station from Ājimagañja.

(72) Rāmadāsa, (73) Kavidatta, (74) Gopāla dāsa, (75) Raghunātha, (76) Śārṅga Ṭhākura —

113 Rāmadāsa, Kavidatta, Śrī Gopāla dāsa, Bhāgavatācārya, Ṭhākura Sāraṅga dāsa;

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Bhāgavatācārya" lived in Varāhanagara. Even now his āśrama is called "the pāṭa of Bhāgavatācārya." "Ṭhākura Sāraṅga dāsa" lived in Māmagāchi.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Gopāla dāsa. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 158) says: "Those who were formerly Śrī Tārakā and Pālī in Vraja-maṇḍala are now Jagannātha and Śrī Gopāla, dear to the Lord."

Bhāgavatācārya. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 203) says: "Śrīmad Bhāgavatācārya, who wrote the book Kṛṣṇa-prema-taraṅgiṇī, is extremely dear to Gaurāṅga." Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya, Chapter 5): "Then the Lord came to Varāhanagara, to the house of a most fortunate brāhmaṇa. That brāhmaṇa was thoroughly learned in the Bhāgavata. Seeing the Lord, he began to recite the Bhāgavata. Hearing him recite on bhakti-yoga, Gauracandra Nārāyaṇa was overwhelmed with ecstasy. The Lord said: 'Never have I heard anyone else recite the Bhāgavata like this. Therefore your name is "Bhāgavatācārya." Do no other work but this.'" His name is said to have been "Raghunātha." His pāṭa is at Mālipāḍā in Varāhanagara (about three and a half miles north of Calcutta), on the bank of the Gaṅgā. The present servitor of this dilapidated pāṭa is Dhīrendra Gāṅguli, the son of the late Rājacandra Gāṅguli.

Ṭhākura Sāraṅga dāsa: his other name is Śārṅga Ṭhākura. Some also call him Śārṅgapāṇi and Śārṅgadhara. He lived in Modadrumadvīpa within Śrī Navadvīpa and worshipped in solitude on the bank of the Gaṅgā. The Lord urged him again and again to accept a disciple, and at last he resolved: "Whomever I meet tomorrow at dawn, him I will accept as my disciple." The next day at dawn, as he bathed in the Bhāgīrathī, a dead body drifted against his feet; he brought it back to life and accepted it as his disciple. That disciple became famous by the name "Śrī Ṭhākura Murāri." His followers, in the line of descent, now live in a village called "Śar." The story of Murāri is bound up with the name of Śrī Śārṅga: even now the name "Śārṅga-Murāri" is heard everywhere.

Today in the village of Māmagāchi there is an old service of Śārṅga Ṭhākura. Recently a temple of Śrī Ṭhākura was built in front of an old bakula tree. One wishes that the service there were arranged even better.

The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 172) says: "She who in Vraja was Nāndīmukhī is now Sāraṅga Ṭhākura. Some consider him to be Prahlāda, but my father does not think so."

(77) Jagannātha Tīrtha, (78) Jānakīnātha, (79) Gopāla Ācārya, (80) Dvija Vāṇīnātha —

114 Jagannātha Tīrtha, the brāhmaṇa Śrī Jānakīnātha, Gopāla Ācārya and the brāhmaṇa Vāṇīnātha.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"The brāhmaṇa Vāṇīnātha" lived in Campāhāṭī.

Anubhāṣya.
Jagannātha Tīrtha: see Ādi, Chapter 9, verse 14 (Anubhāṣya).

Vāṇīnātha. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 204) says: "The brāhmaṇa Vāṇīnātha, who lived in Campāhaṭṭa, is dear to the Lord." In Vraja he is Kāmalekhā. Campāhaṭṭa, or Cāṁpāhāṭi, is a small, little-known village in Barddhamāna district, under Pūrvasthalī police station and Samudragaḍa post office. The servitors of the Śrī Caitanya Maṭha at Śrī Māyāpura in ancient Navadvīpa, headed by Śrī Paramānanda Brahmacārī, saw how disordered and neglected the service at this ancient śrīpāṭa had become. In the Bengali year 1328 they restored the pāṭa and built a new temple. In it the two life-sized Deities installed by Śrī Vāṇīnātha, Śrī Gaura and Gadādhara, delightful to the eyes and the mind, are worshipped according to scripture. The temple of Śrī Gaura-Gadādhara is at Cāṁpāhāṭi, two miles from Samudragaḍa, or Navadvīpa, station on the E.I.R. line.

(81) Govinda, (82) Mādhava, (83) Vāsudeva —

115 Govinda, Mādhava and Vāsudeva were three brothers, and when they sang kīrtana, Caitanya and Nitāi danced.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Govinda" installed the Deity of Gopīnātha at Agradvīpa.

Anubhāṣya.
Govinda, Mādhava and Vāsudeva Ghoṣa were three brothers born in a family of Kāyasthas (by birth) of Uttara-Rāḍha. Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya, Chapter 5): "The pious Mādhava Ghoṣa was devoted to kīrtana; there is no such kīrtana singer anywhere on earth. He is called the singer of Vṛndāvana; he is most dear to Nityānanda-svarūpa. Mādhava, Govinda and Vāsudeva, the three brothers, began to sing, and Lord Nitāi danced." The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 188) says: "Kalāvatī, Rasollāsā and Guṇatuṅgā lived in Vraja and sang the songs composed by Śrī Viśākhā. They are now considered to be Govinda, Mādhavānanda and Vāsudeva, respectively." In Śrī Kṣetra, when the chariot was being pulled, Mahāprabhu formed seven kīrtana parties; in one of them these three brothers were the main singers, and Vakreśvara Paṇḍita himself was their chief dancer (Madhya, Chapter 13, verses 42–43).

(84) Ṭhākura Abhirāma —

116 Rāmadāsa Abhirāma was a treasury of loving friendship. He lifted a log that it took sixteen men to carry and made a flute of it.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
"Abhirāma" lived in Khānākula-Kṛṣṇanagara.

Preaching the holy name in Gauḍa: Nitāi with Abhirāma, Mādhava and Vāsu Ghoṣa —

117 At the Lord's command Nityānanda went to Gauḍa, and by the Lord's command three devotees went with Him:

Anubhāṣya.
See Madhya, Chapter 15, verses 42–43.

(81) Śrī Govinda Ghoṣa Ṭhākura —

118 Śrī Rāmadāsa, Mādhava and Vāsudeva Ghoṣa. Govinda stayed with the Lord, and was overjoyed to do so.

Anubhāṣya.
Rāmadāsa: see Ādi, Chapter 11, verses 13–16, and Madhya, Chapter 15, verses 42–43.

(75), (41), (39a), (85) Mādhavācārya, (86) Kamalākānta, (87) Yadunandana —

119 Other branches are Bhāgavatācārya, Ciranjīva, Śrī Raghunandana, Śrī Mādhavācārya, Kamalākānta and Śrī Yadunandana.[6]

Anubhāṣya.
Mādhavācārya is Mādhavī of Vraja (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verse 169), a branch of Nityānanda and the husband of Śrīmatī Gaṅgā-devī, the daughter of Nityānanda Prabhu. He received initiation from Puruṣottama (Nāgara) of Nityānanda's company. It is said that at Gaṅgā-devī's wedding Nityānanda Prabhu gave Pāṁjinagara to Mādhava. His śrīpāṭa is Jīrāṭ (near the station of that name on the E.I.R. line); see Chapter 11, verse 38.

Kamalākānta is Kamalākānta Viśvāsa of Advaita's company.

Yadunandanācārya belongs to Advaita's branch (Antya, Chapter 6, verses 160–169).

(88) Jagāi and (89) Mādhāi —

120 Jagāi and Mādhāi received the Lord's great mercy; these two brothers bear witness to His name "Deliverer of the Fallen."

Anubhāṣya.

Jagāi and Mādhāi. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 115) says: "Jaya and Vijaya, the doorkeepers of Vaikuṇṭha, have now been born by their own will as Śrī Jagannātha and Mādhava." Both lived in Navadvīpa and, though brāhmaṇas by birth, lived by banditry and indulged in every kind of sin. Later, by the mercy of Śrī Mahāprabhu and Nityānanda Prabhu, they received the holy name, and both became mahā-bhāgavatas. Mādhāi has descendants; they are kulīna brāhmaṇas. On the road to Ākāihāṭ, a mile south of Kāṭoyā, in the village of "Ghoṣahāṭ," or Mādhāitalā, is the samāja (tomb) of Jagāi and Mādhāi. It is said that about two hundred years ago Gopīcaraṇa dāsa Bābājī restored the place and installed the Deities of Śrī Nitāi-Gaura.

Of the countless devotees of Gauḍa only a few Vaiṣṇavas are named — 121 I have given a brief account of the devotees of Gauḍa; Śrī Caitanya's devotees are endless and cannot be counted.

Their service to Gaura both in Gauḍa and in Oḍra —

122 All these devotees were also with the Lord in Nīlācala, and in both places they served Him in many ways.

A list of only those servants who gathered in Nīlācala —

123 Now I shall speak briefly of the Lord's devotees who were with Him only in Nīlācala.

The foremost — (1) Śrī Paramānanda and (2) Śrī Svarūpa —

124–126 Of all the devotees who lived with the Lord in Nīlācala, two were foremost, the Lord's very heart: Paramānanda Purī and Svarūpa Dāmodara. With them were Gadādhara, Jagadānanda, Śaṅkara, Vakreśvara, Dāmodara Paṇḍita, Ṭhākura Haridāsa, Raghunātha Vaidya and Raghunātha dāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

Raghunātha Vaidya. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 5 (at Pāṇihāṭī): "At that moment Raghunātha Vaidya came, a supreme Vaiṣṇava whose good qualities are endless." When Nityānanda was going to Gauḍa, his companions on the way displayed the moods of Vraja. Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya, Chapter 5): “Raghunātha Vaidya Upādhyāya, great of mind, became like Revatī in person.” The same book, Antya, Chapter 6: “Whoever receives his glance feels attraction to Kṛṣṇa.” See Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Ādi, Chapter 11, verse 22. He lived in Purī by the seashore and wrote a book named Sthāna-nirūpaṇa.

127 These and other great devotees, His companions from before, stayed in Nīlācala and served the Lord there.

128 And all the devotees who lived in Gauḍa came every year to Nīlācala to see the Lord.

129 Now I shall list the devotees who first met the Lord in Nīlācala.

(3) The branch of Sārvabhauma, (4) Gopīnāthācārya —

130 One great branch is Sārvabhauma Bhaṭṭācārya, and another is his sister’s husband, Śrī Gopīnātha Ācārya.

Anubhāṣya.

Sārvabhauma Bhaṭṭācārya's name was “Vāsudeva.” He was the son of Maheśvara Viśārada, a well-known resident of the village “Vidyānagara,” two and a half miles from present-day Navadvīpa, or Cāṁpāhāṭī. It is said that he learned the entire nyāya-śāstra by heart from Pakṣadhara Miśra, the chief teacher of the famous school of logic in Mithilā and the foremost logician of India in those days; then he founded a school of logic in Navadvīpa and began to teach. In the history of nyāya-śāstra this marked a turning of the ages: from then on Navadvīpa eclipsed Mithilā, and even today it is known throughout India as the foremost seat of the study of logic. According to some, the famous logician Raghunātha Śiromaṇi, author of the Dīdhiti, was his student. However that may be, Sārvabhauma gained profound learning in logic and Vedānta and, while remaining in the householder āśrama, accepted kṣetra-sannyāsa and taught Vedānta in Nīlācala. He made Mahāprabhu hear Vedānta as interpreted in Śaṅkara's commentary, and afterwards learned the true meaning of Vedānta from the Lord. He saw the Lord's six-armed form. His Caitanya-śataka reveals devotion to Gaura; in particular the two verses beginning vairāgya-vidyā-nija-bhakti-yoga are the summit of Sārvabhauma's learning. For the Lord's meeting with Sārvabhauma, their discussion and his deliverance, see Madhya, Chapter 6. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 119) says: “Bhaṭṭācārya Sārvabhauma was formerly Gīṣpati (Bṛhaspati) in heaven.”

Gopīnātha Ācārya was a brāhmaṇa of Navadvīpa and a companion of the Lord. He was the husband of Sārvabhauma's sister. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 178) says: “She who was formerly in Vraja the prāṇa-sakhī named Ratnāvalī is now the ācārya named Gopīnātha, renowned for his purity.” According to some, he is Brahmā. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 75) says: “Brahmā, the lord of the universe, is to be known by the name Gopīnāthācārya; those who know the Tantras count him among the nine vyūhas in the Tantra.”

(5) Kāśī Miśra, (6) Pradyumna Miśra, (7) Rāya Bhavānanda —

131 Then come Kāśī Miśra, Pradyumna Miśra and Bhavānanda Rāya, whose company gave the Lord great joy.

Anubhāṣya.

Kāśī Miśra was the royal priest. Mahāprabhu lived in his house in Nīlācala. Later the place passed to Śrī Vakreśvara Paṇḍita, and in the time of his disciple Śrī Gopāla-guru Gosvāmī the Deity “Śrī Rādhākānta” was installed there. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 193) says: “She who was formerly in Mathurā Sairindhrī, beloved of Kṛṣṇa, is now Kāśī Miśra, a resident of Nīlācala, dear to the Lord.”

Pradyumna Miśra was a resident of Oḍiśā. Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya, Chapter 5): “Śrī Pradyumna Miśra is an ocean of Kṛṣṇa's happiness; Śrī Gaurasundara gave him His own feet.” Antya, Chapter 8: “Śrī Pradyumna Miśra is foremost in prema-bhakti.” (Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Madhya 10.43): “Pradyumna Miśra is the foremost of the Vaiṣṇavas; he is Jagannātha's mahāsoyāra, called by the name ‘Dāsa.’” The Lord showed His mercy by making Pradyumna Miśra, a brāhmaṇa by birth, a disciple of the mahā-bhāgavata Śrī Rāmānanda, who was not born in a brāhmaṇa family — a disciple by hearing hari-kathā from him. For this see Antya, Chapter 5.

Bhavānanda Rāya was the father of Śrī Rāmānanda Rāya. He lived near Brahmagiri, or Ālālanātha, six krośas west of Purī. By caste he was a Karaṇa (by birth). For his five sons see verse 133. He was formerly known as “King Pāṇḍu.”

132 Embracing him, the Lord said, “You are Pāṇḍu, and your sons are the five Pāṇḍavas:

(8) The five brothers headed by Śrī Rāya Rāmānanda —

133 “Rāmānanda Rāya, Gopīnātha Paṭṭanāyaka, Kalānidhi, Sudhānidhi and Vāṇīnātha Nāyaka.

134 “These five sons of yours are dear to Me, and between Rāmānanda and Me there is a difference of body alone.”

Anubhāṣya.

Rāmānanda Rāya. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verses 120–124) says: “A certain Arjuna, a priya-narma-sakha (an intimate friend of Kṛṣṇa), and Arjuna the Pāṇḍava together became Rāmānanda Rāya, dear to the Lord. Therefore the expert Rāmānanda described to Gauracandra day after day the truths of devotion and love for Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa and so on. Some call him Lalitā, but others do not accept this[15]. Gaura said to Bhavānanda: ‘You are the husband of Pṛthā.’ Therefore the best authorities say that Arjuna the Pāṇḍava, having become one with the gopī Arjunīyā, is Rāya Rāmānanda. That both Arjunīyā and Arjuna the Pāṇḍava were fully present in him is clearly stated in the Uttara-khaṇḍa of the Padma Purāṇa. Therefore Rāmānanda Rāya Mahāśaya is all three.” According to some, he is Viśākhā-devī (see Madhya, Chapter 8, Antya, Chapter 5 and elsewhere). His place among the intimate devotees is very high. The Lord's words: “I am a sannyāsī and consider Myself detached. Yet, let alone seeing a woman, if I merely hear a woman's name, My body and mind are disturbed. Who can remain steady on seeing a woman? … His body and mind are unmoved, like wood or stone; how wonderful that his mind stays unmoved at the touch of young women! Only Rāmānanda has this qualification. From this I know that his body is transcendental. Only he knows the state of his mind; there is no one else able to know it. ” (Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Antya 5.35–36, 41–43) “Though a householder, Rāya is not under the sway of the six enemies; though engaged in worldly affairs, he instructs sannyāsīs.” (Antya 5.80)

With Śrī Svarūpa and with him, Mahāprabhu in His final pastimes constantly tasted the many varieties of Rādhā's mahābhāva in separation from Śrī Kṛṣṇa (Madhya, Chapter 2, verse 77); the Lord was won over by his pure friendship (sakhya)

(ibid., 78). Sārvabhauma's words (Madhya, Chapter 7): “Rāmānanda Rāya lives on the bank of the Godāvarī; he is the governor in Vidyānagara. … On earth there is no rasika devotee equal to him. He is the very limit of both learning and bhakti-rasa.” (Madhya 7.62, 64–65)

See further: the Lord's meeting with Śrī Rāmānanda Rāya; the Lord has Rāya speak on the truths of the goal and the means (sādhya and sādhana) and listens to him; the Lord shows Rāya His form as Rasarāja and Mahābhāva; the Lord's words: “I am one madman and you are a second madman; therefore you and I are equal” (Madhya 8.290); the Lord tells Rāma Rāya to give up his government service and go to Śrī Kṣetra (Madhya, Chapter 8). After the Lord's preaching in the South — His second meeting with Rāma Rāya; Rāya sends the Lord on to Nīlācala (Madhya, Chapter 9, verses 319–335) and later meets the Lord in Nīlācala (Madhya, Chapter 11, verse 15). Rāya's efforts to obtain the Lord's mercy for King Pratāparudra (Madhya, Chapter 12, verses 41–57); water sports with Sārvabhauma after the kīrtana on the day of the Ratha-yātrā (Madhya, Chapter 14, verse 82). Rāya is unwilling to let the Lord go to Vṛndāvana (Chapter 16, verses 10 and 85) but at last, yielding to the Lord's request, consents; the Lord's meeting with the king at Kaṭaka (ibid., 105); the Lord takes leave of Rāya at Remuṇā (ibid., 153); instead of going to Vṛndāvana the Lord returns to Nīlācala by way of Gauḍa and meets Rāya (ibid., 254). His discussion of rasa with Śrī Rūpa and his praise of Rūpa's poetry (Antya, Chapter 1, verses 115–196); Rāma Rāya's renunciation equals Sanātana's (ibid., 201). He is one of the “three and a half” vessels of the rasa of love for Śrī Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa (Antya, Chapter 2, verse 106); his meeting with Sanātana (Antya, Chapter 4, verse 110); Rāya speaks about Kṛṣṇa to Pradyumna Miśra, whom the Lord sent to him; the Lord praises Rāya (Antya, Chapter 5, verses 4–85). “As Subala formerly helped Kṛṣṇa's happiness, so Rāma Rāya is there to give happiness to Gaura.” (Antya 6.9) “The power of Rāmānanda cannot be described. By Rāya's grace I came to know the pure mood of Vraja.” (Antya 7.37) “Rāmānanda Rāya is the treasury of the rasa of Kṛṣṇa; he made Me understand that Kṛṣṇa is Bhagavān Himself.” (Antya 7.23) In the final pastimes the Lord, with Rāma Rāya and Svarūpa, tasted the rasa of songs and laments of separation from Kṛṣṇa (Antya, Chapters 14–20). Rāmānanda Rāya wrote the drama Śrī Jagannātha-vallabha.

(13) Bhagavān Ācārya, (14) Brahmānanda Bhāratī, (15) Śikhi and (16) Murāri

135–136 Other branches are King Pratāparudra, Kṛṣṇānanda of Orissa, Paramānanda Mahāpātra, Śivānanda of Orissa, Bhagavān Ācārya, Brahmānanda Bhāratī, Śrī Śikhi Māhiti and Murāri Māhiti.

Anubhāṣya.

Pratāparudra was the emperor of Utkala, of the Gaṅgā dynasty (a Gajapati). His capital was Kaṭaka. Having heard of Mahāprabhu's qualities, he served Him long in humble dress and longed for Him, and then, with the help of Rāma Rāya and Sārvabhauma, received His mercy. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 118) says: "The great king Indradyumna, who formerly worshipped Jagannātha, has now been born as Pratāparudra, equal to Indra." At his wish Karṇapūra wrote the drama Caitanya-candrodaya.

Paramānanda Mahāpātra. Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya, Chapter 5): "All the followers born in Utkala recognized the Lord of their lives. Śrī Paramānanda Mahāpātra Mahāśaya — Śrī Caitanya is his very body and life; he is full of bhakti-rasa."

Anubhāṣya.

Bhagavān Ācārya lived in Hālisahara; his son's name was Raghunātha (Bhakti-ratnākara). He was lame. Madhya 10.184: " and Bhagavān Ācārya: both stayed at the Lord's feet, giving up all their work." Antya, Chapter 2: "In Puruṣottama, near the Lord, was Bhagavān Ācārya, a supreme Vaiṣṇava, very learned and noble. His heart was filled with the mood of friendship; he was an incarnation of a cowherd boy, and he dealt with Svarūpa Gosāñi as a friend. He had taken shelter of Caitanya's feet with exclusive devotion, and from time to time he invited the Lord for a meal." (Antya 2.84–86) It was in his house, when the Lord came for a meal, that it came out that Choṭa Haridāsa had begged fine rice from Mādhavī-devī for the Lord and so had spoken with a woman; for this Mahāprabhu rejected him (see Antya, Chapter 2, verses 101–166). Bhagavān Ācārya was very generous and guileless. His father, Śatānanda Khān, was a thoroughly worldly man, and his younger brother, Gopāla Bhaṭṭācārya, was a Māyāvādī. Gopāla studied the Māyāvāda commentary in Kāśī and came to his elder brother in Purī; out of affection Bhagavān wanted to hear Māyāvāda from him, but Śrī Svarūpa stopped him, saying that it is hostile to devotion (Antya, Chapter 2, verses 89–100). One day a Bengali poet, a mere versifier whom Bhagavān had known before, composed a drama contrary to the teachings of devotion, brought it, stayed at his lodging and wanted to recite it to the Lord. Śrī Svarūpa had doubts, but Bhagavān begged him to hear the drama. As soon as the poet recited the nāndī verse, Śrī Svarūpa showed how much in the drama contradicted the teachings of devotion. In the end the poet took shelter at the feet of the devotees (Antya, Chapter 5, verses 91–166). See Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 3. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 74) says: “The lame Ācārya Bhagavān is said to be a kalā (portion) of Gaura.”

Śikhi Māhiti. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 189) says: “Rāgalekhā and Kalākeli, maidservants of Rādhā, are now known as Śikhi Māhāti and his sister Mādhavī, respectively.” Both he and his sister were intimate and qualified devotees of the Lord from Utkala. The Caitanya-carita-mahākāvya (canto 13, 89–109) tells of them. In Puruṣottama-kṣetra lived a great soul named Śikhi Māhiti (Mahānti), pure-hearted and compassionate. He was a servant of Śrī Jagannātha, the ornament of Nīlācala. His younger brother was named Murāri Māhiti, and his younger sister was the pure-minded Mādhavī-devī. The younger brother and sister were both devoted to Gaurasundara: their inborn, steady and auspicious intelligence never allowed them to forget Śrī Gaurasundara. Now Vṛndāvanacandra Kṛṣṇa has risen on this earth in the form of Gauracandra and constantly showers this brother and sister with Gaura's affection. They tried their utmost to bring their elder brother Śikhi Māhiti, the loving servant of Jagannātha, the Lord of Nīlācala, to the worship of Śrī Gaurasundara, but Śikhi Māhiti would not take up the worship of Gaura at all.

One day, after hearing his siblings' advice and reflecting on it long and hard, he fell asleep, and toward dawn he started up: he had dreamed that his younger siblings, who see Gaura's lotus feet, were waking him. At this wonderful dream his hair stood on end; doubly amazed and overjoyed, he slowly opened his tear-filled eyes and saw his brother and sister. Awake now and seeing those great younger ones beside him, he embraced them with great joy. They were all astonished. Śikhi Māhiti began to tell them: “Brother, listen to the dream I have had — it is most wonderful. Only today have I become convinced that the glory of Śrī Śacī's son is immeasurable. I saw Gaurasundara looking at the Lord of Nīlācala, entering into Him moment after moment, coming out again and again and looking at Him once more — such is the pastime He was displaying. How wonderful! Even now I see the Supreme Lord Gaurasundara in that very state — are my eyes deceiving me? Ah, that ocean of boundless mercy, Gaurasundara, saw me near Jagannātha-deva, called me by name and, as it were, embraced me with His long, raised, graceful arms." So, with his hair standing on end, tears in his eyes and his voice choked with love, Śikhi spoke these words and went out. Murāri and Mādhavī, hearing their elder brother's words, asked him to go to Jagannātha for the Lord's darśana. Then all three agreed and went for the darśana of the Lord of Nīlācala. Murāri and Mādhavī saw the Lord in the jagamohana and shed tears of joy, but the elder, Śikhi Māhiti, saw Gaurasundara on all sides exactly as he had seen Him in the dream, in the very same mood, and his heart blossomed with love. The supremely magnanimous Mahāprabhu said, "Are you Murāri's elder brother?" and embraced him with both arms; and Śikhi Māhiti, his mind absorbed in service to Gaura, felt immense happiness. From then on Śikhi Māhiti, intoxicated by the fragrance of Gaura's lotus feet, forgot everything else and served Śrī Gaura, the Lord of his heart.

Murāri Māhiti. Madhya 10.44: "This is Murāri Māhiti, the brother of Śikhi Māhiti. He has no refuge but Your feet."

(17) Mādhavī-devī —

137 Mādhavī Devī, the sister of Śikhi Māhiti, is counted among the maidservants of Śrī Rādhā.

Anubhāṣya.

Mādhavī-devī (Antya, Chapter 2, verses 104–106): "She whom the Lord counts among Rādhikā's company. In all the world there are only three and a half such vessels: Svarūpa Gosāñi and Rāya Rāmānanda, Śikhi Māhiti — these three; and his sister is the half." (Antya 2.105–106)

(18) Kāśīśvara, (19) Govinda —

138 Brahmacārī Kāśīśvara was a disciple of Īśvara Purī, and Śrī Govinda was his dear follower.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Govinda and Kāśīśvara" were disciples of Īśvara Purī. When Īśvara Purī attained perfection, they came at his command to Mahāprabhu in Nīlācala.

Anubhāṣya.

Govinda was Mahāprabhu's personal servant. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 137) says: “Those who were formerly the servants Bhṛṅgāra and Bhaṅgura in Vṛndāvana have now been born as Śrī Kāśīśvara and Govinda, the servants of the Lord.” For the Lord's meeting with Govinda, the disciple of Īśvara Purī, see Madhya, Chapter 10, verses 131–148. The Lord was won over “by the pure dāsya-rasa of Govinda and others” (Madhya, Chapter 2, verse 78). For the sake of the Lord's service Govinda did not hesitate to step over the Lord's body, but for his own sake he feared the offense in such an act: “Govinda said: ‘My service is my rule. Let there be offense, or even going to hell.’” (Antya 10.95) See Madhya, Chapter 10, verses 82–100[16].

139 At the time of his departure both received his order, came to Nīlācala and met the Lord.

Honoring all that is connected with the guru and reasoning that “the order of the guru is not to be questioned,” He accepts their service —

140 Out of regard for their connection with His Guru, the Lord honoured them both, yet in obedience to the Guru’s order He gave them His service.

The service of Govinda and Kāśīśvara to Gaura —

141 The Lord gave Govinda the service of His person, and when He went to see Jagannātha, Kāśīśvara walked ahead of Him.

142 Through the dense crowd the Lord passed untouched, for the mighty Kāśīśvara pushed the people aside and cleared the way.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Without touching”: without making contact.

Thus ends the tenth chapter of the “Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.”

(20) Rāmāi, (21) Nandāi —

143 Rāmāi and Nandāi, both servants of the Lord, served constantly alongside Govinda.

Anubhāṣya.

Rāmāi and Nandāi. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 139) says: “Payoda and Vārida, who formerly prepared the water, are now the two servants known as Rāmāi and Nandāi.” They served the Lord under Govinda's guidance.

144 Every day Rāmāi filled twenty-two jars of water, and Nandāi served as Govinda directed.

(22) The brāhmaṇa Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa —

145 A pure Kulīna brāhmaṇa named Kṛṣṇadāsa went with the Lord on His journey to the south.[7]

Anubhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇadāsa: his story is told in Madhya, Chapters 7 and 9. This simple brāhmaṇa went south with the Lord to carry His waterpot. In the land of Malabar the Bhaṭṭathāris tried to entice him with a woman and hold him; seeing this, Gaurahari rescued him, and after returning to Nīlācala He dismissed him.

(23) Balabhadra Bhaṭṭa —

146 Balabhadra Bhaṭṭācārya, a true devotee, served the Lord as His brahmacārī on the journey to Mathurā.

Anubhāṣya.

Balabhadra Bhaṭṭācārya is Madhurekṣaṇā of Vraja. Cooking and other practical work (karma-kāṇḍa) are forbidden to sannyāsīs; they accept such services from householders. Sannyāsīs are gurus, brahmacārīs are disciples. Balabhadra performed the duties of a brahmacārī for Mahāprabhu when the Lord went to Vṛndāvana.

(24) Baḍa Haridāsa, (25) Choṭa Haridāsa —

147 Baḍa Haridāsa and Choṭa Haridāsa, two kīrtana singers, stayed by Mahāprabhu’s side.

Anubhāṣya.

Choṭa Haridāsa: for his story see Antya, Chapter 2.

(26) Rāmabhadra, (27) Siṁheśvara, (28) Tapana Ācārya, (29) Raghunātha, (30) Nīlāmbara —

148 There were also Rāmabhadra Ācārya, Siṁheśvara of Orissa, Tapana Ācārya, Raghu and Nīlāmbara;

(31) Siṅgābhaṭṭa, (32) Kāmābhaṭṭa, (33) Śivānanda, (34) Kamalānanda —

149 Siṅgābhaṭṭa, Kāmābhaṭṭa, Dantura Śivānanda, and Kamalānanda, who had been a dear servant of the Lord in Gauḍa.

(35) Acyutānanda —

150 Acyutānanda, the son of Advaita Ācārya, stayed in Nīlācala in the shelter of the Lord's feet.

Anubhāṣya.

Acyutānanda: see Ādi, Chapter 12, verse 13.

(36) Gaṅgādāsa, (37) Viṣṇudāsa —

151 Nirloma Gaṅgādāsa and Viṣṇudāsa also lived with the Lord in Nīlācala.

Residents of Kāśī: (1) Candraśekhara, (2) Tapana Miśra, (3) Śrī Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa —

152–153 In Vārāṇasī the Lord had three devotees: Candraśekhara the physician, Tapana Miśra and his son Raghunātha Bhaṭṭācārya. When the Lord came to Kāśī after seeing Vṛndāvana,

Anubhāṣya.

Tapana Miśra. When Mahāprabhu went to Vaṅga (Bengal), Tapana Miśra asked Him about the truths of the means and the goal (sādhana and sādhya) and received the holy name from the Lord. Later, at the Lord's command, he settled in Kāśī. When the Lord was in Kāśī, He took His meals at Tapana Miśra's house.

154 He stayed for two months in Candraśekhara's house and for two months took His meals in the house of Tapana Miśra.

155 As a boy Raghunātha served the Lord, cleaning up after His meals and massaging His feet.

156 When he grew up he went to the Lord in Nīlācala and stayed for eight months, on some days cooking for Him.

157 Then, at the Lord's command, he went to Vṛndāvana and stayed near Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī.

158 Rūpa Gosvāmī heard the Bhāgavatam from him, and by the Lord's mercy he was mad with love for Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Raghunātha Bhaṭṭācārya was one of the six Gosvāmīs and the son of Tapana Miśra. He was born in about 1425 Śaka. He was especially expert in the Bhāgavata-śāstra. Antya, Chapter 13, verses 107–108: "Raghunātha Bhaṭṭa was very skilled in cooking; whatever he cooked became like nectar. The Lord ate it with great satisfaction, and Bhaṭṭa ate the Lord's remnants. … After eight months the Lord sent Bhaṭṭa home, forbidding him, 'Do not marry.' 'Go and serve your aged mother and father, and study the Bhāgavata with a Vaiṣṇava.' … Saying this, He put His own neck-garland around Raghunātha's neck." (Antya 13.107–108, 112–114) "For four years at home he served his father and mother and studied the Bhāgavata with a Vaiṣṇava scholar. When his parents passed away in Kāśī, he became indifferent to the world, left his home and other ties, and came to the Lord again." (Antya 13.117–118) "'By My order, Raghunātha, go to Vṛndāvana; there, stay with Rūpa and Sanātana. Read the Bhāgavata and always chant Kṛṣṇa's name; soon Kṛṣṇa, Bhagavān, will bestow His mercy.' Saying this, the Lord embraced him, and by the Lord's mercy he became maddened with love for Kṛṣṇa. … a fourteen-cubit tulasī garland of Jagannātha — that garland and some betel the Lord gave him." (Antya 13.120–124) "In Rūpa Gosāñi's assembly he recites the Bhāgavata; as he reads the Bhāgavata his mind is overwhelmed. … His voice is like the cuckoo's, and in it the rāgas are clearly distinguished; in reciting a single verse he changes three or four rāgas. … He had his disciple build a temple for Govinda, and he provided ornaments — a flute, makara earrings and others." (Antya 13.126, 128, 131) "He does not hear worldly talk nor speak it with his tongue; his eight praharas pass in talk of Kṛṣṇa, worship and the like. He does not let blame of Vaiṣṇavas enter his ears; he knows only this: everyone is worshipping Kṛṣṇa." (Antya 13.132–133) The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 185) says: "The Bhaṭṭa named Raghunātha, who was formerly Rāga-mañjarī, lived in a hut at Śrī Rādhikā-kuṇḍa."

The deliverance of the three worlds by countless devotees of Gaura — branches and sub-branches —

159 Thus Śrī Caitanya's devotees are countless; I write of only a few, for they cannot be fully told.

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the tenth chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

160 Millions upon millions of twigs grow on every branch; its disciples and their disciples are its smaller twigs.

161 All of them are laden with the flowers and fruits of love, and they have flooded the three worlds with the waters of love for Kṛṣṇa.

162 The power and glory of each branch are endless; even He who has a thousand mouths cannot find their limit.

163 I have told of Mahāprabhu's devotees only briefly; even the Thousand-mouthed One could not tell of them all.

164 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. In the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition the branches are listed under numbered headings: (1 — a, b, c, d) Śrīvāsa, Śrī Rāma and their two brothers; (2) Candraśekhara; (3) Puṇḍarīka Vidyānidhi, and so on; the offshoots of a branch are marked with letters (20a — Satyarāja, an offshoot of Haridāsa's branch). The ordinal numbers of the branches in the translation follow these headings. ↩
2. The bags are described in Antya 10. ↩
3. His prayer is described in Madhya 15.159–180 (Anubhāṣya). ↩
4. In the edition they are offshoots of Haridāsa's branch (20a–20e), like all the people of Kulīna-grāma (10.48). ↩
5. Raghunātha's meeting with the Lord is told in Antya 6 (Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya). ↩
6. In the edition's heading Bhāgavatācārya, Ciranjīva and Raghunandana are marked with their earlier numbers (75, 41, 39a) — they are the same persons named above; the new branches are (85) Mādhavācārya, (86) Kamalākānta and (87) Yadunandana. ↩
7. In the edition's heading he is "Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa, the brāhmaṇa"; he is described in Madhya 7 and 9. ↩
8. The edition reads śakti adhastana, literally "descendants by śakti"; the sense probably requires śaukra (শৌক্র), "descendants by birth." ↩
9. An unclear place in the quotation: the words "her age is the measure" are not connected to anything in the extract; perhaps the statement of the age itself has been left out. ↩
10. The edition reads "Madhya, Chapter 1, 55–62"; the episode is in Madhya 1.155–162. ↩
11. The edition reads "Madhya, Chapter 10, 100–101"; these words of the Lord are in Madhya 15.100–101. ↩
12. The verse translation reads it differently: "all the devotees see Him alike" (Bengali nirviśeṣa, "without distinction"). ↩
13. An unclear place in the scan: the middle digit of the verse number is damaged; probably 177. ↩
14. The expression guru-devatātmā comes from the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (11.2.37). ↩
15. The edition prints the words run together, ekenānumanyante (একেনানুমন্যন্তে); read as eke nānumanyante, "others do not accept this" (the plural verb does not agree with ekena). ↩
16. So in the edition; the episode is in Antya, Chapter 10, verses 82–100. ↩

Chapter 11

The Description of the Branches of the Nityānanda Trunk

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. The eleventh chapter describes the associates of Nityānanda Prabhu.

Obeisances to the associates of Nityānanda —

1 I bow to all the devotees who, like bees at the lotus feet of Nityānanda, are maddened by the honey of love, and I shall write of a few, the foremost among them.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I bow down to all the bees at Nityānanda's lotus feet, who are maddened by drinking the honey of love, and I will name a few of the chief devotees among them.

Anubhāṣya.
prema-madhūnmadān (maddened by honey, and that honey is prema itself) akhilān (all) nityānanda-padāmbhoja-bhṛṅgān (the bees at the Prabhu's lotus feet) natvā (having bowed down to) teṣu katicit mukhyāḥ (the chief devotees) mayā likhyante.

2 Glory, glory to Mahāprabhu Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya! Whoever has taken shelter at His feet is truly blessed.

3 Glory, glory to Śrī Advaita! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory, glory to all the devotees of Mahāprabhu!

Description of the branches of Nityānanda's trunk —

4 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the undying tree of eternal love, and its tall trunk is the Avadhūta, Śrī Nityānanda, beautiful as the moon. I bow to His devotees, the branches of that trunk.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the wish-fulfilling tree of prema, and Śrī Avadhūta Nityānanda-candra is its high trunk. I bow down to His associates, the branches of that trunk.

Anubhāṣya.
śrī-kṛṣṇa-caitanya-sat-premāmara-śākhinaḥ (Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is Himself the eternally existing [sat] tree of prema, the immortal, imperishable tree named Gaura; tasya, of Him) ūrdhva-skandhāvadhūtendoḥ (the high trunk is Nityānanda Prabhu, and He is also the moon; of Him) śākhā-rūpān gaṇān numaḥ (we bow down).

By Mahāprabhu's will, Nityānanda's branch grows and becomes foremost —

5 Śrī Nityānanda is the mighty trunk of the tree, and on it grew branches and offshoots in great number.

6 The branches grow by the water of the gardener’s will. Laden with the flowers and fruits of love, they have covered the world.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“Of the gardener”: of Śrī Mahāprabhu.

7 The devotees are numberless, without end — who could count them all? For my own purification I shall name only the foremost.

(1) The branch of Śrī Vīracandra Gosāñi —

8 Śrī Vīrabhadra Gosāñi is the great branch of the trunk, and the offshoots that spring from Him are beyond counting.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Vīrabhadra Gosāñi was the son of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu and a disciple of Mother Jāhnavā; He was born of Vasudhā. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 67): "That vyūha of Saṅkarṣaṇa named Payobdhiśāyī became Vīracandra, who is not different from Caitanya." His disciple was Yadunātha Ācārya of the village of Jhāmaṭapura in Hugalī district. Vīrabhadra married Yadunātha's daughter Śrīmatī, born of Vidyunmālā (Lakṣmī), and also their adopted daughter Nārāyaṇī; see the Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 13. Three of His disciples, Gopījana-vallabha, Rāmakṛṣṇa and Rāmacandra, became famous as His sons. The youngest, Rāmacandra, lived in Khaḍadaha; he was a Śuddha-śrotriya of the Śāṇḍilya gotra with the surname "Baṭabyāla." The eldest, Gopījana-vallabha, lived in the village of "Latā" near Mānakara in Barddhamāna district, and the middle one, Rāmakṛṣṇa, in Gayeśapura near Māladaha. If all three share the same gotra and the same village, no one can doubt that they were Vīrabhadra's sons by birth. Rāmacandra had four sons. The third son of the eldest, Rādhāmādhava, was Yādavendra; his son was Nandakiśora; his son, Nidhikṛṣṇa; his son, Caitanya-cāḍa; his son, Kṛṣṇamohana; his son, Jaganmohana; his son, Vrajanātha; and Vrajanātha's son was the late Śyāmalāla Gosvāmī.

His glory: though Viṣṇu Himself, He behaves as a Vaiṣṇava —

9 Though He is the Lord, He calls Himself a great devotee; though He is beyond the dharma of the Vedas, He keeps faithfully to it.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Vīracandra Prabhu is by nature Payobdhiśāyī, the vyūha of Śrī Saṅkarṣaṇa, and so He is the Lord Himself. Yet He thought of Himself as a Vaiṣṇava.

10 Within, He acts as the Lord; outwardly, He shows no pride. He is the main pillar in the hall of devotion to Śrī Caitanya.

11 Even today, through the glory of His mercy, the whole world sings of Caitanya and Nityānanda.

12 The feet of that Vīrabhadra Gosāñi are my shelter, for by His grace every desire is fulfilled.

*(2) Ṭhākura Abhirāma (gopāla 1), (3) Dāsa Gadādhara —*

13 Śrī Rāmadāsa and Gadādhara dāsa, devotees of Caitanya Gosāñi, stayed at Nityānanda's side.[1]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Rāmadāsa is Abhirāma dāsa.

Anubhāṣya.
Gadādhara dāsa: see Ādi 10.53.

Śrī Rāmadāsa (Abhirāma). Ṭhākura Abhirāma, whose very life was Nityānanda, is one of the twelve gopālas; in Vraja he is Śrīdāma, [Kṛṣṇa's] friend. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 126): "He who was formerly named Śrīdāma is now the great Abhirāma, who carried a log that only thirty-two men could carry." See Ādi 10.116–118.

The Bhakti-ratnākara (wave 4) tells of Śrīla Abhirāma Ṭhākura. By the order of Nityānanda, the crusher of the godless, Abhirāma Ṭhākura was an ācārya and a preacher of bhakti-dharma. "The might of Abhirāma Gosvāmī is fierce: at the sight of him the unconquerable godless always tremble. He is ever maddened, absorbed in Nityānanda; his enchanting mercy is known throughout the world." A saying is current to this day: if he bowed down to any stone or image other than a Viṣṇu-śilā or a Deity of Viṣṇu, it would split and crumble to dust.

Abhirāma Ṭhākura's śrīpāṭa is in Khānākula-Kṛṣṇanagara, about ten miles southwest of Cāṗāḍāṅgā station on the Hāoḍā–Āmtā line, past the "Helānāra hāṭ." In the rainy season the road is flooded, so one goes by the B.N.R. line: from Kolāghāṭa by steamer to Rāṇīcaka, and from there Khānākula is 7½ miles to the north. Abhirāma Ṭhākura's śrīpāṭa is in Kṛṣṇanagara; because that village lies on the bank of the river Khānā, or Dvārakeśvara, it is called "Khānākula-Kṛṣṇanagara."

Outside the temple, near the gate, stands a bakula tree; the spot is called the “Siddha-bakula-kuñja.” It is said that Abhirāma Ṭhākura sat here first when he came.

Inside the temple are Śrī Baladeva and Śrī Madana-mohana (alone, without Rādhā). On a single slab of black touchstone, 1¼ cubits high and nearly a cubit wide, the Deity of Śrī Gopīnātha is carved together with the pastime of stealing the garments: the kadamba tree, the Yamunā, and the cows and calves. Such are the arcā Deities. Besides these, on the throne are a sacred image of Abhirāma Ṭhākura in the ecstasy of dance (his feet not spread apart) and Śrī Vraja-vallabha (the Divine Couple). There are also a Śrī Śālagrāma and a Deity of Śrī Gopāla. Tradition says that Śrī Abhirāma Ṭhākura found the Gopīnātha Deity while the pond in front of the temple was being dug. Since then the pond has been known as “Abhirāma-kuṇḍa.” Directly south of the temple where the Deities now reside stands an old nava-ratna temple. A stone plaque high on that temple bears the inscription that it was built in the year 1181. The builder's name is not given. It is said that the late Nachirāma Siṁha “Gailā” of a neighboring village had the temple built. The Deity resided here even earlier, and before the temple was built He was served on this very spot in a thatched hut.

Directly north of the Śrī Gopīnātha temple is the ancient temple of Śrī Rādhā-vallabha Jīu, founded by the local Kāyastha Caudhurīs.

The stone plaque of the present temple bears the inscription: “Śrī Śrī Gopīnātha Jīu. Temple built in the month of Māgha, year 1219. Repaired in the month of Vaiśākha, year 1308.” It is said that the late Puṇḍarīkākṣa Rāya of Mādhavapura, near Ārāmabāga police station in Hugalī district, built it. In front of the old temple stands a spacious brick nāṭya-mandira. The fishermen (dhīvaras) of Medinīpura district built it in 1263; when it fell into disrepair, they restored it in 1320.

The servitors say that ever since the time of Śrīla Abhirāma Ṭhākura it has been the custom here to offer bhoga of parboiled (siddha-cāula) rice; even puffed rice (muḍi) is offered. Another unusual custom is that when the Ṭhākura is laid to rest, the temple doors stay open and He is laid to rest in everyone's sight. Nowadays there is no custom of performing maṅgala-ārati for the Ṭhākura in the morning.

At present there are thirty-six or thirty-seven families of servitors. It is said that inside the temple, in an iron chest, is kept Śrīla Abhirāma Ṭhākura's famous whip

“Śrī Jayamaṅgala”; the chest is locked with all the keys of these servitors. The whip is two cubits long and wrapped in gold thread; at a festival it is brought out only when all the servitors agree together. The Bhakti-ratnākara (wave 4) writes of the whip “Śrī Jayamaṅgala” that love for Kṛṣṇa arose in anyone Abhirāma Ṭhākura struck with it. Once, when Śrīnivāsa Ācārya came to Abhirāma's house, Ṭhākura Abhirāma touched Śrīnivāsa's body three times with that whip. Then Abhirāma's wife, Mālinī Devī, a brāhmaṇa's daughter, laughed, took the Ṭhākura by the hand, and said, “Ṭhākura, restrain yourself! Śrīnivāsa is a boy; at the touch of your whip he will lose all composure.”

His descendants (by birth, or in the line of disciples?) live in Kṛṣṇanagara and Āmtā in Hugalī district, and in Viṣṇupura, Kotalapura and other villages of Bāṅkuḍā district.

A certain “Abhirāmadāsa,” a disciple of Ratneśvara, gives the names and places of “Ṭhākura Abhirāma's” disciples in his book Śākhā-nirṇaya as follows: (1) Kṛṣṇadāsa Ṭhākura lived in Khānākula (the line has died out); (2) a devotee named Vedagarbha lived in the village of Kaiyaḍ (about 10 miles southwest of Barddhamāna); his descendants now serve the Deity there; (3) Haridāsa lived in the village of Būṛhana (nothing particular is known of him); (4) Pākhiyā-Gopāladāsa lived in the village of Helāla (?) (about two miles north of Khānākula, on the bank of the river Khānā); a small ruined temple known as his samāja stands there now, but there is no Deity; (5) “Gumphanārāyaṇa” lived in the village of Pāikamājiṭā (?) near Rāmajīvanapura in Medinīpura district; his descendants are living; (6) Dāḍiyā Mohana lived in Sītānagara (neither the place nor his line can be traced); (7) Satyarāghava lived in Mayanāmuḍi (Bāṅkuḍā) (where his descendants live is unknown); (8) Rajanī Paṇḍita lived in Sālikhā (near Hāoḍā?) (where his descendants are is also unknown); (9) Sundarānanda lived in Bhāṅgāmoḍā (about 4 miles northwest of Tārakeśvara); he has descendants; (10) Kṛṣṇānanda Avadhūta lived in Dvīpagrāma (its location is unknown); it is doubtful whether he had any descendants; (11) Raṅgaṇa-Kṛṣṇadāsa lived in the village of Sonātalā (-lī) (in Hugalī or Hāoḍā district?) (the line has died out); (12) Murāridāsa lived in Māladaha (where his descendants live is unknown); (13) Mohana Ṭhākura lived in Pāṇihāṭī (nothing is known of his lineage); (14) Yadu Hāladāra lived in Rādhānagara (south of Khānākula-Kṛṣṇanagara); because his line died out, the Deity he established, Śrī Balarāma, is still served together with Śrī Gopīnātha; (15) Harimādhava lived in Anantanagara (near Khānākula) (the line has died out); (16) Gopāladāsa lived in Māheśa (near Śrīrāmapura?) (nothing is known of his descendants); (17) Acyuta Paṇḍita lived in Koṭarā (near Khānākula police station) (a descendant is living); (18) Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa lived in the village of Pāṭalā (the line has died out); (19) Gopīnāthadāsa lived in Purī (no information); (20) Nandakiśora lived in Cuṇākhāli parganā (near Māheśa) (nothing is known of his descendants); (21) Vidura Brahmacārī lived in the village of Pātāgrāma (Pāṭuli in Barddhamāna district?); his descendants are living; (22) Rāmakṛṣṇa lived in Vinupāḍā (nothing is known of either the place or the man); (23) Kamalākara lived in Gaurāṅgapura (about 4 miles north of the śrīpāṭa); his samāja is nearby, and his descendants serve the Deities of Śrī Nitāi-Gaura; (24) Balarāma Ṭhākura lived in Viśvagrāma (neither the place nor the man can be traced); (24½) Śrīnivāsa Ācārya Prabhu (he was most dear to Abhirāma and received his affection and mercy, but because he had not taken initiation from him he is evidently counted as a “half disciple”). On the lunar day of Kṛṣṇa-saptamī in the month of Caitra a great festival is held here, and many people gather.

The two preach in Gauḍa together with Nitāi —

14 When Mahāprabhu told Nityānanda to go to Gauḍa, He sent these two with Him.

(4) Mādhava and (5) Vāsu Ghoṣa Ṭhākura —

15 Therefore they are counted in both groups, and so it is with Mādhava and Vāsudeva Ghoṣa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

These two are like Nityānanda's own associates. When Mahāprabhu ordered Nityānanda Prabhu to go to Gauḍa, He sent Rāmadāsa and Gadādhara dāsa with Him. So these two were counted once among Mahāprabhu's associates, and now they are counted among Nityānanda's as well. Mādhava and Vāsu Ghoṣa are likewise counted in both groups.

Anubhāṣya.

Govinda Ghoṣa, Vāsu Ghoṣa. Govinda Ghoṣa Ṭhākura's most beloved Deity, Śrī Gopīnātha, is still present at Agradvīpa, near Dāĩhāṭ and Pāṭuli in Barddhamāna district. On the day of His devotee's disappearance He offers piṇḍa, as a son does at his father's śrāddha. His service has long been carried on under the supervision of the royal family of Nadīyā-Kṛṣṇanagara. Every year in the month of Vaiśākha, at the time of the “Bāradola” in Kṛṣṇanagara, He is brought to the capital together with eleven other Deities, and after the Dola festival He is taken back to Agradvīpa.

Many padas in the “Gaura-nāgarī” mood, which gratify the senses of the prākṛta-sahajiyās, have been interpolated into Vāsu Ghoṣa's collection of padas. In truth these are not, and can never be, the padas of Vāsu Ghoṣa, a devotee of Gaura who relished the rasa of separation (vipralambha). Sādhakas will reject them. See Ādi 10.115.

Abhirāma's pastimes —

16 Rāmadāsa, a chief branch, was a treasury of loving friendship. He lifted a log that it took sixteen men to carry and made a flute of it.

The extraordinary deeds of Dāsa Gadādhara —

17 Gadādhara dāsa was full of bliss in the mood of a gopī, and in his house Nityānanda revealed the dāna-keli pastime.[2]

*Mādhava Ghoṣa's kīrtana —*

18 Śrī Mādhava Ghoṣa was foremost among the kīrtana singers, and Nityānanda Prabhu would dance to his singing.

*Vāsu Ghoṣa's kīrtana —*

19 When Vāsudeva sang of the Lord, even wood and stone would melt to hear him.

(6) Murāri-Caitanyadāsa —

20 Wondrous were the pastimes of Murāri-caitanya dāsa: he would slap a tiger on the cheek and play with snakes.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Murāri-Caitanyadāsa was born in the village of Sar-Vṛndāvanapura, one krośa from Galaśī station in Barddhamāna district. When he came to the village of Modadruma, or Māugāchi, in Navadvīpa-dhāma, he came to be called “Śārṅga” (Sāraṅga) Murāri-Caitanyadāsa. His descendants still live at the pāṭa of Sar.

Anubhāṣya.

Murāri-Caitanyadāsa. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 5: “Caitanyadāsa's body has no external consciousness. He drives tigers deep into the forest, and at times he even rides on a tiger. By Kṛṣṇa's grace the tiger cannot harm him. He takes a huge python on his lap, and Caitanyadāsa fearlessly delights in it. He played with tigers without fear — such is the mercy the great Avadhūta bestows. Caitanyadāsa has entirely forgotten himself; in bliss he constantly speaks what is in his heart. For two or three days he stays submerged in water, and his body suffers no harm. In dress and behavior he is almost like an insensible man, and no one notices him. He is wild beyond measure and boundlessly brave, like a lion. How much can I tell of the transformations of bhakti in Caitanyadāsa? They are all boundless. Such is the worthy Śrī Caitanyadāsa Murāri Paṇḍita: even by the breeze that has touched him, one surely attains Kṛṣṇa.”

Nitāi's associates are pure devotees, the friends of Vraja —

21 All of Nityānanda’s associates are cowherd friends from Vraja. Each carries a horn and a staff and wears the dress of a cowherd, with a peacock feather on his head.

Anubhāṣya.

All the devotees who took shelter of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu took shelter of the sakhya-rasa of Vraja. All of them wear the dress of cowherd boys. The Prabhu's wife, the queen Mother Jāhnavā, is Anaṅga-mañjarī of Vraja, the younger sister of Śrīmatī Rādhikā. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 66): “Some say that in the age of Kali Anaṅga-mañjarī is Śrī Vasudhā-devī, while others declare her to be Jāhnavī. By the earlier principle, the saintly consider both views correct.” The devotees who took shelter of Mother Jāhnavā are also counted among Nityānanda's associates.

(7) Raghunātha Vaidya —

22 Raghunātha Vaidya Upādhyāya was a great soul: the very sight of him awakened loving devotion to Kṛṣṇa.

*(8) Sundarānanda (gopāla 2) —*

23 Sundarānanda, a branch of Nityānanda, was His intimate servant, and with him Nityānanda enjoyed the playful pastimes of Vraja.

Anubhāṣya.

Sundarānanda. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "An ocean of the rasa of prema, named Sundarānanda, the chief among the associates of Nityānanda-svarūpa." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 127): "He who was formerly named Sudāma is now Ṭhākura Sundara." He is one of the twelve gopālas, "Sudāma."

His śrīpāṭa is the village of Maheśapura, 14 miles east of "Mājadiyā" station (formerly called "Śivanivāsa") on the E.B.R. line; it is now in Yaśohara district. Nothing old remains here as a memorial except the site of Sundarānanda's ancestral home. A Bāul lives at the śrīpāṭa on the edge of the village. The temple, the Deities and everything else are recent. At present Śrī Śrī Rādhā-vallabha and Śrī Śrī Rādhā-ramaṇa are served in Maheśapura. The river Vetravatī flows nearby. Sundarānanda Ṭhākura remained a celibate all his life, so he has no descendants. Descendants of his kinsmen and of his servitor-disciples are living. In the village of Maṅgaladihi in Vīrabhūma district there is a family of Sundarānanda's kinsmen; Śrī Śrī Balarāma Jīu is served there. The Deity of Śrī Śrī Rādhā-vallabha established by Sundarānanda Ṭhākura was taken away by the Gosvāmīs of Saidābāda in Baharampura; later the present Deity was installed. Now the zamindars of Maheśapura are His servitors. On the full-moon day of Māgha the festival of Sundarānanda Ṭhākura's disappearance is held.

*(9) Kamalākara Pippalāi (gopāla 3) —*

24 Kamalākara Pippalāi was extraordinary in his ways, and his extraordinary love is known throughout the world.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The descendants of Kamalākara Pippalāi are servants of Śrī Jagannāthadeva at Māheśa.

Anubhāṣya.

Kamalākara Pippalāi. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 128): "He who was Mahābala came to be named Kamalākara Pippalāi." He is one of the twelve gopālas, "Mahābala." It was he who established the Deity of Śrī Jagannātha at Māheśa. The temple of Śrī Jagannāthadeva at Māheśa is about 2½ miles from Śrīrāmapura station on the E.I.R. line.

Kamalākara's son was named Caturbhuja. Caturbhuja had two sons, Nārāyaṇa and Jagannātha; Nārāyaṇa's son was Jagadānanda, and his son was Rājīvalocana. In his time the service of Jagannāthadeva fell short of funds. The Nawab of Ḍhākā, Oyālisa Sā (Sujā?), granted Jagannāthadeva 1185 bighās of land in the year 1060. The land lies in the village of Jagannāthapura, a krośa and a half west of Māheśa. That mauzā took the name “Jagannāthapura” from Jagannāthadeva's name.

There is a tradition that Kamalākara's younger brother, Nidhipati Pippalāi, searched for his elder brother, came to Māheśa, and found Kamalākara there. He could in no way persuade him to return home, so in the end he himself came to Māheśa with his own family and his brothers' families and settled there. Even now about thirty households of twice-born descendants of Kamalākara Pippalāi live in the village of Māheśa, among them Śrīyukta Prasādadāsa Adhikārī.

Another story is told. A certain renunciant Vaiṣṇava named “Dhruvānanda” went to Puruṣottama-kṣetra. He strongly desired to cook with his own hands and offer bhoga to Śrī Jagannātha. At night he saw in a dream that Śrī Jagannāthadeva appeared to him and told him to go to the village of Māheśa on the bank of the Gaṅgā, install Śrī Jagannātha there, and fulfill his desire by offering Him bhoga every day with his own hands. When Dhruvānanda reached Māheśa, he saw Śrī Jagannātha, Balarāma and Subhadrā-devī floating in the waters of the Gaṅgā. He lifted the three Deities out of the water, built a hut on the bank of the Gaṅgā, and began to serve Them. As the time of his disappearance drew near, one thought filled his heart: who would be a fit servitor for Śrī Jagannātha? Then in a dream he received Śrī Jagannāthadeva's order: “Tomorrow morning a resident of the village of Khālijuli near the Sundarbans, named ‘Śrī Kamalākara Pippalāi,’ a supreme devotee of Śrī Jagannāthadeva and a crest jewel of Vaiṣṇavas, will come to Māheśa; entrust the service to him.” The next morning Dhruvānanda met Kamalākara and entrusted him with the service of Śrī Jagannāthadeva. Ever since Kamalākara obtained the right to serve Śrī Jagannāthadeva, [his family] has borne the title “Adhikārī.” Among the fifty-six grāmīs (clans named after villages) of brāhmaṇas by birth of the Rāḍhīya class, “Pippalāi” is one.

(10) Sūryadāsa and (11) Kṛṣṇadāsa Sarakhela —

25 Sūryadāsa Sarakhela and his brother Kṛṣṇadāsa had firm faith in Nityānanda and were abodes of love.

Anubhāṣya.

Sūryadāsa Sarakhela. Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 12: "Not far from Navadvīpa is 'Śāligrāma.' There lives a paṇḍita named Sūryadāsa. He is very able in the service of the Yavana king in Gauḍa; he became famous as 'Sarakhela' and earned great wealth. Sūryadāsa is one of four brothers, all of very pure conduct. His two daughters are named Vasudhā and Jāhnavā." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 65): "His two beloveds, Vasudhā and Jāhnavī, descend from Śrī Vāruṇī and from the line of Revata.[4] They are the daughters of the great soul Śrī Sūryadāsa, who is Kakudmī, radiant as the sun."

Baḍagāchi. On the E.B.R. line, 2 miles from "Muḍāgāchā" station, lies Baḍagāchi, or Bahiragāchi, on the bank of the "Guḍaguḍe" canal, across from the village of Dharmadaha. Śāligrāma and Rukuṇapura are close by.

Kṛṣṇadāsa Sarakhela was the younger brother of Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita and Sūryadāsa Sarakhela. For the adhivāsa of Nityānanda's wedding he went from Baḍagāchi to Śāligrāma. Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 12: "Taking various articles, Kṛṣṇadāsa Paṇḍita came from his home together with the brāhmaṇas."

*(12) Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita (gopāla 4) —*

26 Śrī Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita's devotion soared with prema; he had great power both to give and to receive love for Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita. He was patronized by Rājā Kṛṣṇadāsa, the son of Hari Hoḍa. He is one of the twelve gopālas of Vraja, "Subala the friend." He lived first in Śāligrāma, not far from Muḍāgāchā station on the E.B.R. line, and later at Ambikā-Kālanā. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 128): "He who was Subala, the best of the dear friends, is Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita." Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita is supremely fortunate; in body, mind and words Nityānanda is his life." "Sarakhela Sūryadāsa Paṇḍita is generous. His brother Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita is renowned. Taking leave of his elder brother at Śāligrāma, he came to 'Ambikā' and made his home on the bank of the Gaṅgā."

He had twenty-two and a half branches: (1) Śrī Nṛsiṁha-caitanya, (2) Kṛṣṇadāsa, (3) Viṣṇudāsa, (4) Baḍa Balarāmadāsa, (5) Govinda, (6) Raghunātha, (7) Baḍu Gaṅgādāsa, (8) Āuliyā Gaṅgārāma, (9) Yādavācārya, (10) Hṛdaya-caitanya, (11) Cāḍa Hāladāra, (12) Maheśa Paṇḍita, (13) Mukuṭa Rāya, (14) Bhātuyā Gaṅgārāma, (15) Āuliyā Caitanya, (16) Kāliyā Kṛṣṇadāsa, (17) Pātuyā Gopāla, (18) Baḍa Jagannātha, (19) Nityānanda, (20) Bhāvi, (21) Jagadīśa, (22) Rāiyā Kṛṣṇadāsa, (22½) Annapūrṇā.

Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita's elder son was (Baḍa) Balarāma and the younger, Raghunātha. Raghunātha's sons were Maheśa Paṇḍita and Govinda, and his daughter was Annapūrṇā. Śrī Kaṁsāri Miśra of Śāligrāma (family title “Ghoṣāla,” “Vātsya” gotra) had six sons: (1) Dāmodara, (2) Jagannātha, (3) Sūryadāsa Sarakhela (the father of Vasudhā and Jāhnavā), (4) Gaurīdāsa, (5) Kṛṣṇadāsa Sarakhela, (6) Nṛsiṁha-caitanya. Some descendants of Kaṁsāri Miśra's kinsmen still live in Śāligrāma. Neither Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita nor Hṛdaya-caitanya has descendants. Some say that those living now are descendants in the disciplic line of Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita or Hṛdaya-caitanya. When Jāhnavā-devī went to Śrī Vṛndāvana and saw the samāja of her uncle Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita, she wept: “Seeing the samādhi of Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita, she cannot stop the streams of tears flowing from her eyes.” (Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 11.)

Gaurīdāsa's disciple was Hṛdaya-caitanya; Hṛdaya-caitanya's disciple was Gopīramaṇa, the son of Annapūrṇā Devī. His descendants are the present adhikārīs of Mahāprabhu at Kālnā.

The śrīpāṭa of Ambikā-Kālnā is on the bank of the Gaṅgā across from Śāntipura, in Barddhamāna district; it is a subdivision and a small town. The śrīpāṭa is about 1 krośa east of Kālnā Court station on the Hāoḍā–Byāṇḍel–Bārahāroyā line, right next to the new samāja-bāṭī (mausoleum) of the Rājā of Barddhamāna, or the bazaar. At the entrance to Gaurīdāsa's temple stands a wonderful tamarind tree. It is said that Mahāprabhu and Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita met beneath this tamarind. The temple is paved with white stone, and in the three chambers of the building the sacred forms reside thus: (1) Śrī Gaurīdāsa, (2) Śrī Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa, (3) Śrī Gaura-Nityānanda, (4) Śrī Jagannātha, (5) Śrī Balarāma and (6) Śrī Rāma-Sītā. West of Paṇḍita Gaurīdāsa's house is the temple of Śrī Sūryadāsa Paṇḍita, and a little farther away the āśrama of the perfected Śrī Bhagavān dāsa Bābājī.

The place where the present temple stands is called “Ambikā,” and north of it is Kālnā; so together they are called “Ambikā-Kālnā.” It is said that the oar Śrī Mahāprabhu plied with His own hand and the Gītā written in His own hand (see the Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 7) are still kept in the temple.

Gaurīdāsa Paṇḍita, whose life is Gaura and Nitāi —

27 Gaurīdāsa surrendered to Nityānanda his caste, his family and his place in his community, and made Śrī Caitanya and Nityānanda the Lords of his life.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Pāṅti": eating together in one row (paṅkti-bhojana).

Thus ends the eleventh chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

(13) Purandara Paṇḍita —

28 Purandara Paṇḍita was dear to Nityānanda Prabhu; he moved through the ocean of love like Mount Mandara.

Anubhāṣya.

Purandara Paṇḍita. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Purandara Paṇḍita is supremely peaceful and self-controlled; he is exclusively dear to Nityānanda-svarūpa." Antya, Chapter 5: "Then the Prabhu came to the village of Khaḍadaha, to the place of Purandara Paṇḍita's temple. No one can describe all the dancing that Prabhu Nityānanda Rāya did in the village of Khaḍadaha. Purandara Paṇḍita was in supreme madness: climbing a tree, he roared like a lion. Crying, 'I am Aṅgada!' he leaped down."

*(14) Parameśvarī dāsa (gopāla 5) —*

29 Parameśvara dāsa took shelter in Nityānanda alone; whoever remembers him attains devotion to Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Parameśvara, or Parameśvarī dāsa. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Parameśvara dāsa, whose life is Nityānanda; in his body Nityānanda sports." Antya, Chapter 5: "Kṛṣṇadāsa and Parameśvara dāsa — these two, in the mood of cowherd boys, shout 'He! He!' all the time. Purandara Paṇḍita and Parameśvarī dāsa, in whose body Gauracandra is manifest, came running at once. Seeing the Prabhu, both wept, overcome with love." For some time he lived in Khaḍadaha. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 132): "He who was formerly the friend named Arjuna is the servant Śrī Parameśvara." He is one of the twelve gopālas, the friend "Arjuna." When the queen Śrī Jāhnavā went to the festival at Kheturi, Parameśvara was with her (Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 10). By the order of Mother Jāhnavā he installed the Deity "Śrī Rādhā-Gopīnātha" at Āṭapura (see the same, wave 13).

In the Śrī Vaiṣṇava-vandanā: "With care I shall honor Parameśvara dāsa Ṭhākura, who made a jackal utter the holy name where saṅkīrtana was held." The thirteenth wave of the Bhakti-ratnākara tells of Parameśvarī Ṭhākura.

The śrīpāṭa of Parameśvarī Ṭhākura is Āṭapura, on the Cāṗāḍāṅgā branch of the Hāoḍā–Āmtā railway, near Āṭapura station and the ancient temple of Śrī Rādhā-Govinda, founded by the late Kṛṣṇakumāra Mitra, dewan of the Barddhamāna Rāja Teja Bāhādura. Formerly the place was called "Viśakhālā."

Right in front of the temple grow two bakula trees side by side, giving dense shade, and separately a kadamba tree; between them is the samādhi of Parameśvarī Ṭhākura, beautifully crowned with a tulasī platform. It is said that the present two trees grew from branches of the two bakula trees that stood in Śrīla Parameśvarī Ṭhākura's time. Every year the kadamba tree bears a single flower, and with it the Deity's lotus feet are worshiped.

Parameśvarī Ṭhākura was born in a Vaidya family. His brother's descendants are the present servitors of the śrīpāṭa. Some of them also live in the village of Garalagāchā (Caṇḍītalā post office, Hugalī district). Until recently they had many disciples who were brāhmaṇas by birth. But in the course of time they took up the Vaidya profession, like ordinary worldly people, and so all their disciples of brāhmaṇa families gradually left them. Their title is "Adhikārī." The present servitors of the śrīpāṭa are Śrī Rādhikāprasanna Adhikārī Kavirāja Mahāśaya and the widowed, sonless mother-in-law of Naṭavara Adhikārī Mahāśaya. The family name of their caste is "Gupta."

They regard themselves as ordinary "Vaidyas" and have the Ṭhākura worshiped by devala brāhmaṇas. There are now eight households of servitors, and the eight households have merged into two. Formerly much land was set aside for the Deity's service, but they have lost all of it. Now the service of the Deity is kept up with great difficulty on a small debottara endowment.

In the temple, Śrī Baladeva and Śrī Rādhā-Gopīnātha are seen on a single throne. The Baladeva Deity was probably installed later. To place Śrī Baladeva and Śrī Kṛṣṇa with Śrīmatī on the same throne is contrary to tattva. On the full-moon day of Vaiśākha the festival of Parameśvarī Ṭhākura's disappearance is held.

(15) Jagadīśa Paṇḍita —

30 Śrī Jagadīśa Paṇḍita purifies the whole world; like a heavy monsoon rain, he pours down the nectar of love for Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

The śrīpāṭa of Śrī Jagadīśa Paṇḍita is the village of Yaśaḍā, within a mile of Cākadaha station (on the E.B.R. line) in Nadīyā district. See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 4, and the Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Ādi 14.39. From the account of the Yaśaḍā śrīpāṭa we learn that Jagadīśa Bhaṭṭa was born in East Bengal, in the region of Gauhāṭī. His father, Kamalākṣa, was a descendant of Bhaṭṭanārāyaṇa, of the Bandyaghaṭīya family of Gayaghara. Both Jagadīśa's father and his mother were householders devoted to Viṣṇu. After his parents' disappearance, Jagadīśa left his birthplace with his wife “Duḥkhinī” and his brother Maheśa. In order to live on the bank of the Gaṅgā and spend his time with Vaiṣṇavas, he came to Śrī Māyāpura and settled near the house of Śrī Jagannātha Miśra. Gaurasundara ordered Jagadīśa to go to Nīlācala to preach the holy name. By Śrīman Mahāprabhu's order Jagadīśa Paṇḍita preached the name in Nīlācala. There he prayed to Jagannāthadeva, and in answer to his prayer he was allowed to bring back a form of Jagannāthadeva. Jagadīśa installed the Deity in the village of Yaśaḍā on the bank of the Gaṅgā, now within Cākadaha police station. There is a tradition that Jagadīśa Paṇḍita carried this Jagannātha Deity from Puruṣottama to Yaśaḍā on a staff. Even today the servitors at Yaśaḍā display a staff as “Jagadīśa Paṇḍita's staff on which the Jagannātha Deity was brought.”

It is said that Śrī Gaura-Nityānanda Prabhu came to the village of Yaśaḍā twice with Their associates, and here there were saṅkīrtana processions, talks about Hari, kīrtana and a great festival.

Jagadīśa Paṇḍita enacted the pastime of a householder. His only son was named “Rāmabhadra Gosvāmī.”

Formerly the Jagannātha Deity was installed under a banyan tree on the bank of the Gaṅgā; later Rājā Kṛṣṇacandra of Goyāḍī-Kṛṣṇanagara had a temple built. When the temple built by the Rājā of Kṛṣṇanagara fell into ruin, Mokṣadā Dāsī, the wife of the local Umeśacandra Majumadāra, in 1324 restored the present temple; this is inscribed on a stone plaque. The temple has no spire and looks like an ordinary house. In front of it is a modest courtyard. In the temple reside Śrī Jagannāthadeva, Śrī Rādhā-vallabha Jīu and the Gaura-Gopāla installed by Jagadīśa's wife, Mother Duḥkhinī.

When Mahāprabhu had sanctified Jagadīśa's house in Yaśaḍā and was about to leave for Nīlācala, Duḥkhinī was deeply grieved at the separation from Gaurasundara. So Mahāprabhu agreed to accept Duḥkhinī's service in the village of Yaśaḍā in the form of the Gaura-Gopāla Deity. Ever since, the Śrī Gaura-Gopāla Deity (a golden-hued wooden form of Gopāla) has been served there.

The Gaṅgā has moved away from this place by nearly a krośa. For some time the perfected Bhagavān dāsa Bābājī Mahāśaya of Kālnā performed bhajana in the village of Yaśaḍā. Later the Bābājī Mahāśaya left this place and settled in Kālnā, but even from Kālnā he came here from time to time. At that time Vijayacandra Gosvāmī Mahāśaya was the servitor of Śrī Jagannāthadeva. The present servitor of the śrīpāṭa is Śrī Lalitamohana Gosvāmī. The family are Bāḍuyyes (Bandyopādhyāyas); their maternal uncles are of the Gāṅgulī family. A sūcaka-gāna (introductory song) on Jagadīśa Paṇḍita Gosvāmī, composed by a Vaiṣṇava poet named Gadādhara, is still sung in the village of Yaśaḍā. The song sets out the life of Jagadīśa Paṇḍita in a few words. Raghunāthācārya, the son of Khañja Bhagavān, was a disciple of Jagadīśa Paṇḍita Gosvāmī.

Jagadīśa Paṇḍita's disappearance day is the third lunar day of the bright fortnight of Pauṣa. Every year on the twelfth lunar day of the bright fortnight of Pauṣa the festival of Jagadīśa Paṇḍita's birth is held, and many people gather for the Snāna-yātrā.

*(16) Dhanañjaya Paṇḍita (gopāla 6) —*

31 Dhanañjaya Paṇḍita, a dear servant of Nityānanda, was utterly detached and always full of love for Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Dhanañjaya Paṇḍita lived in the village of Śītala near Kāṭoyā. He is one of the twelve gopālas, the friend “Vasudāma.” In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 127): “The friend Vasudāma is Paṇḍita Śrī Dhanañjaya.” Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya,

Chapter 6: “Dhanañjaya Paṇḍita is an extraordinary mahānta; Nityānanda is in his heart every moment.”

Śītalagrāma lies in Barddhamāna district, within Maṅgalakoṭa police station and Kaicara post office. From Barddhamāna one takes the Kāṭoyā light railway, gets off at Kaicara station, 9 miles from Kāṭoyā, and goes 1 mile to the northeast. The temple is a thatched hut with a mud wall around it. Long ago the Mallika Bābus of the village of “Bājārabana Kābāśī” built a brick house for the Deity. That temple collapsed sixty-four or sixty-five years ago; the foundation of the old temple still remains. To the left of the entrance is a tulasī altar: this is the samādhi altar of Dhanañjaya Paṇḍita. In the west-facing house are Śrī Gopīnātha, whom Śrī Dhanañjaya served, Śrī Śrī Nitāi-Gaura, and the Deity of Śrī Dāmodara. Every year in the middle of the month of Māgha the Deities are carried to a garden a little way from the temple, and the disappearance festival is held. Some say that Dhanañjaya Paṇḍita's real birthplace is the village of “Jāḍ” in Caṭṭagrāma district. He came from there and established Deity service in Śītalagrāma and in the village of Sāčaḍā-Pāčaḍā.

It is said that he performed saṅkīrtana with Mahāprabhu in Navadvīpa for some time, returned to Śītalagrāma, and from there set out to see Śrī Vṛndāvana-dhāma. On the way to Vṛndāvana he stayed for a while in the village of Sāčaḍā-Pāčaḍā, three krośas south of present-day Memārī station. There he permitted the disciple traveling with him to establish the service of the Deity, and he himself went on to Vṛndāvana. That is why people also call the village of Sāčaḍā-Pāčaḍā “Dhanañjaya's pāṭa.” Now this village holds no trace of Dhanañjaya Paṇḍita; his principal śrīpāṭa is Śītalagrāma itself. On returning from Vṛndāvana he served the Deity in the village of Jalandi, and from there he came again to Śītalagrāma and established the service of Śrī Gaurāṅgadeva.

It is said that Dhanañjaya had no descendants. He had a brother named Sañjaya, whose son was named Rāmakānāi Ṭhākura. Sañjaya's śrīpāṭa is the village of Jalandi (Lokanagara post office) in Barddhamāna district, four or five krośas to the east. Among Sañjaya's descendants, Śrī Nīlamaṇi Ṭhākura, Śrī Rākhālacandra Ṭhākura and others, as well as descendants through a daughter, Śrī Kānāilāla Mukhopādhyāya and others, live in Jalandi itself. Śrī Rādhā-Govinda is served there. The śrīpāṭa of that Rāmakānāi is in Mulukagrāma, very close to present-day Bolapura; the servitors, Śrī Yugalakiśora Mukhopādhyāya and Śrī Gaurakiśora Mukhopādhyāya, live there. Some say that Sañjaya was Dhanañjaya's disciple. The present servitors at Śītalagrāma are descendants of a disciple of Dhanañjaya Paṇḍita. The ancient Deity Śrī Śyāmasundara Jīu, installed by Dhanañjaya's disciple Jīvanakṛṣṇa, is now in the house of Gopāla Rāya Caudhurī.

*(17) Maheśa Paṇḍita (gopāla 7) —*

32 Maheśa Paṇḍita is a generous cowherd boy of Vraja; to the beat of the kettledrum he would dance, drunk with love.

Anubhāṣya.

Maheśa Paṇḍita. His śrīpāṭa was at Pālapāḍā until the first few months of the Bengali year 1334. It was then moved to the village of Kāṭhāladhuli near Cākadaha. He is one of the twelve gopālas, the friend "Mahābāhu." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 129): "Maheśa Paṇḍita is the glorious Mahābāhu, a friend in Vraja." Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Maheśa Paṇḍita is a most exalted mahānta."

Pālapāḍā lies in Nadīyā district, in the jungle, a mile south of Cākadaha station on the E.B.R. line. The Gaṅgā is far from here. Formerly Maheśa Paṇḍita lived across from Jirāṭ, on the eastern bank, at a place called Masipura or Yaśīpura (?). But Masīpura was swallowed by the Gaṅgā, and the Deity installed by Maheśa Paṇḍita stayed for some time at Beleḍāṅgā near Sukhasāgara. When the Gaṅgā eroded and destroyed Beleḍāṅgā as well, the zamindar of Pālapāḍā, Navakumāra Caṭṭopādhyāya, prevailed on the servitor of that time, Bābājī Rāmakṛṣṇadāsa, to bring the Deity to Pālapāḍā, and he built a temple there. Navakumāra Bābu's son, Rajanī Bābu, registered the temple lands in the name of Harekṛṣṇadāsa Bābājī in 1883 A.D. Since then the name "Pālapāḍā-pāṭa" has continued. Pālapāḍā is in Pāčanagara parganā. Fourteen mauzās — Beleḍāṅgā, Berigrāma, Sukhasāgara, Cānduḍe, Manasāpotā, Pālapāḍā and others — lie in Pāčanagara, so some call the area "Nāgaradeśa." Some hold that this Maheśa Paṇḍita was the younger brother of Jagadīśa Paṇḍita of the Yaśaḍā śrīpāṭa. They say that Jagadīśa, Hiraṇya and this Maheśa Paṇḍita were three brothers: Jagadīśa the eldest, Hiraṇya the middle, and Maheśa the youngest. But authoritative books do not say whether this Maheśa Paṇḍita was Śrī Jagadīśa's brother, so the claim is doubtful.

Śrī Maheśa Paṇḍita was with Śrī Nityānanda at the festival at Pāṇihāṭī, and after the festival he went with Śrī Nityānanda to Saptagrāma. The eighth wave of the Bhakti-ratnākara shows that when Śrī Narottama Ṭhākura came to Khaḍadaha, Śrī Maheśa Paṇḍita was present there.

The temple of the śrīpāṭa is a simple house. In the dilapidated temple reside the sacred forms of Śrī Gaura-Nityānanda, Śrī Gopīnātha, Śrī Madana-mohana, Śrī Rādhā-Govinda and a śālagrāma. In front of the temple is the altar of Maheśa Paṇḍita's phula-samāja (flower tomb). Now the service is maintained only by begging. A local resident, Śrī Kālīkṛṣṇa Cakravartī, contributes 25 rupees a year. Śrī Maheśa Paṇḍita has no descendants. The present servitor is Śrī Sanātana dāsa Bābājī.

*(18) Puruṣottama Paṇḍita (gopāla 8) —*

33 Puruṣottama Paṇḍita of Navadvīpa was a great soul; at the very name of Nityānanda he was seized by the great madness of love.

Anubhāṣya.

Puruṣottama Paṇḍita. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Paṇḍita Puruṣottama was born in Navadvīpa; he is a great servant of Nityānanda-svarūpa, close to His heart." He is one of the twelve gopālas, "Stokakṛṣṇa." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 130): "He who was formerly the friend Stokakṛṣṇa is the servant Śrī Puruṣottama." Some say that his śrīpāṭa is at Sukhasāgara.

(19) Balarāma dāsa —

34 Balarāma dāsa tasted the rasa of love for Kṛṣṇa, and at the name of Nityānanda he was utterly beside himself.

Anubhāṣya.

Balarāma dāsa. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Balarāma dāsa, utterly intoxicated with the rasa of prema: even by the breeze that has touched him, all sins are destroyed."

(20) Yadunātha Kavicandra —

35 Yadunātha Kavicandra was a great devotee, in whose heart Nityānanda dances.

Anubhāṣya.

Yadunātha Kavicandra. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Yadunātha Kavicandra is full of the rasa of prema; Nityānanda is always in his heart." The same work, Madhya, Chapter 1: "Ratnagarbha Ācārya is his famous name; he was a companion of Nityānanda Prabhu's father,[5] born in the same village. His three sons are like the honey of Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet: Kṛṣṇānanda, Jīva and Yadunātha Kavicandra."

(21) Dvija Kṛṣṇadāsa —

36 Kṛṣṇadāsa, an excellent brāhmaṇa born in Rāḍha, was a foremost servant of Śrī Nityānanda.

Anubhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇadāsa. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "The noble brāhmaṇa Kṛṣṇadāsa was born in Rāḍha; his pastimes are among Nityānanda's associates."

*(22) Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa (gopāla 9) —*

37 Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa was a great Vaiṣṇava, among the foremost; he knew no one but the moonlike Nityānanda.

Anubhāṣya.

Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Kāliyā Kṛṣṇadāsa is famous throughout the three worlds; by remembering him one attains Gauracandra." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 132): "He who is Lavaṅga, the friend in Vraja, is Kāla Śrī Kṛṣṇadāsa." He is one of the twelve gopālas, the friend "Lavaṅga." His śrīpāṭa is the village of "Ākāihāṭ" in Barddhamāna district, within Kāṭoyā police station and post office; it lies beside the "Navadvīpa–Kāṭoyā" highway that runs from Kāṭoyā. On the E.I.R. line one goes from Byāṇḍel junction to Kāṭoyā station and walks two miles from there; or one gets off at Dāĩhāṭ, the station before Kāṭoyā, and the way is about a mile. The village of Ākāihāṭ is very small, and few people live there. The śrīpāṭa is now in decay. The temple over Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa Ṭhākura's samādhi has collapsed: its beams broke and everything lies buried. Going from the road through a mango grove, one sees ahead a ruined little room. In it is the Deity's empty altar, and in its southeast corner a thatched shed, under which is the samāja of the servitors. The present servitor is Hareramadāsa Bābājī. To the south is a pond: this is "Nūpura-kuṇḍa." Tradition says that the anklet (nūpura) of Raghunandana Ṭhākura, the son of Mukunda of Śrīkhaṇḍa — or, as some say, of Nityānanda Prabhu — fell into this pond. It is said that this anklet, along with Śrī Rādhā-vallabha and Śrī Gopāla Jīu of the Ākāihāṭ śrīpāṭa, is still kept at the mahānta-bāṭī in the village of Kaḍui, three krośas from Ākāihāṭ. There is a handwritten Śrī Caitanya-bhāgavata of the year 1200 and a Śrī Caritāmṛta copied in 1271. In the month of Caitra, on the twelfth lunar day of the dark fortnight — the day of Vāruṇī — the festival of Śrī Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa Ṭhākura's disappearance is held here.

According to the “Gosvāmīs” of the village of “Sonātalā,” on the north bank of the river Ichāmatī about 3 miles west of the well-known Beḍābandara in Pābanā district, Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa Ṭhākura was born in a brāhmaṇa family of the Varendra class, of the Bharadvāja gotra, and a “Bhāduḍa-grāmī.” From Ākāihāṭ, Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa Ṭhākura, preaching the holy name, came to Pābanā. In the field where he set up his āśrama, ruins of buildings can still be seen. Later his kinsmen also came to this place. As there were no Vārendra brāhmaṇas at Ākāihāṭ, he married in this region, and after some time he went again to Ākāihāṭ and to Śrī Vṛndāvana. While he was living in the village of Sonātalā, a son named “Śrī Mohanadāsa” was born to him. He left the boy at the home of his maternal uncle in the village of Sonātalā, or Bhāduṭī-Mathurāpura, gave him all his property, and went with his wife to Śrī Vṛndāvana. In Śrī Vṛndāvana another son was born to him, named “Gaurāṅgadāsa.” Because Gaurāṅgadāsa was born in Śrī Vṛndāvana, he was also called Vṛndāvanadāsa. Later the father sent him too to his eldest son, Mohanadāsa, and told him to take a six-ānā share (six-sixteenths) of the property. Gaurāṅgadāsa manifested the Deity of Śrī Kālācāḏa, resembling Śrī Govinda Jīu of Śrī Vṛndāvana, and served Him together with his elder brother.

Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa Ṭhākura's descendants, headed by Śrī Vijayagovinda Gosvāmī, still live today in Sonātalā and other places in Pābanā district.

At Sonātalā one can still see the site of the āśrama house, the bricks of the temple, and the ghāṭa of the pond. The Deity here, Śrī Kālācāḏa Jīu, is served in turn by Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa's descendants themselves. Here, in the month of Agrahāyaṇa, on the twelfth lunar day of the dark fortnight, the festival of Kālā Kṛṣṇadāsa Ṭhākura's disappearance is held.

*(23) Sadāśiva Kavirāja, (24) Puruṣottama (gopāla 10) —*

38 Śrī Sadāśiva Kavirāja was a great soul, and Śrī Puruṣottama dāsa was his son.

39 From his birth he was absorbed in the feet of Nityānanda, and he ceaselessly played childhood games with Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Sadāśiva Kavirāja and Nāgara Puruṣottama. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: “Sadāśiva Kavirāja is greatly fortunate; his son is named Śrī Puruṣottama dāsa. Puruṣottama dāsa's body has no external consciousness: Nityānanda-candra sports in his heart.” In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 156): “She who was formerly Candrāvalī in Vraja, most dear to Kṛṣṇa, is now in Gauḍa the Kavirāja Sadāśiva.” Verse 131: “Sadāśiva's son, named Nāgara Puruṣottama, born in a Vaidya family, is he who in Vraja was the cowherd named Dāma.” Sadāśiva Kavirāja's father, Kaṁsāri Sena, is in Kṛṣṇa's pastimes the sakhī “Ratnāvalī” of Vraja. Some say that Kaṁsāri Sena lived at Guptipāḍā on the E.I.R. line, but no trace of him can be found there now. Be that as it may, perfected devotees of Gaura like these, four generations in a row, are rare anywhere else.

Śrī Puruṣottama Ṭhākura's śrīpāṭa was formerly at Sukhasāgara, equidistant from Cākadaha and Śimurāli stations. First, when the village of Beleḍāṅgā was destroyed, Śrī Puruṣottama Ṭhākura's Deities were brought to Sukhasāgara. Then Sukhasāgara too was swallowed by the Gaṅgā. So Puruṣottama Ṭhākura's Deity was brought to Sāhebaḍāṅgā-Beḍigrāma together with the Deities of Mother Śrī Jāhnavā's gādi (seat), which had been at that place. When Beḍigrāma too was destroyed, Puruṣottama Ṭhākura's Deity, together with the Deities of Mother Jāhnavā's gādi, was moved to the village of Cāñduḍe, where He has now resided for about fifty years.

The village of Cāñduḍe on the Bhāgīrathī is in Nadīyā district, within Cākadaha police station, a mile from “Simurāli” station on the E.B.R. line and a mile's walk from “Pālapāḍā.”

Since the old Sukhasāgara was swallowed by the river, the new Sukhasāgara lies 3–4 miles from the village of Cāñduḍe, south of Kālīgañja.

Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu's son-in-law, the husband of Śrīmatī Gaṅgā-devī, was Śrī Mādhavācārya (Mādhava Caṭṭopādhyāya) of Jirāṭ; according to some he was a disciple of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu, according to others of Śrī Jāhnavā-devī, and according to others of this Śrī Puruṣottama Ṭhākura. The Vaiṣṇava-vandanā states plainly that its author, Śrī Devakīnandana dāsa, was a disciple of this very Puruṣottama.

The present temple is a thatched hut with a mud wall. In the temple reside Śrī Jagannātha, Balarāma and Subhadrā; Nitāi-Gaura, two pairs of Deities; Gopīnātha; Mother Jāhnavā; Bāla-Gopāla; Rādhā-Govinda, five pairs; Revatī and Balarāma; and a śālagrāma. Some say that several of these sacred forms were installed by Puruṣottama Ṭhākura and the rest belong to Jāhnavā-devī's gādi. This śrīpāṭa is also known as "the pāṭa of Vasu-Jāhnavā." The names of the following servitor-mahāntas of the Cāñduḍe śrīpāṭa are known: (1) Gopāladāsa Mahānta, (2) Rāmakṛṣṇa, (3) Vihāridāsa, (4) Rāmadāsa, (5) Gopāladāsa and (6) the present aged servitor, Sītānātha dāsa.

(25) Kānu Ṭhākura —

40 His son was the great soul Śrī Kānu Ṭhākura, whose body overflowed with the nectar of love for Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Kānu Ṭhākura. Some count him among the twelve gopālas. He lived at Bodhakhānā. On the Central Section of the E.B.R. line one gets off at "Jhikaragāchā-ghāṭ" station, and from there, by boat on the river Kapotākṣa or overland, it is 2 or 2½ miles to the śrīpāṭa of Bodhakhānā.

Ṭhākura Kānāi's ancestor four generations back, Śrī Kaṁsāri Sena, was also called "Sambarāri." In the Vaiṣṇava-vandanā Devakīnandana names four generations of Ṭhākura Kānāi's ancestors: "I honor Śrī Kaṁsāri Sena and Sena Śrīvallabha. With all my heart I honor Sadāśiva Kavirāja, who is ever mad with love and knows nothing external. I honor my chosen lord, named Śrī Puruṣottama. Who can describe his incomparable qualities?"

Puruṣottama Ṭhākura was the son of Sadāśiva, and Kānu Ṭhākura was the son of Puruṣottama Ṭhākura. Kānu Ṭhākura's descendants hold that Puruṣottama Ṭhākura and "Nāgara Puruṣottama" were different persons. They say that Kānu Ṭhākura's father is the one mentioned in the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa as "Dāsa Puruṣottama," who is "Stokakṛṣṇa" in the pastimes of Vraja. But in the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa it is Puruṣottama, the son of Sadāśiva, born in a Vaidya family, who is called "Nāgara Puruṣottama." This Nāgara Puruṣottama is the friend named "Dāma" in the pastimes of Vraja. Among Kānu Ṭhākura's descendants a tradition is current that Puruṣottama Ṭhākura lived in the village of “Sukhasāgara” on the east bank of the Gaṅgā. Puruṣottama's wife was named “Jāhnavā.” Soon after Ṭhākura Kānāi's birth, Jāhnavā disappeared from this world. When Nityānanda Prabhu learned that Puruṣottama Ṭhākura had lost his wife, He came to Puruṣottama's house and took the twelve-year-old[6] child to His own home at Khaḍadaha.

According to Kānu Ṭhākura's descendants, Ṭhākura Kānāi appeared in Śaka 1457 (Bengali year 942), on the second lunar day of the bright fortnight of Āṣāḍha, a Thursday, the day of the Ratha-yātrā. Seeing the Ṭhākura's devotion to Kṛṣṇa from infancy, Nityānanda Prabhu named him “Śiśu Kṛṣṇadāsa” (the child Kṛṣṇadāsa).

In his fifth year the child Kṛṣṇadāsa went with the queen Mother Jāhnavā to Śrī Vṛndāvana-dhāma. The Vrajavāsīs headed by Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī, seeing the child Kṛṣṇadāsa's bhāva and other signs, gave him the name “Ṭhākura Kānāi.” There is a story that once in Vṛndāvana, as Ṭhākura Kānāi danced, overwhelmed by the bliss of kīrtana, an anklet vanished from his right foot. Ṭhākura Kānāi then said, “Wherever this anklet has fallen, there I will live.” It is said that the anklet fell in a village called “Bodhakhānā” in Yaśohara district, and from then on Ṭhākura Kānāi came to live at Bodhakhānā.

Another tradition is handed down in this family: the Deity “Prāṇavallabha” has been served since some ancestor of Sadāśiva several hundred years before the appearance of Śrīman Mahāprabhu. This “Prāṇavallabha” is still served at Bodhakhānā.

At the time of the “Bargī hāṅgāmā” (the Bargī raids), all of Ṭhākura Kānāi's sons, headed by Vaṁśīvadana, except the descendants of his eldest son, fled Bodhakhānā and settled in a village called “Bhājana-ghāṭ” in Nadīyā district. One of the descendants of Ṭhākura Kānāi's younger sons, named “Harikṛṣṇa Gosvāmī,” came back to Bodhakhānā after the Bargī raids had ended. He installed another, new Deity, also named “Prāṇavallabha.” Even now, in the village of Bodhakhānā, the descendants of Ṭhākura Kānāi's eldest son serve the ancient “Śrī Prāṇavallabha,” and the descendants of the younger son serve the newly installed “Prāṇavallabha.” At Bhājana-ghāṭ the Deity “Śrī Rādhā-vallabha” is served. The book Prema-vilāsa shows that Kānu Ṭhākura was present at the Kheturi festival together with Jāhnavā-devī and Vīrabhadra Prabhu.

Puruṣottama Ṭhākura and Kānu Ṭhākura had many disciples who were brāhmaṇas by birth. The four chief disciples of Puruṣottama Ṭhākura who were brāhmaṇas by birth are named thus: “His four dearest disciples, the best of brāhmaṇas: first Mādhavācārya, then Yādavācārya Paṇḍita, and Daivakīnandana dāsa, famous in Gauḍa-maṇḍala, who composed the book Śrīmad Vaiṣṇava-vandanā." This Mādhavācārya is the husband of Gaṅgā-devī, the daughter of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu. After the village of Sukhasāgara was destroyed, the Deities installed by Puruṣottama were brought to Cānduḍiyā, and they are now served together with his other Deities under the supervision of the descendants of Gaṅgā at Jirāṭ. Puruṣottama Ṭhākura's śrīpāṭa is also called the pāṭa of "Vasu-Jāhnavā."

Kānu Ṭhākura's disciples live in the village of Gaḍabetā on the bank of the river Śilāvatī in Medinīpura district. A brāhmaṇa named "Śrīrāma," of the Rāḍhī class and of the Kauthumī branch of the Sāma Veda, was a famous disciple of Kānāi Ṭhākura.

*(26) Uddhāraṇa Ṭhākura (gopāla 11) —*

41 Uddhāraṇa Datta, the best of great devotees, served the feet of Nityānanda in every way.

Anubhāṣya.

Uddhāraṇa Datta. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 129): "He who in Vraja was the cowherd Subāhu is Datta, named Uddhāraṇa." He lived in Saptagrāma, on the bank of the river Sarasvatī near Triśabighā station in Hugalī district. Formerly "Saptagrāma" meant Vāsudevapura, Bāśaberiyā, Kṛṣṇapura, Nityānandapura, Śivapura, Śaṅkhanagara and Saptagrāma taken together. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Uddhāraṇa Datta is a great and generous Vaiṣṇava, who was given the right to serve Nityānanda." Antya, Chapter 5: "After staying some days at Khaḍadaha, Nityānanda came to Saptagrāma with all His associates. The best of lords stayed on the bank of the Triveṇī, in the temple of the fortunate Uddhāraṇa Datta. In body, mind and words Datta Uddhāraṇa served Nityānanda's feet without pretense. Through Uddhāraṇa the whole merchant community was purified — of this there is no doubt." By birth he belonged to a Suvarṇa-vaṇik family.

At Saptagrāma there is a six-armed form of Mahāprabhu, installed by Śrīla Uddhāraṇa Ṭhākura and served by him with his own hands. To His right is Śrī Nityānanda and to His left Śrī Gadādhara. There are also forms of Śrī Rādhā-Govinda and a Śrī Śālagrāma, and beneath the throne-altar a painting of Śrī Uddhāraṇa Ṭhākura Mahāśaya is worshiped. In front of the present temple is a large nāṭya-mandira. A memorial stone plaque on a pillar of the nāṭya-mandira bears the names of the builder of the temple and of those who restored the śrīpāṭa. Right in front of the nāṭya-mandira is a cool, shady mādhavī bower. On either side of the bower stand two pillars: on one is a painting of Uddhāraṇa Ṭhākura Mahāśaya, and on the other, on a stone plaque, the four tāraka-brahma-nāmas of the four yugas are inscribed.

In 1283 a mendicant named Nitāidāsa Bābājī collected 12 bighās of land for the śrīpāṭa. Then, through the special efforts of certain people, the śrīpāṭa kept up for a while, but gradually the service fell into disorder. Later, in 1306, through the combined efforts of Balarāma Mallika, former Sub-judge of Hugalī, and many wealthy Suvarṇa-vaṇiks of Calcutta, some order is now seen again in the service of the śrīpāṭa.

Half a century ago a wooden image of Śrīla Uddhāraṇa Ṭhākura, installed by the late Jagamohana Datta of Bāli in Hugalī, resided in a broken-down hut. That image is no longer at the Saptagrāma śrīpāṭa, and his painting is worshiped now. On inquiry we heard that Uddhāraṇa Ṭhākura's former image is now in the house of Śrī Madana Datta Mahāśaya of Bāli, Hugalī, and the śālagrāma the Ṭhākura served is in the same village, in the house of Śrīnātha Datta.

Ṭhākura Uddhāraṇa was the dewan of the Rājā of the village of “Naihāṭī,” 1½ miles north of Kāṭoyā. Near Dāïhāṭ station the ruins of that royal family's palace can still be seen. The place where the Ṭhākura lived while serving the Rājā is still called “Uddhāraṇapura.” It is said that the Śrī Nitāi-Gaura Deity the Ṭhākura installed here was taken to the capital of Banoyārībāda. West of the temple here (or, according to some, in Vṛndāvana) is the Ṭhākura's samādhi. According to some, the Ṭhākura's father was named Śrīkara, his mother Bhadrāvatī, and his son Śrīnivāsa.

(27) Vaiṣṇavānanda Ācārya —

42 Ācārya Vaiṣṇavānanda was rich in devotion; his former name was Raghunātha Purī.

Anubhāṣya.

Vaiṣṇavānanda Ācārya. Caitanya-bhāgavata: “Ācārya Vaiṣṇavānanda is supremely generous; formerly he was known as ‘Raghunātha Purī.’” The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 97), naming Raghunātha Purī among the eight Purīs, describes him as one of the eight siddhis, beginning with aṇimā.

(28) Viṣṇudāsa, Nandana, Gaṅgādāsa — three brothers —

43 Viṣṇudāsa, Nandana and Gaṅgādāsa were three brothers, in whose house Ṭhākura Nitāi once stayed.

Anubhāṣya.

Viṣṇudāsa, Nandana and Gaṅgādāsa were three brothers, Bhaṭṭācāryas of Navadvīpa. Viṣṇudāsa and Gaṅgādāsa stayed with Mahāprabhu at Nīlācala for some time (Ādi 10.151). Mahāprabhu and Advaita Prabhu hid in Nandana Ācārya's house. Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu, on coming to Navadvīpa, also stayed there for a few days. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Gaṅgādāsa, the son of Caturbhuja Paṇḍita — in his house Nityānanda once sported."

(29) Paramānanda Upādhyāya, (30) Śrī Jīva Paṇḍita —

44 Paramānanda Upādhyāya was a servant of Nityānanda, and Śrī Jīva Paṇḍita sang of Nityānanda's virtues.

Anubhāṣya.

Paramānanda Upādhyāya. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Paramānanda Upādhyāya is an exclusively devoted Vaiṣṇava."

Śrī Jīva Paṇḍita was the middle son of Ratnagarbha Ācārya, a childhood friend of Hāḍāi Ojhā, Nityānanda's father. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "The generous Jīva Paṇḍita is a great devotee; in his house Nityānanda-candra sported." In Vraja he is Indirā (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verse 169).

(31) Paramānanda Gupta —

45 Paramānanda Gupta was a devotee of Kṛṣṇa, great in wisdom; Nityānanda once lived in his house.

Anubhāṣya.

Paramānanda Gupta. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Famous is Paramānanda Gupta Mahāśaya; formerly Nityānanda lived in his house." In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verses 194 and 199) he is Mañjumedhā of Vraja: "The Kṛṣṇa-stavāvalī composed by Paramānanda Gupta."

(32) Nārāyaṇa, (33) Kṛṣṇadāsa, (34) Manohara, (35) Devānanda —

46 Nārāyaṇa, Kṛṣṇadāsa, Manohara and Devānanda — these four brothers were servants of Nitāi.

Anubhāṣya.

Nārāyaṇa, Kṛṣṇadāsa, Manohara and Devānanda. Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6: "Kṛṣṇadāsa and Devānanda are two pure-hearted ones. Dear to Nityānanda are these four: 'Manohara,' 'Nārāyaṇa,' 'Kṛṣṇadāsa' and 'Devānanda.'"

(36) Hoḍa Kṛṣṇadāsa —

47 To Hoḍa Kṛṣṇadāsa, Nityānanda Prabhu was life itself; he knew nothing but the feet of Śrī Nityānanda.

Anubhāṣya.

Hoḍa Kṛṣṇadāsa. "Kṛṣṇadāsa of Baḍagāchi, rich in pious merit, in whose temple Nityānanda sported"; the same place tells of the glory of Baḍagāchi (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 6). See below, "Navanī Hoḍa."

*(37) Nakaḍi, (38) Mukunda, (39) Sūrya, (40) Mādhava, (41) Śrīdhara (gopāla 12), (42) Rāmānanda, (43) Jagannātha, (44) Mahīdhara —*

48 Among Nityānanda's devotees were also Nakaḍi, Mukunda, Sūrya, Mādhava, Śrīdhara, Rāmānanda Vasu, Jagannātha and Mahīdhara;

(45) Śrīmanta, (46) Gokuladāsa, (47) Hariharānanda, (48) Śivāi, (49) Nandāi, (50) Paramānanda —

49 Śrīmanta, Gokuladāsa, Hariharānanda, Śivāi, Nandāi and Paramānanda the Avadhūta;

(51) Vasanta, (52) Navanī, (53) Gopāla, (54) Sanātana, (55) Viṣṇāi, (56) Kṛṣṇānanda, (57) Sulocana —

50 Vasanta, Navanī Hoḍa, Gopāla, Sanātana, Viṣṇāi Hājarā, Kṛṣṇānanda and Sulocana;

Anubhāṣya.

Navanī Hoḍa. Rājā Kṛṣṇadāsa Hoḍa, the son of Hari Hoḍa, lived in Baḍagāchi. Baḍagāchi (Bahiragāchi) lies on the Lālagolā-ghāṭ line of the E.B.R., two miles from Muḍāgāchā station, across from Dharmadaha, on the bank of the "Guḍaguḍe" canal. In nearby Śāligrāma, through Rājā Kṛṣṇadāsa's efforts, the wedding of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu took place (Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 12). "Rukuṇapura" is a short distance from Bahiragāchi. Kṛṣṇadāsa's son was Navanī Hoḍa. His descendants now live in Rukuṇapura. By birth they are Dakṣiṇa-Rāḍhīya Kāyasthas; having received brahminical saṁskāras, they give initiation to people of all varṇas. In former times the Gaṅgā flowed at Baḍagāchi; that channel is now known as the "Kālśira canal."

Kṛṣṇānanda: see section 35.

(58) Kaṁsāri, (59) Rāmasena, (60) Rāmacandra, (61) Govinda, (62) Śrīraṅga, (63) Mukunda —

51 Kaṁsāri Sena, Rāmasena and Rāmacandra Kavirāja, and the three physicians — Govinda, Śrīraṅga and Mukunda;

Anubhāṣya.

Kaṁsāri Sena is "Ratnāvalī" of Vraja. See the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 194 and 200, and "Sadāśiva Kavirāja" above.

Rāmacandra Kavirāja was the son of Cirañjīva and Sunandā of Khaṇḍa, a disciple of Śrīnivāsa Ācārya, and a dear friend of Ṭhākura Narottama. Ṭhākura Narottama prayed for his company birth after birth. His younger brother was Govinda Kavirāja. Seeing his devotion to Kṛṣṇa, Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī Prabhu gave him the name "Kavirāja" in Vṛndāvana. From birth he was detached from worldly life, and he was the chief and dearest companion of Ṭhākura Mahāśaya and Śrīnivāsa Ācārya Prabhu in preaching and in bhajana. He lived first in Śrīkhaṇḍa and later came to "Kumāranagara" on the bank of the Bhāgīrathī and settled there (see the Bhakti-ratnākara).

Govinda Kavirāja was the younger son of Cirañjīva of Khaṇḍa and the brother of Rāmacandra Kavirāja. At first he was a Śākta; later he was initiated by Śrīnivāsa Ācārya Prabhu. He lived first in Śrīkhaṇḍa, then in Kumāranagara, and later came to the village of "Teliyā Budhari" on the south bank of the Padmā and settled there. Seeing his poetic gift, Śrī Jīva Gosvāmī Prabhu gave him too the name "Kavirāja."

He is the author of the drama Saṅgīta-mādhava, the Gītāmṛta and other works (see the Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 9).

(64) Pītāmbara, (65) Mādhavācārya, (66) Dāmodara, (67) Śaṅkara, (68) Mukunda, (69) Jñānadāsa, (70) Manohara —

52 Pītāmbara, Mādhavācārya, Dāmodara dāsa, Śaṅkara, Mukunda, Jñānadāsa and Manohara;

(71) Gopāla, (72) Rāmabhadra, (73) Gaurāṅgadāsa, (74) Nṛsiṁha-caitanya, (75) Mīnaketana —

53 Gopāla the dancer, Rāmabhadra, Gaurāṅgadāsa, Nṛsiṁha-caitanya and Mīnaketana Rāmadāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

Mīnaketana Rāmadāsa. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 68): “For a purpose the two born together, Niśaṭha and Ulmuka, entered him. Mīnaketana Rāma[7] is another vyūha of Saṅkarṣaṇa.”

(76) Śrī Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa —

54 Vṛndāvana dāsa, the son of Nārāyaṇī, composed the Caitanya-maṅgala.[3]

Anubhāṣya.

Vṛndāvana dāsa. In the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 109): “He who was Vedavyāsa is now Vṛndāvana dāsa. For a purpose, [Kṛṣṇa's] friend Kusumāpīḍa also entered him.” He is the son of Nārāyaṇī, the daughter of Śrīvāsa's brother, and the author of the Caitanya-bhāgavata. See the essay “The Ṭhākura's Life” in the introduction to the Caitanya-bhāgavata written by the author of this commentary.

*Vyāsadeva described Kṛṣṇa's pastimes in the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, and [Vṛndāvana dāsa] Gaura's pastimes in the Caitanya-bhāgavata —*

55 Veda-vyāsa described the pastimes of Kṛṣṇa in the Bhāgavata; the Vyāsa of Caitanya’s pastimes is Vṛndāvana dāsa.

The branch of Vīrabhadra Gosāñi is the best of all —

56 Vīrabhadra Gosāñi is the best of all the branches, and His offshoots are without end.

Nityānanda's associates are countless; [the author] glorifies their qualities to purify himself —

57 Nityānanda's devotees are endless — who could count them? I have written of some of them for my own purification.

They deliver the world by giving love for Kṛṣṇa —

58 All these branches are laden with the ripe fruits of love. They gave them to whomever they met and flooded all with love.

The deeds of their direct love for Kṛṣṇa —

59 Their love knows no bounds, nor does their striving; each of them has great power to give love and to give Kṛṣṇa Himself.

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the eleventh chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

60 Thus I have told in brief of Nityānanda's devotees, whose limit even the thousand-mouthed Ananta cannot reach.

61 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. "His side" is Nityānanda's: by verse 14, Mahāprabhu sent these two to Gauḍa with Him; so too the edition's heading to verse 14: "Together with Nitāi both preach in Gauḍa." ↩

2. Dāna-keli, “the toll pastime”: Kṛṣṇa and His friends block the gopīs’ way and demand a “toll” from them. ↩
3. Caitanya-maṅgala was the first name of the Caitanya-bhāgavata (see Ādi 8.33–35). ↩
4. The edition reads revata-vaṁśa, “the line of Revata” (Revata, also called Kakudmī, is Revatī's father). Possibly revaty-aṁśa should be read: “born of portions of Vāruṇī and Revatī.” ↩
5. The Caitanya-bhāgavata itself (Madhya 1.296) reads “a companion of the Prabhu's father,” that is, from the context, of Jagannātha Miśra. Below (on verse 44) the edition again calls Ratnagarbha a childhood friend of Hāḍāi Ojhā, Nityānanda's father. ↩
6. So in the edition (dvādaśa varṣera, “of twelve years”). Yet just below it says that in his fifth year the child had already gone with Mother Jāhnavā to Vṛndāvana. ↩
7. The edition reads mīnaketana-rāmādir vyūhaḥ, literally “Mīnaketana Rāma and the others are a vyūha”; translated according to the sense. ↩

Chapter 12

The Description of the Branches of the Advaita Trunk

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. In this twelfth chapter the author describes the branches of Advaita Prabhu. Among them he calls the Vaiṣṇavas who follow the teaching (mata) of Śrī Acyutānanda sāra-grāhī, those who accept the essence, and all the others asāra, worthless. At the end he describes the branch of Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosvāmī and so concludes the chapter. In between, two stories are told: one about Śrī Advaita's son Gopāla Miśra, the other about Advaita's servant Kamalākānta Viśvāsa. Early in Śrī Gopāla's life, during the cleaning of the Guṇḍicā temple, he fell unconscious in prema, and by Śrī Mahāprabhu's mercy he came back to himself. Kamalākānta Viśvāsa, the Ācārya's servant, begged three hundred rupees from King Pratāparudra to pay off Advaita Prabhu's debt. When Mahāprabhu learned of this, He punished that bāuliyā Viśvāsa, and at Advaitācārya's request He set him right.

Advaita's followers are of two kinds: those who accept the essence and those who accept what is worthless —

1 Like bees, all the followers of Śrī Advaita hover about His lotus feet, yet some of them hold the essence and others are empty. Rejecting the empty, I bow to those who hold the essence, whose very life is Śrī Caitanya.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The followers of Śrī Advaita Prabhu are of two kinds: sāra-grāhī, those who accept the essence, and asāra-vāhī, those who carry what is worthless. Rejecting those who carry the worthless, I bow down to all who carry the essence, the servants of Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.

sārāsāra-bhṛtaḥ (the essence: Advaita's followers who belong to Gaurahari; the worthless: those who merely fancy themselves His followers but have turned away from Gaurahari; those who carry the one or the other) akhilān (all) advaitāṅghry-abja-bhṛṅgān (Advaita's feet are lotuses, and the bees at them are Advaita's servants) (considering them so), asārān (the Māyāvādīs who only seem to be His followers and lack pure devotion) hitvā (leaving aside), caitanya-jīvanān (those whose life is Caitanya, for whom Gaura is life itself) sāra-bhṛtaḥ (the bhāgavatas who accept the essence) tān (those devotees of Advaita) naumi (I praise).

2 Glory, glory to Mahāprabhu Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya! Glory, glory to Nityānanda, and glory to the blessed Advaita!

Obeisances to Advaita's servants, devotees of Gaura who accept the essence —

3 The glorious Advaitacandra is the second trunk of the immortal tree of Śrī Caitanya, and His followers are the branches of that trunk. To them we bow down.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I bow down to all the associates of Advaita Prabhu, the branches of the second trunk of the wish-fulfilling tree named Śrī Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.

śrī-caitanyāmara-taroḥ (of the wish-fulfilling tree, Gaura) dvitīya-skandha-rūpiṇaḥ śrīmad-advaita-candrasya śākhā-rūpān (like the branches of a tree) gaṇān (the people who have taken shelter of Kṛṣṇa) (we) numaḥ (bow down).

4 The second trunk of the tree is Ācārya Gosāñi. So many branches grew from Him that there is no writing them all down.

By Gaura's mercy only the servants of Advaita who accept the essence flourish —

5 Caitanya the gardener waters this trunk with His mercy, and, nourished by that water, it grows day by day.

6 So many fruits of love for Kṛṣṇa ripened on that trunk that they filled the whole world.

7 Through the trunk that water rises into the branches, and they spread far and wide, laden with flowers and fruit.

Two separate teachings among Advaita's servants —

8 At first the Ācārya's followers were all of one mind; but later, as fate would have it, two views arose among them.

Those who accept the essence serve Gaura by following Advaita; the worthless, acting on their own, oppose Gaura —

9 Some kept to the Ācārya's order; others, in the grip of fate, grew self-willed and invented doctrines of their own.

To follow the Ācārya is the essence; anything else is worthless —

10 The Ācārya's teaching is the essence; whoever goes against His order is empty, mere chaff.

Why the nondevotees who fancy themselves Advaita's servants are mentioned, and an example —

11 There is no need here to name the empty ones; I list them together only to make the difference plain.

12 It is like a heap of paddy: one first measures it along with its chaff, and afterwards winnows the chaff away to clean the grain.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

At first all of Advaita Prabhu's followers held one teaching. Later, through an unhappy turn of fate, some of them came to hold separate views. Those who walked by the Ācārya's own teaching are pure Vaiṣṇavas. But those who, subject to fate, invented some view of their own, different from what the Ācārya taught, are worthless. We have no need of the names of worthless people. Still, to keep the Vaiṣṇavas who accept the essence apart from those who carry the worthless, we mention them, counting them all together — as one separates rice by winnowing away the empty husks (pātnā). "Pātnā" is the name for a worthless grain of rice with no kernel.

(1) The branch of Acyutānanda —

13 Acyutānanda, the Ācārya's son, is a great branch. From his very birth he served the feet of Śrī Caitanya.[1]

A description of Acyuta's qualities —

14 When he heard his father say that Keśava Bhāratī was the guru of Caitanya Gosāñi, he was deeply pained.

15 "How can You teach such a thing about the guru of the world?" he said. "This teaching of Yours will bring ruin on the whole land.

16 Caitanya Gosāñi is the guru of the fourteen worlds; no scripture anywhere says that anyone else is His guru."

17 Hearing a boy of five speak the very essence of the scriptures' conclusions, the Ācārya was boundlessly pleased.

Anubhāṣya.

Acyutānanda. The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya-khaṇḍa, Chapter 9) records that he was Advaita Prabhu's eldest son: "Advaita's eldest son, Śrī Acyutānanda." The book Advaita-carita, written in Sanskrit, says: "Acyuta, Kṛṣṇa Miśra and Gopāla dāsa — these three jewels are said to be born from the ocean of Sītā's womb. These three sons of the Ācārya are known as associates of Gaura. The fourth is called Balarāma, the fifth Svarūpa, and the sixth is named Jagadīśa: the Ācārya had six sons.”

So of Śrī Advaita Prabhu's three sons who were devotees of Gaura, Acyutānanda was the eldest. Advaita married at the very beginning of the fifteenth century of the Śaka era. In the year when Śrī Mahāprabhu resolved to go from Nīlācala to Vṛndāvana by way of Rāmakeli, that is, in Śaka 1433–34, Acyutānanda was only five years old. The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Antya-khaṇḍa, Chapter 4) calls him “five years old, charming, naked.” Acyutānanda was therefore born in Śaka 1428. Even before Acyuta's birth, when Mahāprabhu was born, Advaita's wife Sītā came to see the Lord's birth. So there is nothing impossible in her having three more sons within twenty-one years.

There is a Bengali book in verse called Sītā-advaita-carita. It was composed by one Lokanātha dāsa of the sakhī-bhekī party of the prākṛta-sahajiyās, and it was printed in Śaka 1792 by the journal Nityānanda-dāyinī. It describes Acyutānanda as Mahāprabhu's schoolmate; this contradicts the Caitanya-bhāgavata. When Mahāprabhu, after taking sannyāsa, came to Advaita's house in Śāntipura, the year was Śaka 1431, and Acyutānanda was then a child of three (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya, Chapter 1): “Advaita's son, a naked little child, came and fell at Gauracandra's feet. The Lord took him on His lap, dust and all. The Lord said: ‘Acyuta, the Ācārya is My father. By that relation you and I are two brothers.’”

Before the great manifestation (mahā-prakāśa) in Śrī Navadvīpa, Śrīman Mahāprabhu sent Śrīrāma Paṇḍita to Śāntipura to bring Advaita. Acyutānanda then joined his father and mother in weeping for joy: “Advaita's son, named ‘Acyutānanda,’ just a little boy — he too weeps without stopping.” And when Advaita Prabhu was expounding knowledge (jñāna) against devotion and Mahāprabhu was beating Him, Acyutānanda was present there too. All these events must be placed two or three years before the Lord's sannyāsa. (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 19): “Acyuta, Advaita's son, bows down.”

From childhood Śrī Acyuta was a devotee of Śrīman Mahāprabhu. Nothing is known of his ever taking a wife and living as a householder. In the description of Śrī Advaita's branch his name stands first among the disciples. Śrī Yadunandana dāsa wrote the Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta on the branches of Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosvāmī, and from it we learn that Acyutānanda Ṭhākura was a disciple and branch of Gadādhara: “Acyutānanda, the bliss of the nectar of the great rasa, the son of Śrīmad Advaita, most dear to Gadādhara." Acyutānanda performed his worship in Nīlācala, having taken shelter of Mahāprabhu's feet (Ādi, Chapter 10): "Acyutānanda, the son of Advaita Ācārya, who stayed in Nīlācala, taking shelter at the Lord's feet." (CC, Ādi 10.150) At the end of his life Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosvāmī lived in Nīlācala near Śrī Mahāprabhu. That is why, as we see, many of Advaita Prabhu's true servants, headed by Acyutānanda, took shelter of Śrī Gadādhara's feet.

From his earliest childhood Acyutānanda showed intense devotion to Śrī Mahāprabhu. In the dancing and kīrtana before the chariot, too, we see the Lord's dear Acyutānanda every time (see Ādi, Chapter 13, 452[8]): "There was one party of the Ācārya of Śāntipura; Acyutānanda danced there, and all the rest sang." (CC, Madhya 13.45) The boy was then only six years old. In the Śrī Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā by Śrī Kavi Karṇapūra, Acyutānanda is glorified as "Gadādhara's disciple, dear to Kṛṣṇa Caitanya." Some identify him with Kārttikeya, others with the gopī named "Acyutā." The author has concluded that both views are correct: "His son Acyutānanda, dear to Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, is known to be the beloved disciple of Śrīmat Paṇḍita Gosvāmī. Some say that formerly he was Kārttikeya. Others, knowers of rasa, say he is the gopī named Acyutā. Both are correct, for the two have come together in one."

Śrī Narahari dāsa's Narottama-vilāsa describes in detail how Śrī Acyutānanda came to the festival at Khetari and took part in it. Though he was by then quite infirm, he joined the festival at the request of his mother, Śrī Sītā, and of Śrī Jāhnavā. According to that same Narahari dāsa, at the end of his life he lived in his home in Śāntipura. Yet it is known that while Śrī Mahāprabhu was manifest in this world, Acyutānanda lived with Him in Purī, and afterwards near Śrī Gadādhara. Needless to say, since he never married, Acyutānanda had no children.

(2) Kṛṣṇa Miśra —

18 Another of the Ācārya's sons was named Kṛṣṇa Miśra, and Caitanya Gosāñi dwelt in his heart.

Anubhāṣya.

Kṛṣṇa Miśra. In the Sanskrit book Advaita-carita: "Acyuta, Kṛṣṇa Miśra and Gopāla dāsa — these three jewels are said to be born from the ocean of Sītā's womb." Of Śrī Advaita Prabhu's six sons, three brothers — "Acyuta, Kṛṣṇa Miśra and Gopāla” — were engaged in the service of Śrī Gaurāṅga. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verse 88: “Some say that Kṛṣṇa Miśra is Kārttikeya, because he is like him.”

Kṛṣṇa Miśra had two sons: (1) Raghunātha Cakravartī and (2) Dolagovinda. Raghunātha's descendants live in Śāntipura, in the Madana-Gopāla quarter, and in Gaṇakara, Mṛjāpura and Kumārakhāli. Dolagovinda had three sons: (1) Cāṅda, (2) Kandarpa, (3) Gopīnātha. Kandarpa's descendants live in Māladaha and Jikābāḍī. Gopīnātha had three sons: (1) Śrīvallabha, (2) Prāṇavallabha and (3) Keśava. Śrīvallabha's descendants live in Maśiyāḍārā (Mahiṣaḍerā?), Dāmukadiyā, Caṇḍīpura and other places. The Maśiyāḍārā line descends from Śrīvallabha's eldest son, Gaṅgānārāyaṇa, and the lines in the villages of Dāmukadiyā, Caṇḍīpura, Śolamāri and others from his youngest son, Rāmagopāla. The descendants of Prāṇavallabha and Keśava live in Uthalī.

Prāṇavallabha's son was Ratneśvara; his son was Kṛṣṇarāma; Kṛṣṇarāma's youngest son was Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa, and his son was Navakiśora. Navakiśora's second son was Rāmamohana. Rāmamohana's eldest son, “Jagabandhu,” and his third son, “Vīracandra,” entered the order of mendicants (bhikṣu-āśrama) and installed a Deity of Śrī Mahāprabhu at Kāṭoyā. People called them “Baḍa Prabhu” and “Choṭa Prabhu,” the elder and the younger Prabhu. It was they who started the circumambulation (parikramā) of Śrī Dhāma Navadvīpa. For the complete genealogy of Kṛṣṇa Miśra see the article “Advaita-vaṁśa” in the Vaiṣṇava-mañjuṣā (issue 4).

(3) The childhood of Gopāla —

19 Śrī Gopāla was yet another son of the Ācārya. Listen to his story, for it is most wonderful.

Anubhāṣya.
Gopāla: one of Advaita Prabhu's three sons who were Vaiṣṇavas. See Madhya, Chapter 12, 143–149.

20 When Mahāprabhu was cleansing the Guṇḍicā temple, Gopāla danced before Him in the kīrtana, filled with the great joy of love.[2]

21 Many ecstasies arose in his body, and his dancing was wondrous; the two Gosāñis, delighted at heart, called out, “Hari!”[3]

22 In the midst of his dancing Gopāla fainted and fell to the ground, with no sign of awareness left in his body.

Anubhāṣya.

"Sambita": saṁvit, consciousness.

23 The Ācārya was grieved. Taking His son on His lap, He recited the mantra of Nṛsiṁha to protect him.

24 He recited mantra after mantra, but the boy did not come to, and the Vaiṣṇavas wept to see the Ācārya's grief.

25 Then Mahāprabhu placed His hand on the boy's chest and said, "Get up, Gopāla! Say 'Hari! Hari!'"

26 Feeling the Lord's touch and hearing His voice, Gopāla rose, and everyone, overjoyed, raised the cry of "Hari!"

27 The Ācārya had other sons as well: Śrī Balarāma, Svarūpa and one named Jagadīśa.

Anubhāṣya.

Balarāma, Svarūpa and Jagadīśa. In the Sanskrit book Advaita-carita: "The fourth is called Balarāma, the fifth Svarūpa, and the sixth is named Jagadīśa: the Ācārya had six sons." All three turned away from Gaura; they are smārtas, or Māyāvādīs, and therefore not Vaiṣṇavas.

Balarāma's three wives bore him nine sons. The youngest son of the first wife, Madhusūdana, became known as "Gosāñi Bhaṭṭācārya" and adopted the religion of the smārtas. His son Rādhāramaṇa took the name "Gosvāmī Bhaṭṭācārya" and so degraded the word "gosvāmī," a title fit only for one who has left home. Following the smārta Raghunandana, he burned a kuśa-puttalikā (an effigy of kuśa grass) of Śrī Advaita Prabhu and performed over it the śrāddha rite done for a ghost (preta) or a demon (rākṣasa). By acting against the smṛtis devoted to Viṣṇu-bhakti, such as the Śrī Hari-bhakti-vilāsa, he displayed his foolishness and a great offense. Without being a pure devotee, he wrote several books and commentaries on primary works; pure devotees do not value them. For Balarāma's genealogy see the Mañjuṣā (issue 4).

(4) Kamalākānta —

28 The Ācārya had a servant named Kamalākānta Viśvāsa, who knew all His affairs.

Anubhāṣya.

Kamalākānta Viśvāsa. The “Kamalānanda” mentioned in Ādi, Chapter 10, verse 149, and the “Kamalākānta” of Madhya, Chapter 10, verse 94, are probably the same person. And Viśvāsa Kamalākānta is the very man of that name mentioned in Ādi, Chapter 10, verse 119. The brāhmaṇa Kamalākānta is one of the Lord's own associates. Kamalākānta Viśvāsa, being Advaita's servant, is also the Lord's associate. When Śrī Paramānanda Purī came from Navadvīpa to Nīlācala, he brought with him the brāhmaṇa Kamalākānta, or Kamalānanda, a resident of Navadvīpa. Madhya, Chapter 10, 94: “There was a devotee of the Lord, a brāhmaṇa named ‘Kamalākānta’; taking him along, he set out for Nīlācala.” (CC, Madhya 10.94)

The story of Kamalākānta —

29 In Nīlācala he wrote a letter and sent it to King Pratāparudra.

30 The Ācārya knew nothing about the letter, and somehow it found its way to the Lord.

*The bāul doctrine in Kamalākānta's letter —*

31 In that letter he had proclaimed the Ācārya to be God Himself.

32 “But by fate,” it went on, “He has fallen into some debt, and to pay it off I ask for three hundred coins.”

33 The Lord read the letter and was pained at heart; yet, smiling outwardly, the moon-faced One said:

34 “He has proclaimed the Ācārya to be God, and in that there is no fault: the Ācārya truly is God.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Daivata īśvara”: in fact Īśvara, the Lord[7].

*To think Nārāyaṇa, the possessor of the six opulences, poor, as if He were a jīva, is Māyāvāda, the bāul doctrine —*

35 But he has made God out to be poor and gone begging for Him. So I shall punish him and teach him a lesson.”

Anubhāṣya.

“Īśvarera dainya kari”: making the Lord a pauper.

*The punishment of the bāuliyā —*

36 He ordered Govinda, “From today on, do not let that madcap Viśvāsa come here.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Bāuliyā Viśvāsa”: Kamalākānta Viśvāsa's conclusions are like the talk of a bāul, a madman; that is why he was called “bāuliyā Viśvāsa.”

Anubhāṣya.

“Viśvāse”: Kamalākānta Viśvāsa.

37 Viśvāsa was deeply distressed to hear of his punishment, but when the Ācārya heard of it, He was delighted.

Advaita Prabhu consoles him —

38 He said to Viśvāsa, “You are most fortunate: the Lord, Bhagavān Himself, has punished you.

39 In the past Mahāprabhu used to honour Me. This pained Me, and I thought of a way to change it.

40 I expounded the Yoga-vāsiṣṭha, extolling liberation as the highest goal, and the Lord grew angry and treated Me with dishonour.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

While explaining the Yoga-vāsiṣṭha, Advaita Prabhu on some pretext declared liberation (mukti) superior to devotion.

Anubhāṣya.

"Vāśiṣṭha": the Yoga-vāsiṣṭha Rāmāyaṇa. It propounds Māyāvāda, which opposes devotion to Viṣṇu, that is, liberation as extinction (nirvāṇa-mokṣa) in the form of merging into Brahman (brahma-sāyujya). Pure devotees therefore should not read it.

41 Being punished brought Me the greatest joy; fortunate Śrī Mukunda received the same punishment.

42 So did the fortunate Śrī Śacī. Where else could anyone find such mercy in the guise of punishment?"

Anubhāṣya.

On Advaita's punishment, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 19; on Mukunda's punishment, the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 10; on Śacīmātā's punishment, the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 22.

43 With these words the Ācārya comforted him, and then, joyful, He went to Mahāprabhu.

Seeing Kamalākānta punished, Advaita speaks to the Lord —

44 He said to the Lord, "I do not understand this pastime of Yours. You have made Kamalā a greater vessel of Your mercy than Me.

45 Such mercy You have never shown even Me. What offence have I committed at Your feet?"

Mahāprabhu laughs and shows His favor —

46 Hearing this, Mahāprabhu began to laugh; He sent for Kamalākānta and was gracious to him.

Advaita's words —

47 The Ācārya said, “Why have You let him see You again? He makes a mockery of Me in two ways.”

Anubhāṣya.
He calls Me the transcendental Nārāyaṇa, and yet in practice he takes Me for a mundane pauper begging for money.

48 The Lord was pleased at heart to hear this. Only the two of Them knew what lay within each other’s words.

*Mahāprabhu's words to the bāuliyā —*

49 The Lord said, “Madcap, why do you behave like this? What you do harms the Ācārya’s honour and His dharma.

The Lord defines the duty of a Vaiṣṇava ācārya —

50 A Vaiṣṇava ācārya must never accept a king’s wealth as a gift. If he eats the food of worldly men, his mind is defiled.

51 When the mind is defiled, one cannot remember Kṛṣṇa, and without remembrance of Kṛṣṇa life bears no fruit.

52 It brings shame before the world and ruins one’s dharma and good name. Know this, and never do such a thing.”

Advaita's joy —

53 This teaching was meant for everyone, and everyone took it to heart, while Ācārya Gosāñi rejoiced within.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kamalākānta declared Advaita Ācārya to be "Īśvara" and on that basis begged money from the king. Mahāprabhu was greatly displeased by such an act. Even though the Ācārya is Īśvara, His human pastime as the teacher of the world is well known. To fall into debt and beg money from a king is shameless conduct for an ācārya. Greed for money must be avoided in every way; and if one displays that greed before a foreign king in order to pay off a debt, dharma suffers. A king is by nature a worldly man (viṣayī). Eating a worldly man's food corrupts the heart; and when the heart is corrupted, one does not remember Kṛṣṇa, and life is wasted. This is forbidden to everyone, and to teachers of religion (dharmācāryas) above all. To instruct people in the holy name is the duty of an ācārya. But those who instruct in the name for money are unfit for the title of "instructor in the name"; rather, they are offenders against the name. For such people this is forbidden all the more strictly. If an ācārya who instructs in the name accepts gifts, he brings public shame upon himself and gravely damages his religious reputation.

Mahāprabhu and Advaita Prabhu: each knows the heart of the other —

54 Only the Lord understood the Ācārya's intention, and the Ācārya understood the Lord's deep words.

55 There is much to consider in this episode, but I cannot write of it for fear of making the book too long.

(5) The branch of Yadunandanācārya —

56 Śrī Yadunandana Ācārya is a branch of Advaita; his own branches and offshoots are past all writing.

57 He received the mercy of Vāsudeva Datta and with all his heart took shelter of Śrī Caitanya's feet.

Anubhāṣya.

Yadunandanācārya was the guru who gave Śrī Raghunātha dāsa Gosvāmī Prabhu initiation according to the Pañcarātra. See Antya, Chapter 6, 160–169.

Vāsudeva Datta is Madhuvrata, the singer of Vraja (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verse 140). See Ādi, Chapter 10, 41.

(6) Bhāgavatācārya, (7) Viṣṇudāsa, (8) Cakrapāṇi, (9) Ananta Ācārya —

58 Other branches are Bhāgavata Ācārya, Viṣṇudāsa Ācārya, Cakrapāṇi Ācārya and Ananta Ācārya.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhāgavatācārya was at first among Advaita's associates and later joined Gadādhara's associates. In Yadunandana dāsa's Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, verse 6: "I praise Bhāgavatācārya, dear to Gaurāṅga, who composed the great book named Prema-taraṅgiṇī." According to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (195 and 202), he is Śveta-mañjarī of Vraja. See Ādi, Chapter 10, 113.

Viṣṇudāsācārya went with Acyutānanda Prabhu to the festival at Khetari (see the Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 10).

Ananta Ācārya is "Sudevī," one of the eight sakhīs of Vraja. He was among Advaita Prabhu's associates but later joined Gadādhara's branch. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 165: "Ananta Ācārya Gosvāmī is she who formerly in Vraja was 'Sudevī.'" See Ādi, Chapter 8, 59–60. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, verse 11: "I praise him who is called Ananta Ācārya, full of endless wonderful rasa, full of endless wonderful pastimes, the vessel of Gaura's love." His disciple was Haridāsa Paṇḍita Gosvāmī, superintendent of the service of Śrī Govinda in Vṛndāvana. Haridāsa's disciple was Śrī Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa Gosvāmī, the author of the book Sādhana-dīpikā (Bhakti-ratnākara, wave 2).

(10) Nandinī, (11) Kāmadeva, (12) Caitanya dāsa, (13) Durlabha Viśvāsa, (14) Vanamālī dāsa —

59 Then come Nandinī, Kāmadeva, Caitanya dāsa, Durlabha Viśvāsa and Vanamāli dāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

Nandinī. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 89: "Nandinī and Jaṅgalī are to be known as Jayā and Vijayā respectively." A daughter of Advaita born of Sītā (?).

(15) Jagannātha and (16) Bhavanātha Kara, (17) Hṛdayānanda, (18) Bholānātha —

60 Jagannātha Kara, Bhavanātha Kara, Hṛdayānanda Sena and Bholānātha dāsa.

(19) Yādava, (20) Vijaya, (21) Janārdana, (22) Ananta dāsa, (23) Kānu Paṇḍita, (24) Nārāyaṇa —

61 Yādava dāsa, Vijaya dāsa, Janārdana, Ananta dāsa, Kānu Paṇḍita and Nārāyaṇa dāsa.

(25) Śrīvatsa, (26) Haridāsa Brahmacārī, (27) Puruṣottama and (28) Kṛṣṇadāsa Brahmacārī —

62 Śrīvatsa Paṇḍita, Haridāsa Brahmacārī, Puruṣottama Brahmacārī and Kṛṣṇadāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

Haridāsa Brahmacārī is counted among the associates of both Advaita and Gadādhara. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, verse 9: “With devotion I praise the glorious Haridāsa Brahmacārī Mahāśaya, a mass of supreme bliss, a mine of joy.”

(29) Puruṣottama Paṇḍita, (30) Raghunātha, (31) Vanamālī, (32) Vaidyanātha —

63 Puruṣottama Paṇḍita, Raghunātha, Vanamālī Kavicandra and Vaidyanātha.

(33) Lokanātha, (34) Murāri Paṇḍita, (35) Haricaraṇa, (36) Mādhava Paṇḍita —

64 Lokanātha Paṇḍita, Murāri Paṇḍita, Śrī Haricaraṇa and Mādhava Paṇḍita.

(37) Vijaya and (38) Śrīrāma Paṇḍita —

65 Vijaya Paṇḍita and Śrī Rāma Paṇḍita. The branches of Advaita are countless, so how many names can I give?

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīrāma Paṇḍita was the younger brother of Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 91: "The best of sages named Parvata, who was dear to Nārada, is the glorious Śrīrāma Paṇḍita, his younger brother." See Madhya, Chapter 13, 39.

By the power of Gaura's mercy the servants of Advaita who accept the essence flourish —

66 The water of mercy the gardener gives sustains the Advaita trunk, and by it the branches live and bear flowers and fruit.

Only the unfortunate worthless ones who fancy themselves Advaita's servants oppose Gaura and, deprived of His mercy, perish —

67 But when Caitanya the gardener had concluded His manifest pastimes, some of these branches, to their misfortune, turned their backs on Him.

68 He had brought them forth and kept them alive, yet they would not accept Him. They proved ungrateful, and the trunk grew angry with them.

69 In its anger the trunk let no water pass to them, and for want of water the branches withered, dried up and died.

The devotee of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa is Yama's guru; those who turn away from Gaura-Kṛṣṇa are punished by Yama —

70 A body without consciousness (caitanya) is like dry wood. So too, one without Caitanya is dead while still alive, and when he dies, Yama punishes him.[4]

Anubhāṣya.

Yama's words to his messengers (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 6.3.29): “Bring to me those wicked people whose tongues do not utter the names and qualities of Bhagavān, whose hearts do not remember His lotus feet, whose heads have never once bowed down to Kṛṣṇa — those who have done nothing for Viṣṇu.”

71 This punishment is not for these alone: whoever turns away from Caitanya is a pāṣaṇḍa, a godless man.

72 Scholar or ascetic, householder or sannyāsī — whoever turns away from Caitanya meets this fate.

Only the followers of Acyuta are devotees of Gaura who accept the essence and have received Advaita's mercy —

73 Those followers of the Ācārya who accepted the view of Śrī Acyutānanda are mahā-bhāgavatas, great devotees.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Advaita Prabhu is one of the trunks of the wish-fulfilling tree of devotion. Śrī Caitanya, like a gardener, waters that trunk and nourishes both it and its branches. Yet by misfortune some branches, after the gardener's disappearance, refused to acknowledge Him and declared the trunk itself to be the cause of the wish-fulfilling tree. In this way they ungratefully rejected the One who created and sustains the trunk — Advaita's tree — that is, Mahāprabhu. So the trunk no longer passed water to those sinful branches (cf. verse 69), and for want of water the lean branches began to dry up and die. This punishment did not fall on those branches alone. In general, anyone — whether a scholar, an ascetic, a householder or a renunciant (yati) — who turns away from Caitanya becomes a pāṣaṇḍī, a godless man. And the great souls who accepted the teaching of Śrī Acyutānanda are the mahā-bhāgavatas among Śrī Advaitācārya Prabhu's associates.

Thus ends the twelfth chapter of the “Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.”

74 It is they who received the Ācārya’s mercy, and without effort they attained the feet of Caitanya.

Obeisances to all these pure devotees —

75 To those followers of the Ācārya who are like Acyutānanda, whose very life is Caitanya, I offer obeisances millions of times.

76 Thus I have told of the followers of Ācārya Gosāñi, and have briefly counted the branches of the three trunks.[5]

77 The offshoots of these branches are past counting; I have told only a little, to give a glimpse of them.

The disciples, or sub-branches, of Śrī Gadādhara —

78 The offshoots of Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita are most excellent, and I shall now name some of them.[6]

(1) Dhruvānanda, (2) Śrīdhara, (3) Haridāsa Brahmacārī and (4) Raghunātha Bhāgavatācārya —

79 The finest of them is Dhruvānanda; after him come Śrīdhara Brahmacārī, Bhāgavatācārya and Haridāsa Brahmacārī.

Anubhāṣya.

Dhruvānanda Brahmacārī. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 152: “Others have said that Dhruvānanda Brahmacārī is Lalitā. That view is correct when one distinguishes her own manifestations (svaprakāśa).” Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 4: “I praise Dhruvānanda, who always delights in the ujjvala-rasa, to whom Śrī Gadādhara in his mercy gave his own nature.”

Śrīdhara Brahmacārī is Candralatikā of Vraja (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 194 and 199). Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 5: “[I praise] Śrī Śrīdhara, called Sudāmā, the wonderful brahmacārī, wholly full of the nectar of prema, who delights in Gaura's pastimes.”

(5) Anantācārya, (6) Kavidatta, (7) Nayana Miśra, (8) Gaṅgāmantrī, (9) Māmu Ṭhākura, (10) Kaṇṭhābharaṇa —

80 Ananta Ācārya, Kavidatta, Nayana Miśra, Gaṅgāmantrī, Māmu Ṭhākura and Kaṇṭhābharaṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Kavidatta. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 14: “I praise Kavidatta, in whose heart Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa dwell eternally and by nature, the very wonder of mahābhāva.” He is Kalakaṇṭhī of Vraja (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 197 and 207).

Nayana Miśra (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verses 196 and 207) is Nitya-mañjarī of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, verse 1: “I praise Śrī Nayanānanda Miśra, an ocean of the nectar of prema, the one vessel of the jewel of love of Gadādhara and Gaura.”

Gaṅgāmantrī (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 196 and 205) is Candrikā of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 16: “I glorify Gaṅgāmantrī, who delights in the joy of service, with whom the Gaṅgā herself, the Svardhunī, took counsel in order to reveal love for the holy name.”

Māmu Ṭhākura. Śrī Mahāprabhu used to call him “māmā” (maternal uncle), and so people called him “Māmu Ṭhākura”: in East Bengal and in Utkala a maternal uncle is called “māmu.” His real name was “Jagannātha Cakravartī.” He was the nephew of Śrī Nīlāmbara Cakravartī, his brother's son, and came from the village of Magaḍobā in Pharidapura district. After Śrī Gadādhara's disappearance, Māmu Ṭhākura became the superintendent of the service of Śrī Ṭoṭā-Gopīnātha in Purī. According to the Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verses 196 and 205), he is Kalabhāṣiṇī of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 17: “I praise Māmu Ṭhākura, whom Gauracandra and His associates lovingly addressed in Utkala as ‘māmu.’”

The guru line of the servitors of Ṭoṭā-Gopīnātha: (1) Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita Gosvāmī (Śrīmatī Rādhikā; by another view, Saubhāgya-mañjarī); (2) his follower Śrī Jagannātha Cakravartī, “Māmu” Gosvāmī (Śrī Rūpa-mañjarī?); (3) his follower Raghunātha Gosvāmī; (4) Rāmacandra; (5) Rādhāvallabha; (6) Kṛṣṇajīvana; (7) Śyāmasundara; (8) Śāntāmaṇi; (9) Harinātha; (10) Navīnacandra; (11) Matilāla; (12) Dayāmayī; (13) Kuñjabihārī.

Kaṇṭhābharaṇa. His name was Śrī Ananta Caṭṭarāja. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 196 and 206: “Ananta, born in the Caṭṭa family, who bore the title Śrī Kaṇṭhābharaṇa.” He is Gopālī of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 18: “I praise Śrī Kaṇṭhābharaṇa, full of pastimes, the very embodiment of the rasa of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, [the necklace] descended from Their necks."

(11) Bhūgarbha Gosvāmī, (12) Bhāgavata dāsa —

81 Bhūgarbha Gosāñi and Bhāgavata dāsa both came to Vṛndāvana and made their home there.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhūgarbha Gosāñi is "Prema-mañjarī" of Vraja, the intimate friend of Śrī Lokanātha Gosvāmī, one with him in heart. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 187: "Bhūgarbha Ṭhākura was formerly named Prema-mañjarī." Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 24: "I always praise Bhūgarbha Gosvāmī, renowned, born from the womb of the earth, a great soul, the master who bestows love for Kṛṣṇa; who delights in the joy of serving Śrī Govindadeva, merciful, bestowing prema, pure, eternally the embodiment of bliss."

Bhāgavata dāsa. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 31: "I praise Śrī Bhāgavata dāsa, Bhūgarbha's companion, whose mind is always adorned with singing of the pastimes of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa."

(13) Vāṇīnātha Brahmacārī, (14) Vallabha-caitanya —

82 Vāṇīnātha Brahmacārī was a great soul, and Vallabha-caitanya dāsa was full of love for Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Vāṇīnātha Brahmacārī. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 32: "I glorify the brahmacārī Vāṇīnātha Mahāśaya, renowned for his devotion in the assemblies of devotees[9], shining amid the host of devotees." See Ādi, Chapter 10, 114.

Vallabha-caitanya. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 33: "I praise Vallabha-caitanya, full of love for Kṛṣṇa, pure, the giver of supreme bliss, whose heart is absorbed in singing of the pastimes." In this branch Śrīyuta Nalinīmohana Gosvāmī serves Śrī Madana-Gopāla-deva at Gānatalā in Kuliyā-Navadvīpa.

(15) Śrīnātha, (16) Uddhava, (17) Jitāmitra, (18) Jagannātha —

83 Śrīnātha Cakravartī, Uddhava dāsa, Jitāmitra and Jagannātha dāsa of Kāṣṭhakāṭā.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīnātha Cakravartī. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 13: “I praise the paṇḍita named Śrīnātha, the shelter of good qualities, by whom the service of Kṛṣṇa was performed with great care in all its proper order.”

Uddhava dāsa. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 35: “I praise Śrīmad Uddhava dāsa, rich in virtues, who gives the full wealth of prema to the most lowly.”

Jitāmitra. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 202: “He who conquered and subdued the six enemies headed by lust was given by Gaura a name true to its meaning — Jitāmitra, ‘he who has conquered his foes.’” He is Śyāma-mañjarī of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 36: “I praise Jitāmitra, the fulfiller of all desires, whose holy book nourishes love for Kṛṣṇa's sweetness.”

Jagannātha dāsa lived in the village of Kāṣṭhakāṭā (Kāṭhādiyā) in Vikramapura, Ḍhākā. His descendants now live in the village of Āḍiyala, in Kāmārapāḍā and in Pāikapāḍā. The Deity he installed, “Yaśomādhava,” is served by the “gosvāmīs” of Āḍiyala. In the Kṛṣṇa-gaṇoddeśa Śrī Rūpapāda describes sixty-four sakhīs of one assembly; Jagannātha dāsa is the twenty-sixth of them, “Tilakinī,” a junior friend of Citrā-devī. Verse 142: “Rasālikā, Tilakinī, Śaurasenī, Sugandhikā.” His line: (2) Rāmanṛsiṁha, (3) Rāmagopāla, (4) Rāmacandra, (5) Sanātana, (6) Muktārāma, (7) Gopīnātha, (8) Goloka, (9) Harimohana Śiromaṇi, (10) Rākhālarāja. Gopīnātha's younger sons were (8) Mādhava and (9) Lakṣmīkānta.

In the Bhoga-nirṇaya-paddhati of Sūryadāsa Sarakhela: “Then those who became mahāntas in the groups headed by Sucitrā: Jagannātha dāsa and Ṭhākura Jagadīśa.”[10] Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 48: “I praise Jagannātha dāsa, known as ‘Kāṣṭhakāṭā,’ who gave the blessing of Śrī Hari's holy name in Tripura as well.” That is, he preached the holy name in the region of Tripura.

(19) Hari Ācārya, (20) Puriyā-Gopāla, (21) Kṛṣṇadāsa Brahmacārī, (22) Puṣpagopāla —

84 Śrī Hari Ācārya, Puriyā Gopāla dāsa, Kṛṣṇadāsa Brahmacārī and Puṣpagopāla.

Anubhāṣya.

Hari Ācārya (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 196 and 207) is Kālākṣī of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 37: “With supreme devotion I praise Haridāsācārya, a resident of Bengal, made radiant by his own ujjvala-rasa.”

Puriyā-Gopāla dāsa. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 38: “I praise him who is called Gopāla dāsa, a resident of Sādipura, who flooded the town of Vikrama[pura] with the rasa of love for Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa.” That is, he preached the holy name in Vikramapura.

Kṛṣṇadāsa Brahmacārī is Indulekhā, one of the eight sakhīs of Vraja. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 164: “She who formerly in Vraja was Indulekhā, Śrī Rādhā's friend, is Kṛṣṇadāsa Brahmacārī, who made his home in Vṛndāvana.” Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 41: “I praise the brahmacārī Kṛṣṇadāsa, who reveals love for Kṛṣṇa, bright of mind, a resident of Vṛndāvana.”

Puṣpagopāla. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 39: “I praise him who is called Puṣpagopāla, who delights in prema: by his rasa the village of Svarṇagrāma blossomed (puṣpita), and hence his name.”

(23) Śrīharṣa, (24) Raghu Miśra, (25) Lakṣmīnātha, (26) Caitanya dāsa, (27) Raghunātha —

85 Śrīharṣa, Raghu Miśra, Lakṣmīnātha Paṇḍita, Caitanya dāsa of Baṅgavāṭī and Śrī Raghunātha.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīharṣa (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 194 and 201) is Sukeśinī of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 40: “I praise him who is called Śrīharṣa Miśra, who delights in love for Kṛṣṇa, whose heart is intoxicated with love for Gaura, a shoot of the rasa of great bliss.”

Raghu Miśra (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 195 and 201) is Karpūra-mañjarī of Vraja.

Lakṣmīnātha Paṇḍita (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 196, 205) is Rasonmādā of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 42: “I praise Vraja-Lakṣmīnātha dāsa, compassion embodied, filled with mahābhāva, the bestower of Vraja's good fortune.”

Baṅgavāṭī-Caitanya dāsa (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 196 and 206) is Kālī of Vraja. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 43: “I praise Śrī Caitanya dāsa of Baṅgavāṭī, the great soul, whose body is always adorned with tears of love and with hair standing on end.”

The succession of his branch: (2) Mathurāprasāda, (3) Rukmiṇīkānta, (4) Jīvanakṛṣṇa, (5) Yugalakiśora, (6) Ratanakṛṣṇa, (7) Rādhāmādhava, (8) Uṣāmaṇi, (9) Vaikuṇṭhanātha, (10) Lālamohana Śāhā Śaṅkhanidhi (a resident of Ḍhākā).

Raghunātha is Varāṅgadā of Vraja. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 194 and 200: "Raghunātha, a certain brāhmaṇa, an exclusive servant of Gaurāṅga." Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 44: "I praise him who is called Śrī Raghunātha, the great soul, the root of prema: simply by hearing his name one obtains the rasa of Vṛndāvana."

(28) Amogha, (29) Hastigopāla, (30) Caitanya-vallabha, (31) Yadu, (32) Maṅgala Vaiṣṇava —

86 Amogha Paṇḍita, Hastigopāla, Caitanya-vallabha, Yadu Gāṅguli and Maṅgala Vaiṣṇava.

Anubhāṣya.

Amogha Paṇḍita. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 59: "I praise Amogha Paṇḍita, whom Śrī Gaura made His own, whose body is filled with prema and whose voice is choked with it, whose body trembles with hair standing on end."

Hastigopāla is Hariṇī of Vraja (Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, 196 and 206). "With supreme devotion I bow to him who is called Hastigopāla dāsa, whose body is intoxicated with prema, full of the highest love for Gaura." (Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 61)

Caitanya-vallabha. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 60: "I praise him who is called Caitanya-vallabha, the abode of the rasa of prema, who longs to sing of the qualities of Gadādhara and Gaura."

Yadu Gāṅguli. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 34: "With devotion I praise Yadunātha Cakravartī, called Līlā-bhāgavata, the root of prema, a great scholar, a great soul." A descendant of this branch is Śrī Nalinākṣa Ṭhākura, a resident of Pāligrāma-Cāṇaka in Barddhamāna district.

Maṅgala Vaiṣṇava. Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 47: "I praise Maṅgala Vaiṣṇava, pure in heart and body, whose body is moistened by the nectar of the pastimes of the Lords of Vṛndāvana." He lived in the village of Ṭiṭakaṇā in Murśidābāda. His father's family were servitors of the goddess Kirīṭeśvarī in Murśidābāda. According to tradition, he first took the great vow (bṛhad-vrata) and left home, and later, in Mayanāḍāla, married the daughter of his disciple Prāṇanātha Adhikārī. His descendants are now known as "the Ṭhākuras of Kāṅdaḍā." Kāṅdaḍā is a village near Kāṭoyā in Barddhamāna district. Not long ago thirty-six households of Maṅgala Ṭhākura's line lived there.

Among Ṭhākura Mahāśaya's well-known disciples, Prāṇanātha Adhikārī of Mayanāḍāla, Puruṣottama Cakravartī of Kāṅdaḍā and Nṛsiṁhaprasāda Mitra Ṭhākura of Mayanāḍāla deserve mention. The Adhikārī line of Mayanāḍāla has died out, but descendants through their daughters remain. Of Puruṣottama Cakravartī's line, Śrī Kuñjabihārī Cakravartī and Rādhāvallabha Cakravartī now live in the village of Āṅgaḍā under Sākuleśvara in Bīrabhūma. They sing the Śrī Caitanya-maṅgala. In the line of Nṛsiṁhaprasāda Mitra Ṭhākura, Sudhākṛṣṇa Mitra Ṭhākura and Nikuñjabihārī Mitra Ṭhākura are well known; they are masters of the art of the mṛdaṅga.

Maṅgala Ṭhākura Mahāśaya obtained the pair of Deities "Śrī Rādhāvallabha" when the king of Gauḍa was building a road from Gauḍa to Kṣetra and digging a pond. At that time he lived in the village of Rāṇīpura, west of Kāṅdaḍā. The Śrī Nṛsiṁha-śilā that Ṭhākura Mahāśaya worshipped is still at Kāṅdaḍā. When the property granted by the king of Gauḍa for the service of the Deities was lost, Maṅgala Ṭhākura maintained the service by begging.

Maṅgala Ṭhākura had three sons: (1) Rādhikāprasāda, (2) Gopīramaṇa, (3) Śyāmakiśora. The lines of these three brothers still exist. Later the service of Śrī Vṛndāvanacandra was established at Kāṅdaḍā.

(33) Śivānanda Cakravartī —

87 Among the branches Śivānanda Cakravartī stood out in his ardour; his heart found its rest at the feet of Madana-gopāla.

Anubhāṣya.

Śivānanda Cakravartī. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa, verse 183: "Śivānanda Cakravartī, who made his home in Vṛndāvana, is known as a manifestation of Śrīmatī Lavaṅga-mañjarī." Śākhā-nirṇayāmṛta, 10: "I praise Śivānanda, who is called Kumudānanda, endowed with ujjvala-rasa, pure, a resident of Vṛndāvana." See Ādi, Chapter 8, 70.

Besides these, Śrī Yadunandana dāsa in his Śākhā-nirṇaya mentions several more members of Gadādhara's branch: 1. Mādhavācārya; 2. Gopāla dāsa; 3. Hṛdayānanda; 4. Vallabha Bhaṭṭa (after whose name the "Vallabha," or "Puṣṭi-mārgīya," sampradāya is known); 5. Madhu Paṇḍita (his śrīpāṭa is in the village of Sāiṁbonā, two miles east of Khaḍadaha; it was he who installed and served the famous Deity of Gopīnāthadeva in Vṛndāvana); 6. Acyutānanda; 7. Candraśekhara; 8. Vakreśvara Paṇḍita (?); 9. Dāmodara; 10. Bhagavān Ācārya (another); 11. Anantācārya-varya (another); 12. Kṛṣṇadāsa; 13. Paramānanda Bhaṭṭācārya; 14. Bhavānanda Gosvāmī; 15. Caitanya dāsa; 16. Lokanātha Bhaṭṭa (the guru of Śrī Ṭhākura Narottama, a native of Tālakhaḍi in Yaśohara district, who installed Śrī Rādhā-vinoda in Vṛndāvana, a close friend of Bhūgarbha Ṭhākura) (?); 17. Govindācārya; 18. Akrūra Ṭhākura; 19. Saṅketācārya; 20. Pratāpāditya; 21. Kamalākānta Ācārya; 22. Yādavācārya; 23. Nārāyaṇa Paḍihārī (a resident of Kṣetra).

88 Thus I have briefly told of the Paṇḍita's followers; in the same way one could count many other branches and offshoots.

The exclusive devotion to Gaura of Gadādhara's associates —

89 All the Paṇḍita's followers are blessed devotees, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya is the beloved of their lives.

The glory of remembering the associates of Nitāi, Advaita and Gadādhara —

90 I have now counted the branches of these three trunks. Whoever remembers them is freed from the bondage of worldly existence.

91 By remembering them one attains the feet of Śrī Caitanya; by remembering them every desire is fulfilled.

92 Therefore I bow down at the feet of them all, and now I shall tell, in due order, the pastimes of Caitanya the gardener.

The author's humble words —

93 The nectar ocean of Gaura's pastimes is shoreless and fathomless. Who could even dream of plunging into it?

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the twelfth chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

94 Yet the fragrance of its sweetness entices my heart, and so, standing on the shore, I taste a single drop.

95 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. In the edition the branches of Śrī Advaita are listed under numbered headings: (1) Acyutānanda, (2) Kṛṣṇa Miśra, (3) Gopāla, (4) Kamalākānta Viśvāsa, (5) Yadunandana Ācārya, (6)–(38) in 12.58–65; the offshoots of Gadādhara Paṇḍita are numbered (1)–(33), 12.79–87. ↩
2. The edition's Kathāsāra: this was in Gopāla's youth, at the cleansing of the Guṇḍicā temple. ↩
3. The two Gosāñis are Mahāprabhu and Advaita. ↩
4. A play on words: caitanya-rahita means both "without consciousness" and "without Caitanya". ↩
5. The three trunks are the main trunk, Śrī Caitanya Himself (Ādi 9.12; Ādi 10), and the trunks of Śrī Nityānanda (Ādi 11) and Śrī Advaita; the followers of Gadādhara Paṇḍita the author goes on to call offshoots (12.78). ↩
6. Gadādhara Paṇḍita himself is a great branch of the main trunk (Ādi 10.15). Other editions read here paṇḍita śākhāte mahottama, "Paṇḍita is the most excellent among the branches". ↩
7. The verse translation reads differently: "the Ācārya truly is God." ↩
8. The edition reads "Ādi, Chapter 13, 452"; the verse quoted is Madhya 13.45. ↩
9. Unclear wording in the quotation: bhakta-saṁghaṭṭa-bhakty-ākhyam; the translation is tentative. ↩
10. Unclear quotation: the line is grammatically disconnected; the translation is tentative. ↩

Ādi-līlā

Chapter 13

The Description of the Great Festival of the Lord’s Appearance

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. This thirteenth chapter describes Mahāprabhu's birth. The Ādi-līlā is the Lord's pastimes in household life, and the Antya-līlā His pastimes in sannyāsa. The first six years of the Antya-līlā are called the “Madhya-līlā”: the journeys to the south, to Vṛndāvana and to other holy places, the returns, and the preaching of the holy name. Jagannātha Miśra was the son of Upendra Miśra, a resident of Śrīhaṭṭa. He settled in Navadvīpa and married Śacīdevī, the daughter of Nīlāmbara Cakravartī. First eight daughters were born to him. These daughters, once born, left this world, and then, as the ninth child, Viśvarūpa was born. In Śaka 1407, on the evening of the full moon of the month of Phālguna, with Leo rising (siṁha-lagna) and the moon in the sign of Leo (siṁha-rāśi), at the time of a lunar eclipse, Gauracandra descended amid the chanting of Kṛṣṇa's names. Hearing of the child's birth, the respectable ladies came to see Him with many gifts. Nīlāmbara Cakravartī cast His horoscope, examined the lines of His hand, and found in them the marks of a great personality (mahāpuruṣa).

By Gaura's grace even a fallen soul becomes able to describe His pastimes —

1 May Śrī Caitanyadeva be gracious to me, for by His grace even one as fallen as I at once becomes fit to describe His pastimes.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

By His grace even this fallen soul at once becomes able to describe His pastimes. May that Śrī Caitanyadeva be pleased with me.

Anubhāṣya.
yasya (of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanyadeva) prasādataḥ (by the compassion) ayam (one like me) adhamaḥ api tal-līlā-varṇane sadyaḥ yogyaḥ syāt, sa caitanya-devaḥ prasīdatu.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Gauracandra! Glory to Advaitacandra, and glory, glory to Nityānanda!

3 Glory, glory to Gadādhara, and glory to Śrīvāsa! Glory to Mukunda and Vāsudeva, and glory to Haridāsa!

4 Glory to Svarūpa Dāmodara, and glory to Murāri Gupta! These moons have risen and driven all darkness away.

*With the rays of their service to Hari, the moonlike devotees destroy the darkness of the jīvas' ignorance —*

5 Glory to the devotees of Śrī Caitanyacandra, who are full moons! The moonlight of their love makes the three worlds shine.

The beginning of the description of Gaura's pastimes —

6 Thus I have given the preface at the beginning of the book. Now I shall tell the pastimes of Śrī Caitanya in their proper order.

*The promise to describe first in brief, as sūtras, and later in detail —*

7 First I shall list them briefly, as in sūtras; afterwards I shall describe them in detail.

The 48 years of Mahāprabhu's manifest pastimes —

8 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya descended in Navadvīpa, and for forty-eight years He enjoyed His pastimes before the eyes of the world.

9 His appearance is recorded in Śaka 1407 (1486), and He disappeared from the world in Śaka 1455 (1533).

*The first 24 years, His household pastimes in Navadvīpa; the last 24 years, His enactment of sannyāsa in Nīlācala —*

10 For twenty-four years the Lord lived as a householder, and all that time He delighted in kīrtana.

11 At the end of His twenty-fourth year He accepted sannyāsa, and for another twenty-four years He lived in Nīlācala.

Six of the last 24 years: searching for Kṛṣṇa and preaching in North and South India —

12 Six of those years He spent journeying — now to the south, now to Gauḍa, now to Vṛndāvana.

13 For eighteen years He stayed in Nīlācala, flooding everyone with the nectar of His pastimes of love for Kṛṣṇa.

*The household pastimes are the Ādi-līlā, and the sannyāsa pastimes the Madhya- and Antya-līlā —*

14 The Lord's pastimes as a householder are called the Ādi-līlā, and His later pastimes bear two names, Madhya and Antya.

*Murāri compiled the Ādi-līlā in the Caitanya-carita, and Svarūpa the last pastimes in the Kaḍacā —*

15 Murāri Gupta recorded in sūtras all the Lord's deeds in the Ādi-līlā.

16 Svarūpa Dāmodara set down the Lord's later pastimes in brief notes and gathered them in his book.

*The sūtras of these two are the source of every description of the Lord's pastimes —*

17 Reading and hearing the notes of these two, the Vaiṣṇavas describe the Lord’s pastimes in their order.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Murāri Gupta's sūtras, his brief notes, on the Ādi-līlā still exist. The Vaiṣṇavas study them, and they hear the sūtras of Śrī Svarūpa Gosvāmī's diary from the lips of Śrī Raghunātha dāsa Gosvāmī — and so they describe the Lord's pastimes.

The four parts of the Ādi-līlā —

18 Childhood (bālya), boyhood (paugaṇḍa), early youth (kaiśora) and youth (yauvana) — these are the four ages, and so the Ādi-līlā falls into four divisions.

Homage to the auspicious full moon of Phālguna —

19 I bow to that full moon of Phālguna, rich in every good quality, on which Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya descended together with the names of Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“In the twenty-eighth yuga of Vaivasvata Manu, in the year fourteen hundred and seven, on the lovely bank of the Bhāgīrathī, from the great ocean of Śacī's womb, on the full moon seized by Rāhu, Gaurāṅga appeared.”

I worship that full moon of Phālguna, filled with every good quality, on which Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya descended together with the names of Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

yasyāṁ (on which, on the full moon of Phālguna) kṛṣṇa-nāmabhiḥ (together with the names of Kṛṣṇa) śrī-kṛṣṇa-caitanyaḥ (the form not different from Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, the original source of the avatāras, the Lord of Goloka — from His own realm, from the chamber of Gaura, into the manifest world, into the earthly Navadvīpa) 'vatīrṇaḥ (descended), tāṁ sarva-sad-guṇa-pūrṇāṁ phālguna-pūrṇimām (the goddess in the form of a lunar day [tithi], descended into worldly time, beyond this world, devoted to service) (I) vande (worship).

*Using the lunar eclipse as a pretext, the Lord moves the jīvas to chant Hari's name —*

20 The Lord appeared on the evening of the Phālguna full moon, and at that very hour, as providence would have it, the moon was eclipsed.

21 The people were joyfully calling out, “Hari! Hari!” — and Caitanya Prabhu took birth, having first brought the Name to birth.

Throughout the Ādi-līlā the Lord moves everyone to chant Hari's name —

22 At His birth, in childhood, boyhood, early youth and youth, the Lord found one pretext or another to make people take the name of Hari.

To make everyone chant the name He cries, and the name alone stops Him —

23 In the guise of an ordinary infant the Lord would cry, but the moment He heard the names “Kṛṣṇa” and “Hari”, He would fall silent.

Everyone who comes to see Him utters the name —

24 So all the women among His friends and kin who came to see Him would chant, “Hari! Hari!”

The first appearance of the name “Gaurahari” —

25 Laughing, the women all called Him “Gaurahari”, and so Gaurahari became His name.

*As He grows, He moves the jīvas to chant the name at all times —*

26 His childhood lasted until the chalk was put in His hand for His first lesson; His boyhood, until He married.

27 With His marriage began the bloom of youth, and everywhere the Lord led people to chant the name together.

In His boyhood, studying and teaching, He explains Kṛṣṇa's name in every subject and moves others to chant it —

28 In His boyhood He studied and also taught pupils, and everywhere He explained the name of Kṛṣṇa.

29 He showed that the purport of every sūtra, gloss and commentary was the name of Kṛṣṇa, and His pupils came to see it plainly — a wonder to all.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

While explaining to His students the sūtras of grammar and their commentaries, the vṛtti and the ṭīkā, the Lord taught them the meaning of Kṛṣṇa's name. Building on that teaching, the venerable Gosvāmīs (Śrī Jīva Prabhu) later wrote two grammars called Harināmāmṛta-vyākaraṇa, the "Laghu" (short) and the "Bṛhat" (long). Whoever studies these two grammars gains a knowledge of words, and devotion to Kṛṣṇa awakens in him.

Anubhāṣya.

The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Madhya-khaṇḍa, Chapter 1) says: "Absorbed, the Lord explains: in every sūtra, vṛtti and ṭīkā there is only the name of Hari. The Lord says, 'At all times Kṛṣṇa's name is true. All the scriptures speak of Kṛṣṇa and nothing else. Whoever leaves Kṛṣṇa's feet and explains anything else wastes his life in unspeakable talk. Whoever explains the scriptures while giving up the worship of Kṛṣṇa is low and will never know their inner meaning. Not knowing the inner meaning of the scriptures, he takes up teaching them — and, like an ass, he only carries the scriptures about until he dies.'"

He moves everyone without exception to chant Kṛṣṇa's name —

30 Whomever He met He would tell, "Chant the name of Kṛṣṇa!" — and He flooded the town of Navadvīpa with Kṛṣṇa's name.

*In His youth He Himself performs kīrtana and so moves everyone to the name —*

31 In His early youth He began the saṅkīrtana, dancing in love night and day together with His devotees.

32 He wandered from town to town singing kīrtana, and flooded the three worlds with loving devotion.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Navadvīpa-dhāma is encircled by the Jāhnavī (the Gaṅgā) and lies within a circumference of sixteen krośas. Nine islands (dvīpas) shine within it, the seats of the nine kinds of bhakti: Antaḥ, Sīmanta, Godruma, Madhya, Kola, Ṛtu, Jahnu, Modadruma and Rudra. In the middle of Antardvīpa, in the village of Śrī Māyāpura, stands the home of Śrī Jagannātha Miśra. Going with kīrtana through all these towns, the Lord flooded the three worlds with prema-bhakti.

*For all 24 years in Navadvīpa He moves the jīvas to the name —*

33 Thus for twenty-four years in Navadvīpa He led everyone to the name of Kṛṣṇa and to love for Him.

*Six of the last 24 years, spent in Nīlācala: preaching the name and prema from the ocean to the Himālayas —*

34 After accepting sannyāsa He remained twenty-four years more, living with His devotees in Nīlācala.

35 Of those years in Nīlācala, He spent six in ceaseless dancing and singing, giving away loving devotion.

36 He journeyed as far as Setubandha in the south, through Gauḍa and on to Vṛndāvana, spreading the holy name and love wherever He went.

These six years are the Madhya-līlā, and it is entirely the preaching of the name —

37 These six years are called the Madhya-līlā, the very heart of His pastimes; the last eighteen years are called the Antya-līlā.

*Of the remaining 18 years, six: preaching prema by kīrtana and dance* alone —

38 For six of those years, in the joy of dancing and singing with His devotees, He led people to loving devotion.

*The last 12 years: in separation from Kṛṣṇa He Himself tastes love for Kṛṣṇa at every moment and displays the states of prema —*

39 The last twelve years He stayed in Nīlācala, and, tasting love Himself, He taught everyone its highest states.

Anubhāṣya.

One in whom prema has awakened abides in the transcendental vipralambha-rasa, the rasa of separation, which nourishes sambhoga, union. Śrī Gaurasundara wished to taste this state of prema Himself, and in this way He taught it to the jīvas of the world. Unless vipralambha arises, sambhoga is not nourished.

40 Night and day the pain of separation from Kṛṣṇa welled up in Him; He behaved like one mad and spoke in broken, raving words.

*Like Śrī Rādhā on seeing Uddhava, the Lord is in mahābhāva —*

41 Just as Śrī Rādhā raved on seeing Uddhava, so He raved in His madness night and day.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Gaurasundara is the living ideal of the long, long vipralambha-rasa: He is filled with the mood of citra-jalpa, "varied talk," that seized Śrīmatī Vṛṣabhānujā (Rādhā) when She saw Uddhava. With envy (asūyā), jealousy (īrṣyā) and pride (mada), in a manner of open disdain, Rādhikā set out to declare Kṛṣṇa's want of courtesy (akauśala) and, addressing the bumblebee, spoke prajalpa, words full of reproach. Śrī Gaurasundara was immersed in all those moods (see Ādi 4.107–108).

*With Svarūpa and Rāya He relishes Caṇḍīdāsa, Vidyāpati and the Gīta- govinda —

42 With Rāmānanda and Svarūpa He relished the songs of Vidyāpati, Jayadeva and Caṇḍīdāsa.

Anubhāṣya.

Vidyāpati was a Vaiṣṇava poet who lived in Mithilā. He flourished during the reign of King Śivasiṁha and Queen Lachimādevī; that is, he composed his songs in the first quarter of the fourteenth century of the Śaka era. He appeared about a hundred years before Śrī Mahāprabhu's manifest pastimes. He was a Maithila brāhmaṇa, and his descendant in the twelfth generation is alive today. His songs about Kṛṣṇa abound in examples of transcendental vipralambha-rasa. Those moods were what Śrī Mahāprabhu relished.

Jayadeva was born, during the reign of Lakṣmaṇasena, the king of Bengal, to Bhojadeva and Vāmādevī. That period, according to some, is the eleventh or the twelfth century of the Śaka era. He lived for a long time in the city of Navadvīpa, the capital of Bengal. Jayadeva's birthplace is the village of Kenduvilva in the district of Birbhum; according to others, Utkala (Orissa); according to still others, the South. He spent the last part of his life at Śrī Jagannātha-kṣetra. His book of poetry is called the Gīta-govinda, or Aṣṭapadī. It too abounds in transcendental vipralambha-rasa. It describes the vipralambha-rasa that nourishes the rasa of sambhoga — the separation that arose when the prince of Vraja left the place of the rāsa dance, as the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam tells. For the commentaries on the Aṣṭapadī and the names of the commentators, see the Vaiṣṇava-mañjuṣā (issue 1).

Caṇḍīdāsa was born in a brāhmaṇa family in the village of Nānnura in the district of Birbhum, at the close of the first quarter of the fourteenth century of the Śaka era. He was probably a friend of Vidyāpati Ṭhākura. His writings abound in transcendental vipralambha-rasa.

The moods that blossomed in Caṇḍīdāsa and other devotees were Śrī Mahāprabhu's most beloved delicacy. Steeped in the mood of Śrī Rādhā, Kṛṣṇacandra tasted vipralambha-rasa with His two intimate devotees, Śrī Dāmodara Svarūpa and Śrī Rāmānanda Rāya, and so fulfilled His own desire.

Svayaṁ Bhagavān Śrī Gaurasundara, together with unequalled knowers of the truth of spiritual kṛṣṇa-rasa — Śrī Dāmodara Svarūpa, the crest jewel of the paramahaṁsas, and Śrī Rāya Rāmānanda — relished the transcendental songs composed by these three devotees. These songs unfold the countless varieties of the mahābhāva of Śrī Rādhikā, “full of Kṛṣṇa” (kṛṣṇamayī), toward Śrī Nandanandana, the unequalled Enjoyer, whose form is eternity, knowledge and bliss. Only the most fortunate person can always follow them: one who is indifferent both to enjoyment and to renunciation in this perishable gross and subtle world, who is supremely liberated and owns nothing (niṣkiñcana), and who eternally longs to serve Śrī Rādhā. People who delight in mundane poetic rasa, who love godless literature, who take pleasure in the body — for the sake of research — and the prākṛta-sahajiyā sect — to gratify their material senses, fancying themselves rāgānuga — show the impudence of discussing the songs of Caṇḍīdāsa, Vidyāpati and Jayadeva. As a result, licentiousness and atheism grow in the world, and this leads them to hell. Unqualified people, who take the body for the self, are full of thirst for what is unworthy and burdened with anarthas, may take the supramundane pastimes of Śrī Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa, worshipped by the supremely liberated, to be the tasteless, vile amorous sports of a mundane hero and heroine, or something like them — and end up gratifying their senses. Therefore any kind of discussion of the pastimes of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa is strictly forbidden to them.

By tasting the love for Kṛṣṇa that arises from Śrī Rādhā's actions in separation from Kṛṣṇa, He fulfills His three desires —

43 Tasting all the ways of love in separation from Kṛṣṇa, He fulfilled His own desire.

44 Śrī Caitanya’s pastimes are endless. How could a tiny soul tell them in full?

Even Anantadeva Himself cannot reach the end of Gaura's pastimes —

45 Even if Ananta Himself were to count them in brief, with all His thousand mouths He would never reach the end.

*Murāri and Śrī Svarūpa compiled the Ādi-līlā and the last pastimes in sūtras of their own —*

46 Svarūpa Dāmodara and Murāri Gupta weighed them carefully and wrote down the chief pastimes in brief.

*Relying on those sūtras, Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa describes Gaura's pastimes —*

47 Following them, I write these pastimes in brief, and Vṛndāvana dāsa has described them in detail.

The sweetness of Vṛndāvana dāsa's work —

48 Vṛndāvana dāsa is the Vyāsa of Śrī Caitanya's pastimes, and he set them down with great sweetness.

The author promises to describe what Vṛndāvana dāsa left out —

49 Fearing that his book would grow too long, he left out certain parts, and of these I shall say something.

The author honors Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana —

50 He has tasted the nectar of the Lord's pastimes; I only savour a few morsels of what he has left.

*The sūtras of the Ādi-līlā begin —*

51 Listen, O devotees: I write the Ādi-līlā in brief, for it cannot be written in full.

To fulfill three desires, Kṛṣṇa descends in the form of Gaura —

52 To fulfil a certain desire, the son of the king of Vraja resolved in His mind to descend.

The descent of Kṛṣṇa's elders —

53 First He sent down His elders and kin. I shall name them in brief, for they cannot all be told in full.

The names of the elders —

54–55 Śrī Śacī and Jagannātha, Śrī Mādhava Purī, Keśava Bhāratī and Śrī Īśvara Purī, Advaita Ācārya and Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita, Ācāryaratna, Vidyānidhi and Ṭhākura Haridāsa.

56 In Śrīhaṭṭa lived Śrī Upendra Miśra — a Vaiṣṇava, learned and wealthy, and rich in every virtue.

Anubhāṣya.

Upendra Miśra. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 35) says: "The cowherd named Parjanya, Kṛṣṇa's grandfather, was born in Śrīhaṭṭa as Upendra Miśra, the father of seven sons." He lived in the village of Ḍhākā-dakṣiṇa in the district of Śrīhaṭṭa. Even today several people, headed by Śrī Indrakumāra Miśra, live there and introduce themselves as his descendants.

The seven sons of Upendra Miśra —

57–58 His seven sons, the seven Miśras, were like seven great sages: Kaṁsāri, Paramānanda, Padmanābha, Sarveśvara, Jagannātha, Janārdana and Trailokyanātha. Jagannātha made his home by the Gaṅgā in Nadīyā.

Who Jagannātha was in Kṛṣṇa's avatāra —

59 Jagannātha, the best of the Miśras, bore the title Purandara. This ocean of virtues had once been Nanda and Vasudeva.

Śacī and Nīlāmbara Cakravartī —

60 His wife, named Śacī, was chaste and wholly devoted to her husband; her father was Nīlāmbara Cakravartī.

Anubhāṣya.

Nīlāmbara Cakravartī. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 104) says: “Nīlāmbara Cakravartī foretold Gaura's future birth in an assembly, and so he is called ‘Garga.’ As the father of Śrī Śacī he is considered the cowherd Sumukha.” His kinsmen live in the village of Magaḍobā in the district of Faridpur. His nephew Jagannātha Cakravartī, or “Māmu Ṭhākura,” a disciple of Paṇḍita Gosvāmī, was the servant of Ṭoṭā-Gopīnātha at Śrī Kṣetra. The Prema-vilāsa records that Nīlāmbara's home in Navadvīpa was in Belpukuriyā. On the other hand, he also had a home in Kāzīpāḍā, and so, by village kinship, the Kazi too is spoken of as the Lord's maternal uncle. The Kazi's house, together with his tomb, could not have moved; hence it is known that all those places of the Belpukuriyā quarter mentioned above have become part of the present-day quarter called Bāmanpukur.

Śrī Nityānanda, Gaṅgādāsa, Murāri, Mukunda —

61 In the land of Rāḍha were born Ṭhākura Nityānanda, Gaṅgādāsa Paṇḍita, Murāri Gupta and Mukunda.

Anubhāṣya.

In Rāḍha-deśa: in the village of Ekacakrā in the district of Birbhum. It lies about eight miles east of Mallārpur station on the loop line of the East Indian Railway. From north to south the village of Ekacakrā stretches four krośas. Vīracandrapura, or Vīrabhadrapura, lies within the bounds of Ekacakrā. The place got the name Vīracandrapura, or Vīrabhadrapura, from the name of Vīrabhadra Prabhu.

Last year, 1331, in the month of Āṣāḍha, lightning struck the temple and broke its spire, and the temple itself has become badly dilapidated. Never before had such a calamity befallen the temple.

In the temple stands the Deity of Kṛṣṇa installed by Śrīman Nityānanda Prabhu, named “Śrī Baṅkima Rāya,” or “Bāṅkā Rāya.” To the right of Śrī Baṅkima Rāya stands Jāhnavā, and to the left Śrīmatī Rādhikā. The temple servants say that Śrīman Nityānanda Prabhu entered into Śrī Baṅkima Rāya, and that is why Jāhnavā-mātā was later installed on His right. Later still, other Deities were installed in the temple. On another throne in the temple are the Deities “Muralīdhara” and “Rādhā-Mādhava.” And on a third, separate throne, Śrī Manomohana, Śrī Vṛndāvanacandra and Śrī Nitāi-Gaura, brought to Ekacakrā from the gādi (seat) of Vipraghāṭī in the district of Murshidabad, have been served for a year now. Only Śrī Baṅkima Rāya is said to be the ancient Deity installed by Nityānanda Prabhu. Legend has it that the Deity of Śrī Baṅkima Rāya was floating in the waters of the Yamunā at Kadambakhaṇḍī Ghāṭ, east of the temple. Śrīman Nityānanda Prabhu lifted the Deity out of the water and installed Him for service. And Śrīmatī appeared under a nimba tree at a place called Bhaḍḍāpura, about half a mile west of Vīracandrapura. That is why many people used to call Baṅkima Rāya's Śrīmatī "the Ṭhākurāṇī of Bhaḍḍāpura." On yet another throne in the temple, to the right of Bāṅkā Rāya, stands "Yogamāyā." The temple and the jagamohana stand on a high brick plinth. Directly in front is a modest nāṭa-mandira. It is said that in the northern part of Śrī Bāṅkā Rāya's temple there was a Śiva named "Bhāṇḍīśvara," and Hāḍāi Paṇḍita worshipped that Śiva, the king of Vaiṣṇavas. That Śiva-liṅga has now disappeared, and in its place a Deity of Śrī Jagannātha is installed.

Śrīman Nityānanda Prabhu built no temples or other buildings. When the temple from Vīrabhadra Prabhu's time collapsed in 1298, a brahmacārī named Śivānanda Svāmī restored it. Seventeen seers and ten chaṭāks of rice are allotted every day for the Deity's offering (bhoga).

The servitors, the "Gosvāmīs," are a branch of the family of Śrī Gopījana-vallabhānanda, a descendant of Nityānanda. An estate (zamindari) is settled in the Gosvāmīs' name for the service, and the service is maintained from its income. The "Gosvāmīs" are three shareholders, and they serve by turns. Śrīyukta Goṣṭhavihārī "Gosvāmī" holds a share of eight annas eight gaṇḍās in the estate; Śrīyukta Vijayacandra "Gosvāmī" and others, five annas fourteen gaṇḍās; and Śrīyukta Prasanna Kumāra Bandyopādhyāya (a daughter's son of the "Gosvāmīs"), one anna eighteen gaṇḍās[2].

Not far from the temple is a place called Viśrāmatalā. Legend has it that here, in His childhood, Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu acted out various pastimes of Vraja and the rāsa dance with His friends.

At a place called Āmlītalā stands a spreading tamarind tree. The Neḍās and similar sects have invented many fanciful stories about this place. Legend has it that a pond called "Śvetagaṅgā" was dug by Vīrabhadra Prabhu's twelve hundred Neḍās. A little farther on are the memorial pillars over the Gosvāmīs' tombs. Crossing the Yamunā, which flows north from Mauḍeśvara to the river Dvārakeśvara, one comes within half a mile to the temple at Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu's birthplace (sūtikā-mandira). In front of it stood an old nāṭa-mandira; it is now in ruins and covered by a spreading banyan. Later a temple was built in that courtyard, and the Deities of Śrī Gaura and Nityānanda reside in it. A stone tablet in the jagamohana records that this temple was restored in the month of Vaiśākha, 1323, in memory of the late Prasannakumāra, the steward (kārpharmā).

The place where the sūtikā-mandira stands is called “Garbhavāsa.” About 43 bighās of land are set aside for the service; of these, 20 bighās are tax-free — this is land of the Mahārāja of Dinajpur. Near Garbhavāsa stood the school (ṭol) of Hāḍāi Paṇḍita.

The servitors of this place: (1) Śrī Rāghavacandra Gosvāmī (in Vraja, Campakalatā, Gaura-gaṇoddeśa 162; he lived at Govardhana; the day of his departure, the thirteenth lunar day of the bright fortnight of Jyaiṣṭha); (2) Jagadānanda dāsa (day of departure, Rādhāṣṭamī); (3) Kṛṣṇadāsa (of Ciḍiyā-kuñja; day of departure, Kṛṣṇa-janmāṣṭamī); (4) Nityānanda dāsa; (5) Rāmadāsa; (6) Vrajamohana dāsa; (7) Kānāi dāsa; (8) Gauradāsa; (9) Śivānanda dāsa; (10) Haridāsa (the present servitor).

Not far from Garbhavāsa, the sūtikā-mandira, is Bakulatalā. Here Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu played the game of jhāl-jhapeṭā with His friends. This bakula tree is a great wonder: its branches and twigs look exactly like snakes, with heads and hoods. Probably they appear this way by the will of Anantadeva Himself, Śrī Nityānanda. The tree itself is very old. It is said that two of its branches once grew apart. Nityānanda Prabhu saw that during play His friends found it hard to cross from one branch to the other, and He joined the two branches.

Hāṅṭugāḍā. Tradition says that Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu gathered all the holy places (tīrthas) at this spot. To this day the residents of this dhāma do not go to the Gaṅgā or other tīrthas, but bathe at this tīrtha. Śrīman Nityānanda Prabhu held a festival of dadhi-ciḍā, yogurt with flat rice, here. Legend has it that He sat here on His knees eating dadhi-ciḍā, and the spot sank into a hollow; that is why it is called “Hāṅṭugāḍā” (“knees sunk in”). This pond (kuṇḍa) holds water all year round.

In the month of Kārttika, at the time of the Goṣṭha festival, a large fair takes place here. A huge fair is also held at Vīracandrapura for the festival of Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu's birth, on the thirteenth lunar day of the bright fortnight of Māgha. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verse 11) says: “Nityānanda, who in Vraja is Śrī Halāyudha, in the form of a devotee”; and (verses 58–59): “Baladeva is Viśvarūpa, considered the vyūha Saṅkarṣaṇa. And Nityānanda Avadhūta is also called He, by way of prakāśa (manifestation).” He is the Balarāma of Vraja.

Last of all, Kṛṣṇa Himself descends —

62 He sent countless devotees down before Him, and last of all the son of the king of Vraja descended Himself.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 3.93.

Before Mahāprabhu, Śrī Advaita was the head, worshipped by all — 63 Before the Lord appeared, all the Vaiṣṇavas would gather at the home of Advaita Ācārya.

*Advaita explains bhakti —*

64 There Ācārya Gosāñi expounded the Gītā and the Bhāgavata, decrying the paths of knowledge and fruitive work and extolling bhakti.

*He teaches that devotion to Kṛṣṇa alone is the means (abhidheya) —*

65 He showed that all the scriptures speak of devotion to Kṛṣṇa, and would accept no other path — not knowledge, yoga, austerity or ritual dharma.

Accepting Him as their head, all the Vaiṣṇavas worship Kṛṣṇa —

66 In His company the Vaiṣṇavas delighted in talks of Kṛṣṇa, worship of Kṛṣṇa and the saṅkīrtana of the holy name.

*Having appeared in the world, the Ācārya sees the jīvas bent on sense pleasure and grieves —*

67 But when He saw that all people had turned away from Kṛṣṇa and were sunk in worldly things, He grieved.

The Ācārya thinks deeply how to deliver the people —

68 He pondered how they might be delivered: how could all these people be saved?

Only the descent of Kṛṣṇa Himself will surely deliver the people —

69 "If Kṛṣṇa descends and spreads bhakti, then indeed all people will be delivered."

To bring Kṛṣṇa Himself down, the Ācārya worships Kṛṣṇa —

70 Vowing to bring Kṛṣṇa down, the Ācārya worshipped Him with tulasī and Gaṅgā water.

The Ācārya calls Kṛṣṇa, and Kṛṣṇa is drawn —

71 He called to Kṛṣṇa with roar upon roar, and those roars drew the son of the king of Vraja.

Before Gaura's descent, the eight daughters of Miśra and Śacī pass away —

72 Eight daughters were born one after another to Śacī, the wife of Jagannātha Miśra, and each died soon after her birth.

Miśra's grief and his worship of Viṣṇu for a son —

73 Grieving at the loss of his children, Miśra worshipped the feet of Viṣṇu, praying for a son.

Their ninth child, Viśvarūpa —

74 Then a son was born, named Viśvarūpa. He was rich in great virtues, a manifestation of Baladeva.

Anubhāṣya.
Viśvarūpa was the elder brother of Śrī Gaurahari. Before marrying He took sannyāsa and received the name "Śaṅkarāraṇya." In Śaka 1431 He departed from this world at Pāṇḍerapura in the district of Sholapur, in the Bombay Presidency. He is both causes of the universe, the "material" (upādāna) and the "efficient" (nimitta). The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa (verses 58–59) says: "Because the part and the whole are not different, the son of Śacī is the original vyūha; Baladeva is Viśvarūpa, considered the vyūha Saṅkarṣaṇa; and Nityānanda Avadhūta is also called He, by way of prakāśa." In the Gauracandrodaya, Kali says to Dharma: "His elder brother, without ever taking a wife — Saṅkarṣaṇa, that Bhagavān who on earth was Viśvarūpa — gave, it is said, His own effulgence to Purīśvara, took sannyāsa before Him and left this world."

And there too: "…Nityānanda Avadhūta, glorified as the Effulgence — indeed, Saṅkarṣaṇa…"[3] And further: "When this eternal Śrī Viśvarūpa left this world, He joined with Nityānanda Avadhūta and remained [in Him]."

Viśvarūpa is the Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa of Vaikuṇṭha —

75 Baladeva's manifestation in the spiritual sky is Saṅkarṣaṇa, and He is both the material and the efficient cause of the universe.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Viśvarūpa is the avatāra of Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa, who dwells in Paravyoma.

76 Apart from Him I see nothing in the universe, and so He is called Viśvarūpa, "He whose form is the universe".

77 "O King, this is no wonder for Bhagavān, the unlimited Lord of the universe, in whom this whole world is woven, warp and weft, like cloth upon its threads." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.15.35)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Nothing is astonishing in the unlimited Bhagavān, the Lord of the universe: in Him this whole universe appears woven lengthwise and crosswise, like the threads in a cloth.

Anubhāṣya.
Referring to the pastime in which Baladeva killed the demon Dhenuka, Śukadeva says to Parīkṣit: aṅga (O king), yasmin idaṁ (this universe) tantuṣu paṭaḥ (cloth) yathā (as) otaṁ protam (woven lengthwise and crosswise), (in that) anante (unlimited) jagad-īśvare bhagavati (in that Viṣṇu) etat (the killing of demons and the like) citram (astonishing) na hi (not at all) (is).

Why the Lord calls Him "elder brother" —

78 That is why the Lord called Him His elder brother. Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma — these two are Caitanya and Nitāi.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Mahā-Saṅkarṣaṇa pervades the universe lengthwise and crosswise as its "material" (upādāna) and "efficient" (nimitta) cause; that is why Mahāprabhu calls Him His "elder brother." But Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma in Kṛṣṇaloka are Caitanya and Nitāi themselves. Therefore Nityānanda Prabhu is the original Saṅkarṣaṇa, that is, Baladeva.

The joy of Miśra and Śacī at having a son —

79 Blessed with a son, the couple rejoiced and served the feet of Govinda with still greater devotion.

Thirteen months before His appearance, Kṛṣṇa enters Śacī's womb —

80 At the end of the month of Māgha in Śaka 1406, Kṛṣṇa entered the bodies of Jagannātha and Śacī.

Miśra is astonished to see Śacī changed in a way not of this world —

81 Miśra said to Śacī, "I see something wonderful. Your body is radiant, and our house has become the abode of Lakṣmī.

82 Wherever I go, people honour me, and they send wealth, clothes and rice to our house."

Śacī is astonished to see the gods offering prayers —

83 Śacī replied, "And I see beings of divine form appear in the sky above and offer prayers."

Kṛṣṇa enters first Miśra's heart, then Śacī's —

84 Jagannātha Miśra said, "I had a dream: a radiant abode entered my heart.

They sense the coming appearance of some great personality —

85 From my heart it passed into yours. So I understand that some great soul is to be born.”

Both serve Nārāyaṇa with special care —

86 Speaking thus, the two were filled with joy, and they served the śālagrāma with special care.

Anubhāṣya.

The conclusion is this. Jagannātha and Śacī are eternally perfect (nitya-siddha), and so their hearts and bodies consist of pure goodness (śuddha-sattva) and are not at all like those of ordinary mundane jīvas. Pure goodness (viśuddha-sattva) is called “Vasudeva”; it is in Vasudeva that Vāsudeva, who enjoys spiritual pastimes, becomes manifest (see the Vivṛti in the Gauḍīya-bhāṣya on Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 4.3.23). The union of Śrī Jagannātha and Śacīdevī and the conception in Śacīdevī were not like the amorous play and the pregnancy of men and women with mundane bodies of blood and flesh, absorbed in gratifying their material senses. Therefore even to think so in one's mind is an offense. One who reflects with a heart turned toward the service of Bhagavān will grasp the glory of the transcendental womb of Śrī Śacīdevī, who is made entirely of pure goodness. The Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (10.2.16) says: “Bhagavān, the Soul of the universe, who frees His devotees from fear, entered the mind of Ānakadundubhi with His portion.” Śrīdhara Svāmī comments: “‘Entered the mind’ — He became manifest in the mind; the meaning is that He has no connection with bodily elements (dhātu), as the jīvas do.” In this connection see also Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.2.18 and 19.

On the same subject, here is a rendering of the sense of verses 160–165 from the section on the manifestation of the manifest pastimes in Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī Prabhu's Laghu-bhāgavatāmṛta. The words of the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (10.2.16), “He entered the mind of Ānakadundubhi with His portion,” mean that Kṛṣṇa first became manifest in the heart of Ānakadundubhi. Then from Ānakadundubhi's heart He became manifest in Devakī's heart. Fondled by the nectar of loving bliss, Devakī's parental love, Śrī Kṛṣṇa grew more and more in her heart, like the waxing moon. Then Śrī Kṛṣṇa vanished from Devakī's heart and appeared on her bed in the birth chamber of Kaṁsa's prison. Devakī and the others, under the sway of yogamāyā, then thought that the child had been born in the ordinary way, easily and happily. Such humanlike yet transcendental feelings of the devotee and Bhagavān, supremely delightful, serve the most wonderful spiritual pastimes. They bewilder even great sages enchanted by māyā, and they establish that Mathurā-dhāma is higher even than Paravyoma-Vaikuṇṭha. Thus Śrī Kṛṣṇa eternally remains the eternal son of the eternal Yaśodā, and in the same way He enjoys pastimes in the endless unmanifest līlā as well. Śrī Līlā-puruṣottama Śrī Kṛṣṇa eternally sports in Vraja, rejoicing in such pastimes: they give bliss to His dearest devotees and astonish Him as well. Under the sway of the transcendental parental love of the transcendental Nanda and Yaśodā — a love that has no equal and none higher — Bhagavān eternally knows Himself as their eternal son. In the Tenth Canto (10.5.1): “When a son was born to the great-hearted Nanda, he was overjoyed.” In the same Tenth Canto (10.6.43): “Generous-hearted Nanda, returning from abroad, took his son Kṛṣṇa on his lap, smelled His head and was filled with supreme bliss.” And again (10.9.21): “This Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the son of a cowherd woman, so easily reached by devotees, is never easily attained by those who take the body for the self, by ascetics, or by jñānīs who contemplate the self.”

Śrīpāda Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa writes: “This [portion], having become one with Kṛṣṇa — Svayaṁ Bhagavān in His form, who dwelt in Ānakadundubhi's heart — becomes manifest in Devakī's heart. For Śrī Śuka says: ‘Then the goddess (“meaning: made of pure goodness,” says Svāmipāda) held in her mind the portion of Acyuta — the auspiciousness of the world, the Soul of all, the Self — placed in her (“properly placed, that is, imparted through initiation according to the rules,” says Svāmipāda) by the son of Śūra, as the east holds the delightful moon’ (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.2.18). Although it says ‘in Devakī's heart,’ it should be understood that He was in her womb, as the gods' prayer shows: ‘Fortunately, O mother, the Supreme Person is in your womb’ (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.2.41).  And in the section on the birth: ‘In Devakī, whose form is divine, Viṣṇu, who dwells in everyone's heart, appeared, like the full moon in the east’ (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.3.8).”

“Then, as the east reveals the rising moon, so Devakī, made of pure goodness, having received from Śūrasena (Vasudeva) initiation into Kṛṣṇa's mantra, held in her heart Śrī Acyuta — the auspiciousness of the world, the Soul of all and the Supreme Soul.” From these words of the Bhāgavatam it is known that Svayaṁ Bhagavān became manifest from the heart of Ānakadundubhi (Vasudeva) in the heart of Devakī. Although “in Devakī's heart” is said here, it must be understood to mean that He was in Devakī's womb, for in the Bhāgavatam there is the gods' prayer: “O mother, the Supreme Person resides in your womb.” And in the section on the Lord's birth these words of the Bhāgavatam should be especially noted: “As the full moon rises in the east, so Viṣṇu, who dwells in everyone's heart, appeared in Devakī's heart.”

Here, by the words “served the feet of Govinda with still greater devotion” (Ādi 13.79), it should be understood that Śrī Gaurasundara appeared in the very hearts of Miśra and Śacī, which were always immersed in the service of Govinda's feet.

Even after thirteen months there is no sign of His descent —

87 The months went by until the thirteenth had come, yet still the child was not born, and Miśra grew afraid.

Nīlāmbara Cakravartī's calculation —

88 Nīlāmbara Cakravartī made his calculations and said, “A son will be born this month, at an auspicious moment.”

The descent of Gaura Prabhu —

89 In Śaka 1407, in the month of Phālguna, the auspicious moment came on the evening of the full moon.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The birth horoscope is as follows:

Śaka 1407 | 10 | 22 | 28 | 45 Day (dinam)[1]: 7 · 11 · 8 15 · 54 · 38 40 · 37 · 40 13 · 6 · 23

At the hour of the Lord's birth, Venus (Śukra) was in Aries (Meṣa), in the nakṣatra (lunar mansion) Aśvinī; Ketu in Leo (Siṁha), in the nakṣatra Uttara-phalgunī; the moon (Candra) in the nakṣatra Pūrva-phalgunī; Saturn (Śani) in Scorpio (Vṛścika), in the nakṣatra Jyeṣṭhā; Jupiter (Bṛhaspati) in Sagittarius (Dhanu), in the nakṣatra Pūrvāṣāḍhā; Mars (Maṅgala) in Capricorn (Makara), in the nakṣatra Śravaṇā; the sun (Ravi) in Aquarius (Kumbha), in Pūrva-bhādrapadā; Rāhu in the nakṣatra Pūrva-bhādrapadā;

Mercury (Budha) in Pisces (Mīna), in the nakṣatra Uttara-bhādrapadā. The ascendant (lagna) is Leo.

Mars, the lord of the ninth house, is exalted (ucca); Venus and Saturn are nearly exalted. Jupiter, in its own house (svagṛha), aspects Venus, which stands in the house of dharma. Venus, the lord of the tenth house, aspected by Jupiter (Guru), stands in the ninth house.

Anubhāṣya.

At the end of the play Śrī Caitanya-candrodaya: "In the Śaka year fourteen hundred joined with the horses of the sun[1], Gaura Hari appeared in the circle of the earth." Many events and known dates do not agree with Śrī Mahāprabhu's appearance in this Śaka year; therefore some think that Śaka 1426 or some other year is correct.

90 The moon was in Leo, Leo was rising and the planets were exalted; the six divisions and the eight divisions all showed auspicious signs.

Anubhāṣya.

The ṣaḍ-varga: kṣetra, horā, dreṣkāṇa, navāṁśa, dvādaśāṁśa and triṁśāṁśa — these six are called the ṣaḍ-varga, the six divisions of a sign. Nīlāmbara examined the lords of this ṣaḍ-varga according to the exact degree (spaṣṭāṁśa) of the ascendant and established the auspicious signs.

The aṣṭa-varga: the aṣṭa-varga is calculated by drawing prescribed lines from the positions of the planets at the moment, as described in the Bṛhaj-jātaka and other books. Experts in horā-śāstra, astrology, apply the stated results to it and determine what is auspicious and what is not. By this calculation too Cakravartī saw auspicious signs in Mahāprabhu.

Gauracandra rises as if to rebuke the moon —

91 Once the spotless moon Gauracandra had shown Himself, what further need was there of the spotted moon?

*The lunar eclipse, and on that occasion the jīvas chant Hari's name —*

92 Knowing this, Rāhu seized the moon, and the three worlds were flooded with the names "Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa! Hari!"

93 Cries of “Jaya! Jaya!” rang through all the worlds, and the people, amazed, wondered within themselves.

*The Lord descends while the jīvas chant Hari's name —*

94 The whole world was filled with people crying, “Hari! Hari!” — and at that very moment Gaura-Kṛṣṇa descended to the earth.

At that time even the Yavanas, mocking, utter Hari's name —

95 Every heart in the world was glad; even the Muslims, mocking the Hindus, cried out, “Hari!”

The joy of the gods in heaven —

96 Calling “Hari!”, the women raised their joyful ululation, while in heaven the gods, full of eager delight, played music and danced.

Joy plays everywhere —

97 The ten directions grew bright, the waters of the rivers grew clear, and all beings, moving and unmoving, were overwhelmed with bliss.

*The sūtra of the Lord's birth: Gaurahari appears amid the kīrtana of Hari's name —*

98 Over Nadīyā, the eastern mountain, the full moon Gaurahari has risen in His mercy. The darkness of sin is destroyed, the three worlds rejoice, and the sound of “Hari!” fills the world.

Advaita dances, overflowing with joy —

99 At that very time, in His own home, Advaita Rāya rose and began to dance, joyful at heart. With Haridāsa beside Him He roared and sang kīrtana in delight — and no one knew why He was dancing.

Anubhāṣya.

“In His own home”: in His house at Śāntipura. On the day of the Lord's birth Haridāsa Ṭhākura was in Śāntipura.

The lunar eclipse: the people chant Hari's name —

100 Seeing the eclipse, He laughed, hurried to the bathing place on the Gaṅgā and bathed there joyfully. Then, as though for the eclipse, He gave the brāhmaṇas many gifts in His mind.

Anubhāṣya.

Uparāga means an eclipse. Manobale: with eagerness of mind; or else, He gave gifts to the brāhmaṇas in His mind. The Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (10.3.11) says: “Then Ānakadundubhi, his eyes wide with wonder, saw that his son was Hari. Stirred by the festival of Kṛṣṇa's descent, he joyfully bathed [in his mind] and [in his mind] gave ten thousand cows to the brāhmaṇas.” Seeing Bhagavān Hari as his son, Vasudeva rejoiced at the festival of Kṛṣṇa's birth and in the prison gave ten thousand cows to the brāhmaṇas in his mind.

Advaita hints to Haridāsa of the Lord's auspicious appearance —

101 Seeing the whole world full of bliss, Haridāsa was astonished and spoke in hints: “This joyful play of Yours delights my heart. I see that something lies behind it.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Dekhi kichu kārye āche bhāsa” (“I see something is behind this”): in this one seems to sense the manifestation of some special work.

Anubhāṣya.

Ṭhāre-ṭhore: by hints.

Śrīvāsa, overflowing with joy, chants Hari's name —

102 Ācāryaratna and Śrīvāsa were filled with joy. They went and bathed in the Gaṅgā, and, overwhelmed with bliss, sang the saṅkīrtana of Hari and gave many gifts in their minds.

The hearts of all the devotees in the world are gladdened —

103 So too all the devotees, in whatever land they dwelt, danced and sang saṅkīrtana there, overwhelmed with bliss, and, as though for the eclipse, gave gifts in their minds.

Men and women rejoice to see the child shining like gold —

104 Brāhmaṇas, good men and women all came with plates heaped with gifts, and when they saw the child, radiant as molten gold, they blessed Him with delight.

*The goddesses come to the world of mortals dressed as brāhmaṇa ladies to see Gaura —*

105 Sāvitrī, Gaurī, Sarasvatī, Śacī, Rambhā, Arundhatī and all the other goddesses came dressed as brāhmaṇa ladies, bearing trays laden with gifts, to see Him.

Anubhāṣya.

Sāvitrī is Brahmā's wife; Gaurī, Śiva's wife; Sarasvatī, Nṛsiṁha's consort, as in Śrīdhara Svāmī's commentary: "I worship Nṛsiṁha, on whose lips is the goddess of speech, on whose chest is Lakṣmī, and in whose heart is knowledge"; Śacī, Indra's wife; Rambhā, a heavenly dancer; Arundhatī, Vasiṣṭha's wife.

The gods and others in the sky rejoice, bow down, offer prayers and dance —

106 In the sky the gods, siddhas, gandharvas and cāraṇas offered praises, danced, played and sang; and the dancers, musicians and bards who performed in Navadvīpa all came and danced with delight.

Anubhāṣya.

Siddhas: beings of divine birth who attained that birth through perfection in mantras. Gandharvas: heavenly singers, born from Brahmā's luster; their abode is Guhyaloka. Cāraṇas: "The singers of the gods, the reciters of hymns of praise, are the Cāraṇas"; a particular class of celestial beings.

107 Who was coming, who going, who dancing, who singing — no one could make out anyone's words. Sorrow and grief were cut away, the people were filled with gladness, and Miśra was overwhelmed with bliss.

Anubhāṣya.

Sambhālite: to understand. Gods, humans, Siddhas and the rest belong to different orders of beings, and so they cannot understand one another's words.

*The Lord's birth ceremony (jātakarma) —*

108 Ācāryaratna and Śrīvāsa came to Jagannātha Miśra and recalled him to his duty. They had the birth rite performed as the scriptures prescribe, and then Miśra gave many gifts.

Anubhāṣya.

Ācāryaratna is Candraśekhara; Śrīvāsa is Śrīnivāsa Paṇḍita.

Miśra gives gifts on the occasion of the auspicious rite —

109 He gave away to the brāhmaṇas all the gifts he had received and whatever else was in the house, and he honoured all the dancers, singers, bards and the poor with gifts of wealth.

The auspicious rites of Mālinī Ṭhākurāṇī and the Lord's maternal aunt — 110 Śrīvāsa's wife, whose name was Mālinī, came with the wife of Ācāryaratna, and the women joyfully worshipped the child with vermilion, turmeric, oil, puffed rice, bananas and many kinds of fruit.

What Sītā Ṭhākurāṇī did —

111 Advaita Ācārya's wife, the noble lady revered by all the world, was named Sītā Ṭhākurāṇī. With the Ācārya's leave she set out with gifts to see that jewel among children.

Anubhāṣya.

One day after the Lord's birthday, Advaita Prabhu's wife Sītādevī, with His permission, came with gifts from Śāntipura to Navadvīpa to see the child. Although Advaita Prabhu also had a house in Navadvīpa at that time, the words “in His own home” (Ādi 13.99) show that He was then staying in Śāntipura.

The ornaments of the Lord in the form of a child —

112 She brought a little golden waist-chain and anklets of silver coins, golden armlets and bracelets, fine conch-shell bangles for both arms, silver ankle-rings and necklaces of gold coins.

Anubhāṣya.

Kaḍi-bauli: a golden waist ring; pāśuli: a particular silver ornament for the feet; aṅgada and kaṅkaṇa: golden bracelets — curi, bālā, ananta; divya śaṅkha: bangles made of conch shell (śāṅkhā); malabaṅka: curved anklets (bāṅkmal).

113 There was also a tiger’s claw set in gold, a silken waist-cord, every kind of ornament for hands and feet, many-coloured silk saris, a little shirt woven with a silk border, and a wealth of gold and silver coins.

Anubhāṣya.

Hemajaḍi: a jeweled ornament set with a tiger's claw; kaṭi-paṭṭasūtra-ḍorī: a ghunsi, a waist string; citravarṇa paṭṭasāḍī: a colorful silk cloth; buni photo paṭṭapāḍī: a phatuyā with a woven silk border, that is, a little shirt for a baby.

Auspicious rites —

114 Riding in a curtained palanquin with her maidservants, she came with baskets full of clothes and ornaments, and plates heaped with auspicious things — dūrvā grass, paddy, gorocanā, turmeric, saffron and sandal.

Anubhāṣya.

Gorocana: a bright yellow substance obtained from a cow's head, or dried bile. Kuṅkuma: a fragrant substance native to Kashmir. “Kuṅkuma from the fields of Kashmir — with fine filaments, reddish, with the fragrance of a lotus — is the best. Kuṅkuma from the land of Bāhlīka — pale, with the fragrance of ketakī, with fine filaments — is middling. Persian kuṅkuma is said to smell of honey; it is slightly pale, with coarse filaments, and is the lowest.”

Vastragupta-dolā: a litter (ḍuli or thāñjām) covered with cloth; ceḍī: a maidservant.

115 Bringing many loads of sweets and other foods, she arrived at Śacī's house. When she saw the child, He was Kāna of Gokula Himself — only His colour was the opposite.

Anubhāṣya.

Ṭhāma: build; kāna: Kānu, that is, Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa's color is dark, like a dense indranīla sapphire; Viśvambhara's color is the opposite, golden (gaura).

Seeing the child's golden body, the women are filled with parental love —

116 Every limb was finely formed, He seemed an image of gold, and every limb bore auspicious marks. Seeing the child's divine radiance, she was filled with delight, and her heart melted with a mother's love.

Anubhāṣya.

Sunirmāṇa: beautifully formed limbs; bhāna: appearance.

The child is blessed and a protective amulet is tied on Him —

117 She placed dūrvā grass and paddy on His head and blessed Him again and again: "May the two brothers live long!" Fearing the witches and evil spirits, she gave Him the name Nimāi.

Anubhāṣya.

The two brothers are Viśvarūpa and Viśvambhara. Ḍākinīs and śākhinīs are the companions of Pārvatī and Maheśa, a particular class of malevolent ghosts (preta) born in female form. These lower deities (apadevatās) cannot approach the sacred nimba tree or places connected with it.

Śacī and Miśra show honor —

118 On the day the mother and child were bathed, she gave them clothes and ornaments and honoured Miśra together with his son. Then, honoured in turn by Śacī and Miśra, Sītā Ṭhākurāṇī returned home glad at heart.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Putra-mātā-snāna-dine": that is, on the fifth day, the pāṅcaṭa, and on the ninth, the day of the nattā.

Anubhāṣya.

"On the day of the mother's bath": that is, on the day of the niṣkrāmaṇa, the child's first going out of the house. In Bengal in former times the brāhmaṇas and other varṇas observed the impurity of childbirth (jananāśauca) for four months, followed by the rite of seeing the sun (sūrya-darśana). Later, instead of four months, twenty-one days of birth impurity were prescribed for the twice-born varṇas, the brāhmaṇas and others, while among the śūdras and others a month is still observed. Among the Kartābhajās and in the Satīmā group the birth impurity ends at once, with a harinuṭ (a scattering of sweets in Hari's name).

This custom at parting is still seen in Bengali social life. When relatives or in-laws visit someone's home, the householder honors them at their departure with cloth and other gifts. Having received such honor from Jagannātha Miśra and Śacīdevī, Sītā Ṭhākurāṇī returned to Śāntipura.

The joy of Śacī and Miśra at having a son —

119 So Śacī and Jagannātha had gained a son who was the Lord of Lakṣmī, and all their desires were fulfilled. Their house was filled with wealth and grain; everyone honoured their child, and day by day their joy grew.

Anubhāṣya.

Lokamānya-kalevara, "a body honored by the world": gods, humans and all others, drawn by the sight of Śrī Mahāprabhu's beauty, majesty and loveliness, showed honor to His body; seeing this, His father and mother rejoiced.

Miśra, a peaceful, self-controlled and generous Vaiṣṇava —

120 Miśra was a Vaiṣṇava — peaceful, free from lust, pure and self-controlled — with no thought of enjoying wealth. Whatever wealth came to him through his son's power, he gave to the brāhmaṇas for the pleasure of Viṣṇu.

Anubhāṣya.

Mundane, worldly people, for the sake of wife, sons and the like, take pride in enjoying wealth and bustle after it. The pure devotee Jagannātha Miśra was not like that. He offered everything he had to Bhagavān and gave the remnants to worthy recipients, brāhmaṇas and others. He accepted nothing for the sake of his own enjoyment.

Cakravartī casts the Lord's horoscope —

121 Nīlāmbara Cakravartī cast the horoscope with joy in his heart and told Miśra in secret, "I see many marks of a great person (mahāpuruṣa), both in the horoscope and on His body. This child will deliver the world."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Lagne aṅge bhinna bhinna" ("separately, in the lagna and on the body"): according to sāmudrika, the science of bodily marks — in the lagna, that is, in the birth chart (jātaka-kuṇḍalī), and on the aṅga, that is, on the body.

Thus ends the thirteenth chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

Anubhāṣya.

Gupte: in private.

The glory of hearing of the Lord's birth —

122 Thus the Lord in His mercy descended in Śacī's house. Whoever hears of this receives the kindness of merciful Gaura Prabhu and attains His feet.

The misfortune of worldly people hostile to Gaura — 123 One who has gained a human birth yet will not hear of Gaura's qualities has wasted that birth. He has found the river of nectar, yet drinks water from a poisoned pit. Why did he not die as soon as he was born?

Anubhāṣya.

Amṛta-dhunī: a river of nectar. Whoever refuses to drink the water of the nectarean stream of devotion to Kṛṣṇa and drinks the water of the poisonous well of sense objects (harmful to the soul) is utterly dead, and should not go on living.

In Śrīmat Prabodhānanda Sarasvatīpāda's Caitanya-candrāmṛta: "This world is without consciousness (acaitanya) if it does not worship Caitanya, the Lord whom the best of the immortals worship: death surrounds it on every side." "This world is without consciousness if it does not know Caitanya, the Lord: such people, though they know all the scriptures, wander astray." "Now that the moon of Caitanya has risen and the ocean of the nectarean rasa of great prema has spread wide, whoever remains poor is poor indeed." "Now that Gauracandra has descended, the ocean of prema has spread wide and its heaps of jewels shine brightly, whoever remains poor is poor indeed."

The Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam (2.3.19, 20, 23) says: "A man into whose ears the name of Gadāgraja has never entered is an animal, praised by dogs, dung-eating hogs, camels and asses." "O Sūta, the ears of a man who does not hear of the exploits of Urukrama are mere holes; and the wicked tongue that does not sing the songs of Urugāya is like the tongue of a frog." "A mortal who has never taken on himself the dust of the feet of a bhāgavata is a corpse though alive; and a man who has never known the fragrance of the tulasī from Śrī Viṣṇu's feet is a breathing corpse." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.1.4): "The recounting of Uttamaśloka's qualities is sung by those free of thirst; it is the medicine for the disease of worldly existence and a delight to the ear and the mind. Who, except a killer of animals, would turn away from it?" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 3.23.56): "… whoever does not live for the service of Him whose feet are holy places is dead though alive."

124 Honouring upon my head, as my own treasure, the holy feet of Śrī Caitanya and Nityānanda, Ācārya Advaitacandra, Svarūpa, Rūpa and Raghunātha dāsa, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, have sung the pastime of His birth.

Anubhāṣya.

The lotus feet of Śrī Mahāprabhu, Nityānanda, Advaita, Dāmodara Svarūpa, Rūpa and Raghunātha dāsa are the very own wealth of Śrī Kṛṣṇadāsa Kavirāja Gosvāmī and of the pure, or intimate, devotees who follow him. The wealth of worldly people is a price set by māyā; in truth it deserves the name "debt." The jīva who has turned away from Kṛṣṇa does not know that the highest goal is wealth, and takes lust (kāma), a debt in the form of material enjoyment, to be "wealth." Worldly jīvas bustle after the things they take for wealth, but in these the servants of Hari see only a growth of debt, not a growth of wealth. On the other hand, when Bhagavān makes someone rich by giving him the wealth of His mercy, He takes away his material riches. "Upon whom I bestow My mercy, I gradually take away his wealth"[5]. Ṭhākura Narottama says: "My wealth is Nityānanda";

“The holy feet of Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa are the wealth of my life”; “Glory to You, O purifier of the fallen! Give me this wealth; nothing but You appeals to me”; “The feet of Śrī Rūpa-mañjarī are my treasure, my worship and adoration, the wealth of my life”; “Carelessly I lost the jewel-wealth of prema. Striving for what is no wealth, I gave up true wealth” — and so on.

The smārtas, guided by the notion of kinship by seed, impute śūdra-hood — the lack of brāhmaṇa status — to the lotus feet of Śrī Raghunātha dāsa; in their wealth of devotion this is only a debt. But to realize transcendental brāhmaṇa-hood in his lotus feet is the devotee's very own wealth.

Thus ends the thirteenth chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”

Ādi-līlā

Chapter 14

A Brief Description of the Childhood Pastimes

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. The fourteenth chapter describes the Lord's childhood pastimes: He crawls on all fours; on the pretext of crying He spreads the holy name; on the pretext of eating earth He gives knowledge to His mother; He gives prasāda to a guest brāhmaṇa and delivers him; He climbs onto a thief's shoulders, bewilders him and brings him back to His own home; on the pretext of illness He eats, on the day of Ekādaśī, the offering (naivedya) of Hiraṇya and Jagadīśa; His childhood mischief; seeing His mother unconscious, He brings her coconuts; He jokes with the girls on the bank of the Gaṅgā; He accepts the worship of Lakṣmī-devī; sitting in a pit full of discarded pots, He gives His mother knowledge of Brahman and obeys her order; Miśra's pure parental love (śuddha-vātsalya). These are the topics of the childhood pastimes.

*(Hari-bhakti-vilāsa, vilāsa 20, verse 1)*

1 “I worship Śrī Caitanya. Remember Him in any way at all, and the difficult becomes easy; forget Him, and the easy becomes difficult.” (Hari-bhakti-vilāsa, 20.1)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

He whom one need only remember a little for the difficult to become easy, and whom one need only forget for even the easy to become difficult — that Caitanya I worship.

Anubhāṣya.
yasmin (in whom — in Gaura-Kṛṣṇa) kathañcana (in whatever way) smṛte (when He has come to mind) duṣkaraṁ (a difficult task) sukaraṁ (an easily performed practice) bhavet, yasmin (in whom — in Gaura-Kṛṣṇa) vismṛte (when He is forgotten) viparītaṁ (the reverse: an easily performed practice becomes a difficult task) syāt, tam amuṁ śrī-caitanyam bhaje.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

3 Thus I have given an outline of the Lord's birth, telling how the son of Yaśodā became the son of Śacī.

4 I have told the pastimes of His birth briefly and in order; now I shall name, one by one, the chief events of His childhood.

Gaura's pastimes are transcendental, though they resemble human ones —

5 I worship the enchanting childhood pastimes of Kṛṣṇa, who came as Caitanya. Though they seem like the doings of an ordinary human child, within they are interwoven with the acts of the Lord Himself.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
I bow down to the charming childhood pastimes of Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa. Although these childhood pastimes resemble ordinary, worldly play, the deeds of the Lord are mixed into them.

Anubhāṣya.
caitanya-devasya (of Gaura-Kṛṣṇa) laukikīm (resembling the doings of people in this world) api īśa-ceṣṭayā (by superhuman endeavor) valitāntarām (those whose inner core is valita, endowed [with it]), mano-harām (attracting the heart) bālya-līlām (childhood play) ahaṁ vande.

He shows the marks of the conch, disc, flag, thunderbolt and fish on His soles

6 At the very start of His childhood pastimes, as Śrī Caitanya lay on His back, He showed His father and mother the divine marks on His feet.

Anubhāṣya.

Uttāna: lying face upward, on the back. There is a variant reading, utthāna. In that sense: trying to stand on His feet, He cannot keep His balance for lack of practice, as is natural for an infant, and lies down.

7 In the house the two of them saw the prints of tiny feet, and in them a flag, a thunderbolt, a conch, a disc and a fish.

8 At the sight both were filled with wonder, unable to tell whose footprints these could be.

Miśra's words —

9 Miśra said, “The child Gopāla is present in our śālagrāma-śilā. I think He takes on a form and plays about the house for His own delight.”

10 At that moment Nimāi woke and began to cry. Śacī took Him on her lap and nursed Him.

Both Śacī and Miśra see the marks on Nimāi's feet —

11 As she nursed Him, she looked at her son’s feet, and when she saw those same marks on them, she called Miśra.

12 The sight filled Miśra’s heart with joy, and he quietly sent for Nīlāmbara Cakravartī.

Nīlāmbara Cakravartī's words —

13 Seeing the marks, Cakravartī smiled and said, “When I cast His birth chart, I foresaw this and wrote it down.

14 Thirty-two marks adorn a great personality, and I see every one of them on this child's body.

*The thirty-two marks of a mahāpuruṣa. So in the Sāmudrika, third verse —*

15 "A great personality bears thirty-two marks: five parts of his body are long, five fine, seven reddish and six raised; three are short, three broad and three deep." (Sāmudrika, 3)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The nose, arms, jaws, eyes and knees — these five are long; the skin, hair, finger joints, teeth and body hair — these five are fine; the eyes, soles, palms, palate, lower lip, upper lip and nails — these seven are red; the chest, shoulders, nails, nose, waist and face — these six are raised; the neck, shanks and generative organ — these three are short; the waist, forehead and chest — these three are broad; the navel, voice and strength of character (sattva) — these three are deep. One who has these thirty-two marks is a mahāpuruṣa, a great personality.

Anubhāṣya.

pañca-dīrghaḥ (one whose five — nose, arms, jaws, eyes and knees — are long), pañca-sūkṣmaḥ (whose five — skin, hair, finger joints, teeth and body hair — are fine), sapta-raktaḥ (whose seven — the corners of the eyes, soles, palms, palate, lower lip, upper lip and nails — are red, red in color), ṣaḍ-unnataḥ (whose six — chest, shoulders, nails, nose, waist and face — are raised, high), tri-hrasva-pṛthu-gambhīraḥ (whose three — neck, shanks and generative organ — are short, small; three — waist, forehead and chest — are broad, wide; three — navel, voice and strength of character — are deep), dvātriṁśal-lakṣaṇaḥ (a person who has these thirty-two marks) — mahān (a great personality, a mahāpuruṣa).

Cakravartī describes the child's greatness and foretells His future —

16 His hands and feet bear the marks of Nārāyaṇa. This child will deliver all people.

17 He will spread the Vaiṣṇava dharma far and wide, and through Him both His families will be delivered.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Both families": the father's family and the mother's family.

The name-giving and the festival —

18 Hold a great festival and invite all the brāhmaṇas. Today is an auspicious day; I shall perform the naming ceremony.

The name "Viśvambhara" —

19 He will uphold and nourish all people, and that is why His name is Viśvambhara."

Anubhāṣya.

The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Ādi, Chapter 3): "With His birth the world came to well-being — just as, long ago, Nārāyaṇa upheld the earth. Therefore His name is 'Śrī Viśvambhara.'"

"Viśvambhara": the Atharva-veda-saṁhitā, kāṇḍa 2, anuvāka 3, prapāṭhaka 3, mantra 16, number 5: "O Viśvambhara, protect me with all Your sustaining support. Svāhā!"

20 Hearing this, Śacī and Miśra rejoiced all the more. They invited the brāhmaṇas and their wives and held a great festival.

He displays superhuman deeds —

21 Some days later the Lord began to crawl on His knees, and He showed many wonders.

Anubhāṣya.

Jānu-caṅkramaṇa: crawling on the knees. The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Ādi, Chapter 3): "The Lord crawls on His knees — nothing could be more beautiful; little bells jingle at His waist — so charming! One day a snake was moving about the house, and in His childhood play the Lord caught the snake. The snake coiled itself around Him, and the Ṭhākura lay down on top of the snake. Then the snake left the Lord and slithered away."

The name of Hari stops His crying —

22 On the pretext of crying He made everyone chant the name of Hari: all the women would call out “Hari!”, and the golden Lord would laugh.

Anubhāṣya.

The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Ādi, Chapter 3): “The lotus-eyed Lord cries only until He hears the name of Hari; then He at once falls quiet. Everyone understood this great sign: whenever He cries, they all chant the name of Hari. As soon as the Lord cries, the women clap their hands and sing hari-saṅkīrtana. The name of Hari is constantly on everyone's lips: on this pretext the Lord makes them chant it, for such is His will.”

Play with the children —

23 Later still He began to walk, and He played all sorts of games with the other children.

Anubhāṣya.

The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Ādi, Chapter 3): “In this way, day by day, Śrī Śacīnandana, the Lord, began to walk about the courtyard on His feet.”

24 One day Śacī brought puffed rice and sweets, filled a dish, and gave it to Him, saying, “Sit down and eat.”

Anubhāṣya.

Bāṭā: a vessel or stand for keeping food or betel; a dish.

Nimāi eats earth —

25 With that, Śacī went into the house to do her work, and the child began to eat earth on the sly.

Anubhāṣya.

This incident is among those left out of the Caitanya-bhāgavata and supplied here, as Ādi 13.49 explains.

Śacī asks the reason —

26 When Śacī saw it, she came running and cried out, “Oh dear, oh dear!” She snatched the earth away and said, “Why are You eating earth?”

Nimāi's philosophical answer —

27 The child wept and said, “Why are you angry? You gave Me earth to eat — how is that My fault?

Everything is a transformation of earth —

28 Puffed rice, sweets and all food are only earth in another form. This is earth and that is earth; why make any distinction?

29 The body is earth, and food is earth — think it over and see. You blame Me without thinking; what can I say?”

Śacī's reply —

30 Inwardly astonished, Śacī said to Him, “Who taught You such jñāna-yoga, just so You could eat earth?

The difference between a substance and its transformation, or what distinguishes the favorable from the unfavorable —

31 Food is earth transformed, and when we eat it, it nourishes the body. But eat earth itself, and disease sets in and the body wastes away.

32 In a pot, which is earth transformed, I fetch water; but try to hold it in a lump of earth, and the water soaks away.”

Hearing this, the Lord speaks —

33 To keep Himself hidden, the Lord said to her, “Mother, why did you not teach Me this before?

Anubhāṣya.

To take objects of food for oneself is merely an activity of the material kind; there is no service to Hari in it. The nirviśeṣa-vādīs mistakenly regard things favorable to Kṛṣṇa's service as being of the same nature as unfavorable things. Such a notion is an utterly mistaken, immature expression of mundane conclusions. Through His mother's mouth, with the simple example of clay and a pot, Mahāprabhu showed how worthless such foolish impersonal thinking is.

34 Now that I know, I will not eat earth any more. When I am hungry, I will drink at your breast."

35 Saying this, the Lord climbed onto His mother's lap and, with a little smile, began to nurse.

In various ways He manifests pastimes of majesty —

36 Thus, on one pretext or another, He would show His majesty, and afterwards, slipping back into the ways of a child, He would hide it again.

He eats the pilgrim brāhmaṇa's rice and delivers him —

37 Three times He ate the food a brāhmaṇa guest had cooked, and afterwards, in secret, He delivered him.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

A pilgrim (tairthika) came as a guest to the house of Śrī Jagannātha Miśra, and Miśra gave him all he needed for cooking and had him cook. When the pilgrim brāhmaṇa was offering the food to Gopāla in meditation, Nimāi came and began to eat his rice. Rejecting the food Nimāi had touched, the guest brāhmaṇa cooked once more; but this time too, as he offered it in meditation, the same thing happened. The food was cooked a third time. By then everyone in the house was asleep. The brāhmaṇa was offering the cooked rice to Gopāla in meditation when Nimāi came and began to eat that rice. Struck by fate, the brāhmaṇa began to cry out in distress. Then Nimāi said: "O brāhmaṇa, when I was Yaśodā's darling in Vraja, the same thing happened to you then. Now too, drawn by your devotion, I have mercifully shown Myself to you." Seeing his own worshipful Deity, the brāhmaṇa was enchanted with great prema; he counted himself blessed and honored the remaining prasāda. The Lord forbade him to reveal this hidden pastime.

Anubhāṣya.
See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 3.

He bewilders the thief —

38 Another time some thieves found the Lord outside and carried Him off; but He bewildered them and came home riding on their shoulders.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
In His very early childhood Mahāprabhu, decked with gold ornaments, was playing outside the gate of the house. Two thieves put Him on their shoulders and carried Him off, as if to treat Him to sweets. The thieves thought: “We'll take the boy into the forest, kill him and take all his ornaments.” Spreading His māyā, Mahāprabhu made them lose their way, and riding on their shoulders He came back to the gate of His own house. His relatives were running everywhere searching for Him; the thieves set the child down right in front of them and fled. With great care the child was carried into Śacī's courtyard.

Anubhāṣya.
See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 3.

*On Ekādaśī He eats Viṣṇu's naivedya from the house of Hiraṇya and Jagadīśa —*

39 On the day of Ekādaśī, pretending to be ill, He ate the food offered to Viṣṇu in the house of Jagadīśa and Hiraṇya.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
At the house of Jagadīśa and Hiraṇya Paṇḍita an offering (naivedya) for Viṣṇu was being prepared on the day of Ekādaśī. Mahāprabhu wanted to eat that naivedya, and He sent His father to the house of Hiraṇya and Jagadīśa. When Hiraṇya and Jagadīśa heard the boy's request, they were quite astonished and said: “Today is Ekādaśī, and in our house the naivedya for Viṣṇu is being prepared. How did such a small child know this? Surely there is some potency of Viṣṇu (vaiṣṇavī śakti) in Him.” And they sent Him the naivedya to eat. Mahāprabhu had obtained the naivedya on this pretext: “My body is ill; if I eat Viṣṇu's naivedya, the illness will be cured." He fed the naivedya that was brought to the boys and ate some Himself, and so His illness was cured. The house of Hiraṇya and Jagadīśa stood some way from the house of Jagannātha Miśra, about one krośa to the southeast. For a child it is impossible to know what is happening so far away.

Anubhāṣya.
See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 4.

Pastimes befitting a child: stealing, quarrels and so on — 40 He would take the children into the neighbours' houses and steal food to eat, and He would beat the other boys.

Anubhāṣya.
The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Ādi, Chapter 3): "However many friends and relatives live nearby — in their houses He Himself steals every day for fun. In one house He drinks milk, in another He eats rice. Where He finds nothing, He breaks the pots. If there is a child in the house, He makes him cry." Ibid., Chapter 4: "Someone says: 'My son is very small, and He poured water into his ears — now he cries without end.'"

The complaints to Śacī and Śacī's scolding —

41 The children all complained to Śacī, and when she heard them, she scolded her son a little:

Anubhāṣya.
Olāhana: a reproach, a scolding.

42 "Why do You steal? Why do You beat the other children? Why do You go into other people's houses? What do You lack at home?"

The Lord's anger and His rampage at home —

43 Hearing this, the Lord grew angry, went into the house, and smashed every pot in it.

The Lord is consoled, and He feels ashamed —

44 Then Śacī took Him on her lap and comforted Him, and the Lord, knowing He was at fault, felt ashamed.

He strikes His mother and, seeing her faint, brings rare coconuts —

45 Once He struck His mother with His soft little hands, and when He saw her faint, He began to cry.

46 The women said, “Bring her a coconut, and then Your mother will recover.”

Anubhāṣya.

Locana dāsa's Śrī Caitanya-maṅgala (Ādi): “Then a divine woman smiled, took Viśvambhara by the chin and said: ‘Bring your mother two coconuts — then Śacī, your mother, will revive.’ Hearing this, Viśvambhara was delighted and at once brought a pair of coconuts.”

47 He went out and brought back two coconuts, and everyone was astonished at the marvel.

Fun with the girls at bathing time —

48 Sometimes He bathed in the Ganges with the other children, and the girls would come there to worship the gods.

49 When they had bathed in the Ganges and begun their worship, the Lord would come and sit down among them.

The Lord's words to the girls —

50 He would say to the girls, “Worship Me, and I will grant you a boon. Gaṅgā and Durgā are My maidservants, and Maheśa is My servant.”[1]

51 He would smear Himself with sandal paste and put on the flower garlands, then snatch the offerings and eat them — sweets, rice and bananas.

The girls' reply —

52 The girls said angrily, “Listen, Nimāi! By village ties You are a brother to us all.

53 It is not proper for us to say this to You, but do not take the gods’ offerings, and do not misbehave!”

The Lord gives blessings in jest —

54 The Lord said, “I give you all this boon: each of you will have a most handsome husband.

55 He will be learned and refined, young and rich in wealth and grain, and each of you will have seven sons, long-lived and wise.”

56 Hearing this boon, the girls were delighted at heart, but outwardly they scolded Him with feigned anger.

Feigned anger, in the guise of a curse, at a girl who ran away —

57 If some girl ran off with her offering, the Lord would call after her angrily:

58 “If you are stingy and will not give Me your offering, you will get an old husband — and four co-wives!”

Frightened, the girls give their offerings —

59 The girls grew frightened at these words: “Perhaps He knows something, or perhaps some god has entered Him.”

60 So they brought their offerings and held them out before Him, and when He had eaten, He gave them the boon they longed for.

The Lord's sweet mischief delights everyone —

61 In this way He showed His mischief to everyone, yet no one was ever unhappy; it brought them all joy.

The meeting with Lakṣmī-devī, Vallabha's daughter —

62 One day Vallabhācārya's daughter, Lakṣmī by name, bathed in the Ganges and came to worship the gods.

Both rejoice on seeing each other —

63 When the Lord saw her, His heart was drawn to her; and at the sight of the Lord, Lakṣmī felt joy within.

The eternally perfect, natural love of the two and their joy —

64 A natural love awoke in them both, though the mood of childhood still veiled its true form.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Lakṣmī is Bhagavān's eternal consort, and Bhagavān is Lakṣmī's eternal husband. Therefore the eternal love between Them is sāhajika, inborn. That love appeared concealed beneath a childlike mood.

65 Seeing each other, both rejoiced at heart, and on the pretext of worshipping the gods they let their feelings show.

The Lord tells Lakṣmī to worship Him —

66 The Lord said, "Worship Me, for I am Maheśvara, the Supreme Lord. If you worship Me, you will receive the boon you desire."

Lakṣmī carries out the order —

67 Lakṣmī placed sandal paste and flowers on His body, offered Him a garland of mallikā jasmine, and bowed to Him.

The Lord is pleased —

68 Receiving her worship, the Lord began to smile, and by reciting a verse He accepted the sentiment of her heart.

Anubhāṣya.

Vallabhācārya was a royal paṇḍita (rāja-paṇḍita) living in Navadvīpa. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (44): "He who formerly was the great King Janaka, lord of Mithilā, is now Vallabhācārya; he is also considered to be Bhīṣmaka." Śrī Gaurahari first accepted the hand of his daughter, Lakṣmīpriyā Devī.

Lakṣmī-devī: Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (45): "Śrī Jānakī and Rukmiṇī are his daughter named Lakṣmī. She, named Lakṣmī, is described in the Caitanya-carita thus: 'Vallabhācārya's daughter Lakṣmī, who had descended together with Him, was going with her friends to bathe in the river of the gods, and there she came before the Lord's eyes.'"

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 22, verse 25)*

69 "O chaste ones, I know your resolve to worship Me. I accept it, and it deserves to come true." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.22.25)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O chaste maidens, I have understood why you worship, and this gives Me special joy. Your intention is indeed worthy of fulfillment.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa's words. The gopīs, who desired Kṛṣṇa, were keeping the Kātyāyanī vow; He stole their clothes, then gave them back, and seeing their desire to attain Kṛṣṇa, He said:

sādhvyaḥ (O chaste ones)! mad-arcanam (worship for the sake of attaining Me — just this) bhavatīnām (your, the gopīs') saṅkalpaḥ (desire, that is, the feeling in your hearts — though out of shyness you did not speak of it) mayā viditaḥ (is known to Me) anumoditaḥ (and accepted); (therefore) saḥ asau (that desire) satyaḥ (true, fulfilled) bhavitum arhati (deserves to become).

70 After this pastime the two of them went home. Who can fathom the deep pastimes of Caitanya?

Seeing the Lord's mischief, everyone complains —

71 Seeing Caitanya's mischief, everyone, out of love for Him, would come to Śacī and Jagannātha with complaints.

Śacī tries to catch Nimāi —

72 One day Śacī-devī scolded her son and went to catch Him, but He ran away.

Nimāi sits on the discarded pots —

73 Then the Lord Viśvambhara, upholder of the universe, sat down contentedly on the cast-off pots in the refuse pit.

Anubhāṣya.

The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Ādi, Chapter 7): "The Lord made all the discarded pots from Viṣṇu's naivedya His seat and sat on them. His mother came, saw this and cried: 'Alas, alas! It isn't right, my son, to sit in such a place!' The Lord said: 'Everywhere My knowledge is nondual. In these pots there is, at root, no defilement. Pots in which food is cooked for Viṣṇu are never defiled; touching such pots purifies other places too.'"

Thinking her son defiled, Śacī wants to purify Him —

74 Śacī came and said, "Why have You touched these unclean things? Go and bathe in the Ganges — You have made Yourself impure."

The son instructs His mother in the knowledge of Brahman —

75 In reply He spoke to His mother of brahma-jñāna, spiritual knowledge. She was astonished, but still she made Him bathe.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Lord said: "Mother, 'defiled by remnants' and 'undefiled' are merely human notions; in reality there is not a grain of truth in them. In these pots you cooked food for Viṣṇu and offered it to Viṣṇu, so these pots can never be defiled. The soul is an eternally pure reality: what have considerations of defilement and the like to do with it?" Hearing this knowledge of Brahman, His mother was amazed and had Him bathe.

Thus ends the fourteenth chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

At bedtime Śacī sees the gods —

76 Once, as Śacī lay resting with her son, she saw that divine beings had come and filled the house.

77 Śacī said, "Go, my son, and call Your father." At His mother's bidding the Lord went outside.

As He goes at His mother's word, ankle bells ring though He wears none —

78 As He walked, anklets jingled on His feet, and His father and mother were startled to hear them.

Miśra's astonishment —

79 Miśra said, "This is a great wonder! Why do we hear anklets on the child's bare feet?"

Śacī's astonishment at seeing the gods —

80 Śacī said, "I saw another wonder too: radiant divine beings came and filled the courtyard.

81 They raised such a clamour that I could not make out what they said; whom they were praising I can only guess."

Both think of Nimāi's welfare —

82 Miśra said, "Whatever it may be, there is nothing to worry about. All I want is for Viśvambhara to be well."

Seeing the Lord's mischief, Miśra scolds Him severely —

83 One day, seeing his son’s mischief, Miśra scolded Him severely and taught Him what dharma requires.

At night a dream: a brāhmaṇa rebukes Miśra —

84 At night he dreamt that a brāhmaṇa came and spoke to him angrily:

85 “Miśra, you know nothing of who your son truly is. You scold and beat Him because you think of Him as merely your son.”

Miśra's transcendental reply, steeped in affection —

86 Miśra said, “Be He a god, a perfected being or a sage — however great He may be, now He is my son.

87 To raise and teach his son is a father’s own dharma. If I do not teach Him, how will He come to know the heart of dharma?”

The brāhmaṇa's words and Miśra's reply —

88 The brāhmaṇa said, “If He is divine and perfect by nature, His knowledge is complete in itself, and teaching Him is in vain.”

Anubhāṣya.

See Antya 4.174–176. The Lord's words to Uddhava (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.28.4): “What is good and what is bad in duality, which is not reality — and to what extent? Whatever is spoken in words and conceived in the mind is false.” That is, “in the transcendental there is no notion of things as good and bad” (Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Antya 4.174). “In duality, every notion of good and bad is a mere product of the mind; ‘this is good, this is bad’ — all this is error” (Caitanya-caritāmṛta, Antya 4.176). (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.19.45): “To see good and bad qualities is itself the fault; the virtue is to be free of both.” And (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.21.3): “O sinless one, purity and impurity, merit and fault, the auspicious and the inauspicious are prescribed even for things of the same kind — to discern the nature of a substance, for the sake of dharma, for worldly dealings and for the maintenance of life."

Miśra regarded his son Nimāi as untaught and ignorant and wished to teach Him and awaken knowledge in Him. Seeing this, the brāhmaṇa said to Miśra: "Your son is an eternally perfect deity. Yet you take His eternally perfect, natural knowledge for such foolishness, and so your attempt to teach Him proves futile. Therefore it does not become you."

89 Miśra said, "My son may well be Nārāyaṇa; even so, it is a father's dharma to teach his son."

Miśra's pure parental affection for the Lord —

90 So the two of them discussed dharma. Miśra's parental love was pure; he knew nothing else.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu (Paścima-vibhāga, fourth wave): "The sthāyi-bhāva of vātsalya, brought to fullness by vibhāva and the rest, is here called 'vatsala' [rasa]." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.8.45): "Hari, whose glory is sung by the three Vedas, the Upaniṣads, the Sāṅkhya and Yoga scriptures and the Sātvata scriptures — she regarded Him as her own son."

Waking from the dream, Miśra is astonished and tells his friends —

91 At this the brāhmaṇa went away well pleased, and Miśra awoke in utter astonishment.

92 He told the dream to his friends and kinsmen, and all who heard it marvelled.

93 Thus Gauracandra played His childhood pastimes, and day by day His parents' joy grew.

Nimāi takes the chalk in hand —

94 Some days later Miśra placed chalk in his son's hand, and within a few days He had learnt all the letters with their twelve phalās.

Anubhāṣya.

The twelve phalās (subscript signs): the repha, and the ṇa, na, ma, ya, ra, la, va, ṛ, ṝ, ḷ and ḹ phalās.

*These childhood pastimes in brief; they are described in the Caitanya-bhāgavata —*

95 This, in order, is the outline of His childhood pastimes; Vṛndāvana dāsa has described them at length.

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the fourteenth chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

96 Therefore I have outlined the childhood pastimes briefly and, for fear of repeating him, have not told them in detail.

97 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. Vara means both "boon" and "bridegroom"; the girls worshipped the gods to win a good husband (cf. 54–55, 58). ↩

Chapter 15

A Brief Description of the Boyhood Pastimes

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. In the fifteenth chapter the Lord studies grammar with Gaṅgādāsa Paṇḍita, becomes expert in the Pañjī-ṭīkā and forbids His mother to eat grains on Ekādaśī. He tells a story: Viśvarūpa, having taken sannyāsa, called Him to take sannyāsa too, but He did not listen and said He wished to serve His parents — and so Viśvarūpa sent Him back home. The departure of Purandara Miśra[3] from this world, the marriage to Lakṣmī-devī, daughter of Vallabhācārya, and other events are described in brief.

*By worshipping Gaura even the evil-minded gains a good mind — (Hari-bhakti-vilāsa, vilāsa 7, verse 1)*

1 “I worship Caitanya Prabhu. The mere offering of flowers at His lotus feet turns even an evil mind into a good one.” (Hari-bhakti-vilāsa, 7.1)[1]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One need only offer sumanas (jasmine flowers) at His lotus feet, and even a person of evil mind (ku-manāḥ) gains a good mind (sumanas)[4]. That Caitanya Prabhu I worship.

Anubhāṣya.

ku-manāḥ (one whose mind is absorbed in objects other than Kṛṣṇa) yasya (of Caitanya-deva) padābjayoḥ (at the lotus feet) su-mano-'rpaṇa-mātreṇa (merely by offering sumanas, flowers, or else one's own mind that is su, good, intent on serving Kṛṣṇa) su-manastvaṁ (a nature free of other desires, not covered by jñāna, karma and the like, and devoted to serving Kṛṣṇa, kṛṣṇānuśīlana) hi (certainly) yāti (attains), taṁ caitanya-prabhum ahaṁ vande.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

*Among the pastimes of the paugaṇḍa age, the pastime of study is the chief —*

3 Now I shall give a brief account of the Lord's boyhood pastimes. In those years His chief occupation was study.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Mukhya adhyayana: His chief activity was the pastime of study.

*The Lord's very extensive pastimes of the paugaṇḍa age —*

4 "The boyhood pastimes of Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa are vast and enchanting. They begin with His first lessons and end with His marriage."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The charming pastimes of the paugaṇḍa age (boyhood) of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, from the beginning of His schooling to His marriage, are very extensive.

Anubhāṣya.
caitanya-kṛṣṇasya (of Bhagavān Viśvambhara, whose form is non-different from Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa) vidyārambha-mukhā (those whose beginning is the start of schooling) pāṇi-grahaṇāntā (and whose end, conclusion, is His marriage) mano-harā (captivating all hearts) paugaṇḍa-līlā (paugaṇḍa is the period from the fifth year to the tenth; the pastimes in that period) ati-suvistṛtā (are very extensive).

Studying grammar with Paṇḍita Gaṅgādāsa —

5 He studied grammar with Gaṅgādāsa Paṇḍita, and as soon as He heard the sūtras and their commentaries, He knew them all by heart.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

First He received His elementary education from Viṣṇu and Sudarśana, and then He studied grammar with Gaṅgādāsa Paṇḍita.

Mastery within a short time —

6 Within a short time He mastered the Pañjī-ṭīkā, and, young as He was, He defeated students who had studied for years.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Pañjī-ṭīkā: there was a well-known commentary on grammar called the Pañjī-ṭīkā, and Mahāprabhu composed glosses (ṭippanī) on it.

7 In the Caitanya-maṅgala Vṛndāvana dāsa has described in detail the Lord's pastimes as a student.[2]

Anubhāṣya.

See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapters 4, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10.

8 One day the Lord bowed at His mother's feet and said, "Mother, grant Me one gift."

He leads Mother Śacī to keep the Ekādaśī vow —

9 "I will give You whatever You ask," said His mother, and the Lord replied, "Do not eat grain on Ekādaśī."

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Jīva Prabhu in the Bhakti-sandarbha (section 299): "In the Skanda Purāṇa: 'One who eats on Ekādaśī is a killer of his mother, a killer of his father, a killer of his brother and a killer of his guru; he falls from Viṣṇuloka.' Here fasting (nirāhāratva) for Vaiṣṇavas means only giving up the mahā-prasāda grain (anna), since eating anything else is always forbidden to them. In the Agni Purāṇa: 'One should not eat on Ekādaśī; this vow is the great vow of the Vaiṣṇavas.' This shows, first of all, that it is obligatory even for a non-Vaiṣṇava."

Vaiṣṇavas never accept anything but mahā-prasāda, on any day or at any time. But on the day of Ekādaśī, giving up mahā-prasāda is precisely what is called "fasting" (upavāsa).

10 Śacī said, “I will not eat it. You have spoken well.” And from that day on she observed Ekādaśī.

A bride is sought for Viśvarūpa —

11 Then Miśra, seeing that Viśvarūpa had come of age, resolved to find Him a bride and see Him married.

*Viśvarūpa accepts sannyāsa —*

12 When Viśvarūpa heard of this, He fled from home. He took sannyāsa and set out on pilgrimage to the holy places.

The grief of Śacī and Miśra; the Lord consoles them —

13 The news filled the hearts of Śacī and Miśra with sorrow, and the Lord set about consoling His mother and father.

*When a son takes sannyāsa to serve Kṛṣṇa, the families of his mother and father are delivered —*

14 “It is well that Viśvarūpa has taken sannyāsa: He has delivered both His father’s line and His mother’s.

Consoled by the Lord, His parents are content —

15 “And I Myself will serve you both.” Hearing this, His father and mother were content at heart.

The Lord loses consciousness —

16 One day, after chewing betel that had been offered to the Deity, the Lord fell to the ground unconscious.

*The meeting with Viśvarūpa and their conversation about the Lord's sannyāsa —*

17 His father and mother hastily sprinkled water on His face, and when He came to Himself, the Lord told them a wondrous tale.

18 “Viśvarūpa took Me away from here and said to Me, ‘You must take sannyāsa.’

19 “I answered, ‘My father and mother have no one to look after them, and I am still a boy — what do I know of sannyāsa?

20 “ ‘As a householder I shall serve My father and mother, and this will please Lakṣmī-Nārāyaṇa.’

21 “Then Viśvarūpa sent Me back here and asked Me to convey His obeisances to Mother, millions upon millions of them.”

22 Thus Gaurahari revels in many pastimes, and why He does so, I cannot understand.

Miśra's departure —

23 Some time later Miśra left this world, and grief welled up in the hearts of mother and son.

Anubhāṣya.

The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Ādi, Chapter 8): “Some days passed in this way, and then the eternally perfect body of the best of Miśras departed from this world. At Miśra's departure the Lord wept bitterly, as the best of the Raghus wept at Daśaratha's departure. All this is full of the rasa of sorrow; to tell it in detail is painful, so I have told it briefly.”

The Lord performs the rites for His father —

24 Friends and kinsmen came and consoled them both, and the Lord performed His father's funeral rites as the scriptures enjoin.

The wish to enact the pastimes of household life —

25 After a while the Lord thought to Himself, "I have become a householder; now I must take up the duties of household life.

The wife is the home —

26 "Yet without a wife household life has no grace." Thinking thus, He set His mind on marriage.

*[Words of smṛti (of the Lord?)]*

27 "It is not the house that is called the home; the wife is called the home. Together with her one attains all the goals of life."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
It is not the house that is called "home"; the mistress of the house is called "home." Together with her one will enjoy all the goals of human life (puruṣārthas).

Thus ends the fifteenth chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

Anubhāṣya.
gṛham (the dwelling building) gṛhaṁ na, gṛhiṇī (the mistress who presides over the house, one's partner in dharma) eva gṛham ucyate. tayā (with the wife) sahitaḥ (united) (a man) sarvān puruṣārthān (all the four goals — dharma, artha, kāma, mokṣa and the rest) samaśnute (attains). See the Mahābhārata, Śānti-parva, Chapter 144, verse 6.

The meeting with Lakṣmī-devī —

28 One day, by providence, as the Lord was coming home from His studies, He saw the daughter of Vallabhācārya on the way to the Gaṅgā.

Vanamālī Paṇḍita as matchmaker —

29 The love that had been theirs from of old awoke in them both, and, as providence would have it, Vanamālī the matchmaker came to Śacī's house.

Anubhāṣya.

Vanamālī the matchmaker (ghaṭaka) was a brāhmaṇa living in Navadvīpa. He arranged Mahāprabhu's marriage. Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (49): "Viśvāmitra, who was the matchmaker at Śrī Rāma's wedding, and the brāhmaṇa whom Rukmiṇī sent to Śrī Keśava — both are now this Vanamālī, who by his deed attained the title of ācārya."

The match and the Lord's marriage to Lakṣmī-devī —

30 At a sign from Śacī he arranged the match, and her son married Lakṣmī.

*The Caitanya-bhāgavata describes the paugaṇḍa pastimes in detail —*

31 Vṛndāvana dāsa has described all this in detail; here I have set out the boyhood pastimes in outline.

Anubhāṣya.

See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 10. The Caitanya-bhāgavata (Ādi, Chapter 8) describes in more detail the sacred-thread ceremony (upanayana) and the Lord's gift of gold to His mother.

Thus ends the fifteenth chapter of the "Anubhāṣya."

32 The Lord's boyhood holds pastimes of many kinds, and Vṛndāvana dāsa has told them at length.

33 Therefore I have given here no more than a glimpse of them; through the Caitanya-maṅgala they have become famous throughout the world.

34 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Chapter 16

A Brief Description of the Youthful Pastimes

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. The sixteenth chapter describes Mahāprabhu's pastimes in His youth (kaiśora): He teaches, defeats the paṇḍitas, sports in the waters of the Jāhnavī, travels to Vaṅga (East Bengal) to gather funds, holds learned debates there and leads nāma-saṅkīrtana, meets Tapana Miśra, instructs him about sādhya and sādhana, and orders him to go to Vārāṇasī. While Mahāprabhu was conquering Vaṅga, Lakṣmī-devī, on the pretext of a snakebite, departed for Vaikuṇṭha. The Lord returned home and consoled Śacīdevī with knowledge of the truth (tattva-jñāna). Then He married Viṣṇupriyā. He spoke with the digvijayī (conqueror of all directions) Keśava Kāśmīrī, examined his verse on the glory of the Gaṅgā, showed in it five poetic ornaments and excellences and five faults, and crushed his pride. That night the digvijayī poet learned from Sarasvatī who the Lord truly is, and the next morning he surrendered to Him.

Gaurahari, ever intent on mercy —

1 I worship Caitanya Prabhu. The river of His nectarean mercy floods the whole universe, and yet, like every river, it always flows downward — to the lowly.[1]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The river of the nectar of His mercy floods the whole world, yet it always appears to flow downward (nīca-gā). I worship that Lord Caitanya.

Anubhāṣya.

yasya (Caitanyadeva's) kṛpā-sudhā-sarit (river of the nectar of mercy) viśvam (the world, saṁsāra) āplāvayantī (submerging) api, sadā nīca-gā (flowing downward, that is, full of compassion for the humble, who have neither wealth nor anything of their own) bhāti (is manifest), taṁ caitanya-prabhum (I) bhaje.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

Gaurahari, worshipped by Lakṣmī and Sarasvatī —

3 Glory to Caitanya in His youth! When He entered household life, Lakṣmī herself served Him in visible form; and then Sarasvatī, the goddess of speech, worshipped Him as well, taking His victory over the conqueror of all directions as her occasion.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

All glory to the youthful Caitanyadeva! Lakṣmī-devī in person, who had come to His home, worshipped Him, and the goddess of speech worshipped Him on the pretext of the digvijayī's defeat.

Anubhāṣya.

gṛhāśramāt (having entered household life, the gṛhastha-āśrama) mūrti-matyā (embodied) lakṣmyā arcitaḥ (served), atha diśāṁ jayi-jaya-cchalāt (on the pretext of the victory over the digvijayī, the scholar named Keśava Kāśmīrī) vāg-devyā (by Sarasvatī) arcitaḥ (honored) kaiśora-caitanyaḥ (Caitanya at the age of kiśora) jīyāt.

*The pastimes of youth (kaiśora) —*

4 Here, in outline, are the pastimes of His youth. He began to teach students of His own.

Anubhāṣya.

Kaiśora*. The age from eleven to fifteen years is called kiśora; kaiśora means what belongs to that age.

Nimāi's teaching amazes everyone —

5 He taught constantly, with hundreds of students around Him, and all who heard His explanations were amazed.

*The paṇḍitas are pleased even when defeated by Nimāi —*

6 In every branch of learning every paṇḍita met defeat at His hands, yet His manner was so courteous that no one was hurt.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
The Lord defeated the paṇḍitas in every śāstra, but His humility was so skillful that the paṇḍitas were not hurt.

7 With His students He played all kinds of pranks, and they sported merrily in the waters of the Gaṅgā.

*The journey to East Bengal and the launching of nāma-saṅkīrtana —*

8 After some time the Lord went to East Bengal, and wherever He went He had the people take up the chanting of the holy name.

Hearing of the Lord's fame for learning, many students come to study —

9 Seeing the power of His learning, hundreds of students came in wonder to study with Him.

*Tapana Miśra meets the Lord and asks about the truth of sādhya and sādhana —*

10 In that land lived a brāhmaṇa named Tapana Miśra, who could not settle what the goal of life is and how it is reached.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Sādhya* and sādhana. What one attains through sādhana is called sādhya, the goal. The means by which one attains the goal is called sādhana.

*The many views of many sages in many śāstras bewilder the mind —*

11 Many scriptures and many opinions had confused his mind, and he could not decide which goal is highest and which means is best.

Anubhāṣya.

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 7.13.8): "…He should not study many books… he should not live by expounding [the scriptures]…" That is, one should not master many books and arts, nor make a living by expounding the śāstras. Whoever seeks the highest good (whoever wishes to serve the Lord) must first give up this temptation. (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, Pūrva, second wave.)

(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.21.30, 36): "People whose minds are bewildered by such flowery speech, who are proud and very greedy, find no taste even in talk about Me. The Veda in sound is very hard to understand; it is manifest in the vital air, the senses and the mind; it is boundless, deep and unfathomable, like the ocean."

This means the following. The merchants of the śāstras, who support the karma-kāṇḍa and the jñāna-kāṇḍa, speak words honey-sweet and flowery (charming), yet hostile to selfless devotion to the Lord, full of envy and aimed at enjoying fruits. Hearing or reading such words, inexperienced and fickle people of weak faith cannot grasp the supreme greatness and beauty of devotion to Kṛṣṇa and love for Kṛṣṇa, the jīva's eternal sādhana and eternal sādhya. Turned away [from the Lord] since time without beginning, they very easily submit to the karmīs and jñānīs, and lose the mercy of the pure devotee of Kṛṣṇa, the jīva's well-wisher, who is free from envy. So, lacking the pious merit (sukṛti) that turns one toward bhakti, they are flung far from pure bhakti, the only path to eternal good, and at last reach endless misfortune and the utmost misery. When Śrī Gaurasundara in Vārāṇasī expounded the truth of sādhya and sādhana in answer to the questions of Śrī Sanātana Gosvāmī Prabhu, Tapana Miśra was present there. He heard the Lord and found the answer to his doubts. For the good of ignorant jīvas who follow many śāstras and many gurus, Mahāprabhu taught a lesson through the example of His devotee Tapana Miśra (by resolving his doubts).

In a dream a brāhmaṇa advises him to ask Nimāi Paṇḍita about the truth —

12 In a dream a brāhmaṇa said to him, “Listen, Tapana. Go to Nimāi Paṇḍita.

13 He will settle for you the goal and the means. He is the Lord Himself — have no doubt of it.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The śāstras are many, and what each of them defines as sādhya and as sādhana turns out to differ. Whoever sets out to read many śāstras cannot decide which sādhya is best and which sādhana is best, and his mind falls into confusion. Tapana Miśra's mind was confused in just this way, and so in a dream he was told to go to Nimāi Paṇḍita and become certain of sādhya and sādhana from Him. In the dream Miśra was also told: “Have no doubt: Nimāi Paṇḍita is the Lord (Īśvara) Himself.”

He tells the Lord about his dream —

14 After this dream Miśra came to the Lord’s feet and told Him all that he had dreamt.

*The Lord proclaims Hari's holy name to be both sādhya and sādhana —*

15 Pleased with him, the Lord explained the goal and the means, and instructed him: “Chant the holy name.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Lord said: “Neither knowledge of Brahman as undifferentiated oneness nor enjoyment (bhukti) in heaven and other worlds is the goal (sādhya) of the jīva. The jīva's only goal is love for Kṛṣṇa. Karma and jñāna are not the sādhana, the means of attaining that goal. The only means of attaining it is pure bhakti that takes shelter of Kṛṣṇa's name.”

The Lord orders him to go to Kāśī —

16 He wished to live with the Lord in Navadvīpa, but the Lord told him, “Go to Vārāṇasī.

17 There we shall meet again.” Receiving this order, Miśra went to Kāśī.

*The good fortune to come: serving the Lord in Kāśī, and hearing from the Lord's own lips, in answer to Śrī Sanātana's questions, the full resolution of the truth of sādhya and sādhana —*

18 The Lord’s pastimes are endless and beyond my understanding. Why did He send Miśra away from His company to Kāśī?

Good for all the people of East Bengal —

19 In this way the Lord did good to all the people of East Bengal: giving them the holy name He made them devotees, and teaching them He made them paṇḍitas.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Giving the name”: that is, by giving Kṛṣṇa's name — “Hare Kṛṣṇa Hare Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Hare Hare / Hare Rāma Hare Rāma Rāma Rāma Hare Hare” — the Lord made the people of Vaṅga devotees, and by teaching them the śāstras He made many of them paṇḍitas.

20 While the Lord enjoyed these many pastimes in East Bengal, here in Navadvīpa Lakṣmī grieved in separation from Him.

Bitten by the black snake of separation from the Lord, Lakṣmī departs from the manifest pastimes —

21 The snake of separation from the Lord bit Lakṣmī, and by its poison she passed from this world.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The pain of separation from the Lord took the form of a snake and bit Lakṣmī. Then she went to the “other world” (para-loka), that is, to her own abode Vaikuṇṭha, the best of all worlds.

The Lord, who knows all hearts, returns home —

22 Dwelling in every heart, the Lord knew of it; and, aware of Śacī's grief, He returned home.

Hearing the knowledge of truth from the Lord's lips, Śacī finds her grief eased —

23 He came home with much wealth and many followers, and by speaking of the truth He freed Śacī from her grief.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Telling the truth": another reading has "with the net of truth." The Lord cast a net of knowledge of the truth — "'Who is whose husband, whose son…,' that is, who is anyone's husband, who anyone's son, who anyone's wife" — and freed Śacī from her grief.

The Lord delights in learning —

24 Again He gathered His students and delighted in the play of learning; by the power of His knowledge He conquered everyone and showed a proud spirit.

*Marriage to Śrī Viṣṇupriyā, daughter of the royal paṇḍita Sanātana, and the defeat of Keśava Kāśmīrī —*

25 Then came His marriage to Viṣṇupriyā Ṭhākurāṇī, and after that the Lord's victory over the digvijayī, the conqueror of all directions.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The digvijayī was a paṇḍita from Kashmir named Keśava Miśra. After being taught by Mahāprabhu he became an ācārya in the sampradāya of Śrī Nimbāditya and wrote a gloss (ṭippanī) on the commentaries Nimbāditya composed, the Vedānta-pārijāta and others.

Anubhāṣya.

The digvijayī was a paṇḍita from Kashmir named Keśava. At that time he was traveling through various parts of Bhāratavarṣa, intent on conquering the paṇḍitas by his genius, and at last he came to Gauḍa-deśa, to Navadvīpa. After his defeat by Śrī Gaurasundara he came to know who Śrīman Mahāprabhu truly is, and in order to serve the Lord he entered the Nimbārka sampradāya. He wrote a gloss (ṭippanī) called Kaustubha-prabhā on the Vedānta-kaustubha, Śrīnivāsācārya's commentary on the Pārijāta-bhāṣya that Nimbārka composed on the Vedānta-darśana. The Bhakti-ratnākara, in its twelfth wave, says: "The disciplic succession of Nimbāditya: 1. Śrīnivāsācārya, 2. Viśvācārya, 3. Puruṣottama, 4. Vilāsa, 5. Svarūpa, 6. Mādhava, 7. Balabhadra, 8. Padma, 9. Śyāma, 10. Gopāla, 11. Kṛpā, 12. Devācārya, 13. Sundara Bhaṭṭa, 14. Padmanābha, 15. Upendra, 16. Rāmacandra, 17. Vāmana, 18. Kṛṣṇa, 19. Padmākara, 20. Śravaṇa, 21. Bhūri, 22. Mādhava, 23. Śyāma, 24. Gopāla, 25. Balabhadra, 26. Gopīnātha, 27. Keśava, 28. Gokula, 29. Keśava Kāśmīrī." And again in the Bhakti-ratnākara: "He chanted the mantra of the goddess Sarasvatī; all learning was revealed to him, and his power grew. Having conquered all directions, he became famous as the 'digvijayī.' He was from Kashmir, a most cultured brāhmaṇa. Giving up everything, he departed by the Lord's order. Having described līlā-bhoga (?), under the name 'Laghu-Keśava.'"[7] See the Vaiṣṇava-mañjuṣā (issue 1).

Honor to Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa —

26 Vṛndāvana dāsa has described all this at length, but he did not set out clearly the merits and faults of the digvijayī's verse.

Examining the merits and faults of Keśava Kāśmīrī's verse —

27 Bowing to him, I shall tell of that analysis; hearing it, the digvijayī cursed himself.

*How the digvijayī was defeated. The digvijayī arrives —*

28 One moonlit night the Lord sat with His students on the bank of the Gaṅgā, discussing points of learning.

29 Just then the digvijayī came there and, after offering his prayers to the Gaṅgā, met the Lord.

*The Lord honors others (mānada-dharma) —*

30 The Lord received him with respect and gave him a seat, but the digvijayī spoke with disdain in his heart:

*Out of pride the digvijayī shows contempt for the Lord —*

31 “You teach grammar, and Your name is Nimāi Paṇḍita. People praise Your skill in the science that children learn.

Anubhāṣya.

Bālya-śāstra means grammar, because the accepted rule is to study grammar for a knowledge of the language before studying any other śāstra.

32 Of the grammars, I know, You teach the Kalāpa, and I have heard of Your students’ debates on its tricky points.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“You teach the grammar called Kalāpa. And I have heard that your students hold discussions (saṁlāpa), that is, special conversations, about the phāṅki of grammar, that is, about intricate questions.”

The Lord's humble words and His request to praise the Gaṅgā —

33 The Lord said, “Yes, I teach grammar — or so I like to think. But My students do not understand, and I cannot explain it to them.

34 “How far above Me you are! You are expert in every śāstra and in poetry, while I am only a child, a new student.

35 “I should like to hear some of your poetry. Be kind enough, if you will, to describe the Gaṅgā.”

*The digvijayī praises the Gaṅgā in a hundred verses —*

36 Hearing this, the brāhmaṇa proudly began, and within one ghaṭī he described the Gaṅgā in a hundred verses.[2]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Ghaṭī eke": within one ghaṭikā[6].

The Lord praises him and shows him respect —

37 When He had heard them, the Lord honoured him highly: "There is no other poet in the world like you!

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Karila sat-kāra": He showed respect.

38 "Who has the power to understand your verses? You alone know their meaning well — you, or Sarasvatī.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

"Kiṁbā": that is, kibā, "or."

The request to explain one verse of the hymn —

39 "If you would explain the meaning of one verse yourself, everyone here would be delighted to hear it."

*The Lord, whose memory is beyond this world (śrutidhara), recites one verse out of the hundred —*

40 The digvijayī asked which verse he should explain, and the Lord recited one of the hundred.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

He asked which verse he should explain.

Keśava Kāśmīrī's verse on the glory of the Gaṅgā —

41 "This greatness of the Gaṅgā ever shines beyond compare, for she is blessed by her birth from the lotus feet of Śrī Viṣṇu. Like a second Śrī Lakṣmī, she receives the worship of gods and men; and upon the head of Bhavānī's husband she reigns, endowed with wondrous qualities."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The glory of this Gaṅgā-devī always shines, because she is supremely blessed. She was born from the lotus feet of Śrī Viṣṇu, and, like a second form of Lakṣmī-devī, she is the one whose feet gods and men worship. Endowed with wonderful qualities, she has risen above Mahādeva, the husband of Bhavānī.

Anubhāṣya.

gaṅgāyāḥ idam mahattvam satatam (always) nitarām (beyond doubt) ābhāti (shines); yat (because) eṣā (the Gaṅgā) śrī-viṣṇoś caraṇa-kamalotpatti-subhagā (she was born [utpatti, creation] from the lotus feet of Śrī Viṣṇu, that is, from the Lord's lotus feet, and by this her bhaga, her majesty, is beautiful; such is she), dvitīya-śrī-lakṣmīr iva (like a second Kamalā, endowed with beauty) sura-naraiḥ (by gods, men and others) arcya-caraṇā (she whose feet are served), bhavānī-bhartuḥ (of Bhavānī's bhartā, husband, that is, of Giriśa, Bhava) śirasi (on the head) yā (she who, the Gaṅgā) vibhavati (reigns); ataḥ (therefore) (she is) adbhuta-guṇā (endowed with wonderful qualities).

42 When the Lord said, “Explain this verse,” the digvijayī asked Him in astonishment:

*Seeing the Lord's power of memory, the digvijayī is amazed and asks —*

43 “I recited those verses like a storm wind. How could You learn one of them by heart?”

The Lord's humble reply —

44 The Lord said, “By the boon of a deity you are the best of poets; and by the boon of a deity another may become a śruti-dhara, one who holds all that he hears.”

*The digvijayī's explanation —*

45 Well pleased, the brāhmaṇa explained the verse. Then the Lord said, “Tell Me, what are the merits and faults of this verse?”

At the Lord's request he declares his verse faultless and describes its merits —

46 The brāhmaṇa said, “No fault appears in it. Its merits are the ornament of simile and some alliteration.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Upamā-alaṅkāra, the ornament of simile: to display a poetic excellence by giving a comparison (upamā). Anuprāsa, alliteration: the art of sound shown in the last line by placing many bh's close together.

The Lord's words and the poet's reply —

47 The Lord said, “May I say something, if you will not be angry? Tell Me what faults there are in this verse of yours.

The Lord praises him and asks him to examine the merits and faults of the verse —

48 “Your words, full of genius, please even the gods; yet if they are examined well, both merits and faults come to light.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The mental power to arrange speech in ever new ways is called pratibhā, poetic genius. By showing such a mind in this verse you have pleased even the gods; that is, your genius is richly displayed in these words. But if the verse is examined well, both its merits and its faults will come to light.

49 “So let us examine the verse carefully.” The poet replied, “The verse You have recited is the very essence of the Vedas.

*Thinking the Lord ignorant of the taste of poetry, the digvijayī mocks Him —*

50 “You are only a grammarian; You have not studied poetics. What can You know of the essence of this poetry?”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

“Vaiyākaraṇa”: that is, a grammarian, expert (only) in the learning meant for children and unable to examine poetics (alaṅkāra) and other śāstras.

The Lord's words —

51 The Lord said, “That is just why I ask you. Examine its merits and faults and explain them to Me.

52 “I have not studied poetics, but I have heard it taught, and so I see many faults and merits in this verse.”

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
“I have not studied poetics, but I have heard about it from the lips of paṇḍitas. That is why I see many faults and merits in this verse.”

At the poet's request the Lord examines the merits and faults of the verse —

53 “Come, then,” said the poet, “tell me — what merits and faults?” The Lord replied, “I shall tell you; listen, and do not be angry.

Five faults and five merits —

54 “In this verse there are five faults and five ornaments. I shall name them in order; listen, and judge for yourself.

The five faults of the verse. The first fault explained —

55 “In two places the predicate is badly placed, and there are three more faults: a contradictory sense, a broken order, and a return to a finished sentence.[3]

56 “In this verse the main predicate is ‘the greatness of the Gaṅgā’, while the subject, expressed by the word idam, ‘this’, comes after it.[4]

57 “You stated the predicate first and the subject afterwards, and so the meaning of the verse has suffered.

58 ‘One should not state the predicate without first stating the subject; for nothing that has not found its footing can stand anywhere.’ (Ekādaśī-tattva, 13)[5]

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 2.74.

The second fault explained —

59 “In dvitīya-śrī-lakṣmī, ‘a second Śrī Lakṣmī’, the predicate is ‘being second’; but in the compound it has become secondary, and the meaning of the word is lost.

60 “The word dvitīya is the predicate, but it has fallen into a compound, and so the point — that the Gaṅgā is equal to Lakṣmī — is destroyed.

61 “This fault is called avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa. Now listen attentively to another.

The third fault explained —

62 “With great satisfaction you used the words bhavānī-bhartuḥ, ‘of Bhavānī’s husband’. But this is a grave fault, called viruddha-mati-kṛt: such words suggest a contradictory sense.

63 “The word Bhavānī means the wife of Mahādeva. When you name her husband, it sounds as if she had another husband.

64 “‘The husband of Śiva’s wife’ sounds absurd; by the rules of the śāstra, words that suggest a contradictory sense are faulty.

Another example of the same —

65 “If one says, ‘Give the gift into the hand of the brāhmaṇa’s wife’s husband,’ the very words make one think of a second husband.

The fourth fault explained —

66 “The sentence is complete with the verb vibhavati, ‘reigns’, and then you add another epithet, adbhuta-guṇā, ‘endowed with wondrous qualities’. This return to a finished sentence is the fault called punar-ātta.

The fifth fault explained[8] —

67 “In three lines I see matchless alliteration, but in one line there is none; this fault is called bhagna-krama.

The five faults ruin the glory of the verse —

68 “Though the verse has five ornaments, these five faults have ruined it.

69 “Even if a verse had ten ornaments, a single fault would bring them all to nothing.

A comparison —

70 “It is like a beautiful body adorned with jewels: one spot of white leprosy disgraces it.

Anubhāṣya.
Vigīta: condemned.

71 ‘As a body, though beautiful and adorned, is made unsightly by a single spot of white leprosy, so poetry rich in rasa and ornaments loses all its charm if it has a fault.’ (Bharata Muni)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
A beautiful, adorned body becomes unsightly when it has a patch of white leprosy (śvitra). In the same way poetry endowed with rasa and ornaments becomes unsightly if it has a fault.

Anubhāṣya.
vibhūṣitam (fully adorned) sundaram (charming) api vapuḥ (body) yathā ekena śvitreṇa (by the disease called white leprosy) durbhagam (bereft of beauty, sullied) syāt, tathā rasālaṅkāra-vat kāvyam (rasa: śṛṅgāra and the rest; alaṅkāra: anuprāsa, upamā and the rest; kāvya endowed with them, speech whose soul is rasa) cet (if) doṣa-yuk bhavati, tathā durbhagam (bereft of beauty) jñeyam.

The five merits of the verse —

72 "Now hear the analysis of the five ornaments: two are verbal ornaments and three are ornaments of meaning.

The first and second merits, both ornaments of sound —

73 "The first verbal ornament is the alliteration in three lines; the second is the seeming repetition (punar-uktavad-ābhāsa) in the words śrī-lakṣmī.

74 "In the first line there is a row of five *ta*s, and in the third, five *ra*s.

75 "In the fourth line four *bha*s appear; this is the verbal ornament of alliteration.

76 "The words śrī and lakṣmī name one and the same thing; it seems almost a repetition, yet it is not one.

77 "For if śrī-lakṣmī is taken as 'Lakṣmī endowed with beauty (śrī)', the two words differ in meaning; and this seeming repetition is a kind of verbal ornament.

The third, fourth and fifth merits, all three ornaments of sense —

78 "The words lakṣmīr iva, 'like Lakṣmī', are an ornament of meaning: a simile. There is another ornament of meaning, called virodhābhāsa, apparent contradiction.

79 "Everyone knows that lotuses are born in the Gaṅgā; but to say that the Gaṅgā is born in a lotus is a flat contradiction.

80 “Yet here the Gaṅgā has her origin in the lotus feet of Viṣṇu, and this ornament of contradiction is wonderful indeed.

81 “The Gaṅgā appears by the inconceivable potency of the Lord, so there is no contradiction here — only the semblance of one.

Evidence of Kṛṣṇa's inconceivable energy (a verse spoken by the Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya Himself) —

82 ‘The lotus is born in water; nowhere is water born from a lotus. But with the slayer of Mura it is the reverse: from His lotus feet the great river was born.’

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

A lotus is born only in water; water is never born from a lotus. But here is the wonder: in Śrī Kṛṣṇa the opposite is seen — from His lotus feet the great river Gaṅgā was born.

Anubhāṣya.

ambuni (in water) ambujam (the lotus) jātam (is born); kvacit (anywhere) api ambujāt (from a lotus) ambu (water) na jātam; (but) mura-bhidi (in Murāri, Kṛṣṇa) tad-viparītam (the opposite, the reversal of the [usual] relation of cause and effect) (is seen), yataḥ (from Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet) mahā-nadī (the Gaṅgā) jātā (flowed forth).

83 “The greatness of the Gaṅgā is what is to be proved, and the proof of it is her birth from the feet of Viṣṇu; this is the ornament called anumāna, inference.

84 “These are the five obvious faults and the five ornaments; examined more finely, they would be countless.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The verse “Mahattvaṁ gaṅgāyāḥ” has five ornaments (alaṅkāra), which are its merits, and five faults (doṣa). In two places the fault is avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa (the vidheya, the new statement, is not properly set apart), and in three more there are the faults viruddha-mati (creating a contradictory idea), punarukti (repetition) and bhagna-krama (broken order).

The first avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa fault is this. The main vidheya of the verse is the glory of the Gaṅgā, and the word idam, “this,” is the anuvāda (what is being spoken of, the already known). Here “the glory of the Gaṅgā” is written first and the word idam after it, and that is against the rules. If the anuvāda, the known subject, is not written first, the meaning suffers.

The second avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa fault is this. In the expression dvitīya-śrī-lakṣmīr iva, “like a second Śrī Lakṣmī,” the vidheya, the unknown, is “secondness” (dvitīyatva). It was placed first and made part of a compound (samāsa), and so the meaning became subordinate and was lost. For the point of the meaning was to show [the Gaṅgā's] equality with Lakṣmī, and the faulty compound destroyed it.

The third fault, viruddha-mati-kṛt, is seen in the word bhavānī-bhartuḥ, “of Bhavānī's husband.” In such usage the word Bhavānī means Mahādeva's wife, and the word bhavānī-bhartā gives rise to another idea, that of a second husband of Bhavānī. Such words taint poetry with the fault viruddha-mati-kṛt.

The fourth fault is this. The sentence ended with the verb vibhavati, “reigns,” and after it the epithet adbhuta-guṇā, “endowed with wonderful qualities,” is given. This is the fault punar-ātta (returning to a finished sentence).

The fifth fault is bhagna-krama. Three lines, the first, third and fourth, have alliteration on t, r and bh, but the second line has none. That is the fault bhagna-krama.

The verse has five ornaments and merits, yet these five faults have ruined it. If a verse has ten ornaments and even one fault, it is condemned (vigīta), like a beautiful body adorned with ornaments but marked by a white patch of leprosy.

Now I will speak of the merits. This verse of yours has two ornaments of sound (śabdālaṅkāra) and three ornaments of sense (arthālaṅkāra). (1) The alliteration in three lines is an ornament of sound. (2) The expression “Śrī Lakṣmī” is not the fault of repetition (punarukti): it is the ornament of sound punarukta-vad-ābhāsa, apparent repetition. If “Śrī” and “Lakṣmī” are taken as one and the same, there is no fault at all. If the sense is taken as “Lakṣmī endowed with beauty (śrī),” the meanings do differ, and there is no repetition: it is a special ornament of sound, punarukta-vad-ābhāsa. (3) The expression lakṣmīr iva, “like Lakṣmī," is an ornament of sense, the simile (upamālaṅkāra). (4) There is one more ornament of sense, virodhābhāsa, apparent contradiction, in what is said of the Gaṅgā's birth from Viṣṇu's lotus feet. A lotus is born from water, but here water is born from a lotus; such contradictory words give rise to the ornament of contradiction (virodha). But the Gaṅgā appeared by the inconceivable energy of the Lord, so there is no contradiction here at all, only an "apparent contradiction," and that is the ornament. (5) The words that prove the sādhya, the glory of the Gaṅgā, that is, the words about her birth from Viṣṇu's feet, are the ornament anumāna, inference.

The Lord, who sees no faults in others, encourages the poet —

85 "Your genius and your poetic gift come by the grace of a deity; but into poetry composed without reflection faults are bound to creep.

Anubhāṣya.

If poetry is not examined, its faults are certainly not easy to see[9].

86 "With reflection, poetry becomes flawless, and when it is adorned with ornaments, its meaning sparkles."

*Amazed, the digvijayī reflects —*

87 Hearing the Lord's words, the digvijayī was astonished. No word came from his mouth; his genius was struck dumb.

88 He wanted to say something, but no answer would come, and in his perplexity he thought:

89 "A schoolboy has robbed me of my wits! Surely Sarasvatī is angry with me.

He concludes that the goddess of speech gave the Lord's extraordinary explanation —

90 “No human being could give such an explanation. Sarasvatī herself must be speaking through Nimāi’s mouth.”

The poet's words to the Lord —

91 Thinking thus, he said, “Listen, Nimāi Paṇḍita: Your explanation has astonished me.

92 “You have not studied poetics, and You have no training in the śāstras. How could You bring out all these meanings?”

93 Hearing this, Mahāprabhu, who dearly loved a jest, read his heart and answered playfully:

The Lord names Sarasvatī as the cause of His skillful explanation —

94 “Whether My analysis of the śāstras is good or bad, I Myself do not know. I only speak the words that Sarasvatī makes Me speak.”

*The digvijayī feels hurt by Sarasvatī —*

95 Hearing this, the digvijayī concluded, “The goddess has defeated me through a child.

96 “Today, with japa and meditation, I shall lay this before her: through a child she has humiliated me so!”

The author points out the real cause of what happened —

97 In truth, it was Sarasvatī who had him compose a faulty verse, and when it was examined she clouded his intelligence.

The students laugh at the poet's defeat, and the Lord stops them —

98 Then all the students began to laugh, but the Lord checked them and said to the poet:

The Lord honors the poet —

99 "You are a great paṇḍita, the crest-jewel of poets, for such poetry flows from your lips.

100 "Your poetry is like the stream of the Gaṅgā's waters; nowhere do I see another poet like you.

There are faults even in the poetry of Jayadeva, Kālidāsa and Bhavabhūti — 101 "Even in the poetry of Bhavabhūti, Jayadeva and Kālidāsa faults appear.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhavabhūti, or Śrīkaṇṭha, wrote the Sanskrit plays Mālatī-mādhava, Uttara-carita, Vīra-carita and others. He lived in the reign of King Bhoja. A resident of Padmanagara, he was the son of Nīlakaṇṭha and the grandson of a śrotriya brāhmaṇa of the Kāśyapa gotra named Bhaṭṭa Gopāla.

Kālidāsa was a great poet, one of the renowned "nine jewels" at the court of Emperor Vikramāditya. He wrote the Raghu-vaṁśa, Kumāra-sambhava, Abhijñāna-śakuntala, Megha-dūta and others, some thirty or forty Sanskrit epic poems, plays and works on other subjects.

Jayadeva: see Ādi 13.42.

The true merit is the very gift of composing verse —

102 "I count such analysis of faults and merits a small thing; what I praise is their power to compose poetry.

The Lord's humble words —

103 “Do not take My childish pranks to heart. I am not even fit to be your student.

The Lord courteously takes leave of him —

104 “Go to your lodging today; tomorrow we shall meet again, and I shall hear you expound the śāstras.”

At night the poet worships Sarasvatī —

105 So the two went home, and that night the poet worshipped Sarasvatī.

Instructed by Sarasvatī, he recognizes the Lord as the Supreme Lord Himself —

106 In the night Sarasvatī instructed him, and he came to know that Nimāi was the Lord Himself.

In the morning he takes shelter at the Lord's feet, and the Lord bestows mercy on him —

107 In the morning he came and took shelter at the Lord’s feet, and the Lord showed him mercy and cut his bonds.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Bandhana, bondage: the bondage of māyā, that is, pride in learning.

Thus ends the sixteenth chapter of the “Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.”

*The digvijayī's pious merit (sukṛti) —*

108 The digvijayī was fortunate, and his life bore fruit: through his learning he attained the feet of Mahāprabhu.

Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the sixteenth chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”

109 Vṛndāvana dāsa has described all these pastimes; what little I have done here is to set out certain points more fully.

110 The pastimes of Caitanya Gosāñi are a stream of nectar: whoever hears them finds every sense fully satisfied.

111 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Notes

1. A play on words: nīca-gā means both “flowing downward” and “going to the lowly”. ↩
2. A ghaṭī (ghaṭikā) is a measure of time of twenty-four minutes. ↩
3. The names of the faults (doṣa) in the original: avimṛṣṭa-vidheyāṁśa, “the predicate not duly considered”, that is, what is asserted about the subject is badly placed (vv. 56–61); viruddha-mati-kṛt, “that which suggests a contradictory sense” (vv. 62–65); punar-ātta, “taken up again”: a return to a sentence already completed by its verb (v. 66); bhagna-krama, “broken order” (v. 67). ↩
4. Vidheya, the predicate, is what is asserted about a thing, the new matter for the hearer; anuvāda, the subject, is the thing itself, already known. ↩
5. The same verse is quoted in Ādi 2.74 (there anuktvā tu, here anuktvaiva, with the same meaning). ↩
6. A ghaṭikā is twenty-four minutes. ↩
7. Unclear passage: the edition reads “বর্ণি লীলাভোগ ‘লঘুকেশব’ নামেতে” (literally “having described līlā-bhoga, under the name ‘Laghu-Keśava’”); the meaning of līlā-bhoga and of the construction is unclear, and the translation is tentative. ↩
8. The edition has “পঞ্চ দোষের” (“of the five faults”), apparently for “পঞ্চম দোষের” (“of the fifth fault”). ↩
9. The verse translation reads otherwise: “into poetry composed without reflection faults are bound to creep.” ↩

A Brief Description of the Pastimes of Young Manhood

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya

Summary. In the seventeenth chapter all of Mahāprabhu's pastimes, from His sixteenth year until He accepted sannyāsa, are written briefly, in the form of sūtras. The reason is that Vṛndāvana dāsa Ṭhākura, the incarnation of Vyāsa, has described all these pastimes in detail in the Śrī Caitanya-bhāgavata. But wherever Vṛndāvana dāsa Ṭhākura left something out, this chapter describes it more fully. The mango festival and Mahāprabhu's conversation with the Kāzī are told in particular detail. At the end the author shows that the son of Yaśodā, having become the son of Śacī, tasted the four kinds of devotional moods. To taste the sweetness of the rasa of Rādhā's prema, He accepted Rādhā's bhāva and took up the mood of the gopīs exclusively. Of all the kinds of devotional moods, the mood of the gopīs is the best, because in the mood of the gopīs no one but Vrajendranandana appears as worthy of worship. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa playfully became four-armed, the gopīs merely offered Him obeisance and withdrew: the ordinary mood of the gopīs rejects every form other than Kṛṣṇa's form, and no more. But the bhāva of Śrīmatī Rādhikā, the crown jewel of the gopīs, is the highest of all. On seeing Rādhā, Śrī Kṛṣṇa could not keep His four-armed form. Nanda, the lord of Vraja, is in this (Gaura) pastime the father, Jagannātha; Yaśodā, the queen of Vraja, is Śacīmātā. Caitanya Gosāñi is the son of Nanda Himself: He is not a prakāśa or a vilāsa of Nanda's son, but Nanda's son in person. Nityānanda Prabhu has three moods, vātsalya, dāsya and sakhya; Advaita Prabhu has two, sakhya and dāsya. All the others serve Mahāprabhu each according to his former position. The Truth is one: now Kṛṣṇa in a dark form, the flute at His lips, sporting among the cowherds; now a brāhmaṇa; now, in the dress of a sannyāsī, Kṛṣṇa Caitanya in a golden form. The apparent contradiction is this: He who is Kṛṣṇa becomes a gopī. This idea is certainly very hard to grasp, but by Kṛṣṇa's inconceivable potency even this is possible. Arguing about it is futile, for to apply logic to what is inconceivable is the height of foolishness. At the end of this chapter Kavirāja Gosvāmī, following what Vyāsa did in the Bhāgavata, has separately recapitulated the seventeen chapters of the Ādi-līlā one by one.

By Gaura's grace even the impure become pure —

1 "I worship Śrī Caitanya, whose deeds are free and wondrous. By His grace even the yavanas, chanting the names of Kṛṣṇa, become saintly."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

I worship Śrī Caitanyadeva, whose deeds are free and wonderful: by His grace even the yavanas become righteous and chant the name of Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

yat (of Caitanyadeva) prasādataḥ (by the compassion) yavanāḥ (the mlecchas) kṛṣṇa-nāma-prajalpakāḥ (being firmly devoted to chanting the name) sumanāyante (behave like people of good mind, sumanas), taṁ svairādbhutehaṁ (Him whose deeds are free, independent, and wonderful, beyond this world — Him who has the power to overstep the injunctions of the smārtas) caitanyam ahaṁ vande.

2 Glory, glory to Śrī Caitanya! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura!

3 I have summed up the pastimes of His youth; now I shall outline, in order, those of His young manhood.

Various pastimes in youth —

4 "In His young manhood Gaura shone in His play — in learning and beauty, in fine attire and its enjoyments, in dance and kīrtana, and in the gift of love and the holy name."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Through learning, beauty, fine dress, enjoyment, dancing, kīrtana, and the gift of prema and of the holy name, Gauracandra shone in His youth.

Anubhāṣya.

gauraḥ yauvane (when His fifteenth year had passed and youth appeared) vidyā-saundarya-sad-veśa-sambhoga-nṛtya-kīrtanaiḥ (with knowledge of the supreme goal, with beauty, with the dress of a sādhu, with the enjoyment of garments, garlands, sandalwood paste and the like, with dancing, kīrtana and so on) prema-nāma-pradānaiḥ (by distributing Kṛṣṇa's name together with prema) dīvyati (sports).

The pastimes of youth —

5 As He entered young manhood, ornaments graced every limb of His body, and He wore splendid clothes and finery, garlands and sandal paste.

6 In the pride of His learning He took no account of anyone; He defeated all the paṇḍitas and began to teach.

7 Under the pretext of a disorder of the vital airs (vāyu), He revealed His love, and with the devotees He enjoyed many pastimes.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Having finished His studies and His teaching, Gauracandra, to preach pure devotion, pretended for some days to suffer from a disorder of vāyu (the air in the body). Everywhere He explained Kṛṣṇa's name to His students and showed the connection with Kṛṣṇa in every sūtra of grammar — and in this way He began to turn them away from their studies.

Anubhāṣya.

See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 12.

Meeting Īśvara Purī in Gayā, and the pastime of taking initiation —

8 Then the Lord went to Gayā, and there He met Īśvara Purī.

Anubhāṣya.

See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 17.

9 After His initiation His love was revealed, and when He came home again, He gave Himself to the play of love.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Thinking, “I shall offer śrāddha at Gayā for My father, who has departed to the other world,” Mahāprabhu set out for Gayā with many students. On the way He was seized by fever; He drank water that had washed a brāhmaṇa's feet and was freed from the illness. By this pastime He showed that householders must honor brāhmaṇas. On reaching Gayā He accepted initiation into the Kṛṣṇa mantra from Śrī Īśvara Purī. From that initiation Mahāprabhu's prema began to manifest. Having finished His duties at Gayā, He returned to Śrī Dhāma Navadvīpa and began to preach prema.

Anubhāṣya.

See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 17, and Madhya, Chapter 1.

Pastimes in Navadvīpa after initiation; Advaita sees the universal form —

10 He gave love to Śacī; then He met Advaita, and Advaita beheld His universal form.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One day Mahāprabhu, sitting on Viṣṇu's couch (viṣṇu-khaṭṭā) in Śrīvāsa's house, said that His mother had committed an offense against a Vaiṣṇava, Śrī Advaitācārya. Unless she sought forgiveness for that offense and Advaita forgave her, she would not attain loving devotion (prema-bhakti). Hearing this, the devotees brought Advaita Prabhu, and Śrī Advaita (as he sang the glories of Āi) was overcome by prema. Śacīdevī seized that moment, took the dust of his feet, and was freed from the offense. Then “the Lord, pleased, says to His mother: ‘Now you have devotion to Viṣṇu. There is no more offense against Advaita.’” From then on Śacīdevī had prema-bhakti.

One day Advaita, overcome by prema, said to the Lord in Śrīvāsa's courtyard, “Show me the universal form You once showed Arjuna.” And the Lord mercifully showed him the universal form.

Anubhāṣya.

The gift of prema to Śacī: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 22; the meeting with Advaita: ibid., Madhya, Chapter 6; Advaita's vision of the universal form: ibid., Madhya, Chapter 24.

11 Then Śrīvāsa performed the Lord’s abhiṣeka, and the Lord, seated on the couch, revealed His majesty.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One day in Śrīvāsa's house all the devotees together performed Mahāprabhu's abhiṣeka. Mahāprabhu sat on Viṣṇu's couch and displayed His majesty as the King of kings. Many devotees sang kīrtana at that time. And Advaita and the other devotees began to worship Mahāprabhu with the sixteen articles of worship. To each the Lord granted whatever boon he desired.

Anubhāṣya.

The Lord's sāt-prahariyā bhāva (the bhāva that lasted seven praharas) on Viṣṇu's couch in Śrīvāsa's house: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 9.

Meeting Śrī Nityānanda —

12 Then Nityānanda Svarūpa came, and when He met the Lord, He was granted the vision of the six-armed form.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu was born in the village of “Ekacakrā” in the Birbhum district, as the son of Hāḍāi Paṇḍita, from the womb of Padmāvatī. When Nityānanda had grown a little, a sannyāsī came to Hāḍāi Paṇḍita and begged Nityānanda from him as alms. From then on Nityānanda traveled with that sannyāsī through many lands, came to the Mathurā-maṇḍala, and lived there a long time. Drawn by Mahāprabhu, Prabhu Nityānanda came to Śrī Navadvīpa and stayed in the house of Nandana Ācārya. Mahāprabhu and the devotees brought Nityānanda from there to His own place.

Anubhāṣya.

The meeting with Nityānanda: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 3. How, at the Vyāsa-pūjā in Śrīvāsa's house, Nityānanda saw Mahāprabhu six-armed (holding conch, disc, club, lotus, plough and pestle, muṣala): ibid., Madhya, Chapter 5.

The Lord shows Nitāi His six-armed, four-armed and two-armed forms —

13 First the Lord showed Him the six-armed form, holding conch, disc, club and lotus, the Śārṅga bow and the flute.

14 Then He became four-armed, His body bent in three places; with two hands He played the flute, and in the other two He held the conch and disc.

15 And then He was simply two-armed, with the flute at His lips: the son of Vraja's king, dark of body and dressed in yellow.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One day Mahāprabhu showed Nityānanda Prabhu a six-armed form holding conch, disc, club, lotus, the Śārṅga bow and flute. Then He showed a four-armed form, holding conch and disc in two hands and the flute in the other two. Finally He showed the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇa holding the flute alone. (Śrī Caitanya-maṅgala, Madhya.)

Gaura Himself is Nityānanda-Balarāma —

16 Then Nityānanda Gosāñi performed the Vyāsa-pūjā, and the Lord, absorbed in the mood of Nityānanda, took up the club (muṣala).

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

By Mahāprabhu's order Śrī Nityānanda Prabhu resolved to perform the Vyāsa-pūjā on the full-moon night and had Śrīvāsa arrange the necessary articles. During the saṅkīrtana, Nityānanda Prabhu placed a flower garland around Mahāprabhu's neck. At that moment Nityānanda Prabhu saw the six-armed form. Nothing more of the Vyāsa-pūjā took place.

On the night before the Vyāsa-pūjā, during saṅkīrtana in Śrīvāsa's house, Mahāprabhu, in the mood of Balarāma, sat on Viṣṇu's couch and asked Nityānanda for the plough and the pestle (muṣala). Nityānanda Prabhu placed his own hand in His hand, and at that moment the devotees saw the plough and the pestle before their eyes.

Anubhāṣya.

Nityānanda's Vyāsa-pūjā and the Lord's taking up the pestle (muṣala): see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 5.

Śacī's dream, and the deliverance of Jagāi and Mādhāi —

17 Then Śacī saw the two brothers as Rāma and Kṛṣṇa, and after that the Lord delivered Jagāi and Mādhāi.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One night Śacīdevī dreamed that Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma, the two Deities of her house, were snatching the offered food (naivedya) from each other together with Gaurāṅga and Nityānanda. The next day, by Gaurāṅga's wish, Śacīdevī invited Nityānanda to eat at her house. While Viśvambhara and Nityānanda were eating, Śacīdevī saw Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma Themselves eating, and at that sight she fainted in prema.

Jagāi and Mādhāi were born in Navadvīpa and were given to all kinds of sin. When Nityānanda and Haridāsa, by Mahāprabhu's order, went from house to house preaching the holy name, they incurred the anger of these two drunkards. The two, in a frenzy, chased them, and they fled. Another day Mādhāi struck Nityānanda on the head with a shard of a broken pot. Jagāi was somewhat sorry for that deed. Hearing of it, Mahāprabhu came there with His followers, ready to punish Jagāi and Mādhāi. But the merciful Gaurāṅga, hearing of Jagāi's decent conduct, embraced him with love. By seeing and touching the Lord, the two sinners had a change of heart, and the Lord delivered them by giving them the name of Hari.

Anubhāṣya.

Śacī's dream, in which she saw Nitāi and Gaura as Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 8; the deliverance of Jagāi and Mādhāi: the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 13.

*The Lord's sāt-prahariyā bhāva —*

18 Then for seven praharas the Lord remained absorbed in ecstasy, and the devotees, wherever they were, beheld Him in a special way.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One day in Śrīvāsa's house Mahāprabhu sat on Viṣṇu's couch, and the devotees, reciting the Puruṣa-sūkta — “The Puruṣa with a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, a thousand feet…” — performed His abhiṣeka with Gaṅgā water. They worshiped Him with various articles and gave Him many kinds of food to eat. The Lord began to eat everything the devotees offered. That day He remained in that bhāva for a full seven praharas and displayed the moods of all the avatāras. He revealed secret events from the devotees' past, dispelled everyone's doubts, and gave boons to all. Some call this bhāva the “sāt-prahariyā bhāva” (the bhāva that lasted seven praharas), and some the “mahā-prakāśa” (the great manifestation).

Anubhāṣya.

The Lord's seven-prahara bhāva in Śrīvāsa's house; how, during the abhiṣeka at that time, the Lord gave the name “Sukhī” (Happy) to a fortunate woman called “Duḥkhī” (Unhappy) who carried water; how Śrīdhara, the seller of banana leaves, saw the mahā-prakāśa; how Murāri Gupta saw the form of Rāma; the grace shown to Ṭhākura Haridāsa; how the Lord told Advaita the true meaning of the Gītā; the mercy shown to Mukunda, and so on: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 9.

The mood of Varāha in Murāri's house —

19 In Murāri’s house the Lord became absorbed in the mood of Varāha, and climbing onto Murāri’s shoulders, He danced in the courtyard.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One day Mahāprabhu, crying “Boar! Boar!”, Himself assumed the form of Varāha and entered Murāri Gupta's house. With His tusks He lifted a vessel full of water (a gāḍu), as He once lifted the earth, and drank the water. And another day the Lord climbed onto Murāri's shoulders and danced at length.

Anubhāṣya.

The Lord's absorption in the mood of Varāha in Murāri Gupta's house: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 3.

*The Lord eats the rice Śuklāmbara gathered as mādhukarī alms —*

20 Then He ate the raw rice that Śuklāmbara had begged, and He explained the meaning of the verse harer nāma.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Śuklāmbara Brahmacārī lived on the bank of the Gaṅgā in Śrī Navadvīpa. While Mahāprabhu was dancing, he arrived there with his bag of rice collected as alms. Out of love for His devotee, the Lord took that begged rice from his bag and began to eat it with great prema.

Anubhāṣya.
How the Lord ate the rice Śuklāmbara had gathered as alms: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 16.

*Without the name of Hari the jīva has no other way — (Bṛhan-nāradīya Purāṇa 38.126)*

21 "The name of Hari, the name of Hari, the name of Hari alone! In the age of Kali there is no other way, there is no other way, there is no other way." (Bṛhan-nāradīya Purāṇa, 38.126)

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 7.76.

*Explanation of the verse harer nāma —*

22 In the age of Kali, Kṛṣṇa descends in the form of the holy name, and through the name the whole world is delivered.

23 For emphasis the words harer nāma are said three times, and the word eva is added again to make dull people understand.

24 The word kevala ("alone") makes it certain once more, and rules out knowledge, yoga, austerity, karma and all the rest.

25 Whoever thinks otherwise has no deliverance: that is why "there is not" is said three times with eva.

How to chant the name —

26 Thinking oneself lower than the grass, one should always chant the name, seeking no honour for oneself and giving honour to others.

27 A Vaiṣṇava should be as tolerant as a tree; scolded or beaten, he should say nothing to anyone.

28 A tree says nothing even when it is cut down; it may wither and die, yet it never asks for water.

29 So a Vaiṣṇava should ask nothing of anyone; he should live on what comes unasked, or eat greens and fruit.

30 He should always chant the name and be content with whatever comes. Such conduct nourishes the dharma of devotion.

Anubhāṣya.
See Antya 20.22–26.

*Words from His own lips — (a verse of the Śikṣāṣṭaka spoken by Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanyacandra)*

31 "Lower than a blade of grass, more tolerant than a tree, seeking no honour and offering honour to others, one should always sing the glories of Hari." (Śikṣāṣṭaka, 3)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
One who considers himself lower than grass, who is tolerant like a tree, who seeks no honor himself and gives honor to others — he alone is qualified to chant about Hari always.

Anubhāṣya.
tṛṇād api (than even grass, which all feet trample and which has no importance at all) su-nīcena (lower in every way, that is, endowed with a mood free of worldly claims to prestige) taror api[7] (than even a tree) sahiṣṇunā (by a person endowed with tolerance) amāninā (who, though himself worthy of honor, has given up such worldly claims to prestige) māna-dena (giving honor and respect to others — even to those without honor and to the unworthy; by such a person) sadā (always) hariḥ (Hari alone) kīrtanīyaḥ (is to be chanted — uttered with the lips, the tongue and so on).

Kavirāja Gosvāmī earnestly urges everyone to live by this verse —

32 With arms upraised I say: listen, everyone! String this verse on the thread of the holy name and wear it around your neck.

33 Live by this verse, as the Lord has ordered, and you will surely attain the feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The author says: "O people! With upraised arms I tell you: listen! String this verse on the garland of Kṛṣṇa's name and wear it around your neck." The meaning is this: if one chants the name without being qualified, the result is nāmābhāsa (a mere shadow of the name) or nāmāparādha (offense against the name). Then the jīva does not attain the fruit of the name, "love for Kṛṣṇa." Chant the name of Hari while acting on the instruction Mahāprabhu gave in the verse tṛṇād api; then you will certainly attain the feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

"Strung on the thread of the name": the thread is Śrī Harināma, and what is strung on it as a garland or protective amulet (rakṣā-kavaca) is the four moods free of worldly self-conception: (1) humility (sunīcatva), (2) tolerance (sahiṣṇutva), (3) freedom from claims to honor (amānitva), (4) readiness to give honor (mānadatva). With worldly self-conception one cannot chant the name of Hari always: material self-conceptions obstruct the name of Hari. Free of these four kinds of self-conception, the pure jīva can chant the name of Hari always. Whoever obeys this command — the instruction of sādhana-bhakti — will certainly attain the feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa as the fruit of chanting the name of Hari.

Saṅkīrtana* in Śrīvāsa's house for a whole year —*

34 Then for a whole year the Lord held saṅkīrtana every night in Śrīvāsa's house.

Hostile godless people are kept out —

35 They sang with the doors shut, deeply absorbed; the unbelievers came to mock, but could not get in.

Envy and hatred toward Śrīvāsa —

36 Hearing the kīrtana from outside, they burned with envy and devised all kinds of schemes to trouble Śrīvāsa.

The scheme of "Gopāla Cāpāla" against Śrīvāsa —

37–38 There was a brāhmaṇa named Gopāla Cāpāla, a foul-mouthed babbler and the chief of the unbelievers. One night he took all the articles for the worship of Bhavānī and smeared the ground at Śrīvāsa's door to prepare a place for the rite.

Anubhāṣya.
The story of "Gopāla Cāpāla" is not found in the Caitanya-bhāgavata.

39 On a banana leaf he set out oḍa flowers, turmeric, vermilion, red sandal paste and rice.

40 He set a pot of wine beside them and went home, and in the morning Śrīvāsa saw it all.

An attempt to make Śrīvāsa out to be a worshiper of Śakti —

41 He called the respectable people of the town and, laughing heartily, said to them all:

Anubhāṣya.
Bolāiyā: having them called.

42 "Every night I worship Bhavānī. See my glory, good brāhmaṇas!"

The distress of the respectable local people, and the purifying of the place —

43 Then all those good people cried out in dismay: “What wicked man has done such a thing here?”

44 They sent for a sweeper to clear it all away, and had the place cleansed with water and cow dung.

Gopāla Cāpāla's leprosy, the fruit of an offense against a Vaiṣṇava —

45 Three days later Gopāla Cāpāla was struck with leprosy all over his body, and blood streamed from his sores.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

While Mahāprabhu, with the doors shut, was tasting the bliss of kīrtana in Śrīvāsa's courtyard, many brāhmaṇas of the town who were turned away from God tried in many ways to ridicule the Vaiṣṇavas. A certain garrulous Bhaṭṭācārya nicknamed “Gopāla Cāpāla” left outside the closed door the articles for worshiping the Devī — a banana leaf, a javā flower, red sandalwood and so on — together with a pot of wine. In the morning Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita saw it and said to everyone in jest, “Look, look! Every night I worship Bhavānī. Now you have learned how great I am as a ‘śākta’!” The respectable people were deeply distressed at the sight. They called a hāḍi (a sweeper), had the wine and the other vile things thrown far away, and purified the place with water and cow dung. For that offense against a Vaiṣṇava, Gopāla Cāpāla was stricken with a rotting leprosy.

46 Worms covered his whole body and gnawed at him without rest; the pain was unbearable, and his heart burned with agony.

He stays on the bank of the Gaṅgā and begs the Lord to deliver him —

47 He sat under a tree at a ghāṭa on the Ganges, and one day, seeing the Lord, he spoke to Him:

48 “By village kinship I am Your maternal uncle. See, nephew, how leprosy torments me.

49 You have descended to deliver all people, and I am in great misery. Deliver me!”

Because of his offense against a Vaiṣṇava, the Lord rebukes him angrily and refuses to deliver him —

50 Hearing this, Mahāprabhu grew angry and spoke threatening words to him:

51 “You sinner, you hater of devotees! I will not deliver you. For ten million births I will have the worms devour you like this.

52 You made it look as though Śrīvāsa worshipped Bhavānī; for ten million births you will fall into the hell of Raurava.

Anubhāṣya.
Worship of Bhavānī is the business of a non-Vaiṣṇava, that is, it is not the business of a Vaiṣṇava. By condemning it, the Lord taught people to regard as “bad association” the worldly, mixed Vaiṣṇava (prākṛta viddha-vaiṣṇava) who at heart nourishes the doctrine of many gods, that is, who leans toward the worship of many gods and goddesses.

53 I have come to destroy the unbelievers, and when they are gone I shall spread devotion everywhere.”

One who offends a Vaiṣṇava suffers constantly and so cannot easily die —

54 With these words the Lord went to bathe in the Ganges, and the sinner went on suffering, unable to die.

Anubhāṣya.
Bhoge: suffers.

When the Lord came, he surrendered to Him —

55–56 After the Lord had taken sannyāsa and gone to Nīlācala, He once came from there to the village of Kuliyā. Then the sinner took shelter of Him, and the Lord, moved to compassion, gave him good counsel:

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Kuliyā-grāma: at that time Navadvīpa was on the eastern bank of the Gaṅgā, and on the other bank was the village of Kuliyā — the place now known as "Navadvīpa."

Anubhāṣya.

Kuliyā-grāma: the present town of Navadvīpa. "Between Nadīyā and Kuliyā there is only the Gaṅgā" (Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya 3.380): Kuliyā is on the western bank of the Gaṅgā, and Navadvīpa on the eastern bank. For mentions of Kuliyā on the western bank of the Gaṅgā, see the Bhakti-ratnākara (twelfth wave), the Caitanya-carita mahākāvya, the play Caitanya-candrodaya, and the Caitanya-bhāgavata. In the village of Kuliyā, which belongs to Koladvīpa, there is to this day a quarter called "Kuliyār Gañj" and a stream called "Kuliyār Daha"; it lies within the present municipal town of Navadvīpa. In Śrī Mahāprabhu's time there were villages called "Kuliyā" and "Pāhāḍapura" on the western bank of the Gaṅgā. They lie among the fields of "Bāhir-dvīpa." But then and ever since, Navadvīpa was in "Antardvīpa," on the eastern bank of the Gaṅgā. In Śrī Māyāpura that place is still known as "Dvīper Māṭh" ("the field of the island"). The village called "Kuliyā" near Kāñcaḍāpāḍā is not the Kuliyā mentioned above, nor the "pāṭa of Aparādha-bhañjana" (the place where offenses were forgiven). The false notion about it arose only a few years ago — from fancies born of hostility toward the Dhāma, and from error.

The Lord tells him to beg forgiveness from Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita —

57 "You have offended Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita. Go to him, and if he shows you his grace,

After surrendering, one must not sin again —

58 you will be freed from this sin, if you never act in such a way again."

Gopāla Cāpāla takes shelter at Śrīvāsa's feet and is freed from his offense —

59 So the brāhmaṇa came and took shelter of Śrīvāsa, and by his grace he was freed from his sin.

Another foolish brāhmaṇa curses the Lord —

60 Another brāhmaṇa came to see the kīrtana, but the door was shut and he could not get in.

61 He went home with a heavy heart, and the next day, seeing the Lord at the Ganges, he said to Him:[1]

62 "I will curse You, for You have grieved me!" And tearing his sacred thread, the fierce, foul-mouthed man cursed Him:

63 "May Your worldly happiness be destroyed!" Hearing the curse, Mahāprabhu was filled with delight.

64 Whoever hears with faith the story of the Lord's curse is delivered from the curse of a brāhmaṇa.

Anubhāṣya.

Whoever thinks that the Lord, the master of māyā, is subject to curses and the like, or that He is a jīva punished by Yama and subject to the fruits of karma, invites godlessness upon himself. But once the jīva comes instead to know Him as the Supreme Lord, eternally worthy of service, its beginningless aversion to Kṛṣṇa disappears. This incident is not in the Caitanya-bhāgavata.

Mercy through punishment for Mukunda —

65 To Mukunda Datta the Lord gave His grace in the form of punishment, and so dispelled all the dejection of his heart.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

On the day of the Lord's mahā-prakāśa, Mukunda Datta stayed lying outside the door. When the Lord had shown His grace to the other devotees one by one, they told the Lord that Mukunda Datta was outside. The Lord replied, "I will not soon be pleased with Mukunda Datta. Before devotees he speaks of 'pure devotion,' but sitting among the Māyāvādīs he accepts the 'Māyāvāda' set out in the Yoga-vāsiṣṭha. This always pains Me." Mukunda Datta heard these words from outside and said, "I am fortunate! Though not soon, at some time Mahāprabhu, the deliverer of the world, will show me mercy." Seeing that Mukunda Datta was firmly resolved to give up the company of Māyāvādīs, the Lord at once had him brought near and showed him His favor. In this way the Lord punished him for the offense of associating with Māyāvādīs and granted him grace as the fruit of associating with pure devotees.

Anubhāṣya.

Mercy through punishment for Mukunda: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 10.

Mercy through punishment for Advaita —

66 The Lord honoured Ācārya Gosāñi as His guru, and this made the Ācārya very unhappy.

67 So the Ācārya, by design, began to expound the path of knowledge, and the Lord in anger treated Him with disrespect.

68 Then Ācārya Gosāñi was filled with joy, and the Lord, abashed, showed Him His grace.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Advaitācārya was a godbrother of Īśvara Purī, Mahāprabhu's guru. For this reason the Lord, although Advaita was His servant, honored him as a guru. Advaita was pained that Mahāprabhu showed him such honor. To receive Mahāprabhu's grace in the form of punishment, he went to Śāntipura and began to explain the path of jñāna to some unfortunate people. Hearing of this, the Lord went to Śāntipura in anger and gave Advaita Prabhu a sound beating. Having received the blows, Advaita Prabhu began to dance, saying, "Look, today my desire is fulfilled! Mahāprabhu was stingy and treated me as His guru; today He saw me as His own servant and disciple and tried to save me from the evil notion of Māyāvāda." Seeing this ploy of Advaitācārya, the Lord was embarrassed and became pleased with him.

Murāri Gupta's exclusive devotion to Śrī Rāma —

69 Hearing from Murāri Gupta the glories of Rāma, the Lord wrote the name “Rāmadāsa” on his forehead.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One day Mahāprabhu asked Murāri Gupta, who worshiped Śrī Rāma with the Rāma mantra, to recite a prayer to Śrī Rāma. Murāri recited the Rāmāṣṭaka with great prema: “Having thus heard the eight verses about Raghunandana, the lion among kings, Bhagavān placed His foot on the head of Murāri the physician and wrote on his forehead: ‘O, by My grace, become “Rāmadāsa”!’”

Anubhāṣya.

Caitanya-maṅgala, Madhya-khaṇḍa: “I ever worship Rāma, the guru of the three worlds.” “Having thus heard the eight verses about Raghuvīra, He Himself placed His foot on Murāri's head. He wrote the name ‘Rāmadāsa’ on his forehead: ‘By My grace you have become “Rāmadāsa.”’ Saying this, He showed him the form of Rāma. Murāri, falling at His feet, offers prayers.” The Lord's mercy to Murāri Gupta: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 10.

The Lord drinks water from an iron pot in Śrīdhara's house and gives boons —

70 He drank water from Śrīdhara’s iron pot, and to all the devotees He granted the boons they desired.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

On the night of the first city kīrtana, after the Kāzī had been delivered, Chāď Kāzī came along with the kīrtana as far as Śrīdhara's courtyard. When the kīrtana stopped there to rest, Mahāprabhu mercifully drank the water that was in Śrīdhara's leaky iron pot, calling it “water offered by a devotee.” From that spot the Kāzī turned back. That place, in the northeastern part of Māyāpura, is still called the place where the kīrtana rested.

Anubhāṣya.

How the Lord drank water from Śrīdhara's iron pot: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 23.

Mercy to Ṭhākura Haridāsa; the pastime of freeing Śacī from her offense —

71 He showed His grace to Haridāsa Ṭhākura, and freed His mother from her offence against the Ācārya.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

On the day of the mahā-prakāśa, Mahāprabhu embraced Haridāsa, declared him an avatāra of Prahlāda, and gave him a boon.

When Viśvarūpa took sannyāsa, Śacīmātā blamed Advaita Ācārya for it. She thus committed an offense against a Vaiṣṇava, and the Lord freed her from that offense by having His mother take the dust of the Ācārya's feet.

Anubhāṣya.

Mercy to Ṭhākura Haridāsa: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 10; the Lord's mercy to Śacīmātā: the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 22.

*A godless student calls the glory of the holy name exaggeration (arthavāda) —*

72 The Lord told the devotees of the glory of the holy name, and a student who heard it explained it away as mere praise (arthavāda).

Anubhāṣya.

The glory of Śrī Nāma Prabhu is non-different from Kṛṣṇa Himself. To consider it “exaggerated praise,” “not real,” and therefore “untrue” — this divisive mentality is what is called “arthavāda,” that is, (false) praise or else defamation. It is outright godlessness, or atheism — nothing but enmity toward God.

73 Hearing the name called an exaggeration, the Lord was pained, and He forbade everyone to look upon that man’s face.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One day Mahāprabhu was describing to the devotees the boundless glory of the holy name. Hearing it, an unfortunate student said, “All this glory of the name is not real: the scriptures merely praise the name.” To reinterpret the glory of the name like this is the offense against the name called arthavāda. No offense is as terrible as an offense against the name. The Lord forbade everyone to look at that offending student's face and, with His associates, bathed in the Gaṅgā sacele, that is, with His clothes on. The meaning is: whoever has seen the face of an offender of the name should bathe with his clothes on — that is the lesson.

*The Lord and His associates bathe in the Gaṅgā with their clothes on, and He glorifies devotion, the one and only means (abhidheya) —*

74 Then He went with His companions and bathed in the Ganges in His clothes, and there He explained the glory of devotion.

75 Kṛṣṇa is not brought under control by knowledge, karma, yoga or dharma; the one thing that holds Him is the rasa of love for Him.

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 11, Chapter 14, Verse 20)*

76 (Śrī Kṛṣṇa said:) "O Uddhava, neither yoga nor sāṅkhya, neither dharma nor study of the Vedas, neither austerity nor renunciation can win Me as intense devotion to Me does." (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 11.14.20)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

O Uddhava! As strong devotion to Me can win Me over, so I am not won over by aṣṭāṅga-yoga, by sāṅkhya-jñāna — the doctrine of non-difference from Brahman, by svādhyāya — a brāhmaṇa's study of his own branch of the Veda, by every kind of austerity, or by sannyāsa and the like, which is renunciation.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa said to Uddhava: O uddhava, yogaḥ (yama, niyama, āsana, prāṇāyāma and the rest, born of the restraint of the breath), sāṅkhyam (the enumeration of the tattvas taught by Kapila), dharmaḥ (the dharma of varṇa and āśrama), svādhyāyaḥ (study of the Veda), tapaḥ, tyāgaḥ (sannyāsa) tathā (so) mām na sādhayati (do not win Me over), yathā (as) mama ūrjitā (intensified) bhaktiḥ mām (wins Me over).

Praise of Murāri —

77 The Lord said to Murāri, "You have brought Kṛṣṇa under your control," and hearing this, Murāri began to recite a verse:

*(Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, Canto 10, Chapter 81, Verse 14)*[8]

78 "Who am I, a poor and sinful man, and who is Kṛṣṇa, the abode of the goddess of fortune? Yet because I was born a brāhmaṇa, He embraced me in His arms!" (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 10.81.16)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Where am I, a great sinner and a pauper, and where is Kṛṣṇa, the abode of Śrī! Knowing me to be an unworthy son of a brāhmaṇa, He embraced me. This is truly astonishing.

Anubhāṣya.

Mahāprabhu said to Murāri, "By your prema and devotion you have brought Kṛṣṇa under your control." In reply Murāri recited the verse from the Bhāgavata spoken by the brāhmaṇa "Sudāmā."

These were the words the brāhmaṇa "Śrīdāmā," or "Sudāmā," spoke to himself as he went home: daridraḥ (devoid of wealth) pāpīyān (sinful) aham kva (where)? śrī-niketanaḥ (the form in whom all majesty is rooted, the shelter of all piety) kṛṣṇaḥ kva (where)? aham brahma-bandhuḥ (the lowest of brāhmaṇas by birth) iti — thus (by Kṛṣṇa) bāhubhyām parirambhitaḥ (embraced). (The words that Kṛṣṇa could never embrace me, an unworthy brahma-bandhu, show only Kṛṣṇa's greatness; the sentence expresses the speaker's humility.)

If Murāri accepted Mahāprabhu's words favorably, he recited the verse with this thought: "Murāri has no power to bring Kṛṣṇa under control; it is Kṛṣṇa who, by His own love for His devotees, on the pretext of something incidental and secondary, makes an unworthy servant the recipient of unimaginable good fortune."

If, however, Murāri recited the verse to set aside Mahāprabhu's words as unfavorable to himself, then he said, "I am wholly unfit to control Kṛṣṇa; I have not been able to control Kṛṣṇa." The brāhmaṇa Śrīdāmā listed his own disqualifications — poverty, a bent toward sin, not being a true brāhmaṇa and so on — and proclaimed his good fortune: Kṛṣṇa embraced him. But Murāri Gupta thinks, "Even in that way I am unworthy."

In the commentary on the tenth canto, the Vaiṣṇava-toṣaṇī, the meaning of the verse is explained thus: "Kva, and so on. Pāpīyān: unfortunate; kṛṣṇaḥ: Bhagavān Himself. Thus 'Kṛṣṇa' and 'most sinful' contradict each other, and so do ‘poverty’ and ‘abode of Śrī.’ Nevertheless, brahma-bandhuḥ, born in a family of brāhmaṇas, bāhubhyām, with both arms, parirambhitaḥ, embraced. Sma expresses wonder. Thus brāhmaṇa birth alone is named as the cause of the embrace, not friendship, for there he considered himself utterly unworthy. Therefore it is only the Lord's devotion to brāhmaṇas that is praised, not even His love for His devotees.”

In the preceding verse Sudāmā's mood is recorded thus: “With the chest on which Kamalā, dearer to Him than life, resides — with that chest Brahmaṇya-deva, out of love for brāhmaṇas, embraced a pauper like me, bereft of Lakṣmī.” In keeping with the mood of that verse, the commentary on the following verse, quoted here, says: “The cause of the embrace is brāhmaṇa birth alone, not friendship.” And the brāhmaṇa Śrīdāmā in his humility thinks: “I myself am utterly unworthy; I myself do not live as a brāhmaṇa. It is only the Lord, to show the excellence of devotion to brāhmaṇas and His own excellence, who has shown such love even to a brahma-bandhu — that is what is astonishing.” The brāhmaṇa Śrīdāmā, wishing to express his humility and his own insignificance, condemned himself as a “brahma-bandhu.” And by saying that Kṛṣṇa shows extraordinary grace even to a brahma-bandhu, he truly revealed his humility and his brāhmaṇa nature. By this the brāhmaṇa Sudāmā set a shining example of giving up one's own greatness. Being a brahma-bandhu is not his own quality or his own achievement; rather, being a brahma-bandhu is something extraneous — that which, for the brāhmaṇa Sudāmā, is not his own property, is itself the cause of Kṛṣṇa's love. Neither his own greatness nor his own devotion to Kṛṣṇa compelled Kṛṣṇa to act so.

Murāri Gupta, too, adopted such a mood: covering his own greatness, he displayed humility. In the social view of that time Murāri Gupta was merely a śūdra by birth, and the word “brahma-bandhu” does not apply to him. But reflecting on the import of the verse “Women, śūdras and dvija-bandhus have no access to hearing the three Vedas” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.4.25), Murāri Gupta likened the position of a dvija-bandhu to that of a śūdra.

In his commentary on the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, Śaṅkarācārya, explaining the word brahma-bandhu, says: “He calls the brāhmaṇas his kinsmen, but does not himself live as a brāhmaṇa.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 1.7.57): “Shaving the head, seizing one's wealth, expelling one from one's dwelling — this is the execution of brahma-bandhus; there is no other, bodily execution for them.” In the Kūrma Purāṇa: “The servant of a śūdra, a servant of the king, a vṛṣala, a priest for a whole village, and one who lives by killing and imprisoning — these six are brahma-bandhus." Being a brahma-bandhu, that is, a brāhmaṇa merely by birth, is no proof of one's own qualification; rather, it proves only dependence on something else.

The story of how the Lord planted a mango tree and gave out its fruit —

79 One day, tired after saṅkīrtana with all the devotees, the Lord sat down to rest.

80 He planted a mango seed in the courtyard, and at once a tree sprang up and began to grow.

81 As they watched, the tree began to bear fruit, and many mangoes ripened, to everyone's wonder.

82 The Lord quickly picked two hundred mangoes, washed them and offered them to Kṛṣṇa.

83 They were red and yellow, without stone or skin, and a single fruit was enough to satisfy a man.

84 The son of Śacī was pleased to see them; He tasted them first and then fed everyone.

85 Without stone or skin, they were full of nectarean juice, and one fruit was a meal in itself.

86 So the tree bore fruit every day for twelve months, and the Vaiṣṇavas ate it, to the Lord's delight.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One day the Lord, tired from the city kīrtana with the devotees, came to a certain place and planted a mango seed in the courtyard of the devotee who lived there. At once it bore fruit, and a mango festival took place. That place is now known as "Āmraghaṭṭa" ("Āmaghāṭā").

Anubhāṣya.
This incident is not in the Śrī Caitanya-bhāgavata.

87 Such were the pastimes of Śacī's son, and no one but the devotees knew of them.

88 Thus for twelve months, when the kīrtana ended, the Lord held a mango festival day after day.

*During the kīrtana the Lord keeps the clouds from raining —*

89 Once, while the Lord was holding kīrtana, clouds gathered, and by His own will He sent them away.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
One day Mahāprabhu was performing saṅkīrtana far away, and at that time the sky was massed with clouds. The Lord willed the clouds to go and ordered them away, and they at once dispersed. For this reason that sandbank of the Gaṅgā came to be called "Megher Car" ("the Cloud Sandbank"). Now, because the Gaṅgā has changed its course, that "Megher Car" has shifted to the village of "Belpukhuriyā." And the place where Belpukhuriyā used to be is now called "Tāraṇavāsa" and "Ṭoṭā."

Anubhāṣya.
Caitanya-maṅgala, Madhya-khaṇḍa: "The day was done, evening came, the far horizons grew lovely[9]. Suddenly clouds overspread the vault of the sky; thunder rolls again and again with a deep roar. Seeing this, the Vaiṣṇavas took it for a calamity. Then Mahāprabhu took cymbals in His hands and loudly sang the saṅkīrtana of the names and qualities. Thinking, 'I shall bless the world of the gods,' the Lord turned His face up to the sky. The clouds went far away, the sky cleared, and the Vaiṣṇavas' joy grew. The night became pure, tinted by the moon. His followers sing His qualities, and He Himself dances."

*Śrīvāsa reads the Viṣṇu-sahasra-nāma —*

90 One day the Lord told Śrīvāsa, "Read the great Thousand Names; I wish to hear them."

The pastime in which the Lord is absorbed in the mood of Nṛsiṁha —

91 As he read, the hymn came to the name of Nṛsiṁha, and hearing it, the Lord, the abode of all virtues, became absorbed in His mood.

Absorbed in the mood of Śrī Nṛsiṁha, the one chastiser of godlessness, the Lord puts the godless to flight —

92 In the mood of Nṛsiṁha, the Lord took a club in His hand and ran into the town to kill the unbelievers.

The people's terror —

93 Seeing Him in the mood of Nṛsiṁha, blazing with power, the people left the road and fled in terror.

Anubhāṣya.

Bhāge: they flee. This incident is not in the Caitanya-bhāgavata.

The Lord restrains His anger and shows compassion —

94 Seeing their fear, the Lord came back to outer awareness; He went to Śrīvāsa's house and threw down the club.

The Lord's words to Śrīvāsa —

95 Dejected, the Lord said to Śrīvāsa, "I have frightened the people. The offence is Mine."

Anubhāṣya.

Caitanya-maṅgala, Madhya-khaṇḍa: "Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita was performing the rite for his ancestors. With a very pure heart he hears the 'Sahasra-nāma.' At that time Gaurahari came to that place. He hears the 'Sahasra-nāma' to His heart's content. As He listened, He became absorbed in the mood of Nṛsiṁha. Both His eyes turned red with anger, His hair stood on end. His whole body thrilled, the color of the dawn. Again and again a loud roar — the roar of a lion. Suddenly He seized a club and rushed off. Seeing this, everyone trembled at heart. Restraining it all, the Lord sat on His seat: 'I do not know what offense I have committed.'"

Śrīvāsa's words: Gaura's name destroys offenses —

96 Śrīvāsa said, “Whoever takes Your name is freed from millions of offences.

The sight of Gaura destroys worldly existence —

97 There was no offence: You delivered the people. Whoever has seen You is free from the cycle of birth and death.”

98 With these words Śrīvāsa served Him, and the Lord, pleased, returned home.

The Lord in the mood of Śiva on the shoulders of a most fortunate Śaiva —

99 Another day a devotee of Śiva came singing Śiva’s glories; he danced in the Lord’s courtyard, playing the ḍamaru drum.

100 Śacī’s son was absorbed in the mood of Maheśa, and climbing onto the man’s shoulders He danced for a long time.

Anubhāṣya.
See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 8.

The Lord gives love for Kṛṣṇa to a dancing beggar —

101 Another day a beggar came for alms, and seeing the Lord dance, he began to dance too.

102 He danced with the Lord in great joy, and the Lord gave him love, so that he floated in its rasa.

The Lord asks an astrologer about His own past —

103 Another day an all-knowing astrologer came, and the Lord, receiving him with honour, asked him a question:

Anubhāṣya.

Sarvajña: one who knows the three times — past, future and present.

104 “Calculate and tell Me who I was in My previous birth.” Hearing the Lord’s words, the astrologer began his calculations.

Anubhāṣya.

To this day in East Bengal (especially in the Ḍhākā division), in place of verb forms such as chila, chile, chilām, people use āchila, āchilā and āchilām.

The astrologer realizes that the Lord is the Supreme Lord —

105 Having calculated, he saw in meditation a great effulgence, the shelter of all, of endless Vaikuṇṭhas and universes.

106 Seeing the Lord’s form as the Supreme Truth, the Supreme Brahman, the Supreme Lord, the astrologer was bewildered.

The astrologer is bewildered —

107 He could say nothing and fell silent; but when the Lord asked again, he began to speak:

The astrologer's answer to the Lord's question —

108 “In Your previous birth You were the supreme shelter, the complete Bhagavān, full of all majesty.

109 As You were then, so You are now; Your own nature is eternal bliss, hard to fathom.”

The Lord declares Himself a cowherd —

110 The Lord smiled and said, “You have understood nothing. Before, I was a cowherd by caste.

111 I was born in a cowherd's home and tended the cows, and by that merit I have now become the son of a brāhmaṇa."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Serving cows brings piety. In My previous birth I was a cowherd and served the cows. The piety I earned in this way was the cause (bore the fruit) of My becoming a "brāhmaṇa" this time.

Anubhāṣya.

The Lord's playful, mysterious words to the all-knowing astrologer.

Seeing the dark form, the astrologer is bewildered and takes shelter of the Lord —

112 The astrologer said, "I saw that in my meditation, but I saw majesty in it and was bewildered.

113 That form and this one I see as one; if at times I see a difference, that is Your māyā.

*The Lord shows mercy to the astrologer and gives him prema —*

114 Whoever You may be, I bow to You." And the Lord rewarded him with love.

Anubhāṣya.

The story of the astrologer is not found in the Caitanya-bhāgavata.

In the mood of Baladeva, the Lord enacts the pastime of dragging the Yamunā —

115 One day, sitting in the hall of Viṣṇu, the Lord called out, "Bring honey! Bring honey!"

116 Nityānanda Gosāñi understood the Lord's mood; He brought a pot of Ganges water and held it before the Lord.

Anubhāṣya.

See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 25.

117 Drinking the water, the Lord danced, overwhelmed, and everyone saw the pastime in which Balarāma drew the Yamunā to Himself.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The pastime of dragging the Yamunā: one day Baladeva, angry with the Yamunā, dragged the Yamunā with His plough and pestle. When Mahāprabhu, in the mood of Baladeva, cried, "Bring honey, bring honey!", all the others at that moment were seeing that very pastime of dragging the Yamunā.

Anubhāṣya.

Baladeva went to Gokula and lived there in the months of Caitra and Vaiśākha surrounded by the gopīs. Having drunk vāruṇī, Baladeva called the Yamunā to come near so that he could sport in the water. (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 10.65.25–30, 33): "The Lord called the Yamunā for sport in the water. But the river disregarded his words, thinking him drunk, and did not come. Then Bala, angered, dragged her with the tip of his plough. 'Sinful one! Disregarding me, you do not come when I call. With the tip of my plough I will bring you here, split into a hundred streams, you willful one!' Thus rebuked, the frightened Yamunā, O king, trembling, fell at the feet of the delight of the Yadus and said: 'Rāma, Rāma, mighty-armed one! I did not know your might: by a single portion of it you uphold the earth, O lord of the universe. O Bhagavān, soul of the universe, lover of your devotees! Release me: I did not know the supreme nature of the Lord, and now I have surrendered to you.' Then, being entreated, Lord Bala released the Yamunā and plunged into the water with the women, like the king of elephants with his she-elephants. Even today, O king, the channel along which the Yamunā was dragged can be seen; it seems to proclaim the might of Bala, whose power is unlimited."

Candraśekhara Ācāryaratna sees the Lord in the form of Baladeva —

118 He moved with the reeling gait of Baladeva, and Ācārya Śekhara saw Him in the form of Rāma.

Vanamālī Ācārya sees a golden plough in the Lord's hand —

119 Vanamālī Ācārya saw a golden plough, and all danced together, overwhelmed with bliss.

Anubhāṣya.

Caitanya-maṅgala, Madhya-khaṇḍa: “With him was his son, named Vanamālī. Born in a brāhmaṇa family, he lives in the eastern land, Vaṅga. He saw the Lord's body fashioned of gold, adorned with jewels, like the peak of Sumeru. In the guise of Halāyudha the Lord of the three worlds dances.” “Vanamālī Paṇḍita,” mentioned in Ādi 10.73, also saw the golden plough and pestle in the Lord's hands. That one has the title “Paṇḍita,” and this one the title “Ācārya”: are they one and the same person, or two different people?

A dance lasting twelve hours —

120 So the dancing went on for four praharas; in the evening they all bathed in the Ganges and went home.

*By the Lord's order, kīrtana of Kṛṣṇa in every home —*

121 When the Lord gave His order to the townspeople, they began to hold saṅkīrtana in every house:

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

When preaching the name in the town, the Lord first ordered the townspeople who lived near Śrīvāsa's courtyard to chant the name of Hari while clapping their hands; gradually mṛdaṅgas, karatālas and the like began to be played. From then on saṅkīrtana has spread from door to door, and it continues to this day.

A song of the names —

122 “Hari haraye namaḥ, kṛṣṇa yādavāya namaḥ, gopāla govinda rāma śrī-madhusūdana.”

123 The great sound of saṅkīrtana rose with mṛdaṅgas and karatālas, and nothing could be heard but “Hari! Hari!”

*The yavanas and the Kāzī oppose the kīrtana —*

124 Hearing it, the Muslims grew angry and all came to the Kazi to complain.

Anubhāṣya.

The townspeople's kīrtana of Kṛṣṇa, the Kāzī's anger, and the Kāzī's deliverance: see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 23.

Kāzī: the phaujadāra (district magistrate), Chāṅd Kāzī. In former times the land tax was collected by the zamindars — rājās or maṇḍalas (village headmen). Punishment, administration and the like were in the hands of the kāzīs. Both zamindar and kāzī were subordinate to the subādāra, the governor of Subā Bāṅgālā. The parganās of Nadīyā, Islāmapura, Bāgoyāna and others then belonged to Hari Hoḍa or to his descendant Kṛṣṇadāsa Hoḍa. But although they owned the land, it was the Kāzī who had taken over the government. It is said that Chāṅd Kāzī was the guru of the Nawab of Bengal, "Husain Shah." According to some, his other name was "Maulānā Sirājuddin"; others say "Habibar Rahamān." His descendants still live in that place, and Chāṅd Kāzī's tomb also survives.

*The Kāzī breaks the khola —*

125 In the evening the Kazi came angrily to one house, broke the mṛdaṅga and said to the people:

Anubhāṣya.

To this day in the village of Śrī Māyāpura there is a well-known piece of land called "Khol-bhāṅgār Ḍāṅgā" ("the mound where the khola was broken").

*The Kazi opposes the kīrtana and forbids it —*

126 "All this time no one here has dared to follow Hindu ways openly. Now you carry on with such zeal — on whose strength, I would like to know?

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

From the coming of Bakhtiyar Khilji up to the time of Cāṅd Kāzī, Hinduism in Navadvīpa had sunk into utter decline. Those who truly had faith in the Hindu religion would quietly say "Hari, Hari" once and then fall silent. That is why the Kazi said, "For so long Hinduism has not shown itself at all — by whose strength are you now undertaking such an effort?"

127 Let no one hold kīrtana anywhere in the town. Today I forgive you and go home.

128 But if I find anyone holding kīrtana again, I will take all he owns and strip him of his caste."

The distressed good people come to the Lord with their complaint —

129 With these words the Kazi went away, and the townspeople, in great distress, told the Lord what had happened.

*The Lord grows angry and orders everyone to perform saṅkīrtana —*

130 The Lord ordered, "Go and hold kīrtana! Today I shall destroy all the Muslims."

131 They all went home and held kīrtana, but in fear of the Kazi they were not at ease, and their hearts trembled.

132 Knowing the fear in their hearts, the Lord quickly called the people together and said:

133 "Today I shall hold kīrtana throughout the town. By evening, all of you, decorate the town.

134 In the evening light lamps in every house, and we shall see what Kazi comes to stop Me!"

135 Having said this, Gaurarāya set out in the evening, and He formed the kīrtana into three groups.

*The kīrtana is divided into three groups —*

136 Haridāsa danced in the first group, and in the middle one Ācārya Gosāñi danced in great joy.

137 In the last group danced Gauracandra, and Nityānanda Prabhu danced along with Him.

138 By the power of Caitanya's mercy, Vṛndāvana dāsa has described this at length in the Caitanya-maṅgala.[2]

*Singing kīrtana, He goes around the town of Navadvīpa —*

139 So, holding kīrtana, He wandered through the town, and in His wandering He came to the Kazi's door.

Anubhāṣya.

The Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 23: "May my mind cling to Your feet, (O Śārṅgadhara,) may my mind cling to Your feet! This is Caitanyacandra's first saṅkīrtana: the devotees sing, and Śrī Śacīnandana dances. In Nadīyā a road runs along the bank of the Gaṅgā, and along that road, ahead of all, Gaurarāya goes dancing. First Gaurahari danced a long while at His own ghāṭa, and then He went on to Mādhāi's ghāṭa. 'Viśvambhara, the Lord of all, dances along the banks of the Bhāgīrathī' (refrain). Reaching Bārakoṇā Ghāṭa and Nāgariyā Ghāṭa, the Lord passed through Gaṅgānagara and came to Simuliyā. At the edge of Nadīyā lies the settlement of Simuliyā, and there the Lord arrived, dancing all the way. Then the Ṭhākura took the road to the Kazi's house, and dancing He came to the Kazi's quarter."

140 The people shouted threats and made a great uproar: under Gauracandra's protection they had grown wild with boldness.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Then, by the strength of Śrī Śrī Gauracandra, the people grew bold and went almost mad.

The Kazi hides —

141 At the sound of the kīrtana the Kazi hid in his house, and hearing the threats and roars, he would not come out.

The rowdy people run riot —

142 Unruly people broke into the Kazi's house and flower garden; Vṛndāvana dāsa has described this at length.

Anubhāṣya.
See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 23.

The Kazi is called out through respectable good men —

143 Then Mahāprabhu sat down at his door and sent respectable men to call the Kazi.

The Lord honors the Kazi according to worldly custom —

144 The Kazi approached from a distance, his head bowed, and the Lord received him with honour and gave him a seat.

The Lord expresses surprise at the Kazi's behavior —

145 The Lord said, "I have come to you as a guest, yet when you saw Me you hid. What kind of conduct is this?"

The Kazi's reply —

146 The Kazi said, "You came in anger, so I stayed hidden to let You grow calm.

147 Now that You are calm, I have come to meet You. How fortunate I am to receive a guest like You!

148 By village kinship Cakravartī is my uncle, and village kinship is truer than kinship of the body.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
In one part of the village of Brāhmaṇa-puṣkariṇī the old house of the Kazis still stands. Joined to the other part of that village is Tāraṇavāsa, formerly Bilva-puṣkariṇī. That village and the Kazis' Brāhmaṇa-puṣkariṇī were one and the same village, and so Mahāprabhu stood to Cāṅd Kāzī in the relation of a sister's son to a maternal uncle.

Anubhāṣya.
Cakravartī — Nīlāmbara Cakravartī. Cācā — a father's brother, an uncle; in colloquial speech, kākā. Sāčā — genuine, pure, true (saccā).

149 Nīlāmbara Cakravartī is Your maternal grandfather, so by that relation You are my nephew.

Anubhāṣya.
Nānā — maternal grandfather.

150 An uncle will bear his nephew's anger, and a nephew does not hold his uncle's offences against him."

151 So the two spoke in hints, and no one could grasp the inner meaning.

The Lord's words and the Kazi's reply —

152 The Lord said, "I have come to ask you a question," and the Kazi replied, "Ask whatever is on Your mind."

The Lord asks about the customs of Islam —

153 The Lord said, "You drink cow's milk, so the cow is your mother; the bull produces grain, so he is your father.

Anubhāṣya.
Anna upajāya ("produces grain"): the bull draws the plow and prepares the field for sowing and planting rice and other crops. In this way he gives the farmer the chief help in producing seed, grain and rice.

154 You kill your father and mother and eat them — what religion is this? On what authority do you commit such a sin?"

Anubhāṣya.
Ebā — "this," "or this."

The Kazi's words —

155 The Kazi said, “As You have the Vedas and Purāṇas, so we have our scripture, the book of the Koran.

Anubhāṣya.
Ketāba — a book.

156 That scripture distinguishes two paths, the path of worldly engagement and the path of renunciation, and on the path of renunciation the killing of any living being is forbidden.

Anubhāṣya.
Śarīʿat, ṭarīqat and maʿrifat — three kinds of path.

157 On the path of worldly engagement there is an injunction to kill cows, and if one kills by the order of scripture, there is no fear of sin.

158 Your Vedas too speak of the killing of cows, and great sages did kill them.”

The killing enjoined by the Vedas is justified because the animal regains its life —

159 The Lord said, “The Vedas forbid the killing of cows, and therefore no Hindu kills a cow.

160 The Vedas and Purāṇas command that one may kill a living being only if one can bring it back to life.

161 So the sages would kill a worn-out old animal (jaradgava) and restore its life by Vedic mantras.

162 The old animal became young once more, so this was not killing but a kindness.

The brāhmaṇas born in the age of Kali have no such power —

163 In the age of Kali the brāhmaṇas have no such power, and so now no one kills cows.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

(The Kazi said:) That scripture, the Koran, distinguishes two kinds of path: pravṛtti (the path of engagement) and nivṛtti (the path of renunciation). On the path of nivṛtti killing living beings is forbidden. But those who, like us, follow the path of pravṛtti do not become sinners if they kill cows by the order of scripture. And look at your Vedas: they contain injunctions to kill cows, and that is why great sages have killed cows from time immemorial.

Mahāprabhu said: The Vedas contain no injunction to kill cows. The statements about sacrifice performed by killing a cow that one does find in them concern the jaradgava, that is, a very old cow. The sages would kill a jaradgava and then, by Vedic mantras, bring it back to life in a youthful body. Such killing is no killing at all; it is only a kindness to the old cow. Since the brāhmaṇas of Kali have no such power, cows may not be killed now.

*(Brahma-vaivarta Purāṇa, Kṛṣṇa-janma-khaṇḍa, Chapter 185, verse 180; cited in the Malamāsa-tattva)*

164 “In the age of Kali one should give up five things: the horse sacrifice, the cow sacrifice, sannyāsa, the offering of flesh to the forefathers, and the begetting of a son by the husband’s brother.” (Brahma-vaivarta Purāṇa, Kṛṣṇa-janma-khaṇḍa, 185.180)[3]

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The aśvamedha, the gomedha, sannyāsa, a śrāddha to the forefathers with meat, and begetting a son by the husband's brother — these five are forbidden in the age of Kali.

Anubhāṣya.

aśvamedhaṁ (a particular sacrifice in which a horse is killed) gavālambhaṁ (the gomedha) sannyāsaṁ (entering the fourth āśrama) pala-paitṛkam (a śrāddha to the forefathers with meat) devareṇa (by the husband's younger brother) sutotpattiṁ (begetting a son) — (these) pañca kalau (in the Kali-yuga) vivarjayet (one should give up).

The Lord examines the customs of Islam —

165 You cannot bring them back to life; all you do is kill. For you there is no escape from hell.

166 For as many thousands of years as there are hairs on a cow's body, the killer of a cow rots in the hell of Raurava.

167 The one who gave you your scripture was himself mistaken; not knowing the essence of scripture, he gave such an order."

Anubhāṣya.

Bhrānta (mistaken): because he approved of needless violence to living beings, his absorption in a "second" (dvitīyābhiniveśa) left his understanding perverted, that is, confused.

The Kazi has no answer and admits that his scripture is incomplete —

168 Hearing this, the Kazi was dumbstruck and could find no words. After some thought he admitted defeat and said:

169 "What You have said, Paṇḍita, is true. Our scriptures are recent and cannot stand up to reasoning.

Anubhāṣya.

Ādhunika (recent) — new, arisen within time; it is not apauruṣeya (not of human authorship) like the Veda.

Vicāra-saha naya (does not withstand scrutiny): since it does not establish the eternal, real truth, it is easily refuted by reasoning.

170 Our scripture is invented — I know that well; yet out of loyalty to my community I still accept it."

Anubhāṣya.

Kalpita (invented) — born of mental speculation, and therefore not eternal truth.
Jāti — one's community and loyalty to it.

171 The reasoning of the yavanas' scriptures is by nature unsound. Smiling, Mahāprabhu questioned him once more:

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The scriptures of the yavanas are of three kinds: the old book of the "Yu" (the Jews), the Koran and the Bible. All these books have a beginning; none of them is beginningless like the words of the Veda. Therefore, since the reasoning in those scriptures has no firm root, it is open to doubt.

Anubhāṣya.

Adṛḍha vicāra (unsound reasoning) — reasoning that can be cut through, that is, refuted, by argument.

The Lord asks again —

172 "Let Me ask you one more question, uncle. Answer truly, and do not deceive Me with tricks.

173 In your town there is saṅkīrtana all the time — the din of drums and songs, singing and dancing.

174 You are the Kazi, with authority to oppose the Hindu religion; I cannot understand why you do not forbid it now."

In answer the Kazi tells of his dream —

175 The Kazi said, "Everyone calls You Gaurahari, and by that name I too shall address You.

176 Listen, Gaurahari: if we can speak in private, I shall tell You the reason."

The Lord reassures him —

177 The Lord said, "These people are My intimates. Speak plainly and have no fear."

Anubhāṣya.
Sphuṭa — clearly.

In a dream Śrī Nṛsiṁhadeva terrifies him —

178–179 The Kazi began: “When I went to a Hindu’s house, broke the mṛdaṅga and forbade the kīrtana, that very night there came a most terrible lion, with the body of a man and the face of a lion, roaring mightily.

Anubhāṣya.
Nara-deha, siṁha-mukha (a human body and a lion's face) — Śrī Nṛsiṁhadeva. He destroys enmity toward the devotees, toward devotion and toward Bhagavān, and destroys those who bear such enmity.

180 As I lay asleep, he leapt up onto me, laughing a terrible laugh and gnashing his teeth.

181 Pressing his claws into my chest, he said in a dreadful voice, ‘I will tear your chest open in return for the mṛdaṅga!

Anubhāṣya.
Phāḍimu — I will tear apart.

182 You forbid My kīrtana — I will destroy you!’ Terrified, I shut my eyes and trembled.

183 Seeing my fear, the lion grew kind and said, ‘I have humbled you only to teach you a lesson.

184 That day you did no great harm, so I have forgiven you and spared your life.

185 But if you do such a thing again, I will not bear it: I will destroy you with your whole family, and the yavanas too.’

186 With these words the lion went away, but I was filled with fear. Look — here are the marks of his claws on my chest!”

187 So saying, the Kazi bared his chest, and all who heard and saw were amazed.

188 The Kazi went on: “I have told this to no one. That same day one of my men came to me

Anubhāṣya.

Piyādā — a servant of low rank, a carrier of news or letters; in colloquial speech, a cāprāsī.

189 and said, ‘I went to stop the kīrtana, and suddenly a tongue of fire struck my face.

190 My whole beard was burnt and my face was blistered.’ Every one of my men who went there told the same story.

191 Seeing all this, I was seized with great fear; now I stay at home and do not forbid the kīrtana.

192 So the kīrtana went on in the town unhindered; and hearing of it, all the Muslims came to me with a complaint:

Anubhāṣya.

Mleccha: “One who eats beef, speaks much against [scripture] and is devoid of all proper conduct is called a mleccha.”

193 ‘The Hindu religion has grown beyond all bounds in the town; we hear nothing but “Hari! Hari!”’

194 Another said, ‘The Hindus cry “Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!”; they laugh and weep, dance and sing, and roll in the dust.

195 They raise an uproar with “Hari! Hari!” If the Pādśāh hears of it, you will pay for it.’

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Even though the Pādśāh is your relative, he can punish you. The Pādśāh — the Pādśāh of Gauḍa, “Husain” Shah.

Anubhāṣya.

Pātsāha (the Pādśāh) — ʿAlāʾ-ud-dīn Sayyid Husain Shah (1498–1511 A.D.), at that time the independent ruler of Bengal. He killed his patron and master, the terribly oppressive Nawab Muzaffar Khan of the Abyssinian (Habshi) dynasty, and ascended the throne of Bengal. On taking the masnad of Bengal he assumed the name “Sayyid Husain ʿAlāʾ-ud-dīn Sharīf Makka.” Ghulam Husain, the author of the chronicle Riyāẓ-us-Salāṭīn, says that one of Nawab Husain Shah's ancestors had been the Sharif of Mecca, and so he probably took that name in memory of his family's glory. In the stone inscriptions of Gauḍa, however, he is known simply as “Husain Shah.” After his death his eldest son Nasrat Shah became Nawab of Bengal (1521–1533 A.D.). This cruel-natured nawab terribly oppressed the Vaiṣṇavas and, as a result of his own sins, was killed in a mosque by one of his officials.

196 Then I asked those Muslims, ‘That the Hindus say “Hari” is their nature — that I understand.

197 But you are Muslims: why do you take the name of the Hindus’ God all the time?’

198 One of them said, ‘I used to make fun of the Hindus. Some of them are called Kṛṣṇadāsa, some Rāmadāsa, 199 some Haridāsa, and they were forever saying “Hari! Hari!” — I thought they meant to steal someone’s wealth.

200 Ever since then my tongue keeps saying “Hari! Hari!” I do not want it to, yet it says it — what can I do?’

201–202 Another said, ‘Listen — I too mocked the Hindus in this way, and since that day my tongue repeats the name of Kṛṣṇa and will not be stopped. I do not know what spells and herbs these Hindus know!’

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The Kazi said: “O Gaurahari, when I questioned that mleccha peon, he answered: ‘I said to the Hindus, “Some of you, calling yourselves Kṛṣṇadāsa, Rāmadāsa or Haridāsa, keep saying ‘Hari, Hari.’ But the word hari, hari means ‘I steal, I steal,’ so it seems you say ‘Hari, Hari’ (‘I take away, I take away’) because you mean to steal other people's wealth.” Ever since the day I joked with them like this, my tongue keeps saying “Hari, Hari” against my will, and I can do nothing about it.’”

Anubhāṣya.

Parihāsa (mockery) is one of the four kinds of nāmābhāsa, as it is said: “Chanting the name of Vaikuṇṭha — to indicate something else, in jest, for the sake of a tune, or with disregard — destroys all sins: so the wise know.” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 6.2.14) Yet nāmābhāsa based on indication, mockery, musical filler or disregard is not merely the material pronunciation of syllables. Directed toward the eternal, real Substance, nāmābhāsa awakens remembrance of Viṣṇu, and so it destroys the jīva's desire for sense objects. As a result, the liberated jīva, now turned toward service, gains the qualification to utter the pure name.

*The smārta pāṣaṇḍīs complain to the Kazi —*

203 When I had heard this, I sent them all home. Just then five or seven Hindu unbelievers came to me.

Anubhāṣya.

Pāṣaṇḍī — a dull follower of karma who believes in many gods, an enemy of Viṣṇu and the Vaiṣṇavas, an idolater.

204 They said, ‘Nimāi has broken the Hindu religion. He has started a kīrtana the like of which we have never heard.

205 When we keep the night vigil for Maṅgala-caṇḍī or Viṣahari, then dancing, singing and music are proper.

206 This Nimāi Paṇḍita used to be a good young man, but since He came back from Gayā He does everything the wrong way.

207 He sings at the top of His voice and claps His hands, and the sound of mṛdaṅgas and karatālas deafens our ears.

208 Who knows what He has eaten to go mad like this? He dances and sings, laughs and weeps, falls down, gets up and rolls on the ground.

209 His constant saṅkīrtana has driven the townspeople mad. At night we cannot sleep; we lie awake.

210 He has given up the name Nimāi and now has Himself called Gaurahari. He has ruined the Hindu religion by spreading heresy.

211 The low-born chant Kṛṣṇa's name and rise higher and higher. For this sin Navadvīpa will be laid waste.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Nīca bāḍa bāḍa: he performs Kṛṣṇa's kīrtana with many low-born people, and by this the low are "growing," that is, rising.

212 In the Hindu scriptures, we know, the name of Īśvara is a great mantra; if everyone hears it, the mantra loses its power.

Anubhāṣya.

These polytheists (bahv-īśvara-vādīs) are called by the word pāṣaṇḍa because they considered the Lord, or the Lord's name, "a part of karma" (karmāṅga). They did not know how supremely magnanimous and glorious Kṛṣṇa's name is. Blinded by worldly high birth and social standing, they thought: if a low person, that is, one born in a low family, takes Kṛṣṇa's name, that is a special kind of sin; therefore taking Kṛṣṇa's name depends on good family or high birth. These polytheists equated the mahā-mantra, Kṛṣṇa's name, with other mantras for japa, and thought: if the mahā-mantra, which is to be chanted always, is spoken or sung aloud — that is, if it suddenly comes onto the tongue and reaches the ear — then instead of revealing its own matchless supreme majesty and delivering everyone from Brahmā down to a blade of grass, it becomes fruitless. So opposed are they to the path of the Śrutis, these arguers whose reasoning rests on sense knowledge (akṣaja-hetuvādīs)!

213 You are the lord of this place, and all its people are yours. Summon Nimāi and drive Him out.'

Anubhāṣya.

Next they address the Kazi and say: "You are the all-powerful master of this place, and everyone in the village is subject to you. Therefore summon Nimāi Paṇḍita and expel Him from the community."

The Kazi consoles them —

214 Then I soothed them: 'Go home, all of you. I will stop Him.'

The Kazi's words to the Lord —

215 The great God of the Hindus is Nārāyaṇa — and my heart tells me that You are He."

The Lord's merciful words —

216 Hearing this, Mahāprabhu smiled and, touching the Kazi, began to speak:

Nāmābhāsa* destroys sins —*

217 "Kṛṣṇa's name in your mouth — this is most wonderful! Your sins are destroyed, and you have become supremely pure.

218 You have spoken three names — Hari, Kṛṣṇa and Nārāyaṇa. You are most fortunate and most pious."

Anubhāṣya.

Nāmābhāsa arose on the Kazi's lips.

The Kazi speaks humbly —

219 At these words tears fell from the Kazi's eyes, and touching the Lord's feet, he said with deep feeling:

220 "By Your grace my evil mind is gone. Be merciful to me, so that devotion to You may abide in me."

The Lord's words —

221 The Lord said, "I beg one gift of you: let there be no obstruction to the saṅkīrtana in Nadia."

Anubhāṣya.
That the kīrtana of Kṛṣṇa's name should meet with no obstruction in Navadvīpa.

The Kazi's promise —

222 The Kazi said, "On all who are born in my line I shall lay a solemn charge (talāk): they shall never obstruct the kīrtana."

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Tālāka — a solemnly made vow.

Anubhāṣya.
The Kazi's descendants still take part in the saṅkīrtana of Kṛṣṇa's name and have not the slightest objection to it.

The joy of the Lord and the devotees —

223 Thereupon the Lord rose, crying "Hari!", and all the Vaiṣṇavas rose with Him, raising the sound of Hari's name.

The Lord returns home with His associates —

224 The Lord set off to go on with the kīrtana, and the Kazi walked along with Him, his heart full of joy.

225 Then the son of Śacī bade the Kazi farewell and came back to His own home, dancing all the way.

226 Thus the Lord showed His grace to the Kazi. Whoever hears of it is freed from his offences.

*During the Lord's kīrtana in Śrīvāsa's house, Śrīvāsa's son leaves his body —*

227 One day the Lord was dancing with Nityānanda in Śrīvāsa's house — the two brothers together.

228 Just then Śrīvāsa's son passed away, yet no grief arose in Śrīvāsa's heart.

The truth is spoken through the mouth of the dead son —

229 The Lord made the dead son speak words of divine knowledge, and the two brothers Themselves became Śrīvāsa's sons.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One night Mahāprabhu was performing kīrtana in Śrīvāsa's courtyard, and at that time one of Śrīvāsa's sons departed from this world. Fearing that the rasa of the kīrtana would be broken, Śrīvāsa forbade everyone to show any grief, and Mahāprabhu danced and sang kīrtana until late in the night. When the kīrtana ended, Mahāprabhu could understand that some misfortune had befallen the house. Learning that Śrīvāsa's son had departed, the Lord first expressed sorrow that He had not been told sooner. Then He had the dead boy laid before Him and asked him, "Boy, why are you leaving Śrīvāsa?" The dead boy replied, "I was destined to stay in Śrīvāsa's house for a certain number of days. Those days are over, and now by Your will I am going elsewhere. I am a jīva, eternally subordinate to You and dependent on You, and I have no right to do anything beyond Your will." Hearing the dead boy's words, Śrīvāsa's family gained divine knowledge, and no grief remained in them. Then the boy's funeral rites were performed. The Lord said to Śrīvāsa, "The son you had has gone. But Nityānanda and I are your eternal sons; We can never leave you."

Anubhāṣya.

See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 25.

The Lord gives His remnants to Nārāyaṇī, Śrīvāsa's niece —

230 Then He gave boons to all the devotees, and He honoured Nārāyaṇī by giving her His remnants.

Anubhāṣya.

See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 10. Certain characterless prākṛta-sahajiyā "Ṭhākuras," pāṣaṇḍīs by nature, wishing to present Śrīla Vṛndāvana dāsa as a golaka[10], say: "Śrīmatī Nārāyaṇī ate the remnants of Śrīman Mahāprabhu's food, or His chewed betel, and as a result, while a widow, gave birth to Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa." Such slanderous babble is wholly offensive, and therefore one must not listen to it.

*A tailor born in a yavana family sees the Lord's form and goes mad —*

231 A Muslim tailor used to sew Śrīvāsa's clothes, and the Lord let him see His own form.

232 Crying, "I have seen! I have seen!", he went mad with love and began to dance, and he became foremost among Vaiṣṇavas.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

A yavana tailor who lived near Śrīvāsa used to sew his clothes. When he watched Mahāprabhu's dancing with faith and was charmed, the Lord showed him the spiritual (cinmaya) nature of His own form. The tailor began to dance, mad with prema, crying, "I have seen! I have seen!" Āgala — foremost.

At the Lord's wish Śrīvāsa describes Kṛṣṇa's sweet pastimes —

233 Absorbed in ecstasy, the Lord asked Śrīvāsa for His flute, and Śrīvāsa said, "The gopīs have stolen Your flute."

234 At this the Lord cried in ecstasy, "Tell Me! Tell Me!", and Śrīvāsa began to describe the rasa of the pastimes of Vṛndāvana.

235 First he described the sweetness of Vṛndāvana, and as the Lord listened, the joy in His heart grew.

236 Again and again the Lord said, “Tell Me! Tell Me!”, and again and again Śrīvāsa told it, at ever greater length:

237 how the sound of the flute drew the gopīs to the forest, and how Kṛṣṇa wandered there with them all;

238 and within that he described the pastimes of the six seasons, and told of the drinking of madhu, the festival of the rāsa dance and the play in the water.

239 “Tell Me! Tell Me!” said the Lord, delighting in all He heard, and then Śrīvāsa told of the rāsa dance and its play of rasa.

Anubhāṣya.

Śrīvāsa's description of Kṛṣṇa's madhura (śṛṅgāra) rasa with the gopīs of Vraja deserves special attention.

240 So, telling and hearing, they passed the night until morning came, and the Lord embraced Śrīvāsa and filled him with joy.

In Ācāryaratna's house the Lord dances in the guise of Lakṣmī —

241 Then, in the house of Ācārya Candraśekhara, He enacted Kṛṣṇa’s pastimes, and the Lord Himself took the forms of Rukmiṇī and others.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

One night in the house of Śrī Candraśekhara Ācāryaratna the Lord assumed the form of Rukmiṇī and others and enacted a pastime. Advaita, Haridāsa and many others also put on various costumes.

Anubhāṣya.

On the Lord in the mood and guise of Rukmiṇī, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 18.

242 At times He became Durgā or Lakṣmī, at times the spiritual potency (cit-śakti) herself; and seated on the couch, He gave the devotees loving devotion.

Anubhāṣya.

On the Lord, in the guise of Ādyā-śakti, giving the devotees breast milk and prema-bhakti, see the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 18.

A brāhmaṇa woman touches the Lord's feet, and the Lord throws Himself into the Gaṅgā —

243 One day, when Mahāprabhu's dancing had ended, a brāhmaṇa woman came and clasped His feet.

244 Again and again she took the dust of His feet, and seeing this, the Lord was overcome with sorrow.

245 At once the Lord ran and threw Himself into the Ganges; Nityānanda and Haridāsa caught hold of Him and brought Him out.

246 That night He stayed in the house of Vijaya Ācārya, and in the morning the devotees all took Him home.

Anubhāṣya.

This incident does not appear in the Caitanya-bhāgavata.

The Lord cries aloud, "Gopī! Gopī!" —

247 One day, sitting at home in the mood of a gopī, the Lord was calling "Gopī! Gopī!", sunk in sorrow.

*A pāṣaṇḍī student, not understanding the heart of the matter, tries to stop the Lord —*

248 A student came to see the Lord and, hearing Him call "Gopī! Gopī!", began to say:

249 “Why do You not chant the name of Kṛṣṇa? Kṛṣṇa’s name is blessed. What merit is there in saying ‘Gopī! Gopī!’?”

The Lord chases the student to strike him; the student flees —

250 Hearing this, the Lord in anger heaped reproaches on Kṛṣṇa, and He took up a stick and rose to beat the student.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Doṣodgāra — blaming with mockery.

251 The student fled in terror with the Lord running after him, until in great haste the devotees held the Lord back.

The Lord is calmed —

252 They calmed Him and brought Him back to His house, while the student ran off to the gathering of the students.

The students speak harshly of the Lord and grow angry —

253 Going to the place where a thousand students studied together, the young brāhmaṇa told them what had happened with the Lord.

254 At this the whole crowd of students grew angry, and together they all began to revile the Lord:

255 “Nimāi alone has corrupted the whole land. He wants to beat a brāhmaṇa — He has no fear of dharma!

A plot to beat the Lord —

256 If He does such a thing again, we shall beat Him. Who is He, after all? What can He do?”

For their enmity toward the Lord they lose their learning and intelligence —

257 By blaspheming the Lord they all lost their intelligence, and the learning they had studied so well no longer shone in any of them.

Anubhāṣya.

For (Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 6.23): “Only to the great soul whose supreme devotion is for God, and for the guru as for God, are the meanings of these words revealed.” That is, the true meaning of these Śrutis, whose import is devotion to Hari, is revealed only in the pure heart of that great soul whose supreme (causeless and uninterrupted) devotion is for Viṣṇu, his supreme Deity, and equally for Śrī Gurudeva, the best of His servants. In no other heart is it revealed.

Śrī Prahlāda's words (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 7.5.24): “If a person, having offered himself to Viṣṇu, performs the ninefold devotion directly for Bhagavān, I consider that the best learning.” Śrīdhara's commentary: “If it is performed already offered, and not first performed and offered afterward, I consider that the best learning. The sense is: nothing of that kind have I studied or learned from this teacher.” That is, first self-surrender, then the activity of serving Hari — this alone is the rule. Only then may the study of scripture be considered the best. No learning or study can be higher than worship of Viṣṇu preceded by self-surrender.

Under the sway of ignorance (avidyā), the proud man who prides himself on worldly learning disregards Viṣṇu, the life of the bride of transcendental knowledge. Since that hypocrite does not surrender to Viṣṇu, the eternal, real Substance, knowledge does not dawn in his heart, stained with sin. Therefore it is said (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 11.11.18): “If one expert in the śabda-brahman is not absorbed in the Supreme, his labor yields him only labor, like one who tends a cow that gives no milk.” If someone, though thoroughly versed in the Vedas and other scriptures, is not devoted to Viṣṇu, the Parabrahman, all his labor in studying scripture ends only in useless toil.

258 Even so, the proud students did not become humble; wherever they went they laughed and spoke ill of the Lord.

*Seeing the wretched fate of the pāṣaṇḍīs, the Lord is filled with compassion —*

259 The all-knowing Lord knew their plight, and sitting at home He pondered how they might be delivered:

Who the nondevotees are —

260 "All these teachers and their disciples are given to ritual duty, fruitive work and austerity — yet they are blasphemers and wicked men.

The Lord ponders how to free them from the offense of enmity toward Kṛṣṇa —

261 Because of their offence of blaspheming Me, they cannot take up devotion unless I Myself lead them to it.

262 I came to deliver them, and the very opposite has happened. How can any good come to these wicked men?

Anubhāṣya.

The Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 25: "I tried to cure the phlegm with bits of pippalī, but instead the phlegm in the body only increased."

263 If they bow down to Me, their sins will be destroyed, and then, if I lead them to devotion, they will take it up.

Anubhāṣya.

A smārta student sunk in karma could not understand that the Lord's anger toward Kṛṣṇa and His reproaches of Kṛṣṇa in the mood of a gopī were transcendental, and he argued with the Lord. The Lord, full of the mood of a gopī, took him for Kṛṣṇa's partisan and angrily chased him, and the student fled. Seeing this, the so-called brāhmaṇas (brāhmaṇa-bruvas), sunk in karma and averse to Hari, deluded as they were, plotted to beat the Lord. And the Lord, to free them from their evil fate and misery, wished to accept the fourth āśrama — the āśrama of the guru of those who, in the eyes of worldly society, are highest in birth and proud of their varṇa. See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 25.

*The Lord wishes to deliver the pāṣaṇḍīs —*

264 Those who blaspheme Me and will not bow to Me — all these souls I must surely deliver.

*The resolve to enact the pastime of sannyāsa, honored by the world —*

265 So I shall certainly take sannyāsa; then, taking Me for a sannyāsī, they will bow down to Me.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

According to the scriptures, when a brāhmaṇa accepts sannyāsa, everyone — householders, brāhmaṇas and all the rest — bows to him with the thought of a sannyāsī, that is, knowing that a sannyāsī is worthy of obeisance. If I accept sannyāsa, the blaspheming brāhmaṇas will surely bow down to Me and receive good sense from Me.

*By bowing to the Lord as a sannyāsī, even the pāṣaṇḍīs — brāhmaṇas and other high castes — will be purified in heart, and the urge to serve will awaken in them —*

266 By bowing down they will be freed from their offences, and in their purified hearts I shall make devotion arise.

Anubhāṣya.

Mahāprabhu was convinced that even so-called brāhmaṇas, pāṣaṇḍīs by nature, would prostrate themselves before a Vaiṣṇava sannyāsī; and in those days such was proper conduct (sadācāra) as well. Nowadays, however, there are people even more arrogant than those so-called brāhmaṇas, who do not prostrate themselves before a Vaiṣṇava sannyāsī. For them the scripture enjoins: “A man who sees a Deity or a tridaṇḍī yati and does not bow down must perform atonement.” (A variant reading: “…if he does not bow down, he is purified by fasting.”) That is, if some so-called brāhmaṇa sees the Deity of Śrī Viṣṇu, the supreme Godhead, or a Vaiṣṇava tridaṇḍi-sannyāsī and does not bow down, then for that lapse he must perform atonement or be purified by fasting.

267 Then these unbelievers will be delivered. There is no other way — this is the best plan.”

At that time Keśava Bhāratī accepts alms in the Lord's house in Navadvīpa —

268 Having made this firm resolve, the Lord remained at home. Then Keśava Bhāratī came to the town of Nadia.

269 The Lord bowed to him and invited him, and when He had fed him, He made His request:

The Lord appeals to Bhāratī —

270 "You are Īśvara indeed — Nārāyaṇa Himself. Be merciful and set Me free from saṁsāra."

Bhāratī's words —

271 Bhāratī said, "You are Īśvara, the Lord who dwells within all hearts. Whatever You say I shall do; I am not my own master."

*Bhāratī returns to Kāṭoyā, and the Lord accepts sannyāsa from him —*

272 With these words Bhāratī Gosāñi went to Kāṭoyā, and Mahāprabhu went there and took sannyāsa.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

At the end of Mahāprabhu's twenty-fourth year, on the day of the saṅkramaṇa (the sun's passage into a new sign) that begins the uttarāyaṇa and that fell in the bright fortnight of Māgha, Mahāprabhu left Śrī Navadvīpa at the end of the night. He swam across the Gaṅgā at "Nidayā's Ghāṭa," reached Kaṇṭakanagara, that is, the village of Kāṭoyā, and accepted (one) daṇḍa from Keśava Bhāratī. On Mahāprabhu's order Candraśekhara Ācāryaratna performed all the ritual parts of sannyāsa. The kīrtana went on all day, and only when the day was nearly over was the shaving of the head completed. The next morning Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, dressed as a sannyāsī and bearing the daṇḍa, set out to wander through Rāḍha-deśa. Keśava Bhāratī went with Him for some distance.

*At the Lord's sannyāsa: Nitāi, Ācāryaratna and Mukunda —*

273 With Him were Nityānanda, Candraśekhara Ācārya and Mukunda Datta, and these three performed all the rites.

274 Thus I have given an outline of the Ādi-līlā; Vṛndāvana dāsa has described it in detail.

Anubhāṣya.
See the Caitanya-bhāgavata, Madhya, Chapter 26.

*The Lord's states of heart in the moods of dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and madhura (but not śānta) —*

275 The son of Yaśodā has become the son of Śacī, and He tastes the four kinds of His devotees' moods.

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.
Caturvidha bhakta-bhāva (the four kinds of devotees' moods) — the four kinds of devotional mood based on the rasas of dāsya, sakhya, vātsalya and madhura.

*Gaurasundara is Himself the viṣaya-vigraha, filled with the bhāva of the āśraya; refutation of the "Gaura-nāgarī" doctrine —*

276 To taste His own sweetness and the rasa of Rādhā's love, He has fully made Rādhā's mood His own.

277 The Lord has wholly taken on the gopīs' mood, in which they hold the son of Vraja's king as their own beloved.

278 And this is the firm certainty of the gopīs' love: it does not arise for anyone but the son of the king of Vraja —

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Gaurasundara is Kṛṣṇa illumined by the mood and luster of Śrī Rādhā. Therefore, for the sake of serving Śrī Kṛṣṇa, He never gave up the heartfelt mood of Śrīmatī Rādhikā and the other gopīs, the mood of the āśraya. Never, like Śrī Kṛṣṇa Himself, did He take on the conduct of the viṣaya; that is, never, conceiving of Himself as the enjoyer, did He display the ways of a “lecherous nāgara,” such as looking at other men's wives. The worldly, lustful Sahajiyā sect, lechers after other men's wives, try to load their own abominable lustful thirst and adultery onto the shoulders of Śrī Gaurasundara, the guru of the world, who displays the pastimes of an ācārya. But by this they only increase their offense at the feet of Śrī Svarūpa Dāmodara, the crest jewel of Vaiṣṇava ācāryas, and of Ṭhākura Vṛndāvana dāsa. The Caitanya-bhāgavata, Ādi, Chapter 15: “He never jested with other men's wives; when He saw a woman, the Lord moved far to one side. In this way He was playful with everyone — only at women would He not look even from the corner of His eye. In this avatāra the Lord would not even let the word ‘woman’ reach His ears — this is known to all the world. Therefore no great soul ever offers a prayer such as ‘Gaurāṅga-nāgara.’ Although every prayer befits Him, the wise still sing only of His true nature.” In these three verses the imaginary “Gaura-nāgarī doctrine,” which opposes the conclusions of devotion and is nourished by immorality, is clearly refuted.

*The gopīs have no love for any form other than Kṛṣṇa's svayaṁ-rūpa —*

279 Śyāmasundara, adorned with a peacock feather and guñjā beads, in a cowherd’s dress, His body bent in three places, the flute at His lips.

280 If Kṛṣṇa leaves this form and takes another, the gopīs’ love does not come near Him.

*(Lalita-mādhava, Act 6, verse 14)*

281 “What wise man can fathom the ways of the gopīs’ love for the son of the cowherd king — a love that moves on a path beyond comprehension? For even when He reveals a form of Viṣṇu, wondrous in its splendour, with four victorious arms, their love, alas, shrinks back.” (Lalita-mādhava, 6.14)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa, in jest, manifested the four-armed form of Nārāyaṇa, endowed with wondrous beauty — and the love (rāga) of the gopīs, instead of awakening, shrank. So which paṇḍita can understand the workings of the gopīs' bhāva? For they follow the inaccessible path of parakīya, worshipping the son of Nanda alone.

Anubhāṣya.

Viśākhā's words to Savarṇā, the wife of Sūrya: gopīnāṁ durūha-padavī-sañcāriṇaḥ (whose nature is to move along a path hard to understand) paśupendra-nandana-juṣaḥ (of one who serves the son of the lord of the cowherds, Nanda, the king of the gopas — that is, wholly devoted to serving Kṛṣṇa) bhāvasya tāṁ prakriyāṁ vijñātuṁ (to understand) kaḥ kṛtī kṣamate (is able)? (For) hanta! jiṣṇubhiḥ (victorious) caturbhiḥ bhujaiḥ (the arms of the Nārāyaṇa form He has assumed) adbhuta-rociṁ (whose luster, whose beauty, is wondrous — unearthly and full of radiance) vaiṣṇavīṁ tanuṁ āviṣkurvati (when He manifests) tasmin (in Kṛṣṇa) api yāsāṁ (of the gopīs) rāgodayaḥ kuñcati (does not blossom).

*Wishing to hide during the rāsa, Kṛṣṇa shows the gopīs a four-armed form and so protects Himself —*

282 In spring, as Kṛṣṇa was dancing the rāsa by Govardhana, He made a sign to Rādhā and disappeared.

283 He sat in a secluded bower watching the path for Rādhā, and a troop of gopīs came there searching for Him.

Anubhāṣya.

Bāṭa — a path, a road. Ṭhāṭa — an army drawn up in ranks.

284 Seeing Kṛṣṇa from afar, the gopīs cried, “Look, there in the bower is the son of Vraja’s king!”

285 Seeing the gopīs, Kṛṣṇa was alarmed; He could not hide, and fear overcame Him.

Anubhāṣya.

Sādhvasa — fear, terror, apprehension, agitation of the mind, confusion.

286 So He took a four-armed form and sat there, and seeing Kṛṣṇa thus, the gopīs came near and said,

*The gopīs offer prayers to Nārāyaṇa —*

287 “This is not Kṛṣṇa; this is a form of Nārāyaṇa.” So saying, they all bowed to Him and offered praise:

288 “Obeisance to Nārāyaṇa! O Lord, be gracious: grant us Kṛṣṇa’s company and take away our sorrow.”

Anubhāṣya.
More — to us.

289 With these words they bowed and went away, and just then Rādhā came into view.

*As soon as Śrīmatī Rādhikā arrives, the four-armed form vanishes: the two-armed form is the svayaṁ-rūpa —*

290 Seeing Rādhā, Kṛṣṇa wanted to keep that four-armed form, to tease Her as well.

291 But before Rādhā two of His arms vanished; try as He might, Kṛṣṇa could not keep them.

Śrī Rādhā's inconceivable love for Kṛṣṇa —

292 Such is the inconceivable power of Rādhā’s pure love, which brought Kṛṣṇa back to His own two-armed nature.

*Kṛṣṇa's cleverness is defeated before Śrī Rādhā; Śyāmasundara is the eternal svayaṁ-rūpa — (Ujjvala-nīlamaṇi, section 7, the words of Śrī Rūpa Gosvāmī)*

293 “At the start of the rāsa dance Kṛṣṇa hid in a bower, but the doe-eyed gopīs saw Him; to conceal Himself, He cleverly showed them a four-armed form. Yet before the splendour of Rādhā's love even the all-powerful Hari could not keep it. Ah, how great is Her love!" (Ujjvala-nīlamaṇi)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

At the beginning of the rāsa, Kṛṣṇa, in play, hid in a kuñja. Seeing the doe-eyed gopīs coming toward Him, He grew anxious and displayed His charming four-armed form. The ordinary gopīs said only, "This is not Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the object of our love." But how wondrous is the glory of Rādhā's love! As soon as Śrī Rādhā arrived, Kṛṣṇa, try as He might, could not keep that four-armed form.

Anubhāṣya.

govardhanopatyakāyāṁ (in the valley at Govardhana, at the site of the rāsa known as "Parāsaulī") vasanta-kāle (in spring) rāsārambha-vidhau (at the beginning of the rāsa dance, that is, when it was about to begin) kuñje nilīya vasatā (hiding) hariṇā (by Śrī Kṛṣṇa) mṛgākṣi-gaṇaiḥ (doe-eyed) gopībhiḥ (by the gopīs — in the forest Praviṣṭaka, called Peṭhā) dṛṣṭaṁ svam (Himself) gopayituṁ (to hide — for the many gopīs had surrounded that kuñja on all sides, and it was impossible to slip away from it suddenly) uddhura-dhiyā (with superb intelligence) yā catur-bāhutā suṣṭhu sandarśitā, yasya (of the glory of love for Kṛṣṇa) śriyā prabhaviṣṇunā (by Kṛṣṇa) api sā catur-bāhutā rakṣituṁ na śakyā āsīt — hanta (oh!) rādhāyāḥ praṇayasya mahimā (glory) — (so inconceivable is it). (In the Gautamīya-tantra: "…dwelling on the beautiful hill of Govardhana, eager to taste the rasa of the rāsa dance." Bhagavān is subordinate to prema; still, one cannot say that His majesty ceases to exist before prema, for it is eternal; rather, it becomes hidden.)

Nanda is Jagannātha Miśra; Yaśodā is Śacī —

294 He who was the king of Vraja is here Jagannātha, the father; she who was the queen of Vraja is here Śacīdevī, the mother.

Kānāi and Balāi of Vraja are Gaura and Nitāi of Gauḍa —

295 He who was Nanda's son is here Caitanya Gosāñi; He who was Baladeva is here Nityānanda, His brother.

*Nityānanda Rāma serves Gaura-Kṛṣṇa in all the rasas except madhura —*

296 Filled with three moods — parental love, servitude and friendship — Nityānanda is the helper of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya.

297 Giving prema-bhakti, He flooded the world; people cannot understand His wondrous ways.

*Advaita, the avatāra of a devotee, preaches pure devotion —*

298 Advaita Ācārya Gosāñi is the incarnation as a devotee (bhakta-avatāra); He brought Kṛṣṇa down and preached devotion.[4]

Advaita serves Gaura-Kṛṣṇa in two moods —

299 Friendship and servitude are His two natural moods, and at times the Lord treats Him as His guru.

*The dāsya of Śrīvāsa and the other pure devotees —*

300 Śrīvāsa and all the other devotees of Mahāprabhu serve Caitanya, each in his own mood.

*The Lord's potencies — Gadādhara, Svarūpa, Rāmānanda, Śrī Rūpa and others — serve Gaura-Kṛṣṇa in madhura-rasa —*

301 Paṇḍita Gosāñi and the others — whatever each one's rasa, in that very rasa the Lord comes under his control.[5]

Anubhāṣya.

These verses describe the gradations in the wondrous variety of moods in which Śrī Nityānanda and Śrī Advaita serve Gaura, transcendentally and supremely marvelously. The Gaura-gaṇoddeśa-dīpikā (11–16): "Gauracandra is in the form of a devotee, for He is the son of Nanda. Nityānanda, who in Vraja is Śrī Halāyudha, is a devotee by His very nature. Ācārya Advaita, who is Śrī Sadāśiva, is the avatāra of a devotee. Śrīnivāsa and the others are called devotees, for they are in the form of devotees. The foremost of the twice-born, Śrī Gadādhara Paṇḍita, is the potency of a devotee. Śrīmad Viśvambhara, Advaita and the avadhūta Nityānanda — here three vigrahas are to be recognized, and all three are prabhus. One is Mahāprabhu, Śrī Caitanya, the ocean of mercy; two are prabhus, the illustrious great souls Nityānanda and Advaita. They are gosvāmīs and vigrahas; and together with Gadādhara, the twice-born, and Śrīnivāsa Paṇḍita, they make up the Pañca-tattva. On this the Gosvāmī Śrī Svarūpa, whose feet are lotuses, said: 'Here three vigrahas are to be known, and these three are prabhus: one is Mahāprabhu, and two are prabhus; so the saintly hold.'" Ibid., verses 23–24: Śrī Īśvara Purī served in śṛṅgāra-rasa, Advaita Prabhu in dāsya- and sakhya-rasa, and Śrī Raṅgapurī in pure vātsalya-rasa. See Ādi 7.10–17.

*In Vraja, the pastimes of Śyāma, the cowherd's son with the flute at His lips; in Gauḍa, the pastimes of Gaura, the embodiment of kīrtana in the guise of a brāhmaṇa and a sannyāsī —*

302 There He is Śyāma, the flute at His lips, sporting as a cowherd boy; here He is Gaura — at times a brāhmaṇa, at times a sannyāsī.

*Kṛṣṇa, filled with the mood of the gopīs, tastes love for Kṛṣṇa in the form of Gaura —*

303 Therefore the Lord Himself, taking on the mood of the gopīs, calls the son of Vraja's king "Lord of My life".

*Without following those who follow Rūpa, Gaura's rasa of separation (vipralambha) cannot be fathomed —*

304 He is Kṛṣṇa, and He is a gopī — a supreme contradiction! The Lord's inconceivable ways are very hard to understand.

Anubhāṣya.
See Ādi 17.276–278.

Gaura's inconceivable moods, full of supreme and wondrous variety, are beyond logic —

305 Let no one raise doubts about this by argument: such is Kṛṣṇa's inconceivable potency.

306 Inconceivable and wondrous are the pastimes of Kṛṣṇa Caitanya — wondrous His moods, wondrous His qualities, wondrous His ways.

The wretched fate of the logician: "The doubter perishes"[11] —

307 The wicked man who rejects this by argument rots in Kumbhīpāka, with no way out.

Anubhāṣya.

Kumbhīpāka — a particular hell, where sinners are cooked in a special vessel called a kumbhī. (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 5.26.13): "One who in this world cruelly cooks animals or birds alive — merciless, despised even by man-eaters — is cooked in the next world by the servants of Yama in Kumbhīpāka, in boiling oil." The jīva who kills living beings deserves Yama's punishment and is cooked in Kumbhīpāka.

*(Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, the wave on sthāyi-bhāva, 93)*

308 "What is inconceivable should not be put to the test of argument. And what lies beyond material nature — that is the mark of the inconceivable." (Bhakti-rasāmṛta-sindhu, 2.5.93)

Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya.

The truth that lies beyond prakṛti — that is the mark of the inconceivable. Logic (tarka) is material, and so it cannot touch that truth. Therefore one should not apply logic to what is inconceivable.

Thus ends the seventeenth chapter of the "Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya."

Anubhāṣya.

Dhṛtarāṣṭra wished to hear the names of the rivers, mountains, forests and other things on the earth, and in reply to his question Sañjaya said: ye bhāvāḥ acintyāḥ (beyond thought that is full of material enjoyment) khalu (certainly), tān acintya- bhāvān tarkeṇa na yojayet (meaning: one should not assail them with arguments); yat ca prakṛtibhyaḥ param (other, beyond — in short, transcendental), tat eva acintyasya lakṣaṇam.

Only one who has faith attains service —

309 Whoever has faith in Caitanya's wondrous pastimes comes to His feet.

310 In the course of the story I have told the essence of this conclusion; whoever hears it attains pure devotion.

Repetition —

311 When I restate what the book has already told, the reader comes to taste its meaning.

*The chapters described after the manner of Śrī Vyāsa in the Bhāgavatam —*

312 So it is Vyāsa's way in the Bhāgavatam: as he tells the story, he restates it again and again.

Anubhāṣya.
At the end of the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, in the twelfth chapter of the twelfth canto, Śrī Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana Vedavyāsa summarized the entire Bhāgavatam from beginning to end in 52 verses and so concluded the book. Following the path shown by that mahājana, the author too briefly recapitulates Śrī Caitanya's Ādi-līlā.

Repetition, briefly describing the chapters —

313 So now I shall count the chapters of the Ādi-līlā. In the first chapter I made the "auspicious invocation";

314 the second chapter is the "determining of the truth of Caitanya": He who is Svayam Bhagavān, the son of Vraja's king,

315 is Caitanya-Kṛṣṇa, the son of Śacī. The third chapter gives the "general" cause of His birth, 316 and within it the "special" cause, the gift of prema; the religion of the age is the preaching of Kṛṣṇa's name and of prema.

317 In the fourth I told the "root" cause of His birth: to taste the blissful rasa of love for His own sweetness.

318 The fifth determines the truth of Śrī Nityānanda: Nityānanda was Rāma, the son of Rohiṇī.

319 The sixth chapter considers the truth of Advaita: Advaita Ācārya is the avatāra of Mahā-Viṣṇu.

320 The seventh chapter gives the account of the Pañca-tattva — how the five truths together gave away prema.

321 The eighth gives the reason for describing Caitanya's pastimes and tells the great glory of a single name of Kṛṣṇa.

322 The ninth describes the wish-fulfilling tree of devotion, which Śrī Caitanya, the gardener, planted.

323 The tenth counts the branches of the main trunk and tells how all the branches gave out the fruit.

324 The eleventh gives the account of Nityānanda's branches, and the twelfth describes the branches of Advaita's trunk.

325 The thirteenth gives the account of Mahāprabhu's birth — how the Lord was born amid the chanting of Kṛṣṇa's name.

326 The fourteenth gives some account of the childhood pastimes, and the fifteenth tells of the boyhood pastimes in brief.

327 In the sixteenth I gave an outline of the pastimes of youth, and in the seventeenth I told especially of the pastimes of young manhood.

Anubhāṣya.

Verses 313 to 327 list the chapters. In the first chapter — the maṅgalācaraṇa, with obeisance to the gurus and others. In the second — the maṅgalācaraṇa that points to the truth of Gaura. In the third — the general cause of the avatāra: the gift of prema. In the fourth — the root cause of the avatāra. In the fifth — the truth of Nityānanda. In the sixth — the truth of Advaita set forth. In the seventh — the Pañca-tattva set forth, and its preaching. In the eighth — the introduction and the glory of the name. In the ninth — the description of the wish-fulfilling tree of devotion, and its preaching. In the tenth — the list of Gaura's associates. In the eleventh — the list of Nityānanda's associates. In the twelfth — the list of Advaita's and Gadādhara's associates. In the thirteenth — Gaura's birth pastime. In the fourteenth — the pastimes of childhood. In the fifteenth — the paugaṇḍa pastimes. In the sixteenth — the kaiśora pastimes. In the seventeenth — the pastimes of youth.

328 These are the seventeen chapters of the Ādi-līlā; twelve of them form the preface to the book.

329 In five chapters I have told the deeds of the five ages, very briefly, without going into detail.

Anubhāṣya.

The Ādi-līlā has seventeen chapters, or sections (prabandhas). Of these, the first twelve are only the preface, or introduction, to the book. The following five chapters, from the thirteenth to the seventeenth, are five sections on the five ages: “birth,” “childhood” (bālya), “boyhood” (paugaṇḍa), “youth” (kaiśora) and “young manhood” (yuvā).

330 Vṛndāvana dāsa has described all this in detail in the Caitanya-maṅgala, by the strength of Nityānanda’s order.[6]

Gaura's pastimes are boundless —

331 The pastimes of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya are wondrous and endless; even Brahmā, Śiva and Śeṣa cannot reach their end.

Anubhāṣya.
See Madhya 21.10 and 12, and Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam 2.7.41, 10.14.7 and other verses.

The supreme good for those who hear and chant Gaura's pastimes —

332 Whoever tells or hears any part of them is blessed; soon Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya will meet him —

333 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, Advaita and Nityānanda, Śrīvāsa, Gadādhara and the whole host of devotees.

Homage to the devotees who live in Vṛndāvana —

334 All the devotees who dwell in Vṛndāvana — humbly I place the feet of them all upon my head.

Obeisance to the gurus —

335–336 Placing on my head the feet of Śrī Svarūpa, Śrī Rūpa, Śrī Sanātana, Śrī Raghunātha dāsa and Śrī Jīva, I bow to them, and ever hoping for their mercy, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.

Anubhāṣya.
Śrī Svarūpa — Śrī Svarūpa Dāmodara; see Madhya 10.102–127 and the Anubhāṣya.

Thus ends the seventeenth chapter of the “Anubhāṣya.”
