Chapter 16

The Journey to Gauḍa Once Again

(English translation from the Bengali, following the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition and the «Anubhāṣya», 2026 — draft)

1 Sprinkling the garden of Gauḍa with the nectar of His glances, the cloud that is Gaura revived the people — creepers scorched by the fire of worldly existence.[1]

2 Glory, glory to Gauracandra! Glory to Nityānanda! Glory to Advaitacandra! Glory to all the devotees of Gaura![2]

3 The Lord conceived the desire to go to Vṛndāvana, and when Pratāparudra heard of it, he was downcast.

4 The king summoned the two of them, Sārvabhauma and Rāmānanda, and spoke to them humbly:

5 “The Lord has a mind to leave Nīlādri and go elsewhere. Please make every effort to keep Him here.

6 Without Him this kingdom gives me no pleasure. Use every means to keep the Gosāñi here.”

7 Then the Lord took counsel with the two of them, Rāmānanda and Sārvabhauma: “I will go to Vṛndāvana.”

8 Both of them said, “See the Ratha-yātrā first; when Kārtika comes, then You may go.”

9 When Kārtika came, they said, “Now it is bitterly cold. See the Dola-yātrā and then go — that is the proper way.”

10 Saying “today, tomorrow,” they raised one pretext after another; afraid of separation, they would not consent to His going.

11 Although the Lord is independent and no one can stop Him, He would not leave without the consent of His devotees.

12 In the third year all the devotees of Gauḍa resolved to go to Nīlācala.

13 They all gathered and went to Advaita Ācārya, and the Ācārya joyfully set out to see the Lord.

14–15 Although the Lord had ordered Nityānanda Prabhu to stay in Gauḍa and reveal prema-bhakti, Nityānanda set out all the same to see Mahāprabhu. Who can understand the ways of His love?

16–17 Ācāryaratna, Vidyānidhi, Śrīvāsa, Rāmāi, Vāsudeva, Murāri, and Govinda with his two brothers set out. Rāghava Paṇḍita packed his bags (jhāli) for the journey, and the residents of Kulīna-grāma came bringing silk ropes.[3]

18 Narahari of Khaṇḍa and Śrī Raghunandana came too. All the devotees set out — who can count them?

19 Śivānanda Sena settled the tolls at the crossings; taking care of everyone, he led them happily along.

20 He attended to everyone's needs and found them places to stay, for Śivānanda knew the roads through Orissa well.

21 That year all the ladies went to see the Lord. Acyuta's mother went with the Ācārya.

22 Mālinī went with Śrīvāsa Paṇḍita, and Śivānanda's wife went with him.

23 Śivānanda's son, named Caitanya dāsa, also set out joyfully to see the Lord.

24 Ācāryaratna's wife went with him. I do not know how to describe her love.[4]

25 To offer Mahāprabhu a meal, all the ladies brought from home many of the Lord's favourite foods.

26 Śivānanda Sena arranged everything. He pacified the toll collectors (ghāṭiyāla) and found lodgings for everyone.

27 Everywhere he looked after them all and gave them food, and he went on in supreme bliss to see the Lord.

28 Coming to Remuṇā, they had darśana of Gopīnātha, and there the Ācārya sang and danced.

29 Nityānanda was known to all the people there, and the temple servants came and showed Him great honour.

30 All those great souls stayed there that night, and a servant brought twelve pots of kṣīra (sweet rice) and set them before the devotees.

31 Nityānanda Prabhu divided the kṣīra and gave it to everyone, and receiving that kṣīra-prasāda, they were all filled with joy.

32 The story of Mādhava Purī, the installation of Gopāla, how Gopāla asked him for sandalwood,[5]

33 and how Gopīnātha stole kṣīra for his sake — they had heard this story earlier from Mahāprabhu's own mouth.

34 Now Nityānanda told that story among them all, and the Vaiṣṇavas' hearts swelled with joy as they listened.

35 Travelling on in this way, they came to Kaṭaka. There they saw Sākṣi-gopāla and stayed that day.

36 Nityānanda told the story of Sākṣi-gopāla, and the Vaiṣṇavas' hearts swelled with joy as they listened.

37 Their hearts were all eager to meet the Lord, so they hurried on to Śrī Nīlācala.

38 Hearing that they had reached Āṭhāranālā, the Gosāñi placed two garlands in Govinda's hands and sent him to them.

39 Govinda put the two garlands on the two of them, and Advaita and the Avadhūta Gosāñi (Nityānanda) were overjoyed.

40 Right there they began Kṛṣṇa-saṅkīrtana, and the two of them came on, dancing all the way.

41 Then Śacī's son gave garlands to Svarūpa and His other associates and sent them ahead.

42 Coming to Narendra, they met everyone there and put Mahāprabhu's garlands on them all.

43 When Gaurarāya heard that they had reached the Siṁha-dvāra, the Lord came Himself and met them all.

44 Taking them all with Him, He had darśana of Jagannātha, and then He brought them all back to His own residence.

45 Vāṇīnātha and Kāśī Miśra brought prasāda, and the Lord served it to everyone with His own hand.

46 He sent each of them to the lodging they had had the year before and let them rest.

47 In this way the devotees stayed four months, enjoying the pastimes of kīrtana with the Lord.

48 When the time of the Ratha-yātrā came, He took them all, as before, and washed the Guṇḍicā temple.

49 The residents of Kulīna-grāma gave silk ropes to Jagannātha, and as before He danced in front of the chariot.

50 After dancing a great deal He went to the garden, and there He rested on the bank of the pond.

51 There was a most fortunate brāhmaṇa from Rāḍha named Kṛṣṇadāsa, a servant of Nityānanda.

52 He filled a pitcher and bathed the Lord, and the Lord was greatly pleased.

53 A great deal of prasāda came from the Balagaṇḍi offering, and Mahāprabhu honoured it with them all.

54 As before, He watched the Ratha-yātrā, and with His devotees He saw the festival of Herā-pañcamī.

55 Ācārya Gosāñi invited the Lord, and in the midst of it He brought on a storm of wind and rain.[6]

56 Vṛndāvana dāsa has described this in detail. Then Śrīvāsa invited the Lord.[7]

57 Mālinī cooked all the Lord's favourite dishes. In devotion she thought of herself as His maidservant; in affection she was His mother.

58 Ācāryaratna and the other leading devotees invited the Lord from time to time.

59 At the end of Cāturmāsya the Lord would again take Nityānanda aside every day and confer with Him in private.

60 Ācārya Gosāñi spoke to the Lord in hints, reciting riddles (tarjā) that no one could understand.[8]

61 Śacī's son looked at Advaita's face and smiled, and the Ācārya, taking this as the Lord's assent, began to dance.

62 No one understood whether it was a prayer or an instruction. Then the Lord embraced Him and bade Him farewell.[9]

63 The Lord said to Nityānanda, "Listen, Śrīpāda: I beg this of You — grant Me this favour.

64 Do not come to Nīlācala every year. Stay in Gauḍa and fulfil My desire.

65 I see no one else who could accomplish it. My difficult work can be done only by You."

66 Nityānanda said, "I am the body and You are the life. Body and life are not separate; that is beyond doubt.[10]

67 Yet by Your inconceivable potency You keep them apart. Whatever You have Me do, that I do; there is no rule here."

68 The Lord embraced Him and bade Him farewell, and in the same way He bade farewell to all the devotees.

69 As before, a resident of Kulīna-grāma submitted, "Lord, please instruct me: what is my duty, my practice?"

70 The Lord said, "Serve the Vaiṣṇavas and chant the holy name in saṅkīrtana. Do these two, and you will quickly attain the feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa."

71 He asked, "Who is a Vaiṣṇava? What are his marks?" Then the Lord, knowing his mind, smiled and said,

72 "One on whose lips the name of Kṛṣṇa is always present is the best of Vaiṣṇavas. Worship his feet."[11]

73 A year later they asked the same question again, and the Lord taught them the gradation of Vaiṣṇavas:

74 "One whose very sight brings the name of Kṛṣṇa to the lips — know him to be the foremost Vaiṣṇava."[12]

75 Step by step the Lord described the marks of a Vaiṣṇava: the Vaiṣṇava, the higher Vaiṣṇava (vaiṣṇavatara) and the highest Vaiṣṇava (vaiṣṇavatama).[13]

76 In this way all the Vaiṣṇavas returned to Gauḍa. That year Vidyānidhi stayed on in Nīlādri.

77 He had a loving friendship with Svarūpa, and the two of them stayed together, absorbed in talks about Kṛṣṇa.

78 He gave the mantra to Gadādhara Paṇḍita a second time, and he saw the festival on the day of Oḍana-ṣaṣṭhī.

79 There Jagannātha is dressed in starched (māḍuyā) cloth, and when Vidyānidhi saw this, he felt disgust.[14]

80 That night Jagannātha and Balāi came to him, and the two brothers slapped him, laughing all the while.

81 His cheeks swelled, but the Ācārya (Vidyānidhi) rejoiced at heart. Vṛndāvana dāsa has described this in detail.[15]

82 In this way the devotees of Gauḍa came every year, stayed with the Lord and saw the festival.

83 Whatever was special in particular years, I shall relate fully and in detail later on.

84 So four years of Mahāprabhu’s life passed. Going south and coming back took two years.

85 For another two years He wanted to go to Vṛndāvana, but because of Rāmānanda's insistence the Lord could not set out.

86 In the fifth year the devotees of Gauḍa came; they saw the Ratha-yātrā, but they did not stay and returned to Gauḍa.

87 Then the Lord embraced Sārvabhauma and Rāmānanda and spoke to them sweetly:

88 "I long very much to go to Vṛndāvana, but because of your insistence I have not gone for two years.

89 I shall certainly go now; please, both of you, give your consent. I have no refuge but you two.

90 In Gauḍa-deśa I have two shelters, My mother and the Jāhnavī (Gaṅgā); both are all-merciful.

91 I shall go by way of Gauḍa-deśa and see them both. Be pleased, both of you, and give Me leave."

92 Hearing the Lord's words, they reflected, "To press the Lord too hard is never good."

93 They both said, "Now it is the rainy season; You cannot travel. When Vijayā-daśamī comes, You will certainly go."

94 Mahāprabhu happily saw the rainy season through, and on the day of Vijayā-daśamī He set out.

95 He took with Him all the prasāda of Jagannātha that He had received — kaḍāra ointment, sandalwood paste and ropes.

96 He begged leave of Jagannātha and set out at dawn, and the Oḍiyā devotees came following behind Him.

97 With some effort the Lord made the Oḍiyā devotees turn back, and with His own associates He came to Bhavānīpura.

98 Rāmānanda came after Him, riding in a palanquin, and Vāṇīnātha sent a great deal of prasāda.

99 After taking the prasāda He stayed there, and setting out in the morning, the Lord came to Bhuvaneśvara.

100 Coming to Kaṭaka, He had darśana of Gopāla, and the brāhmaṇa Svapneśvara invited the Lord for a meal.

101 Rāmānanda Rāya invited all the associates, and the Lord came to a garden outside the town and stayed there.

102 After His meal He rested under a bakula tree, and Rāmānanda Rāya went to Pratāparudra.

103 Delighted at the news, the king came at once, and seeing the Lord, he fell flat on the ground like a rod.

104 Overwhelmed by love, he rose and fell again and again; he offered prayers, the hair of his body stood on end, and tears flowed from his eyes.

105 Seeing his devotion, the Lord was pleased at heart. Mahāprabhu rose and embraced him.

106 Again the king offered prayers and bowed down, and his body was bathed in tears of the Lord's mercy.[16]

107 Rāmānanda calmed the king and seated him, and the Lord showed him mercy in body, mind and words.

108 Gaurarāya showed him such mercy that He came to be called “the Saviour of Pratāparudra.”

109 The king’s ministers paid homage to the Lord, and Śacī’s son gave the king leave to go.

110 Coming outside, the king had an order drawn up and sent it to all the revenue officers (viṣayī) of his kingdom:

111 “In every village build new lodgings; fill five or seven houses with all provisions.

112 Escort the Lord there yourselves and lodge Him, and stay in His service night and day, cane in hand.”

113 The king gave this order to two of his chief ministers, Haricandana and Maṅgarāja: “See to everything.

114 Bring a new boat and keep it at the river bank where the Lord will bathe and cross the river.

115 Erect a pillar there and make it a great tīrtha. Bathe there every day — and may I leave my body there.[17]

116 Build excellent new lodgings in Caturdvāra. And you, Rāmānanda, go to Mahāprabhu.”[18]

117 The king heard that the Lord would set out in the evening, and he had the royal ladies seated in tents on the backs of elephants.

118 They stood in a row along the road the Lord was to take, and in the evening the Lord set out with His associates.

119 Coming to the river Citrotpalā, He bathed at the ghāṭ, and all the queens watched Him and bowed down.[19]

120 At the sight of the Lord they were all filled with love; they cried "Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!" and tears streamed from their eyes.

121 Nowhere in the three worlds have I heard of one so merciful: love for Kṛṣṇa awakens even in those who see Him from afar.

122 The Lord boarded the boat and crossed the river, and travelling on through the moonlit night He came to Caturdvāra.

123 He stayed there that night and bathed in the morning. Just then Jagannātha's mahā-prasāda arrived.

124 By the king's order the paḍichā sent prasāda day after day — a great quantity of it, carried by many people.

125 The Lord accepted the prasāda with His associates, then rose and set out, calling "Hari! Hari!"

126 Rāmānanda, Maṅgarāja and Śrī Haricandana — these three went along with Him, serving Him.

127–129 With the Lord were Purī Gosāñi, Svarūpa Dāmodara, Jagadānanda, Mukunda, Govinda, Kāśīśvara, Haridāsa Ṭhākura, Vakreśvara Paṇḍita, Gopīnāthācārya, Dāmodara Paṇḍita, Rāmāi, Nandāi and many other devotees. I have named only the chief among them — who can count them all?

130 When Gadādhara Paṇḍita set out with them, the Lord forbade him: “Do not give up your kṣetra-sannyāsa.”[20]

131 The Paṇḍita said, “Wherever You are, that is Nīlācala. Let my kṣetra-sannyāsa go to Rasātala!”

132 The Lord said, “Stay here and serve Gopīnātha.” The Paṇḍita said, “Seeing Your feet is worth ten million services.”

133 The Lord said, “If you give up the service, the fault will fall on Me. Stay here and serve — that will please Me.”

134 The Paṇḍita said, “All the fault will fall on me. I shall not go with You; I shall go alone.

135 I shall go to see Āi (Mother Śacī), not for Your sake. The fault of giving up my vow and my service — that I shall bear myself.”[21]

136 Saying this, Paṇḍita Gosāñi travelled on separately. When the Lord reached Kaṭaka, He had him brought to Him.

137 The Paṇḍita’s love for Gaurāṅga is beyond understanding: he gave up his vow and the service of Śrī Kṛṣṇa as though they were a blade of grass.

138 Inwardly the Lord was pleased with his conduct, but He took him by the hand and spoke with loving anger:

139 “You meant to give up your vow and your service, and you have succeeded: you have left them behind and come to a distant land.

140 In wanting to stay with Me, you seek your own happiness. But you are failing in both your duties, and that makes Me sad.

141 If you want My happiness, go back to Nīlācala. I bind you by My oath — not one word more."

142 Saying this, Mahāprabhu got into the boat, and the Paṇḍita fell there unconscious.

143 The Lord ordered Sārvabhauma to take the Paṇḍita back with him. The Bhaṭṭācārya said, "Get up — such is the Lord's līlā.

144 You know how Kṛṣṇa gave up His own promise: moved by mercy for His devotee, He kept Bhīṣma's promise.

145 'To make my promise true, He gave up His own: He leapt down from the chariot, took up a chariot wheel and rushed at me like a lion about to kill an elephant; the earth trembled beneath Him, and His upper cloth fell away.' (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 1.9.37)[22]

146 In the same way the Lord endured separation from you and took great pains to protect your vow."

147 With these words the Bhaṭṭācārya consoled the Paṇḍita, and the two of them, stricken with grief, came back to Nīlācala.

148 For the Lord's sake the devotees give up their religious duties and works, yet the Lord cannot bear to see a devotee's duty suffer.

149 These are the strange turns of love (premera vivarta). Whoever hears of them soon attains Caitanya's feet.[23]

150 When the Lord came to Yājapura, He bade farewell to the two royal officers who were travelling with Him.

151 The Lord sent them back, but Rāya went on with Him, and night and day He talked of Kṛṣṇa with Rāmānanda.

152 In every village, by royal order, the king's servants served Him with a new house and all kinds of provisions.

153 Travelling in this way, the Lord came to Remuṇā, and from there He sent Rāmānanda Rāya back.[24]

154 Rāya fell to the ground unconscious, and the Lord took him on His lap and wept.

155 Rāya's grief at parting was unbearable; I cannot describe it.[25]

156 Then the Lord came to the border of the land of Oḍhra, and there the king's governor met Him.

157 He served the Lord for a few days and then explained to Him what lay ahead on the road.

158 "Ahead lies the domain of a drunken yavana king. For fear of him no one can travel this road.

159 All the land as far as Picchaladā is his, and for fear of him no one can cross the river.

160 Stay here a few days. I will make a truce with him, and then I will send You on comfortably by boat."

161 At that time one of that yavana's men came to the Oriyā camp in disguise.[26]

162 Seeing the Lord's wonderful ways, the spy in his Hindu guise went back to the yavana and said,

163 "A sannyāsī has come from Jagannātha, and many perfected souls are with Him.

164 All of them constantly perform the saṅkīrtana of Kṛṣṇa, laughing, dancing, singing and weeping.

165 Hundreds of thousands of people come to see it, and once they have seen Him, they cannot go home again.

166 All those people become like madmen: crying 'Kṛṣṇa!', they dance, weep and roll on the ground.

167 It is not something one can describe; one knows it only by seeing it. Such is His power that I accept Him as God (Īśvara)."

168 Saying this, the spy himself began to sing "Hari! Kṛṣṇa!", laughing, weeping, dancing and singing like a madman.

169 Hearing this, the yavana had a change of heart, and he sent his own secretary (viśvāsa) to the Oriyā officer.[27]

170 The secretary came and bowed at the Lord's feet, and, crying "Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!", he was overwhelmed with love.

171 Composing himself, he bowed to the Oriyā officer and said, "The mleccha governor has sent me to you.

172 If you give permission, the yavana governor will come here, meet the Lord and go back.

173 He is very eager and has asked most humbly. This is a truce with you; there need be no fear of war."

174 Hearing this, the Mahāpātra was amazed and said, "Who could make the heart of a drunken yavana like this?

175 It is Mahāprabhu Himself who has changed his heart: the whole world is delivered by seeing Him and by remembering Him."

176 Saying this, he told the secretary, "It is his good fortune. Let him come and see the Lord.

177 I will trust him if he comes unarmed, bringing only five or seven servants with him."

178 The secretary went and told him everything, and the yavana came dressed as a Hindu.

179 Seeing the Lord from afar, he fell to the ground in prostrate obeisance, in tears and with his hair standing on end.

180 The Mahāpātra brought him forward with honour, and with joined palms he chanted the name of Kṛṣṇa before the Lord:

181 "Why was I born in a low yavana family? Why did Providence not have me born in a Hindu family?

182 Had I been a Hindu, I would have gained a place near Your feet. This body of mine is useless — let my life go!"

183 Hearing this, the Mahāpātra was overwhelmed with feeling; clasping the Lord's feet, he praised Him:

184 “By hearing Your holy name even a caṇḍāla becomes pure — and this soul has gained the sight of such a Lord as You!

185 What wonder is there in his coming to such a state? Such is the power of seeing You.”

186 “O Lord, if even a dog-eater hears and chants Your name, bows down to You or remembers You but once, he is instantly made fit to perform Vedic sacrifice. How much more, then, one who sees You!” (Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam, 3.33.6)[28]

187 Then Mahāprabhu cast a merciful glance on him and, reassuring him, said, “Chant ‘Kṛṣṇa’ and ‘Hari’.”

188 He said, “If You have accepted me, give me one order, so that I may serve You.

189 I have done endless violence to cows, brāhmaṇas and Vaiṣṇavas. May I be delivered from that sin.”

190 Then Mukunda Datta said, “Listen, good sir: Mahāprabhu wishes to go to the bank of the Gaṅgā.

191 Help Him in some way to get there. That is the great order, and that will be a great service.”

192 Then he bowed at Mahāprabhu’s feet and at the feet of all, and went away rejoicing.

193 The Mahāpātra embraced him and, giving him many gifts, made friends with him.

194 In the morning the yavana fitted out many boats and sent his secretary to bring the Lord.

195 The Mahāpātra came along with Mahāprabhu, and the mleccha came and worshipped the Lord's feet.

196 There was one new boat with a cabin in the middle, and the Lord went on board with His companions.

197 Mahāprabhu bade the Mahāpātra farewell, and he stood weeping on the bank, gazing after Him.

198 For fear of river pirates the yavana went along too, taking many soldiers with him in ten boats.

199 He brought them across the dangerous Mantreśvara river, and the yavana came with them all the way to Picchaldā.[29]

200 From that village the Lord bade him farewell. I cannot describe the signs of love he showed then.[30]

201 Śrī Kṛṣṇa Caitanya performs pastimes beyond this world. Whoever hears of them is blessed in his birth and in his body.

202 Riding in that boat, the Lord came to Pāṇihāṭi, and He clothed the boatman in the cloth of His own mercy.

203 At the news that the Lord had come a great clamour arose, and land and water alike were filled with people.

204 Rāghava Paṇḍita came and took the Lord with him, but because of the crowds on the way they got there only with great difficulty.

205 The Lord stayed there one day, and in the morning He came to Kumārahaṭṭa, where Śrīnivāsa lived.

206 From there He went on to Śivānanda's house, and after that the Lord came to the house of Vāsudeva.

207 Then the Lord stayed in Vācaspati's house, and for fear of the crowds He went on to Kuliyā.

208 In Kuliyā the son of Śacī lodged in the house of Mādhava dāsa, and countless millions of people had His darśana.

209 He stayed there seven days and delivered the people; in His own way He saved even all the offenders.[31]

210 In the same way He came to the house of the Ācārya of Śāntipura, and meeting Mother Śacī, He dispelled her sorrow.

211 Then the Lord went to the village of Rāmakeli, and from Nāṭaśālā He turned back once again.

212 In Śāntipura He stayed again for ten days. Vṛndāvana dāsa has described this in detail.[32]

213 Therefore I have not described it at length here: it would be a repetition, and the book would grow endlessly.

214 Among these events are how Rūpa and Sanātana met Him, and how Nṛsiṁhānanda decorated the road for Him.

215 I have already described these pastimes in the summary, so I have not written of them here again.

216 When the Lord came to Śāntipura once again, Raghunātha dāsa came and met Him.

217 Hiraṇya and Govardhana were two brothers, masters of twelve lakhs of coins in Saptagrāma.[33]

218 Both were immensely wealthy, generous and devoted to brāhmaṇas; they were men of good conduct and noble family, counted foremost among the righteous.

219 They were, as it were, the livelihood of the brāhmaṇas of Nadīyā, helping them with gifts of money, land and villages.

220 Nīlāmbara Cakravartī was revered by both of them, and the Cakravartī treated them as his brothers.

221 In the past they had served Miśra Purandara, and so the Lord knew them both well.

222 Raghunātha dāsa was the son of that Govardhana. From childhood he was indifferent to worldly things.

223 When the Lord came to Śāntipura after taking sannyāsa, Raghunātha had come and met Him.

224 Absorbed in love, he fell at the Lord's feet, and the Lord mercifully touched him with His foot.

225 His father always served the Ācārya, and so the Ācārya was gracious to him.

226 By the Ācārya's grace he received the Lord's plate of remnants, and for five or seven days he saw the Lord's feet.

227 The Lord bade him farewell and went to Nīlācala, and he came home mad with love.

228 Again and again he ran away to go to Nīlādri, and his father would bring him back from the road and keep him bound.

229 Five guards watched him night and day, and four servants and two brāhmaṇas stayed with him.

230 Eleven people guarded him constantly. He could not go to Nīlācala, and his heart was full of sorrow.

231 Now, hearing that Mahāprabhu had come to Śāntipura, Raghunātha humbly said to his father,

232 “Give me leave to go and see the Lord’s feet; otherwise my life will not stay in my body.”

233 Hearing this, his father gave him many men and provisions and sent him off, saying, “Come back quickly.”[34]

234 For seven days he stayed with the Lord in Śāntipura, and night and day he poured out the one thought of his heart:

235 “How shall I escape from the hands of my guards? How shall I go to Nīlācala with the Lord?”

236 The omniscient Lord Gaurāṅga knew his mind, and He comforted him with these words of instruction:

237 “Be steady and go home; do not act like a madman. Step by step a person reaches the shore of the ocean of material existence.

238 Do not make a show of monkey renunciation (markaṭa-vairāgya) for people to see. Accept worldly things as is fitting, but without attachment.[35]

239 Keep firm faith within, and outwardly behave as people do in the world. Very soon Kṛṣṇa will deliver you.

240 When I have seen Vṛndāvana and come back to Nīlācala, then come to Me on some pretext.

241 At that time Kṛṣṇa Himself will show you that pretext. Who can hold back one who has Kṛṣṇa's mercy?"

242 Saying this, Mahāprabhu bade him farewell, and he went home and followed the Lord's teaching.

243 Giving up all his outward renunciation and madness, he did his duties as was fitting, without attachment.

244 Seeing this, his father and mother were very happy, and the watch over him was somewhat relaxed.

245 Meanwhile the Lord gathered all His devotees together, Advaita, Nityānanda and all the others,

246 and, embracing them all, Gosāñi said, "All of you, give Me leave to go to Nīlācala.

247 I have met all of you here. This year let no one go to Nīlādri.

248 From there I shall certainly go to Vṛndāvana. Give Me your leave, all of you, and then I shall come back without any obstacle."

249 Clasping His mother's feet, He entreated her humbly and received her permission to go to Vṛndāvana.

250 Then He sent her back to Navadvīpa and set out for Nīlādri, taking the devotees with Him.

251 All those people served Him along the way, and the son of Śacī came happily to Nīlācala.

252 On arriving, the Lord went to see Jagannātha, and the town was in an uproar: "Mahāprabhu has come!"

253 The delighted devotees came to meet Him, and the Lord embraced them all with love.

254 Kāśī Miśra, Rāmānanda, Pradyumna, Sārvabhauma, Vāṇīnātha, Śikhi and all the other devotees came.

255 Gadādhara Paṇḍita came and met the Lord, and in front of them all He began to speak:

256 "I thought, 'I shall go to Vṛndāvana through the land of Gauḍa, seeing on the way the feet of My mother and of the Gaṅgā.'

257 With this resolve I set out for Gauḍa, and about a thousand of My own devotees came along with Me.

258 Hundreds of thousands of people came to see the spectacle, and in such a throng I could not travel the road.

259 Wherever I stayed, houses and walls were crushed; wherever My eyes fell, I saw the place filled with people.

260 With great difficulty I reached the village of Rāmakeli. There two men named Rūpa and Sanātana came to Me.

261 The two brothers are kings among devotees, vessels of Kṛṣṇa's mercy; in worldly affairs they are the king's ministers and high officers.

262 In learning, devotion, intelligence and strength they are supremely accomplished, yet they consider themselves lower than a blade of grass.

263 At the sight and sound of their humility even a stone would break. Pleased with them, I said to them both,

264 'Though you are exalted, you consider yourselves low. Kṛṣṇa will soon deliver you.'[36]

265 When I had said this and bade them farewell, Sanātana spoke a riddle as I was leaving:

266 'When hundreds of thousands, even millions of people go along with one, that is not the way to go to Vṛndāvana.'

267 Yet I only heard it and paid it no heed. In the morning I set out and came to the village of Kānāira Nāṭaśālā.

268 That night I pondered in My mind the riddle that Sanātana had told Me.

269 He spoke well. So many people are with Me that whoever sees it will say, 'This is just a show!'

270 That Vṛndāvana is rare, hard to reach and solitary. I shall go alone, or with just one companion.

271 Mādhavendra Purī went there alone, and on the pretext of bringing him milk, Kṛṣṇa appeared to him in person.

272 I was travelling there like a juggler with his show. One does not go to Vṛndāvana with a crowd.[37]

273 I shall go alone, or with just one servant; only then is a journey to Vṛndāvana as it should be.

274 I was to go to Vṛndāvana alone — and here I have set out with an army, beating drums!

275 Saying 'Shame, shame on Me!', I grew restless, and turning back, I came again to the bank of the Gaṅgā.

276 I left the devotees in their various places and came back; only five or six people came with Me.

277 Now, how am I to go to Vṛndāvana without obstacles? All of you together, be gracious and give Me your counsel.

278 I went away leaving Gadādhara behind, and he was grieved. For that reason I could not go to Vṛndāvana."

279 Then Gadādhara Paṇḍita, absorbed in love, clasped the Lord's feet and humbly said,

280 "Wherever You stay, there is Vṛndāvana, and there are the Yamunā, the Gaṅgā and all the holy places.

281 Still, You go to Vṛndāvana to teach people. You will do just what Your heart decides.[38]

282 Lord, the four months of the rains are almost upon us. Spend these four months in Nīlācala.

283 Afterwards do whatever You have in mind. Go or stay as You please — who could stop You?"

284 Hearing this, all the devotees said at the Lord's feet, "The Paṇḍita has put forward what we all desire."

285 At everyone's wish the Lord stayed for the four months, and when Pratāparudra heard this, he was delighted.

286 That day Gadādhara invited Him, and the Lord took His meal there with the devotees.

287 No human being could describe the Paṇḍita's affection at that meal, or how the Lord relished it.

288 Such are Gaura's pastimes, endless and boundless. I tell them in brief, for they cannot be told in full.[39]

289 Ananta Himself tells of them with His thousand mouths, yet He cannot reach the end of even one pastime.

290 Praying at the feet of Śrī Rūpa and Śrī Raghunātha, I, Kṛṣṇadāsa, narrate the Caitanya-caritāmṛta.[40]

Notes

1. Heading in the edition: "Gaurasundara, having come to Gauḍa, devotes Himself to delivering the people." Anubhāṣya: the cloud is Śrī Gaura, the garden is the land of Gauḍa, the creepers are the people scorched by the blaze of worldly existence. ↩

2. The same verse as Madhya 4.2, 6.2 and 12.2 (the refrain of Ādi 4.2 with gauracandra in the first line); translation as there. ↩
3. The jhāli are Rāghava Paṇḍita's alone; they are described in Antya 10. ↩
4. Tāṅhāra ("his" or "her") is taken as referring to the wife: verses 21–25 speak of the devotees' wives (heading in the edition: "the journey of Candraśekhara's wife"). ↩
5. The first line is the second line of Madhya 1.96. Anubhāṣya: Mahāprabhu had told this story to Nityānanda and His other companions at Remuṇā, on His way to Nīlācala (Madhya 4.19–190). ↩
6. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: see Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya-khaṇḍa, chapter 8. Advaita wished the Lord to come without the other sannyāsīs; they had gone to perform their midday rites when the storm broke, and the Lord came alone and ate Advaita's rice and vegetables. ↩
7. The first line is the same as in Madhya 3.217, 5.140 and 15.13 (and in verse 81 of this chapter). ↩
8. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: tarjā is speech in the payāra and other metres that others cannot easily understand. ↩
9. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: what Śrī Advaita asked in His tarjā, and what Śacī's son meant by His smile, no one else could understand. ↩
10. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: body and life are never apart; that the Lord lives in Nīlācala and Nityānanda in Gauḍa is due only to the Lord's inconceivable power. ↩
11. Anubhāṣya: one on whose lips the name of Kṛṣṇa is present "constantly" is the intermediate devotee (madhyama-bhāgavata), higher than the beginner (kaniṣṭha), who utters the name once (Madhya 15.106). "Constantly" means without any gap — free of other desires, karma, jñāna and slackness. ↩
12. Anubhāṣya: this is the mahā-bhāgavata (uttama-adhikārī): at the sight of him the name of Kṛṣṇa comes of itself to the lips of the beholder, and by his mercy the intermediate devotee becomes the highest. ↩
13. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the Lord's answers to the residents of Kulīna-grāma over three years (Madhya 15.106 and verses 72, 74) show these three grades; to serve all three is the duty of a Vaiṣṇava householder. ↩
14. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Oḍana-ṣaṣṭhī is the first ṣaṣṭhī of the cold season, when Jagannātha is dressed in warm clothing; this is māḍuyā, the weaver's unwashed cloth, stiff with starch. Puṇḍarīka Vidyānidhi found fault with it and showed some disdain for the devotees of Utkala, and so received his due. ↩

15. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: see Caitanya-bhāgavata, Antya-khaṇḍa, chapters 10 and 11. ↩
16. Anubhāṣya: snāna — “bathed”. ↩
17. In the Gauḍīya Maṭha edition — kariha (“bathe”): the king tells his men to bathe there every day, and for himself wishes to leave his body there. Heading in the edition: “The king’s deep love for Gaura.” ↩
18. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: Caturdvāra is the village one reaches from Kaṭaka after crossing the Mahānadī; it is commonly called “Caudār”. ↩
19. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the Mahānadī, at the place where one comes out of Kaṭaka, is called the river Citrotpalā. ↩
20. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: kṣetra-sannyāsa — leaving one’s former home and living, alone or with one’s family, in a holy place of Viṣṇu (Puruṣottama-kṣetra, Navadvīpa-dhāma, Mathurā-maṇḍala and the like), taking this as the highest aim; it is the vānaprastha-dharma suited to the age of Kali. ↩
21. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: on receiving the service of Śrī Gopīnātha, Gadādhara Paṇḍita had vowed to devote his whole life to it; by going with the Lord he would incur two faults — breaking the vow and abandoning the service. On the path of anurāga great souls take such faults upon themselves. ↩
22. Anubhāṣya: this is Bhīṣma’s prayer to Śrī Kṛṣṇa before his passing. Kṛṣṇa’s promise was to protect the Pāṇḍavas without taking up arms; Bhīṣma’s, to make Him take them up; the earth trembled and His upper cloth fell because of His fury. Heading in the edition: “The Lord breaks His own promise to keep His devotee’s.” The verse is quoted within Sārvabhauma’s words (143–146), hence the single quotation marks. ↩
23. The second line is the same as in Madhya 6.286; the translation is brought into line with it. Heading in the edition: “For a devotee, to suffer in separation from Bhagavān is natural; but Bhagavān’s suffering in separation from His devotee is prema-vivarta, a strange turn of love. Whoever hears of it attains Caitanya.” ↩
24. Anubhāṣya: another reading has “from Bhadraka”, which agrees with Madhya 1.149 (“Rāmānanda Rāya accompanied Him as far as Bhadraka”); Bhadraka lies south of Bāleśvara, and Remuṇā close beside it. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: many accounts say that the Lord sent Rāmānanda Rāya back from Bhadraka, before He reached Remuṇā. ↩
25. Heading in the edition: “It is impossible to describe how Rāya felt his separation from the Lord.” ↩
26. Anubhāṣya: “in disguise” — being a yavana, he had exchanged a yavana’s dress for a Hindu’s; hence “the Hindu spy” in 162. *Amṛta-

pravāha-bhāṣya*: the Oriyā camp (kaṭaka) was the army post on the border of the king of Utkala's lands. ↩

27. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the ruler of Gauḍa had a department called the viśvāsa-khānā, staffed only by the most trusted Kāyasthas; these viśvāsas were sent wherever the king had important business. ↩
28. Heading in the edition, which confirms the reference: "Hearing, chanting or remembering the Lord's name, even one born outside the varṇas is purified — what then of one who has seen Him face to face?" Anubhāṣya: this is Devahūti's prayer to Śrī Kapiladeva, when, having heard from Him of the yoga of pure bhakti, she was freed from illusion. ↩
29. Anubhāṣya: a dangerous river (duṣṭa-nada) is a waterway infested by river pirates; it is hard to pass also because the river is very wide and swift. ↩
30. Heading in the edition: "In Picchaladā the Lord sends him back; his wonderful grief." ↩
31. Heading in the edition: "In Kuliyā the Lord delivered many offenders; therefore it is the 'seat of Aparādha-bhañjana', the place where offences are forgiven." ↩
32. The second line is the same as in verses 56 and 81 of this chapter. ↩
33. Anubhāṣya: Hiraṇya and Govardhana Majumdār were Kāyasthas of a noble family who lived in Śrī Kṛṣṇapura near Saptagrāma (Hooghly district); in those days they collected twelve lakhs of coins in revenue every year. ↩
34. The edition (p. 620) puts the father's words in quotation marks ('śīghra āsiha phiriyā'); the closing mark, lost in the base text, has been restored. ↩
35. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: monkey renunciation (markaṭa-vairāgya) is when the heart is full of thoughts of worldly pleasure while outwardly one wears the kaupīna and other signs of renunciation. Anubhāṣya: monkeys live without house or clothing as if detached, yet never stop gratifying their senses; such renunciation for show is called markaṭa-vairāgya. ↩
36. Anubhāṣya: Rūpa and Sanātana are Kṛṣṇa's eternally perfect associates in Vraja; they play the part of conditioned souls only in the eyes of worldly people, and Kṛṣṇa will soon "deliver" them by engaging them in His eternal service. ↩
37. Amṛta-pravāha-bhāṣya: the bādiyā, or bede, are wandering jugglers; wherever they set up their show a crowd gathers, and the Lord was going to Vṛndāvana with just such a crowd, which was not good. ↩
38. Anubhāṣya: Mahāprabhu's heart is itself Vṛndāvana, the place of Śrī Rādhākānta's pastimes; still, to teach people, He goes to the earthly Vṛndāvana. ↩
39. The second line is the same as in Ādi 13.53. ↩

40. The verse = Madhya 7.155 (the closing refrain); the translation is the same as there. ↩
